Glimmer threw her bag down next to the end of the sofa, where Catra already sprawled lazily, legs dangling over the other arm of the sofa, torso draped over Adora's legs, where the blonde idly scratched the catgirl's belly. Catra's head tucked up to let Glimmer sit, then leaned back to lie on Glimmer's thigh.

Was this normal, Glimmer wondered idly? If housing costs weren't what they were, she mused, she would never have moved in with Adora (dated most of freshman year) or Catra (passionate hookup during a terrible summer internship) let alone Catra and Adora (high school sweethearts that split up after getting into different colleges). So, she repeated to herself, was it normal to live with - to platonically cuddle with - two people you used to sleep with?

"...yes?" Adora replied, just as Catra snorted "Platonically?"

Once Glimmer's face had finished spontaneously combusting from the realization that she'd spoken her thoughts aloud, she paused, and gaped, and started again. "Okay, I think we have a lot that we need to unpack."

"Oh, geez. I need to apologize to Perfuma. And Huntara. And probably Scorpia." Adora sighed, and groaned, and sagged back against the back of the couch.

"I was wondering about you and Scorpia," Catra remarked. "I was sort of hoping, for a while there. She deserves someone better than - well, I was in a pretty bad place, emotionally. And I was hoping she wasn't just pining at you with no hope of anything more serious."

"She seems to have landed on her feet," Glimmer noted. "Perfuma's been really good for her." Her brow furrowed. "Is this what happens in queer lady friend groups? We just keep hooking up with each others' exgirlfriends?"

"Well, we haven't done anything together. Well," Catra amended, "not officially anyway. Apparently." Somehow, she managed to swoon backwards even harder onto their laps. "And here I thought that drunken New Year's Eve kiss we shared at Frosta's party meant something to the two of you."

"Wait," Adora's hand suddenly stopped its mindless scritching. "Did it mean something to you?"

Catra crushed her palm into the brow above her yellow eye. "Babe, I'm a cat. Do you think I let just anyone touch my belly?"

"I, um. I guess I never really thought about it. Because you always let me–oh." Adora blushed and slumped against Glimmer's shoulder. Which, Glimmer noted, felt awkwardly nice.

"Wait, wait, wait," Glimmer formed her hands into a "T." "So, just to be clear, for the past three months, I've been crushed under sexual tension, Catra's been assuming we've been taking it slow, and Adora–" She repeated the word in an apoplectic stammer. "Adora's just been vibing?" She threw her hands up in the air with a disgusted sob.

"Huh, 'crushed under sexual tension'?" Adora grinned over at her. "How embarrassing for you."

"I mean, if you aren't going to kiss her, I will," Catra added, then blinked as nobody moved. "I mean, we are doing this, right?" Just a skin of vulnerability hung over the last word.

"Yeah," Glimmer decided as Adora nodded, "I think we are."

"Hey, Bow, go ahead and get set up - I'll gets to sit on the loveseat - and I'll grab chairs for everyone else."

Bow, bag of gear still in hand, squinted and paused. "But that's a couch - it has three cushions."

"Yeah," Glimmer replied, favoring Adora and Catra with a fond gaze. "Yeah, it does."

Bow nearly dropped his things in his excitement. "The three of you finally got together? I'm so excited!"

"Thanks, Bow, we're pretty—" Glimmer's eyes narrowed suspiciously. "Hang on, what do you mean finally?
