Summary

This is not a cannon part of the Blond Spider Series, which I do still plan to finish.

Follow Adora's mental turmoil as she breaks down from being unable to follow her own rules.

Notes

Again, this is not a cannon installment in the Blond Spider Series.

I'm alive!
Surprisingly...
Anyway! This is a pretty accurate read into what I used to (and sometimes still) think whenever I'm in Adora's situation, caught between two parties and unable to get out easily.

See the end of the work for more notes

"Adora, you have to pick, me or Weaver?" Glimmer looked at her with such an intense gaze, it's not clear if she's trying to communicate the correct answer, but either way Adora feels lost.

"Can't I just stay here and visit you on the weekends and holidays?" She asked carefully, looking at her long time guardian.

She tutted, Adora always hated it when she did that, it means she did something wrong, she always does that when something displeases her. Why is it directed at her?
You really have to ask?
No.

"I know living home would be a little more travel time, but exercise is important, and the house is so quiet without you." Somewhere that didn't click, the house is never quiet when Weaver is home, Adora is always trying her best not to make any noise.

"Is there really no compromise?" Please just let her be perfect, don't ask this of her, don't involve her please.
You're failing, you're breaking your promise.

"Adora, you are just so perfect! You will always be perfect won't you?"
Adora looked up from the strawberry treat she'd been given for her A+.
"Sure thing mom!"
Her mom smiled at her.
"Great! Then let's go show this to your mom!"
They walked off towards the kitchen together, the smell of chicken engulfing them.

"Adora, are you really considering leaving me alone like this?" Her aunt asked, surprised and disappointed.
"Well no-"
"Adora I gave you the full college package, surely you won't give up a gift I spent a lot of time arranging?" Her eyes darted from Glimmer to Weaver, making her wish she could disappear more and more.

"I just.."
You know what you've done wrong, you should have taken my offer.
Maybe..

The only way to be perfect is by pleasing all parties, but with multiple parties comes the problem of them having different opinions and beliefs, otherwise they'd be the same party would they not?
Subconsciously, Adora nods, confusing both Glimmer and Weaver.

So the only way to agree with two parties without them hating your spineless decisions, is by not having them ask you in the first place.

By not being seen, by not being found important, not being noticed, they won't ask, they won't bother, you can't do something wrong when you were not there to do so, right?

But you failed that, you associated yourself with Glimmer, so greedy, far too greedy for someone supposedly perfect, wouldn't you agree?

Once again, she nods, the other two aren't sure what's happening, not noticing that her eyes are unfocused.

So if there's no photographic proof of you being places, then you might as well not have been there at all, and then no one can yell at you.
When you need to be at places, just go there, do the bare minimum, ask to take the picture rather then be in it, leave as soon as you can to avoid making a scene, be the second to leave, never the first.

And once you've cut out everyone in your life, just leave.
Leave and don't come back.
Shut the door and go.

No one wants you there
They won't remember you
Just like you wanted
They will move on
There's nothing to move on from
It'll be perfect
You'll be perfect
Cause you won't be remembered
Cause you did no wrong
People only remember those who did wrong
But you did no wrong
You did nothing at all
Because you're perfect

And perfection does no wrong
Perfection does nothing
Perfection is not remembered
Perfection

We're not obsessed with perfection
We ARE perfection
We're perfect
No one else seems to understand
They're all so imperfect
They're all so annoying
They're all so impulsive

We aren't perfect

These two are two different parties, and they're asking us to pick a side
We aren't supposed to side
We're supposed to float above that
Cause we're perfect
But we aren't perfect
We need to be perfect
They don't understand

We Need to be perfect

End Notes

If you identify with her and understand what she means, please do know that this line of thinking is very much flawed, it is by no way healthy and very much harmful.
I planned to end my imperfect self by leaving, permanently. My mom being sad wasn't enough, I wanted out, I wanted it all to end.
By making a story with plot lines upon plot lines all flowing through each other flawlessly, I can't leave without taking that with me, unless I immortalize it by showing the world.
Until I can succesfully launch my story, I will stay, and I hope to get different reasons to stay in between now and then.
