Demons' Spawn

by DeltaFell

Summary

Catra finds a kid one night. They manage to change her life in ways she had never expected, or even knew could still be changed.

Notes

See the end of the work for notes

Catra sat in the tree, cursing her luck. She had almost managed to get that soul, if it wasnt for that fucking angel Sparkles or whatever her name was. Scorpia was going to be - well she wouldnt be pissed, she was Scorpia after all, but she would be sad, and that was worse.

From below, Catra could hear the sniffling of a kid. t sounded so familiar that Catra couldnt stop herself from looking down on instinct. When she did, her heart stopped.

The kid's hair was a very familiar shade of blonde with distinct blue eyes. Catra knew she should just leave them alone, but the similarities were just too striking to ignore.

"What' s the matter kid?" Catra hopped down from the tree to kneel beside them.

"My parents," they said, "they beat me and call me names and misgender me. Im not a boy , Im not a girl, but they dont listen. They make me feel small and helpless."

"What' s your name, kiddo? Not the one your parents gave you, but the one that's yours. What pronouns would you like me to use?"

"I m Finn. Ithink Ilike They/Them," said Finn.

"Okay Finn, look, Ive got to go or my boss is going to be super mad at me, but," Catra picked up a stick and began to trace in the dirt, "if you ever need some help, just draw this symbol and call out my name, Catra. Ill be there right away , Ipromise."

"Okay , Miss Catra. Ihope you dont get into trouble with your boss."

"Me too kid, me too. Ill see you around, okay Finn?" Catra disappeared in a cloud of sulfurous smoke.

"W oah," said Finn.

Catra was at a business dinner with Scorpia, when she felt the tug.

"Look, Scorp, Ireally really do hate to ditch you but Ihave to go. I promised id be there. Ijust didnt think it would be this soon." Catra said.

Scorpia looked floored, "Y ou promised? W ell whatever it is, it's gotta be important. Go, Ill cover for you with the boss."

"Thanks Scorp!"

Catra disappeared from the dinner, and reappeared in a bedroom at what appeared to be 3 in the morning, going by the clock on the shelf. A dark, shadowy figure stood between her and Finn.

"What is this nonsense, girl? Consorting with demons? I'll have to beat you for this for your own good. You don't know what you're doing to your soul. Remember that I'm doing this for you. It hurts me more than it does you," said the shadowy figure.

"Hey jackass." Catra tapped the figure on the shoulder. "Why don't you take it up with the demon herself?"

The figure whirled around, shocked, and Catra slammed her fist into the figure's jaw. She had never felt so angry at anything before, not even at any angel. The shadowy figure dropped like a stone.

"Hey Finn, let's get you out of here, okay?"

Finn nodded, and ran up to hug her. Their arms only barely reached her waist.

"Okay, now remember the plan Finn, stay behind me at all times, and don't say a thing unless someone grabs you."

They nodded.

Catra approached the checkpoint back into hell, Finn staying close behind her. "Hey Scorpia, I'm back."

"So, what was so important that you had to run from one of her dinners? Are you gonna share this time?"

"Sorry, Scorp I can't tell you here and now. Come by my place on Monday and I can tell you."

"This better not have been about-" Scorpia cut off and her eyes grew wide. "Oh, that's why you had to run. I see."

"What?" Catra turned around, and saw Finn quite visible behind her. Catra held her face in her hands and sighed heavily. "Shit."

At her reaction, Finn flinched.

Catra turned back to Scorpia. "Is there anything you can do to help me out? Seriously, anything, I can't let them go back there, no matter what."

"You know the rules on kids, Catra. I can give you a week before I tell her, but if you don't have a wife before then, it's out of my hands."Scorpia looked pained.

"Seriously , just a week?"

"I'm not going to lie to my wife, and she will find out if you're breaking such an important rule. You mean a lot to me Catra, but I'm not going to lie to her for you."

"Fuck, well I suppose I'll have to figure something out. I'm not going to abandon them."

"I'm sure you will, Catra. Y ou're pretty smart. Smarter than you give yourself credit for,"said Scorpia.

Catra bumped open the door to her apartment after unlocking it one handed. Finn had gotten tired on the trip to her apartment, so Catra had picked them up and carried them over her shoulder on the way back.

Catra set them down on the couch, and immediately Finn was wriggling and asking questions. "Why do you have cat ears and a tail? Are your eyes real? Why did Scorpia kinda look like a scorpion? Where are we? Am I staying here now? Are you mad at me? Are you going to hit me?

"What, no, I'm not mad at you kiddo. I'm not going to hurt you, and neither will anybody else who lives here, okay?"

Finn nodded.

"As for your other questions," Catra laughed, "what you're seeing now is my true form. I can't go about in the human world with these on full display, people would freak out. My eyes are real, they're a part of my true form too. That was Scorpia's true form that you saw, buddy. She looks kinda scary, but she's a total sweetheart. As for where we are, well, we're in my apartment in hell. You can stay here as long as you want Finn. It's your choice. I won't make you stay if you don't want to."

"I think I want to stay. The pastors always said to fear demons, which I guess you are one, since you live in hell, but you're the nicest anyone's ever been to me. I'm gonna stay. I like it here," said Finn.

"Okay kiddo, I've got to make some calls to get things situated, I'll be back in a bit."

Catra pulled out her phone and sighed at it. Was she really considering doing this for the kid? Ah screw it, of course she was. She dialed the number. She'd long ago deleted the contact information, but she could hardly forget the numbers burnt into her memory.

The phone rang once, twice. For a second Catra thought maybe she wouldnt pick up, but then a familiar and out of breath voice came through her phone.

"Hello?"

"Hey , Adora. Look, Im in a pickle and Idont have anyone else to turn to. Ineed your help."

"No Catra, Im not helping you. Not after what you fucking did, you heartless bitch." It hurt to hear Adora call her that, but she didnt know anyone else she could turn to.

"Im calling in all my favors, just for this. After this, if you want, we can be completely clear."

"What is it?"

"Icant explain easily over the phone, just meet me at my apartment. It's the same one still.

"This better not be a prank Catra." Adora hung up.

There was a knock at her door, and Catra rose from playing with Finn to get it. That would probably be Adora. Scorpia didnt usually come by on her days off.

"You better have a good reason for me to be all the way down here."

Catra stepped aside to give Adora a view of Finn.

"Oh. So, why exactly did you bring a kid here, into hell, and what does this have to do with me?"

"Well, you see," Catra wrung her hands, "there maybe-sorta was a rule instituted after you-know-what happened that all children in hell need to have a stable home and at least two parental figures in their life."

Adora sighed, "Please tell me that wasnt who Ithink it was."

"It was."

"Oh you've got to be friggin kidding me. So, what's the plan?" Adora rubbed her face.

"Well, it's simple. We pretend to get married, you pop in enough to at least be an influential figure in Finn's life so we don't get caught, and we lie our asses off trying to give the kid a proper home."

"That won't work." Adora stepped inside and shut the door. "She'll be able to tell that we're faking a marriage. Unions like that leave behind a certain magical energy, and unless we actually marry, we'll give ourselves away inside of a month."

"Fucking magic."

"If we're going to do this, it's gonna be all in, for both of us. There's no going back."

Catra felt a twinge of guilt at what she was asking Adora to do. Marry a demon? Forget her social status, Adora would be lucky if she wasn't cast out for it.

"Are you sure you want to go through with this? I- I know what you're putting on the line for me here. I...

Adora cut her off with a wistful glance at Finn, "Yeah. I'm certain. Are you?"

Catra inhaled, and looked at Finn. The least she could do was try to give them something better than what she had. "Yeah, I'm in."

"So, what now?" Adora asked.

"Well, we've got the rings, the ceremony's over, done all quiet-like, so I guess we go home to the kid, Princess." Catra smirked.

"Oh no you are not calling me that."

"What, pet names are supposed to be normal with couples. The data never lies, Adora!"

"Who told you that?"

"Entrapta did." Catra stretched her arms out, satisfied.

"Of course she did." Adora sighed. "So, back to the kid?"

Back to the kid.”

“So, Finn,” Catra said, “we need to have a talk.”

“Sure Miss Catra, what about? Is it about Miss Adora?”

“Something like that. How’d you know her name?” Catra raised one eyebrow.

“I overheard your phone call. And then your conversation by the door. She seems kinda mean.” Finn held themself tightly .

“No, she’ s not mean, I just,” Catra put her head in her hands, “I messed up a long time ago, we both did. I did some things that I’m not too proud of anymore. We’re trying to be better people, if that’ s even possible for us.”

“W ould you do those same things now?” they said.

“No, I would never!”

"Then you're pretty alright in my book."Finn smiled.

Catra smiled, something real and genuine. It had been a long time since she had smiled like that.

"Anyway , my past isn't why I wanted to talk to you kid. Adora and I have done some talking, and well, if you want, we could be your new moms."

Finn stood stock-still for a moment, shocked into complete immobility. Tears shimmered in their eyes. "You want to be my new moms?You -you want me?"

From the kitchen doorway, Adora spoke up, "Yeah buddy, we want you. Not the you somebody else sees, or you if you meet certain expectations, but you, wholly and unequivocally ."

"I very much like for you to be my new moms,"Finn said, crying slightly.

Catra was tired. She had been up late last night trying to get Finn to go to bed, but the little rascal didn't feel tired.'That's what she gets for telling them she and Adora wanted to adopt them about thirty minutes before a reasonable bedtime. Ugh, mornings were the worst.

"Hey Wildcat," Scorpia said.

Catra mumbled something resembling "fuck off," but she didn't think it was comprehensible.

"So, something's a little different about you today, did you decide to get a new haircut?"

Catra refused to dignify that ridiculous theory with anything more than a glare.

"Oh oh I know! You got married didn't you! I knew you'd figure something out for the kiddo, although I have to admit, this is not what I expected you to do. So, who is it?"

"Not so loud, Scorpia!" Catra hissed.

"Oh, sorry," Scorpia whispered. "So who's the lucky girl?"

"Adora," muttered Catra.

“Huh. So you guys finally patched things up? Man, I’d been wondering when you two’d get around to that.”

“Yeah, something like that. Look, is there anything else you need from me? If not, I’m gonna go. I need to get a headstart on the day and all that.”

“Mhm, sure, yeah you’re good.”

“Okay , cool.” Catra sprinted out the gate and up into the human world.

Catra was making dinner when she realized it. It wasn’t a momentous occasion, some grand explosion that shattered the walls around everything she knew, but rather a stream cutting its way through a rock wall, a whisper in the dark. She was cutting green onions for the soup, when Adora and Finn ran through the back of the kitchen.

Finn was chasing Adora with a cardboard sword of some sort, and Adora was putting up a semblance of resistance, keeping them interested, but clearly not fighting back all that much.

Adora’s tenderness was on full display, as was her love for Finn. Catra remembered days long gone, when Adora looked at her like that, and realized that she longed for that still.

Catra reminisced until a tug on her pants leg shattered her reprieve.

“Momma, come play with me and Mom!” It was Finn, holding their sword and looking at her with wide eyes.

“I can’t pumpkin, Momma’s gotta finish making dinner so we have something to eat tonight.” Catra leaned down and kissed their forehead.

Finn giggled and ran off to, presumably, harass Adora some more.

Shit. Was she falling for Adora? She couldn’t be, right?

Catra was pacing back and forth in her living room area. After a few months, Adora’s friends had finally grown suspicious of why she was working remotely for so long, and so little. Well, so little for her, she was working what most would consider a perfectly reasonable amount, which was odd for Adora. It was bizarrely comforting to know that hadn’t changed about Adora while Catra had been out of her life.

Eventually, Adora had come clean to her friends - kinda clean at least, she still hadn't told them all about Catra - about Finn. Of course, being her friends, they immediately started demanding to see the kid and to meet the other mother. They had put things off for as long as they conceivably could, but today was the day of reckoning Catra could hear the call connect in the other room, and her heart sqeeezed. What if they didn't like her? Could they force Adora to not like her either? Oh fuck, what if they forced her back to heaven, and called the whole thing off? What would happen to Finn? What would happen to her?

"Adora, I don't see my new nibling anywhere. Where are they?" a shrill voice demanded from the other room.

"Finn, come meet your new Aunt Glimmer and Uncle Bow!" Adora shouted.

"I get more new family?" Finn sprinted down the stairs and almost wiped out trying to turn towards Adora.

Catra figured the shrill voice had to be Glimmer . What psychopath named their kid Glimmer? Or even worse, what kind of deranged loon named themselves Glimmer?

"Oh they're so cute," cooed Glimmer. "When do we get to visit them so I can squish their cheeks in person?"

"Uh about that." Catra could picture Adora's sheepish expression even in another room. "Sweetheart, could you come here for a minute?"

"Sure thing, Princess," Catra called back.

Catra stepped into the living room and into the view of the trackerpad's camera.

Glimmer, Bow, this is my - my wife, Catra"

The fist around Catra's heart loosened a little when she heard Adora call her her wife. It felt right.

Immediately, the call erupted with noise from Glimmer.

"You're married? Since when? And why didn't you tell us? A-and is Catra a demon? What the fudge, Adora?" Glimmer practically shrieked the last two.

Bow, however, merely smiled knowingly at Adora.

"I love her , Gimmer , and she loves me," Catra's heart was trying hard to jump out of her chest, "and you know that's all that matters."

Gimmer grumbled assentingly , "Fine, but I'm only happy about it because they're my new nibling."

Catra released a breath she didn't know she'd been holding. She had passed the friends test.

Catra was sitting in the tree she was in when she found Finn. She thought of it as her good luck tree now. If she was having a hard time finding the right soul, or just a bad day at work, she'd sit there for a little bit. It usually helped with the foul mood a rough day would incite, plus she liked the reminder.

All of a sudden, her phone received several notifications, and judging from the sound, they were all texts from Adora.

'Catra help'

'I think something might be wrong with Finn help I don't know what to do'

help please’

As soon as Catra processed the text, she leaped out of the tree and teleported straight home. Normally she just took the gates back in, but ever since Adora and Finn had moved in, she could teleport right to her apartment without having to use the gates. It kinda sucked, but in an emergency, it was the fastest way home.

“What’s going on Adora, who do we need to kill?”

Adora just pointed at Finn, shaking.

Catra looked at Finn, and then looked again. They had cat ears and a tail now, both the color of their hair. Their eyes were slitted like cat’s eyes, and the striking blue of what was their pupils now filled their eyes.

“Huh, that’s odd. I’ll have to ask Perfuma what’s up.”

Behind her, Catra could hear Adora hyperventilating.

“Hey, hey sweetheart, stay with me here.” Catra turned around and crouched next to Adora, now curling up on the floor.

"Is Mom gonna be okay? Did I do something wrong?" Finn asked.

"No, pumpkin, it wasn't anything you did, Mom just has attacks like this sometimes. She's going to be just fine, you hear me Adora? You're going to be fine. Can you go get me the blanket from our bed, Finn?"

"Uh, yeah, sure," they said, sprinting off.

"Okay Adora, just breathe with me here. You're safe, you're okay. Finn is just fine."

Adora managed a single, shaky breath.

"Do you think you can do your calming exercise?"

Adora nodded.

"Okay, name five things you can see."

"I can see you, holding me, I can see the tiles of the floor, I can see the walls, I can see Finn. I can see your beautiful eyes."

“Okay you sap, name four things you can feel.”

“I can feel your arms around me, I can feel the cold of the tiles on my butt, I can feel Finn putting the weighted blanket on me, I can feel the fabric of my t-shirt on my skin.”

“Alright, you're doing great, princess. Name three things you can hear.”

“I can hear you, talking to me, I can hear the AC unit, and I can hear Finn’s footsteps”

“Okay , name two things you can smell.”

“I can smell you, and I can smell our laundry detergent on the weighted blanket.”

“Alright, one last thing princess, name one thing you can taste.”

“I can taste the tears in my mouth.”

“Okay then, are you feeling better sweetheart?”

"Yeah."Adora nodded. "I love you, Catra."

"I love you too, Dummy."Catra hugged Adora around the shoulders.

Finn rubbed Adora's back. "Are you okay Mom? I didn't do anything wrong?"

Adora smiled back at Finn. "No, sweetie, you didn't do anything, I just got scared by the newness of it, that's all."

Finn's face remained downcast.

"Finn, do you feel more like you with these changes?"

They nodded.

"Then I love them, because they're a part of you, and I love every part of you,"Adora said.

"I love you too, Mom."Finn reached out and hugged Adora and Catra.

End Notes

I didn't expect to have something ready to post so soon, but I'm moving soon so my writing situation and speed may change, so don't be surprised if I don't post for a bit. Also college starts again soon so that's where all my free time is gonna go in like a month. The Forever and a Blade series will be concluded, I'm about 2/3 of the way through with what I expect to be the final piece, but it's taking a bit. I love all of you, even just seeing the hits counter go up warms my gay little heart. Till next time!
