you're an idiot (i love you)

by n7punk

Summary

Sometimes Adora says things and her friends react with disbelief. This has been happening for years, but after the war Catra starts pulling her aside to answer things for her. Well, that's what their friends think. More often Catra pulls her aside for a bit of alone time. At first Adora thinks she is just using it as an excuse, but eventually she realizes there is a direct correlation between what she says and Catra pulling her side. (Or, the moronsexual Catra fic)

Notes

This started as a moronsexual fic and then kind of became my treatise on ADHD Adora. She just sometimes ends up asking "obvious" questions because she didn't hear the answer or wasn't able to put things together.

See the end of the work for more notes

Adora raises her hand, which manages to cut through Catra's exasperation enough that she sends Adora a fond look from where she is hunched over the war table. Glimmer notices Catra no longer looking down at the projected map and follows her gaze to where Adora is standing quietly with her hand raised. Adora knows that she could just interject, but she is aware that this question has been "answered" and she doesn't want to interrupt with it. Glimmer rolls her eyes at her and inclines her head, a clear go ahead.

"Why can't we just go around it?" Adora asks. There is a beat of silence. Perfuma coughs into her hand, clearly trying to cover a laugh.

"Adora, that was the first half of the meeting," Frosta points out. She seems a bit incredulous. Mermista is stone-faced as always, and Glimmer and Bow are both giving each other the we're fond of our idiot look, but at least Scorpia seems to genuinely be considering her suggestion. Catra is looking at her with burning eyes, but Adora doesn't know why.

It isn't that she wasn't listening. She listened very hard. She just still doesn't get why it isn't an option. They need to provide aid to the smaller kingdoms before they leave on their first big mission into space, and she knows that there were a lot of reasons that going around the mountains would take awhile, but she was having trouble focusing between each sentence, even though she was listening in the moment. Now she is able to connect the arguments taking place again, everything makes going through seem too difficult.

The room moves on. At the end of the meeting, Catra walks over to Adora's chair, grabs her upper arm, and hauls her from the room.

"You were right, by the way. We decided to repair the road going around, we just need to send some supplies in the meantime to hold them over," Catra says, conversationally , as she drags Adora down the hall. Adora barely got the chance to wave goodbye to the room before Catra was pulling her aside. Adora wants to ask why everybody looked at her that way then, but they have reached Catra's office, and Catra barely waits to shove her inside before she is on her, pressing Adora up against the wall with a bruising kiss.

Any thoughts besides Catra go out the window.

"Why not?" Adora asks. Mermista looks completely blank. She sighs, turning to Adora's right and sending Catra a flat look.

"We'll be back in a minute," Catra says, already standing. Her look is impassive as she offers Adora a hand. Adora takes it, though she doesn't know why Catra leads them away from Perfuma's garden party to explain. She still follows her girlfriend dutifully until they have rounded a few corners. Catra draws to an abrupt halt, spinning around and wrapping her arms around Adora's shoulders with a broad grin spreading across her face.

"Catra?" Adora questions, because Catra's tail is lashing now and she knows what these signals mean. Catra's leer doesn't fade as she leans in close to whisper in Adora's ear.

"They're going just to fuck by the seaside, that's why they don't want us to come," Catra explains, her voice a low purr of amusement. Adora flushes, suddenly understanding why Mermista had looked to Sea Hawk for help only for Sea Hawk, who can also struggle with picking up signals, to say it would fun to go on a doubledatecation.

"Oh," she manages as Catra drops one arm to curl around her waist. The other remains wrapped around her shoulders. They are pressed together in the middle of a "hallway" made of hedges, the sun setting above them and the party just distant noise now.

“Speaking of having sex in public.” Catra trails off, dragging her nails down Adora’s side, just light enough to avoid snagging her garden dress.

Adora shivers. Yes, definitely.

Adora doesn’t even remember what she said this time, just that it led to Glimmer pinching the bridge of her nose while Catra stood from her chair immediately, grabbing Adora’s wrist and hauling her from Glimmer’s office. Bow waved goodbye to them while Glimmer let out an aggressive sigh.

Adora is pretty sure that Catra is supposed to be explaining why what she said was ridiculous to her, but instead they are in Catra’s office, Catra kneeled on the floor in front of the desk and eating her out with purpose. Adora is doing her best not to whine too much or ruin Catra’s hair by tugging on it, but when she does pull on it, Catra purrs. The vibrations go straight to her clit, only encouraging her to do it again. It doesn’t help that she is using up pretty much all of her limited willpower on keeping quiet herself.

Who is she kidding, Catra’s growing hair, already long enough to curl at the nape of her neck, is an absolute disaster already, as is Adora. She bites down on her bottom lip hard, her hips twitching beneath the rough swipe of Catra’s tongue that hurts so right. Catra has done nothing to stop her from tugging on her mane, so Adora assumes it is okay. She channels all her efforts into staying quiet as stars burst behind her eyes.

Catra rises from between her knees. Adora blinks at her, trying to force her eyes back into focus as she breathes heavily. Catra smirks and licks her lips, stepping forward to drape herself across Adora’s front. Adora quickly raises her arms to wrap them around Catra, happily hugging her close. Glimmer is still waiting for them and Catra probably should explain things to her before they go back so Glimmer doesn't question what they were doing, but Adora is still catching her breath, so for the moment she happily snuggles into Catra.

It took Adora a long time to figure out that when Catra would pull her aside to explain or repeat something, they were just as likely to make out as talk. Adora thinks her pattern recognition is decent, but she just wouldn't have expected there to be a connection there. It took them almost getting caught – well, Glimmer definitely knows what they were doing even if she didn't quite catch them in the act – for Adora to realize the connection.

In her defense, it's a ridiculous connection. It made more sense for Catra to just be turned on at random times than for Adora being oblivious to apparently trigger it for her. After enough times, however, Adora can't deny that her asking seemingly dumb questions gets Catra going. It kind of defies logic – like some of Adora's questions, apparently. Adora maintains that they make sense in her head, she just zones out a little sometimes and she isn't the genius that some of her friends are, so it can be hard to keep up.

"Why?" Adora asks one time, the connection made in her head but still dumbfounded by why it would be true. Catra pauses, pulling back from where she is rubbing a scent mark along the side of her neck. She raises a brow at Adora, clearly waiting for some further elaboration, but Adora doesn't know what she would be talking about other than this.

"Why do we do this when I say something dumb?" she elaborates anyway, gesturing between them before putting her hand on Catra's shoulder and squeezing it to keep Catra from pulling too far back. She wants to know, but that doesn't mean she wants to stop. She does feel kind of weird about it, but she always loves when Catra places scent marks on her regardless of reason. Catra's expression softens, the corner of her eyes turning up as she shakes her head and presses closer to wrap her arms around Adora's waist.

"You weren't dumb. And it's endearing," Catra informs her, leaning up on her toes to kiss Adora's cheek. Adora pauses, considering that. Her friends certainly think she can be a bit dense, given how she can sometimes be slow on the uptake, but she has gotten better as time has gone on. She had a lot more trouble when she first came to Bright Moon and didn't know a lot about life there.

"Why?" Adora asks again. Catra seems amused, chuckling a little as she presses a few more kisses along Adora's jaw.

"I don't know, because it's so you? And I know what you mean. You're not being dumb. Why worry about what they think when I could be eating you out?" Catra asks her. Adora instantly flushes. A slow, satisfied smirk spreads across Catra's face. "See, dumb would be continuing the conversation instead of letting me take care of you," Catra says, conversationally, as she drops down. Adora obediently presses her lips shut. She isn't dumb.

End Notes

This fic is actually super old and has been sitting in my WPs without editing since Nov 2020, so I decided to finally finish and post it. Not what I usually write these days, but I figured it was either post it or delete it at this point lol
