Apology Dinner

by Princess_Cyra

Summary

After their worst arguments since the war, Catra realises she needs to be smart if she wants Adora to accept her apology. What better way to do that other than a picnic in the palace garden?

(OR)

The prequel to my angst fic, "Promise We'll Never Be Oceans Apart"

Notes

Written after a prompt swap with ManInTheBlueSuit and Kiki. Thanks for doing this with me guys!! <3

Adora was being petty. She could hear Catra calling out to her outside her office door, but she didn't respond. She should go out and see what she wants, but Adora didn't want to. She wanted to play hard to get, or at least keep up the silent treatment until Catra showed her kitty eyes.

“Fine. I'm coming in.” Catra said outside, before opening the door and walking in. Adora didn't turn to look at her, her gaze still focused on the papers in front of her. They were building schematics for a new project Glimmer had started, and since She-Ra's strength was going to waste since the end of the war, she'd been assigned to haul materials for the builders, and also help with construction. It was boring, extremely boring, but right now she'd rather read this over talking to her wife.

“Wow. Real mature.” The feline said sarcastically, finally catching onto Adora's silent treatment. “I came to ask you if you ate dinner.”

“I did. Probably an hour back.” Adora responded in a light tone normally reserved for professional settings.

Catra growled behind her, clearly noticing the change in tone. “Really? Because I asked Sparkles and she said you didn't show up.”

Snitch.

“Adora, don't you dare lie to me. You know you're not good at it. I’ve set up a picnic in the gardens for us, and you're going to come eat with me.” Catra instructed in her no nonsense voice, crossing her arms over her chest like she was daring Adora to refuse her.

Well Adora wanted to play with fire today.

She turned around to face her wife, giving her a burning look. “I'm not hungry darling. You go on.” The blonde cooed, giving her wife a sickly sweet smile.

“Don't you pull that shit with me Adora. I'm not letting you starve tonight because you're still mad after our argument.”

“Well can you blame me?! You walked out on me when I suggested we could sit down and talk about it, and then didn't bother to come and check on me for the next seven hours because you're ‘working’.” The blonde got up from her chair, towering over the feline, but even for a second, Catra didn't waver.

“I wanted to give you space! And I was mad too, I didn't want to say something I'd regret.” She explained, seeming to calm down slowly.

“So your plan was to walk out on me and not even look at me for the rest of the day?” Adora crossed her arms over her chest, giving the feline a ‘seriously?’ type of expression.

“Okay it was not a good plan, but I did set up dinner for us outside to apologise. We could go there now and talk this out. I know you're hungry.” Catra fiddled with her hands as she suggested this, ears drooping as she waited for Adora to respond.

Adora wanted to be a bitch and refuse, she wanted to tell Catra to leave her alone and then lock her out of her office, but that wasn't healthy. They needed to talk this out eventually, might as well get it out of the way now before it built up and led to something worse.

“Fine. I'll join you outside…” Adora whispered, moving over to clean up her documents and placing it aside, before grabbing her white and gold jacket and going out the door with Catra.

They made their way to the spacious gardens of Brightmoon Castle, the feline guiding Adora to a secluded grove in the back, covered by a curtain of flowers, offering them the illusion of privacy. Catra pushed the flowers to the side, gently taking Adora's hand and sitting down beside her, a large picnic basket in front of them.

Birds hopped from one tree to another, some of them tilting their little heads at the two lovers sitting awkwardly beside each other, pulling out food and eating in silence for a few minutes as they wondered how to navigate the elephant in the room.

Eventually, a little blue beauty landed beside Adora. The blonde smiled, picking up a piece of bread and breaking it into crumbs to feed the sweet bird. The little one chirped excitedly, picking at the crumbs with joy. When Adora turned to face her wife, the feline was watching with a smitten look on her face, her tail wagging behind her.

“Take a picture, it will last longer~” Adora teased, giving Catra a cocky grin.

The feline rolled her eyes, blushing at being caught. “Shut up…” She mumbled, wrapping her tail around herself.

Adora's smile fell, her eyes drifting to her lap, the reason for the dinner hitting her with full force. “We should talk about it…”

“I’m sorry. I shouldn't have yelled at you the way I did.” Catra said immediately, not giving Adora a second to breathe or process the words before they fell out of the feline's mouth. “I was just so worried, you were hurting yourself, I shouldn't have yelled at you. I should've been nicer.”

“Okay, is that it?”

“No… I want you to take better care of your health. Using She-ra as an excuse to not look after yourself isn't good, and I want you to look after yourself too. There's only one Adora, and I love her very much.”

“Anything else?”

“I love you. The war is over. You need to keep reminding yourself that. There's no reason to overwork yourself to such an extent, and now that I'm here, I'm going to make sure you don't do that. If that means laying down on you to keep you in bed, or scolding you till you listen, I'll do it.”

Adora was blushing, smiling sweetly at her wife.

Stars above, how did I get so lucky?

“That's quite the speech.” She said with a grin.

“I had a lot of time to think about it.” Catra responded, seeming to get some of her sass back.

“Good to know all the time you spent ignoring me was worth it~” Adora joked, picking up another sandwich from her basket in order to give herself some time to think about what to say. Catra, in tune with Adora's feelings as always, didn't push, picking up some food for herself, finally seeming lighter than when she'd come to pick Adora up.

“I'm working on treating myself better, you know that. I hadn't even realised what I was doing till you pointed it out. When I'm in the zone, I only focus on getting the job done and nothing else. I should've been looking after myself better…” Adora gently took Catra's hand, bringing it up to her lips for a quick kiss. “You were only trying to help, I shouldn't have yelled back at you.”

“I should've been nicer about it! It was gutting me the entire day that I could've been nicer to you…” Adora opened her mouth to argue but Catra simply shook her head. “No. No you don't get to lie and say it's fine! It isn't. The way I phrased it was awful. I should've been nicer about it, I should've sat down and talked to you about it but instead I was a massive bitch.”

Adora looked away, lightly rubbing her shoulder with her free arm. “...yeah uh, I didn't like how you phrased it.”

“Good. You can say that to me, you’re allowed to say that to me Adora. I won't get mad. You need to be honest about things like this, unfortunately I can't read your mind…” Catra smiled at her wife, squeezing her hand and leaning forward to kiss her cheek.

“I know, I know… I'm sorry.” The blonde turned and gave Catra a shy smile.

“I’m sorry too, I let it blow up into a massive argument when I could've sat down and spoken calmly with you… I'm just worried Adora, I mean we're trying for a baby and… I just want you to be okay.”

Oh yeah, the reason Adora was so cagey and emotional today. Right. She needed to tell Catra.

“Right. You're right. I'm sorry Catra. I promise I'll look after myself. I don't want to give you reasons to worry about me.”

“You're my wife Adora. I'm bound to worry about you, I just want you to consider yourself as a priority as well. Isn't that what Perfuma’s been teaching you in therapy?” Catra squeezed the blonde's hand, bringing it up to her lips for a gentle kiss.

“Yeah, it is. I swear I'm working on it.” Adora wrapped an arm around Catra's shoulders, bringing the feline closer to herself so that they could cuddle together. The brunette immediately began to purr, tucking her face in Adora's neck.

“I know dummy, that's why I'm here, so that you don't forget. You make the whole world your priority, so that means I can make you mine…” Catra whispered, before cupping Adora's cheeks and pulling her in for a kiss. They stayed that way for a long time, Catra curled up in Adora's lap, Adora's face tucked into her fluffy hair, the two of them feeding each other sandwiches and sweets that Catra packed.

Night began to cover Etheria in a comfortable blanket, singing a lullaby that soon acquired birds and crickets as backup vocalists. Adora and Catra had laid down on the grass, the brunette using Adora's chest as a pillow while pointing up at the stars, asking questions about the constellations they formed.

Adora had taken up the hobby of drawing star charts and tracking constellations, often rambling to her partner about it every night. It had become a nightly routine for them, and nowadays Catra couldn't fall asleep until Adora rambled to her for at least thirty minutes. The food was gone for a while, and the cold air was a good indication for them to go back to their room, but they didn't want to. They were content on their picnic blanket, wrapped up in each other's warmth.

Catra's hand went down to the blonde's stomach, causing Adora to startle a little, finally remembering the important news she had to tell her wife. The feline noticed her sudden reaction, her eyes squinting at Adora.

“Hey, what's up?” She asked gently, pushing herself up and giving her wife a patient look.

“I- uhm… I wanted to tell you something.” Adora stammered, blushing and tucking some hair behind her ear. She expected her wife to tease her, or say something flirty like she normally did. None of that came. Catra was staring at her quietly, giving Adora the space to come out with it on her own.

“Remember that potion Micah gave us a month back?” The blonde reminded, making the feline roll her eyes and smile.

“Yeah, it tasted like shit. Why?” Catra's tail swayed behind her, moonlight illuminating her beautiful face and shiny eyes. Adora couldn't get her brain to remember the concept of words as she admired her beautiful wife.

I hope our baby has her eyes.

“Etheria to Adora, you still with me babe?” The blonde shook her head, smiling over at her wife.

“Yeah I am… Well uh, that potion uhm… I think it- it worked?”

The whole ground fell silent. Catra's eyes grew wide, pupils blowing out while her tail began to sway fast enough to pour electricity for an entire town.

“It- it what?!”

“Y-Yeah… I was nauseous this past week? I went to the healers to get myself checked and- and they told me… they told me I'm pregnant.”

Catra was frozen, her breathing ragged as she stared at Adora like she was something precious. She pounced on the blonde, grabbing her face and kissing her with a passion so fierce Adora felt lightheaded. Adora wrapped her around Catra's waist so that they could be as close as possible, already able to taste salt as the two kissed and cried.

“Oh my god you're- you're pregnant. Oh goodness, we're going to be moms!” Catra exclaimed, pressing her forehead against Adora's while gasping and giggling.

“Yeah, yeah! I'm a few weeks along, my first proper check up is this weekend. We’re going to be moms!” Adora pulled her in for another kiss, pulling away after a few seconds to wipe off her wife's tears.

They rolled on the grass like that for so long, laughing and crying like they were newlyweds. Catra's hand refused to let go of Adora's, and she kept touching Adora's stomach, still unable to grasp the fact that their baby was growing inside her. It seemed so far away, and both of them felt impatient.

It was growing late, both of them were exhausted from the day's emotional discussions. Adora decided to call it a night when she caught her wife falling asleep on her chest. The two of them packed up the picnic basket and set off into the palace.

Neither of them slept, their excitement keeping them wide awake. Eventually, when she thought Adora was asleep and couldn't hear her, Catra rested her head on her stomach, singing a soft lullaby to their lovely kitten as though they could hear her.

“Oh my goodness!” Adora whispered, giving puppy eyes to her wife. The feline jumped, shooting out of the covers and glaring at Adora.

“If you tell anyone about this, I'll deny it.” She hissed, cheeks extremely red while her tail swished behind her.

“I know, you don't want everyone to know you're such a massive softie.” Adora teased, grabbing Catra's hand to pull her towards herself.

“Shut up, I'm not a softie…” Catra mumbled, hiding her face in Adora's shirt.

“I mean, I wasn't the one who got caught singing a lullaby to our baby while they're in my belly.” Adora teased, kissing Catra's ear just to watch it flick in her direction.

“You're never going to let this go are you?”

“It was so sweet, so no. I'm not.” The feline grumbled in response, the noise melting into a purr when Adora began to pet her ears.

Sleep came easy after that, Catra's purr acting as the lullaby Adora needed to finally rest, knowing in her heart that she'd be okay. It was her and Catra against the world, she looked out for Catra, and Catra looked out for her. Nothing really bad could happen as long as they had each other.
