Little Things

by MxSinshine, RaptorRed

Summary

Mother’s Day is just around the corner and Finn is torn about something, hopefully Bow and Glimmer can help them figure it out.

Takes place around 2 years in the future from Cougar. I had this cute little idea this morning and couldn’t go to bed without finishing it.

"Wait!" Finn's voice called out from their booster seat in the back, "How much time do we have left?"

"Ah, your mom and Adora said they'd be back around 3 so...an hour, give or take." Bow offered, turning around to glance at their passenger. "What's up, bud?"

"I have an errand."

Finn's jaw was set, their little face so serious. Bow watched them give a pointed head nod, one that they unquestionably picked up from Adora. To see one of his oldest, dearest friends shine through one heck of a kid...life was pretty wonderful.

Glimmer chuckled as she drove toward the edge of the parking lot, eyes flicking into the rear view mirror to smile affectionately at the cutie back there. They'll do until she and Bow get started on one of their own, "An errand, huh? Something we can help with?"

"Yes, can we go to Candila Climb?"

"I don't think an hour is long enough to climb-"...

"No, not to climb." Finn amended quickly, their ears lowering to accompany the same pleading look that led to this stop for ice cream in the first place. The look that despite having to deal with kids at work on a daily basis, neither Bow or Glimmer have learned to say no to. "Please? It's important."

"It's on the way." Bow said with a shrug. His co-approval was the formality Glimmer needed to stop the car and pull up directions to the requested rock climbing gym.

It doesn't take more than five minutes to get there, but Finn rushed out of the back seat in such a hurry that Bow had to scramble out to keep them from running into the store without them. They might be old enough to run into a store by themselves now, but the last thing they needed was to have Finn get into some kind of trouble and have their babysitting privileges revoked.

Once they all get through the door, Finn slowed down, their little feet inching along but eyes wandering everywhere around them. They lead the group tentatively toward the supply shop, Bow and Glimmer following behind, looking amused.

Once in the shop, Finn stood for a moment by the checkout counter, looking up at the shelves full of seasonal tchotchkes. There's a ball cap that says "W orld's Best Climber!And Mom!" Glimmer joined them in front of the display, snickering audibly as she imagines how ridiculous Catra would look wearing the ballcap. Finn fiddled with a few key chains before quickly diverting to a picture frame, that is until they notice that they have an audience. Their ears dip before careening to the other side of the store.

"Are they embarrassed?" Glimmer leaned into Bow and quietly asked.

"I think so." Bow said with a contemplative hum. "Maybe because they like climbing and Catra isn't all that into it? So they're unsure about it?"

"W ell, we both know Catra would love it anyway. Iknow Adora took them Mother's Day shopping last week. Does Finn think what they got her isn't enough? Last minute panic"…

No wonder Finn is being coy, but they haven't actually said anything yet, so Bow and Glimmer let Finn meander a little further ahead to give them space.

They watch from a distance as Finn stops in front of the harness and rope kits, studying ones that are obviously way too big for them and pouting. Their face has only grown more distraught as they looked over the chalk bags and carabiners.

Eventually, Finn plucked a large pair of gloves off of the shelf and dug into their pocket. With a twenty dollar bill now in hand they held it up next to the gloves and sighed. Money management is important and all but Glimmer has no qualms with helping them buy something.

"How much Finn? I can help if you're short. I think ones your size might be cheaper though. We can see if they have them in the same style." Yeah, Glimmer is digging more than a little for whatever it is that has their fur ruffled, but both her and Bow can only handle so much of their sad tail swipes. Their mom would love whatever Finn gave them, but perhaps she can guide them to something more fitting.

Finn put the gloves back on the wall once her and Bow walked back up to them. They looked up at her cautiously, far more studious than an eight year old should be capable of and then redirected that same attention toward Bow. "Bow, um, did you always have two dads? Or, um, did you get one of them later?"

Glimmer had the same realization that Bow has come to as his eyes widen.

"Oh." Bow bit the inside of his cheek, trying very hard to keep his voice even to speak. "I did always have two dads, yes." He said, then glanced at Glimmer for strength.

"Glim, you always had both your parents?" Finn asked her next, still uneasy.

"Yeah." Glimmer replied softly, and Finn chewed their lip, assessing where to go from here now that they have these two bits of information to draw from. Bow reached out and put a hand on their shoulder before squatting down to eye level.

"What's up, budd? You can talk to me and Glimmer about anything. Remember, we're teachers even. We help with all sorts of things."

They let out a long breath and glance at the gloves, then back towards the Mother's Day display before meeting Bow's gaze again with a furrowed brow. "I got Mom something for Mother's Day, but I really want to get Adora something too. I really want Adora to be my mom too." They take another deep breath and just when Bow is about to speak they continue. "I keep asking Mom when they're going to get married but she keeps saying 'We'll cross that bridge when we get there.' " Finn popped their hips out and crossed their arms in front of them, rolling their eyes, a picture perfect reflection of Catra, right down to the grumbled, "Whatever that means."

Glimmer has to swallow a laugh and Bow inhales sharply to do the same. No matter how cute they are, laughing right now would ruin any chance they have at helping this little one through their current turmoil.

"Did you ever ask Adora or Catra about calling Adora mom too? They don't have to be married for you to do that, sweetie." Glimmer said softly, joining Bow in crouching down. She's slightly looking up at Finn now, and it seems to have the desired effect of them feeling more assured of themselves because they didn't hide their astonishment at all.

"They don't?"

"Nope." Bow said with a shake of his head. "All sorts of people can be moms and dads. For Mother's Day I always got something for Glimmer's mom, long before we got married. I also gave gifts to my Aunts, Spinny and Netossa. They felt like moms to me. They aren't even my aunts by blood or marriage. They are my dad's friends but they're family to me. Is that what Adora feels like to you? A mom?" Bow couldn't keep his voice from cracking at the end, but a quick jab from Glimmer's elbow kept the tears at bay. Bow shot his wife a side eyed, silent thank you.

"Yeah." Finn answered without hesitation, and looked back toward the Mother's Day display hopefully.

"Then Ithink it' s okay to ask Adora to be your mom too."Bow is very close to tears, another elbow won't stop it this time, and Glimmer is getting a little misty eyed herself. A little over two years ago they helped their best friend come down from the panic at the thought of being a mother suddenly, which was silly because in spite of all the ways Adora could've stepped even more slowly in Finn's life with Catra's blessing, she practically chomped at the bit to get to where she is now. Now being where Adora and Catra openly talked to friends about if Finn would ever consider Adora to be their parent. Of course Adora was okay with just being "Dora"if Finn didn't want to ever call her mom, but they could see that she wanted it. They made the smart choice to let Finn bring it up if they ever wanted to. The only circumstance they settled on asking Finn is if they ever officially tied the knot, so Finn wouldn't feel like they had to.

With a determined nod they turned briefly to grab the gloves off of the wall and hold them to their chest. "I always get mom two things, but Ionly have money for one. Could you help me get"…

"Absolutely ."Glimmer said firmly , righted herself, and pulled Bow up with her. "Whatever you want, Finn."A child' s love isn't something that you can put a price tag on, especially not with Catra's credit card in her pocket for back up if Finn went too extravagant. It' s not every day you ask someone to be your mom.

There was poke to Adora's shoulder. It' s firm and uncomfortable in contrast to the soft, warm arm wrapped around her chest.

Her eyes opened to the blur of the digital clock reading 5:40 and the edge of a fuzzy ear glowing from the light of it. The agreed upon super secret breakfast rendezvous time was 6:30, but she can relate to wanting to get a head start. Adora never thought she'd find someone who is awake earlier than her on a consistent basis, but instead of sleeping later as they got older, Finn has been going through a phase of getting up constantly at 4:30. They've been keeping to themselves pretty well during the mornings, sometimes her and Catra wake to find they've fallen back to sleep either on the couch or in bed with them, but other times they require company. Adora was expecting the time slot to move up though, which is why both her and Catra went to bed early.

"Okay…" Adora mumbled without Finn needing to say a word. They stand there though, waiting for proof of momentum, lest Adora require another poke. Adora willed herself to shuffle to a position that's easier to slip out from Catra's embrace from. Once out of the bed she pulls the blanket back over the soon to be much more well rested beauty. It isn't until Adora leaned down to press a parting kiss on Catra's ear that she heard Finn scurry off toward the kitchen.

When 6:30 hit, both Adora and Finn stood proudly in front of the mess they managed to make in such a short time. Batter and flour are artfully spattered on the countertops. Adora not only accomplished making the bacon crispy but the pancakes are perfectly round too. Finn's egg mess is just as immaculate as the scramble is from their tireless whisking. It's a shame this art is going to have to be cleaned up soon, but that can come later. Adora thanked her wide wingspan as she balanced both her's and Finn's trays on her arms while Finn walked proudly in front, carrying Catra's buffet. They nearly make it to the stairs when Finn stopped and turned around wide eyed.

"We forgot something."

Adora eyed the tray. The silverware was all there, food all plated and perfectly syruped. Everything's there except…

"Right."Adora said seriously at Finn' s growing restlessness, having spotted the grave mistake now. "W e don't wake mommy without coffee."Thankfully , it's already brewed. t' s a quick fix and then they are back on track to a perfect finish to the super secret mission of mom appreciation.

Breakfast in bed isn't all that practical. t' s hard to find a comfortable position, every movement begets disaster from a spilled drink but the smile on Finn's face is definitely worth it. At Finn's 8th birthday it really hit Adora how much they've grown and changed in the short time she's known them. t' s only been about two years and they've gotten so tall. Finn's likes and dislikes have changed numerous times, and this unbridled joy at the simple act of making their mom breakfast for Mother's Day will change one day too. t' s the little things that Adora had come to realize move by so fast. So, what is a coffee stain compared to this?

Catra acted adequately surprised by their arrival and it brought Finn to giggles. Her and Catra shared a grin of success as Finn brought her tray over to Catra's side of the bed. One secret Adora did keep from her though was her Mother's Day gifts.

Finn always got their mom a coffee mug, which she was currently drinking from. In bold font it said "W orlds Best Mom!And W riter!" Really, these things can get so specific nowadays. Thank goodness for the internet in help for finding what Finn wanted to get her. t fit though, because it was true. But as Catra opened up the little box Finn pulled from their pocket, Adora watched gleefully as Catra's purr grew even louder and she pulled Finn into her chest.

"Y ou're so thoughtful and sweet."Catra mumbled into Finn' s hair and kissed the top of their head. Catra set the tiny gold book cufflinks onto the bed next to her to wrap Finn up completely in a tight hug. Finn picked them out themselves, telling Adora that they heard Catra complain that she couldn't find her old ones.

Finn didn't stay wrapped up long though, sliding out of Catra's lap sooner than either of them expected. "Just a sec mom. I have to get something else." Without another word Finn zipped out of the bedroom, Adora barely catching a glimpse of their tail in the doorway with how fast they exited.

Catra gave her a questioning look that Adora gave right back. "I have no clue, babe."

"Well, at least we won't have to wait long." Catra said as she walked around the bed, sitting herself next to Adora just as the sound of running began to grow louder again. "Thank you for breakfast. It was amazing." Catra pressed a kiss to Adora's cheek and then moved toward her ear. "And thanks for tiring me out last night."

Adora turned to her with a full of herself smile and placed a soft kiss on Catra's lips. "Just remember all that when you see the kitchen."

"Are you done kissing?" Finn asked from the doorway, and Catra's raised brow lowered, even if it twitched a little.

"Yeah, fuzzbutt. Come on in."

Finn rolled their eyes and sighed but their tail was twitching nervously as they brought themselves to stand in front of both of them, hands behind their back. "Uh, got you something too, Adora."

Adora's throat tightened when Finn pulled a red gift bag out from behind their back and held it out to her. She looked back over at Catra for some kind of recognition but her girlfriend looked just as surprised. Nervously impatient, Finn put the bag in her lap and Adora could see from the look on Finn's face that she better get on it, so there was no time to deal with the flood of emotions, the implications that this had.

Lifting the covering tissue out of the bag Adora found a pair of sleek, red, white and black climbing gloves. In reality they were average gloves of Adora's favorite brand of climbing equipment. But to Adora, they were priceless. Her throat tightened and Finn watched on expectedly. Taking the hint she slipped them on and immediately knew she never wanted to take them off.

"Wow." Adora managed to choke out, and reached her gloved hand out for Finn's. "Thank you, bubby."

Finn grabbed Adora's hand just for a moment, gave it a squeeze and nodded back to the bag. "There's one more thing."

Adora took a deep breath and looked back at Catra again, who was chewing her lip and looking just as starstruck as Adora felt. Catra rubbed her hand across Adora's back reassuringly, and that gave Adora all the strength she needed to keep the tape holding her heart in place just a little bit longer. She reached into the bag until she felt something hard and thin, and pulled it out.

She recognized the picture immediately. Catra took it of them the first time Adora took Finn climbing with her. It was just before their first Christmas together. It was a day filled with present shopping and all the indoor fun they could have with how cold that winter had started. Both her and Finn are beaming in the photo, all harnessed up and at the top of the beginner's artificial boulder, Finn's arm wrapped around the tops of Adora's legs both in a hug and partially to hold themselves up from the effort of having to climb without using their claws.

The picture frame though, is what sent Adora over the edge and into full blown snotty tears as she scooped Finn up into her arms. There's two figures painted to be in mid climb on a cliff, hand in tiny hand. Around the frame in bright gold block lettering, are the words, "Adventure's Always Better With Mom."
