Habibti

by Minervaas

Summary

modern au- Casta does a little surprise for her girlfriend, which actually isn't that surprising. i don't know how to write this summary, basically just one big fluff.

Notes

i read a post about SW being from the Middle East and considering her veil, i wanted to write something about that for the longest time. since i am not from there or muslim i tried to look things up so i hope all is correct if not or you think something isnt represented well feel free to point it out.

The smell of Moroccan Chorba fills her nose as soon as her alarm clock goes off. Before she can even investigate further her hand kills the annoying buzz of her phone. 3:30 am, she reads as if she wasn't the one setting the alarm. Light Spinner, without even looking over, already feels the lack of her girlfriend's presence on the other side of the bed. With a light sigh she steps into her slippers and starts her walk to the source of the smell. She should have known Casta would do something like this no matter the times she told her to just sleep it off. And she should also suspect her to do it for the rest of the month.

"Casta, what are you doing?" she says as she spots the woman over the stove, her lips against the wooden spoon, slurping the soup off of it and blowing air as the hot liquid touches her tongue. Her curvy form is in a light silky nightgown, perfect for the warmer weather that came with April, and when she turns to her, she sees the traces of tiredness placed all over her face.

Yet Casta still flashes her the biggest smile, "Trying my first Moroccan Chorb."

"You mean Chorba.", She chuckles too as Casta shyly turns her gaze away, "I told you I'll handle Ramadan, I don't need your sleep deprived cranky self for the rest of the month." Light Spinner scolds while still coming to wrap her arms around her girlfriend's waist and place a kiss on her warm cheek.

"I wanted to." The shorter woman winces, running her gentle fingertips over her arms, "You don't let me fast with you, this is the least I can do."

"Micah would kill me if I let you after what happened last year."

Casta lets out a loud ugh at the reminder of her passing out last April, in the middle of the store and hitting her head on the shelf which led to having 5 stiches and forced bed rest from her brother and girlfriend. "Don't remind me."

Light Spinner's arms tighten around Casta's waist and she presses a kiss bellow her ear before brushing her lips against the shell of her ear, "Don't get embarrassed now, we all know you can't survive without your Korean sweets or whatnot."

"Hey!" She wiggles playfully in her arms, "It's Yakgwa, it's made of HONEY!", her body finally manages to do a 180°, "And I can go without sweets." Casta pouts., her swollen eyes still shining happily.

"Mmm, sure you can. Your sugar levels just dropped randomly on that day."

"You're impossible." Her gentle hand hits against her upper arm. Light Spinner though, uses the moment to press a kiss to her girlfriend's plump lips that hold only a faint taste of the vegetable soup. She feels the hands on her move up her neck, where they pull her close in, and the little sigh shakes her lips.

"Careful, don't burn yourself now." With a smirk she pulls away, pulling Casta's hips from the hot stove. "I think it's done."

They eat with mummers and giggles, and Light Spinner's praise of her girlfriend's cooking skills despite this being her first try. Few occasional kisses are thrown in between their bites, and she makes herself a mental note to go to the Asian store after work. "Not as good as the Moroccan, but I'll give it to you, it's pretty well."

"When will you take me to Morocco then?", her long lashes flutter as she gives one of her big cheeky smiles. She damn well knows she is her one and only weakness, and she herself hasn't figured out why exactly is that. She is turning too soft around this woman.

"As soon as possible, dear."

“Promise?” the thick eyebrows rise, and she can’t help but to scoff and roll her eyes.

“You’re such a child, Castaspella.”

“Liar, could a child cook you this well?”

“Aye, Habibti, don’t hurt me with such terrible words.” She says, getting up to help Casta clean up. They carry the plates together as she watches Casta’s face scrunch up.

“Wait, what does that mean?”, she smiles down at her as the plates clink in the sink. “Are you mocking me in Arabic now hmm? You’re so a-“ Light Spinner crushes their lips together in a longer make out session this time around. Her hands exploring what she already knows so well.

“Always thinking so bad of me, Habibti?”

“Ugh! Stop or tell me what it means?” She turns the water on, turning away from Castaspella’s whining. It doesn’t last long as she feels her hugging her from behind her head resting on her back, all followed with a loud yawn. “I’ll leave you to pray.” A small peck is placed on her back before the weight is gone.

“Thank you, Habibti.”

“You’re so annoying!” The doors of the room are left half open and she can see her silhouette get under the blankets. “Remind me again what do I see in you?”

“I could ask the same…”

“Just put your sajjāda away before you go to work.”

“Sure thing.”, she yells back as she enters the living room just to see her sajjāda has been already prepared and she smiles, wondering when she’s finally going to put a ring on that silly woman.
