Catgirls and Dogboys

by CrazyAnimationChick

Summary

Adora feels that Glimmer needs a little vacation from being Queen and decides that a little space travel is just what her best friend needs. But when she, Glimmer, Bow, and Catra land on an unknown planet, Catra wants nothing more than to leave. Because not only did it look boring, but there is also a certain dogboy that has her on edge. And for Inuyasha, the dogboy, he wants nothing more than for the cat-demon, or what he assumes is a cat-demon, to get the hell off his planet. Kagome and Adora are embarrassed at the annoying protectiveness of their partners, and Miroku, Sango, Shippo, Glimmer, and Bow are just there for the drama. Because even across the universe cats and dogs just simply can't get along...or can they?

NOTES : For the Inuyasha gang, the story can be set sometime during the hunt for Naraku or it can be set after Kagome's return after three years. Sango and Miroku's kids, though, aren't in the story, but the couple are established fiances, and Inuyasha and Kagome are established mates. For the She-Ra gang, this takes place a year after the series finale.

"Adora, where the hell are we?" Catra asks as she, Adora, Glimmer, and Bow exit the space shuttle.

It was Adora's idea for them to get away, to take a little vacation from their duties back at home. Which wasn't really a lot of duties since their world was now at peace. There's always going to be evil to fight, but the last year wasn't too crazy. Not nearly as wild as the previous years before. A few goons and smugglers here and there, but really that's it. Nothing but child's play.

But even though they haven't been doing much, it doesn't mean that they don't deserve a little vacation. And if anything, Glimmer is the one who deserves it the most. She does the most work out of all of them, being Queen and whatnot. And of course, being the best friend that Adora is, she planned a week getaway for her Queen, which resulted in them visiting different planets and universes.

So far, the first two days have been fun. They're on day three now and hope to continue their exploring with no issues. In other words, no bad guys to fight.

"Not sure," Adora answers, admiring the lush green landscapes. "But isn't it pretty? Look at all the trees!"

Catra's ears suddenly twitch, hearing multiple voices coming from within the woods about 100 feet or so away from them. "Something is coming!" She says and protectively stands in front of Adora, claws out, ready for whatever danger is approaching.

She forgets that Adora doesn't really need protecting, being She-Ra and all. Even when she's not She-Ra, Adora can still fend for herself. Catra knows this, but it doesn't stop her from being protective. It's in her Magicat nature to protect her mate, even when they are perfectly capable of it themselves. And it's not like Adora/She-Ra is indestructible. She can still be taken down, still be hurt, and since Catra is literally a humanoid cat, she has advantages that Adora/She-Ra doesn't. Speed, claws, fangs, agility, stealth.

She's the perfect protector. At least she tries to be.

"Is it dangerous?" Glimmer asks, already in a fighting stance.

"Oh I sure hope not," Bow chimes in, nervously. "I don't think I brought enough arrows for a fight."

"Bow!" Catra groans, annoyed. "I told you to bring as many as possible just in case! How many did you bring?"

Bow fearfully hides behind Glimmer, ducking down so his Queen could fully shield him from the Magicat's wrath. "Don't be mad–"

"I'm already mad!" Catra hisses.

"I only brought twenty," Bow says in a rush, ducking down even further to the point where he's basically squatting behind Glimmer.

"You only brought twenty?!" The fur of Catra's tail stands up, making Adora and Glimmer laugh.

"Catra, leave him alone," Adora says, holding back her giggles. She puts a hand on her girlfriend's shoulder and immediately it calms Catra down. "Besides, whatever it is, I'm sure we can take it. But let's not jump to conclusions though. We still don't even know what they look like. They could be harmless."

Glimmer notices the figures emerge from the tree line first and points. "Hey look! I think that's them, and from the looks of them, I don't think we have anything to worry about. They look like people."

Catra, Adora, and Bow look over in the direction and see a group of people. They stood near the entrance of the trees, staring right back at them. This group of people were also figuring out what the heck it is that they're looking at. And with an eyesight and sense of smell like Catra, she was able to get a detailed look and whiff of the strangers.

Three males, two females, and an animal that resembled a fluffy cat but with two tails. It looked like a feline, and from the scent, it smelled of one too. But there were two other animalistic scents coming from the group. One of a fox, and the other–

Catra's pupils turn into slits as she hisses and bares her fangs. "A dog. They have a dog with them."

Bow squints his eyes, confusion painting his face. "Uh…where? All I see is a cat and a really tiny kid."

"The one with the white hair," Catra growls out, "He literally reeks of dog." She takes a closer look at him and gasps. "He has fucking dog ears too! Aw hell no. Adora, we're getting out of here." She grabs her girlfriend's hand and starts to tug her toward the space shuttle, but Adora stops in place.

"Catra, wait," she says, squeezing the Magicat's hand. "They probably don't mean any harm. Let's go talk to them; see if there's any areas worth visiting or any foods to try. We can even ask the dog-boy questions about his race. Maybe he's someone like you–"

" Someone like me?!" Catra bristles. "Do you know how offensive that is comparing me to a dog?"

Adora tries not to laugh. “Sorry, it’s just, you’re a cat person and whoever that guy is is a dog person. You’re both humanoid animals. I think it’s pretty cool. I’ve never met a dogman back at home. Do we even have any?”

“I don’t know and I don’t care,” Catra huffs out, folding her arms over her chest. Her tail was flicking back and forth in annoyance, and it took all of Adora’s might to not grab a hold of it and play with it through her fingers. “But I’m hoping we don’t. We have plenty of normal dogs back at home. Humanoid dogs would give me no choice but to burn the world down.”

“Again?” Bow and Glimmer say in unison, making Catra blush and look away in shame.

“It will be for a good cause this time,” she grumbles, making the trio laugh.

Adora unwraps Catra’s arms and brings both of her hands up to her mouth for a gentle kiss on the knuckles. Catra’s blush deepens, but she ignores the heat while she fights back a purr. “Catra?”

“Yes?”

“Don’t be a scaredy cat.”

And just like that, Catra is fuming, her face continuing to turn red but in anger this time. And while she unleashes her wrath out on her girlfriend, Bow and Glimmer watching in amusement, everyone completely forgetting about the group at the treeline. The same group watched their chaos unfold in alarm and curiosity.

“What on earth is going on over there?” Sango asks, her grip tightening on the leather strap of her weapon. “Should we go check it out?”

“Absolutely not,” Inuyasha says, firmly, eyes glaring at the group of people that looked to be around their age. “If my nose is correct, which it always is, one of those strangers is a humanoid feline. And last time we dealt with them, it was nothing but trouble."

"Humanoid feline?" Kagome repeats. "Like the cat-demons of the Panther Tribe?"

"The ones that are now back in the West?" Shippo adds.

"All but one it seems," Inuyasha growls, his ears perking at the noise coming from the strangers. "And from the sound of it, it sounds like she's a feisty one."

"We should get closer," Miroku says, looking over the horizon at the group. "I don't have an eyesight like yours, Inuyasha, but it looks like she's angry from the way her body language is appearing. I think it is only crucial for me to observe her temperament closer–ow!"

Sango had hit him in the head with her giant boomerang with a glare that could kill. "Promiscuous monk."

"I agree with Miroku though," says Kagome. "Besides the catgirl, the others look like humans, but they arrived in a space shuttle. They don't look like what we think aliens are supposed to look like back in my time. I'm really excited to speak with them! They've come from a whole other world. I hope they speak our language."

"You're not at all scared?" Shippo says, hiding behind her leg. "What if they're dangerous? Demons are one thing, but they're from our world. Those guys are literally from the stars! We don't know what they're capable of."

Inuyasha scowls. "Oh, please. As if we've never dealt with dangerous people before with abilities we weren't aware of. I don't give a damn if they're from space or not. If they bite, I'll bite back harder."

Kagome giggles. "That was soooo cringey."

“Hey!”

“Now come on. I want to say hi–”

“No–”

“Don’t make me say it, Inuyasha. I’m not going to argue with you.”

Inuyasha grumbles something Kagome couldn’t understand, but she knew it had something to do with him hating it when she says the word sit. Giggling some more, in victory when Inuyasha didn’t say anything else, Kagome took the lead, walking toward the group of strangers. Inuyasha is by her side in a millisecond, grabbing her hand protectively, but his face is hard as stone, unfriendly and glaring. No one is going to hurt his Kagome. He’ll make sure of it. It’s his life’s mission. And out of all the evil in the world, he’ll be damned if it’s a cat-demon that harms his mate.

It was Bow who noticed first that the group was coming their way, and with a scared, cracking voice, he exclaims: “Look! They’re coming!”

Adora and Catra stop their bickering and turn their heads. Gasping, Adora excitedly pats down her shirt and pants. “Quick, everyone tidy up. We want to make a good first impression.”

“Do you think we should meet them in the middle or have them walk all the way to us?” Asks Glimmer.

“How about neither?” Catra suggests. “I have an idea. Let’s get back in the shuttle and get the fuck out of here. This place looks boring anyway.”

“Babe,” Adora says, her tone serious, “We’ll be fine. Quit worrying so much.”

Catra rolls her eyes. “Oh my bad. It’s not like I have trauma.”

“You have trauma, but not with dogs.” Adora comments, amused. She then says to Glimmer: “And I say we meet them in the middle.”

“Let’s go now then.” The young Queen links her arm through her best friend’s and says to her lover and other friend: “If you two are too scared, go wait in the shuttle for us.”

“As if I’d leave you two out here with strangers,” Bow says to her.

“Same here,” Catra adds. She stretches her arms and back and cracks her neck, the popping noise unsettling everyone. “Alright, let’s get this over with.” Her face shone no fear as she quickly walked ahead, determined to be in the front of the danger.

The other three speed walked, but Catra was taking big steps, so it was hard for them to catch up with her without running, and the last thing Adora, Bow, and Glimmer wanted was to embarrass themselves in front of potential new friends. However, they also didn’t want Catra being the first one to greet them.

But it happened anyway.

As soon as they were in close range, Catra stopped walking and said: “Hey! Who are you?” in an unfriendly, aggressive tone.

Adora, Bow, and Glimmer’s faces immediately flare up. “Catra,” Adora and Glimmer hiss out simultaneously. Before Adora could scold her, the boy with the white hair and dog ears speaks.

“I should be asking you that,” He growls out as he steps in front of a female wearing a white blouse and a green skirt. “Who are you and where do you come from?”

“Inuyasha,” the same female snaps, stepping beside him. “Stop acting like that.”

“I’ll act however I please when there’s a bipedal cat-demon around,” he argues, making Catra hiss, fangs bared.

“Cat-demon?!” She repeats. “If it’s a demon you want, I’ll be happy to give you hell.”

“Catra, stop,” Adora begs, humiliated. “You’re embarrassing us.” She gestures to her, Glimmer, and Bow, their blushes clear and bright as day. “I am so sorry,” Adora continues, talking to the strangers. “She’s, um, very protective.”

“Oh, no, it’s okay. We’re sorry too. Inuyasha is also very protective,” the same girl says, her face also red from embarrassment. “It’s the dog in him.”

“It’s the cat in her,” Adora adds, chuckling lightly while Catra scowls. “I guess cats and dogs hate each other in every world.”

The girl’s eyes brighten. “So you’re really not from here then? We saw your ship from the sky and my immediate thought was aliens. But I wasn’t entirely sure if it was something built from this world or not.”

“We’re from the planet called Etheria,” says Glimmer. “I’m Glimmer, one of my planet’s Queens.”

A different male with black hair, a dark purple robe, and a staff is in front of Glimmer in a flash, taking everyone by surprise. He’s holding her hand and looking deeply into her eyes. “A Queen, you say? My lady, my name is Miroku, and it would be my greatest honor if you would bear my children. I would love to give you an heir or two.”

Glimmer is at a loss for words, too stunned at the strange man’s request. Adora bursts into laughter, Catra is still eyeballing the dog-boy, and Bow is in jealous boyfriend mode. Closing his dropped jaw, he steps in between them and says as nicely as possible: “Sorry, my good man, but she’s already promised to someone else.”

Miroku understood immediately and stepped back. “I see. It is your children she will bear. Your babies will be beautiful.”

Glimmer was, rightfully so, weirded out, and she thought Bow would be too at the odd statement. However, Bow is one of the most laid back, nicest men she knows. So she's not really surprised when he grins wide and says: "Thanks! I hope we have a big family one day."

"As do I–" Miroku begins, but is interrupted by the other female who carried the large boomerang on her back.

"You're not going to have any children if you're dead," she says to him, her tone calm, but her eyes deadly. Like a switch, she gives a friendly smile to the Etherians, and says: "I'm Sango. I apologize for my fiance's behavior. He loses his manners when he's around pretty women. Though, I must say, you are rather beautiful. Is your hair naturally purple and sparkly?"

Glimmer smiles and nods. "It is, thank you! And how about we have a fresh start. Our two companions gave us a rocky first impression, and I'd like to fix it. Once again, I'm Glimmer, this is my boyfriend Bow, and my two friends Catra and Adora. They're girlfriends."

"Girlfriends?" Miroku, Sango, Inuyasha, Kagome, and Shippo all speak together, confused and surprised.

"Like," Kagome takes over, "Girls that are friends or…girls that are lovers?" Her face heats up, hoping her confusion doesn't offend them. It's not an uncommon thing back in her time, but even then it was still something rare for her to see. It's not widely accepted, but the people in that community have more freedoms than they did in the past. Like this past era that they're all in now.

It might be a common thing in her time, but it certainly isn't here. The people here that are in that community stay hidden in the closet. Which is honestly heartbreaking. Kagome, of course, is an ally, and she strongly believes that love is love and that it shouldn't be judged or hated on. Like her love for Inuyasha. There are plenty of people that believe demons and humans shouldn't mingle; that unions between the two are abominations. That it's unnatural. She disagrees wholeheartedly.

Love is natural.

Whether it be between a boy and girl, boy and boy, and girl and girl. It doesn't matter. But she's afraid her friends won't think the same, and that honestly scares her. She loves her friends, but she knows she'll see them differently if they're homophobic. She at least hopes that they'll be civil and nice while keeping their rude comments to themselves. They have every right to their opinions, even if she might disagree with them, but she's not about to have them be disrespectful and rude to their guests. She can respect their opinion, but she won't respect their rude behavior.

Catra grabs Adora's hand and says: "Lovers. Have you never seen a girl-girl relationship before?"

Before Sango, Miroku, Inuyasha, or Shippo could answer, Kagome takes the lead again. "It's not really accepted in this era. In my time, 500 years in the future, it's more common, though still hated on a lot. However, in my time, there's more freedom for people like you compared to the time we're in now. People get exiled or executed. It's wrong. Completely monstrous in my opinion. So please be careful being affectionate around townsfolk. I'm not sure how they'll react, but I doubt the majority will like it. I accept you though."

"As do I," says Sango, taking Kagome by surprise.

"Same here," says Miroku and Shippo together, surprising Kagome once again.

When Inuyasha doesn't say anything, his small group looks at him with glaring eyes; eyes that said Hey, it's your turn to be supportive to these strangers! He sticks his chin up like a stuck up, spoiled rich kid, and says: "Why are you all looking at me? I don't give a rat's ass who or what they fuck. They don't need my approval or anyone else's."

It was…a kind of backwards (and vulgar) way to be supportive, but it worked nonetheless. His response surprised Catra, and while she was grateful for his words, she certainly wasn't going to show it or say it.

Adora squeezes Catra's hand when she feels her tense. "Thank you for your acceptance and your warning. We'll be careful," she says, "And I'll make sure she," she gestures to Catra, "doesn't kill anyone for being an ass in case we're caught."

"Oh, how I wish she was joking," Glimmer says, shaking her head.

And her comment makes Inuyasha tense as well. "If she does, I'll have to kill her. And I'm not joking either."

"Inuyasha," Kagome says in a warning tone.

"Don't worry," Catra says to her, "He'd have to catch me first." She winks at the girl, which only pisses Inuyasha off even more.

"Hey, don't wink at her!"

"Why not? I wasn't hitting on her. I already have a mate–"

"Well, she's mine, so I'd appreciate it if you didn't–"

"You talk too much. What was your name again?" She asks the girl, knowing that if she kept talking to his mate, he'd continue to be mad. And if there's one thing Catra is, it's being chaotic and causing trouble.

"Oh yeah! I'm Kagome–"

"And I'm Shippo," the tiny child says, only to the Etherians' surprise, he wasn't a child at all. He was another animal humanoid. "I'm a fox-demon. I would have said something earlier, but uh…you're kind of scary. Also this is Kirara, she's a fire nekomata. A two-tailed cat!"

Catra and Kirara stare at other eyes, both of their eyes wide and curious. Neither blink, not even when Catra squats down to get a closer look. Catra sniffs, getting a whiff of the creature's scent, then extends her hand out for Kirara to smell as well. A moment later, Catra is picking up Kirara, cradling her like a baby, and rubbing behind her ears, making both felines purr.

"It hasn't even been a minute, but if anything ever happens to Kirara, I will kill everyone in the area, except you Adora, and then myself."

Adora laughs, knowing that Catra is joking, but their new friends didn't, so their shared concern looks made her laugh even more. "She's kidding. So you said you're from 500 years in the future? How did you travel through to the past?"

Kagome smiles, excited to tell her tale. "It's a long story. Come with us to our village and I'll tell you all about it."

<><><><><><>

"So what you're saying is," Catra says after Kagome finishes her story on how she made it to the Feudal Era, "it was because of your cat that you found the well and have become such an important person to this world?"

Kagome nods. "Yeah, basically."

Catra looks over at the dog-demon. "You hear that, mutt? It's because of a feline that you found your mate."

Inuyasha growls. "Yeah, well–"

"Don't care."

His growl grows louder, making Kagome smack his arm. “Quit it. Honestly, Inuyasha, you never act like this around Kirara or Buyo.”

“That’s because they lack the knowledge of human speech.”

Adora and Glimmer each held back a laugh, but Bow just doesn’t have a filter. He laughed harder than what Catra liked. “Laugh some more, Bow. I dare you.”

Bow wasn’t intimidated though this time around. Grinning, he says: “Sorry, Cat, but that was hilarious.”

“It wasn’t even that funny.”

“Oh it totally was.”

“You need to be careful with what you say, Inuyasha,” Shippo warns him, gaining everyone’s attention. “She might curse you for seven generations, and honestly, you totally deserve it.”

“A curse that lasts for seven generations?” Says Catra, intrigued. “I like the sound of that.”

“There’s a superstition,” Sango explains, “that if you get on a cat’s bad side, it will curse you for seven generations. We’re not sure how it started, probably because of the Panther Tribe here in our world, but apparently it’s still a superstition in Kagome’s time too.”

“Panther Tribe?” Catra repeats, intrigued.

“Yeah,” Sango continues, “They’re very similar to you. They don’t have cat ears like yours, but some of them have tails and eyes like yours. There are even bipedal cats. Like actual cats.”

Catra has always been just one of a kind. She knew there were others like her in her world, but she’s never come across them. And while it’s fascinating that these creatures of the Panther Tribe are similar to her, she knows that they’re not exactly like her in the DNA sense. Still, it was cool knowing that other feline creatures exist. “That’s awesome,” Catra purrs out, happily.

“I think you and Karan would get along nicely,” says Shippo. “You both have fiery spirits, especially her since she actually controls fire.”

“Whaaattt?!” Catra drags out, shocked. “They can control fire too?!”

“There are four we’ve encountered who each control an element,” Shippo explains. “Karan can control fire. Toran can control ice. Shunran can control air and create illusions. And Shuran can control electricity and has super strength.”

“Bro, that's so cool!” Catra, Adora, Glimmer, and Bow all say together, making the whole group laugh (except Inuyasha of course).

“You’re such a suck up,” Inuyasha says to Shippo, ruining the mood. “Of course you’d tell her all about our cat enemies. You want her to like you so bad.”

Shippo blushes, embarrassed. He doesn’t like Catra in that way, but he does want her to like him. 1) She’s scary and it’s best to be on her good side. 2) It will annoy Inuyasha, and it’s apparently working. Though, granted, Shippo would have appreciated not being called out and embarrassed like that. “T-Technically, Inuyasha, they’re not our enemies anymore.”

“Teh. They are to me,” the the half-dog demon.

“Inuyasha,” Kagome starts, fed up. “The whole cat-dog being enemies thing doesn’t have to continue. Cats and dogs can be friends. I’ve seen it before.”

“Don’t waste your breath, Kagome,” says Catra, smirking. “Even if he did suddenly start behaving, he already made a very bad first impression.”

“What?!” Inuyasha shouts. “How? I didn’t even do anything. You were the one who approached up aggressively and rudely starting asking us questions.”

“Inuyasha.” Says Kagome.

“What?!” He snaps.

Big mistake.

Calmly, Kagome closes her eyes, takes a deep breath, and says: “Sit boy.”

Catra, Adora, Glimmer, and Bow’s jaws hit the floor when they see Inuyasha suddenly falling over, like a magnet, glued to the floor. Kagome smiles and says: “Where were we?”

From the floor, Inuyasha grumbles out: “Traitor.” Then he’s sitting back up, face flushed, embarrassed. Shippo snickered and mentally thought: Karma.

“So,” Lady Kaede takes the lead of the conversation, “How long do you plan on staying here?”

“Probably just for a day or two,” Glimmer answers. “I need to be back to my own world and queendom by the end of the week.”

“It’s so cool to be honored with the presence of a queen,” Rin admires, her eyes sparkling. Or perhaps it was the reflection of Glimmer’s hair. “You must take home some of my kimonos. Inuyasha’s brother and his servant sometimes visit me and they bring me gifts. A month ago Jaken, the servant, bought a bundle of kimonos that are the wrong size. They’re too big but they might fit the three of you.”

Adora and Glimmer smile, excitedly. “That’s so generous! Thank you, Rin.” Says Glimmer.

“Yes, that’s very sweet,” Adora adds. “Are you sure you don’t want to keep them though for when you’re older and can fit?”

Rin shakes her head. “No, that’s okay. I don’t want them to collect dust. Lord Sesshomaru will understand.”

Adora nods, understanding, and smiles again. “That’s great! But, uh, what’s a kimono again?”

Some giggles pass through the room. “It’s a dress.” Rin explains. “Like the one I’m wearing now. After we eat, would you like to try them on?”

“Absolutely!” Glimmer and Adora say together.

Catra, however, wasn’t very keen on the idea. “It is very thoughtful of you,” she says to Rin, trying to be nice to the kid, “But is this brother from Inuyasha’s human side or dog side? I’d rather not smell like a dog.”

Inuyasha rolls his eyes. “You’re more animal than him and I combined.”

“Actually, Inuyasha,” Shippo says, “Your brother can turn into a giant dog. I don’t think Catra can transform into a cat. So really, your statement is wrong.”

Glaring, Inuyasha says, “Shippo, you better sleep with one eye open tonight. Plus, it doesn’t matter whether he turns into an actual animal or not. The form that he’s in the most isn’t his dog form, so really I’m not wrong at all.”

“You and Catra aren’t even all that different,” Miroku points out.

“Yeah,” Kagome takes over, “You both have animal eyes, fangs, claws, animal ears, animal senses. The only difference is that Catra has a tail. Other than that, you guys are both equally human and animal.”

“I’m not human though,” Catra explains, then falters. “As far as I’m aware, Magicats have always been what we are now. There was never any evolution or mix breeding. At least I don’t think so. I’ve never met my parents nor another person who looks like me. So I don’t really know Magicat's history. Maybe I do have human in me; maybe it was a human who mingled with a feline creature that created the humanoid feline that I am today. The Magicat

Race. Maybe I'm an unnatural science experiment mixed with a human and a cat. A descendant of lab experiments from long ago. But honestly none of that matters though. What matters is that I know you guys are lying to me about him not having a tail. I know he does, show me!"

"What?!" Inuyasha cries out, appalled. "I'm not showing you shit. There's also nothing there to show, unless you want to see my ass."

"As if a butt is going to scare me," Catra cackles, "Are you shy, pup?"

"No–"

"Then show me your tail–"

"I don't have one–"

"I know you're hiding it under your dress–"

"Dress?! This is a robe–"

"Looks like a dress to me–"

Screaming suddenly shuts them up, making them, and the others jump to their feet. Catra's tail is fluffed up in alert, her ears focused on the commotion outside as she stands close to Adora. Inuyasha was doing the same with Kagome, his ears also listening. He didn't need to sniff the air to know that the screaming was caused by a demon, and when he dashes outside, ignoring Kagome's calls for him, his sword is out and ready.

He expected the demon–a giant spider-snake hybrid–but what he did not expect was to hear the words: "For the honor of Grayskull!" And then to see a giant woman step out of Kaede's hut.

It was Adora, but not exactly how she looked before. Her blonde hair was longer, worn down, and glowing; she's taller too, almost 8 feet, and more muscular. She wore what looked to be an white half-dress. Her ruffled skirt, which began under her belt, opened at the front, revealing a pair of white, skin-tight shorts striped with a thick golden line on the outside of each thigh. A golden, six pointed flower was embroidered on her chest, divided by a golden seam that splits the bodice from the collar to belt. At the center of the flower sits an oval azure gemstone and placed on her arms were solid gold arm cuffs.

She also has a thin golden crown with two wings on each side and a red jewel in the center. Her sleeves are golden pointed pauldrons that stand of their own accord. The aforementioned seam blends into the gold trim of her uniform collar and ends when it reaches the apex of her thick golden belt, creating a V-shaped belt at her waist. And to complete the look, she wore a knee-length red cape.

It was an odd outfit, even stranger than Kagome's, but he didn't give a damn about it once he saw her sword.

"Where the hell did you get that?!" He asks her, incredulously. "And what the hell happened to you?"

Adora laughs, sheepishly. "I was trying to find a good opening to tell you guys, but um…maybe I can explain later? What the hell is that thing though?"

"It's a demon, and I don't need your help killing it. Stay away!" And then he's off, charging after the monster.

She-Ra was about to run after him when suddenly Catra called out her name. "Adora!" she says as she runs out of the hut, with everyone else behind her. She stands directly in front of She-Ra, looking up high. "For once I agree with the dog. Do as you're told. This isn't our world. This isn't our fight."

Adora smiles fondly, leans downward, and kisses the top of Catra's head. "Since when have I ever done as I'm told? I'll be right back; this won't take long." And then she too is running after the demon.

"God damn it, Adora!" Catra shouts, then she's running after her. "Wait for me!"

To Glimmer and Bow's surprise, Kagome starts laughing, unbothered. "That's cute. They remind me of Inuyasha and I." She then claps her hands together. "Now let's go! They might need our help."

There was a quiver full of arrows and a bow in her hands that neither of them had noticed (because they were too busy being focused on the monster raging the town), but when they did notice, stars could be seen in Bow's eyes, and he's squealing in joy. All the while, Kagome and the others are racing toward the action.

"Glimmer, she's an archer like me! I have to see this up close!"

"Well duh! You thought we were just going to stick around here? Let's go!"

And so, two groups from different worlds worked together to fight off the monstrous demon. It wasn't as easy as Adora and Inuyasha had originally thought–the demon was quite tough–but also Inuyasha was being stubborn. He didn't want anyone to help him, not even his own friends, but especially not Catra.

But it was because of Catra that he and Adora were able to defeat the demon.

During the fight, Inuyasha had managed to cut off the legs of the spider part of the demon, but only on one side. When he had tried to get to the other side, he was thrown back by the snake part. She-Ra jumped in at that exact second, cutting off the remaining legs, which made the upper body of the spider fall forward, but it still moved via the snake's tail. Despite having no legs, its strength remained, and just like with Inuyasha, it had used its tail to throw She-Ra back as well.

“Adora!” Catra cried out and was about to run to her side when suddenly the end of the demon’s snake tail almost hit her. She jumps up, dodging the hit, and hisses. “Where the fuck is the heart?!”

Kagome had an arrow ready to fly, but the demon was moving too much, causing her to struggle. “I can’t get a good aim,” she says, frustrated, “It’s moving too much.”

Bow, who also had an arrow ready, struggled with the same issue. “I can’t get one either. Inuyasha is on the other side and I’m afraid to hit him.”

“I’ll get a few hits in, don’t worry,” says Sango, confidently, and sure enough she did. She threw her Boomerang once and it sliced through the snake’s tail. Unfortunately, it didn’t kill the creature. It only pissed it off.

“The heart!” Catra says again. “Or the fucking head! We have to stab it through one or the other.”

“I hate to say it,” says Inuyasha from the other side, “But the cat is right.”

“Glimmer!” Catra says, an idea in her mind, and relief flooding through her when Adora got to her feet. The wind had been knocked out of her when the beast threw her back and she knew she was definitely going to feel it tomorrow. “Teleport Adora on top of its head. She’ll stab it through its brain and Inuyasha, while it’s distracted, you can stab it through the heart, to make sure it’s double dead.”

“Got it!” He calls back, swallowing back his pride. It was a good idea, he can admit that, but he’ll never say it out loud.

“Let’s do it!” Say Adora, ready to continue.

Glimmer springs into action, grabbing She-Ra and teleporting them on top of the spider’s head. Inuyashaa readied himself, and as soon as he saw Adora dive her sword into the spider’s head, he leapt forward, going underneath the body where he heard its heartbeat. He stabs through the thick skin and twists. The demon screams in agony until finally, it evaporates away.

Dead and gone forever.

Adora de-transforms back into her normal self once she hits the ground, landing on her feet perfectly, like a cat. She beamed at the thought of Catra being proud of her gracefulness. When she was back to her normal self, her sword vanished too, ready to be called upon in the future.

Catra runs to Adora and immediately starts looking for wounds. “Are you okay? I don’t smell any blood, but the demon literally smelled horrendous. It’s probably masking the scent of your blood. Roll up your sleeves–”

“Catra,” Adora laughs, “I’m fine. I’ve been through worse, trust me.”

Catra cups Adora’s face and stares deeply into her eyes, looking for any signs of a lie. “Are you sure you're okay?”

Adora nods. “I might be a bit sore later, but right now I feel fine. I promise.”

Catra nods back. “Okay.” Then after a moment, a moment that Adora thought would end in a kiss, the Magicat is yelling. “Now what the hell were you thinking?! Inuyasha could have handled it all on his own! Or at least with his friends' help. You didn’t need to intervene!”

“I second that,” he says as he stalks up to them, Kagome at his side. “But I must say, I’ve never seen a transformation like yours before. What exactly are you?”

Adora smiles. “Not what. Who. I’m…well I’m She-Ra.”

“And I’m supposed to already know who that is?” Inuyasha asked, annoyed.

Catra's tail flicks back and forth, annoyed as well. "Watch your tone, dog-breath."

Inuyasha growls and opens his mouth to give an insult back, but Kagome is nudging him in warning. "She's right, Inuyasha. You're still being terribly rude."

He scowls. "Whatever. I'm just asking the questions that we need answers to. Because what the fuck are you, Adora? We've all explained what we are. A half-demon, a priestess, a monk, a fox-demon, and a demon slayer. And from what we've been told, you guys are a Queen, her archer boyfriend, a Magicat that's your girlfriend, and you, the Queen's General. But there's more. You were holding out on us. You're more than a Queen's General, so get to talking."

Adora rolls her eyes. "Geez, you're very charming, you know that?"

"She doesn't have to tell you shit–" Catra starts, stepping toward the half-dog demon, but Adora puts a hand on her shoulder, stopping her in place.

"Catra, no," she says, "Despite him being uptight, he's right. They deserve to know. We're guests in their land. If it was reversed, we'd want answers to." Adora takes a deep breath in before continuing. "Let's start from the beginning."

<><><><><><><>

And so, for the next two hours, Adora, Glimmer, and Bow told their tales. Adventures with She-Ra. And while the three of them were hesitant to bring up Catra formally being their main obstacle, Catra allowed them to be 100% truthful. She didn't want to, in all honesty, but Bow had slipped up and started stuttering out some bullshit lie to save himself, and it was just too obvious. The last thing Catra wanted to deal with was Inuyasha bitching about them not being honest.

Oh, if he was female, she'd be throwing the word 'bitch' around every chance she got.

And when he asked a very unsettling question, she almost let the word slip. Unfortunately, his question had, much to her dismay, cut her deeply.

"She tried to kill you, Adora, and yet you fell in love with her?" He asked, and Catra wasn't sure if he was asking a genuine question out of real curiosity or if it was a way for him to be a dick. "How does someone even fall in love with the person trying to end their life? And Glimmer, she basically killed your mom. How are you okay even being around her? Don't you want revenge? Justice? How could you guys forgive her so easily?"

Catra wanted to yell at him. To scream that it wasn't his fucking business, but she didn't have the energy to fight. The guilt was eating at her, and she was embarrassed. And ashamed. So instead, while Kagome snapped at her mate, saying: "Inuyasha, what is wrong with you?!" Catra swiftly got up, and calmly walked out the door without a word.

"Catra," says Adora, pissed the absolute fuck off at the half-demon, but wanting to comfort her girlfriend first before she cussed him out. "Babe, it's–"

But she's cut off when Catra finally speaks. However, it's not toward her. "Kagome, I'm so sorry. I don't mean to hurt your feelings by saying this, but I really hope you find someone better. Someone who doesn't choose you because you remind him of his ex. You deserve someone better. Someone who isn't an asshole."

Sango sucks in a breath, Miroku's eye's go wide, and Shippo's jaw falls to the floor. It's nothing they haven't said before, but they at least had a bond with Inuyasha. Catra is a new person they just met hours ago. She has no right or place to be saying something like that. And poor Kagome. She certainly didn't need to be reminded of that.

It's not true though. Inuyasha has proven to love her and only her. Not because she reminds him of Kikyo, which in all honesty, she really doesn't. Their personalities are so different. Plus, she doesn't even look like Kagome all that much. There's a little similarity at first glance, but once you look closer you see the differences.

"You fucking cunt–" Inuyasha starts, but suddenly he's plummeting to the ground when Kagome yells: "SIT BOY!"

Catra took her leave as soon as it happened. She even ignored Adora and was already in the trees by the time Adora made it outside.

With her catlike hearing, she heard Kagome: "I've had enough Inuyasha. Stop being a bully and go apologize for your inconsiderate questions."

Catra sprinted even faster. She doubted he'd actually come looking for her to apologize, but just in case, she wanted to be as far away as possible from him. She sucked back her tears, hating that he got her emotional, hating him, and used her anger, the adrenaline that it gave her, to jump fast and faster. She's surprised none of the tree limbs have broken from her forceful jumps. She's also surprised when she eventually comes across a gorgeous waterfall and river.

Most cats hate water, so if Inuyasha does come looking for her, he should know to not look here.

Back at the hut, the atmosphere was tense.

"Kagome, I'm so sorry," says Adora. "I hope she didn't hurt your feelings. Ugh what am I talking about? Of course she did. I am so–"

“No,” Kagome shook her head, “Please don’t apologize. She was hurt. Inuyasha hurt her and she acted out. I’ve been there before. I get it. And don’t worry, I’m not offended or anything like that. I’m secure in my relationship to know that Inuyasha chose me for me. Not because I reminded him of Kikyo or was second best. But you,” she turned to Inuyasha right as he got up from the floor, glaring the daggers at him. “I mean what I said a moment ago. I’ve had enough. Go find her and apologize.”

“Ugh, this is so stupid,” Inuyasha growls. “She’s not a kid or human. She’ll come back when she wants and can defend herself.”

“Inuyasha, if you don’t go get her, I’m going to go back home and won’t be back for a whole month,” Kagome threatens, not bluffing at all, and he knew it.

“For fuck’s sake, fine!” He snaps, hating the damn she-cat for causing a scene. It was just a few questions. There was no need to act out of line like she did.

“Are we sure we should let him find her and not Adora?” Asks Bow. “She won’t come out for him. Or she might kill him.”

“Or he’ll kill her,” Shippo adds, making Adora, Glimmer, and Bow tense.

“Yeah, I don’t think so,” says Adora. “I’m going to find her.”

“Actually,” Sango says, as she pet Kirara, “I think we should let Inuyasha go. This might be their only chance at bonding. Inuyasha isn’t going to kill her. He doesn’t kill people that annoy him. Otherwise, Kagome, Miroku, Shippo, and I would all be dead long ago.”

“I don’t know…” says Adora, worried, but also believing Sango. “I guess…if it’ll help them ease up on each other, then go for it.” But with hard eyes, she says to Inuyasha: “But if I find out you hurt her, I won’t hesitate to have you fetch your own bones.”

Inuyasha rolls his eyes. “Yeah, yeah, whatever.” And then he’s storming out to find her.

Meanwhile, Catra jumps off the current tree she was on, and walks up to the edge of the ground, looking into the water, into her reflection. Her hair fell to her shoulders now, long enough to put half of it into a small bun that Adora thinks is super cute, but her eyes…they’re so tired. The first six months after the war were the hardest. There were repairs that needed done, diplomatic meetings, and so many nightmares. Six months is a long time, but it wasn’t long enough to move on from everything she and her friends had endured. From Horde Prime. From Shadow Weaver. From herself.

They’ve all forgiven her. She and Glimmer even had a one-on-one talk about their feelings. About Glimmer’s mother. There were so many tears, but it made them closer. It was a talk she didn’t want to have, but she’s glad it happened. And yes, six months is a long time, but Catra had discovered not that long ago that it’s going to take more than six months to forgive herself.

And right now, another six months have already passed. It’s been a year now. She’s better than what she was before, much better actually, but not fully. The forgiveness hasn’t happened yet. And Inuyasha just…ugh he really triggered her badly. But not to where she would lash out and attack him. That’s how she knows she’s indeed grown as a person. The old her would have attacked him without a second thought or started yelling. Now granted, she’s already yelled at him today, but she hasn’t attacked him.

Catra knows she’s improved. She knows she is a good person. However, there are relapse days where her brain thinks otherwise. And while today wasn’t one of those days at first, it is now because of that stupid dog.

“Don’t cats hate water?” His stupid voice asked from behind her.

Catra bristles and turns around sharply. “What the fucking fuck are you doing here?!” She snaps at him, claws out and ready.

Welp. Guess she’s going to go back to her old ways and attack him now.

“Calm down, pussycat. I came to apologize.” He said, but she noticed how his hand rested on top of his sword in its sheath, ready to attack her if she strikes first.

“It’s not a sincere apology if you were forced to do it,” she says, looking behind him to see if Adora or anyone else had come with him. She didn’t smell anyone else’s scent, and for a split second, she was sad that Adora didn’t follow her to comfort her. But then she realized that if this conversation ended badly, to where it became a physical fight, she didn't want Adora to see.

“Beggars can’t be choosers,” was his dumb reply.

“I’m not begging you for an apology,” Catra hisses out. “Dumbass.”

Inuyasha rolls his eyes. “You’re a lot of work. I feel bad for Adora.”

“Well, I feel bad for Kagome.” It was a lame retort, but she was too frustrated to even think of something better.

“Yeah, you mentioned that earlier,” Inuyasha reminded her, holding back a growl. It took Kagome forever to believe him that he fell in love with her for her . So he’s beyond pissed that Catra reopened that wound. “You’re lucky I’m not evil because something like that would be valid enough for me to kill you. It took Kagome forever to believe me that my love for her is true.”

“Yeah, well it took Glimmer and Bow a good while to trust me after everything I tried to do–”

“And who’s fault is that?”

“Fuck you!”

“I’m just being honest.”

“I didn’t ask for your honesty–”

“Well, you got it anyway.”

“Ugh! You’re so infuriating!”

“So I’ve been told.”

Catra wanted to say more. To scream. To attack. But instead, she decides to say nothing. Mainly because she doesn’t know what to say. He’s relentless and she’s starting to feel drained. And so, the silence takes over, both of their ears twitching and flicking at the sound of animals rustling in the woods. But then, Inuyasha is chuckling, taking her by surprise. “I guess we really are pretty similar.”

Surprise paints her Catra’s face. “What makes you say that?”

“You’re hotheaded like me,” he answers, then turns around to walk towards the nearest tree. He sits down and leans his back against it, a sign of…not exactly peace, but of no will to fight. “You’re also protective of what’s yours, and I respect that. I am…” he groans, as if in pain. “I really am…sorry for my questions earlier. I didn’t mean to upset you. I was genuinely curious.”

Catra couldn’t help but laugh. “Is apologizing painful for you?”

Inuyasha gives a warning growl. “Watch it. I’m trying to be nice.”

She’ll take that as a yes. “Okay, okay. Do continue.”

“That was it.”

“Oh. Well, that was anticlimactic.”

And this time, Inuyasha chuckles. “How unfortunate for you.”

There was a brief moment of silence again. Inuyasha had said his part already, but Catra wasn’t sure what she should say in return. A ‘thank you for your apology’ just didn’t feel right. So instead, she makes a bold move. To show her sign of peace, she decided to sit next to him, an arm's length away. She said nothing still, and for a few minutes all they did was sit and listen.

Two human-like animals in the woods.

A cat and a dog.

Finally, she asks: "Why are cats and dogs enemies? Do you know?"

Inuyasha shrugs. "No idea. I also wasn't expecting that to be the first thing you say."

"I'm still debating on if I forgive you or not." She was both playing and also serious.

Inuyasha rolls his eyes. "Well, you don't have much longer to decide. I'm about to leave soon. I would have already been gone as soon as I apologized. Usually I'm not this patient."

"Then why are you still here?"

"Because Kagome will kill me if I return without you. And so would Adora."

Catra smirks. "I'm surprised she didn't come out to find me herself, and that she trusted you to do it. Did no one think that we might kill each other?"

"Bow and Shippo did, but Kagome trusted me enough to send me alone. And I guess Adora trusted Kagome enough to believe her."

Stupid, naive Adora.

"It's your punishment, isn't it?" Catra asked, amused.

"You're smarter than you look."

If they were close buddies, she would have punched him in the shoulder. They're not close though, so she didn't, but she did laugh a little. “And you’re pretty funny, I suppose. Look,” she sighs, finding it painful herself to conjure up the next words. “I’m…sorry too. For the way I acted. I know your apology was more towards the questions you asked earlier rather than how you acted before, so I’ll be the bigger person and apologize for my behavior first. So…I’m sorry. It’s like you said earlier. I’m protective of what’s mine.”

Inuyasha rolls his eyes again. “I’m going to ignore the backhanded part of that apology.”

Smirking once more, she says: “Good.”

They’re met with another round of silence. But then Inuyasha said something that surprised her again.

During his time alone when he was tracking her scent, he spent the majority of that time reminiscing about everything that was said about them, their stories, and adventures, and hardships. He had focused mainly on Catra’s and found himself relating to a lot of it. Which, in turn, manages to turn on the guilt switch inside of him, which so rarely happens. And he swore he wasn’t going to mention it, but he found an opening and thought it was perfect for the stupid bonding that Sango had mentioned earlier.

“The hardships you went through…I’ve gone through similar. Not being in control of your body. Being betrayed by someone you loved. Wanting to be the best of the best, to prove everyone wrong. The nightmares. I don’t know your exact pain, but I can relate to you.”

“Actually,” Catra thinks for a moment, surprised, “I think you do know my exact pain.”

“Then I think,” he starts, pausing as well to collect his thoughts, pondering if he’s making the right choice in being somewhat vulnerable to her, “we’d be better off as friends than enemies. I don’t know why cats and dogs are mortal enemies, but Kagome says in her time, there's thousands of canine-feline friendships. Maybe it starts with us."

And Catra is shocked beyond words. "Look man," she starts, getting to her feet and pointing down at him, "I've only known you for a few hours, but everything you're saying seems very out of character."

He rolls his eyes for a third time. He's sure that if he rolls them again they'll get stuck. "Trust me, I'm very much aware. But I sacrifice a lot for Kagome. I love her and I know she'll be beyond thrilled to see us return as friends. No offense, but I'm doing it more for her."

"None taken," she says, meaning it. "It's not like I want a friendship with you anyway. If it happens, it happens, but it's not something I am desperately seeking out. We do whatever we can to make our mates happy. Even if it means setting our pride aside."

Inuyasha nods. "Exactly. But I did mean what I said. About relating to you. Kagome told me to apologize. Not to reveal something personal. So do with that information what you will."

Catra nods back and opens her mouth to respond when suddenly a monster jumps out of the bushes across from them. They both jump to their feet in alarm. The fur on Catra's tail was standing on edge, fluffed out to its full extent. Her claws out, sharp and ready to scratch, and her fangs were bared, ready to bite. Inuyasha had his sword ready, teeth also bared, and stood in a fighting stance.

"Stay back, Catra," he says, using her name for the first time. "I got this."

"No," she said, keeping her eyes on the demon, "We'll kill it together. Don't even bother arguing with me."

Inuyasha groans, annoyed. "Ugh fine! But stay outta my way– Hey!"

She took off running towards the demon as soon as the words slipped out of his mouth. And for a split second she thinks, This is going to be fun.

<><><><><><>

Much to Inuyasha's surprise, he had fun too. And killing the demon was a piece of cake. The two of them walked back to the village, covered in blood and dirt, unbothered at their disheveled appearances. And when they entered Kaede's hut, everyone inside stopped talking and got to their feet, shocked to see Catra laughing at something Inuyasha said.

"Oh yeah, Shippo totally deserved that," she says, amused.

Shippo looked at them confused and intrigued. "Deserved what?" He asked. "What's so funny? What did he tell you?" But the poor fox demon was ignored when Adora and Kagome flipped out.

"Are you okay?!" Says Adora at the sight of the blood.

"What happened?!" Shrieks Kagome.

They both had approached their lovers, worry in their eyes, and immediately began inspecting them. Inuyasha and Catra step back, both of them feeling claustrophobic.

"Back up Kagome," Inuyasha says, his tone gentle. "I'm fine. It's not our blood and no. Before you even ask. I did not fight her."

"He wishes," Catra says. "And if we did, I'd be the victor."

"As if!" Inuyasha scoffs. Catra sticks her tongue out at him, surprising everyone. "Careful," he continued, "Before the dog gets your tongue."

Catra grimaces and nearly gags. “Ew, man. That’s gross. I hate that saying. It sounds like you want to tongue me down.”

“That is not at all what I meant!!” He yells, blushing, embarrassed at her horrendous thought. “Why on earth would you say that?!”

“You started it!”

“But you made it sexual! In front of our mates!”

And as they went back and forth, Kagome and Adora looked at each other in confusion.

“What on earth happened when they were alone?” Adora asked.

Kagome shrugs. “I have no idea, but I’ve never been this bewildered before. Inuyasha has never become friends, or at least this playful, with an enemy this quickly.”

Sango joins them, giggling. “Well, considering that that’s demon blood on them, I say that they had a little bit of bonding time. They’re predatory animals after all. Carnivores. All it took was some alone time killing something for them to grow on each other. Killing demons sure does bring people together.”

And then there’s Bow, who asked out loud a question that turned Adora and Kagome’s wrath on him.

“Hey, Adora, Kagome. Since Catra is a cat and Inuyasha is a dog, doesn’t that mean you’re somewhat partaking in beastiality?”

The blonde and raven haired girls grilled him so hard that Inuyasha and Catra had to stop their own bickering to watch the scene unfold, amused as their girls went to work. Glimmer stood by and watched as her man got ambushed and said to herself.

That is indeed a good question, Bow. A bad question to say out loud, but a good question indeed.

<><><><><><>

Two days later, everyone is saying their goodbyes. Rin had given the girls the kimonos that didn't fit her, and Lady Kaede gave them some food for their journey back. The She-Ra gang also left with some new scars because during the two days, they fought a demon each day.

Bow wanted to get the fuck out, like how Catra did when they first arrived, but it was Catra who insisted that they helped fight back. When Adora asked what the change of heart was, Catra said: "I miss beating up things. I don't really do that as much back at home anymore. And now that I know what I'm up against, I'm not as put off by it."

"You've never been put off by an enemy you had to fight before though." Said Adora. "The first day here you were so against us fighting it."

Catra kissed her cheek and said. "I was against you fighting it. Ever since you became my girlfriend, my overprotective instincts have been pretty intense this last year. I don't want you fighting anything. I would rather you leave it to me or someone else. But I know as She-Ra that's an impossible request to ask of you."

"Oh, Catra. I don't…I don't really know what to say actually."

"Then don't say anything. Just kiss me."

And she did, and of course Inuyasha gagged. "Get a room! Geez, Adora, how can you kiss a sandpaper tongue like that?"

Catra flips him off but doesn't stop kissing Adora, who giggles and smiles against their entwined lips.

And now here they are, two days later, saying their goodbyes. To strangers. But to all of them, they felt as if something the last few days connected them in ways that none of them could truly understand.

"Inuyasha and I befriended Miroku, Shipp, and Sango really quickly," said Kagome the night before, "But that was because we all have a common enemy. So I really don't know why I feel so strongly about the four of you, but…I'm really glad we got to meet. Please come back and visit in the future–"

"And for much longer!" Shippo adds, jumping up into Glimmer's arms (she took a big liking to him). "We can spar with each other next time too."

"You got it, little man," says Glimmer, ruffling Shippo's hair.

"We're really glad to have met you too," Bow says, then rubs his neck sheepishly. "Though, granted, I wanted to get the heck out of here. Now I don't want to leave."

"And I suppose," Catra pipes in, "That I did come off a bit aggressive at first. So…my bad."

Inuyasha chuckles. "Your apologies still need a lot of work."

"At least I can grow a proper tail," she retorts.

"I don't even have a tail to begin with!"

"Exactly!"

"Nope, nope, nope," Adora starts tugging Catra backwards, towards the space ship, "We're not even going to start. You guys were doing so well."

Catra smirks as she wraps an arm around Adora's waist. "I'm not exactly a good kitty, babe. And he's definitely not a good dog."

Inuyasha scoffs. "I'm the best there ever is or was."

"Dude, you have no tail."

"That has nothing to do with it!"

"I don't man, a great dog-demon would have the most amazing tail ever, and you just don't got it."

"Weren't you guys leaving?" Inuyasha urges them, making her laugh because she knows he's trying to get her gone as soon as possible.

She punches him in the shoulder and says: "See you later, dog-boy."

Inuyasha rolls his eyes at the nickname. "Don't come back for a long time, cat-girl."

Catra grins. "Don't miss me too much."

"I won't."

"You will."

They went back and forth with each other as Catra and the others loaded onto the ship, and much to Inuyasha's dismay, Catra was able to get the last word before the ship's doors closed.

"Damn cat," he mutters, but waves at his new-found friends, who were waving at him and the others from the window.

And inside the ship, Catra smiles genuinely. "Stupid dog."

And in both of their heads, they couldn't help but think: Maybe it does start with us.

NOTES: Thanks for reading this random, but fun crossover one-shot! I'm bi and have a huge crush on Inuyasha AND Catra, and when I realized they’re both part animal, I thought it would be interesting to see how a cat and dog humanoid would interact. I hope I did their characters justice. Sometimes it can be hard and I gotta deal with them being out of character, but despite the little stress at being perfect, I had so much fun writing this and I hope it finds the right audience that loves it just as much as I do. Thanks so much for reading!
