Random Meetings, Confusing Feelings

by Capndragn94

Summary

After Scorpia had to ditch her for a princess emergency, Frosta decided to eat lunch and sulk in a dingy Fright Zone cafeteria. Then along came a spider, who sat down beside her.

Random Meetings

Frosta was NOT happy, she had half a mind to turn this into a diplomatic incident. She had finally managed to get Scorpia to agree to hang out with her, which had become a rarity now that she was in charge of a kingdom, and at the last minute she had to cancel because some idiot had misplaced a document and all of Scorpia's advisors were freaking out about it. Who would've thought the worst thing about the former Fright Zone was the fact that it was a bureaucratic nightmare. Now she was sitting in a cafeteria, eating alone because none of the former Horde citizens would sit with her, and wondering if this was how it was going to be from now on.

No one in the Alliance had time for her anymore, sometimes it was official princess business, but most of the time it was because they were all busy with their gross couple's activities. By the time the war ended almost EVERYBODY had gotten with someone, everybody except her, and as far as Frosta was concerned, she was the lucky one. Frosta may be considered a teenager now, she is 14 and ¾ after all, but there's no way she'd EVER waste her time on something as pointless as, ugh, love.

Suddenly, Frosta was broken out of her bitter train of thought when she heard the sound of someone chewing, and to her surprise that someone was sitting right across from her. Frosta looked at the spider-like girl and confusingly said, "Uh, hi?," to which she responded with a flat, "Hello" and then continued eating her food. "Can I help you?," she asked, "With what? I'm just eating," the girl replied in a monotone fashion. Now Frosta was starting to get a little annoyed, "Any reason you're doing it HERE? Everyone else is avoiding me like I have a disease or something. Why aren't you?"

"Following the masses is what the Horde's people have always done, and it led to our decline. I aim to be better than those who came before me," the girl said, confusing Frosta even more. Indifferent to Frosta's confusion, the girl continued, "Also, this is my favorite table, you're sitting where I carved my name," causing Frosta to look down at where she was pointing. "Sooo... your name's Spidra?" she asked, and Spidra replied, "If that's what i wrote, I guess it is," Frosta rolled her eyes at the dry reply. Now she was more intrigued than annoyed, so Frosta introduced herself, "I'm Princess Frosta, ruler of the Kingdom of Snows," she declared proudly. Unimpressed with Frosta's booming introduction, Spidra said, "Well, you already know my name, but I'll introduce myself anyway. I'm Spidra, former Horde cadet and current Skiff Courier."

"What's a Skiff Courier?" Frosta asked, suddenly in a better mood, Spidra shrugged and said, "I use a Skiff to deliver packages and messages, there's not much to tell." In spite of saying that, Frosta insisted Spidra tell her more, she wanted to try riding a Skiff but everyone told her she "wasn't trained" enough, and she could "hurt someone" if she wasn't careful, buzzkills. They talked for a while, and eventually Spidra told her about the training hall. Frosta asked, "Why does the Fright Zone still have a training hall, the war's over?" and Spidra replied, "Doesn't mean Etheria stopped being dangerous. Plus for a lot of us fighting is all we know, and not all of us are ready to give it up yet." Frosta was concerned for a moment, and then Spidra said, "I have a training session reserved today. Would you like to join me?" and all other thoughts raced out of her head as she yelled, "YES!"

It didn't take long for them to reach the training hall, Spidra clarified her reservation with a furry blue guy and then rented some simulation glasses and training gear for her and Frosta. "You see that screen up there," she said, pointing to a green scoreboard, "when you take out a target your ranking goes up, whoever gets the highest ranking before time runs out wins. Are you ready?" Summoning ice fists, Frosta replied, "You better believe it!" with a smirk of determination on her face. After moving to stand on a glowing shape on the floor, and motioning for Frosta to do the same thing, Spidra raised the spider legs on her back into an attack position and waited for the session to start.

Confusing Feelings

Chapter Summary

> After completing their training session, Frosta and Spidra have a little talk.

The second the door opened, both Frosta and Spidra sprinted in and started smashing robots and defeating holograms. Spidra using her spiderlegs as weapons and Frosta using her ice fists. When the floor tiles gave way Spidra jumped and stuck to the wall, and then crawled along it as quickly and easily as she could run on the ground. Frosta simply used her ice powers to propel herself to a safer area when the time called for it. When they made it to the next area, Frosta looked around for threats but couldn't find any, and then a hologram descended on her from above.

She easily dodged it, and then pierced it with an ice shard, dispersing it as others appeared to take its place. It was clear the holograms used to be princesses, but they had been reprogrammed to appear featureless, so as not to reinforce the former Horde's anti-princess agenda. With a single ice blast Frosta took out all the holograms before her, only for robots to appear and start shooting at them with lasers. In awe of how easily Frosta dispatched the holograms, Spidra realized that if she had any hope of winning she had to kick it up a notch.

Spitting a line of webbing from her mouth to the wall behind the robots, Spidra propelled herself towards them, destroying any she passed by with one hit of her spiderlegs. Spidra spit another web, this time hitting a robot, which she then used as a wrecking ball to destroy the rest of the area's targets. This time it was Frosta who was in awe, only she was more open about it as she exclaimed, "That's so gross and cool!" causing Spidra to blush momentarily before moving on to other targets.

Not wanting to fall behind, each girl gave it their all as more and more robots and holograms came at them, and not a single one was able to hit either of them. Finally, the timer ran out, the simulations disappeared, and the robots stopped attacking them, the training session was over. As they looked at the scoreboard to see who had won, they were both shocked at what they saw on the screen, or rather what they DIDN'T see.

"Where are MY points!?" Frosta yelled, prompting Spidra to confusingly ask her, "Didn't you activate the scorekeeper in your glasses?" Frosta's answer was an indignant, "You have to ACTIVATE them!?" after which each girl stood there in silence. Suddenly, Spidra started laughing, it wasn't a big laugh, but it was still the most emotion Frosta had seen her express since meeting her. Normally if someone laughed at Frosta they'd get a snowball in their face, but the sight of Spidra giggling softly into her fist seemed to erase any distress she had, so she joined her in laughing at their predicament.

They decided to call their match a tie, and as they walked out of the training hall Spidra said, "No one has ever been able to keep up with me in training before. I can see how you princesses won the war." Frosta smiled and said, "Yeah well, I can see how you guys gave us such a hard time. That was a real workout, but honestly… it was fun. In fact, I think it was the most fun I've had in a while." Leaning against a railing outside the training hall, Spidra paused for a moment before saying, "I'm going to be honest with you, I invited you to train with me because, well, I wanted to size you up, see what you princesses are REALLY like." Looking at Frosta, she continued, "If the other princesses are like you, then they're NOTHING like I thought they were, and that's a compliment."

For some reason, Spidra complimenting her brought heat to Frosta's face, but then she thought about what she said, about being like the other princesses. Realizing something she said had bothered her, Spidra asked her what was wrong, and Frosta said, "It's nothing, just, I'm NOT like the other princesses. They're my friends and I like them and everything, but still… they treat me like I'm just a kid. I'm a princess just like them, I rule my own kingdom, I have my own magic, I can fight just as good as ANY of them, but they still don't take me seriously just because I'm younger than them! It drives me crazy!" Although she was shocked by Frosta's angry outburst, a downcast Spidra said to her, "I'm… I'm sorry. I know how much that hurts."

Meeting Spidra's gaze, Frosta asked, "You… do?" and she nodded and said, "The only reason I'm a Skiff Courier is because… they rejected me when I tried to join the kingdom's new army. I trained for years as a cadet, I outshined my peers AND my instructors. When Prime came, and everyone else ran away or got chipped, I hid in the vents, and stole what I needed to survive without anyone catching me. I even cleared out the clones from the training hall after I saw the broadcast telling us all to fight. Still, it wasn't enough to join, they told me I was too young and sent me on my way. It's so frustrating, being too young to be an adult, when you've been through too much to be a kid."

All Frosta could do was stare at her, not knowing what to say or how to feel. Spidra understood her, NO ONE had ever understood her before. Frosta thought she should be feeling sad right now, everything she just said was sad, but what she felt was something new, new and confusing. Things had gotten a little too "emotional" for Spidra's liking, so she excused herself by saying, "I-It's getting late, I should go. I usually go to the training hall after work, if you ever want to do this again." Frosta was watching her walk away, when she turned around and said, "By the way… I had fun too," and then she was gone.

Frosta stood there, stunned and silent, when all of a sudden a familiar form wrapped her up in a big hug. "Little buddy, I finally found you!" Scorpia said, "I'm so sorry I got called away, I know we had plans." Scorpia promised to have their meetings at Plumeria from now on, so they wouldn't be interrupted by her advisors anymore. Frosta agreed, but had a feeling that she'd be spending A LOT more time here regardless.
