Ransom

Posted originally on the Archive of Our Own at http://archiveofourown.org/works/47854198.

Rating:
Teen And Up Audiences

Archive Warning:
No Archive Warnings Apply

Category:
F/F

Fandom:
She-Ra and the Princesses of Power (2018)

Relationship:
Adora/Catra (She-Ra), Entrapta/Hordak (She-Ra)

Character:
Adora (She-Ra), Catra (She-Ra), Glimmer (She-Ra), Bow (She-Ra), Double Trouble (She-Ra), Entrapta (She-Ra), Hordak (She-Ra), Original Robot Character(s), Shadow Weaver | Light Spinner (She-Ra)

Additional Tags:
Implied/Referenced Drug Use, Needles, Guns, Mild Blood, Kidnapping, Corporate Espionage, catra's trauma, also adora's, there's a lot of sad shit in there, But also, Gay, gay people, Lesbians, Fluff and Angst, Angst, Fluff, Modern AU, sorta???, it's modern but there's also magic stuff

Language:
English

Stats:
Published: 2023-06-13 Words: 5,269 Chapters: 4/4

Ransom

Posted originally on the Archive of Our Own at http://archiveofourown.org/works/47854198.

Rating:
Teen And Up Audiences

Archive Warning:
No Archive Warnings Apply

Category:
F/F

Fandom:
She-Ra and the Princesses of Power (2018)

Relationship:
Adora/Catra (She-Ra), Entrapta/Hordak (She-Ra)

Character:
Adora (She-Ra), Catra (She-Ra), Glimmer (She-Ra), Bow (She-Ra), Double Trouble (She-Ra), Entrapta (She-Ra), Hordak (She-Ra), Original Robot Character(s), Shadow Weaver | Light Spinner (She-Ra)

Additional Tags:
Implied/Referenced Drug Use, Needles, Guns, Mild Blood, Kidnapping, Corporate Espionage, catra's trauma, also adora's, there's a lot of sad shit in there, But also, Gay, gay people, Lesbians, Fluff and Angst, Angst, Fluff, Modern AU, sorta???, it's modern but there's also magic stuff

Language:
English

Stats:
Published: 2023-06-13 Words: 5,269 Chapters: 4/4

Ransom

by DelilahOakenheart

Summary

Adora and Catra and fellas in a semi-modern setting, dealing with magical problems and technological problems. They are gay as hell your honor.

Work-Life Balance

Chapter Summary

> Adora's long day at Brightmoon Enterprises, a company dedicated to the betterment of living standards on Etheria.

It was a long day for Adora.

Like every day, she woke up, got dressed, had coffee. Sometimes Catra drove her to work, not that particular day though- her girlfriend had errands to be running (And by errands, Adora was pretty sure she meant birthday shopping, but it wasn't the blonde's place to be snooping in that). No, Adora caught a ride with Bow that day. Catra was more fun to drive with, but Bow was definitely safer. And Adora needed safety right now.

Work was always taxing. Stressful, sure, but physically , too. Going from place to place, talking with someone about something every single moment: and rarely people she knew. Glimmer, now CEO, was so busy she barely had time to even text Adora.

But this was the life they all led. It made the world a better place, or so they all hoped. That's the only reason Adora kept at it, at least.

She had to take a break from one conversation, a meeting with one of their boots-on-the-ground personnel, a character who introduced themself as DeeTee, though Adora had grilled Catra a while ago about their real name. They used to be a sort-of corporate mercenary, but they hadn't done any work outside of Brightmoon Enterprises in a while.

"The local green space construction fund," they said, walking with Adora, "has been having... let's say issues with getting much done."

Adora tried to keep her mind on the conversation, but it kept slipping. She put a hand to her head. "Go on."

"There' s a particularly devilish HOA right next to the area, and they've been outside protesting out workers almost every day. I'd normally take care of something like this myself, but as you well know, darling, I'm no longer at liberty to-,"Adora stumbled, only barely bracing herself against the doorframe of somebody's office. Didn't matter who, really.

"Are you alright?"The green-skinned worker asked, laying their hands on her shoulders, helping to prop her up.

"I"she took a breath. "I need to sit down, for a while."

"Of course, darling. I'll take this to somebody else,"Adora knocked the door of the office they stood outside. Nobody answered. She fumbled with the master key in her pocket for a minute, before finally inserting it into the lock and finding a chair to sit in. Double Trouble gave her a surprisingly genuine look as they left, "Take your time."

After that, she tried not to do much walking around. Sitting work, having people come to her. It's probably what she was supposed to do, given company operative policy, but despite Glimmer, and Bow, and Catra, and pretty much everyone else she knew who worked there telling her constantly to take breaks, she almost always did her work walking, went to people herself. Kept her in shape, for one thing, but Adora had never been able to just.sit still. No wonder her desk was covered in not only loads of somewhat-organized papers, but various objects she found herself fidgeting with throughout the day. Some part of her just couldn't understand sedentary life. She didn't blame it: for a long time, it'd been used to long walks through dilapidated streets, sneaking out and climbing the rooftops with Catra. She just didn't have time for their old habits anymore. Every time she thought about it during the day, she felt a pang of sadness: things change.

They were better now, absolutely. There were no nights where the only thing she and Catra had to eat were their imagined meals filled with things they'd only ever heard of: birthday cakes the size of houses, all kinds of fruit that tasted like they were made by the gods themselves. And ice cream. So. Much. Ice cream.

There were no nights where the only thing she and Catra had to eat were their imagined meals filled with things they'd only ever heard of: birthday cakes the size of houses, all kinds of fruit that tasted like they were made by the gods themselves. And ice cream. So. Much. Ice cream. She chuckled. That was half of what the two of them thought about, she reckoned. That and their terrible excuse for a mother. She wanted to growl just thinking about it. But that was the thing: thinking about her always just made it worse. So Adora tried to keep her mind off the woman who'd made her life hell.

The rest of the day was spent in meetings within the comfort of her office. After her stumble, Glimmer had immediately burst through the doors of her office asking if Adora was okay. I am, Adora said. Yes it's okay. I'm fine. Glimmer left the office sated, albeit suspicious. Adora was, after all, probably the most physically fit person at the company, sans a few of the construction personnel. For something like this to happen portended some kind of illness, and Glimmer, of all of them knew it. Hell, DT probably knew it. Adora just couldn't tell them.

Not yet. Not until Catra knew.

Glimmer made sure personally that Adora got home safe. They could've teleported, but that was...rocky , sometimes. And also it was the more sensible option.
The two of them went almost careening through the streets of the city, horns blaring: Glimmer, more than anybody Adora had ever met, was a perfect counter to the driving of her shitty mother: where Weaver had been calm, collected whilst in the drivers seat at every possible moment, Glimmer was the most profane, violent driver you could ask for. Even Catra gave the CEO that: no matter how much Catra sped, dodging around corners, overtaking when she really shouldn't, that instincts came from when she'd learned to drive a motorbike. Glimmer, instead, had always been like this. And probably would be. They all loved her for it.

She did, though, get Adora home safe in the end. Gave Adora probably three hugs too much, and a huge bottle of Tylenol if, quote, "anything goes bad." That got a chuckle from Adora, but she thanked her CEO nonetheless. It was, after all, another layer of so-called defense if things went to shit: the first was ever the little golden pen in her pocket.

She clambered her way up the apartment block's stairs, coming to number 5-D. She pulled out her house key, connected by a ring to her office master key, and put it in the door with that familiar near-crunch. Just as she was turning it, she stopped.

Something didn't feel right.

She put her ear up to the door, and heard nothing. She would've knelt down and tried to look beneath the crack in the door and the wall- an old trick Lonnie had taught the both of them- but there was a doorstop on this side stopping that kind of snooping.

Instead, she just took a breath, and laid her hand on the pen in her pocket as she turned the key, and opened the door.

"I'd suggest you drop the T ylenol, and get your hand out of your pocket. It won't be good for anybody if I have to use this thing."

The words caught her just in the threshold of the door: a man in black, with metallic-looking skin and red hair, held a gun to Catra's head.

Adora immediately froze. It was by instinct that she dropped the pills, not compliance. Precious moments passed as she locked eyes with the only girl in the world who ever mattered, tape over her mouth and bound, hands behind her back.

"I said, hand outta the pocket. I'd rather not spell it out for you, miss. It does get very tiring after some time in this business."

Adora shook herself mentally: if the gun were further from Catra's head, she could probably get the robot away from her before he fired, but as it stood a million scenarios rushed through her mind. All of them ended with missing something she could never afford to lose.

She slowly pulled the hand out of her pocket: she expected the man to say something about the pen, but he said nothing. Instead, a third arm grabbed another pistol from his belt, and pointed it at her. "Sit on the couch. Both of you."

Catra had to be reminded of the gun at her back, but Adora did so without complaint. The two of them were together, at least: the man used his two free hands, putting away one of the guns, to tie Adora's hands behind her. It was a little silly: she figured Catra could probably cut the rope with her claws, but after that what? No, the both of them were buying whatever time they had. Waiting for a good moment.

It was a feeling Adora had grown used to recently.

"Now , I'm only going to say this once: you can come with me easily, cooperate in the whole operation, and be home with eachother soon, or I can knock you out, tie you to a chair in an abandoned parking building, and ransom you with several rifles to your heads. It's your choice."

Adora took a breath, her body shaking. She felt Catra lean on her, some kind of support in this terrible situation. "What do you want?"

"Money . Next stupid question." His expression didn't sour , but he was clearly bored.

"Why are you-"

"Are all the questions you ask going to have the same answer? It' s money. Please try to think of something more interesting, or I'll drug the both of you for being boring."

She felt Catra struggle a little bit next to her .

"Who hired you?"

"Oh, finally! That has a fascinating answer , but unfortunately I cannot tell you. My apologies, really. It's part of the contract, you see. Even if I wished- which believe me, I do- my programming does not allow me to break contract. Alas, what a poor existence I live." He laughed at himself, then. Catra rolled her eyes.

"Well, it's time to go you two. And I think I'd rather have you asleep than awake for the ride." One of his fingers pulled back, revealing a small needle at the end. "Trust me, I'm not an amateur. If you don't struggle, it'll be just like getting a vaccine."

Adora only had a moment to turn and see Catra's face- terrified- before she felt the little prick in her neck.

The world went black just as Adora tried to break the rope around her wrists.

Sunrise

Chapter Summary

Catra doesn't like needles.

Catra hated needles.

More than anything in the world, she hated needles.

She squirmed, pushing herself away from where Adora had already fallen asleep on the couch. The robotic criminal caught her gaze.

"I told you, this will be much worse if you fight."

She pushed the claws out on her hands, quickly cutting the ropes around her wrists. She breathed heavily, nearly hyperventilating: she pulled off the tape covering her mouth, and snarled at the kidnapper.

"Dammit, I…" he smiled to himself. He put the gun against Adora's head. She stopped, predictably. "You romantics, always so easy to control. Put one swinging above a pit, the other will always stop if you're holding the scissors. Now, as before. I'd rather not use this, but my client is concerned with getting a ransom, and I'm sure your friends at Brightmoon would be just as forthcoming with the cash for her alive or dead. So it doesn't matter to me what you do, but I'd suggest letting me sedate you before I lose my patience and you lose a… well, a lover, it seems."

Catra's whole body trembled, as the adrenaline wore off: she knew she had to do it, had to step over and willingly be drugged to sleep. Every fiber of her being told her not to: her fur stood on end, hackles raised.

She took a step forward, willing her to do whatever it takes to keep Adora breathing. She'd seen so much reckless death. Too much at her own hands. She wouldn't let it happen to Adora. She took another step, then another.

"C-could you do it…" she took a breath. "In my arm." She remembered the pain, the dark garage-laboratory. She remembered the hoarseness of her throat. She remembered the screaming. "The left one." Her voice was shaky.

After a moment, the man shrugged. "I see no reason why not, if it keeps you from fighting."

She sat down on the couch, pulling up her sleeve. Scars ran down the length of her arms, but one patch of fur never grew back, a nearly square spot right at the muscle of her left deltoid. She remembered how good it felt.

For so long, she'd pushed it away. It was a good thing, to keep that part of herself in check. The part that wanted more.

But right now, she had to be brave. Braver than she could be with needles normally. She tried to remember each time: heating it up in a spoon, dripping the viscous, black liquid slowly into a syringe.

She felt the prick. Except there was no pleasure, this time. No high.

She didn't need to close her eyes: they already were.

A tear dripped over her cheek as she felt herself fade into unconsciousness.

Catra woke up in a cell. It felt like that, to her, looked like that: an old cage she'd returned to so many times. She didn't believe it. She wouldn't believe it.

The faint green hum of light dancing through the stale air told her that she was back, but she tried to keep it out of her head. Somebody screamed down the hall. It sounded like Rogelio, but she could never be sure. This is where people went to die.

It was where monsters were born.

The screaming stopped. A dark shape blurred the green light: something hummed evermore, a pulsating vibration that left your very soul shaking. That, too, would never leave Catra.

Shadow Weaver stopped before the bars of her cell, the door to her cage. There were no words between them: the lion told Catra everything she needed to know.

It was time, again. Like it always was. Like it always came back to.

She pushed herself against the back wall, but she knew it wouldn't do anything. It was hopeless, utterly.

The shadows crossed through her bars, the figure made of them standing tall in front of her: just those white, sharp eyes, ever turned downwards in some sort of scowl, pierced the total darkness of Shadow Weaver's form.

The tendrils latched onto Catra's arms and feet;she struggled, struggled as hard as any child can. It was no use. She pulled. It did nothing.

As the whole world went to darkness, she screamed.

Catra was still screaming when she woke up. All at once, she stopped, but the warmth around her didn't: Adora held her close, closer than ever (which was saying something), crying hot tears. Her hair was still tied, but it looked frazzled. The blonde was still just as beautiful as she always had been.

Catra grabbed back, needing to hold something, to feel something real. Tears dripped down her face, too. They lay there like that for a while, crying, warm and cold, but together. Together again.

At some point, the light of the early sun streamed into their cage: it was much larger than the one in her dream, and far brighter. There were two actual beds in the room, but of course the two of them were cuddled up on the floor together. Evidently, whoever kidnapped them hadn't seen fit to check their pockets, or that their clothing might be a help to any escape;they were both clothed in what they had been before. Catra was, for one, relieved. It never felt good to awaken somewhere different in new clothes. The experience was something she was all too familiar with.

Adora started crying again, quieter this time. "I'm sorry , I'm sorry, I.. I could've done something, kept.."

"No, no. No, Adora, it' s okay."She took Adora' s face in her hands: so many times she'd done so. Not enough of them like this. "I tried too. I tried, after you fell asleep. Neither of us could do anything, okay? It's alright."

Adora looked her in the eyes for a second, before leaning her head against Catra's. "Thank you."

After a few moments, Adora sat up a little, seeing the light. The blonde's expression once again soured.

"Shit. Shit shit shit.."..

"What? Is it about the birthday? Really , we'll get outta here and deal with it. We can do it some other time, I-"

"There' s".Adora let out a breath as Catra sat up, laying a hand on the girl's back. "I was waiting until today to tell you, waiting for .. the right moment, but.. I guess now is as good a time as any."

"Or as bad."Catra chuckled. Adora turned from the sun, catching her gaze.

"I..I'm pregnant."

The whole world seemed to freeze around her , for a moment. Adora's face, lit by the golden sunlight, making her hair look…

angelic. She was like an angel, just one in a suit and tie. A soft wind came in through the bars and fluttered Adora's hair behind and around her head. There was a ringing in Catra's ears for a second, before she came back to reality. The brief moment of total, overwhelming beauty left her.

"Y ..you're.what?"

"I'm pregnant. I..it' s not.."

"How long have you known?"

"Not very long. Barely long enough to plan telling you this. It' s.. I had to actually sit down at work today..yesterday , whatever. Can you believe that?"

"Hardly , I.."Catra' s mind was racing. "How?"

"I..don't know . I know it's yours for, um..obvious reasons."

"It better be."Catra chuckled.

Adora looked down. "But I.. I don't know how it happened. My guess was it had something to do with she-ra, or magic shit, or.. I don't know. I was taking all the medicine and stuff, doing everything they said to do, but..it..just."Adora looked at Catra again. "..happened. And I'm sorry I've kept it from you, I'm.. sorry I didn't tell you sooner, it was just supposed to be this big surprise and we would all be happy and celebrating and-"

Catra pulled Adora into a kiss. She didn't pull away until Adora's breathing steadied again.

"Y ou're cute when you're flustered, you know that?"

Adora blushed, and Catra laughed.

"It' s okay, Adora. It's okay. You don't need to be sorry for anything, okay?"

Adora smirked a little. "Okay ."

The two of them made some sort of home in the cell. It was only after the direct sunlight was gone that the robot kidnapper came to the bars.

"I see you've found one of your beds. I'm not surprised. In any case, you should be happy to know that your ransom has been paid in full, and you're being, well, released."

Adora raised an eyebrow, but Catra got up immediately. The robot took a few moments, opening the cell. A guard walked behind him, eyeing him suspiciously. He turned and looked daggers at the guard, speaking. "I want nobody out here until the prisoners are gone, understood?"

The guard nodded, "Y es sir."

"Good. Now get."

"Y es sir."The guard quickly buzzed of f.

"Now ."The robot stepped inside. It hardly took a moment for his form to shift into that of Double Trouble. "Shall we?"

"What the hell are you-?"

"Shhh."They put a finger to their mouth. "I'm rescuing you two lovebirds, isn't that obvious?"

Jailbreak

Chapter Summary

Happy birthday Adora :)

"How did you find us?" Adora got up quickly, quietly speaking. "Did you know about this before we did?"

"Don't flatter me. No, I followed you and the CEO home after your .. well, shall we call it a stumble? I smelled fish and followed it. Didn't take long waiting outside to see that the two of you were in dire straits, so I just tailed that mechanical bore back here. He really needs work. Has the vocabulary, but none of the charm."

"Nevermind his charm, we need to leave." She pulled the golden pen out of her pocket.

Double Trouble eyed it, smiling. "How long has it been?"

"Long enough." She took a breath. It had been nearly.what, two years? Maybe less. Too long since she'd had to use it. She clicked the pen in. Catra looked on in awe: Adora knew she loved watching this.

It extended rapidly in her hand, and in an instant she was holding the Sword of Protection. It's almost electrical glyphs were the only parts that didn't glow, the whole blade faintly glowing a bright blue. She put the sword up to her face, closing her eyes and speaking quietly.

"For the honor" she took a breath. "Of Greyskull."

All at once, she felt magical power flowing through her.

Her hair lengthened, grew brighter. Her outfit magically shifted into something more appropriate for fighting;her whole body gave off a low-level hum, flooded with magical energy. She swung the sword to her side: she'd grown nearly two feet, and knew she was strong enough to break a concrete wall straight through. Her eyes glowed the same bright blue as the sword, contrary to their usual black.

Catra smiled uncontrollably, blushing.

Adora smiled back, chuckling. "Really? You haven't been this bad since the first time you saw it."

"It's been a while, okay!" Catra huffed, still beaming.

"Sure." She winked at Catra, turning to DT. "You can get her out of here, right?"

"I'm never one to pass up an escort from the She-Ra."

"Got it. I'll get you two to the ground floor. From there, you can get out. After that, I have a meeting to attend."

"A meeting?" Catra raised an eyebrow. She might've been fucking with Adora.

"Y-yeah, a meeting like. Listen, I'm gonna go beat up that robot guy, but I was trying to make it sound cooler."

"I know." Catra stuck her tongue out a little to one side, one of her little fangs poking out. "Now pick me up, huge lady."

"Who am I to say no to you?" Adora grabbed Catra in one arm, holding the sword in the other. "Let's go."

"Indeed." DT led the way forward. There were a few twists and turns, but it wasn't long before the three of them reached an elevator.

"This is the one I took up. It should take us right back d-" The door to the elevator opened. The robot and several goons stood inside.

"Escaping, are we?" He took two guns in his hands.

“Something like that.” Adora carefully set Catra down: she saw Double Trouble hand her a gun behind their back. They had another in their other hand.

There was a tense moment of still, the standoff before the shootout.

It didn’t take long for the shooting to begin.

The guards shot first, aiming directly at the most threatening person in the room. Namely, Adora. The bullets hurt, sorta, but she’d dealt with them before: you needed some stupid high caliber to actually make She-Ra bleed. Whatever these guards had wasn’t nearly enough.

“You imbeciles, not her! Shoot the other two!”

The guards reloaded, but in an instant Catra and DT started shooting: they downed one of the guards. She and Catra exchanged a look, then Catra and DT found cover.

Adora turned back to the robot. She brandished the Sword before her.

“Let’s do this.”

A flash of light ignited on the robot’s feet, and his hands pulled back into his arms, swapped for two black blades. He rocketed all at once into her, and they crashed through the concrete wall behind her.

It hurt like hell, but she stood up just fast enough to parry a strike from his blades: they were locked together, his swords scraping against her’s.

Without warning, she punched up beneath the block, hitting him in the chest, and launching him across the room. She followed up, moving like a blur, and hitting him again with a fully wound-up punch: this time he went flying through the wall. Dust flew all around: Adora could hear gunshots from a ways off, behind her, but she didn't pay them much mind.

The man came to his feet, one of the blades bent. He looked at it, groaning, before pushing it out and onto the floor, replaced with his hand once more. He held up the other blade, waiting a moment before striking at her again: the two were locked in combat, parrying eachother, striking one another's blades. Each metallic clang of the swords butting heads echoed over the city beyond, a sound nobody had heard in a long time.

Eventually, however, she found a weakness in his defense: well, not really a weakness in him defense, just a strength of her own: their swords stopped, their free hands grabbed eachother's blade. He squeezed on her sword with all his might: nothing.

She squeezed on his blade: blood dripped from her palm.

The metal broke first: it snapped in her hand. He looked up in despair: she punched at his other arm with her hand, and his arm came off.

Then, before he could react, she swiftly cut off his head, making sure to grab it before it fell however many stories to the ground below.

The power faded from his eyes, but she knew she'd be able to get him talking.

After all, she knew Entrapta.

When she got back to the firefight, well… It wasn't. Catra and DT were nowhere to be seen, and several bodies littered the floor. A couple of them were still breathing.

She tried to ignore the others.

She took the elevator all the way down. It was a fairly quiet moment in a very loud day.

Answers

Chapter Summary

> Catra and Double Trouble deal with some goons and Adora wallops some people.

The elevator doors, far on the other side of the atrium, opened with a slight sqeal: Catra turned her head just long enough to see She-Ra standing in them, holding the robot man's head. She smiled, before she remembered she was in an active combat øne.

Immediately the appearance of She-Ra changed the flow of combat. Several soldiers changed targets, shooting at her instead of Catra. Good thing, too: Catra skulked between tables, coming to one of the guards: she ripped off his helmet, scratching his head deep with her claws, and kicking him to the ground hard enough that he blacked out.

She jumped over a table to the nekx, landing on their shoulders, ripping at their head before dropping to the ground and slicing the backs of their knees. She stole the rifle off them.

Adora make qick work of the other guards firing at her , knocking lost with the flat of her sword. But that was like saying you got hit over the head by a frying pan: Catra knew how heavy the sword was when in it's real form. It was a miracle that Adora could even wield it. That is to say, the guards she hit with it wouldn't be getting back up for a while.

Double Trouble took out the last guard, strangling her with their tail. Not to death, hopefully.

Silence and smoke descended on the lobby area, and without a word the three of them hightailed it the fuck out of there. Police cars were already lined up in front of the place, so they took the back entrance: it led onto a train yard.

Catra knew the area, taking them further into the industrial zone. Adora let her She-Ra form drop, and turned the sword back into it's usual pen form, replacing it in her pocket.

The three of them made it back to Entrapta's...house? Junkyard? It was hard to classify. She lived with robots and metal and junk. Catra was fond of the place.

She went up and rang the doorbell: the door swung open before she had even pulled her hand back, and Entrapta stood there, suspended as usual by her prehensile purple hair.

"Hello!"

"Hey , Entrapta. Did you-"

"Know that you were coming? Y es. I keep cameras all around my house. And outside it. Usually don't need them, but you never know when somebody might wanna make-"Her eyes widened, seeing the robot head in Adora's hand. "Let me see that."

They all knew it was less of a request and more of a command: Adora handed it over to Entrapta as she invited them inside. She and Adora sat down, though DT kept standing, looking around at all the mechanical oddities of Entrapta's home.

"Not my tech, very well made though. Doesn't seem like something the old Horde would use, too advanced. Stragglers are rare these days, anyways."

"Where' s Hordak?"Catra' s voice quivered a little at the name, but she asked anyways: she could never get used to him, after everything, but she knew he was a different man than before.

"T reatment." She tapped a monitor with very detailed, small-print vital signs on it. "He' s asleep right now."

Catra nodded. "Anything else interesting about the robot?"

"V ery strong metal, some sort of carbon-fiber alloy, at first glance. But I've never seen any carbon-fiber this black, or this glossy. Some kind of paint, maybe, but I'd guess it's something new. I'd need to run some tests to figure out exactly what the material is." She turned to face the two of them. "Where did you get this again?"

Adora answered, "Somebody hired him to kidnap me and Catra, hold us for random. I kept his head because thought you might be able to get him to talk, or at least extract some data about his employer from his head."

"That' s so thoughtful of you! I definitely can, just give me a moment." Entrapta flipped down the menacing welding mask she wore on her head, and sparks began to fly.

Catra eyed Adora holding her left hand tight.

"Everything okay?"

The blonde showed her the scabbing on her palm: it was still a little wet with blood.

"What happened?"

"I crushed the robots' s sword, but it actually cut me."

"How?" Catra took Adora' s hand, looking closer at the small wound.

"No idea."

"That is strange." Entrapta butted in, hovering over unbeknownst to the both of them. They both startled a little.

Entrapta continued, "Were you She-Ra when you got cut?

Adora nodded.

“Fascinating.. assuming the swords were made of the same thing as the rest of him… you’re lucky you made it. Somebody knew what they were doing when they made this tech.”

“Yeah..” Adora sighed, holding her hand back close again. Entrapta bounced back to her work station.

“Anyways! I’m done.” She pressed a button, and the eyes of the robot head lit up. Code flashed quickly across Entrapta’s monitors, before an operating system booted up.

She started digging around, searching through files. “If I’m correct about this, it should be riiiight…” she clicked a folder called ‘clients’, “Here!” It was a long folder, with many many clients. Some were names Catra knew from back in.. her time in the Horde. A chill went down her spine. “It seems like he wasn’t contracted for some time before this job, the last record is from a number of years ago. The most recent client-“ She clicked on the file, and the screen corrupted all at once, going black. Entrapta literally jumped out of her chair, falling back on the floor.

Catra looked up at the monitor: they all did. It was totally black, all but for one word, in green console font:

Prime.

Please drop by the archive and comment to let the author know if you enjoyed their work!