Summary

After being startled first thing in the morning, Acting Grand Master Jean finds herself fighting a cockroach in order to recover her room…

Notes

Well, this is gonna sounds super weird but, fr, this happened to me. Like, all you're gonna read. The tweets I put as inspiration for this prove it. Oh, and I think I didn't tweet the little issue with which this ends, but that part also happened…

Anyways, I hope you enjoy and have some fun reading these shenanigans. I wrote five fics using this event, for different fandoms, that is, and this is one with quite a wholesome couple, I believe.

I'll leave links to the other fics in the ending note.
Now please enjoy!

Early morning in Monstadt city. The sun rose and woke up the Acting Grand Master, Jean Gunnhildr. She needed a few moments for grogginess to ease away, and then she'd leave the bed and get ready for the day.

Meanwhile, Lisa Minci was also trying to leave her bed. She honestly hated waking up so early, but since Jean had such a meticulous schedule, she'd rather sacrifice a few more hours of sleep than her breakfasts with her.

A sudden noise startled the witch, who froze and listened carefully. It sounded like something fell in Jean's room, and she could have sworn the woman had yelped even. Curious, she decided to go check on her, but as she left her room, the knight called out for her.

—Lisa! I need something to kill a bug!

Mere moments later, the witch barged in with a vial of potion.

—Where is it?

—I-I accidentally blew it away with anemo, I don't know— she stammered nervously, pressing herself against the wall near the door. —It was on- I mean, next to my leg! I didn't…

—Don't worry, Jean, you can explain it later— Lisa interrupted. —Just spread this through the room with anemo and it will kill the insect. But grab your uniform first.

—Right, thanks— she sighed. The knight rushed to gather her garments, stood on the door while spreading the contents of Lisa's vial as she instructed, and then closed the door behind her. —Ah… I'm so sorry, Lisa. Did I wake you up?— she asked, relaxing little by little.

—Not at all, I was already up— she assured her with a smile. —But I must admit I wasn't expecting our morning to start like this— she giggled. —Oh, and the room will need at least four hours for the air to be safe again.

—No problem. As long as that thing dies…

—It gave you quite a scare, no?

—Please don't mock me, Lisa. I really hate roaches— she groaned.

—I would never— she replied, still a bit teasingly. —Perhaps it's better if you get changed and we can have breakfast— she suggested.

—After my morning run with Amber.

—Of course.

After a tiresome day of work, Jean arrived home, where Lisa was already preparing dinner. She greeted her quickly and told her she'd have to take a bath before eating, but the witch assured her the dinner wasn't anywhere near early so she would surely be done on time.

Jean spends around thirty minutes trying to find the bug, but eventually had to give in; she's on edge, expecting it to come running every time she moves or lifts something, but it was nowhere to be found and she had already jumped several times at tiny noises that, in fact, came from outside the room. She finally left and leaned against the clothes room, sighing in frustration.

—What if it is still alive? Oh, Barbatos; just look at me. The Lionfang knight scared of a little roach— she complained, ashamed. —Good thing only Lisa knows about this.

Defeated, she went to take a bath, and a few minutes later she could finally set up the table for them to eat. Lisa served her a plate of pasta with her particular special bolognese, but Jean was already used to it and didn't even hesitate to dig in.

—Were you able to clean your room, Jean?

—Em… Well…— she nervously stammered, ashamed. —I can't find the roach.

—Oh, but it's dead. You should be able to sleep there without any problems once the room is properly aired and the bed sheets are changed.

—I-I really can't, Lisa. I need to see it's dead. Otherwise, I'll keep thinking it will just come out during the night and walk over me! I won't be able to sleep. I don't doubt your potion's efficiency it's just…

—Oh, Jean— the witch sighed. —In that case, let me look for it instead.

—What!? No, no. I can't- I just need more time to find it.

—You need to rest properly. You haven't caught up on sleep yet.

—I know! But still, I cannot delegate such an irrelevant task. It's my room and my responsibility— Jean insisted.

—Is that supposed to change anything? You consider the whole city of Mondstadt your responsibility— the witch teased her, keeping an unamused expression before finally letting out a smirk. —Oh, but you sound quite resolved.

—I am.

—I have to insist you rest tonight. So, perhaps, you can just sleep in my room— she suggested.

—Wha- Li-Lisa! I- I can't just take your room!

The witch giggled, noticing her blush, and commented —Please, I'm offering. You have nothing to worry about; all my potions are safely guarded, there are no cursed books to accidentally touch, and—, she paused a moment, smirked, and winked, —I promise I don't bite.

The Acting Grandmaster hesitated a moment before finally giving in; she refused to use that room until she could see that roach dead.

With a sigh, she accepted —I- Alright. Thank you, Lisa.

That night, Jean slept better than ever. In fact, she hadn't felt so rested in quite a long time. It seemed to her that perhaps it was the sweet fragrance of Lisa's sheets, or that the witch's ability to fall asleep immediately had rubbed on her. Or, maybe, just like in her day-to-day, she felt quite at peace knowing Lisa is right there, and her mind could finally allow her to rest.

The day went by as usual: morning run with Amber, breakfast with Lisa, fulfilling her daily duties both handling individual requests and all the paperwork and, finally, arriving home to have dinner, take a bath, wash her clothes, and go to sleep.

However…

Jean was ready to go to sleep, but her room was still in no condition for it. She spent about two hours searching for the bug literally everywhere, but she hardly checked the room; such was her fear of it being alive that she was extremely slow and careful when moving anything to see if it was under it.

At some point, Lisa woke up, much to her annoyance, and noticed the lights were still on outside her room. She forced herself up, sure of what she'd find, and saw Jean sitting against the closed door to her room.

She yawned and asked —Still can't find the roach, Jean?

—Yeah— she sighed, ashamed.

—Please, let me check. It's past midnight; what's the point of actually leaving your office if you still won't sleep?

—Perhaps I should go back there and get ahead on tomorrow's paperwork— Jean suggested.

Lisa's grogginess immediately vanished and she retorted —Absolutely not. You have to sleep. Just let me look for it!

—Fine! Fine— she conceded. As she stood up from the floor, she yawned and realized she really wanted to sleep. —Thank you— she muttered, following Lisa with her sight as she walked confidently into the room.

Jean went to take a seat at the table but, within minutes, Lisa was out and disposing of the very much dead bug. The knight couldn't even utter a word, shocked at how quickly she had found it, so she proceeded to air out the room and change the bed sheets before going to sleep. Lisa helped her with the task, insisting it was better if the room was ready to use without delay, and finally, they both could enjoy some hours of sleep before daybreak.

The following night, Jean and the witch arrived home together, with dinner from the Good Hunter.

—…You? A free day? Who are you and what did you do with my workaholic knight?— Lisa teased her.

Blushing furiously, but managing to keep herself collected, she insisted —I'm serious; I'm just trying to follow your advice! And, Kaeya might have pressed quite a lot, you know?—. As the witch laughed at that, she began settling the food on the table, and added —I'll make the most of the day, perhaps I can cook some pizza.

—Sounds delightful— Lisa hummed.

They both began eating in companionable silence until Jean remembered —Um, now that I mentioned Kaeya… I just recalled… He knew about the, uh, incident with the roach.

—I swear it wasn't me— she immediately replied, looking away with a sly smile. —We both know he's exceedingly good at getting information.

The knight let out a deep sigh and continued —Well, regardless of how he knew… He commented something about, you know, like… that the family of the roach would be planning revenge or something.

The witch couldn't hold back a loud laugh hearing that, and Jean fully blushed, both out of shame and because she couldn't help noticing how much she liked Lisa's laughter, even if at her expense.

—Oh, my. Someone has been spending too much time with Eula— she laughed. —You can't possibly believe him, right?

—I-I mean, no, well…— the knight stuttered. —He just made me think that there may be more roaches from where that one came from…

Lisa's expression softened as she replied —Oh, Jean, don't think like that. It was merely an isolated event. If anything, perhaps you just have to clean up your room a bit, but I seriously doubt there are any more bugs—. She giggled before adding —That's another thing you can do on your free day after tomorrow, right?

The knight couldn't help but laugh a bit too; she nodded and continued eating, her mood much lighter. The dinner didn't last much longer, and they soon had washed all the dishes, ready to settle for the night.

By the time Jean was done washing her clothes, Lisa had already turned off the lights in her room; the knight could go to rest at long last, and soon sleep was about to claim her…

Until she heard a scratch.

It was short, so she only opened her eyes, her room almost fully dark, and waited. Sure enough, she heard it again. It was so faint she first thought it was her imagination; but when she heard it once more…

—Please, Archons…— she muttered. The knight got up from bed and turned on the lights; she waited, a second, two, and there she heard it again. It seemed to be coming from the top of a closet against the wall, so she walked away from the room, keeping her sight on it, and finally knocked on the witch's door. —She will be so mad…— she told herself, a moment before the door cracked open. —Li-Lisa…

The witch was barely looking outside through a narrow opening, but Jean could see her tired expression and one of her green eyes shining with the light coming from her room. The knight wasn't sure if she was about to fall asleep right there, or a second away from electrifying the lights out of her.

However, her voice sounded as candid as usual as she asked —Jean, what is it this time?

She wasn't sure whether the shivers were because of the possibility of more roaches invading her room, or because of the slight chance she may have angered Lisa.

—It's- I heard- I think there are… more roaches.

—Are you sure you aren't just paranoid?— she sighed.

—I'm sure. I heard it several times… I-I wouldn't have bothered you otherwise.

This time, Lisa's sigh was even more felt.

—Oh, I know. I feared as much— she let out. The witch disappeared for a moment before returning with two vials of the same poison she had used last time, and directly walked towards Jean's room, not expecting her to follow inside. She waited for a moment, silence; she kept waiting, still nothing. And then, right before she could even look back at Jean, there it was. —Oh, I've got you, naughty boy…

Jean saw her approach the closet and immediately gathered her things, knowing she was about to release the poison. Afterwards, she only sat at the table with her things, feeling defeated. She was so tired she almost fell asleep there and hadn't noticed Lisa approaching.

—Huh?

The knight woke up with a gentle touch and, when her eyes adjusted to the light, she saw the witch standing over her with a gentle smile.

—I don't think this is comfortable at all, Jean. Come on now— she invited her, helping her stand up and taking her clothes. —I'd offer you some tea to relax, but clearly you're already quite sleepy.

Lisa helped her into bed and went to lay Jean's attire tidily on a chair. Once she got into bed too, she stared a moment at the sleeping knight; the witch always insisted she had to fix her sleep schedule, yet now, her own room kept boycotting her sleep. At least here she could sleep well, it seemed.

The next day, they both woke up with the sunlight on their face; Jean had snuggled against Lisa, and the witch was comfortably holding her too. The knight had no idea where she was, only felt extremely comfortable and rested; the faint aroma reminded her that had to be Lisa's room, and only then did she remember she had, once again, spent the night there due to the cursed roaches in her room. However, she hadn't expected to wake up between her arms.

The knight remained frozen, shocked for a moment, until she noticed how comfortable the witch looked, and decided to indulge a bit longer; she liked the feeling of warmth, the nice fragrance, and the comfort…

The day of work flew by fast and without a hitch. Jean's workload wasn't as huge as other days, and Lisa had been around her at all times, making sure she was taking breaks, always with the excuse that it was a very slow day at the library and that, in any case, she was barely meters away in case she had to go handle anything.

The witch felt so concerned, having realized just how bad Jean's sleep had gotten, and how much of a difference a good night's sleep could make, that she now wanted to fix that. And, of course, that was a great excuse to take the afternoon off the next day.

Finally able to have an uneventful night of sleep once again, Jean woke up bright and early, ready to spend the day resting, cooking, and cleaning her room thoroughly, just to be sure. By the time Jean returned from her morning run, Lisa had gotten up and was almost done preparing breakfast.

—Good morning, Jean. Do you want some coffee?— she offered her. The knight nodded; the witch set a mug of coffee in front of her and took a seat with an aromatic cup of tea. —It seems like you're now resting much better. You better keep this up, dear.

Jean looked away, feeling her cheeks warm up at the endearing term, and sipped her coffee for a moment.

—I-I'll try, really— she finally replied. After thinking for a moment, she asked —Could you bring some groceries for me to cook the pizza on your way back? I'll be cleaning up my room.

The witch hummed and commented —That's quite wise, I wonder who gave you the idea.

Jean couldn't hold back a laugh, amused; Lisa let out a satisfied smile and silently finished her breakfast. A moment later, she had gathered the dishes from the table and was ready to leave. However, before heading out, she took a second to give Jean a kiss on the cheek.

The knight couldn't even utter a word before the woman was out of the door and, after a moment, barely let out a shy —Bye…

Four hours later, the witch was back from working half a day, carrying everything necessary for the pizza, ready to help with the cooking if allowed, or just sit back and relax for a while before her afternoon tea.

And yet…

—I-I suppose- Erm, I mean- Pe-perhaps I'll have to borrow your room for a little while more, Lisa.

—I swear, Jean. Your room is cursed…

Both women stood inside the knight's room, near the door, looking up at the ceiling, from where a huge chunk of material had fallen less than an hour before.

End Notes

Yes. A piece of my ceiling fell down.
Also, if they had a pet, I would have written it doing here what my cat did irl.
