Dating Advice

by Capndragn94

Summary

Frosta turns to the couples of the Princess Alliance for advice on a sensitive issue. Basically, she has a crush, and she's about to make it everybody's problem.

Catradora

Standing outside Bright Moon's castle gave Frosta an epiphany, she really should have made an effort to forge more relationships outside of the Alliance. If she had, she might've been able to go to someone else with this problem, which is all she can think about, no matter how hard she tries. Frosta tried to deny it at first, tried to play it off as being excited to finally have a friend her own age, but she could no longer deny that what she was feeling was different from how she felt towards her other friends. To her horror Frosta realized she had a crush, and even worse she was going to get advice about it from Catra and Adora.

Frosta knocked on the door to their room hoping they were alone, the last thing she wanted to do was to spread this around. Adora answered and said "Frosta? What are you doing here? I mean, I'm glad to see you, and all, but--" sensing she was about to ramble Frosta cut her off with "Can I come in? I... need to talk to you about something." Adora responded with "Uh, sure, but Catra's here, so if you want to go somewhere else," Frosta sighed "No, I want to talk to her too." Surprised, she let her in and called for Catra to join them, "What's going on," said Catra, "Don't you princesses usually have a meeting first before you ask for our help?" Frosta said "This isn't a princess thing, it's a… personal thing. Do you guys remember any of the younger cadets from the Horde?" This caught both of them off guard, even though the war ended over a year ago people rarely asked them about their life in the Horde. "Uh, yeah" responded Catra, "Cobalt was in charge of training cadets, but I had to oversee the advancement exam anytime a group moved up a level" and Adora followed up with "I also remember a little about them, why do you want to know?" They're confusion only grew when Frosta's face got red as she asked them, "Do you guys remember a cadet named… Spidra?"

"Spidra?" they both repeated, and after thinking for a minute they both recalled who Frosta was talking about. Vague memories of a macabre, blue-skinned girl with a short red peekaboo hairstyle came flooding to the two girls. "Wasn't she that creepy Arachna girl all the other cadets were afraid of?" Catra said, angering Frosta. "She's not creepy! She's cool, and smart, and pret-! I… I mean, she's…" as she was sputtering out mid-tirade, Catra and Adora finally realized why Frosta had come to talk to them. "Oh my stars, you LIKE her!" screamed Adora, causing the heat in Frosta's face to rise, just like the laughter in Catra's throat. Powering through the embarrassment, Frosta yelled "Yes, all right! I like her! And since she was in the Horde, and you were in the Horde, I thought… maybe you could give me some advice on how to tell her?" For a moment they stared at her like she had grown a second head, and then Catra said "You want dating advice… from us?" causing Frosta to think for a moment. "I mean… it seemed like a good idea a minute ago, but now that I'm here, I'm kind of… remembering who you are, and I think I may have made a mistake" said Frosta, causing Adora to rub the back of her neck in discomfort. Flatly, Catra responded with "Yeah, we can't help you" and Frosta awkwardly excused herself from their room.

Dejected, Frosta left Catra and Adora's room no closer to solving her problem. She wasn't usually like this, normally if she had a problem she could bash her way through it, preferably with giant ice fists. But this was different, this entire situation was completely foreign to her. Fighting in a war was so much simpler than telling your new friend you have a crush on them. As she walked down the hall Frosta got an idea, Bow and Glimmer were friends before they got together, maybe they could help her.

Thankfully they were both in the throne room, and to Frosta's luck they were alone. Bow was showing Glimmer something on his tracker pad when he spotted Frosta and said "Oh hey Frosta, what's up?" She responded with "I was actually hoping I could get some advice from you two. I have a friend, and I think I have… feelings for her. How did you guys move on to being more than just friends?" They paused for a minute before Glimmer let out a scream, teleported between Bow and Frosta, then teleported all three of them to her and Bow's shared quarters. "Tell. Us. Everything! Who is she? What's she like? Why do you like her?" she asked with stars in her eyes, acting more like a gossipy teen than the queen of Bright Moon. "Glimmer, that's not right," said Bow, causing Frosta to sigh in relief. That relief was short lived however, as he immediately followed up with "She has to start with how they met!" and then joined Glimmer in waiting for Frosta's response. With a groan that would've put Mermista to shame, she told them about how she met Spidra.

Honestly, she didn't think how they met was a big deal, she was visiting Scorpia in her new kingdom, the former Fright Zone. Despite now being ruled by a princess, the denizens there were still untrusting of the Alliance, which was understandable as the kingdom was almost entirely populated by former Horde members. If Scorpia was preoccupied with princess duties or Perfuma, Frosta would wait until Scorpia was ready to hang out, usually while being avoided and ignored by all the untrusting citizens around her. Then one day, while she was eating lunch by herself because Scorpia was called away for an emergency, a spider-like girl walked up to Frosta with her own lunch, said something about how following the masses led to the downfall of the original Horde, and sat down next to her and started eating. She was confused, but they started talking and Frosta thought she was pretty cool, and when they were done eating Spidra showed her how use the training hall the Horde used to train cadets. Before she knew it, when she wasn't with Scorpia she was with Spidra, and soon she started going there just to see Spidra.

All in all, not a bad way to meet someone, at least that's how Frosta felt about it. Bow and Glimmer however, looked like they were about to burst before Bow exclaimed "That's sooo cute!" Annoyed, Frosta responded with "Okay, I'm starting to get why Catra hates that! Look, I didn't come here for this, I don't don't know how to tell Spidra I want to be more than just friends with her. Can you guys just tell me how you became Boyfriend and Girlfriend?" Looking guilty, Bow said "Sorry Frosta, we just got excited, of course we'll tell you." Glimmer started with "Everything was happening so fast, I had no idea if we were going to make it or not, once I realized I may never get the chance to tell him how I felt, I just went for it and said--" as they locked hands, Bow and Glimmer finished her sentence together and said "I love you."

Unimpressed with their display of emotion, Frosta said "Okay, but how did you both DECIDE to be together? How did that conversation go?" You could almost hear the sound of a record scratch as the two lovebirds went completely silent, eventually Bow responded to Frosta's question with a helpful "Uhhh…?" Ignorant to how her question affected her friends, Frosta continued with "You didn't just tell each other you're in love with the other and decided you were boyfriend and girlfriend without talking to each other, did you? You guys have been together for a while, surely you've had at least ONE conversation about your relationship, right?" This time it was Glimmer who answered her with an "Uhhh…," to Frosta's disappointment. Unaware of the bomb she just dropped, Frosta sighed and said "Well, I guess I'll try asking someone else, thanks anyway guys" leaving as Bow and Glimmer just stared awkwardly at each other. Getting advice was going to be harder than Frosta thought.

"So, they were no help," Frosta said to herself as she sat on a bench outside Bright Moon's castle, pondering who she could ask for advice next. "You know, eventually we're going to start taking this personally," came the sound of Netossa's voice, startling Frosta and breaking her chain of thought. "Darling!" came the chastising voice of her wife, Spinnerella, "We agreed to wait until SHE came to US for advice." Panicking, Frosta said "W-What are you talking about?" hoping in vain they were talking about something else. "Frosta, this is Bright Moon," said Netossa, "the walls have ears," then she looked at a guard who was trying their hardest to avoid eye contact. Now blushing madly, Frosta exclaimed to them "Gossip? Seriously? It hasn't even been more than a couple hours! How could people already know?"

Sitting there, her red face now in her hands, Frosta made no objection as Netossa and Spinnerella each took a seat beside her. "Look," started Spinnerella, "I know we kind of just dropped this on you," pausing a moment to glare at her wife, "but Netossa and I have a lot of experience in relationships, and if you give us a chance, we just might have some advice that can help you." Frosta thought she had a point, and explained her predicament to the married couple.

"That's about it. I don't know how to tell her how I feel. What should I do?" she finished, hoping the older women had more to offer her than the previous couples. Spinnerella smiled and said "From what you've told us, she already likes you as a friend, so you should just be honest with her. Stop torturing yourself over the best way to do it and just do it. Right darling?" For a few seconds Frosta thought "Could it really be that simple?" until Netossa chimed in with "Hold on a minute, Spinny. Just walking up to this girl and telling her you have a crush on them could scare her, I think Frosta SHOULD have some sort of game plan."

Well, now she didn't know what to think, and apparently Spinnerella didn't either, given the surprised look on her face. "Darling, something like this can't be planned, it has to be natural, like when you first asked me out," she said, causing Netossa to respond with a confused, "What? You asked ME out first." And just like that they were arguing like an old married couple, which they kind of were. "No I didn't! You asked ME first, it was at Princess Prom," said Spinnerella, "No, you asked ME first, it was just after some meeting! How could you forget?" said Netossa. They went back and forth like this for a while, eventually Frosta got up and said "Thanks for your… help, but I think I'm gonna ask someone else," then left when she saw they were too engrossed in their argument to notice her leaving. Maybe she should try asking someone who's not from Bright Moon?

Thankfully, getting to Plumeria wasn't as lengthy a trip as it had been in the past. With the technology boom that followed the war, moving between kingdoms turned into an hour or two hovership ride. Still, the shuttle Frosta took had to drop her off on the outskirts of a forest, as Plumeria's citizens were nature-loving people, and didn't take to technology's prospects as well as the rest of Etheria. After hiking for a bit Frosta finally came across the clearing where Perfuma and the Plumerians lived, and was instantly swept up into a hug by someone else who was visiting.

"Little buddy!" exclaimed Scorpia, "I'm so so SO happy to see you, we never get to hang out anymore." Frosta happily returned her hug, and received another when Perfuma joined them and placed a flower crown on her head. "Thanks for agreeing to meet me here guys," Frosta started, "I have a problem, and I'd really like to deal with it before I go back to your kingdom, Scorpia." Confused, they asked her to elaborate, and she ended up receiving even more hugs once she was finished. "This is so exciting!" said Scorpia, "my little buddy is all grown up!" finishing her sentence with a sniffle. Blushing, Frosta responded with "Uh, thanks? So, do you two have any advice on how to ask a girl out, because I've been drawing A LOT of blanks?" Perfuma responded with "Of course! We're happy to lend you any help we can as you take this step on your journey towards adulthood!" then led her and Scorpia to a communal area and sat them both down.

"Now, before we answer any questions you may have," said Perfuma, "we need to know, are you and Spidra's wavelengths on the same level?" Frosta responded with "What?" so she elaborated with "Do your auras flow toward each other, instead of away from each other?" Again, Frosta responded with "What?" but thankfully, Scorpia chimed in with "I think she's asking if you and this girl are compatible or not?" Now that she understood, Frosta answered them with "Compatible? I mean… I think so? We both have a lot in common. We both like punching stuff, we're both around the same age, we're both veterans of a planet wide war, we both like to draw…" and then she pulled out a tracker pad. "And we're both really big fans of this awesome new band" she said while pressing a button on the device, which instantly released horrifying death metal screaming.

"Aren't they amazing!" Frosta yelled to her friends over the loud, blaring music she was playing. Scorpia was taken aback, but Perfuma maintained her composure with a forced smile. Twitching, Perfuma responded to her question with "That's… lovely, but back to the topic at hand-" when all of a sudden she was interrupted by the nearby Plumerians. All of a sudden the Plumerians were running around, screaming and covering their ears. "This music!" one of them yelled, "It's so angry and chaotic!" and another one yelled "It's knocking my chakra out of balance!" Turning off her music, Frosta and her friends watched as chaos erupted in the area around them. The people around them were screaming and knocking things over, attempting to drown out the music that none of them knew stopped playing because now THEY were being too loud. "You know what" said Frosta, looking at the carnage she's caused, "You guys seem busy, I'll talk to you later." Then she ran out of there as fast as she could, while Scorpia and Perfuma just watched the mayhem around them with shocked looks on their faces.

"Maybe this won't be so bad," Frosta said desperately, realizing she was running out of options for advice. She realized this as she stood in front of Mermista's castle in the newly rebuilt Salineas. Unlike the rest of the Alliance, Sea Hawk and Mermista each have experience with dating different partners, so at the very least, they may be able to give her some advice on what NOT to do when asking out Spidra. After a guard let her in, Frosta went to the throne room, where Mermista was currently in the process of redecorating the place.

"No no no, I specifically said I wanted SEAFOAM green, not emerald green!" she said to a servant holding curtains, "Why are you putting that there? That's a terrible place for a rug, and it totally clashes with everything else in the room!" she said to another. When Mermista finally noticed Frosta, she let out a groan and said "What are you doing here? I'm like, sooo busy with refurbishing and stuff." Frosta responded, "Yeah, I can see that, but... I have a problem, and I'm running out of people I can turn to, so if you could just-" but she was cut off when Sea Hawk burst in on them and started singing to Mermista.

Letting out another, much longer groan, she responded to her boyfriend's singing with "And now YOU'RE here! What are you doing here, Sea Hawk? I told you I was gonna be busy for a while, now that the castle is rebuilt." She continued with "I have so much I need to do! I don't have time for whatever it is you're doing." That didn't seem to deter him however, as he said "Ah, but as you know, I can only be away from my dearest Mermista for a short time, before the pain of your absence becomes unbearable!" earning another groan from Mermista.

"Have no fear though," said Sea Hawk, trying to alleviate his girlfriend's frustration, "I will not interfere, I will only sing your praises as you try in vain to make this palace as beautiful as its princess." It didn't work however, so Mermista said to Frosta, "Look, I'm already dealing with a lot here, so can whatever you need wa-" then turned to see Frosta was no longer there. Shrugging, Mermista returned to dealing with her own problems, including Sea Hawk. Frosta may be getting desperate, but she's not that desperate… yet.

As Frosta stood in front of the door to Entrapta and Hordak's lab, after braving the maze that is Crypto Castle, she had only one thing to say before she walked in there and asked them for advice, "I'm gonna die alone." Needless to say, she didn't have high hopes for this, but she still wasn't going to give up, she couldn't give up. She still remembers all the talks she's had with Spidra, venting to her about how no one treats her seriously because she's the youngest, then she'd make her feel better by asking about her drawings or telling her about similar experiences she's had with older cadets. Spidra's the only one who's ever understood her, who's never brushed her off or treated her differently. All Frosta wants to do is figure out how to ask her out, even if she has to get help from the two biggest weirdos on Etheria.

As soon as Frosta let herself in, Hordak spotted her and said, "What are you doing here? I will not tolerate any uninvited-" only to be cut off mid sentence when Entrapta chimed in with, "Hi Frosta, come on in! I forgot you were coming but don't worry, we'll be done in a minute." Grumbling, Hordak mumbled something about Entrapta never telling him anything, and then returned to their shared project. Most of the Alliance was still wary of him, but honestly, Hordak didn't even faze her anymore. Somehow, watching Hordak be corralled by his tiny purple marshmallow of a girlfriend, had dulled the image of a big bad conqueror he had built.

When they were finished they both walked up to her, and Entrapta said "So, what do you need help with?" This was her last resort so Frosta decided to tell them everything, her crush on Spidra, her "advice" from the other princesses, and how after everything, she still had no idea how to ask her out. Unimpressed, Hordak responded to her issues with, "We are scientists! Why would we debase ourselves by applying our knowledge to such a trivial problem?" earning himself a glare from Frosta. "Hordak," Entrapta said in a chastising tone, "I know it's difficult, believe me, but being a part of the Alliance means we have to help each other, even with things outside our interests." Sighing, he turned to the young princess, and to her surprise asked her, "What do you want to know?"

Frosta was kind of expecting them, or at least Hordak, to turn her away, so in a confused voice she asked them, "Um, I guess… can you tell me how you two got together?" Entrapta answered her, "Sure! I have LOTS of data on that subject!" and then it looked like she was about to pull out a tracker pad, but stopped herself. After thinking for a moment, Entrapta said, "Truthfully, I could show you HUNDREDS of hours of research I've done on my and Hordak's relationship," an idea that visibly frightened both Frosta and Hordak. "But in the end it all came down to this, he trusted me, he respected me, and finally… he understood me, and I did the same for him, the rest just sort of… fell into place" and then they looked at each other, and for the first time since Frosta entered their lab, Hordak had a small smile in his face. After a few seconds, Entrapta continued with, "From what you've told us, you already have that with Spidra. So what's the problem?"

Like a lot of the things Entrapta has said, this left Frosta speechless, and she wondered to herself, "Have I been thinking about this too much?" As she looked back on all the people in relationships she's talked to through this endeavor, she realized something, none of them are particularly graceful, with themselves or their words, and yet all of them managed to be with the person most important to them. If there was hope for THAT lot, maybe there's hope for her.

"Maybe… maybe you're right, and I'm overthinking this, but… I still don't know how to just, you know, get her to go out with me," Frosta said as Hordak scoffed. "Entrapta and I first encountered each other due to our mutual appreciation of science," said Hordak, now desperate to end this encounter and get Frosta out of his lab. "You've said both you and this girl have expressed interest in a 'band' so why don't you invite her to something involving that?" he said, even though he had no idea what a band was. To Frosta's continuing surprise, that actually made sense. She and Spidra are both crazy big fans of the same band, and they DO have a concert coming up, if Frosta asked her to go with her there's no way she'd say no, at least SHE wouldn't.

"Did… did you just give me advice that could ACTUALLY help me?" Frosta said with shock in her voice. Before Hordak could answer her, she ran up to him and, to his horror, hugged him. "Thank you! Thank you both sooo much! That's PERFECT! I finally know what to do!" she yelled as Hordak awkwardly patted her on the head and waited for her to stop. Throughout all of this Entrapta wore a huge grin, and made a mental note to add this to her logs.

Finally, Frosta released Hordak and waved goodbye to him and Entrapta as she left their lab. Blushing, Hordak tried to avoid Entrapta's gaze as she looked at him with stars in her eyes. After everything, Frosta finally had a plan, she was going to ask Spidra to go with her to the concert, and hopefully, she'd say yes.

It was a slow day for the Kingdom of Snows, so its ruler was currently whittling her time away on her tracker pad. All of a sudden she received a call, "Frosta, hi!" said Adora, "I've been thinking about what you asked us, and I'm sorry we didn't have any advice for you. I've been working on some ideas, and I think we're ready to help you!" She then motioned the camera on her end to a large diagram of different scenarios, and Catra helpfully added, "It's mostly about what not to do."

"That's… great, but it's not necessary, I-" she then got another call, this time from Glimmer and Bow. Sighing, Frosta figured this was about the same thing, so she added them to her current conversation with Catra and Adora. A tired looking Glimmer said, "Frosta, Bow and I just finished a long, LONG talk, and we're ready to answer any questions you have now." Before she could answer her, Frosta received ANOTHER call from Netossa and Spinnerella. Frosta could already see where this was going, so she decided to get it over with and steer into the skid.

Spinnerella started "I'm sorry we got into that argument when you needed us. We're here for you now," and Netossa added, "Also, it turns out we BOTH misremembered how we first met. We got into an argument about who was ahead of who in line for the bathroom." While 3/4ths of the couples who heard that had nothing to add, Bow cheerfully replied, "Hey, that's how my dads met!" Frosta was about to tell them all to back off, but she received yet another call from Perfuma and Scorpia.

This time Frosta was the one who started, "Hey guys, I'm really sorry about what happened in Plumeria. How bad was it?" Scorpia assured her it was nothing, "Oh, it's alright! Everything died down once we took care of the fires." Frosta responded with "Fires?!" but Perfuma just said, "Don't worry about it. We want to continue our conversation from before the… unpleasantness started."

Just when she thought this couldn't get any more ridiculous, Frosta received another call, this time from Mermista. "Seriously, SERIOUSLY! I just found out you asked for dating advice from everyone but me! What the scallop!? Now I'm not gonna warn you about what Sea Hawk has planned!" Before she could even THINK about asking her what she meant by that, Frosta received another call.

"Hi Frosta!" said Entrapta, "I just wanted to see how that advice Hordak and I gave you went. Definitely because I want to know if it helped you, and not at all because I want to record the results for research purposes," ending her sentence by clicking a pen with a smile on her face. By this point, everyone had started arguing about whose advice would be the most beneficial, and Frosta was getting sick of it.

"Would all of you cut it out with your stupid advice! It turns out I didn't even need it!" Frosta yelled at them, causing them to pause for a moment before asking her to clarify. Blushing, she started with, "Well, we were hanging out, and I was about to ask her out, I even had a plan, but then-" the princesses looked like they were about to explode before Frosta happily announced, "SHE asked ME out! There's this new restaurant opening up in Scorpia's kingdom, and she asked me to go with her! I couldn't believe it!" Ignoring the commotion on the other ends of her call, Frosta continued "I was a little bummed I didn't get to ask her out first… for about a second! Anyway, she's treating me to dinner and then I'm treating her to a concert, since I already bought the tickets. Thank you all for your 'advice' though, now if you excuse me, I think I'm gonna call my new girlfriend. Bye!" and then hung up on them, to a lot of protests. After everything they put her through, that felt GOOD.

Frosta was just about to call Spidra, when a thought occurred to her, eventually her girlfriend is gonna want to meet her friends, she's going to have to plan or something for when that happens. Suddenly, one of her advisors came to her, with a letter in their hands, and said, "Your highness! A flaming vessel has just been reported approaching our shores! According to reports there's only one passenger, and when we tried to contact him all he did was... sing a love ballad between you and someone named Spidra?" With this new information, and the fact that the unread messages on her tracker pad had begun to grow at an alarming rate, Frosta had decided to change her previous thoughts on her girlfriend meeting her friends, to IF that happens.
