My sister in law

by jules

Summary

Wednesday always had a little crush on her sisters girlfriend. Nothing much, she'd say. And she could kept her distance so they wouldn't really have to deal with each other.

Until they end up basically in the same dorm. Enid across the hallway from Wednesday.

Chapter 1: Beach

Wednesday's first thought upon seeing Enid Sinclair was nothing more than a big wow.

She knew she shouldn't think that, since her great and awesome sister was Enid's girlfriend, right?

But she couldn't stop herself. Goddamn it, Enid was so fucking hot with those blue eyes and that blonde hair, her roots dark but the highlights spreading through the rest of her hair. She had those pouty lips that were always so pinkish and kissable. And also, fuck, she was so strong, her built arms and her core so freaking beautiful.

The first time they went together to the beach, the Addams family's favorite activity, Enid came with her arm around Goody's shoulder, while Wednesday herself had Tyler by her side. They had been dating for a year now, and Enid had just been introduced to the family.

According to Goody, they had been together since their junior year of high school. Which was two months ago. Her twin sister didn't tell her that. And if Wednesday were to pick, she would probably choose not to know about it, but they were sisters, right? Like, that kinda thing was something you told your twin sister. Anyways.

Enid came wearing her swimsuit and my God, she was hot. Wednesday tried not to stare at her fucking hot body but she failed. Obviously.

Enid laid down in the sand, her body against the ground, and closed her eyes with her hat on top of her face, hiding from the sun. A few strands of blonde hair escaped from underneath it, moving slightly whenever the ocean breeze passed over them. After some time, when the whole family was already dispersed, her voice sounded raspy as she murmured, "Baby?" thinking Wednesday was Goody.

Wednesday smirked at the time, finding it funny how similar she looked to her sister that her girlfriend could mix them up. But Tyler always knew who Wednesday was, though. She didn't mind when the blondie kept talking, asking her, or Goody, to put sunscreen on her back. Morticia and Gomez were at the restaurant having some drinks, while Tyler was in the cold water and Goody went to the bathroom, so she didn't have any reason to say no.

It was her worst decision ever.

She sat there behind Enid on her knees because she'd refuse to sit on her back. "No, hun. Go up on me, I love your massages, you know that." She blushed hard, opening her legs and getting on top of Enid, sitting on her beautifully shaped butt. The warmth of her skin immediately made Wednesday painfully aware of how close they were.

She felt her body getting hot as Enid moaned under her weight. So relaxed, she kept moaning and sighing softly while Wednesday's hands went up and down her back. "Jeez, baby, you have the best hands ever."

Wednesday froze for half a second, her body trembling slightly as she convinced herself it was from the cold wind beneath the warm sun. She swallowed, trying to keep her face neutral, her fingers continuing their slow movements across Enid's back as if nothing had happened.

Wednesday didn't get back to her. Of course not. Enid would listen to her voice and know she wasn't her girlfriend. So she stayed quiet and finished her task. Her fingers moved carefully across Enid's back, spreading the sunscreen evenly while she listened to the soft rhythm of her breathing.

She knew she had fallen asleep when Enid stopped talking altogether, her body becoming completely still beneath her hands. When she saw Goody coming back, she didn't wait for her sister to get close. Goody would see her red cheeks and ask what was going on. She knew her twin. So Wednesday signaled that she was going to the water. Wednesday probably kissed Tyler that day as she'd never done before. Her body shivering as she got into the cold water. She was burning hot.

And, as they left, Enid kissed her sister's lips, and she started praying that Goody's girlfriend would leave her twin as soon as possible. The next three months that came, Enid was in their house every weekend, every time they'd go out, every party.

Everywhere.

She was always there with her fucking naughty smile, even if she didn't mean to be naughty. That smile would appear whenever someone said something funny, whenever she talked to Wednesday or Gomez or Morticia, whenever she was teasing Goody about something. She had that smirk that made everyone lose their panties for her.

Wednesday broke up with Tyler five months after the beach episode. Every time she'd ask him to fuck her, he would make love to her. She hated it.

She knew Enid would fuck the shit out of Goody. She had listened before when she passed her sister's door once, her muffled moans clearly trying to be quiet but being incapable of it since Enid was fucking her so good. Wednesday had stopped outside the door that night without even realizing it.

She couldn't keep up with the whole "I love you, W ednesday" when her boyfriend was inside her. She needed more than that, and when she once found herself thinking of Enid during one of their sex sessions, she just decided to end their relationship.

As they grew up, graduating from school while Enid was still around, Wednesday ended up thinking it had been just this silly crush. She wasn't that af fected by Enid anymore. In fact, she'd barely see the girl during their last year of school, actually.

Wednesday made friends at another high school, going out every Friday afternoon in her beautiful BMW , her parents' gift for her eighteenth birthday, and coming back Sunday night when Enid was already gone. The familiar streets of their little Maine town would be almost empty by the time she returned, the headlights of her BMW cutting through the darkness as she drove home. So it was easy to just ignore her sister 's girlfriend when she'd only see her once in a while.

After graduation, she decided to go to Yale. She was certain that she could escape the little Maine town where everyone knew her. The same streets, the same people, the same conversations that seemed to follow her everywhere. She wanted something new. Something that belonged only to her.

She had distanced herself from Goody now, and with Bianca, Ajax, Yoko, and Divina, they all decided to go to Yale together. Ajax and Bianca ended up in New York, though, while Yoko and Divina were at Yale with Wednesday. Goody was at Columbia, which was good.

The sisters could, you know, live by their own without being twins. Just Wednesday Addams and just Goody Addams. Not a duo for the first time in their lives.

Wednesday was much happier about that.

For once, she could walk around without people immediately associating her with her twin sister. She could build her own routine, her own friendships, her own life. It felt almost peaceful.

It wasn't until her first day that she felt freaking irritated by her fucking sister's girlfriend.

Because, of course, Enid was also at Yale. Across the hallway from her dorm.

Chapter 2: Dorm

At first, she just told herself it was nothing. Like, yeah, she could deal with her sister's girlfriend across the hallway. It wouldn't make a single difference. She'd probably not even see Enid.

She was wrong.

On her first day of classes, Enid was at her door. "Hey, second Goody. Your beautiful sis asked me to keep you company today."

Wednesday was so mad at her fucking stupid sister she could kill her.

Not Sinclair, though. Fuck no. She was so hot in those low-rise, wide-leg jeans, her hips showing as the waistband of her boxers peeked slightly over the top. Goddamn it. This would be hard.

And second Goody?

"Fuck you, Enid. I'm no second Goody, and I don't want to be her. I don't need your company either." Enid widened her eyes, surprised by her response.

Wednesday was getting her stuff into her bag, wearing one of those tight, short jean skirts and boots that came up to her knees, the heels making her taller but not taller than Enid. She was also wearing a little shirt and a jean jacket, although Enid didn't really pay attention to that part. Her eyes kept going down several times whenever they talked.

She hated herself for it but got closer to her girlfriend's twin.

"Hey, c'mon. I'm sorry." She was close now, just one step away from the brunette. Her hand raised, gently adjusting Wednesday's bangs as Wednesday held her breath. "I don't wanna fight, beauty. You know, I miss your sister, and it's good looking at you and having you around. Tish will be happy to have me looking out for you. Especially with these legs out for everyone to look at. C'mon, I'll take you to class."

Addams didn't even open her mouth. Enid' s arm went over her shoulder, and she carried Wednesday all the way to her classroom door. In complete silence, except Enid would just talk to everyone.

They had been in their college dorms for a week now, and while Wednesday had barely met her dorm neighbors, Enid sounded like everyone already knew her. She greeted people in the hallway, smiled at strangers, stopped to talk for a few seconds before moving on, like she had been there for years instead of a week.

"Take care, Weds. You call me, kay? You have my number, right?" She blew a little kiss on her cheek, leaving Wednesday without any time to say anything.

Fucking Enid Sinclair. She was screwed.

Things got worse when, in their still second month, Goody came to stay the weekend with Enid. It wasn't a long drive at all, and despite her twin sister being at Yale, she came for Enid.

Wednesday didn't say anything, but she was jealous. Jealous of her sister, because it felt like she wasn't her sister anymore. Jealous of Enid, because during the weekdays, in class and after class, she would always check on Wednesday, but the moment Goody was there, all of her attention went to her. Jealous that she didn't have Enid to herself, kissing her and giving her all that attention, the way she imagined Enid did with Goody when they missed each other so much.

She didn't go to say hi to her sister .

She went out with Yoko and Divina on Saturday night instead. To this local bar that served Irish beer , which Wednesday loved.

She put on the tiniest dress she had and big, high boots. Her hair was long now, naturally curly-ish, falling over her shoulders, and she put on heavy, dark makeup that made her eyes look even sharper.

When she first got to Yale, everyone would stop her to get her number or talk to her. People slowly faded once they saw Enid around her all the time, even though they didnt really talk much.

But tonight, W ednesday had a plan. She would bring someone to her dorm. Someone she could be loud enough to make Enid Sinclair and her stupid girlfriend, also known as Goody, Wednesday's sister, hear exactly how much fun she was having across the hall.

She wanted them to hear her. Especially Enid. Which was ridiculous. Completely ridiculous. And she absolutely refused to think about why.

The bar was already crowded when they arrived, warm yellow lights hanging over the wooden tables while music played loudly enough that everyone had to lean closer to hear each other. The smell of beer, cigarettes, and cheap perfume filled the air. They found a table near the back, and Wednesday barely sat down before reaching for a cigarette.

"Seriously?" Y oko asked, watching her light it.

Wednesday took the first drag and leaned back against the chair.

"Seriously ."

"You've been here for five minutes."

"And?"

Divina laughed, resting her elbows on the table.

"She means you're supposed to wait until we actually order something before you start destroying your lungs."

"My lungs are none of your business."

"Everything about you somehow becomes our business," Yoko said.

Wednesday gave her a deadpan look, and five seconds later they had big beer cups at their table. They drank the first one. One became two. Two became three. By the fifth, Wednesday was considerably happier, her shoulders loose as she laughed at something Divina said, the cigarette burning lazily between her fingers.

The door opened, and the bell at the top rang loudly enough that Wednesday's eyes moved automatically toward it.

And there they were. Her favorite couple. Goody and Enid. Of course.

Goody was fucking blonde. Wednesday stared for a second before rolling her eyes, smirking as she couldn't believe what she was seeing.

"Oh my God. Don't they have anywhere else to go?"

Divina immediately followed her gaze.

"Oh, shit."

"Exactly."

Yoko took another sip of her beer. Divina started laughing. All Wednesday's friends knew how her sister was always a bitch to her. It wasn't really a secret, actually.

"Just ignore them."

"I am ignoring them."

"You're glaring."

"I have naturally expressive eyes."

"You look like you want to murder your sister."

"I always look like that."

"Fair."

Wednesday took another drag from her cigarette, refusing to look toward the entrance again. She had twelve seconds of peace. Goody was already walking toward them.

"Look who I found, my lovely little sister." Her voice sounded so fake that Wednesday rolled her eyes before turning around. She took a drag from the pint and deliberately blew the smoke directly into her sister's face.

"Argh, Wednesday! Take this out of my face."

"Goody."

Her sister looked horrible. Skinny jeans on her legs and this long-sleeved brown blouse that made her face look like a nun. And that new hair made her look even worse. My God. What a disaster. Wednesday almost laughed, holding herself back at the last second and only smirking.

Goody narrowed her eyes. "Why are you dressed like that?"

"Like what?"

"That."

Wednesday looked down at herself as if she had only just noticed the tiny dress. "Oh. This?"

"Yes, that."

"I like it."

"That sounds like a you problem."

Divina covered her mouth, trying not to laugh. Goody sighed.

"You're impossible."

"I've been told."

Then Enid's voice came from behind her sister.

"That's a tiny dress, Weds. My God."

Her voice sounded a little... urgent. Wednesday slowly looked at her. And there it was. That expression. Enid was staring and trying to look like she wasn't. Wednesday's lips curved into the smallest, most satisfied smile. Goody narrowed her eyes as she looked at her girlfriend.

"Enid."

"What?"

"Do you have anything to say?"

"I mean, it is a really tiny dress, Weds." Wednesday leaned back in her chair, enjoying this far more than she should.

"Yeah, Nid. I chose it specifically for today."

Enid blinked. "For today?"

"Yep."

"And why today?"

Wednesday shrugged innocently. "Someone's gonna be very happy at the end of the night." Divina nearly choked on her beer. Yoko immediately turned away, her shoulders shaking. Wednesday smiled and took another drag from the joint, deliberately slow , before offering it to the blondie.

"W ant some?" They were used to smoking together . t was a recent habit, of course, since they weren't even talking while smoking, and Yoko, Divina, and some others were always around, but still...

"Fuc-" Enid instinctively raised her hand toward it. Then stopped. She cleared her throat suddenly. "No, W eds. That's bad for your health, you know? It' s better not to smoke that thing."

Wednesday lifted one eyebrow.

"Oh?"

"Y eah."

"Y eah, yeah... I get it. Gotta keep your mouth shut and that kinda shit, right, sis?" W ednesday looked at her sister with amused eyes, the corners of her lips twitching as her eyes shone with mischief.

Later that night, Wednesday came home with this girl, Mia, on her neck, kissing her as they walked through the hallway. Mia was a good kisser, and Wednesday let herself smile against her lips as they stumbled a little through the quiet corridor . They entered Wednesday's dorm loudly, slamming the door on purpose.

t was around two a.m. on a Saturday , so no one would care about it, but Enid and Goody, who had left maybe an hour ago from the bar, would definitely hear it.

Wednesday made sure of that.

She moaned loudly on her bed, making no effort whatsoever to keep her voice down. Mia was on top of her, and they kept kissing and moving together, having sex, but it wasn't anything incredible. Not like Wednesday wanted it to be. She didn't care. She was scandalous on purpose.

When they finished, Wednesday let the girl sleep there. She glanced once toward the wall separating her dorm from Enid's before turning off the lights. She wondered if the blondie was awake. She hoped she was.

Enid almost knocked down Wednesday's door Monday morning. Goody was gone, without saying bye, surely. Wednesday heard the loud sound from across the hallway and waited a few seconds before opening her door, wearing nothing but a big shirt that went down to her thighs. Her hair was slightly messy from sleep, and she leaned against the doorframe as if she had no idea why Enid was standing there. She knew what she was doing, even as she kept saying to herself that she didn't mean to. It was just an innocent thing.

"What the fuck was that?" Enid glanced down rapidly, her eyes dropping over Wednesday for only a second before coming back to her brown eyes even faster.

"What?" "Didn't do anything."

"Everyone was listening to you yelling yesterday night, Addams."

"And so?"

"You can't do this, Wednesday."

"And why is that, Enid?"

She didn't say why. She didn't have anything to say, of course. What could she? That she was jealous? That she was more worried about her sister's girlfriend than her actual girlfriend? No. The thought alone made something uncomfortable twist inside her chest, and she hated how easily Enid could make her feel things she didn't want to feel.

"Look, I'm just looking out for you, kay?" Enid raised her arms, her hands gripping her blonde hair as she pushed it back, the little cropped top she was wearing riding up slightly with the movement. Her strong body made Wednesday's eyes blur in desire for a second, her gaze lingering before she forced herself to look back at Enid's face. "Cause, you know, I wanna take care of you..."

"Oh, yeah? You wanna take care of me, Sinclair?" Wednesday couldn't help herself from asking. Her thoughts could never be read out loud right now.

"Of course..." Enid got her eyes down again, her gaze falling briefly before coming back to Wednesday's lips and then her eyes. She cleared her throat. "Of course I do, Wednesday. You know you're like... You're like my little sister, and I wanna take care of you for Goody. She'd be happy you're okay."

Wednesday felt her blood warming up. Little sister. Those two words shouldn't have bothered her as much as they did, but they seemed to hit somewhere deep inside her chest, making her jaw tighten slightly.

"Listen, big sister, I'm not a baby, so if you're looking after me, smoking by my side, and when my dearest sister comes you act like I'm doing shit all the time, get the hell out of my room, please."

Enid blinked, incredulous at what she had just heard. Her lips parted slightly, and for a second she looked completely caught off guard, like she had been expecting anything except that. "Wednes..."

"No, you and I know how Goody is very talkative, so do me a favor and don't follow me around. Have a good day."

Enid stood there for another second, staring at her, clearly trying to understand what had just happened. Her expression softened for a moment, her blue eyes searching Wednesday’s face as if she wanted to say something else, but Wednesday didnt give her the chance. She simply closed the door, leaving Enid standing alone in the hallway.

Next time Goody came for the weekend, Wednesday was out the entire time, refusing to even meet her sister.

Chapter 3: Weed

After that episode, Wednesday knew Enid Sinclair was hurt. She suddenly stopped looking for Wednesday around the crowd or escorting her to class once in a while. She faded, even though she was just across the hallway. It was almost ridiculous. Wednesday could hear her door opening and closing, hear her laughing sometimes with people in the hallway, hear her footsteps passing by, but Enid never stopped anymore. Never knocked. Never called her name. Never appeared beside her with that stupid bright smile.

Wednesday didn't care about her feelings. Goody was responsible for that, not her. But God, she missed Enid hovering around her all the time. She missed her smell and how those blue eyes would travel through her body whenever Wednesday was wearing something indecent for college. She missed the way Enid used to look at her before quickly pretending she hadn't been looking at all. She missed the little comments, the annoying questions, the constant presence that had somehow become part of her routine without Wednesday even noticing. They hadn't been talking for two months now, and Wednesday also hadn't seen her great sister either. But it was almost Thanksgiving, and she knew she would have to drive back home.

The next week, Thanksgiving was two days away, and Morticia called her. Not FaceTimed, but called like the old times. Wednesday was just getting back from class, taking her clothes off, when the phone started ringing. She had barely dropped her bag beside the bed before she reached for it. It had been some time since the last time she talked to her mom. They weren't very talkative when separated, but Wednesday was very loving with Tish back at home. She could spend hours pretending she hated every second of her mother's affection while secretly enjoying every bit of it.

"Mother."

"Hello, my little dove. How' s college treating you?" Her voice sounded very lovely and nostalgic.

"So far , so good, Mom. Excited to see you." It was a lie. Although Wednesday couldnt wait to see her parents, she knew Enid would be there, and that, even worse, Goody would talk shit to their parents about Wednesday.

"Y es, my love. You think you could give Enid a ride? I know you two got closer, and Goody told me she doesnt wanna pick her up because it's a long ride for her. She's flying from the city. How's that? It' s not a bad ride after all, but you know your sister." Wednesday could FaceTime her mom now. Only to kill herself in front of Morticia. And also, Goody was a fucking liar. Oh my God.

"Sure, Mom, no problem. See you guys on the weekend."

She crossed the hallway immediately as she hung up the phone, knocking hard on Enid's door. Her knuckles hit the wood twice before she heard movement inside. Those fucking blue eyes appeared, her red cheeks and out of breath. She also had her clothes badly put on. Her hair was a little messy, some strands falling around her face, and for a second Wednesday just stared at her . Two months without seeing her this close suddenly felt like a very stupid amount of time.

"What the fuck?" She opened the door without noticing who it was, her face changing as soon as she saw Wednesday standing there.

"What the hell were you doing? Y ou dont have anyone in there, do you, Sinclair? Y ou better keep in mind that you have a girlfriend." She pushed the blondie, entering the room to check anyone's presence. Enid closed the door behind them.

"What do you want, W ednesday?" The shortest one obviously had inappropriate clothes for the occasion, and she sat on Enid's bed, crossing her legs as her thighs made this mere noise, and her social blouse was loose, showing a bit of her black bra. Wednesday noticed the way Enid looked at her for half a second before forcing her eyes back up to her face. Two months without talking, and apparently the blondie had forgotten how to look at her without making it obvious.

"Huh, my dearest sister-in-law , you're so kind to me." Her hands spread on the bed, searching for something. "Where' s your weed?"

"I have none. What do you want?" Enid came closer , leaning on her study desk full of sheets and notes. She had always done so well in school. Only A+ in all subjects. W ednesday stared at her, her head leaning a bit to the side while her eyes clearly showed she wouldnt say anything until Enid gave her what she wanted.

"Fucking girl you are, Addams."

Enid came closer, leaning on top of Wednesday, her face slowly going down while she was in front of those beautiful legs of the Addams girl. She smirked once she noticed Wednesday had held her breath and leaned more, her arm going behind Wednesday's back and getting her weed pen between the wall and the mattress sheets. For a moment, they were so close that Wednesday could feel the warmth of her body. She stayed completely still, watching Enid's face from just a few inches away .

"I'm out of the flower . It' s this or nothing."

She pulled back, leaving the pen between Wednesday's legs. Their eyes never left each other's. Wednesday looked down at it and then back at Enid, her mouth twitching into the smallest smirk. The room suddenly felt much quieter than it had a second ago, and Wednesday hated that she noticed it.

"Now , what do you want, lil sis?" She made it purposely . She wanted to see Wednesday's eyes getting darker.

"Fuck you." The Addams girl picked up the pen, taking a few drags before saying anything again. "I've come here to say how much of a good person I am."

"Oh yeah? What' s your name again? ' s nice to meet you." Enid sat down by her, her hands looking for the pen, her fingers brushing over her girlfriend's sister as she got it, taking a deep drag. Wednesday watched her without saying anything, the corner of her mouth twitching slightly.

"Y oure so funny , Enid. Hahaha. Look how Im laughing desperately ." The blondie let the smoke out on the girl's face. The smoke slowly drifted between them, disappearing into the air while Wednesday kept her eyes on Enid.

"I know you like it, beauty ." She didnt have the time to control herself and be qiet, her response coming qickly out of her mouth.

"Mom asked me to escort you home for Thanksgiving." She stole the pen again. "My God, this is good, fuck."

"Oh, Mommy T ish made something bad. Idont wanna drive down there with you." W ednesday laughed at her. Actually laughed. Her dimples showing and her eyes shutting a little. t was such a rare sound that even Enid paused for a second, staring at her before reaching for the pen again.

"What' s funny?" She reached out for the pen again, but W ednesday held it, not letting it go and putting it on her lips again.

"W ell, Enid, my dear, you can ask your pretty little girlfriend to come here and get you, but guess what? ' s gonna be a long drive, she said, and it's easier for me to take you." They repeated the movements, Wednesday took another drag, deliberately slow, keeping her eyes on the blondie before moving the pen away when Enid tried to grab it.

"Goody said that? Or did you just ask for it so you could make up with me?" Enid pulled her by her ankles, trying to get the pen as Wednesday kept moving away from her. Her fingers wrapped around Wednesday's ankle, and the Addams girl looked down at her hand before slowly looking back into those blue eyes.

"For fuck' s sake, Itell you that your girlfriend doesnt wanna come get you, and you think about me making up with you, hun?" Wednesday scoffed, kinda not believing it but still moving.

"Give me my pen, Addams." Enid rolled her eyes, but there was a tiny smile threatening to appear on her lips. She reached again, and Wednesday moved her hand away just in time.

"No." Enid stared at her for a second, clearly not expecting that answer.

"W ednesday." Enid tried again, leaning closer this time, but Wednesday shifted toward the other side of the bed, keeping the pen safely away from her. Enid laughed under her breath and moved closer again, trying to catch Wednesday's wrist. Wednesday pulled away, her back sinking farther into the mattress as she kept the pen out of reach. "Stop moving."

"Y ou stop trying to take it." W ednesday sounded out of breath.

Enid reached again, her fingers almost closing around Wednesday's hand before the brunette moved away. "My God, youre annoying, Addams."

Then Enid tried again. Wednesday moved. Again. Enid followed. And again. Until Wednesday's balance finally gave up and she fell back onto the mattress, her hair spreading across the pillow.

"Fuck." W ednesday laughed under her.

Enid stopped immediately, but she was already above her, one hand pressed into the mattress beside Wednesday's shoulder. "That' s what you get when you dont listen."

Wednesday looked up at her, the pen still firmly in her hand. Enid's face was close enough for Wednesday to notice how red her cheeks had gotten, how her breathing had changed after all that moving around. The brunette's lips curved into a tiny smile. "Now give it to me."

"I'll give you whatever you want if you tell me what you were doing before I knocked on your door ."The brunette' s smile grew as she talked.

Enid blushed, getting really red. "It' s none of your business, Wednesday."Her free hand still trying to reach it when W ednesday finally moved the pen, slipping it safely between her breasts instead. Enid froze. Her eyes immediately dropped, then snapped back to Wednesday's face. She blinked several times, suddenly looking like she had completely forgotten what she had been trying to do.

"W ell,"she murmured, still staring at her . "I think I'm keeping this with me, Sinclair."

Enid slowly moved away from her, sitting back on the edge of the bed. Her face was still red, and she ran a hand through her messy hair, refusing to look directly at Wednesday. The brunette sat up, fixing her clothes casually as if nothing had happened. Enid crossed her arms, still sitting on the edge of the bed. Wednesday got up, moving towards the door and facing Enid as she saw those blue eyes following her again.

"I'll leave at five p.m. on Thursday , and we can get there for dinner." She reached into her bra, as if checking that the pen was still there before looking back at Enid. "I'll take this for you, Iright? I'll keep it safe."

Chapter 4: The Inn

When Wednesday got down the building with her little black suitcase, only staying for the week before coming back, Enid was already by her black BMW , leaning against the passenger door with her own suitcase beside her.

She had jeans on and a hoodie, her hair kinda messy from the cold wind. The weather was extremely cold today. Unusually cold. Wednesday had a beanie on her head and was wearing black sweatpants with a long-sleeve shirt.

"Look at this blondie right here. Ithought you didnt wanna come with me?Did you give up on asking your so lovely girlfriend to come get you?"

Enid rolled her eyes, opening the trunk when Wednesday unlocked the car. She took Wednesday's suitcase from her hand when the shorter girl got closer, making sure it was tied down well enough that it wouldnt slide around while they were driving.

They got in shortly after, the heater pumping hot air through the car until they were comfortable enough. Wednesday stopped at a Starbucks, getting hot chocolate for herself and a pumpkin drink for Enid without even asking Sinclair what she wanted.

They werent talking much, although W ednesday gave her phone to Enid so she could put some music on while she drove. After an hour in the car, it started getting darker, the sun slowly fading behind them.

"Y ou want me to drive for a bit?Y ou can rest."Her voice sounded soft, almost worried about Wednesday getting tired.

"I' s okay. Islept during the day , so Ishould be good. Y ou can sleep if you want. Well get there soon."

Enid didnt argue, but she didnt sleep either . She wanted to keep an eye on Wednesday just in case.

Three hours later, when they were only an hour and a half from home, the snow came. Lots of snow.

"Ugh, where' s this coming from? It' s too early for snow."

The snow started sticking to the windshield almost immediately, thick white flakes blurring the road ahead. Wednesday narrowed her eyes, gripping the steering wheel a little tighter as the headlights caught nothing but white. She kept going for maybe twenty minutes until she couldnt see shit anymore. She was about to ask when Enid stepped up.

"We can stop and wait. It' s fine."

So the twin got in a city, several cars making a line while they waited to get into the little town. "Fuck, there' s a lot of people. Idont know if theyre gonna have rooms enough." Wednesday panted, more thinking to herself than talking to Enid.

"Stay here and Ill walk to the inn so Ican secure our rooms. It doesnt look like it' s gonna stop anytime soon, so we can crash through the night."

Wednesday glanced out the glass. "Are you sure?"

"Yup, just give me this."

She touched Wednesday for the first time that day, holding her face so she could pull her beanie out of her head. Her fingers were cold against Wednesday's cheeks, and the contact lasted just a second longer than necessary before she let go. Enid left the car before she could say anything, but she stood in the line, her hands behind the wheel as she watched Sinclair walking through people and opening her way to get them a room.

She reached for her phone to look at the weather. Snowstorm. And it was supposed to stop only by twelve p.m. the next day. She called Morticia.

"Hey , Mom."

"Hello, my beautiful witch." Gomez' s voice was heard loudly, clearly drinking.

"Hey , Daddy. Hmm, I m at this little town next to the highway . Got caught by a snowstorm, and it's snowing until lunch tomorrow, so we're just gonna crash at this inn."

"W e?"

"Ugh, yes, Dad. Mom asked me to bring Enid for Goody . Is everyone home yet?"

"Oh yes, my baby , sure." Gomez laughed by himself as W ednesday drove a bit more when the line moved. "Y es, your sister just got here from the airport. Stay at the hotel and get here when it's safe. I'll send you some money so you can have dinner, mi hija."

"See you soon, Dads."

When Wednesday finally pulled over at the spot in the hotel parking lot Enid had pointed out, it was already late. Maybe around ten p.m.

"So?" She got out of the car , watching the blonde hair under Enid's beanie. Her beanie.

"Any luck?"

"So, yes, but we hav—" Her phone rang loudly , and she stopped to look at it. "Huh? W ait, Weds, let me get your sister."

Wednesday turned around, opening the trunk as she rolled her eyes. Always Goody on her way.

"Hey , babe." The brunette opened her suitcase, getting a hoodie and a hat out of it.

"No, yeah, we're fine. W e're just gonna crash somewhere. I know , Goody." Enid's voice was trembling but somehow more firm.

Wednesday put on the hoodie, checking her phone and getting back to Yoko and Divina.

"Alright. See you later . Send hugs to your parents." Enid hung up, looking a little frowned. When she looked up, though, she smiled.

"Hmm, W eds, you look a mess." She came closer , messing with Wednesday's hair until it was back in place. She put her beanie back on her head, then reached for the hat. "I'll steal this, though."

"Thank you. Y ou wanna grab something to eat before we get the suitcases in the rooms?"

Enid nodded, smiling as she closed the trunk, and they ended up at a Wendy's around the corner. Wednesday laughed at how the blonde looked desperate while eating, and Enid told her she'd gone months without eating junk food. When they finally made it back to the hotel, Enid made sure to grab both of their suitcases down to the elevator. They got in, saying goodnight to the receptionist.

"So, W eds." The brown eyes met the blue. Something about the look made Wednesday pause for half a second. There was no awkwardness in it anymore, at least not the kind they had gotten used to after everything with Goody. They were suddenly okay with each other again, leaving that whole episode behind. "I didn't tell you 'cause, you know ... B t, hmm, they only had one room. So we're gonna have to share our space tonight."

The brunette kept herself quiet, even with her mind blowing fireworks and wanting to smile. "We can survive each other, Enid. As long as I have my bed."

"You dont. They only had a double bed available."

"Oh."

"I can sleep on the floor, dont worry. I just didnt wanna panic you. I also didnt say anything to Goody."

"Oh?"

The elevator doors opened. "Yeah, you know how she's always jealous. Idont wanna make a big deal out of this 'cause it's not. Right?"

Wednesday found their room, swirling the key before opening the door. "Of course. It's totally fine, big sis."

Half an hour later, Enid was laying down in the bed, watching the TV and saying it was a really bad snowstorm and that people should be patient. Wednesday came out of the bathroom wearing this tiny nightgown. A blackish, see-through one. It barely reached her thighs. In Wednesday's defense, she didnt do it on purpose. She was used to wearing this to sleep, and the plan had been to be in her own room that night.

"Uh, let me put some blankets on the ground. Give me a minute." Enid got up, already moving toward the other side of the room.

"Enid. It's fine."

"Huh?" She stared at Wednesday's legs for a second before forcing her eyes back to her face.

"You can sleep in the bed. It's a big one, and we are so tired that well just fall asleep right away. Idont mind." Wednesday laid down, pulling the blanket over herself.

“Are you sure?” Enid’s voice trembled as if she was the one worried and not Wednesday.

“Yes. Lay down. I’m gonna sleep super quick.” Enid got under the blankets. She herself was wearing a big jersey with compression shorts and a little loose one on top of it. “You’ll probably like it anyway, right? It’ll look like you’re sleeping with Goody, and I’m sure you miss her. Although she has the blonde hair now.” Wednesday frowned as she turned off the lights and stirred under the blankets. It was so cold.

“I like yours better.” Enid murmured it so quietly that Wednesday almost thought she had imagined it.

“What?”

“I mean, I like the dark hair better. I don’t know why Goody did that to hers. I hate it.”

“Well, if you said I can too, she looks horrible.” Wednesday turned, her face facing the ceiling. Enid did the same. She started messing with her blonde hair. It usually worked to make her fall asleep. Not today.

As much as Wednesday, she was feeling the warmth of the body next to her, and she kept thinking that she did, in fact, hate the blonde hair. The room stayed quiet for a while. The only sounds were the low hum of the heater and the wind hitting the windows. Wednesday turned her back to the other side, facing Enid now. It was cold. Goddamn it.

“Fuck, I can’t sleep. It’s too cold.” They had two little blankets on top of them, but it didn’t seem like enough.

“Of course it is. You’re not wearing anything.” Enid hummed back.

Wednesday laughed shortly. “I’m wearing a nightgown.”

"C'mon, you know you can't call what's on your body clothes."

"Why? Were you looking enough to say that?" Enid stayed quiet, her eyes barely open as she stared into the dark room.

"I'm gonna call them and ask for more blankets, for fuck's sake."

Wednesday bent over on the bed to reach the hotel phone. Her ass barely covered, turned toward Enid, who instinctively looked at the shape of her body in the dim light. The blonde immediately looked away when Wednesday turned her head slightly, but it was too late.

"Hello. Yeah, just calling to know if you can bring me extra blankets, please. Oh. Yeah, sure, no problem. Thank you." She came back to bed, laying closer now, even though neither of them seemed to notice how little space was left between them.

"Good?"

"No." Wednesday curled herself up in the bed, trying to get warmer. "The inn is full, and people asked for it already. They ran out of them. What even's wrong with me? I was fine a few ago."

She kept moving, now bothering Enid. "Oh my God, stop moving." Her voice was barely audible now, even with the room being so quiet. Only the humming of the heater was listenable.

"Well, I'm trying to sleep as well, but I might die from hypothermia in this freaking hotel in the middle of nowhere." Wednesday was suddenly pulled toward Enid, her arms circling Wednesday's hips and hiding her face against her neck. Enid's breathing was so close to her ear that Wednesday shivered before she could stop herself. "What?"

"Human warmth is the best solution to the cold. Just shut up and sleep, beauty." Wednesday felt goosebumps rise along her skin as Enid's raspy voice brushed so close to her ear. She went completely still. Enid did too.

For a few seconds, neither of them said anything. Enid had said that like it was nothing, but even she couldn't sleep. Wednesday could feel her heartbeat fast beneath her, and Enid was painfully aware of how close their bodies were. Thank God for the compression shorts.

"I can't." Wednesday mumbled it after a few minutes, barely moving.

"Shhh. You're still cold?" Wednesday nodded slowly. Very slowly. The air suddenly felt harder to breathe. Enid lifted her head from Wednesday's neck, their faces freaking close now. It was too dark to see each other's expressions properly, but neither of them moved away. "What do you need?"

You.

Wednesday wanted her so bad it hurt. She felt her legs trembling lightly and let her breath out sharply. She didn't dare open her mouth. It was most likely for her to moan than say a word. So Enid kept going.

"You may be getting a cold 'cause I feel hot, Weds." She felt her body warm. Very warm. She was burning hot for Enid. Sinclair kissed her forehead gently. But that wasn't what Wednesday wanted. "Oh, you know what can help? Did you bring my pen? The weed will make you feel warmer."

"No."

"Why not?"

"'Cause you need to tell me what you were doing or I'll keep it for me." Wednesday sounded weak, her voice barely a murmur.

"Weds, c'mon. This might get you a cold tomorrow. Where is it?" Enid moved from her grip, and Wednesday pulled her back, suddenly feeling overwhelmed by how close they were.

“What were you doing?” She made sure her nose was almost touching Enid’s, their breaths mixing between them. Both were breathing with some difficulty now.

“You’re serious?”

“I’m serious, Sinclair.” Enid moved under the blankets, thinking if she should say something. And then Wednesday moved. Enid’s hands slipped from her body as she left the bed, messing with her bag on the table. Enid could see her figure in the dim light, barely able to make out the details of her silhouette. “Alright, I have it. Now tell me.”

Enid saw her coming back, her knees sinking into the mattress before she laid down again, still completely comfortable being so close to her. Wednesday stopped above her, her face hovering over Enid’s.

“C’mon, beauty. Just smoke a bit and we can sleep.”

“What is it? Did you actually have someone hiding in the room? Is that why you don’t tell me? Cause you were cheating on my twin sister and you think I’ll tell her? Cause I won’t, Nid. You can trust me.”

She let out a little laugh, reaching for Enid’s hand and bringing it to her chest. The tip of Sinclair’s fingers brushed her skin, feeling the pen pressed between her breasts. Enid’s fingers stilled there for a second, almost as if she had forgotten what she was reaching for in the first place.

“Wednesday.” Enid felt her body respond and stirred beneath her, bringing Wednesday’s body closer. She was trying to get the brunette to lay down facing the ceiling again, but Wednesday was faster and stayed on top of her.

“Just tell me and I’ll let you go and use this. Actually, do you want me to use it now? I can smoke a bit for you if that’s what you want.” Wednesday sounded like a sin.

"Fuck. Oh my God, I was jerking of f, okay? I was masturbating when you knocked on the door." She let it out in a breath. W ednesday knew that already. She just wanted to hear her say it.

"Y ou can have it now."

Enid didn't move, waiting for the pen in her hand. W ednesday brought her hand back, retrieving it, and Enid's fingers brushed her skin again, feeling her chest before finally closing around the pen. Her hand slowly moved away, almost reluctantly, as neither of them seemed to want the contact to end.

For a moment, they just stared at each other .

"Y ou want me to smoke for you?"

"Hmm... Y eah. It'll make you feel better ." Enid raised her arm as Wednesday leaned closer to her face. The space between them felt almost nonexistent now. Neither of them seemed to remember the cold anymore..

Enid bit her lower lip, trying to hold back a sound as Wednesday shifted slightly above her. Her hair fell forward, brushing Enid's cheek, and the blonde swallowed hard, her eyes flicking from Wednesday's eyes to her lips and back again.

"Will you smoke with me, Nid?" W ednesday was basically moaning on top of her.

"I can if you want me to." She heard W ednesday's smile when she murmured a yes in response. The brunette came closer, almost laying down on Enid, until there was barely any space left between them.

Enid pressed the button to turn the pen on. Wednesday leaned closer, taking a drag before blowing the smoke toward Enid's lips. Their mouths touched.

Neither of them moved away. The contact was barely there, soft and accidental enough that either of them could've called it an accident, pulled away, gone back to sleep, and pretended nothing had ever happened.

For one second, neither of them moved. Then Enid slowly opened her eyes, just enough to see Wednesday doing the same. The brunette was already smirking, her eyes fixed on hers, like she knew exactly what they were both thinking. Their breathing mixed in the tiny space between them, neither willing to be the first one to pull away.

It was their last signal.

After that, they acted feral.

Chapter 5: Room

Enid ate her out, Wednesday moaning against her lips as the blonde pulled her onto her lap, both of them so desperate and hungry for each other. Wednesday found her blonde hair and pulled aggressively, grinding against Enid.

"T ake this off."Her voice sounded like Satan himself had landed on Earth just to whisper in Enid' s ear. Enid barely had time to react before her own jersey was gone.

"What a fucking girl, Addams,"Enid mumbled against her lips as she gripped her nightgown and ripped it away from her.

"Y eah?Am I?"Enid didnt answer . She knew what Wednesday was doing. She took her tits in her hands and buried herself in them, sucking Wednesday's nipples between her teeth with a hunger that Wednesday had always dreamed about. "Fuuuck, Enid. Oh my God."

They kept moving, Wednesday pulling her hair and grinding on her lap nonstop, feeling her erection against her panties, now fucking wet. She had been wet since they lay down, but now she was fucking soaked. She was dripping onto Enid's shorts, whimpering.

"Do you feel hot enough now , beauty?Huh?Ibet you do, dont you?"

Oh my God. She was exactly how Wednesday expected her to be. Her voice was raspy and bossy as she left Wednesday's body covered in bite marks and hickeys. Her tits were now red all over, bruises coming in the next few days to make her remember.

"Fuck me."She got on her knees, taking her panties of f and throwing them on the floor. So fucking fast that Enid could barely process what she was doing. Sinclair pulled her dark hair close to her again, opening her mouth with two of her fingers.

Wednesday, on all fours, sucked her fingers with dedication, never looking away from her blue stare, moaning against her hand and arching her ass so Enid could see her silhouette. She let Addams go, pushing her head down as she watched the girl take her clothes off.

"So fucking desperate, aren't you, W eds? Y ou've been waiting so long for this, haven't you?" W ednesday nodded, her hands finding Enid's length. "Or you think I didn't see the way you dress up for me? This fucking shit you call a nightgown, your black tights, tiny dresses, coming to my room and asking for weed. C'mon, you know what you have to do."

Enid held her dick and pushed it against Wednesday's face, her pre-cum making her beautiful mouth, cheeks, nose, and chin all wet and messy. Addams put her tongue out, asking for it.

"That' s it, such a good girl, right? I think my beautiful girl needs a name. What do you think?" She made W ednesday nod, going up and down on her cock. Tears of desire gathered in the corners of her pretty black eyes as she kept herself busy. "What do you think of Peaches, hm? Is that good enough for you, baby?"

Wednesday moaned with her mouth full, her whole body trembling hard as Enid forced herself further inside her throat. She was big. B ig and fat. The way W ednesday wanted. The way she imagined. The way she desired.

"I think you like it, right?" She nodded again, and Enid got herself out of her mouth, her breathing sharp as Sinclair put her hand around her length, hitting her dick against Wednesday's cheeks. She whimpered on all fours. "Do you like your name, Peaches?" Wednesday moaned loudly, nodding several times. "I ask, answer , Peaches. Now, do you like your name, my little slut?"

Her body shivered again.

"Y e-Yes. I.. I like my name. I love my name."

“Aren’t you a great little bitch for me?” Enid let out a little chuckle, her dick rubbing against Wednesday’s wet lips. Those blue eyes were staring down at her now, looking almost possessed.

“Enid.”

“What?”

“Please.”

Wednesday looked up at her, her big brown eyes practically begging to be fucked. Her eyelashes were still damp from crying while taking Enid down her throat with so much devotion.

“C’mon, baby. You’re too good for this. You know how you have to ask.” Enid ran a hand through her hair before pulling her up. Wednesday crawled onto her knees until Enid’s mouth was basically on hers. She’d never had this with Goody. And my God, Wednesday was fucking amazing. “Come here. I wanna taste myself on you.”

Addams let out a needy little whimper before kissing her. Their lips were wet, their saliva mixing together as they kissed, both of them burning hot. Enid held Wednesday by her hair, one hand resting at the nape of her neck while the other slowly caressed her ass, letting the girl move her hips and show just how badly she wanted Sinclair. The brunette wanted to get fucked until dawn, but Enid wouldn’t stop kissing her.

“Enid, please,” she murmured against the blonde’s lips.

“Ye—” A phone suddenly rang loudly. The sound spread through the room like a spell being broken. It was Enid’s. “Fuck. Let it ring.” Enid didn’t even want to pick it up. Wednesday pulled her back down, kissing her neck, sighing and moaning softly in her ear.

The phone stopped.

Enid grabbed her tighter and kissed her mouth again, all passion this time. Not desperate anymore, but still so fucking erotic that Wednesday could have sworn she was dreaming. Then the phone started ringing again.

"Fucking phone. Pick it up." Wednesday fell back onto the other side of the bed, her body still unbearably hot and needy.

Enid grabbed the phone without even checking the screen. "Hi." She didn't look at the caller ID.

"Goody. Hi, honey."

Wednesday immediately went still.

"Huh? I'm in bed, actually. Um, I just took a shower and came to watch some TV before going to sleep." She listened for a second, glancing toward Wednesday, but the brunette didn't look back at her. She was lying on her side with her back turned to Enid, her naked body barely visible in the darkness of the room.

"Yeah, yeah. She drove all the way here, so I paid for the rooms. It's okay, Goody. She drove me here, so it's fine. Well, yeah, I could've, but you didn't wanna stop to get me, so, you know... your sister helped me." Enid sighed, already sounding annoyed. "Look... Fine. I'll see you tomorrow."

She hung up. The room went quiet again. Wednesday stayed on her side of the bed, staring at the wall, her jaw tight. She didn't move, didn't even bother looking at Enid. Enid slowly lowered the phone and looked over at her.

Neither of them said anything.

Chapter 6: The Addams

Fucking Goody Addams had ruined Wednesday's dreams. Once again.

They obviously hadnt gotten back to where they were before. Enid' s sigh had been signal enough for Wednesday to know she shouldnt push the situation any further. t had happened, and that was good enough for her. Because she knew . She knew Enid wanted her just as much as she wanted Enid. And that was more than enough for now.

They were now parking in front of the Addams family's enormous mansion, the familiar dark stone walls rising against the gray November sky. The cold was awful, sharp enough to make Wednesday regret every decision that had led her to leave the warm car. Gomez and Morticia were already waiting at the front door.

The drive had been terrible. When Wednesday woke up that morning, Enid wasnt in the room. For a brief, stupid second, she had wondered if she had imagined everything. Then they met downstairs. Enid was sitting at a small table in the lobby, eating breakfast, her hair still a little messy and her eyes carefully avoiding Wednesday's. They barely spoke during the entire drive. One hour of pure silence.

One very long hour of Wednesday trying to figure out whether Enid was feeling sorry, scared because of what they had almost done, embarrassed, or simply nervous about seeing her girlfriend again. Who would know? Wednesday certainly didnt.

She stepped out of the car and walked toward her mother, her wavy dark hair falling down her back. The cold made her cheeks slightly pink, but she barely noticed it. Enid did. Her eyes followed Wednesday for a second too long, taking in the now familiar curves, the way the black coat moved around her legs. The dark hair she liked, and not the awful blonde Goody had in her head.

"Mes chères!" the older woman called happily from the top of the steps. Morticia immediately opened her arms, and Wednesday allowed herself to be pulled into her mother's embrace.

"Sinclair , how was the night at the Inn?" Gomez asked, looking at Enid. "I know how hotels in the middle of nowhere can be uncomfortable, but we set up your room with Goody. She's already upstairs waiting for you. She didn't want to come down because of the cold."

Wednesday, still caught in Morticia's arms, hid her face against her mother's shoulder so no one would see the smile threatening to appear. Because, oh my God. Their night had been anything but uncomfortable.

She missed Enid already. Not that she was going to push her again. No. No. At least not here. Not with Goody around. She could wait until they were back at college. She had waited years until Enid kissed her. She could wait a few days. Easily. Probably.

They went inside, escaping the cold as Morticia took their coats and Gomez continued talking about Thanksgiving dinner. "Nana will be here this afternoon," he explained cheerfully . "And Fester is coming too. Pugsley should be arriving any minute with Natasha."

Wednesday barely had time to react before Goody came down the stairs, maybe fifteen minutes later. Her expression was already an annoyed stare.

"Why didn't you come upstairs to say hi?" she asked Enid. A bitch. As usual.

"Hello to you too, sister ." Wednesday interrupted.

"Oh, lil sis, how I've missed you during these days!" Goody immediately wrapped her arms around Wednesday in a tight hug. Wednesday stood there, perfectly still.

She was one of the most horrible and fake people Wednesday had ever known. Like, oh my God. How could someone fake this much when you could see your own sister every weekend and still couldnt even be bothered to say hello?

Asshole.

Then Goody turned toward Enid. She crossed the room and grabbed Enid by the hair before pulling her into a kiss, right there in front of everyone, as if she needed an audience to prove just how much they loved each other.

Wednesday watched without blinking, convinced she was watching their lie. At least, Wednesday was becoming increasingly convinced of that. Because apparently , Enid loved Wednesday's hair. And judging by the way Enid had looked at it yesterday night, maybe a little too much.

Wednesday's mouth almost curved into a smile as she teased. "Get a room," she muttered. Goody pulled away from Enid and looked at her.

"What?"

"Nothing."

Before Goody could say anything else, the enormous front doors opened. A gust of freezing air swept through the foyer.

"Jesus Christ, it' s cold!" Pugsley' s voice echoed through the house.

Wednesday turned toward the entrance. Her older brother walked inside carrying two bags in one hand and a suitcase in the other, while Natasha followed behind him, pulling her coat tighter around her body.

"Finally!" Gomez exclaimed.

"Nice to see you too, Dad." Pugsley dropped the bags beside the door and immediately rubbed his hands together. "I swear, Maine gets colder every year."

"You say that every Thanksgiving," Goody said.

"And every Thanksgiving, I'm right."

Natasha laughed quietly as she stepped forward. "Hey, sweetie."

Wednesday's expression softened immediately. She wrapped her arms tightly around Natasha, holding her for a moment longer than necessary. "I missed you."

Natasha smiled against her shoulder, hugging her back. "I missed you too, Weds. It's been some time, right? How's college going?"

Natasha was still somewhat new to the family. This was only her third Thanksgiving with the Addams, but Wednesday had taken to her almost immediately. She liked her. More importantly, Natasha was always incredibly sweet to her. Wednesday finally pulled away, keeping one hand on Natasha's arm.

"You look frozen."

"I am frozen."

"Come inside before you lose your fingers." Wednesday gave her a small, satisfied smile before looking past her toward Pugsley.

"Did you bring everything?"

Pugsley stared at her. "Hello to you too, little sister."

"You're late."

"I had to drive."

"That's usually how arriving somewhere works."

Natasha laughed again, and Pugsley shook his head. "Still charming, I see."

"Always."

One thing about Addams holidays was that they drank like crazies every single time. Gomez, Pugsley, and Wednesday were the most committed to the tradition. And, of course, Nana and Fester whenever they were around. Morticia was very weak when it came to drinks, and even though she drank with them, she barely made it past her first bottle of wine.

Goody drank in a different way than her siblings and father. She got really drunk very easily but always refused to stop, so she'd always black out at some point. Enid and Natasha usually kept their mother-in-law company.

While the rest of the Addams family would drink and drink and drink without getting wasted. Tipsy, yes, but never really drunk. It was almost unbelievable. So, of course, they kept their tradition.

Wednesday had brought a box of twelve white wines, a pack of champagne, and two bottles of cherry liqueur. Pugsley did the same, plus three packs of beer and two bottles of whisky. And, of course, Gomez had their wine cellar in the house.

Morticia ordered pizzas for everyone as a very welcoming first night, and they started having fun while waiting for Nana and Uncle Fester. Some good music was playing while Enid talked to Pugsley about college. She was studying computing, the same thing he did, so they were always talking a lot.

Goody was wrapped around Enid's arm, drinking red wine and staring at the horror movie on TV that had no sound but was apparently a classic. Natasha helped Gomez pick a new wine bottle, while Morticia and her dark-haired daughter were in the kitchen getting everyone's pizzas ready on plates.

"So, how's my baby doing being a big girl?" the matriarch asked softly. "I feel like we haven't been talking for some time now, no?"

"Yes, Mama. So far, so good, I think. Classes are fine, just the due dates that are an awful event every time."

"That's good. You know, you never had trouble with anything in school, so it's understandable that you don't find anything difficult in college either." Morticia placed another slice of pizza onto a plate before glancing at her daughter. "And how's Enid been keeping you company? Goody called me to say she asked her to keep an eye on you."

Wednesday laughed out loud. She always did when her mother knew exactly what was going on. Morticia turned her back slightly toward the living room, and the moment she heard Goody's voice, she rolled her eyes.

Wednesday knew that look. Her mother had always known exactly what kind of person Goody was.

Goody had been mean since she was a kid, apparently. Morticia had spent her entire life watching her daughter find new and creative ways to make everything about herself.

"Well, I go to her room and we smoke together every week or so," Wednesday said, still amused. "She's nicer when she doesn't have her girlfriend bossing her around during the weekends."

"Good. I mean, not the weed. But good she's keeping you some company when she's free enough to do it."

They laughed together.

“Are you gonna take much longer? Enid’s hungry .” Goody’s voice appeared from nowhere.

Morticia immediately rolled her eyes again. “Well, mi hija, if you’d come here and help us, it would be a lot faster.”

She looked toward Goody, clearly unhappy with the tone she had used. Wednesday bit back another laugh. Goody muttered something under her breath before walking back to the living room, and Morticia shook her head.

For a while, the conversation in the living room moved from one subject to another without any real direction, the kind of pointless family small talk that somehow lasted for hours. Natasha came back from the kitchen carrying another bottle and placed it on the table.

“Okay , who’s still drinking wine?”

“Me.” Morticia said.

“Me.” Wednesday added.

“Me.” Enid said, raising her glass.

Gomez looked around. “Anyone want champagne?”

“Me.” Goody kept being stubborn.

“I do!” Pugsley answered immediately .

Natasha looked at him. “You’re already mixing whiskey and wine.”

“And?”

“And you’re going to regret that.”

“I regret nothing.”

Wednesday lifted her glass toward him. “That’s the Addams spirit.”

Gomez laughed loudly. "That's my girl!"

Morticia smiled as she watched her children, clearly amused by the chaos around her. "So, Natasha," she asked, turning toward her, "how's work going?"

Natasha settled beside Pugsley. "Pretty good, actually. Busy, but good. I finally finished that project I told you about."

"The one that was keeping you awake until two in the morning?"

"The very same one."

"You should have let Pugsley help you." Natasha looked at him. "He offered."

"I did."

"You also said you'd do it for me in exchange for half my paycheck."

Pugsley shrugged. "I'm an expensive consultant." Everyone laughed.

The evening kept moving like that, with random stories, teasing, questions about college, stories about work, and Gomez repeatedly trying to convince everyone that whatever bottle he had just opened was the best one in the cellar. Eventually, the bottles around the room started disappearing faster than anyone could keep track of them. Wednesday already had three bottles of wine by her chair, sharing some whisky with her father and brother during a toast.

Goody was already very tipsy, her words getting slightly slower as she leaned more heavily against Enid. Enid was basically holding her upright by then, one arm around her waist while Goody rested against her shoulder. And somehow, Enid still looked perfectly sober.

"Are you sure you haven't been drinking?" Pugsley asked Enid, eyeing her almost suspiciously.

Enid lifted her glass. "I've been drinking."

"You don't look like it."

"That's because I'm talented. Or you think you are the only one, Addams?" Goody made a vague sound against her shoulder.

"She is," she mumbled.

Enid looked down at her. "You're barely awake, Good."

Goody tried to answer, but whatever she intended to say dissolved into a yawn.

Morticia glanced at the clock on the wall. "Oh, Mon Dieu. It's reasonable she's sleepy."

Everyone looked over. "What?" Gomez asked.

"It's two in the morning." There was a brief silence.

Pugsley leaned back in his chair and looked toward the clock. "Already?"

"Already," Morticia confirmed.

Natasha groaned softly.

"We're supposed to go shopping tomorrow morning for the big dinner," Morticia reminded them.

Gomez looked genuinely offended.

"At morning?"

"Yes, Gomez. Unless you'd like to serve everyone wine and whatever is still hiding in the pantry."

He considered it. "That's not the worst idea I've ever had."

Enid looked down at Goody again. "We should probably go to bed."

Goody didnt answer. Enid nudged her gently.

"Goody?" Nothing. "Goody ."

A tiny snore escaped her. Enid stared at her for a second. "Oh, come on."

Pugsley started laughing. "She passed out."

"I can see that." Enid carefully shifted herself on the couch, trying to get Goody into a position where she could actually move her without waking her.

"Can you help me?"

Pugsley immediately stood. "Y eah."

Together, they managed to get Goody upright. She barely reacted, her head falling against Enid's shoulder as the younger woman wrapped an arm around her waist.

"She's heavier when she's unconscious," Enid muttered.

"That sounds scientifically impossible."

"Then carry her ."

Pugsley raised both hands. "I've done my part."

Enid rolled her eyes, but she was smiling. "Come on, sleepyhead."

Goody mumbled something incoherent against her shoulder. Enid slowly guided her toward the stairs, supporting most of her weight. Morticia watched them go.

"Careful."

"I've got her ," Enid called back.

A few seconds later, they disappeared upstairs. Pugsley groaned, tired and sleepy.

"I suddenly hate holidays."

"You'll survive," Gomez said. "We need everyone rested. Tish and I can finish up here."

"I'll help," Pugsley said.

"No, you won't," Gomez replied immediately. "Go upstairs."

Pugsley opened his mouth to argue, but his dad didn't let him. He sighed dramatically. "Fine."

Natasha laughed as she stood. "I guess that means me too?"

"Absolutely," Morticia said. "You two need sleep."

Natasha nodded and gave the room one last look before heading upstairs with Pugsley.

Morticia then turned toward Wednesday, still sitting in her chair.

"And you too, sweetheart. Go get some sleep."

She didn't have to say it twice. Wednesday went upstairs, taking a hot, steaming shower before deciding to stay in her underwear for tonight. Inside the house, it was warm enough for it, and she had extra blankets in her suite. She turned off the lights and lay down, already knowing she wasn't going to fall asleep right away since her body still felt warm from the alcohol.

A few minutes later, Enid came back down alone, clearly showered and in her pajamas. "Where's everyone?"

Morticia looked up from the table. "I told them all to go to bed."

"I'm not leaving you two to clean all of this by yourselves." Enid smiled as she walked toward the kitchen.

"We can handle it," Morticia said.

"I know."

Enid started collecting the empty glasses anyway. Morticia sighed, but she didn't stop her. The house was finally quiet now. No more laughter echoing through the living room. Just the soft clinking of glasses and dishes as the three of them slowly cleaned everything up.

Enid moved around the kitchen with surprising energy considering how late it was. She gathered the bottles, carried the empty glasses to the sink, wiped down the table, and helped Gomez collect everything that had been left around the living room.

They continued cleaning until there was almost nothing left to put away. By the time Enid finally set the last glass in the cabinet, the clock was approaching three. She stretched her arms above her head and let out a quiet groan.

"Okay."

Morticia smiled. "Now will you finally go to bed?"

Enid nodded. "Yeah. Now I will."

"Good."

"Good night, Tish. Good night, Gomez."

"Good night, sweetheart," Morticia replied.

"Sleep well," Gomez added.

Enid smiled and finally headed upstairs, tired and not sober but also not drunk.

Chapter 7: Bed

Wednesday, now lying in bed, realized that she was, in fact, tipsy. Not badly, but she was the happy kind of girl after drinking some wine. She closed her eyes, little shiny stars drifting through her mind as she smiled comfortably in bed. She kept thinking about Enid. Her hands around her yesterday night, the warmth of her body, the way she had looked at her. Wednesday really wanted her again. On top of her, above her, by her side, it didn't matter.

She wanted her so badly it wasn't fair that Goody, such a brat and stupid girl, had this amazing girl for herself. Wednesday sighed, shifting in bed, her body warm as she kept thinking about Enid being in bed with her right now. How she would be good to the blonde woman. She felt hotter, her body giving her signs of how turned on she was just from thinking about Enid.

The bed shifted as she kept her eyes closed. She felt so good with the wine in her head, smiling as she imagined Enid's arms around her waist. Enid's gentle touch before she would actually get rough, like she had last time. She sighed, her body pushing against Enid. Her mouth was barely open, her lips feeling numb as they always did when she drank. Her hair was pulled gently, her neck now exposed as she felt kisses on her skin.

Wednesday finally opened her eyes, feeling Enid breathe against her.

"Fuck, Weds, you're naked"

"Nid" she murmured.

Enid caressed her thighs, pressing her body against Wednesday. "Shhh... You're sober? Cause we're not doing anything if you're not."

Wednesday whimpered, suddenly feeling very sober and really wet as Enid rubbed her hands all over her body. "No, I'm okay ."

She turned around, her mouth meeting Enid's lips as both felt out of breath beneath the blankets. Enid made sure she had locked the door, but still.

"Y ou were so hot today, beauty. Couldn't take my eyes off of you." Wednesday moaned, getting Enid to distance herself. "No, baby , I need you to be quiet, okay? Everyone's quiet now and you're gonna be a good girl for me and do the same."

They were both by their sides, facing each other as Enid's hand slid down Wednesday's bare skin, finding her tiny lingerie. W ednesday opened her mouth, breathing loudly but making no sound as she felt herself being touched. "Tho... Uhmn, fuck... I thought you didn't..."

Enid sucked her bottom lip between her teeth, talking against Wednesday's mouth. "I do, baby . Fuck, I really do, W ednesday. I really wanna fuck you the way you want, peaches, but I need you right now. Fuck, I can't wait."

She slid two of her fingers inside Addams as Wednesday dug her nails into Enid's shoulder , trying to be quiet. "Oh my God!" Her voice was a loud, breathless whisper as Enid kept moving against her.

"Shhh, I know , baby." Sinclair kissed her cheek, holding her neck as she kept making Wednesday look at her in the dim light.

"Fu-fuck! So good... hmmmy god." W ednesday trembled in her hand when Enid touched her more intimately. "Oh fuck! Enid."

"Y ou're such a good girl, baby ." She kissed her forehead, whispering against her skin. "Y ou're doing so good."

"I need yo-you." W ednesday opened her eyes, looking toward Enid through her lashes, her mouth open as she fought to hold back a louder sound. Enid seemed to lose her mind.

They didn't really think of anything when Enid finally moved closer, both of them caught up in the moment. The room felt impossibly warm, the blankets tangled around their legs as they struggled to keep quiet when finally took her fingers of f Wednesday's slick pussy. Neither of them seemed capable of remembering anything beyond the other as Enid rubbed the tip of her cock on Addams they both kissed each other desperately, muffling their moans. Enid made sure she held Wednesday tight against her mouth so she could moan on her. And she did, eventually breaking their kiss to gasp "You're so fucking big, oh my god."

"Fuck me, Nid."

Enid, despite all her gentle words, fucked Wednesday from the beginning without giving her any time to get used to her size. "Fuck, my peaches you're feel so tight on me, this fucking pussy wanted my cock so bad, right?" She lowered her head to talk against Wednesday's ear as they both started to sweat. Wednesday whimpered against her neck, gripping her hair as she tried to control herself.

They felt their hair getting damp, their skin warm and slippery beneath the blankets. "Fuck, Wednesday, I wish I could see you taking my cock right now." Enid laughed breathlessly, barely believing any of this was actually happening. "Come here, baby. Ride my dick, fuck me good like you've been wanting, just remember to be a good girl and stay quiet okay? Go ahead, beauty"

Wednesday could barely hold back her suppressed sobs, tears streaming from the corners of her eyes, her lips pressed aggressively together and her eyes shut as she struggled to remain silent as sweat trickled down her skin, taking so good all Enid was giving her. Fuck, she couldn't believe this whole shit. Moving, she kept riding Enid's dick inside her, feeling her cock opening and forcing its way till deep on her.

Sinclair was breathing against her ear, her entire body showing how much she was enjoying this, Her nails digging into Wednesday's hips, trying to get deeper inside the girl, taking everything from her. Goody was now the last thought in her mind when she had the good twin riding her.

She reached the brunette's nipples, pinching them and feeling her tremble on the bed, Wednesday's legs giving way and shaking so violently that Enid had to take control again, thrusting deep and maintaining the same rhythm she had held since the start.

"Oh my God, yes!" W ednesday whispered-shouted, her hand flying over to her own mouth as she tried to keep composed. "E-Enid, oh fuck, Iam goin-"

"I know , beauty." Enid kissed her forehead, her voice barely more than a whisper. "Fuck, I'm definitely giving you a good fuck after this. You did so good, peaches, this pussy feels so fucking good, babe."

Enid thrusted harder on her, feeling her tighter than before and getting closer when Wednesday's fingers searched for her blonde hair, pulling her closer until Enid's face was tucked against her neck. She could feel the blonde's breath against her skin, warm and uneven, while Wednesday tried desperately not to make another sound.

She groaned, repeatedly murmuring her dirty nickname as if it were a prayer. Wednesday felt just how filled she was when Enid came, her nails digging into Wednesday's skin as she experienced a pleasure so intense it felt unreal.

Wednesday felt herself tremble as Enid's words reached her ears, everything around her seeming to disappear for a moment. Little flashes of light seemed to explode behind her closed eyes, her breath catching in her throat as she fought to stay quiet.

It didn't quite feel real when Enid finally pulled away from her , her breath now farther from Wednesday's neck and her warm skin distant from Wednesday's voluptuous body , which was now sweaty and warm against the guest room sheets in the Addams family mansion. Enid got up, going to the bathroom and cleaning herself before heading back toward the bed and looking for her clothes.

She was obviously stopped by the sight of Wednesday Addams, now on all fours, crawling toward the side of the bed where Enid was standing. Her eyes glared at the blonde, still possessed with that same arousal. Enid could almost taste her on her own tongue, so aroused by the mere thought of licking that pussy, soaked in her own cum.

She stayed on her knees, facing Enid but still smaller than her, her arms winding around Enid's neck as she tangled her fingers into the blonde's hair. Sinclair was the one who leaned in for a little kiss, intending to leave, but honestly, she couldnt deny W ednesday when those red, full lips parted, inviting her into a deeper kiss. Wednesday's tongue slipped against hers as she breathed her in, while Enid wrapped an arm around her waist, holding her tiny body tightly against her.

"Fuck, youre good, peaches. Fucking girl, huh?"she smiled against her lips, hearing Enids words.

"I can be way better than this, Ipromise you."she kissed her again, only little kisses now, as they refused to get out of their own bubble.

"Y eah?"She nodded once more, stealing one last kiss before pulling away and falling back into bed.

Enid didnt look away , following her silhouette as Wednesday tucked herself beneath the duvet again. She made sure to crawl on all fours before settling down, deliberately giving Enid a good view of her ass stuck out in front of her face.

"Good night, big sis"W ednesday whispered with a full smile in her face as she felt Enids cum dripping between her thighs.

Chapter 8: Cooked

> really hope you guys get the joke in the chapters tittle lol have fun!

The next morning, Wednesday woke up from a fever dream she'd had sometime before dawn, the kind that left her disoriented for a few seconds, unsure of where reality ended and the dream began. In it, Enid had been slowly kissing her, teasing her with every soft touch until Wednesday had woken up feeling embarrassingly slick between her legs. She got up, without any other option available since staying in bed would only make her keep thinking about that dream and what she'd done before falling asleep.

She got up without any other option available. Staying in bed would only make her keep thinking about that dream, about Enid, and, worse, about what she'd done before falling asleep. She pushed the blankets away and sat on the edge of the mattress, rubbing her face with both hands as she tried to clear her head.

That itself felt like something that had happened only in a dream and not really in real life. She could barely believe her sister-in-law, who had been with her sister for so many years, had just decided to cheat on her. It felt almost like it was... she didn't know. Maybe like it was a trap? Something about the whole situation felt too absurd, too wrong, too convenient to be real.

At the kitchen, she found Morticia already writing in her journal. Her mom had always had the habit of writing everything down. Whether it was a diary or simply a journal filled with grocery lists, phone numbers, passwords, little observations, or things she didn't want to forget, she had it all written by hand. The familiar scratch of the pen against paper was almost soothing in the quiet kitchen.

"Terrible morning, my little bat. What makes you awake so early?" she asked with a smile, resting the black pen between the filled pages.

"Mamá, I hate the cold, urgh. It makes me wanna cuddle and I have no one to do it with, so..." Wednesday walked toward the coffee machine, her bare feet cold against the floor. She poured the dark liquid into a giant black mug with "dead inside" engraved on it while hearing Morticia scoff softly behind her.

"You're funny, my black kitten. Come here. You still haven't told me about your love adventures in college. I only know about essays and deadlines, and that's the boring part. Give me some tea to go with my coffee."

Wednesday sat down next to her mom. They had this little lounge area in the kitchen, and it was probably one of the coziest parts of the entire house. A big, wide window made the whole room look even warmer against the snow falling outside, the world beyond the glass almost completely white. The Addams always decorated the space according to the seasons, and everything was orange now because of Thanksgiving. The couch was light gray and covered with a ridiculous number of pillows, with two big chairs facing it and a fluffy rug underneath their feet.

Wednesday wrapped both hands around her mug, letting the heat seep into her fingers before finally looking at her mother.

"Well, I can start with this unbelievably wrong situation that happened."

"Oh, and what's that?"

Wednesday looked up at her mom, frowning. Her expression had changed enough for Morticia to notice immediately.

"Promise you won't judge me?"

Morticia laughed as her daughter crawled closer to her, looking for her hands until Morticia was gently petting her head. Wednesday closed her eyes almost immediately, relaxing beneath the familiar touch.

She would never judge her daughter for anything. She couldn't agree with all her decisions and certainly wouldn't approve of everything she did, but she would never judge her beautiful Wednesday. There was a difference between disagreeing with someone and making them feel like they were no longer worthy of being loved.

"I... huh... I think I did something bad, actually. But it gets even worse because I don't feel guilty about it..."

"Okay." Morticia kept rubbing her dark roots, slowly massaging the youngest Addams' scalp. "Why don't you tell me and we can figure it out?"

"So, I, huh, I have this girl that I don't like, and she's always been mean to me and mistreated me, and I think I kinda slept with her girlfriend?"

She didn't try to hold it back. She knew she would end up telling her mother at some point, so why not now, right? The words came out faster than she intended, and once they were out, Wednesday stared intensely into her coffee as if the mug might somehow save her from having to see Morticia's reaction.

"Wednesday! You're saying someone cheated on their girlfriend with you? You slept with someone who already has a person?"

"...Yes?"

Morticia sighed, gazing outside for a second. Snow continued falling behind the glass, soft and almost peaceful, which felt completely inappropriate considering what her daughter had just confessed.

She opened her mouth and then closed it again. She was definitely not expecting that.

"W ell... You certainly know Idont agree with that, but let me listen to why you dont feel guilty ."

"Idont really know? This girl, shes always been such a bitch to me and never really cared about my feelings or who Iam, and Ive always had a crush on her girlfriend, even though Iresisted it for so long. But then her girlfriend showed interest in me, and we kissed, and then... yeah, it happened."

Wednesday paused, her fingers tightening around the mug.

"And Ireally wish Icould make it happen again, which Iknow is so wrong, but Icant help it because Iknow Id be such a better girlfriend to her and wed be a great couple, but we can never be together."

The matriarch frowned, now looking directly into her daughters black-mirrored eyes. Wednesdays expression had lost some of its usual confidence. There was something almost vulnerable in the way she looked at Morticia, as though admitting this aloud had made everything more real.

"W ednesday... Do Iwanna hear why you two cant stay together?"

"No, mamá"

She didnt pull her gaze away , giving Morticia all the information she needed without actually saying the words. Morticia studied her for another moment before gently brushing a strand of dark hair away from her daughters face.

"Listen, my raven. Y ou know this is wrong, and although I understand perfectly the sensation of not getting enough of this girl, this cant keep going. At least not while shes still with her girlfriend. You gotta remember that whoever does this to their partner isnt in a position to want anything except to end their relationship and be with you. I get that sometimes people meet in very indelicate and wrong situations, but lying always ends up in a mess."

She listened with her eyes locked on her mother. She knew Morticia knew exactly what was happening.

Wednesday was never good at hiding emotions or things from her. She could lie to almost anyone when she needed to, but her mother had always been different. Morticia had known her long enough to recognize every tiny change in her expression, every hesitation, every silence.

"The only option here is for you to be patient and wait for this girl's right decision. And if this is the case and you feel she's the one for you, don't think about other people's reactions, okay? Nothing is more important than your happiness. But don't forget what I said."

Wednesday remained quiet, absorbing every word.

At two p.m., the Addams family was divided into chores. Nana and Uncle Fester had to stop at an inn, just like the girls had the day before, because of a snowstorm, so they were still coming. Morticia and Gomez were now going to the storage room to get the Christmas decorations, while Pugsley and Natasha were heading out to get a Christmas tree.

Enid and Goody were supposed to go to the store to get their supplies for cooking, Enid being so good in the kitchen that no one would ever dare deny her offer to cook their turkey for the Thanksgiving dinner. Goody, however, was too disgusted by the idea of touching the big turkey, so she'd refused to.

Which led Wednesday to stay with Enid while Goody went out to get the last-minute things Morticia had listed in her journal that morning.

And that's why the black-haired twin was now bent over the kitchen counter, her legs spread apart, with Enid standing so close behind her that Wednesday could feel her body against hers. The blonde's mouth moved along her neck, kissing her skin and whispering dirty words against her ear while Wednesday was forced to keep cutting the onions for the sauce.

The house was empty, and no one would be back for at least an hour. That gave Enid more than enough ideas to put into practice. And it gave Wednesday a lot of things to resist when everything she had been trying so hard not to want was suddenly right there, making it almost impossible for her to concentrate on anything else.

She couldn't. Enid slipped her hand inside Wednesday's sweatpants, the cotton thong barely acting as a barrier as she teased her through it, slowly circling her middle finger in Addams clit. Wednesday still had the knife in her hand, trying to keep going with her task, but a loud sigh escaped her as she leaned her head against Enid's shoulder. The blonde kept going slowly, both of them knowing no one would be back to interrupt them.

Two minutes later, Wednesday had dropped the things onto the counter, her nails scratching lightly against the surface as she tried to stay still while Enid was pounding in her from behind, forcing her way into her soaked cunt. She had one hand tangled in Wednesday's hair, the long dark strands wrapped tightly around her wrist, while the other held her hips whilst she thrusted roughly inside.

It felt so fucking good that both of them had their vision kinda blurry, completely lost in the pleasure. Addams was on her tiptoes, trying to get as much exposed as she could, teasing Enid as she glanced back at her over her shoulder. The smile on her face making her look like a fucking slut getting exactly what she wanted and inevitably moaning louder whenever Enid punished her with a harder thrust.

"You feel so good, Weds. This fucking little cunt its the best thing I've ever had." Wednesday scoffed, laughing with her eyes closed and her back arched. "What? That's what you wanna hear, right? You wanna hear you're so much better than your sister? That you're so good I wanna fuck you for the rest of my life"?

Wednesday glanced at her, Sinclair covered in sweat, looking down at where their bodies were pressed together inside and outside her every other second, her black eyes, however, were too glassy to deny she was about to burst into tears as she realized, whilst having Enid inside her, that this was now more than just a crush.

Fuck, she thought.

That was the only thing that came across her mind as her vision suddenly went black for a second, little flashes of light appearing behind her closed eyes. She rolled her eyes back, her breath hitching as she lost herself completely in the moment, her mouth falling open in a silent scream and her body shivered.

She stayed still, feeling Enid leaning over her and grabbing her body while she filled the condom. Wednesday's eyes watched her dark red-painted nails, now loose on the counter, and she thanked Hades she didn't have to clean herself from Enid. And if the blonde did notice something, she didn't care to show it.

Someone knocked at the door at the exact moment Enid was about to pull Wednesday back onto her feet to give her a kiss, and now the brunette could've fallen to her knees to thank whoever was at the door for interrupting them before they could get any more carried away. She still felt the lingering aftermath of what had just happened, her hair messy and her body warm as she hurriedly pulled her panties and sweatpants back into place. She felt dirty and couldn't bring herself to look at Enid as the blondie walked toward the door, trying to compose herself before anyone could notice anything.

Nana and Uncle Fester's voices were getting closer as she grabbed the knife again and started chopping the half onion that was still there, forcing herself to focus on the task as if she'd been doing nothing but cooking the entire time.

She ended up flying somewhere else. She left a plane ticket for Enid to go back "home," abandoned her car in her parents' driveway , and caught a last-minute flight straight to Las Vegas. She didn't give a single fuck about her classes, her attendance record, or whatever suffocating responsibilities were waiting for her back at campus. The thought kept hammering against the inside of her skull, unrelenting and cruel: she was hopelessly in love with Enid, and her life was destined to be a slow, agonizing downward spiral from here on out.

The second her boots hit the tarmac, she grabbed an Uber straight to Omnia. She hadn't even bother to pack a overnight bag. The desert cold here was far less aggressive than the bitter frost back home;all she had on her were the second-skin leather pants clinging to her legs, a tight mustard turtleneck hugging her frame and her leather wallet crammed into her back pocket. Morticia was the only soul who knew her location. Wednesday had slipped out into the freezing pre-dawn air right after Thanksgiving dinner. It was a miserable affair where she had been forced to sit in suffocating silence, watching Enid and Goody hold hands across the table while declaring how endlessly thankful they were for each other.

Even though Enid had bent her over the marble kitchen counter and fucked her just hours before. Even though Enid fucked her in her childhood bedroom the night before that, whispering filthy things against her lips.

She partied like she was trying to scrub her own skin raw, never bothering to check her phone once while it sat zipped away in her wallet. Shot after shot of expensive teqila burned its way down her throat. She met girls with bright lipstick and boys with dilated pupils, kissing strangers against dark velvet ropes until she ended up pinned against the cold tiles of a cramped bathroom stall, some random woman's fingers buried deep inside her while the heavy, suffocating bass of the electronic music thundered through the walls, vibrating straight into her ribs.

She also dragged that same woman back to a hotel that she couldn't even remember the name and booked a room at the front desk while the redhead buried her face in Wednesday's neck, biting softly, completely as wrecked and wasted as she was. When it came time to pay, Wednesday reached blindly into her pocket for her physical card, completely ignoring Apple Wallet option on her phone.

They fucked for what felt like an eternity, losing all track of time while draining every bottle of alcohol in the mini-fridge in the corner of the big suite. Neither of them knew if the sky outside was still pitch black or if the Vegas sun was already scorching the strip. Eventually, Wednesday blacked out, her memory fading completely as the hours swept past while she slept off the alcohol.

When she finally woke up, she was alone. For the first time in a long time, her head was pounding with a vicious hangover. She could barely force her eyes open to peek through the heavy curtains searching for a sliver of sunlight. She was completely naked, the AC blasting cold air into the room, probably because they'd had nonstop, sweaty sex before passing out. The girl was gone without leaving a phone number or a note, but she had left her bra behind. Simply because Wednesday's ass had been resting right on top of it.

She forced herself out of bed, stumbling to the sink to drink water directly from the tap while staring at the graveyard of empty bottles littering the floor. Whiskey. Champagne. Wine. Liqeur . Vodka. Teqila. Everyone knew W ednesday had a ridiculously high tolerance for alcohol, so for her to completely blackout... that pile of empty glass was more than justified.

After a long, scalding soak in the hot tub in their room ~~-a~~ luxurious setup she was certain had cost her a fortune ~~-sh~~e finally picked up her phone. She intended to text Divina and Yoko to ask for whatever college assignments she'd missed so she wouldn't be completely lost when she returned. But even though she didn't remember touching her phone at all, the name "Gia" was already typed out in her call log, presumably the redhead she'd enjoyed fucking so much.

Her gallery was a chaotic blur of memories: photos of the two of them kissing in the bathroom, a picture of her kissing six different people at the same time in the middle of the crowd, their tongues sticking out and multiple hands on her body; a shot of her backstage with the DJ playing at the club, five strangers taking shots with her, and a tight closeup of her mouth open, a tab of molly dissolving on her wet, outstretched tongue. A live photo immediately showed her leaning in toward "Gia," who had the drug on her tongue too, as they kissed between shared laughs.

She had definitely had some fun. A text popped up, and Morticia face appeared two seconds later on facetime.

"Hi, Mamá. I'm alive."

"Mon Dieu, Wednesday, you've been completely off the grid for three days, mi hija. Don't ever do this to me again."

Wednesday scoffed, letting out a dry, incredulous laugh at just how long she'd been out of touch. "Fuck, Mom, I'm sorry. I got really wasted. You know... I just needed to clear my head from all the fucking mess back home."

"They got back to the city today, honey. Have you talked to Enid at all? She seemed... I don't know, my raven, she seemed a little upset."

"Well, Mamá, she's in no position to be upset, as you said yourself. And you know Goody, this whole thing with her is supposed to be some eternal, heavenly romance. And you know I prefer hell over anything else."

Morticia chuckled softly, her voice filled with warmth and love. "Just don't forget to drink some water before you go back to drinking and drugs, okay?"

"What? Mom, I don't do drugs!"

"Oh, please, Wednesday! Do you think your father and I didn't have a blast with cocaine back in our day? The Addams have the stomach for it, so I'm not worried. You'll grow old someday. Just make sure you're careful, okay, chérie? I love you."

"Love you, Mamá. Thank you."

Wednesday stayed in Vegas for three more days, repeating the exact same cycle before finally renting a car and driving up to Utah to take in the views of the Grand Canyon. She used to say she was too small, and that standing before the grandest landscapes in the world put her in the exact insignificance she needed to feel. She'd been there twice before, but she never grew tired of the endless sea of deep orange stretching out before her eyes. Unlike her chaotic blur in Vegas, her mind grew quiet here. She booked a room at a small roadside motel for a few nights and spent hours pouring every raw, tangled emotion into her journal.

It was confusing and overwhelming. It brought a strange warmth to her chest, an almost innocent feeling, considering it was the very first time she'd ever felt this way about someone. But it was so fucking wrong. She grew furious with herself for being such a terrible person. Even if her sister had always been a bitch, Wednesday wasn't someone without morals. She had her principles. She wasn't a cheater. And even if Enid was the one actually stepping out on her relationship, Wednesday still felt like a traitor to her own blood.

It felt wrong, and she hated herself for it. She couldn't bear the thought of going back to her dorm, having to see Enid right across the hallway, or watching Goody visit on weekends. Or the idea of family holiday dinners, having to sit there and pretend to be happy while watching them together as a couple, knowing what she and Enid had done. It was unbearable. She began genuinely considering moving to the West Coast, transferring to another college. Maybe Stanford would be a fresh start. She could come visit her family on random dates when she wouldn't have to face her sister and her girlfriend. She could make it work, right? She could survive this.

She was lost in those exact thoughts when a sudden knock echoed through the quiet room.

She froze, a wave of anxiety washing over her. She'd heard countless horror stories about people getting invaded in remote roadside motels in the middle of nowhere—break-ins, robberies, people targeting isolated guests. But nobody forced the doorknob. They just knocked. Twice. Three slow, deliberate thuds against the wood.

Wednesday slid out of bed, tossing the heavy duvet aside and pulling on a pair of pants. Her journal remained open on the mattress, her pen resting right beside the ink-stained pages.

There was no peephole on the door. She either had to open it blind or speak through the thin wood, exposing the fact that she was a woman alone in the room. She chose to speak. It felt safer than opening the door to a potential knife or gun.

"Who is it?" she called out, her voice tight.

She held her breath, her pulse racing as she prepared for the worst. But nothing could have ever prepared her for the answer on the other side.

Enid's voice sounded heavy, almost breathless with relief as she finally replied through the door:

"It's me, Wednesday."
