Summary

Everything happens five years after the end of the series, when different forces are moving towards Etheria. A grim sorceress with a scarred face, along with her ward Cala Grayskull, winged Pirate Captain Moonshadow, a feline girl named Eti and Lord Admiral Antares with his Armada.

Prolog: Awakening into the Nightmare

Chapter Notes

> This is the first chapter of my fan fic. I decided that Nyarlathotep should refer to itself in the plural. Please leave your comments and opinions.

She woke up.

She started coughing. There was an oily liquid in her lungs. A foul taste filled her mouth, like a mixture of blood, pus and sweat. She squatted on her lap and vomited bile. Then she looked around

She regretted it immediately.

All around was an undulating plain, shrouded in a foul-smelling yellow mist. The ground was like the rubbery mantle of some mollusk, covered with numerous pools of black liquid she had just gulped out. There weren't plants, just clumps of something, they looked like ulcers. The air was musty, smelled of sweetly rotting flesh. Four-legged skinny creatures scrambled along the surface of this place, driving long probes into the "ground", like mosquitoes into a human body.

"Orocorans are parasites that feed on the sap of this planet ... A bit like you our dear Shadow Weaver ... though they are never so greedy."

She turned to see a tall man dressed in a tight-fitting black outfit enveleped by black smoke. He had a golden mark on his chest, resembling an inverted aankh. He had a handsome, thin face. His eyes shone with a golden glow and his head was burning. He bowed mockingly.

" This face is Carsai The King, Keeper of the Divine Planet Aucturn, whose infinite beauty you can watch."

She looked at the place, that surrounded her. The same space she had seen before stretched out everywhere. The only diversion were the hills stretching in the distance, disturbingly resembling vertebrae protruding from a skeleton half buried in the ground.

" You have to get used to being able to enjoy its charm, but we didn't invite you here to admire the views"

She pursed her lips. For most of her life, she wore a veil and then a mask. Now, with her face exposed, she felt uncomfortable.

"I should be dead…" - She said hoarsely.

"You were dead, our dear Shadow Weaver. You were as dead as mortal can be, but that does not absolve you from paying your debt." - said Carsai and they came up to the woman.

She swallowed loudly. She felt sick from the bittersweet aftertaste. She knew in her heart that power always had a price, but she had never imagined she would pay it so literally.

"But sacrifice ..." she said in defensive tone.

"Your sacrifice has been recognized, and that's why we talk so politely. Otherwise… This discussion would be absolutely one-sided." his eyes lit up with a glow so bright that he was blinding - And I remind you that you tried to kill us ... Or at least this face.

"It was not my intention ..."

They ordered with a gesture that she should be silent.

"By accident, then, you allowed, or even helped, to activate the weapon of the First Ones, which was aimed at their enemies, including that face ... Perhaps it was an accident, or perhaps you wanted to free yourself from our contract. " said Carsai.

" I haven't made a deal with you, I've never heard of you. " she said resigned. She did not know who this creature was. It didn't matter, though. She was so incredibly tired, she doubted anything could agitate her.

" You know us. Carsai The King is one of thousands of masks that share one name ... Nyarlathotep. " They smiled and Shado Weaver shuddered. She now fully understood what a terrible situation she was in.

" But, we are not mortals. We are stranger to such feelings as pride, lust for power, envy. We also do not hold a grudge, especially since you got rid of a few problems that have plagued the galaxy from many millennia, and for that we are grateful. However… It doesn't mean we'll forgive you your debt. You see, you may prove to be of use to us. After all, the universe abhors a vacuum ... " they laughed - Sorry for the bad joke, we have more important things to discuss. - they said and approached the sorceress. They knelt down.

" You should be pleased that your ward survived, safe and sound. Or maybe you will be sad about this? You've never been a too loving mother… " They smiled and their eyes glittered.

" I just wanted ... That she would complete her destiny, that she could be what she should become and ... I think I did my job well ... No matter what I did. I made her who she is. I can answer for that. I know I hurt her ... both of them and so many others. So if you're going to punish me for something, punish me for it. " she said and looked fiercely into the eyes of the Outer God.

" You have a lot of old strength left in you. That's good. We do not judge you because your morality is alien to us. We are as old as time itself, and we don't see the world in your way. The suffering you caused ... The pain you inflicted... is meaningless in the face of the infinite vastness of the indifferent universe ... " they said, and in his eyes she saw the light of stars so old that they were dead when Etheria arose " Likewise your sacrifice, but not yours debt. However, we are infinitely gracious, and instead of suffering unimaginable, we will give you the opportunity to return."

She looked up at the creature that barely look like a human. She knew suffering, it had filled every moment of her existence for so long. She-Ra treatment, or honestly saying Adora, helped a bit, but it was only a slight relief. But now it was different. She could breathe freely. Despite the scars, hers face no longer burned with the cold flame. She was able to move like a young woman, more agile before Micah failed her. But such a gift always came at a price. And she was afraid she knew what she was like

"If you want me to betray ... that I deny the choice of which ..." he will interrupt her, raising his hand.

" Betrayal ... It's such an ambiguous word. Can be betrayer someone who has served only himself for almost all his life? You've always wanted power, but when you knew you weren't strong enough to get it, you were using others. They were extensions of you, your ... Shadows that you could send to obey your will ... Only one time, when you did not act selfishly and now you are at our mercy ... But we only want the universe to become a safe place for mortals again, we love so much in all our masks. " Carsai smiled, and that smile could burn souls - We want to make sure that in the future no one wants to release such power ..."

She shook her head vigorously.

" Nobody will use the Hearth again, you said yourself that it was destroyed ... The First ones are dead, so no one can rebulid it anymore!"

Carsai looked at her silently. She felt that she wasn't noticed something, Something extremely important.

"That is not dead which can eternal lie and with strange aeons even death may die. You know that at least one of them is alive, but it can't be the only one ... They are hiding somewhere far away, in a place unknown even to us. So it is imperative that this place be found. " they said and stared into the distance expectantly. Shadow Weaver felt relieved. She won't have to go back to it all. It always seemed to her that everything she did was for a greater purpose. But it always came at a high price, and she wasn't sure she wished others would have to pay it again.

" However, in order to find the Firsts ones, you must return to Etheria. Not alone, of course. Some preparations were made long time ago with such a moment in mind. You have to understand something. We are an emissary of the Outer Gods. Their Soul. And we are always happy to help each other... There is The Key and The Gate. The Key and the Gate! Do you understand? We have prepared a special gift for the inhabitants of Etheria, but you must hurry, my dear, because those who want to regain their inheritance have already began to plot ... We are not alone in the darkness between the stars. They have many plans ... Many servants ... And some of them are Everhungry. But our gift should… make us able to take the lead. It is a very beautiful gift. You'll love it."

First she smelled the smel…. The smell was strange, a bit repulsive and unnatural, like it should'nt never be on earth. Then she felt a Presence… An alien presence even for this place… Then she heard the words.

" Hey Mother… We have many wonderful adventures ahead." [/i]

A few years later. Fringe of the Pact Worlds.

The research vessel of the Kemanis University – Wisdom of Triune had travelingtraveled the vast expanses of the fringes of the system collecting samples for research. Businessmen from Absalon, especially from Abadar Corp, often commissioned remote areas to be explored so that raw materials could be harvested here. Of course, the main task was to study the history of the development of the system and such things, but Captain Ricat, Ysoki of Absalon Station, was well aware that finding economically valuable places was an important source of income for the University. The work was boring and tiring, but not too difficult and also well paid. So he didn't have much to complain about, even in the case of a pirate attack, the University would buy him out.

But now something has interrupted this boring journey across the endless void. Signal detected. Weak, barely detectable at this distance, would most certainly be overlooked by someone less meticulous or… less bored. A small object in the middle of the void could drift here alone for countless eons, but it was found by a Ricat who would not have missed such an opportunity. If only because of Ysoki's healthy curiosity. He ordered the ship to be directed at the object, and when they were within range, he launched a scan. It turned out to be a rescue capsule of unknown origin. More importantly, there was life in the capsule. Well, even if he wanted to, he couldn't back down. By law, he now had to take the survivor aboard, help him, and drive him to the nearest place where he could find a safe haven, which Ricat didn't mind much, because the capsule itself seemed valuable enough to go to the trouble of himself. So he ordered the grippers to be fired and the object pulled in. Then he and Ikt, Shiren technician, went to the cargohold. There they looked at the capsule. It was ancient, with an indeterminate origin. There was a symbol of a white rose on the lid ...

Part one: Once upon a time in Saltmarsh - Awakening into the Life

She woke up. In many ways. She could smell her own unwashed body, dirty hair, sweaty sheets, and Toshi's fur. The electric blue foxiy was asleep against her back, snoring loudly, but as soon as she got up it flew up and started rubbing against her back. An electric shiver ran through her entire body.
"The rainy days are gone foxi ... It will be alright ... " she said, although she knew that rainy days would come back. They always came back.
How much time has passed She wasn't sure. It had started to improve before the last dinner, and now she had slept all „night". It was hard to keep track of time on the ship. She counted the meals and medications Bina and Itel brought her, but she always lost track. She didn't even remember what she had been fed lately, but she didn't eat much because she fel hungry. Very hungry. But first she had to take care of more important matters. She examined the old gun, made sure it was clean. Then she did the same with the sniper rifle. She cleaned the scope and checked that the laser sight was charged. Then she looked at her right shoulder. It looked like it was made of brass, but it wasn't smooth, but was porous. It was covered with numerous, barely visible runes. No one could read them, though Dr. Sidonius had made some hypotheses, but she preferred Old Leech not to look at her too much, because she always wanted to stab him in a dead brain. What is certain is that it is not an ordinary prosthesis, but an ancient Archeotech. She took the energy battery from the cabinet and held it in an artificial hand. She felt a tingle to the elbow where it becoming into living flesh. The runes, at least the ones on the palm of her hand, glowed blue-golden. No one else saw them, but she liked to watch them. The limb was lighter now, and it was better able to conduct sensation. She fed Toshi some energy, but not too much as he was getting hyperactive. She looked around her cabin. It was cramped, with only a bed, a cupboard and a sink, and a cramped toilet. Exactly. She went to take care of herself, then washed herself in a bowl of water. The water regime in space was a serious matter which she did not want to neglect. Then she got dressed and reluctantly made the bed. She didn't like cleaning, but she hadn't been helping the rest of the crew for the past few days, so that's what she should be doing without whining. Then she went to the mirror. The room was dim, but it didn't bother her, she could see in almost total darkness. She stood in front of the sheet metal mirror. She combed her straight, greasy dark red hair. Her head was shaved on the left side, so that the rest of her hair fell to the right. Her skin was caramel and her mouth was thin. The eyes were yellow, catlike, but with many blue spots that grew when she felt ... when she felt. And she usually felt when she wanted to hurt someone, and she was pretty good at i. My left hand was stripped of her fingernails by surgery a long time ago… as punishment. So she tied the retractable blade to her wrist. Finally, she buckled on a belt with grenades. She felt confident. She saw the death zone forming around her. Anyone in it will suffer. Nobody can touch her. Pleasant warmth spread over her body. She purred

Breakfast on the edge of the abyss.

Bina oversaw Lilka, Alatar and Itel preparing breakfast. Admittedly, it was hardly to name a preparation, since it was all about reheating packages of soy noodles with sauce, yeast paste, and mushroom stew, but having breakfast together was a ritual they rarely abandoned. Ireanis sat at the table, looking around with a slightly thoughtful smile. The silver-haired, dark-skinned elf in the somewhat old-fashioned sorceress' outfit was their mage, and a very powerful mage at that… as long as she was sober. Keeping her in this state required a lot of attention and patience, which they often could not afford ... She was someone unique, a sorceress from ancient Golarion, who ... well, cast a spell once while drunk. She studied somewhere in a place called Mwangi and acquired great knowledge there, but soon something terrible happened and ... she started drinking. She never talked about it, although she was eager to talk about her adventures, and her charges liked to listen to these stories, even if they were half made up. Besides, she was their only quasi teacher they had, and even despite her peculiarity and periodic drinking, she was able to conjure up something. Sometimes…
The boom camera zoomed in and came the metallic voice of the communicator.

" Hello and wish bon apetit to you!" said Ilemshaw

"And we also wish you to bon apetit fishy!" said Lilka, who was spreading a flat bread with yeast paste.

Ilemshaw ... Ancient being of the Algholite race that they rescued from Kesler ... Or who helped save them. Now he stayed in a large aquarium in a special room and was their science officer. There were several cameras and multiple booms all over the ship, so he could do his job without leaving the tank, and they had a few small drones that he could control. The problem was that, according to the ancient legends, Algholitu were the dark beings behind many terrible events… But to them Ilemshaw was kind…. And she could only hope he wouldn't turn against them ...

They heard footsteps and Eti entered in her everyday clothes, that is, as if she was going to war. She stood in the doorway, yawned, and, walking slowly, sat down in the chair without looking at anyone. Bina felt the pressure slowly escape from all of them. This time Eti had "rainy days" for quite a long time, as they euphemistically described it, so everyone was already waiting for her to come back… Itel gave a bowl of mushroom stew. Eti sniffed the dish and made a face of disgust.

"There is no meat? Where is the meat?" she asked with a gloomy voice looking at everyone sullenly

"Nice to see you too, Eti. The meat came out a week ago." Bina said sarcastically, but everyone knew that when she complained and whined, she was fine.

"Why don't we eat Alatar? His would last for a few weeks… Even including down the iron-things!" Eti said and pointed the finger of her gloved hand at Alatar.

Well, admittedly, as a dragonkin he was the largest of all the young crew members and perhaps the largest of all. Especially since he was slightly overweight. Though compared to the true dragon he was a tiny. He looked like a humanoid dragon with a silvery scale. He also had quite a few implants, however, including a wrist interface and a tail welder. His grandmother was a wealthy entrepreneur on the absalon and helped them get some of the funds for this trip, but also financed his education as a Technomancer.

"Very funny. Why shouldn't we eat you?" The technomancer asked, but the girl answer him in her calm, slightly dull voice
"I am a predator, and predators are usually not eaten." she turned her head to the side, without blinking, watching at dragonkin.
"I am a dragon, and dragons are at the top of the food chain!" said indignant Alatar.
Eti tilted her head back.
"Dragons maybe. I haven't tried fight with any of them yet, but you are a dragon whelp, my dear, and quite fat" she said in the same gentle tone.
"Eti won!" cried Lilka joyfully, a short red-haired girl with face and shoulders covered with Orc tattoos, or at least pictures that should look like them… it was quite… a touchy issue. She was a year or two younger than the others, about seventeen. She was muscular and wore a strange dress that, in her opinion, was supposed to bean traditional ork garment. She attached a multitude of small items to it, which were supposed to be orcish amulets. Some of them were maybe SOME amulets, some of them were caps ...

Despite her grumbling, Eti devoured three bowls, nibbling them with instant bread. Then Itel discreetly handed her the pills, which she ate without murmuring. Itel was a green haired elf with dark blue eyes and light brown skin. Her hair was pixie cut, her face was always focused. She looked at others distrustfully, unless someone seemed to be of use to her "grand plans" whatever they might be. Then she exploded with a slightly disturbing enthusiasm. She was wearing a red sleeveless sweatshirt. Her arms were tattooed with burning roses. There were Solarian symbols on her neck and face. She had undergone training two years ago and was now able to summon a silvery lunar blade. Out of the whole group, she was the most fierce and pushed the rest to all those crazy ideas that this trip was the culmination of.
"Damed Sidonius, I should have put a stake on him at the first opportunity" After breakfast, they washed the dishes and prepared to inspect the ship's systems. They had already left the Drift and would soon be landing on Saltmarsh, their final stop on the way into the unknown ... into the abyss. However, Itel was the first to gather peers for a different, more gloomy ritual. Bina didn't like him, but she understood that he was important to them… but… Itel, Alatar Lilka and Eti stood at the table and put their hands on it.

"Teeth for insult." Alatar said seriously.

"Language for a lie!" Lilka added

"Hand for punch!" said Eti.

"Eyes for an eye!" Itel shouted.

"Heart for betrayal." they called simultaneously and Itel cut over the palms of the others

They're really loved when they're not that scary. Thought bina After the system review, her charges went to training. The ship may have flown on autopilot for a while, so she had a moment to peer into a one place. She went to the hold and looked for a hidden biometric reader hidden in the alcove and touched it. A hidden hold opened. She went in there and looked around. Its contents did not change, Bina always preferred to check it regularly ... There was a cut-fridge with frozen tiger snail eggs and comet wasps, both species were extremely nasty predators guaranteeing very painful death. In the corner stayed huge machine with the jaws of a sea predator and claws like machetes, a Pk 5 assault robot that even the drow found too macabre. Halftons of explosives lay in the fireproof containers. With their help, they could destroy the city district. Thirty charges of gas that decompose the tissue and the second as many charges of paralyzing gas were placed in a specially secured container. Six rock incinerators stood against the wall. Officially, it was only a mining tool that could easily burn through several dozen meters of rock. More dangerous was the fact that the radiation wave was killing everything within a kilometer. They were best known for the fact that the glow of the blast could blind everyone within a few kilometers. Only Two… or three people in the galaxy were able to activate them, due to the biometric lock, and one of them was Eti. And finally at the very end was their greatest treasure. One hundred kilotone atomic warhead. And she didn't count the equipment they had legally. She hid her face in her hands and laughed absolutely joylessly ...

"I let these kids carry Weapons of Mass Destruction with them ... I'm the worst mother in the galaxy."

Merciless

Tonado walked through the dark corridors of the Merciless, passing his subordinate crew members throwing them grimm looks. He was, after all, a recently appointed first mate on a pirate ship, and that required the ability to earn respect. As a Skittermander, it caused him many more problems. But he did his best for his great and wonderful captain! There was no other such a wonderful and fearless raider in the entire galaxy, and him, an ordinary pirate, was awarded such a responsible position. She personally promoted him after Reh-Zar was sent to do important task. It mean, he was now the captain's right-hand man. Figuratively. Or maybe not? The captain didn't have a right hand, but a prosthesis that always failed, so maybe he really was her right hand? As he thought about it, he puffed out his chest proudly, adjusted all six sabres, and headed for the sternum

There was they second mate Gydva, the one-eyed Veska big even for her race, the halfdrow boatswain Kaert, and artillerymen Chart who were android. Gydva didn't like Tonada because he had gotten the position she wanted. However, the Skittermander will not allow herself to be intimidated, even if he wasn't able to reach her knees, and she could throw him across the room. Kaert was formidable and militant, but Tonado even liked him, and Chart loved using their plasma artillery the most in the world. There was also Tirin, their navigator, but she rarely left the wheelhouse, and engineer Gozamund did a sub-drift inspection of their ship. In the captain's chair sat she, their captain. Moonshadow.

A tall woman dressed in a loose purple cloak was leaning over the monitor and studying the information displayed there. Half-short-cropped pinkish-purple hair protruded from the hood. On her face, beneath her purple eyes, she wore a pale mask of blue glass diamond. Many said it had terrible scars there, but the crew of merciless knew the truth was different. The right arm was replaced with a metal prosthesis, but it was not fully functional, so she was mainly using her left hand, which could also summon a solarian flare. She was a formidable fighter, and of course his beloved mistress the captain.

"Hope all with ship is well Tonado?" She asked gently turning to the skitermander. She had a resonant voice only slightly muffled by the mask.

"Yes, Captain!" He exclaimed, saluting with all six hands. From the look in her eyes, he could tell she was smiling at him.

"Kaert, some of the crew may land, but be careful. This may be a dirt rock, but as far as I know it's full of dangerous bastards"

" Well, we'll have to buy as many strong beverages as possible and pay out future shares if the place we're traveling to is as terrible as they say " he said, eyeing the planet's image on the screen suspiciously. The brown-green globe was called Saltmarsh, and it was almost uninhabited, except for the city bearing the same name as this world and the small groups of nomads roaming the salt deserts and swamps.

" It is doubtful that the rumors at least reflect his nature in part." she said after a moment's thought, gently reaching to her back. " We're going to need all the crew members, so be careful. We have enough… resources to pay them…" She rubbed her temple irritably. "Remember the prize and the treasures that await us there…" Captain Moonshadow said. Kaert smiled greedily, but Gydwa wasn't so sure. He looked at her superiorly. He fought for the glory of serving under the greatest captain in the galaxy. Tirin and Gozamund served for the cause of the fight against Azlanti, and they would agree to any plan that served that goal

The captain got up and looked at Gydwa. Veska was larger in every way than Moonshadow, but under her gaze she drew back a little. She spoke slowly and clearly.

"Remember that I am not an ordinary robber. I fight and kill in the name of higher goals. Therefore, do not be offended like the kid whose sweets were taken." she said and summoned a flare which she began slowly to Gydwa's face, who looked down scared.

"But do not worry. There we find riches beyond imagination." She added, extinguishing the flare violently so that Veska shuddered. The captain turned to Tonado.

"You will come with me. We have a few things to do. If the rumors I heard are true, we'll find something very interesting there."

Tonado felt his great Skittermander heart skip a beat. He will be on a wonderful, extraordinary and great expedition with his captain and they will have an adventure together ...

Captain Moonshadow was tired of talking to her crew, and there will be a lot of work to do in the next few days, especially if what she heard about certain people on Saltmarsh is true ... And then they'll fly into the unknown. She was afraid of that moment. She, the one for whose head the Aeon Throne had awarded a prize worth a little moon, the one who led her subordinates to the more numerous troops of the Aeon Guard, who started the rebellion on Jadehell, felt the greatest fear she remembered. But she had to travel to this ravaged area of the galaxy to get answers ... Answers to questions that had haunted her since she woke up in Absalon Station ...

She went to her cabin. The room was quite large and spacious, with almost no furniture except a sleeping mat and a few pillows. The walls were pale purple, lit by the soft glow of the elven lamps from Castroval, imitating the light of the stars… The stars… She liked their glow so much. They seemed to make an unspoken promise ... Their light brought hope that something better might be waiting for us somewhere, that it is always like the future, even if not perfect. She sealed the room and increased the pressure, then sat down on one of the cushions. She took off her mask and took a deep breath. She smiled. Contrary to what was commonly rumored among pirates and travelers, her face was not disfigured. It was not covered with a web of grotesque scars. The mask helped her breathe. A ten-month stay at Jadehelll destroyed her lungs. Toxic secretions of the local flora and spores of poisonous fungi claimed the lives of thousands of prisoners. Nature on Jadehell didn't want to kill you. She did it casually, slowly and relentlessly. She was not in danger of suffocation even if she removed it. But then her breathing became short and she got tired very quickly. She unhooked the cybernetic prosthetic hand. Her body did not tolerate implants well, and she felt the constant pain of the phantom limb when she had an artificial arm attached. She lost her arm when she touched the starstone. It happened a few years ago, and it was her oldest memory. Everything was covered with white before ... The Doctor helped her bring out three memories. She spread her translucent wings with great difficulty. They suffered a lot of damage during questioning and staying in a penal colony. Now she protected them under her cloak, for they were only good for gliding anyway. She winced in pain and said.

"The sword I need to get hold of. The hand of the one who abandoned me and the head of the invader ..."

Whispering in the dark.

Arkan-tar stood in front of the mirror smiling with satisfaction. Its surface was smooth, with no reflection. Hungry Moon Mirror, as it was called. An ancient artifact from centuries ago, built by an ancient, now extinct race. So the standard in his work. He practiced applied archeology, called by outsiders the robbing of graves and the theft of relics . He touched the mirror and whispered softly in the aklo.

"Through nothingness together"

The mirror flashed and he saw the conference room of the battleship Glory of the Fallen, the flagship of the Research and Exploration Fleet. The room was beautifully decorated but not overwhelmingly lavish. it was almost cozy here . There was a similar mirror on the other side. Several people stayed in the conference room. The first and most important of these was Lord Admiral Antares. A tall and well-built man, he wore an elegant dress uniform. One eye was pale blue, as if glowing with a cold light. The second was cybernetic with an outer lens. His face was handsome but slightly asymmetrical. It was a memento of the gunshot that almost killed him. He was clean shaven and his dark red hair was cut short.

"Helo Arkan-tar and Lady Calo." he said to the twenty-year-old girl standing in the other mirror. She had long blond hair and deep blue eyes. She was dressed in a white dress with a deep cut so it wouldn't interfere with her jogging. At her side she wore an sword with an ornate hilt. On her finger was a ring with a red jewel cut through with green metal veins. Around her neck she wore medalion with a clasp, which probably contained a picture of a loved one. Lady Cala Grayskull bowed courtly.

"Also hello to all gathered." She said in a beautiful melodious voice.

"I hope your journey was peaceful," the Lord Admiral asked in a formal tone.

"The beginnings were good, but we were attacked by pirates in orbit Saltmarh. Only me and Miss Daisy survived, but we had to make an emergency landing and our ship is severly damaged. We need a new…" said the aristocrat in a gentle voice. Antares nodded.

"We will discuss this issue later. But first we must introduce ourselves and discuss the matters for which we are gathered here, he said, and pointed the man to his right. He was tall, with short hair, and somewhat androgynous features. He wore a well-groomed uniform, and his face was overly serious.

"This is Commander Reese, my right hand." the admiral said.

"And I'm his left, better hand. Or, more officially, an information and intelligence officer. Call me Lady Ka," said a rather short woman with an emerald-decorated mask over the right half of her face. She was pale, her pupils were dilated, and she was smiling menacingly with one half of her mouth. Antares grunted and pointed to another woman. She was dressed in a scarlet cloak with a hood. Only the lower pale half of the face was visible. The face was beautiful, but the woman emanate an aura of fear. She twirled a finger around a lock of fiery red hair.

"This is Lady Sorrowflame. Our science and technology oficer" said the Lord Admiral, and the woman bowed and said.

"Indeed, it was nice meeting you."

The last person introduced himself.

"On behalf of the Order of the Eclipse, I have come to fulfill the mission given to me by the Lictor himself. I am the Lady of the Blades of Asindes Di Vir, said the tall woman with golden hair, clad in the armor of the knights of hell with the crest of the Order on her breast. The coat of arms depicted the sun during an eclipse. She was a beautiful and well-built woman in her forties. There was an acid scar on her cheek. At her belt she wore an archeotechnical sword in a slightly too small scabbard,

Lady Ka chuckled hearing Asindesa's words, but the Lord Admiral motioned for her to remain silent

"Now that we've introduced ourselves, lets me remind you of the reason why we're here.- Antares began in a serious tone." Five years ago there was a terrible event. Many planets, from Vescariuum to the Pact Worlds, have fallen victim to the attack. From the center of the Ravaged Zone, a signal was emitted that appeared to be the beginning of the activation of weapons of unimaginable power that not only was able to wipe out entire planets and their trillions of inhabitants, but possibly wipe them out of reality. A few months later, the whole thing happened again. As we can all guess, it caused a great stir among the rulers, although the public did not find out about anything. It was discovered that a previously unknown planet had appeared in place where the signal came from. Originally, it was decided to send there a joint vesk - pact flotilla to pacify or permanently destroy this place. However, there were some obvious difficulties. First of all, this planet is located in the so-called Ravaged Zone, an area of the galaxy hitherto unexplored, from where no signals are coming. Most of the expeditions sent there did not return, and the few that did bring disturbing news. Legends of white demons and such tales. By analyzing the structure of the Ravaged Zone, the scientists guessed that this was the area of the Swarm's operation. I do not intend to argue with this thesis, but the fact is that the area is devoid of drift transmitters, which makes any exploration of it with a large navy seems extremely difficult. For several years, policymakers thought about what to do with this new and completely unknown threat, until two people found a solution to most of the problems. The first was Lady Cala Grayskull of Carurystal, present here." he pointed to the young lady who bowed politely " She is in possession of ancient maps depicting that area. They are said to come from the time of the founder of the family Mara, who is said to have come from that place is called Etheria.

"I should find all these "Seems" and "Apparently" offensive. While it is not certain that the line of Mara has not been broken during all these millennia, the origin of Mara, as well as the nature of Etheri itself, are not in doubt."

The admiral raised his hand in agreement.

"I'm a mercenary and a military man. I do not penetrate into historical and legendary issues. This is where we come to my participation in this entire mission. For the last thirty years, since I was banished from my home planet, I have fought in various conflicts, mainly with a Swarm, but also in local conflicts. It has its own fleet, used to operate independently, away from the supply line, outside the command structure. When, thanks to my numerous contacts among representatives of the authorities, I found out about this project, I decided to join it. The government paid me in advance, regardless of the results. So the reason for my presence, and my allies and Lady Caly's, are understandable. Now it is the turn of the explanation of the reason for the presence of Arkkan-tar." He looked significantly at Verthani. Arkan bowed low and said

"We were sent here to be the first to travel deep into the Ravaged Zone. Our first goal is to make sure that this is not an area of swarm activity. In addition, our task will be to determine the route for the fleet to move. We are also supposed to gather all the data on the potential threats that may await us there. After all, if we manage to reach this Etheria, we are to find out, in the most discreet way possible, what threatened the rest of the universe and, if necessary, neutralize this weapon. There is no mention of the fact that we should survive, but that goes without saying ... Or not ... -He smiled grimly.- As I understand it, since Lady Grayskull has lost her ship, our task is also to find a suitable means of transport. I understand that we will get adequate funds to get the ship? - Arkan asked matter-of-factly.

Lord Admiral noded.

"In fact, I thought in advance that the Lady Grayskull vehicle might not meet the requirements of a mission of this rank, so I deposited in hotel where you are staying with a credstick containing half a million credits with the possibility of a loan of up to two million." Antares bowed apologetically to Lady Caly.
Lady Ka chuckled.

"Don't think you can steal it or anything like that. Our tentacles are long indeed and our claws are sharp…" She chuckled again.

"You have to buy or rent a ship that will survive such a difficult journey. It can be difficult in a place like Saltmarsh, but you can count on few outside this planet knowing about the mission. There are forces in the universe that intend to hinder this mission… or overtake us. Discretion is therefore of the utmost importance. You have the papers that you are doing a job for Kemanis University." The Lord Admiral looked significantly at the Arcan." Some even worked for him. Pretend to be seekers of ancient knowledge and archaeologists.

"That means graveyard hyenas who are operating legaly." said Lady. Ka, smiling sarcastically.

"Doctor Qin and his intern will be waiting for you at the docks. You will need them in case you need technical support. The doctor was present at the listening center during the attack, and she knows a lot, a little more than nothing. Then you will find Lady Cala and her guardian, Miss Daisy. Next contact through the mirrors will happen tomorrow, when you are all assemble."

Arkana nodded and, touching the mirror, spoke in Aklo.

"Nothingness will consume everything."

The Awesome trio of strangers

Arkan-tar rubbed his glasses thoughtfully. He did not expect this mission to be easy and his expectations came true. Journey to a mysterious planet that appeared out of nowhere, and the discovery of which was related to such dramatic events, could seem like a wonderful adventure, but only in the minds of ignorant people. He had been an archaeologist and seeker of the secrets of ancient races for years, so he had no illusions that instead of adventure, blood, sweat and tears awaited them. Arkan, however, accepted it, because the prize they could win was beyond al. imagination ... if, of course, they lived long enought to enjoy it.

He looked at his reflection in the small mirror hanging on the wall of his cabin. Like among all Verthani, the inhabitants of Versec, who was trapped between day and night, his eyes were completely black, with no whites. He could change the color of his skin, but he liked to keep it uniform in a shade of gray. His hair was cut short and gray. He usually smiled, mysteriously and somewhat cunningly. He was not very handsome, but also not ugly. He adjusted his glasses, an extremely valuable gift that the Doctor had given him ... Sometimes they let him experience the distant past, the echoes of past and forgotten times. Ancient artifact from the lost Golarion… or somewhere else. He's never known in his story.

As he left the cabin, he covered the Hungry Moon Mirror with a sheet. Then he ordered the port staff to transport it to the hotel ”End of begining”, where they were to stay. He wondered if the crew thought he was narcis because he needed two mirrors. He left the Absalonian freighter Endless Voyage on which he was brought to Saltmarsh. The ship came here to buy fly cakes, fly nap, fly dust. He saw a clear pattern in the commodities exported by this planet. As soon as he left the harbor building, far too large for a place forgotten by gods and men, he felt the hot hammer of the sun hit him in the face. He left Versec many years ago and had spent most of his life in dark places or aboard spaceships, so his eyes had become weaned from the harsh light.

He put on his hat and went to the little cafe where his other two traveling companions had stayed. One of them was a relatively short lashuntian women with silvery hair and a swarthy complexion named Rechiza. The eyes were what was caugh the eye. Instead of typically insect, they were dull gray with hundreds of pores visible, as if someone were trying to combine typical Lashuntian eyes with human-like. She was Damaya, and therefore distinguished by a mental acuity that made up for her delicate build. She had lost her antennae, supposedly in the same accident that she lost her eyes, but he wasn't sure because she hadn't said anything about it and he hadn't pushed it. She pretended to be an archaeologist, but was a cult hunter in the service of hellknights, but was unaware that he knew her true profession, or that she knew who designed her eyes. She was quite talkative during the trip, but very skillfully avoided talking about topics related to her profession and the reason why she joined thisjourney. What is certain is that she knew much more than the rest.

"What did the Lord Admiral have to tell us that was so important that we couldn't be present during this conversation?" she said, smiling sourly.

"Theoretically, I am in charge of this expedition, so I represented all of us, but I agree. Next time we will participate in the conference together, then I will not have to repeat to you everything what has already been said" said Arkan, trying to sound as polite as possible. The other woman snorted contemptuously

"Oh, this is too much grace. What your companions might care about what could happen to them as they travel through the most gods cursed corner of the galaxy." Dilayla said grimly.

She was a tall half-elf from the Minitar, a distant and almost forgotten planet somewhere deep in the Vast. Her hair was cut short and bangs was light blue in color. A strand of scars cut across her cheek, a trail of shards that had hit her in some explosion long ago. She lost her arms, which were replaced with cybernetic prostheses, as was her right leg. She wore the symbol of Iomadae around her neck. Little is known about her past, except that she lost her family in a mysterious attack by Dominion of Black and was saved by the Hellknights. She was much less effusive than Rechiza, so she was simply silent most of the journey. Arkana did not mind too much, as he did not require too much eloquence from their weapon specialist. Nevertheless, he would prefer to embark on such a long journey in an atmosphere of friendship.

Trust is not our forte Verthani thought.

Dilayla could handle power armor and heavy weapons, so in the event of an emergency, she had the lion's share of responsibility for the survival of the three of them. At least in theory, because thanks to implants and exocortex, he was able to use a long weapon very efficiently when needed, and Rechiza was a witchwarper and could recall fragments of reality from other worlds. So it is good that in confrontation with enemies they were able to take care of themselves.

"Your sarcasm is unnecessary. We will spend the next six months together and we have to live together somehow. I understand that this task may seem to us all full of threats, not only the obvious ones".

" I understand you, but I hope that in the future we will be treated as equal members of this team?" Rechiza said in a serious voice, her metallic eyes puncturing him. Arkan bowed low and said in agreement.

"It will be so" and then he summarized the entire conversation for them. Dilayla sipping her coffee just like from Golarion snorted at the end, almost spitting on Verthani and Lashunta."So, as I understand it, we will be babysitting some rich girl" her old decrepit nanny and unlucky scientist? Has anyone gone completely crazy, as if the trip to what most likely is the gateway to the dimension of anguish was a walk.

"From what Arkan said, Lady Cala looks like a competent person who will be able to take care of herself, so you won't have to change hers diaper. As far as I know, her family has ruled Grayskull Castle for hundreds of years before The Gap. Most likely, he is the last representative of this highly respected family. Miss Daisy has recently been living in Carurystal, and she enjoys a certain amount of respect there. She is a mansion manager and a sorceress valued even beyond this rather rustic planet." the Lashunti said thoughtfully.

"Grayskull? It was a family of pirates or necromancers?" Dilayla asked with a scowl.

"In past? Who can know? Now? It was a respectable, well-mannered family, albeit quite unlucky."

"I can see that you prepared well." The warrior asked, smiling sadly.

"I always try to be prepared" said Rechiza seriously.

"But the one time you lost your eyes, you weren't" Dilayla said with a malicious smile and got up from the table. "Lead Arkan,, let's get it all over with."
The scholar Verthani bowed to her and clearly irritated Lashuntia and led her back to the hotel

The end of the beginning

Rechiza tried to suppress her anger at the soldier, but it was not easy. Since that… Accident, she had not been able to fully accept her condition, though it wasn't the loss of eyes that hurt her the most. Her eyesight ... Well, these implants had some advantages. She saw with a previously unknown depth and tenderness. However, her view angle was narrower and she did not perceive colors naturaly. She recognized colors but couldn't see them normally, so the world was gray and colorless to her. However, that was not the biggest problem. The implant had an artificial intelligence whose goals and objectives she could not define. She felt as if her eyes were telling her to notice certain things and they almost burned into her memory. But that didn't bother her, she was much more worried that they might have hidden certain things from her that were crucial to her work.

But in terms of eyesight, hers capabilities had improved. The loss of telepathy and the Lashuntian senses hurted a lot more. She felt as if someone had taken a piece of her soul from her, as if she had been torn from the world forever. No non-lashunta, with the possible exception of the Shiren, understood the pain, and at the same time it was their closeness that caused her the most sufering. Knowing that they could so easily touch the minds of other beings, and she was cut off forever... Perhaps she could somehow recreate their abilities through technological implants, but decided not to try. The risk was too great.
The problem was that about a quarter of the people of Saltmarsh were Shirens, mostly living on hydroponic farms or catching those damned flies. The rest of the population were Vesks, mainly those expelled from Veskarium or unable to cope with its strict, militaristic society. The same was true of the surprisingly large population of the local drow who preferred to live on that ball of salt rather than die on the Apostate.

Saltmarsh was colonized about a hundred years ago. Although due to the increase in sun activity, large tracts of land became deserts, and many seas turned into salt marshes ... The basis of the ecosystems were huge swarms of flies, butterflies and dragonflies, mostly eating algae growing in salt waters. The living conditions here were not easy, but compared to such an Akiton, not to mention Eox or Aukturn, it was quite a pleasant place. It was not the natural conditions that prevented the sapient beings from further colonizing the planet, but the fear of the unnamed menace lurking in the ravaged zone. Expeditions sent there usually disappeared without a trace. The few who returned told stories of white demons, or the lord of the seven heavens, or someone who dispersed the shadows. Most had no idea what was really going on there. In this universe full of demons and devils, anything was possible. Rechiza, however, knew the truth… which looked worse than one might imagine.

They came to a hotel, the most luxurious on the planet, which in a place like this meant that there would be no vermin here and no one would rob them. Mainly because the owner probably paid of the most dangerous gang in the city or was even a member of it. The building had eight floors, making it one of the tallest buildings in the city. At the reception desk a exaggerated polite drow waited an exaggeration, and the entrance was guarded by two menacing-looking Vesks. Dilayla smiled as she studied the bar, but Rechiza snorted. She avoided all kinds of stimulants, not counting herbal teas. Her job required an absolutely clear mind. After all, the enemy could be lurking absolutely anywhere. A girl with white hair, almond-shaped eyes, wearing gloves and glasses for the deaf, was waiting for them at the foot of the stairs. When she saw them, she waved at them and spoke in sign language.

"Hello! I'm Rosie Pearl! Everyone is already upstairs" translated the electronic translator wearing gloves.

Rechiza sighed. She hoped she would have some time to freshen up after the long journey and take a normal bath instead of the marineshower she'd had in recent weeks. She was used to discomfort, which didn't mean she liked it. Arkan must have already found a place where there is a bathhouse and he will sneak out to use it unnoticed, and Dilalyla has probably already had that one nasty, wet day of the year behind her. She laughed at this unintentional ambiguity. The half-elf scowled at her as if she understood what the Lashunti laughed at.

As they entered the double suite they had rented for them, they were greeted by a tall blonde girl, or rather a young woman, who hugged each of them, though Dilayla almost pushed her away. She was surprisingly strong for someone brought up in luxury.

"Hi! I am Lady Cala Grayskull from Carurystal. There is my teacher and homeroom teacher, Mrs. Daisy" she pointed to an armchair in the corner of the room.

An elf about forty years of her race sat on it. She had dark green hair and gray skin. She drank her tea thoughtfully, but when she saw them, she said.

"I am glad to meet my companions of such a wonderful journey ..." she said grimly.

Ysoki was standing in the doorway to the neighboring apartment, looking as if her life goal was to get rid of as many biological organs as possible. When she saw Rosie, she called out to her.

"Where have you been? We have so many boxes to open and my intern is wandering around somewhere!

"I do not hang around, but welcome rest of travel companions. And why do we have to open these boxes when we're going to be leaving anyway." Rosie said.

Ysoka tapped the cybernetic eye.

"You are an intern and it is your responsibility to do what your employer tells you to do!" She crossed her arms over her chest and then, seeing the guests, ran to Miss Daisy and took the kettle with the cutlery from her.

"Please, take it, don't be shy" said the elf resignedly.

"I'm Dr. Qin, and the other one is Rosie Pearl" Ysoka said as she poured a cup for them and began to sprinkle sugar.

"And you asked if I wanted tea?" Dilayla snapped and sat down in the armchair, glaring at the other

"I don't want tea either" Lashunti said, and sat a bit to the side to keep an eye on everyone. Only Arkan accepted a treat in the form of tea or more corectly sugar syrup with tea flavour.

"So the ladies got to the hotel ahead of us?" Verthani asked smiling gently.

"he ship is too damaged to repair it anyway, maybe I can sell the parts before departure. Without this, we have sixteen thousand credits for private expenses. Two times more if I can sell the ship parts well" Cala said.

"A lot to drink, but the money will end quickly if we buy the right equipment. You probably don't know the prices of weapons, do you?" Dilayla asked with her perpetually sour expression.

"You took enough weapons to win a smal war anyway, so don't whine." Rechiza said, carefully examining the apartment in which they will spend the next few days. Most of the furniture was imported, and although it was of fairly good quality, it showed signs of wear and was completely randomly selected. The windows were tight, which was to protect the members of the household against daily flies, which could theoretically lead to death by suffocation. There was a screen on the wall that was protected against breaking by an additional glass.

"I would like to remind you that we are flying to a place where the inhabitants were deliberately trying to destroy half of the known universe. In such a situation, there is no such thing as enough weapons" Dr. Qin said.

Miss Daisy smiled indulgently.

"If the inhabitants of that planet had weapons that could destroy worlds on such a scale, i doubt whatever you find on Saltmarsh or anywhere else will matter." She said grimly.

Rechiza listened to her with one ear, because there was something strange in the face of the gray-skinned elf. As if her face had smeared, pixelated. It looked as if she was wearing a holographic mask.

"In my opinion, you always have to be ready for anything, just as a matter of principle." the Lashunti replied, looking at the elf. Do not trust anyone'

Shadow of the past – The Carurystal’s rain

She woke up.
She slept on a narrow bed under a wool blanket. The room was cool, although Grayskull Castle had heating. They also didn't have to turn off the radiators to save money. She preferred the cold, she had nappijnng better. She slept briefly, at most two or three hours. Not only because her body hardly needed him anymore. When she where closing her eyes, memories of the life she wanted so much to leave behind her returned ...

She washed and changed from a nightgown to her black robe, made in the style recently fashionable on the Seagull Coast. Years have passed since she could afford to think about what is fashionable. It was almost unnatural…. Then she put on a holographic mask and signaled to the maid with a bell that she was ready. Leris, a young and polite Half-Elf with ash-colored hair and a shy smile, entered her chambers.

"Good morning Miss Daisy, I hope you had a good night's sleep." she asked cheerfully

"As good as always." its means horrible, she said, trying to be polite

"Tea was brewed, can i serve the marmalade cakes?" The maid entered the room looking at her employer with concern. She used to think there were ulterior motives behind a girl's protectiveness, but eventually concluded that Leris genuinely worried about her. It was as surprising as it was unnecessary. She had been survived so much that ordinary nightmares could not harm her.

Oh yeah, I survived ... she thought and laughed mournfully, but then she said.

"Yes serve the cakes. I will eat them with joy."

She drank tea on a balcony with a tastefully made decorative metal fence. She was protected from the rain by a wooden roof, although she could asked for a force field, but she feel resentment to them... Besides, she liked to watch the rain. For many years she had been deprived of his view. On Caturystal, and especially in Seagull's coast, it rained frequently, though not continuously, as was believed on other worlds. She couldn't get used to the mass media, but she liked the radio, especially when anything other than military reports was broadcast. Then she went to her office, where she took care of replying to letters and e-mails, although fortunately there were not many of them. She still hadn't battled her aversion to computers, and the idea of the Internet, even as simple as on Carurystal, troubled her.

Then breakfast was brought to her: a soft-boiled egg and bread with honey. After more than thirty years of eating nasty food rations and drinking moonshine from the technical department stocks, even the simplest normal food was wonderful. Then a more important documents was brought to her, including those relating to the management of Lady Caly's estate. Her… ward was not in the top ten of the richest landowners, but in the top thirty yes already. Thousands of people lived on hers land, and she also owned fishing vessels, cattle, and even an amber mine. Lady Cala was a very good candidate for marriage as a beautiful, healthy, rich and bright girl. The only hers drawback was that she was adopted. Otherwise, it would be worth thinking about finding her husband or wife whih was expected. But their plans were different. That is why she had always refused all requests, and now she had once again reviewed the letter they had received from the ealrless Karintes of Blackmoor, who offered the hand of one of her twin children: the Son Demestin, or the daughter Demestines. There was something oddly tempting about the idea of arranged marriages. They put order in place of the emotional chaos that always irritated and terrified her. Perhaps a mock engagement could be arranged. This could be a very enlightening lesson for Lady Caly. The ability to conduct courtship was something that would surely come in handy on the upcoming Great Mission, especially since she couldn't give her any advice in that regard… at least useful advice. Unfortunately, she was afraid that with Lady Caly's temperament, it might end in a tragic way.

"Should I ask to saddled horses for the afternoon." Leris asked looking into her office. She thought for a moment, then replied. "Yes, I'd love to go for a ride. " she said, and the half-elven servant smiled.

After work, she went on a tour of the property. She had known for a long time that the sight of a superior had a positive effect on subordinates. They need to know that someone is keeping an eye on them, but also that someone cares about their work. For years, it was one of her daily duties, until her health made it impossible. She shook her head, trying to chase away her thoughts.

People greeted her politely, though avoiding looking her in the face. Not out of fear, as was the case in the old days, but out of common courtesy. Her scars and deformities were no secret. It would be too hard to hide them. So they knew she had an accident involving using a spell that was too powerful, which happened quite often after all, and that was usually the end of the discussion. Few suspected more, and almost no one knew the truth. Even she did not know the full consequenccess of her deed until it was too late.

Residents saw in her the caretaker of the young Lady Cala. Everyone remembers that she was a strange, quiet child who suffered a series of tragedies. Starting with abandonment, ending with the death of most of the family. It was Miss Daisy who made her the life and soul of the society, a lady who personified the ideals of the Carurystal aristocracy. Therefore, most of the residents were positive about the new property manager, despite her undoubted quirks and gruff character. They did not know the truth, and it is better that they never know it.

She stood near the training plaza, where a group of young people of both sexes, or even more than both, trained under the supervision of the famous fencer Therstigos Arandel from Castroval. Although Carurystal was famous for its excellent fencing masters, she decided Lady Cala would need some familiarization with the culture of other planets. Besides, she wanted to learn about the true elven culture, little known where she was born. Therstigos was a good teacher, who taught both court and real fencing, but also the basics of dance, etiquette and elven language. At first, Cala was reluctant to learn fencing because she insisted that she didn't need any weapons, which was true in some way But she could not reveal her full potential without revealing the truth about herself. Besides, it was worth to teach her that death and destruction are not always the best solution.

Today Cala was not in the square, so she did not stay longer. Her ward was now in the capital, Lynortis, where she had Their Affairs to attend to. She didn't like the phrase very much, but she couldn't help it. Dr. Rephan, Lady Cala's personal physician, was also present in the square, and the only person in the castle who was sure to serve the same principal as she.The Doctor was short, bald and always cheerful. He had lived here from Cali's earliest childhood and cared for her health. Or rather, he made sure that no one got to know her… unique anatomy. She didn't like him, with mutuallty, but they tried not to get in each other's way ... She walked through numerous chambers and corridors of the castle until she came to the stable. There were many horses here. Some of them reacted nervously to her presence. Fortunately, horses from ancient Geb, where the undead ruled ,were bred on Caryrustal, and the cursed elf was no big deal to them. Her own mare. Shade was saddled. She was small, gray, very gentle. Most of her life she hadn't kept animals, not for company anyway, but for much darker purposes. But in Carurystal she fell in love with horses and horse riding. It took her several months to study, but she was always a learned student. She looked at the lonely stall of the corner of the stable, separate from the others. It was the Black Wind stall. Lady Caly's horse. At first she thought the coincidence of names was amusing or proving the petty jealousy of her ward, until she found out whose name it was, and since then she could not be around the huge black stallion without feeling quite justified anxiety.

She had changed into horse riding clothes and now she is wearing a raincoat. The weather in the coast of Seagulls was changeable. She was waiting for her mount to be saddled, when Leris entered the stables.

"May I go for a ride with you, Miss Daisy. The girl asked timidly." She shrugged.

"Why not? If you have time." she answered her.

They left Grayskull Castle through the main gate. She looked back, examining the massive body of the ancient fortress. The structure was as majestic as it was devoid of any defensive qualities, even when was built centuries ago, during the last wave of colonization. Another thing could be said about the cavernous vaults that stretched under the entire peninsula on which the castle was built. When she thought about it, she wished she had been able to visit a certain place in the old days… It is in the basement of Lady Cal's castle that the evidence of her origin ... She snorted and chased the horse, and Leris followed. The Carz Peninsula was famous for its high cliffs, stretching majestically over the blue-gray sea. It was quite a risky ride for an untrained rider like her. In Carurystal, riding skill was common, even when it came to mechanical mounts, so Leris probably had more experience than she did, at least in this regard.
She stopped and began to look around her. The sea was slightly rough to the north and east, and to the south and west there were green pastures and groves. Here and there, she saw single buildings. There was a solid, lead-gray cloud layer overhead. The wind blew her hair. I really like this life. She thought and felt tears welling up in her eyes.

"Is something wrong, Miss Daisy?" Leris asked.

"Oh, life happened ... Just life." she replied, wiping her eyes.

She ate leek soup and some roast for dinner, then looked into her garden and took care of the management of the castle. And then dusk began to get closer, and she felt the weight on her shoulders growing. Finally she went to her retreat and had a fire lit in the fireplace and order to brought a bottle of brandy. She could see the concern in Leris's eyes as she handed her the bottle and glass, but she wasn't about to change her mind. She spent the next few hours sitting in an armchair, staring at the flames and thinking. In the red sparks she saw the advancing columns of troops, the flashes of explosions and the fear in the eyes of those who stood in her way. In the sound of burning wood, she heard the roar of working machines, the screams of the dying and the crying of children. The smell of smoke smelled of oil and spilled blood… They were painful and terrible memories, but she had no intention of running away from them. Though it meant little, of course ...

There was the sound of a heavy hardwood double door swinging open, and she heard footsteps. Delicate as the sound of a spider treading. Full of hidden strength worthy of a predator waiting for an opportunity. Lady Cala sat on the armchair next to him.

"I like to look at the flames." said the girl with a gentle smile.

"I don't doubt it." she told her. What is nightmare for one, is dream for another

There was a tense silence like there was so often when they were left alone.

" I received a letter today proposing an engagement ..."she finally said to Lady Cala.

" It might actually be quite funny." Cala answer, and giggled

"And that's why I refused."She said firmly.

They were silent for a moment again.

"There comes a moment when we will have to leave Carurystal." when the girl said this, her teacher felt a cold sweat pour over her "A philosopher said that life is an eternal homecoming." she continued "Another said that existence determinnes consciousness. The few years you spent here have had an impact on you. You're used to this life. A life as comfortable as it is false. If people knew the truth ... though probably many might not believe it." Lady Cala smiled at her. Few saw that this beautiful, delicate face and lovely eyes blue like mountain lakes concealed an eminently alien mind.

"How much time do I have." she asked resignedly.

"A bit. A couple of months, at least. An independent expedition is being organized to reach a mysterious planet that the inhabitants were to use weapon against the known worlds. Admiral Antares volunteered to lead the expedition. I have to meet this man and get us into this venture somehow ... Maybe it will be better this way. It was very difficult for us to assemble a fleet of sufficient strength without arousing suspicion.

"You are sure that your training is over?" she asked, processing the words of her pupil.

Lady Cala laughed out loud.

"I am stronger, smarter, and better educated than anything else I can meet at my destination, and besides, there are forces as old as the universe behind me."
She smiled at the girl's words.

"Such thinking can easily lead to loss. I know something about this."

Lady Cal looked at her thoughtfully for a moment. Then she got up and put her hand on her tutor's shoulder.

"You know ... We are in many ways like mother and daughter. And like all offspring, I want to be in every way a more perfect version of my parent." she kissed her on the cheek. The holographic mask blurred for a moment. Then Lady Cala left the room to go about her own affairs .. Her tutor took the bottle and went to the balcony. That night, he will not sleep anymore. She will listen to the Carurystal’s rain.

Conversations under the crimson sun.

"Forgive me Itel, but what are we doing on this lump of salt cursed by the gods and daemons?" Eti asked, She was dressed in the outfit of an Akiton nomad, although she did not have a dust filter yet, and she wear goggles that shielded her sensitive cat eyes from the light of the local scorching sun. She wore falcon boots that allowed her to walk on walls and ceilings.

The green-haired elf rolled her eyes.

"Bina is here to stock up on the expedition." She replied.

Eti ostentatiously looked around. She saw a rickety bush. She walked over to him and started talking to him.

"Hey Bina. It's nice that you took us shopping. I was just about to show you what I would like you to buy me for this beautiful trip. Headcheese, brass knuckles, explosives." - she gestured theatrically Itel narrowed her eyes.

"Would you mind not fooling around?" She said irritably.

Eti turned abruptly to the elf and came so close that they looked each other straight in the eye

"Of course I could, but why if I can't do what I want, and you know what I want to do? Absolutely nothing, and that could be the last chance before flying to the Ravaged Zone, or where we're going…" She said in a calm voice not matching the clenched metal hand. She didn't like to raise her voice, it always didn't seem to suit someone like her. So someone absolutely perfect, amazing and unique.

"But for the last two weeks ..." Itel bit her tongue, but Eti moved closer to her and picked up goggles.

"Come on, say it ... " she drawled.

Itel blushed ashamed. She stepped back and sighed.

"Bina always says that she does not like taking us shopping, because we are intimidating the sellers" explained her friend, but Eti interrupted her.

"But we really are scary. This is our specialty and we should not be ashamed of it." Eti said seriously. She felt pride growing in her heart.

"But these are almost certainly not the talents Bina needs." Alatar said, not looking up from the datapad, playing a game without too much involvement. Lilka was lying on the white sand and moving her hands up and down.

"What are you doing Lilka?" Itel asked, standing next to Eti,

"I make an eagle in the sand" said the self-styled orcish in a slightly bored voice. Her fiery ax lay beside her.

"Of course Bina needs such talents." continued Eti "Our power of persuasion would surely make any trader drop the price, and even add something extra. - She came up to the dragonfly holding her hips.

"Most likely he would just take a gun out from under the counter or call security ... Or both." said Alatar, interrupting the game.

"Or maybe it's salt." Lilka wondered aloud.

Eti wanted to say something about what she thought about salespeople and what they can do with their security, but Itel cut in.

"Bina didn't take us, but we can't do nothing with it. But she didn't tell us what to do, did she?" The elf said putting her hand on Eti's shoulder.

"Pfe Pfe, it's sand with salt. Lilka began to spit the sand she wanted to eat.

"She told us not to get into trouble" Alatar corrected Solarian.

The shooter snorted and gently slipped her arm out of Itel's, then crossed her arms over her chest.

"My dear, we are the troubles others get into" she said firmly. Itel sighed irritably.

"Could you just focus on what I'm saying for a moment!" She screamed. Eti turned to her.

"We are always perfectly focused and nothing ever distracts us"nsaid Eti with absolute certainty.

"What a lovely pebble!" Lilka said, and she walked over to a flat red stone covered with a pretty mosaic.

Eti and Itel looked at each other for a moment, bewildered, Finally Eti grabbed the end of the braid and began to nervously massage the inside of the metal hand with it. In the morning, she dyed her hair red-white and braided it so that the braid looked like a two-color spiral.

"Okay, Itel, I'm listening carefully ... W hat's your plan?"

Itel smiled, clearly pleased that she could finally share her plan with her friends. She put the datapad on the portable table and turned on the map of the neighborhood, which she must have pulled from the poor local network, then opened her notes.

"First of all, it is a place located on the border of the Ravaged Zone and from here all expeditions set off when you still wanted to organize them. For sure, the locals still remember a lot what it was like and maybe someone who took part in one of the few expeditions whose members were not murdered still lives here."

Eti grimaced understanding what her friend was going to.

"So we have to look for someone who did not run to the other end of the galaxy as soon as his foot left the deck of the expedition ship and convince him to tell us all about it? It's trivial."

"Actually, you better leave the part about persuasion to us." Itel said carefully, but Eti leaned towards her. She narrowed her eyes.

"But I can be very persuasive!" She said, grinning her sharp teeth slowly.

"Rather frightening." muttered Alatar.

"It's not a pebble, it has legs ... It's a Bug." Lilka shouted, and grabbed the fiery ax. The others moved away from her to out of range of their weapons, but did nothing else.

"Ftightening is the same as persuasive." she said, feeling pleased with the unexpected praise.

"No, that's different." Alatar muttered, but Itel, after thinking, said.

"It's a good idea, actually. If you can "convince" them without drawing attention to yourself and without risking yourself, then do so."

Eti smiled. As soon as she finds someone who has survived the expedition to the Ravaged Zone, it will make him regret

"You'll like the second part of the plan less. We need someone who knows something about ancient artifacts and searching the ruins ..." said Solarian. Eti frowned. This was not an idea typical of Itel, who usually suspected everyone of slitting their throats or selling them to their enemies.

"It wasn't a bug, it was a crab. Poor crab." said Lilka and came up to them "Where are the ruins?"

"So far nowhere, although knowing our style of work, they may soon appear somewhere." Itel muttered

"I'm sorry, but I think we got Ilemshaw and Ireanis for that." Eti said. She didn't like the prospect of letting strangers aboard their ship for a few months… to their only home.

"Ilemashaw can't leave the tank, and Ireanis is very… Ireanis and we can't really count on her. Besides, we need someone who knows the past and is not a relic of it. Who knows about Magitech and Archeotech. You understand?" Iitel asked. Lilka with a smile on her lips shook her head negatively.

"Honestly, I don't understand. - said Eti with absolute honesty "But I will look for ... How did you describe it? Archeotech specialist… maybe an archaeologist or historian?" She asked, leaning her head resignedly on the metal hand " Though to be honest I have no idea how." She sighed and caught a fly flying by.

"And now what is most important. We have to find the observatory and get to it." She said with a sly smile.

She actually liked that idea. Doctor leech was supposed to conduct research here, but how much can you trust a deadctor?

"But what exactly are you going to find there? We have the maps Sidonius gave you. I guess they're accurate enough?" She asked, hoping that it would not turn out right away that she had organized the entire trip without knowing how to get there. Maybe it didn't matter to her, she didn't care much for antyhing, but Bina and the rest agreed to the undertaking, hoping that the solarian had an idea of what she was doing.

"They are, but I'd rather make sure they don't have any mistakes, or that he hasn't hidden something from us. Plus, the record might still be there" Itel said, trying not to show how much she was looking forward to getting the video. Alatar looked sour.

"We have to go all over the planet because you want to prove something Bina?" He said with a total lack of enthusiasm.

"Not the whole planet, there is one big city ... The observatory must be nearby." said itel with exaggerated optimism. Eti shook her head, not knowing what to think, but she said.

"Okay, so maybe I will look for people who once went to the Ravaged Zone, you will learn something about the observatory, and each of us will try to look for a scientist who somehow ended up in such a hole." She said looking at the others. She didn't like to take the lead on their package, but she knew someone had to end this discussion because Bina would come back from shopping and they would still be arguing. "Does anyone have some credit for me for business expenses? She asked in an innocent voice.

Itel was already reaching into her pocket to hand her the Credstick, but Alatar put his hand on the elf's shoulder.

"You know, this is probably not the best idea. Bina would be angry too." he said gently to Eti. The shooter sighed It was worth a try

"Okay, then I'll see you at sunset, or when we find something interestin." she said and put on her goggles and a dust mask and headed for the city.

Sunny day

Eti has never liked being on sight. She always felt content to observe others by herself being invisible. She turned on the cloaking and tried to stay in the shade or on the rooftops, so she went unnoticed without any problems. Saltmarsh was a small city, at least compared to the metropolises of Atrax and Akiton, but it was densely built and crowded. After all, it was the only significant trade hub on the planet. This made it easier to hide without hindering her obtaining the information she had come here for.

Their ship landed a few kilometers outside the city, near a salt lake, allowing everyone to take a hot shower. Bina took the Crushey, so unfortunately Eti had to go to Saltmarsh on her own feet. It took some effort, but she was used to long hikes in the heat of the desert sun during all those years on Akiton… Okay, these years have not been so many after all. Contrary to her appearance, she was born two thousand two hundred and nine days ago ... She always remembered how long ago it was. She did not want to count her age in years, after all, she was an absolutely perfect, amazing and unique being. Physically she was over eighteen, and mentally ... Well, she was very old ... Too old

She shook her head to chase away the thoughts crowding in her head. She looked at the city. When the planet and its capital bore the same name, it did not guarantee anything good. Saltmarsh was full of tightly packed buildings. The older ones were made of colonization prefabricated elements, and the newer ones were made of red and black bricks from local clay. The center had a sewage system, but the rest probably had to rely on portable recycling systems or an ordinary septic tank. The city had one fusion power plant to provide power to the residents, but the few vehicles that passed it were powered by alcohol-powered engines powered by a solar cell. The inhabitants had to be motorized, because the areas on the planet covered with salt deserts and marshes were really large.

She stepped onto the flat roof of the two-story building and looked around wondering where she should go. She didn't know the city, but she hoped so little was happening here that if something unusual happened here, she would probably hear about it. But she was a stranger, and for many reasons chose to remain unnoticed.

"Maybe I'll look at the port first." she said to herself. She saw a bird-rat flying by. She frowned. He annoyed her ...

Two Shirens stood in front of the port building sipping sweet caffeinated drinks.

"Well, three ships in one day. I'm telling you Triktrak. This promises a big change" he drank half a can until his antennae stretched.

"Apparently four, one more damaged. Something can really be on th thin, Shrakat" said the other Shiren and opened the can. "But so what? One ship is damaged anyway, and this pirate captain ... Or maybe he wants to set up a hideout here" said Triktrak.

"There, in the Ravaged Zone, there are more places to hide from Anti." He drank the rest of the can and hiccupped with his windpip.

"But you remember the white demons? No matter how scary a pirate she is, she will not be able to cope with what may be lurking there." said Triktrak. Shrakat flapped his antennae.

"I remember there was one here a few years ago. He was wandering around a bunch of skitermanders, and I'm telling you, he didn't look particularly threatening. Grag was hosting them then. He can be nice if he wants to, but when he smells blood, you'll hit the head with a hammer." he shook his head.

"And only one Grag is like? And do you remember this Vesk from the mountains? You know wh ..." he continued, even without noticing the figure flitting over them.

Randaz straightened, feeling the stiffness in his back. Half a day's work behind him, another half left. But he wasn't complaining for that. Service in the artillery regiment at the front in the war with the Swarm was much worse. He wasn't actually a deserter. He simply got into the wrong transport. But he was content, although he may have lost his honor, or at least a part of it, he nevertheless kept his life and health, including the mental one. Nobody on this planet asked about anything and did not interfere with anything. Just his back. Suddenly he felt watched. He was being watched. He tried to look around, but then heard a voice from behind him.

"Hey reptile. I'm aiming a sniper rifle in your back right now, but if you answer a few of my questions I'll let you go safe and sound, maybe even with all your limbs.

Randaz sighed, it was bad luck he should have expected. Gods don't like cowards and deserters.

"Say what you want." he said resignedly.

"Cheer up . It's a sunny day today, so if you don't try any tricks, I won't really hurt you. Just tell me what ships have recently landed on the planet.

The voice was muffled by some kind of mask, but he could recognize the voice of a young female mammal.

|There weren't many of them, one ship came for flies, but it brought some strange visitors. "One is such a big dandy that he drags a huge mirror behind him. Weird, but no one in their right mind comes here unless they have to. Apparently other damaged ship landed in the desert, but no one knows exactly who it belonged to. There is, of course, the Merciless that belongs to Captain Moonshadow. I see connections there, but what can I know about pirates?"

"Moonshadow, you know what she might be looking for here?" asked the person pointing at his back.

"I have no idea, but everyone says she's done to much to anger Twins, and Anti won't let her go until she stands in chains in front of the Aeon Throne. Though others say he is looking for some great treasure in the Ravaged Zone. Who can tell what the truth is. You will never know truth about pirates ... And apart from her, another ship has landed here ... It has a terribly stupid name ... Something with a sword"

Suddenly he felt a missile of hot plasma flew past his cheek. He almost burned him. My goddamn tongue

"Deadly sword of burning fury is a very nice name for a very beautiful ship. Do you know how long it took before we agreed? Three days! And we had a fight four times. So don't offend him here. Or you'll get hit."

He sighed deeply. What kind of madman is handing out hot-headed kids weapons and ships? And did these kids have to end up on a planet where he was trying to live a quiet life ... On the other hand, who normal would come to Saltmarsh?

"I am asking forgiveness for offending your wonderful and beautiful ship. Forgive me, miss." he said with a resigned voice "You still have any questions, miss."

"Is Moonshadow on the planet? And if so, where?" She asked, jumping to the ground. She walked past and stood in front of him. By Veska standards, it was tiny. She picked up her goggles and he saw a pair of golden cat eyes with blue spots staring at him. Damn Pahtras.

"She would rather not introduce herself to an ordinary foreman like me. You would look for someone from its crew in the port canteen or in Red Water. Some kin of the niece lady is running her."

She stabbed him in the chest with the finger of a strange metal prosthesis.

"I am not litle girl and there is no other creature like me in the entire galaxy, for I am absolutely perfect, amazing and unique!"

He felt a slight tingling sensation every time she stabbed his chest. And she did it on every syllable. Then she jumped into the shadows and disappeared down a side street.
Its time to move out Randez thought.

"I'm telling you, this whole trip is a stupid idea!" Gydwa said to Keart. They were standing behind the harbor canteen, hidden in the shadows. Halfdrowl spat out some red root.

"If the information we got on that ship is true, and we have no reason to say otherwise, we will finally get rich. Treasures of an ancient civilization and the wealth of a fallen empire. As ordinary pirates, we would never have had such a chance." the boatswain explained to large Vesk ...

"We are pirates, not freedom fighters fighting to overthrow the Star Empire? " said Gydwa sarcastically. Kaert waved his hand and bit down another piece of red root.

"We may have been fairly unusual pirates , but you have to admit that under Captain Moonshadow we never felt bad or lacked anything. Unless you're still jealous of Tonado becoming first mate." The half drow said, grinning.

Veska gurgled loudly from deep in her throat.

"I will not let this ball of hair thow me of from the position I have waited for so long!" she looked at the halfdrow "As if I wanted to be able to squeeze him so tightly in my hands until his head explodes." She clenched the imaginary skittermander.

"It's a temporary job anyway. When Reh'zar returns, he will retake his postion. So don't fight for something that will never belong to you anyway." he said, and shook his head disapprovingly.

The second officer looked at him seriously.

"Everyone has as much as they can get." she said slowly with clear undertones ...

Keart eyed her sidelong, clearly unhappy with the direction the conversation was taking.

"You know, this is almost under incitement to mutiny." I will pretend this one time that I didn't hear it. He said slowly reaching for the ice gun at his belt.

"Don't overdo it, I just express my dissatisfaction. We are pirates and we can say whatever we like. And if in fact there are such treasures that he tells us about, I will be the first to beg forgiveness for my lack of faith." Veska bowed excessively.

Keart grimaced but said nothing, just spat a bit of a root.

"They say the Captain is looking for someone here. Someone from where she comes from." The boatswain said. Gydwa snarled

"And to which we're going. I hope that it will not turn out that at the end of the road her husband or her wife and a group of kids are waiting for her."

This time Kaert laughed sincerely.

"You imagine our captain having even one kid. What else? That she is a princess or a queen? Don't be petty .. One thing I'm absolutely sure is that no one misses her, because surely someone would be looking for her ..." said half-drow. Veska, however, did not seem convinced.

"The Ravaged Zone is hard to get to, so it's even harder to get out of there. The locals probably don't even know about the existence of Vescarium, let alone the Pact Worlds or Azlanti. I don't know who we'll find here, but it's probably some random miner or trader who is only more intelligent than Tonada."

"And apparently they have a miner here, I think Shiren, who went to the zone a year ago to earn to pay off alimony or something. He got scared of something there, but I have no idea what. He has fired the crew and sits and drinks." Kaert said thoughtfully

"It's Shiren. They can get scared by a fly trap or a pissed off skittermander." Gydwa laughed wickedly.

"You have an awful lot of prejudice against other species." said Kaert. Veska wanted to say something, but they heard a broken screech. Several black feathers fell beside them.

"Apparently upset some cat." Said the halfdrow.

The Red Water bar was definitely not a den. Rather, he was one of the places where an ordinary passer-by would be afraid to look, although he would most likely be safe there. The key word was most likely. There were never fights here, because the regulars, when they threw themselves into the fight, they kill. They were professionals, former space pirates, war veterans and travelers. Shirkas, as an asteroid miner, was classified rather in the lower regions of the local hierachy,but he was still our guy. He had earned a some reputation on his foray into the Ravaged Zone, though the more mischievous say it was all just the result of his thoughtlessness. It was not true, at least not entirely. The truth was, he was just desperate. His wife and their host demanded the payment of alimony, and he had no intention of ending up behind bars for such stupidity. Or worse, let his ship be scrapped. What could be more terrible for him there? He knew the answer ...

"And then I had got the transmission! There was a unchitinous woman. Her lips and eyes were smiling, but then I saw what was growing out of her head. It was a purple brain-eating octopus. I saw inside her, behind a smile, an immensity of suffering ... This creature devoured her mind, piece by piece, in tiny portions. And I turned out to be such a coward that I didn't react, I just ran away. To this day I see it as soon as I fall asleep. If I found more courage in my heart..." he shook his head, and the two young shirens who were watching him without much enthusiasm stood up, thanking him for the story.

Well, he was never good at telling a story, and after a year this one had already become somewhat boring He sighed and drank a drink of fermented juice, then went behind the bar to get rid of the excess fluid in his body. He stood in the shadows, and was getting ready to take off his dungarees, but then a figure hissed out of the shadows. He felt a strong blow to his chest, and she grabbed his antenae.

"Hey bug. Answer my questions succinctly, or else I will tear that antennae out and poke your brain out through your windpipe!" unchitinous female said. Two golden cat eyes with blue doth stared at him warningly. A metal hand held his wrist

"Ask, I will answer just don't touch the middle arms." he pleaded.

"Okay, how you can aford drinking for the last year if your trip was going to be so bad." She said. Her eyes smiled grimly.

"I don't know what you're talking about." he said, trying to avoid her eyes. She twisted his antenae.

"I told you not to lie." She growled.

"Okay, okay, just don't hurt me. I'm a simple Shiren, I'm just unlucky. You see, a few years ago some weird guy flew over there with a bunch of Skittermander and some robot. He returned from Vesk III a few weeks ago and was looking for a way back. I told Grag, the local hustler, about everything, and he took him in. I mean, he's trapped and now wants to auction him off. He give me a share." he said with a pleading voice.

The girl jumped away from him and said.

"Don't tell anyone what we talked about, because you know, brains and antenaes" she threatened him with a knife that slipped from the sleeve of her left hand. Then she disappeared in the shadow of one of the buildings.

Shirkas was glad that she didn't press where the money came from, otherwise he would have to tell about a drow woman with a cane ending in the symbol of bat wings…

Eti was walking pleased. She got the lead, alone, without resorting to violence and intimidation. She just spoke politely to a few people and they were answer her.

"Itel do you hear me? I have a lead! I got it myself!" She exclaimed, passing in front of the bar from which the Solarian unexpectedly came out. She seemed ashamed that Eti had met her here

" It's great ... " she said hesitantly, but Eti took her hand and said

" It was actually predictable given my absolutely perfect diplomatic skills." She pouted her chest proudly.

It was two thousand two hundred and ninth day of her life. Sunny day

Entrapted

When he pondered over the last few days how it got to his current situation, he always remembered the words of his Skittermander friend Ablok.

Remember, the galaxy is a dangerous place. You must have eyes in the back of your head. And on the sides of it... And in a few other places... It's actually good if you grow eyes on stalks. Yes, at least four. Then no one will surprise you.

He should have listened. At least metaphorically. Up until now, the universe had seemed like a pretty nice place to him. At least from the time... When he was destroyed. Now he has discovered that the universe has a dark side.

It all started with the fact that he wanted to return to his home. Or at least to a place that resembled him. To his older brother and friends… Especially the one who freed him and gave him a name…

Or maybe it all started with the fact that he wanted to go to the stars ... Actually, he was born among them, in space. Aboard the Velvet Glove. His friend supposed there must be something more beyond the Empire. And of course she was right, as always, though others were skeptical, especially the queen.
Only now was not noot important how it began, but where it was all going. He was in a deep pit dug in the dry land of Saltmarsh. On a rope, they where lowered a bowl of food and a bucket for waste, and another for water. No one has spoken to him since he was placed here. He had no idea what they were going to do with him, but he wasn't worried about himself. The most important thing was what happened to Emily! Didn't they do anything to her?

"Hey Worm" he heard a voice from above. He looked there and saw a person sitting on the edge, his legs dangling.

"I'm not a Worm. I'm a Wrongdak, actually Wrong Hordak. Nice to meet you, but please call me by my name." he said, but he was glad in spirit. Perhaps salvation has just come.

"You're big, white, and you'd be very tasty if you were grilled."

Or maybe it wasn't the rescue he was hoping for.

"What are you going to do with me?" he asked uncertainly. The person he was talking to was dressed in a rather disturbing looking armor. She had a mask and goggles on her face. Instead of a right arm, she had a strange metal prosthesis. He knew such devices were common in the galaxy, but the sight of them always made him sad. Usually his seriously injured brothers were used for spare parts or biological material, though sometimes He had other plans.

"I don't think I'm going to eat you because Bina is supposed to bring meat, unless she forgets. You know, I haven't eaten meat for two weeks..." she said, sighed heavily. "Me and my buddies want to get you out of here. Don't worry, just don't tell anyone." she said and disappeared into the shadows.

"But… Emily." he said softly as she disappeared.

Itel paced nervously behind the escarpment behind which they had hidden, waiting for an answer from Eti, who had been silent for almost an hour since she had gone out to scout. She warned that she could turn off her communicator so she wouldn't be distracted. Except she was supposed to be back half an hour ago.

"Hey Itel, listen, I'll draw a plan for you in a moment" behind her came the voice she was waiting for. First she felt relief, then a rush of rage. Eti stood in front of her without a mask and hood, and then began to draw on the sand with the barrel of a rifle as if nothing had happened.

"Listen, it looks like this..." she started, but the elf yelled at her.

"You didn't think to tell us you were okay!"

"Well, I didn't think about" replied Eti. The Scout looked at her in surprise. There was confusion in her golden eyes with blue dots. Itel loved looking into those beautiful eyes, but right now she was too irritated to think about it.

"Could you think of others? You know we're worried too?" solarian called.

"Excuse me, but would you kindly show a little trust? I am an excellent scout." Eti replied, contorting her face in anger

"Yes of course, because it's always about you!" The elf screamed, spreading her hands.

"Itel, Eti, do you understand that "Hiding" and "Screaming at each other for stupid things" are mutually exclusive?" Alatar said, looking over the interface he had on his hand. He was about to hack into the computer system of Grag's warehouses, which was slow due to the quality of the network here, whichwas deplorable. He was crouched behind the escarpment, trying to remain invisible. Lilka stood with her knees on the escarpment and looked through the binoculars if anyone was approaching.

Itel took a deep breath to calm herself down. She closed her eyes and when she opened them she said.

"Okay, Eti, please tell us what you found out."

Eti almost smiled. She never did, not out of joy. But Itel was sure she would look beautiful then.
"There are six guards, but only two look dangerous. They are armed with electric rifles. The rest have ordinary clubs, none have decent armor. These two always walk side by side and look like siblings, but I'm not sure because they're Shirrens, and I can't quite figure out how they're related. The others walk chaotically as they please. They used to have a mustelid guard animal, but they said it was bitten by a snakebird." she said, and her hand went to the sack where she had hidden the carcass of some birdie she had hunted in the meantime. Eti couldn't control her instincts sometimes.

"It's a good thing they didn't have a dog there, otherwise it would have been an impregnable fortress" Alatar muttered.

"Oh, I think your mouth misses my shoe." Eti replied putting her cat ears on herself.

"Are there any treasures?"Lilka asked, changing the subject, much to Itel's relief, who didn't want another argument, this time between Eti and Alatar about "Cat stuff".
The Scout winced.

"It's a goods depot for farmers and nomads. There are parts for vehicles, water filters, fertilizer, seeds, some simple robots and elecronic. Our target is hidden in a beer warehouse, just sitting in a dug pit between the barrels. Looks like the drow, orc, and the bat had a very intoxicating night, but he talks our way."

Itel felt like she was about to punch someone.

"Have you talked to him? Who allowed you to do this?" she snapped at Eti. The sniper looked at her in surprise. Sometimes she was so sweetly innocent… Or innocently insensitive.

"After all, no one forbade me, and what is not forbidden is allowed. It's called Wormdak." she replied, scratching behind the cat's ear

"Is that his name, or did you call him that?" Alatar asked suspiciously.

"I named him. He says his name is Wrongdak or Wrong Hordak..." There was silence for a moment.

"It must have been a very complex family situation." Alatar said.

"It's quite big, but also strong, so it might come in handy to carry heavy stuff." Eti said contentedly. "They have two more cameras and a few electronic gates, so Alatar can break in there?"

"I'm doing it right now." said the dragonkin from over the interface

"Only two armed guards... Do you think you could take them down without anyone noticing?" asked the solarian. Eti looked at her carefully.

"I think so. But I'd rather" said the sniper. Eti could be aggressive and was created with no inhibitions against harming others, but she didn't like taking lives. The few times she did this, she was very upset during rainy days. Itel understood her, but she had lost her scruples during the swarm's invasion of Kesler. But after all, Igzar had told her to protect the others... Didn't that also include protecting from her? Before what the Swarm was doing to her?

"All right, Eti, we'll try not to leave any dead bodies behind. Maybe it will be better that way, because we won't make more enemies" she said in a conciliatory tone. The ranger walked over to the elf and placed a metal hand on her shoulder. Although Itel didn't like the touch of the archaeotechnical hand, she felt a shiver run through her body anyway.

"Thanks Itel, I'll do what I can. You know I'm the best." - Eti said. „You are" thought Itel.

It wasn't the best plan, but it was the only one he had. He wasn't sure if he could rely on that strange person's help. There was no time to lose. Emily's life was in danger!

So he took the spoon and continued digging, trying not to think how hopeless his situation was. Then he heard the blast of an energy weapon. Instinctively, he cowered, not like a civilian, but like the soldier he was made for. There were screams of the wounded, and battle cries. He heard the voice of this strange person, as well as several other people. He found himself in the heat of battle again, but this time he was absolutely defenseless…

Not. He looked at what he had in his hand. He had a spoon!

After a while, however, the gunshots stopped and there was a moaning silence.
He was saved!

"It's good to tie them up and bandage the badly wounded one ... And the one without an arm too. Lilka, put her in the bucket

He wasn't sure if he wanted to be saved by these people...

This strange person sat on the edge and started swinging her legs. After a while, a winged lizard and two girls appeared next to her. One with pointed ears and green hair and the other a redhead with a large ax in her hands. They looked as menacing as a squad of vesk.

"Hey Wormdak, I told you we'd come to free you," she said with satisfaction in her voice.

"I am Wrong Hordak, but you can call me Wrongdak"

"Hi, Wormdak… Wrongdak… Wrong Hordak… I'm Lilka."said the redhead

"And I am Alatar" said the Lizard, and showed on the Datapad's display Ignore that Eti is calling you names.

"And I am Itel, someone will throw him a rope, because we are in a bit of a hurry?"

The masked girl tossed him a long rope attached to something above, and he climbed it. A few Shirren lay on the ground, all injured, two quite seriously, but they were given basic medical care ... Although someone should have to take care of them eventually. He knew the basics of first aid and could even perform simple surgeries on himself, but He preferred to replace his brothers with new ones rather than heal them.

"All right, Wormdak, follow us and don't think, because thinking hurts. Sometimes very literally - said the girl with the metal hand, crouching on the barrel. He saw that she had a tail that twitched nervously. He met several Pahtras on Vesk III, though he didn't befriend any of them. Then the warehouse doors swung open and the Duergar Grag stood there, trapping him there.

"Hey, what are you going to do with my commodity? You can't afford to buy it. You can't even imagine what kind of people are interested in buying this creature." said Grag, baring his metal teeth. Beneath his cloak he had heavy armor clearly visible, and in his hands he held a two-handed hammer, on which the discharges ran. A large insectoid stood next to him.

"But they didn't take anything from you. All barrels are whole." he said, completely not understanding what the trader meant.

"But you are my most valuable commodity. You know how much certain people will pay for a living White Demon. I wish I understood what you were worth the first time, I would have sold you long ago and paid off my debts.

He los his togue. How he dare do that to someone!

"But... that's not allowed. You can't sell someone. Persons are not things" He said I don't want to be owned again!

"Oh White Demon, believe me, the strong can do with the weak…" he jumped when the pahtra fired a rifle at him. The insectoid pulled out a shotgun and fired at the masked one himself. However, she dodged and landed on the wall, to which she stuck her shoes. Beer began to pour out of the keg.

"Okay, let's do it." said the green-haired girl and summoned the silver blade.

"For The Horde!" The redhead screamed, drawing her ax.

No! No! No! he cried in his mind.

Itel knew this was how it would end. She hated it when even simple plans had to fall apart anyway, so she had to improvise. Holding her blade, she summoned dark matter and began to tune into the gravitational forces that held the world together. She jumped towards the Duergar, trying to flank him while furious Lilka attacked with a flaming axe. She hit the hammer's handle with the blade. Then Itel attacked him from the side, trying to stab him in the shoulder with the moonblade, but Grag growled and pushed Lilka away and hit the Elf in the face with an armored shoulder-plate. It hurt, but it would have been worse if she hadn't been protected by dark matter. During this time, Alatar cast a spell on Trox that made him lose his knowledge of how to operate his weapons. Eti jumped to the ground, then drew her laspistol and shot the insectoids in the side, but his armor held out. Grag swung his hammer, forcing the warriors to retreat, but at the same time he dodged as Alatar fired his rifle at Trox, who fired several times indiscriminately, no longer understanding how his weapon worked. Taking the opportunity when the Duergar dodged, Lilka hit the epaulette, which broke, but Grag tripped her with the handle of his hammer. He turned and swung at Eti, who was aiming for his back. The ranger blocked the blow with a metal hand. There was a bang as the ancient prosthesis absorbed some of the Energy. Iteel then felt she was fully attuned to the Graviton, so she summoned a gravity ball that pulled Grag backwards, knocking him over. The elf jumped and drove the moon blade into the trader's shoulder. He screamed, as did Trox, who was shot simultaneously by dragonkin and Eti. Lilka stood up and put the ax to Grag's neck. Then a spoon thrown by the prisoner hit his face.

"Give up!" the Solarian woman said, and twisted the blade in the Duergar's wound. Troks writhed in pain, both opponents released their weapons.

"Do you know who was going to buy it? Lord Admiral Antares. You know who is he scum from Kesler? I am from Atrax and I remember how many of you were saved by his ships. You don't know who you're displease" growled Grag.

"That's the last name you should be referring to." Itel thought. Eti straightened her tail anxiously clenching her fingers on the gun. Itel felt only overwhelming fury. She drew the knife Igzar had given her, then plunged it into Duergar's knee.

"Igzar sends his regards to the Lord Admiral." she said and twisted the blade. She stood up and, ignoring Grag's screams, looked at the others. Everyone was fine, although Eti was rubbing her hand behind the elbow, where her metal arm ended. The prisoner tended to the wounded shiren, stealing a frightened look at them. At first she thought it was a rare slave collector or someone in the intelligence service who wanted to get it, but Antares? Why was he interested in such creatures and in the Ravaged Zone in general.

Lilka was wiping her forehead when the prisoner, whose name was probably Wrongdak, approached her and, putting his hands on her shoulders, said in a serious voice.
"Listen. Horde doesn't exist. He... Prime is dead and the Horde is gone. Are you free!"

"He wants to die?" Itel thought, Tears appeared in Lilka's eyes and her lips began to twitch. She grabbed the ax and screamed "The Horde will exist as long as there is at least one orc alive!" The redhead exclaimed and swung. The Wrongdak jumped back and started to run.

"Alatar, calm her down" the elf ordered. Dragonkin ran to the enraged warrior.

"What now?" asked Eti, standing next to Itel. There was concern in her voice.

"Nothing special. We don't tell Bina because she'll be back again. Lord Antares doesn't know about us, and with any luck he won't." the solarian said, trying not to glance at the Duergar writhing in pain. I didn't need to show off. Now it would be best if we finished him off.

Wrongdak finally climbed onto the barrel, and the dragonkin calmed Lilka down.

"He must have meant some completely different evil horde, didn't he?" Alatar asked the ex-prisoner in a meaningful tone.

"Very evil, made of ones like me ..."said Wrongdak. Lilka calmed down and sheathed the ax.

"I see. A real horde of orcs consists of countless hosts of honorable warriors who fight for good and justice". Lilka explained to him with absolute seriousness.

"But you're…" he wanted to say, but Dragonkin showed him a datapad with the inscription Lilka is an orc, it's an indisputable fact.

He descended slowly, clearly being careful not to provoke another attack of aggression.

"What are we supposed to do with him?" Itel asked. Eti shrugged.

"In exchange for a ride home, he will clean, carry heavy things and clean toilets." replied the scout.

"And what will we feed him?" the solarian asked, expecting what answer she would hear.

"Vescarian rations, of course" Eti exclaimed happily. Itel looked at her grimly for a moment.

"That's mean even for you." she finally said.

Meanwhile, the prisoner came up to them and spoke earnestly.

"I have to ask for help. My friend Emily has also been imprisoned and needs to be rescued!"

"Is Emily pretty?" Eti asked with interest.

"Oh, she's beautiful!" cried Wrongdak.

"We're in!" Eti and Alatar shouted simultaneously.

Itel looked at the scout. Did you have to do that? she thought. Then she walked over to the dueergar and kicked him in the wounded shoulder.

"Where is the one who accompanied the prisoner?"

Grag laughed despite the pain.

- She went to the junkyard.

She was unlucky. the Solarian sighed.

Hellknight

Asindesa di Vir throughout her life knew mainly war, in all its aspects. She was actually born in the war. Her name used to be Asindesa Cartak, but that was all she remembered from her former life. For thirty-five years she had believed it was the Dominion of Black atacked her homeplanet, until recently she had learned the truth, but it had not changed anything in her life. Enemies might have different names, but knowing how to defeat them was all that mattered. Empires will fall and rise, and adversaries will put on new masks, and the order of the eclipse will continue to serve its cause as always. There were only two exceptions. Servants of Darkness Among the Stars and a Hunger That Can't Be Satiated. The former lasted from the beginning of the universe, the latter may lead to its destruction. That's why the Order had to face this threat... And now a new threat has arisen and the lictor, her adoptive father, have sent her to deal with it, and to hell, she will fulfill this task.

She was going to her second meeting with Lord Admiral Antares wearing the plate armor of a hellknight. The armor of the Order of Eclipse was quite harmless looking, covered only by two spikes on the shoulders. Of all the hellknights orders, the Order of Eclipse was considered the most heroic because its opponents were those who were a threat to the existence of entire civilizations. In the past, they usually fought the servants of the Old Ones or the Dominion of Black, and often made enemies of those they protected. But since the Swarm invasion, they have become the protectors of the galaxy. Asindesa has even participated in several photo shoots to encourage the Galactic public opnion to unite in the fight against a common enemy. In truth, she hated it, though she understood how important it was to the success of the entire War. She was aware that she was well suited to represent the allied forces. Tall, with a pretty face not even disfigurd by an acid scar, with long red-gold hair. She was forty years old, but she knew that with modern medicine, she would face at least twice as many years of fighting and bloodshed, if she did not die on the battlefield, as most of the knights of the order would do

The loud footsteps of three pairs of armored boots echoed through the brightly lit corridors. At her flanks were two other knights who were her retinue and protection, though she doubted Antares would be ready to attack her openly. On the left was Camalia Sendes, an Aasimar with white hair and a cheerful smile, who was the direct opposite of what people expected from hell knights. She was beautiful, though she did not share the Lady of Blades' preferences. She was a devout follower of Iomadae, which also surprised many who expected the HellKnights to fanatical devotion to Asmodeus. On the right was Grimbern, a black-haired man, a man who had been Asindesa's protégé and trained by her to be her successor. They were the most loyal of her subjects, and they knew the secret of her sword.

She looked at the hilt protruding from the new scabbard. She didn't know what the weapon actually was, but she had been told what it was called. "E nd of Eternity - Blade of Vengeance". She shivered, though she was a warrior unafraid to face the innumerable hosts of the Swarm. She didn't know why she had been chosen to wield this weapon, but she felt that she could not oppose this mission. It had to do with the White Demons. The ones who attacked Minitar and turned her into a hellknight.

The Lord Admiral was waiting for her on the bridge of his flagship. Commander Reese and Lady Ka were also here. The Commander bowed to her politely, if a little stiffly.
"We are glad to see you, Ansidesa Di Vir, Lady of the Blades of the Order of the Eclipse" he said in a serious but genuinely polite tone.

"So the most unsmiling of the knights has arrived. Indeed, it is a great honor for us." said Lady Ka with undisguised sneer, bowing almost halfway down.

Lord Admiral Anatares turned away from the holographic star chart.

"It's good to see you, Asindesa." he said, bowing politely but without exaggeration, like a king greeting an envoy from a foreign country. Actually, there was nothing unusual about it. Before he became a mercenary, he was a ruler.

"Why specifically have you summoned me here, Lord Admiral?" she asked in a hard voice, not taking her eyes off the expedition commander.

"Ah, those hellknights, they are discussing as if they were charging into fortified positions." said Lady Ka sneeringly. The Lord Admiral ignored his Left Hand, but did not rebuke it either, which eloquently showed how the relations in the expedition command look like. Only the commander gave the masked woman a contemptuous look.

"I want to talk to you about Lady Caly Grayskull" he asked in a strong and resonant voice. She supposed he'd practiced its sound for a long time, especially after being shot. She wasn't sure if it was vanity or perfectionism, probably both.

"And about my time at Castle Grayskull." she asked in a grim voice. Well, she should have assumed someone like Antares would find out. I haven't done anything wrong, so why am I nervous?

"Pre-emptive strike, hmm smart... However, my job is to gather intel on potential enemies... and allies which is basically the same thing." The visible part of Lady Ka's mouth twisted into an even more sneering smile than usual.

"Lady Cala and her maps are one of the pillars of this expedition, so as its commander it is my duty to know how much we can relly on her." He looked questioningly at her entourage. They instinctively stepped back, but she signaled them to stay. The Lord Admiral did not recall his guardsmen, the famous Void Orphans, so neither should she recall hers.

"I have not met the young Lady in person. My ship was damaged, and it took most of my time to arrange repairs in Carurystal, where no one is ever in a hurry. I only spoke to Miss Daisy. Her…" she tried to remember what her official position was.

"For all I know, she's probably something like her right hand , Lady of Blades." Commander Reese interjected. Lady Ka just snorted softly.

"Second in Command maybe right away? Seriously, this girl lets her own governess run her fortune?" said the head of Antares's intelligence service.

Asindesa pursed her lips.
"Miss Daisy is a multi-talented person and a powerful sorceress." she said briskly, and then realized she had fallen into a trap set by a woman with a mask on the right half of her face.

"Yes, we know that, and that she brought her from the Pact Worlds on her journey five years ago... I guess the girl wanted to celebrate her coming of age in this way... Lady Daisy is definitely not from the Pact Worlds.

The Hellknight shrugged.
"Like most of the people here. I was born on Minitar, Lord Admiral is from Tarak, Commander Reese is from Amran and you Lady Ka are from Atrax, I can recognize that accent very well" said Lady of Blades, feeling joy at seeing Lady Ka's smile fade.

"What I'm saying is that no one knows exactly where she comes from, which is understandably uncomfortable for those of our position, but truth be told, we don't care much about her. We want to know how much truth Lady Cala tells, because we know that all intelligent people lie." said Lady Ka slowly and, for her, exceptionally gently.

"I'm not lying…" She bit her tongue as she realized she get into trap.

"Undoubtedly…" Lady Ka continued her taunt, but the Lord Admiral motioned for her to be quiet.

"There's no point in teasing each other like children. Please tell me one thing. Is Lady Cala someone who might have maps from thousands of years ago?" asked the Lord Admiral. His living eye glowed a cold blue. Cybernetic lens glowed red. How strange it was to talk to someone with such different eyes? She thought for a moment.

"Castle Grayskull was built thousands of years ago, and in its vaults... They stretch across the entire peninsula and may contain treasures from before the last wave of colonization, so these maps may..."As she spoke, she saw an image on the monitor behind the Lord Admiral that she knew from information she was provided by Liktor Janos Di Vir. The face of one of the White Demons, quite unusual, wearing a strangely colored shirt and colored hair, but still one of the creatures that attacked Minitar...

"Yes?" Antares asked, raising one eyebrow.

"These maps may be real." she said. The image was gone, she wasn't even sure if it wasn't all just a phantasm.

"Well, apparently that will have to suffice. You can leave, I have no more questions." replied the Lord Admiral.

She bowed politely and was already turning away from the expedition leader when he asked her.

" I'm sorry I forgot to ask. I hope your wound, the one you take on Carurystal, has healed properly by now?"

She resisted the instinctive urge to reach for her shoulder. She could almost see a sneer spread across Lady Ka's face.

"Almost completely. So is your gunshot wound." she smiled and left.

They did not discuss the meeting until they were aboard her cruiser Necessary Measures.

|"It went reasonably well." Camalia said.

"It went very badly, he found out a lot about us without revealing anything he didn't want to reveal himself." said the hellknight.

"You're a terrible pessimist, and you see conspiracies everywhere." said the follower of Iomadae

"I am the Lady of Blades, that is my duty." Asindesa said.

They walked in silence for a while.

"But you have to admit, Commander Reese is sweet." Aasimar said.

"You know he's…" Grimbern interjects
- I know, but I like him anyway. Asia, and you like Lady Ka?

The Lady of Blades rolled her eyes.

"Really, I don't want sleep with every woman I meet, I'm very picky. Besides, going to bed with her is like going to bed with a scorpion."

"This sword, are you sure it's not cursed.?" Grimbern asked

"It's not even fully magical, and something tells me it's very important?" Asindesa said quietly.

"And these inscriptions? You guess who might have made them and what they mean.?

Only she saw them. She managed to trace them and enter them into the database, she didn't learn much.

"They are made in the language of the First Ones, who built the cities of Aballon and created the Anacities. But no one can translate them. But the First Ones are no more." she said, remembering the words spoken to her.

This is End of Eternity. Vengeance Blade. Take them, for the day of vengeance draws near. Punishment Day

Too bad you didn't see him. Maybe you could give me some advice thought the Hellknight

The First of The Thousand

Lady Ka sneered as she saw Asindesa come out of the bridge.

"Manipulating Hellknights is like kicking a puppy. A lot of joy, but no satisfaction." she giggled.

Antares looked at her askance.

"I hope we won't hurt ourselves with this ruse." he said thoughtfully, touching the lens of his cybernetic eye.

Lady Ka waved her hand.

"By no means. What can they prove to us? That we were trying to obtain one of the White Demons, creatures we might be fighting. Also, as commander, you don’t have a duty to share confidential intelligence with your subordinates. And we've learned that the Order of the Eclipse, and perhaps all the other orders, are hiding the truth about the Ravaged Zone from the people of the Galaxy." she laughed " We only made sure that the world knew the truth."

The commander Reese winced as he listened to her argument.

"It is not right to manipulate allies, especially when the whole galaxy depends on us."

The intelligence officer gave him a contemptuous look.

If they rely on us, they'll be surprised Lady Ka thought with amusement.

The heavy cruiser Invictus may not have been the most powerful ship in the fleet, but of all, it held all the important secrets Antares possessed... and all its dark deeds. “As he used to say, keep evil out of your home. Invite them to your summerhouse." She had to admit that her superior had an extraordinary talent for aphorisms.

He was also a man who valued science. She was about to go to one of the greatest minds in the galaxy. Literally and figuratively. She had served Antares for five years, ever since Igzar slew her predecessor, Testimonez. Personally, she thought she was doing an excellent job as an intelligence officer. Even she herself was sometimes surprised by her talent for solving problems of a delicate… or dark nature. But Lady Sorrowflame had served House Antares for two hundred years. And Lady Ka knew very well that she was much, much older…
The corridors of the cruiser were shrouded in darkness. All the lights were dimmed. All important prisoners were kept here, so it was necessary to create a suitable atmosphere. The Lord Admiral liked to slowly soften the prisoners, to mold them for months, so that they would finally understand their mistake and do the will of Antares of their own free will. Lady Ka was not patient enough, so she preferred harsher methods. After all, everyone was entitled to a little pleasure, right?
There was only one prisoner on the ship at the moment, but he was the most special of them all. Antares' favorite for over thirty years, whom only he could interrogate. He held ordinary prisoners on transport ships with absolute respect for all international conventions. Prisoners are not taken to die of hunger or disease. Of course, sometimes it was enough just not to take prisoners. "Orders not given, crimes not done."
By the smell she knew she was approaching Lady Sorrowflame's workshop. The smell of a corpse, necromantic ingredients, formalin and liquorice created a unique blend that became the hallmark of the ancient Necrotechnician. The great room was even darker than the corridors, shrouded in red light, full of strange machines and body fragments. Lady Sorrowflame was sensitive to light, and many relics stored here would be destroyed instantly after short exposure. The lady of the place has stood by the big metal brother and screwed the metal plates to the corpse of the three-and-a-half-foot humanoid. Lady Ka whistled in admiration.
- Is it amazing that you build each of the Dread Walker yourself! - she said, looking at the object of research of the red-haired woman. She stopped her work, turned to the head of intelligence and took off her gloves.

- If you want your position to be unwavering, you must be irreplaceable. And to be irreplaceable, you must not let anyone in on your secrets.
The Necrotechnician was a very attractive woman. Tall with alabaster skin and fiery hair. Of the entire command, she was the only one to establish closer relations with her. Even very close. Well, the Lord Admiral was quite handsome, and even if he wasn't, she would have gone to bed with him just to hurt Reese, but her overlord didn't like to mix work with pleasure. Of course, the commander did not take it into account for more or less obvious reasons. But Lady Sorrowflame was a woman both hot as flame and cold as folk. If anyone could be said to like him, it's an ancient necromancer.
-And how's the search for the artifact going? – Said the necrotechnician looking at the intelligence officer
Lady Ka winced.
- I have invested considerable resources in finding this gadget, but still no lead, - she said a little embarrassed.
- It's such a shame. You can't even imagine how important it can be! - Sorrowflame said sharply. Her eyes sparkled gold. But the head of intelligence rolled her only visible eye.
- You don't think I'm going to find that relic? - If I find him, I'll find my little sister and her little monster. And believe me, there's nothing I want more than these two. But the old leech defends them. she said, but then she changed her mind. - Sorry about the leech. - She preferred not to make an enemy of a creature of such great personal power.
- As we talk about the little monsters. I analyzed your father's papers. There was indeed a prototype - the necrotechnician said, accepting the apology - But Jantar sold it to Nayrlathetop's cultists.
- Oh, I'm so sad. It's just my heart bleeds. Ms. Ka murmured with undisguised satisfaction.
- Don't don’t understimate it. After all, you too should rot in the depths of the Atrax caves.- Lady Sorrowflame smiled.
- Don't compare me to some bioengineering freak. I am K-nation number 4886. Supreme Queen Ka. The First of a Thousand.

This is the thirteenth chapter of this story, so I decided to leave comments in which I will mention the curiosities related to this fic. Mrs. Ka's thread was created by accident during an RPG session when players killed one npc, so he had to come back in a different version.

"The HellKnights have only temporary allies, for they are devoted only to their cause and only it matters to them." the Lord Admiral replied to the commander.

She respected her superior for being able to use the truth as a weapon.

"I understand, sir, but the Lady of Blades... She seems to be an honorable warrior." Reese said carefully.

If you weren't so good at commanding people, I would have thrown you out of the airlock a long time ago for stupidity.: Lady Ka watched at the Commander with the contepmt.

"Honor is valuable in peacetime, but in war it can easily lead to unimaginable tragedies." the Lord Admiral said seriously.

The commander nodded. Antares turned to his inteligence oficer.

"Do you think they know anything about the Horde that we don't?" he asked thoughtfully.

"No one knows more than us, except perhaps our toothy friend." said the woman in the half-mask.

"Remember that the galaxy is immeasurable. The so-called Prime Empire was vast and could affect many worlds. During those few years, many may have left its borders without even having Dift Drive and access to planar travel. And others could go there" Antares said slowly, rubbing his face where he had been shot. Lady Ka always wondered if he was aware that he was doing this.

"We still do not know what exactly annihilated the Lord of the Horde and whether he poses a threat to our fleet." he added after a moment.

"Sir, our forces are made up of veterans hardened in the Swarm War. We have five capital ships at our disposal. There's very little we can't handle. said Commander Reese with feverish enthusiasm. The Lord Admiral smiled at his words, but replied.

"That's a lot for a mercenary, but on a galaxy scale... The Horde had forces far greater than ours."

"But Prime is dead and his subjects... you know Lord Admira!" said Commander Reese uncertainly, staring at his commander.

"That's the problem, our dear litle commander." Ka walked over to Rees and took him under the chin. "That's pretty much all we know, which means we don't know anything about his fall."

Antares gave her a warning look. She knew he had a fondness for his former adjutant, and besides, Reese was an effective and well-liked officer. Too bad he was a sanctimonious moron by the way.

"That's why I want this deal to go through." He turned the image back on the monitor. The clone they saw was quite different from the ones they knew. He had colorful hair and light blue eyes. He was wearing a shirt a bit too big for him, one of the kind the Skittermander for Vescs could come up with.

"It gives us first-hand information, without relyng on the successes of our research team and Lady Caly." He looked at Lady Ka meaningfully. She bowed to him almost mockingly.

" I'll try to buy it, but I can't promise anything. As far as I know, there will be three buyers at the auction, including at least one with assets equal to what we have."

"Do you suspect who it could be?" asked hers commander, clearly troubled. He was very rich, after all, so few could rival him.

"Veskarium or Azlanti, maybe Aspis. But I suspect the Azlanti because they have the most to gain, and they did not participate in organizing this expedition. The auctioneer has the protection of the Drejs, a local gang, but that's no problem for us. The dude is from Atrax, so for one word from the First of a Thousand will be on his knees begging for mercy" She laughed with sadistic amusement. Antares, however, did not take his eyes off her.

"You'd better succeed..." He said seriously, but she answered him with an indulgent smile.

"Oh, my good Lord Admiral. Don't expect me to be one of those servants who is always eager to assure their master that all will be well, and then cower in fear when it all falls apart. I wasn't like that for Jantar, I won't be like that for you, that's not why you keep me here."

The Lord Admiral almost smiled. He didn't do that often, and usually it didn't bode well, but she knew him well enough to know she was safe. Whatever can be said, Antares was not one to punish his subjects for harsh words and legitimate criticism. Especially for honesty. Of course, within reason.

"Fly to Invictus, Lady Sorrowflame wants to talk to you." said the Lord Admiral. She saluted him to the temple hidden behind the mask.

"Aye Aye Admiral!" she said, and went to get the documents Sorroowflame probably needed.

After talking to the dork knight and listening to Reese, it's worth spending some time with someone normal. Necrotechnics will do just fine. She struggled to hold back a burst of laughter.

"And how's the search for the artifact going?" said the necrotechnician looking at the intelligence officer

Lady Ka winced.

"I have invested considerable resources in finding this gadget, but still no lead" she said a little embarrassed.

"It's such a shame. You can't even imagine how important it can be!" Sorrowflame said sharply. Her eyes sparkled gold. But the head of intelligence rolled her only visible eye.

"You don't think I'm going to find that relic?" If I find him, I'll find my little sister and her little monster. And believe me, there's nothing I want more than these two. But the old leech defends them. she said, but then she changed her mind. "Sorry about the leech." She preferred not to make an enemy of a creature of such great personal power.

"As we talk about the little monsters. I analyzed your Father's papers. There was indeed a prototype." the necrotechnician said, accepting the apology "But Jantar sold it to Nayrlathetop's cultists."

"Oh, I'm so sad. It's just my heart bleeds. Lady. Ka murmured with undisguised satisfaction.

- Don't don’t understimate it. After all, you too should rot in the depths of the Atrax caves." Lady Sorrowflame smiled.

"Don't compare me to some bioengineering freak. I am K-nation number 4886. Supreme Queen Ka. The First of a Thousand!"

This is the thirteenth chapter of this story, so I decided to leave comments in which I will mention the curiosities related to this fic.

Mrs. Ka's thread was created by accident during an RPG session when players killed one npc, so he had to come back in a different version.

Lady Sorrow is a canon character from Golarion

Brightmoon ghosts

Brightmoon lost a spare bedroom and gained an Archives. Officially, the Fright Zone Document Depot, but it was actually a lumber-room where documents that no one cared about were stored.

Beyond her.

She knelt by a pile of folders and flicked through them nervously, while the Melog paced around as annoyed as she was. She was looking for… She didn't know what. Mostly something about Adora and… about herself.

She asked Scorpia to provide all the documents regarding the cadets and Scorpia complied to her ask and sent her six skimmers loaded with briefcases. And she apologized anyway that some of the documents had been burned during her argument with Hordak. But what was important survived… So for the last few weeks she spent all her free time rummaging through the papers. She was looking for answers, though she didn't know what questions she should ask.

It all started with a question about customary medical examinations. Though in the old days all cadets routinely went through them, Adora would not agree to them now. She was afraid of what other dark secrets her origins might hold. She understood her. Her fiancée's legacy held secrets whose discovery nearly led to the annihilation of their home, as well as many other planets. She did not know what else they could have done to Adora. She however submitted to the tests with a bit of amusement, because what could they discover that she herself would not have known for a long time. And here she was surprised, and she hated being surprised.

Genetic testing showed no relation to the other feline humans found on Etheria, and moreover, it bore traces of genetic manipulation at an extremely advanced level. When she heard from Entrapta Isn't it fascinating? she felt her vein was about to burst. In the past, she probably would have gone to destroy something or take it out on someone. Now, however, after ten minutes of breathing exercises, she managed to calm down. She asked Entrapta to gently ask Hordak if he didn't accidentally create her as he was trying to create a new body for himself. She received a response, accurately quoted by the purple-haired woman, that he would never have created her by accident or on purpose. She believed him. He's only managed to create something alive once, and that was imp.

In fact, it shouldn't surprise her. She was fitter, faster, and smarter than most beings she knew. She had claws that could cut metal. and… And He considered me as his host. He who for millennia inhabited only identical clones. And that was what terrified her. At first she thought it was because he sensed the evil in her, and then she just tried to forget everything. However, after research, she decided that she needed to look for answers. To calm her anxiety, she decided to find out as much as possible about her background, and there was no better way than to go through the records of the cadet school.

She should have been aware of level the bureaucracy of the Horde. She was in charge of her for several months and everything worked out. Somehow. Some of the responsibilities she simply left to Scorpia or a host of nameless officials, and by the end it all fell apart anyway. She didn't care, in fact she absolutely didn't care about anything by then, and if the war had gone on any longer, the whole machine would have fallen apart... just like her.

She should admire the perfection of the Shadow Weaver system. Everything was designed so that in the end every key regulation had to be approved by the second-in-command. This made it really hard to remove her. Twice it was attempted, of course, in much less spectacular fashion than she did, and each time those who tried to replace her met with terrible punishmentMany saw Shadow Weaver as a powerful sorcerer, a ruthless schemer, a skilled commander, or even a great teacher, but few realized her immense talent for management. She had no idea where she acquired this skill. All that was known in Mystacor was that she came from the Isles of Sorrow, an archipelago somewhere on the equator. It is said that the rulers of that place repeatedly demanded the expulsion of their fugitive citizen, but the authorities of the sorcerers' guild always refused, saying that it was not lawful to banish someone who only sought safe haven. When she found out about it, she couldn't stop laughing, laughing through her tears.

Now she had to deal with the legacy of Hordak's Right Hand. She was a little uneasy to see that absolutely every aspect of their lives had been documented. Every disease, every quarrel and who likes whom. They knew all their advantages and disadvantages, their height and weight. Their potential. To her surprise, Cobalt gave her very good grades and spoke highly of her, so she felt a bit of sympathy for her former trainer. It is a pity that he was temporarily unavailable, because he was sitting in Drill together with Lonnie and the Rest.

Of course, Shadow Weaver did not fail to record every punishment that was meted out to the cadets. Both these official or private. And she always found a logical-sounding justification. She wondered how much the sorcerer believed in what she wrote, and how much she wanted to justify her cruelty to herself? There was something painfully fascinating about her absolute meticulousness in recording everything she had done to them. Her fines file was obviously the thickest, though she was surprised to find that several people had almost caught up with her for fines, which weren't that bad after all. Such a Scarlet regularly got extra guard duty or toilet cleaning. She didn't know her very well, she must have deserted and holed up somewhere in the crimson wasteland. But as for the punishments privately administered by Shadow Weaver… She remembered every single one that had happened to her. It was hard… Once upon a time, she probably would have gone into a rage and done something terrible or self-destructive, but now she had Adora by her side. She could cry in her fiancée's arms with Melog hugged at her legs.

She didn't find much about her origins. Too seldom did she take damage, much more often she caused it herself. All the doctors, however, were amazed at the efficiency of her body. They claimed that they had met only one equally capable person, namely Adora. She knew it perfectly well. There was only one document that surprised her, her genetic research done right after Adora found her in that tiny cardboard box. Dr. Moors, a person who was then involved in genetic research of the inhabitants of the Fright Zone. He found that her genome showed signs of hybridization, primarily human and another creature he couldn't recognize. In addition, several more genes were added, including a sequence he described as "Remarkable." He concluded the study with the statement "Chimera or Mutant, further research needed." However, they were never made. Soon after, he was transferred to a remote outpost by Shadow Weaver. Of course, she didn't do it for her. She guessed that the doctor must have been too interested in Adora, so he had to disappear. He was lucky anyway he wasn't sent to Beast Island, or some terrible accident didn't happen to him.

There wasn't much else to be found in the medical reports about her, nothing significant anyway. She found out she had a mole on her right buttock (Adora confirmed) or when she was losing every milk tooth. Still, it was better than she found about her fiancée. All medical reports and test results are gone. She was absolutely sure Shadow Weaver was responsible. If anyone found out who Adora really was… She wasn't sure Hordak would be able to kill a child in cold blood, but it would certainly weaken the sorcerer's position. She only wondered if she hid all the files in her fabled secret archive, where she was supposed to hide her dark secrets. No one had ever seen it and perhaps it was just a myth. She should talk to Hordak, he knew more about Shadow Weaver than anyone else, but she hadn't spoken to her former master in person in years and wished she will never do.

In fact, she should be glad she has a secret past like Adora. And that they have something else in common. After all, it didn't change anything in her ... their life? Perhaps she should do as her fiancée advised her and burn it all down. She was looking for useless answers here only because she was nervous before the wedding. But… H*e was considering me as his next host… Out of the billions of beings he encountered, he chose me. Not Adora, who is one of the First ones and She-ra, but her. Why?* She touched the scar on the back of her neck where the chip had been.

She shook her head. She had been reading a report from ten years ago that Cadet Kyle had diarrhea for five minutes. Apparently, her brain was defending itself from reading about her former colleague's stool. She yawned and got up. She'd done a cursory cleanup, she'd have to sort out the papers tomorrow, because almost certainly none of Brightmoon's servants would have mastered the Horde's cataloging system. He understood him with great difficulty. Another way Shadow Weaver could make her life miserable even after death. She suspected that the sorcerer's adoration of bureaucracy stemmed from the fact that she had to control absolutely everything around her. She had to convince Hordak that thanks to the bureaucratic apparatus he would be like Prime, he would know everything. She shook her head in amazement.

Only a few days ago, she would have gone to Adora and slipped quietly under the covers...or deliberately woken her up to spend some time together, but she had flown off with Scorpia and Perfuma to Icarius, and would be back in a few weeks. She would love to fly with them, but even without her newest hobby, she had a lot of work to do. Mostly because of the approaching Victory Day. It's been almost five years since the three-decade-long war ended and Prime's rule over the galaxy ended. A day of great happiness and joy. On this occasion, it was decided to organize a great festival in Brightmoon, to which all inhabitants of Etheria and even beyond were invited. There will be great food, a show of the wonders of technology and magic, an exhibition showing the beauty and wonders of other planets, a meeting with the heroes of Etheria ... And most importantly, a double wedding. Queen Glimmer and Royal Techmaster Bow, and Adora, or rather She-Ra, and Grand Marshal Catra. She had no idea why anyone would be interested. As it turns out, apparently half the planet was. And such a big event required special security measures. This was what she was supposed to do.

And that was why she should go to sleep, because tomorrow would be unlivable, but she didn't really want to. So she decided to make a tour of the castle. She left her cluttered junk room and, unseen, she and Melog wandered through the spacious corridors.

After the war, Brightmoon Castle became partly a ghost castle. One of them was her together with Melog. The Queensguard turned out to be a bunch of incompetent idiots who were fit only to present themselves nicely in armor. She couldn't believe how Hordak or Shadow Weaver hadn't infiltrated this building when even Scorpia and Emily had managed to sneak in undetected. After taking over as Grand Marshal, the first thing she did was fire three-quarters of the guards and rearm them. Modern armor and shock lances based on the Horde's old shock batons gave them at least minimal combat value, but she preferred to test them regularly by sneaking around after dark anyway. Besides, she enjoyed it.

At the beginning of the invasion, Prime, Brightmoon fell virtually without a fight, so it suffered minimal damage, which was later repaired. The town of Brightmoon below has nearly doubled in size since the end of the war. This was due to the former members of the Horde who decided to look for work in the capital, but also thanks to the refugees who came, or were brought by Adora aboard Darla, from various corners of the Prima Empire. The town of Brightmoon thus became the most cosmopolitan place on all of Etheria. And also the safest. As she looked out the window, she saw a shimmering energy shield dome. Created by Horde technology and a bit of Entrapta's genius, it was able to stop even intense orbital bombardment. Glimmer was very proud of it, much more so than the anti-aircraft artillery that was mounted on the walls, but it won her over when she said you couldn't just defend yourself. Sometimes you also need to be able to bite back. They planned to create such a defense in every major settlement on Etheria. It will take time though. Fortunately, the industrial production of the former Fright Zone, now the land of the Scorpions, has been restored to at least partial efficiency. This was especially important now that Drill had been lost to the People's Rebellion.

The loss of the Drill... She looked toward where a mighty mountain range stretched beyond the horizon. "When did the fissures start to appear?" she thought. The first year after the war was full of uncertainty, but also hope. It wasn't easy, but they managed, and the next two years were the happiest time of her life. And then the subjects from all over Etheria came with the demand that the Queen should hide Etheria again, that she would take away the stars and everything would be as before. A shocked Glimmer said that even if she could have done it, she would never have done it, so they all dispersed disconsolately. Then, The Star Sisters seceded the Star Isles, claiming that they still had not received justice for the Pulsar's death and Halo's maiming during the time of the first alliance. There was little they could do about it, since Hordak had exiled himself to Beast Isle. There had been no legal execution on Etheri for three hundred years, so no one would comply with their demands anyway. And then Lonnie led the People's Rebellion to "overthrow the ailing regime of the princesses and put power in the hands of the people of Etheria." At first, no one took them seriously until Castle Crypto was captured by a large force of former Horde soldiers. The inhabitants of Dryl, abandoned years earlier by their princes, paid her homage. They couldn't get her out of there, not without bloodshed. Comrade General Lonnie won some support. She demanded the punishment of the former leaders of the Horde, i.e. Her, Hordak and Entrapta, as well as all clones, the removal of the rule from the princesses and the complete isolation of Etheria. That's why they had to be especially careful. No one has died so far, but many people have been injured, some seriously. They didn't know what to do with it. It was said that at night she meets with strange winged creatures who spoke a strange buzzing language, but she considered them as fairy tales as stories about dragons, vampires or devils.

Hinking, she stood in front of a mural depicting Queen Angela. Brightmoon has been mourning for many years. First after King-Consort Micah, then after the queen who had ruled here for over three hundred years. She had never met the woman, not face to face, and now she wondered what she would think of her daughter befriending the former de facto leader of the Horde, even entrusting her with command of an army? She's gone, so thinking about it is pointless. But her spirit was felt everywhere. She was aware that she was responsible for her death ... Unless she met a worse fate. Glimmer had tried to ask Entrapta two years ago if she could rebuild the portal, but Entrapta had started fiddling with hers fixtures, pretending she hadn't heard what the queen was saying. She was not at all surprised by the behavior of the inventor, the previous time when the portal was built, the world was almost annihilated.

Looking at the mural, she decided that she would be able to talk to another person she knew was awake now. She went to the former Shadow Weavers garden. In the light of the stars and the dark moons, the great terrace looked quite lovely. After the death of the sorcerer, they decided that they would let the plants grow freely, the gardeners were only supposed to make sure that nothing withered. Glimmer asked asked that one bed of daisies is left here. Neither she nor Adora had any idea why, it was some kind of secret between the two sorcerers. Watching nature reclaim this place, she felt a bit of vindictive satisfaction. Like bureaucracy, Shadow Weaver loved gardening because it was about control and order. The plants could be pruned and shaped as they pleased, always obeying the will of the gardener. She wanted to know her charges just as much. If they disobeyed, she trimmed them... She shook her head. That mean woman had died five years, and she still thought about her almost every day. She was casting a shadow over her life and the lives of everyone she met. Bow once joked that the name Shadow Caster would suit her better, but then Adora seriously agreed with him. She was another Brightmoon ghost, her personal ghost. She didn't believe in ghosts and souls and things like that, at least for most of her life. The people of Etheria believed in different versions of life after death. A better place, reincarnation or union with the universe. She was brought up with a distaste for spirituality, and what she experienced instilled in her cynicism and distrust. She had always believed that death was the end of everything. This thought filled her with bitter comfort, for oblivion would bring her an end to the torment that was her life. She wasn't so sure of anything now. However, the dark sorcerer will always accompany her. She will feel her presence in the wounds she carried in her heart. Fortunately, Shadow Weaver had faded into darkness and she would never see her again, but there was another ghost in Brightmoon she intended to visit.

"Hello, Catra." Mikah called to her, turning away from the beautifully decorated precious telescope. He could sense her and Melog, because he always surrounded himself with protective spells when he was about to engage in something that required attention, or just to rest.

"Hello Mikah." she smiled slightly when she became visible again "May I sit down?" she asked, and the sorcerer nodded. She sat down on one of the three chairs around the table.

"Did you find what you were looking for?" he asked, stroking Melog's head. She shook her head.

"No, but I found a lot of things I didn't want to find, and now I'm tired." She rubbed between her eyes.

"But you're too excited and nervous to sleep. I know that." - He smiled sadly. - "Though I've never been in your situation. You have the right to feel bad." - said the sorcerer, sitting down opposite her.

She nodded.

 "I thought I had it all behind me. And this wedding. Don't get me wrong, I'm glad me and Adora are getting married and everything, but... I'm scared. Maybe if we didn't make it an interplanetary event."

She saw the sadness in the sorcerer's eyes as he began to talk.

"I understand you. When me and Angela got married, it was a big deal too. The first royal wedding in Brightmoon in three hundred and fifty years. And with an ordinary mortal, an ordinary sorcerer. Angela wanted to show everyone that this is the will of their queen and no one has the right to question it. It was then that the first alliance was made. I guess it's a good thing Glimmer didn't decide to make some kind of interplanetary agreement along the way."

"She considered it, but she wouldn't have had time to settle everything with our allies before the anniversary." she murmured and yawned. They sat at the table in silence for a few minutes

Many would argue that there should be hatred between the two of them rather than friendship. Mikah had every right to blame her for the death of the wife he loved so much. After the War, she asked him for forgiveness, but he had every right to refuse it. For what do the words mean? She had every right not to trust him, for he was a sorcerer and the ward of the one who had hurt her so much. But he forgave her, and a friendship developed between them. This was because they didn't really know each other before. Mikah had never met the old Catra, he knew her as she is. He had not known her hatred and self-destructive rage directed at everyone around her. And she heard more about him only on board the Darla. She had a general idea that Queen Brightmoon had a husband, but that was abstract knowledge to her. For almost everyone else, he was a symbol, their heroically dead king, whose death became proof of the evil represented by the Horde. Even Adora saw him like that. When they looked at him, they did not see a living man, but a ghost, someone who was supposed to be dead. She, the one who gained a new life after the War, saw in him a tired man who had lost almost everything.

Mikah sipped the weak wine from the goblet. She looked away. Because of Shado Weaver, she never drunk alcohol. The sorcereres had a penchant for the nasty, and officially illegal, tech-department moonshine, and she got even worse than usual when she drank it. She didn't want to risk becoming like that. Adora also rarely drank. She had a very weak head, and while she became adorably dorky when drunk after the events of the nanovirus, they were a little afraid to let her get into that state. Bow only drank alcohol on their trips with the Sea Hawk, and he usually got very sick afterwards, and Glimmer liked a glass of wine sometimes. Mikah, however, drank quite often, although he was still far from the border of alcoholism, but the queen asked her to keep an eye on him.

She looked at the beautiful telescope.

"Why are you doing this, actually? The starlight that reaches us dates back thousands of years. They are only shadows of a long-gone past." she asked frowning as Melog sniffed the device.

" Someone has to describe all the stars visible in our sky. Other civilizations have had millennia to do this. We have to make up for it" he replied with a friendly smile.

"At least let Entraptta build you a modern telescope. He'll probably design you a better one while you're brushing your teeth" she said skeptically.

"It's a gift from Empress of Eridani. It belonged to a great astronomer. It had survived the years of Prime's occupation in hiding, it would be foolish to lock him up in some closet now."

She reached for the book on the table. Its title was *A Thousands of Thousands Mas*ks. There were dark shapes on the cover.

"Shadow Weaver would love to read it." she said, wincing. We are coming back to her again

Mikah smiled mysteriously.
"If she had read this, our lives would have been completely different. But she couldn't do it. It was written in Dreadcore, Mystacor's dark brother, and the only copy was in George and Lance's library."

"What is she talking about?" she asked and yawned again.

"About the mighty being called Nyarlathetop and theirs infinite faces."

She snorted contemptuously.
- Someone like those Iomdi and Sereni people they talk about on Eridani?

He nodded cautiously.
"In some way." he said slowly.

She put her feet on the table, feeling the exhaustion slowly taking over. Melog jumped on the table and cuddled up to her legs. She looked at the sky.

"You think the stars... That they are right?" she asked.

"Fortunately not." he said, covering her with his cloak. "I'll go to the valley of Shattered Armors in the morning, but tell Glimmer I'll be back for the wedding."
She nodded and closed her eyes. But before Mikah left, she asked

"Have you forgiven her? I did, but only because she died. It's easy to forgive the dead." and she fell asleep.

This chapter was originally supposed to never be, but I thought it would be useful to return to the old heroes, and I also needed to write down for myself what the situation on Etheria looks like.

In the Mountains of Dryl

"Lonnie, could you remind us again of the names of our allies?" Kyle asked anxiously, looking at the abyss stretching to the right.

She grit her teeth to hold back her anger.

"I've told you a million times. Mi-Go. That's four letters, two syllables! How come you can't remember that?" she growled, turning to the boy.

"When I think about them, I remember their buzzing, and then they start to remind me of bees, I'm afraid of them." said the blond man, adjusting his backpack.

She narrowed her eyes.

"Since when are you afraid of bees?!" she asked in amazement.

"About the time I found out I was allergic to bee venom," Kyle said, trying to keep his balance, though the backpack weighed heavily on his back.

"How do you know that? If a bee ever entered the Fright Zone and didn't die immediately, it committed suicide after looking around!" she said loudly, gesticulating violently with her hands.

"From the tests they did on us in the Fright Zone. They did to all of us. Turns out I'm allergic to bee venom, lactose and Luia's pollen. Rogelio." he pointed to a rather depressed lizard who carried a backpack heavier than' Kyle himself, had a strange black cylinder under his arm The Imp was cowering on his shoulder in the cold wind despite the warm sweater they made him sew he has allergy on feathers and you on shellfish"

"Shellfish?" She looked at him in consternation "I've never had any allergies to shellfish ... sooner cats..." she smiled inwardly.

"Because you've never eaten any, and you know, these Migu ..." he didn't finish, because she interrupted him.

"Mi-Go! I just told you! And I know where you're going, but I won't turn back! We need technology! The weapons these creatures offer us!" She screamed at Kyle until he backed up onto his back and kicked his legs like an upside-down beetle. She rolled her eyes and helped him up.

"I'm just worried about you and all of us. These creatures… I don't trust them, we've never heard of them before. Not before the end of the war." Kyle said in an apologetic voice. "They are terrible and do terrible things." he tried not to look at cylinder that was held by Rogelio . The lizard nodded at him.

"Highlanders from Drill were in contact with Mi-Go since the time of the First Ones. To these beings, your appearance is equally repulsive." A soft, slightly metallic voice came from the cylinder. A metal tentacle ending in a cybernetic eye slid out of the device. Rogelio and Kyle flinched simultaneously.

"They can be terrible, as long as they deliver what they promise" Lonnie said firmly.

"Comrade General Lonnie, are you going to order stopover?" asked a young woman with scarlet hair. Her tone was polite, but she had a sneer on her face. She held the sorcerer's staff in her hand.

"Comrade Scarlet, thank you very much for the question, but it was just a little consultation" she replied sharply.

Scarlet bowed humbly to her and walked forward. I hate her, but she is necessary. Why do I always have to deal with people I hate? It's good that at least this time I'm giving the orders she thought, smiling as if she wanted to growl at the red-haired woman.

"All right, Rogelio, Kyle, let's go! she called to them and goes towards Dead Mountain, where they were to meet their new allies."

The Drill Mountains were the largest mountain range in Etheria in terms of both area and height. The weather here was absolutely unpredictable and violent. Rainless storms lasted here for years, and winds capable of carrying boulders weighing several tons rose in a few seconds, only to subside soon after. The mountains were criss-crossed by numerous tunnels that made traveling through the region easier, but unfortunately Lonnie's allies had chosen a rendezvous point away from most settlements and underground passages, as if they were deliberately trying to make it harder for them to get here.

The first time they sent their minions, two Boarpeople who brought a cylinder with Dr. Moors. It was already evening and she was making the rounds of the outer defenses. Her subordinates reluctantly explored the interior of the ancient stronghold. They had copied data from the datapad, probably stolen from Scorpia, because it had a picture of her, Entrapta, and Catra glued to the back, but the map still failed sometimes, as if the castle didn't want anyone to know its secrets. The Boarpeople came from one of the settlements scattered in the many valleys and valleys of the Dryl. She told the guards to let them in. They introduced themselves as friends of the Whisperers in the Dark and brought someone she should meet. She knew the stories of beings whispering in the dark on the mountaintops, but she didn't believe them. But then the cylinder spoke.

"Hello Comrade General Lonnie, I am Doctor Moors. We met before in the Fright Zone when you were a kid. Of course, I looked a bit different back then, but iassure you it's much better this way."

Then, as she stood in the courtyard of Castle Crypto surrounded by her subordinates, she thought for a moment that it was a joke and wondered if it wasn't another of Entrapta's ridiculous inventions that had gone mad. The Doctor extended his tentacled arms, and a small window appeared on the top of the cylinder through which they could see what was inside. Though she'd seen a brain both in pictures and one preserved in formalin in anatomy class, nothing had prepared her for something like this.

"Ugh, hello, comrade doctor. I'm glad you're in good health, and we're glad you're happy in general." she said, confused.

" I learned that you are fighting for the people of Etheria... and I came here representing my... superiors. The Mighty and Ancient Mi-Go will gladly help you… in exchange for small favors."

It took her a moment to process the top hat's words.

"They're from there, from the stars." She pointed upwards where the first stars of the evening could be seen. She was perhaps not as distrustful of them as most of Etheria's inhabitants,

"Ahh, just like our ancestors. Few have the right to call themselves natives of Etheria. But the Mi-Gos were here before the arrival of the First Ones, and they will wander the dark emptiness of space on their wings long after our civilizations are nothing but dust."

She winced at such boasting. Hord Prime had made her immune to such talk. She had once believed the Horde's propaganda and still considered herself a soldier, but she could tell when someone wanted to appear more powerful than they really were. She looked at the cylinder from which several tentacles sprouted. Some apparently were used for locomotion, others for manipulating objects, and still others ended in what looked like eyes.

"You can trust him... Comrade General. I've heard of these beings. They are a highly ancient race that possesses technology beyond anything we possess." said Scarlett. In her intensely green eyes, she saw delight mixed with greed. I don't trust you, much less trust someone who packs living brains in cans.

"What do you have to offer!? Just be brief! I have a Rebellion to lead!" she said menacingly looking at the doctor locked in cylinder.

"Like Scarlet said, we're offering you technology that will give you an advantage over the princesses." he said. Imp flew to the top hat and sniffed it, then touched it with his hand. The Doctor directed one of his tentacles at him, and the winged man jumped back. Rogelio took it on his shoulder and stared hard at the ominous creature.

The doctor was right. She had several thousand battle-hardened soldiers with her and a lot of equipment they had managed to get hold of. However, Drill's production capacity was limited compared to the Fright Zone, and many of technicians sought employment somewhere in the realms. Most importantly, against all the princesses, wizards and moon-cursed She-Ra, they could only stand Scarlet, who was self-taught sorcereress.

"Okay, we can talk preliminarily, but be warned if…" She wanted to sound menacing, but her brain cut her off.

" I'll contact my… friends. I will stay here with you as a sign of good will." he said while signaling the Boarpeople to leave

The meeting was to take place in the courtyard of Castle Crypto, surrounded by her soldiers. Most of them wore reworked Horde armor, but repainted silver. Her private guard was clad in experimental heavy armor developed for the alliance before switching sides. Only a dozen or so were made, and Catra and Hordak were not interested in increasing the survivability of the soldiers, especially since they were expensive in materials. Fortunately, her technicians were able to start production, although it was time-consuming. Neither Hordak, nor Catra, nor even Hord Prime had a personal elite guard. she thought proudly. A few towers that were mounted on the moors were directed inwards. They waited in the light of accursed stars and dark moons. She, Kyle, Rogelio, those she trusted, and Scarlet and Doctor Moors, those she need, were waiting in the square. The young sorcereress was dressed in the robes of her trade that had once been sewn for her. The dark blue outfit was almost black in the dim light. A mystic, as she liked to call herself smiled mysteriously. For two days, the Doctor "sat" in Entrapta's former workshop, converted into the main workshop, as if he were just another strange object abandoned here by the former mistress of the fortress. Now he stood with his tentacles outstretched and waited.

" I don't understand, if you could contact them, why can't we?" Kyle asked, nervously looking around.

"Oh, you could talk to my friends too, if you had the same transformation as me. I assure you it's worth it." one of the tentacles reached towards the blond-haired boy's face, and he jumped back with a short cry. Rogelio hit her hard with clear disgust.

"Won't you protect your boys from our sweet abomination?"Scarlett asked. She gave her a menacing look.

:"They are not my boyfriends, our relationship is much more complicated and it is none of your business." she threatened the sorcerer. She just smiled evilly at her.

"Who would have thought that life would ever become so complex." Everything seemed so simple in the Fright Zone, at least until our blonde friend started honoring and the cat showed her claws.

She narrowed her eyes. They weren't friends with each other. Scarlet wasn't friends with anyone, but unlike Catra, she didn't annoy the cadets either. She only annoyed the trainers, but she never got in Shadow Weaver's way. It was all the easier because most of the time she was cleaning toilets or standing guard at the treatment plant. The number of statutory penalties exceeded even today's Grand Marshal, but she never made the dark sorceress angry. Did your talent show up then? Is that why you didn't want Shadow Weaver to notice you? So she doesn't get rid of you as a potential competitor.

"It's really better for you to keep quiet."said Lonnie

"Indeed, you are right. I'm silent now." she said turning away from her

They waited two hours. Dryl's great batbats flew blotting out the stars, unconcerned with the sight that so terrified many of her planet's inhabitants. When Mi-Go showed up, at first they thought it was one of those huge wolf batbats that were supposed to live deep in the mountains and supposedly could snatch a young flanneling. However, the wingspan was much larger. The creature landed soundlessly on six limbs. She gasped at the sight of him. She was very tolerant of beings with a different physique, she slept with Rogelio after all, but that being…. It looked a bit like a cross between a crustacean and a cockroach, but it wasn't covered in chitin, but something rubbery in texture. It was difficult for her to determine where the head began, she could only see something flat, finished with poppies where the face was. The legs were much more flexible than those of insects. The pair of pincers was more delicate than Scorpia's, but she felt they allowed her to manipulate objects much more freely.

"Good night Comrade General. You can call me Connector." he said. His voice sounded like bees buzzing, but it was understandable. Imp curled up on Rogelio's shoulder, and the lizard himself didn't look very confident. Kyle looked at his friends anxiously.

"Hello, Connector. We were supposed to negotiate a deal…" she said, though she wasn't sure exactly what she wanted.

"Oh yeah. Our species has made deals with… young races for hundreds of millions of years. We will be happy to get along with you. You pulled the planet out of the dimensional pocket and defeated the Horde, so you have credit with us" he croaked. She preferred not to explain that none of this was their fault. In fact, they spent almost the entire occupation hiding in the Crimson Wastes. She wasn't proud of it, but they were ordinary people, not wizards or princesses. They had no powers... But they didn't bring the Horde at least...

"What do you have to offer us?" she asked. Out of the corner of her eye, she saw Scarlet licking her lips as she studied the creature with absolute fascination. The creature reached under it with its pincers and took out something that it must have held under it with organic grips, perhaps with small tentacles? Then he placed the oblong object at her feet

"You gave me a stick, a moondamn stick! - she shouted. Are these beings just trying to make fun of the lesser races? She felt the creature laugh.

"It's Staff of the Wanderer of the Infinite Sky from Leng." Mi-Go said, and she heard Scarlet suck in a breath.

"Leng? Is this somewhere in Prime Empire? Another lost First ones colony?" she asked skeptically, nudging the stick with her shoe.

"The nightmarish Plateau of Leng s not on any planet but in Dreamlands. You can get there mainly by falling into mystical sleep, or through secret cracks in the fabric of the reality. Supposedly, some of them are here in Dryl. Flesh-eating ghouls and mysterious denizens of Leng live on the plateau. In its valleys there are gods and horrors beyond description. I'd like to go there someday." said the mystic in a dreamy voice.

If Shadow Weaver and Entrapta had a child, it would be you she thought, and shuddered because captured Prime's technology made it possible. She reached for the staff and was surprised to feel the power, just like once when she was in the Black Opal chamber… Or near She-Ra… It was made of an unfamiliar metal. It was covered in runes she couldn't read, but they certainly weren't made by the First Ones. "It's rather good? They created the heart of Etheria. They made the sword." She tilted her head to the side.

"For Honor..." She started to whisper and felt herself blush. It's idiotic. I'm Lonnie, the comrade, not dumb heroine.

|It is made of pure adamantium. It can withstand even the impact of Sword of Protection. It has been enchanted by great power… Try it yourself." the creature buzzed.

She gripped the metal staf with both hands, as she had been taught all these years in the Fright Zone. This weapon was slightly longer that one she was training and much lighter than she thought it should be. It fit well in the hand. She walked over to one of the several tanks parked in the yard becaouse of lack of a better place. She took off the canvas sheet and took a swing. As she hit, she heard a wailing whistle. The tank's armor cracked at the point of impact. She stared dumbfounded at what she had done.

"You know Lonnie, we have a limited number of tanks so don't destroy any more."Kyle said stunned as he stared at the damaged machine. She smiled triumphantly.

It's… she couldn't find the right word…

"This is only part of the artifact's capabilities. Touch the first rune from the handle by pointing the tip of the stick at an object." the creature buzzed

She shrugged and pointed to a metal box. First, she felt the stick become an extension of her own hand, and then... Then the box lifted slightly above the ground. She felt like she was lifting herself. She heard those strange wailing whistling noises over and over.

"Move the cane a little and see how it moves." said the Connector. She did as he said. She could move the box in the air as if she was holding it in her own hand. She did whatever she wanted with it. She smiled and took swings. The box flew and hit the walls of the fortress with all its might. Sweat ran down her back.

"The heavier the object is or the more rapidly you move it, the more you tire... Now point the Staff to a place, as long as it's not too far or too high." stated Mi-Go. She pointed to the seat in front of Rogelio and pressed. She saw a flash, then a wailing howl, and suddenly she was in front of the lizard, smelling the stew they had eaten today. She took a deep breath. It was amazing!

"The rune takes a minute to recharge. The range is about three hundred meters. Now touch one of your friends." the Connector suggested. She hesitated. She didn't like the suggestion very much. The creature didn't seem trustworthy to her.

"It won't hurt anyone, I swear." Mi-Go said. She cautiously approached Rogelio and asked.

" I can?"

After a moment's thought, the lizard nodded. She touched him with the tip of her staff. Then his eyes were covered with mist.

"What happened to him?" she asked fearfully.

"You took over his mind. Now, until the next sunrise, he will obey your will." said the creature.

"I don't want it to be like this, tell me how to make it like it was before, because you won't get out of here alive." she threatened Mi-Go.

"Hit him pretty hard." the creature buzzed.

"I… I'm sorry," she said, and punched him hard in the stomach."Her friend doubled over, but his eyes regained their sparkle. He began to purr loudly, gesticulating violently. It pointed to a stick. It's on Lonnie and finally on Mi-Go. Lonnie had known Rogeiio since she was a child, so she understood what he meant. She turned to the Connector and started toward him, the artifact in her hands. She hit him with all her might. Mi-Go flew to the castle wall. A blow that would have shattered a tank didn't make much of an impression on the creature, except for a large indentation. The staff was covered in yellow gore that smelled of ammonia.

"It was exactly as I said, it not hurt him. You hit him. You could have waited." There was no guilt in the creature's buzzing voice, only amusement. She felt tears come to her eyes.

"Throughout the occupation, we managed to avoid being chipped. Prime never had any power over us, he didn't break us and…"

"You now have a fraction of his power. As one of the few on this planet, you can control others like puppets. And you received this gift from us as a gesture of goodwill. Think about what else you can get from us as our cooperation develops. I can see in your eyes that you've made up your mind."

She closed her eyes. The creature was right. Even now she could feel the power flowing from the staff...

"Okay, tell me what you want." she asked grimly.

"Meet us in a week at the top of the dead mountain. Bring as many Sorcerer Crystals as you can." it buzzed and took off into the air. She noted with satisfaction that his flight was not straight. She looked at the staff and tightened her hands on the handle.

I need power and they will give it to us

So the five of them walked to Dead Mountain, though only one of the five of them was really happy with the trip. They wore thick fur cloaks that they put over their new-old armor, which are the Horde armor, which they repainted silver and in place of the old Horde symbol, they inked the sign of the People's Rebellion, which is Etheria surrounded by its moons. Kyle and Rogelio carried old shock batons, and the lizard he had blaster obtained from Prima Clones. In addition to her staff, she had a rock breaker. Larger and bulkier versions of this were used by the Horde after they incorporated Castle Crypto to break gates. However, it was a smaller and more practical version, often used by the inhabitants of Dryl for ... many purposes. It fired a small recoilless explosive capable of shattering a metal door. "Or someone's skull," she smiled grimly. For now, they avoided killing as much as they could, but she feared that one day someone would die and the conflict would escalate. They must be ready for it, and that's why they pinned so much hope on this meeting ... at least for her.

Rogelio has been gloomy and angry since she used the staff on him. He was reluctant to talk to anyone without being asked. Kyle was trying to lead her away from her goal. He feared that dealing with these beings would bring misfortune upon them. She loved them both with all her heart. They have been with her forever and have never let her down. But they will not deter her from what she has decided. But she didn't want to lose them. He has to do something to convince them of this decision.

Of course, Scarlet had no worries. They hadn't been friends before the victory, and they weren't now. She had no idea what had happened to that woman in the first three years since the end of the War. She had learned sorcery somewhere, but certainly not in Mystakor. Her power wasn't great, but she could do some things even Shadow Weaver didn't know. She came to them, to the camp in the Crimson Waste with a map of Castle Crypto, without which the entire Rebellion would not have been possible. It was with the seizure of Entrapta's former seat that their activities began in earnest, and the Queen and Catra now had to reckon with them... Only it didn't change the fact that she still resented that woman. Maybe not as much as Catra, who had betrayed them twice, but she still annoyed her. Scarlet didn't believe in their cause, all she wanted was…power? authority? She wasn't sure. Will she be my very own Shadow Weaver? she thought anxiously.

Imp became their mascot, but also something more. Prime placed a high bounty on him, and during the occupation they had to protect him. Most former Horde soldiers would have given up the little spy Hordak without hesitation, but he was as much a victim to the three of them as they were. Abandoned by its creator in the last moments of the war, it required care. He wasn't a kid of course, actually he was a bit older than her. Now most of the soldiers liked him, even respected him for his scouting abilities.

She didn't know what she thought of her "Father". Hordak had his new family on Beast Island, and he was out of their reach...at least for now.

At last they came to the foot of Dead Mountain. It wasn't particularly high. It looked like a rounded solid block of granite, completely out of place with the rest of the soaring peaks of the Drill. Climbing it would be easier than all the walking here, but she decided they deserved a rest anyway.

"Let's stay here for a while and eat something." she said in the most cheerful voice she could muster. Kyle smiled and unwrapped their provisions. They were pies stuffed with spicy vegetables and meat. They were cold but still tasty. After leaving the Fright Zone, they vowed never to eat food packets and enjoy real food. The meal made even Rogelio cheer up, and he offered her curdled milk. It was like before...

"It is interesting." said Scarlett. She was standing by a tall stele that at first they took for a bizarre signpost. Its crown looked like a spider turned backwards, with eight legs supporting a spherical stone. It was covered with writings in the same language as those on her staff.

"Atlach-Nacha." the red-haired sorcerer suddenly said "The Spinner of Darkness. It's quite funny, considering our experience"

" Can you read it!?" Kyle exclaimed in surprise. The sorcereress turned to them confused, as if they had caught her doing something wrong.

"I know this language a bit" she said, obviously hiding something from them.

"And what is written on my staff." she asked the red-haired woman sharply, but the other one answered her smiling contemptuously.

"Just what the Connector told you." Scarlet said

The good mood was gone. The pancakes didn’t tasted anymore.

"This bodes badly for everything. And those shellfish…" Kyle said in a scared voice

"Mi-Go are fungi." Scarlet corrected.

"Just say you want us to turn back!" She yelled at him, blushing furiously.

"It wouldn't be such a stupid idea after all." The blonde said, and Rogelio nodded his agreement.

"And what? How do you envision the next fight? Without weapons from these creatures, we have no chance of winning!" She felt despair rising in her heart.

"You know, Lonnie, maybe it's time to think about negotiating. The Queen will certainly accede to some of our demands." he said, and there was a terrible silence. It seemed to them that even the wind howling through the jagged peaks had ceased. At first she wanted to explode with rage and threaten them. Intimidate them into obeying her commands. I am not Catra. She took a deep breath and said.

"Some demands? What are we to give up? To bring justice for what was done to us, to all the people of Etheria? Giving up the rule of the people, not to those who have it just because they wield magical power? From ensuring the safety of the entire planet? Tell me what's not important anymore. "she looked at him hard

"I don't know, but we can make concessions in each of them. We don't have to take revenge…" Kyle said slowly.

"You think I want revenge? We don't even have anything to avenge, except for our ruined lives! Hordak sits on Beast Island and pretends to he didn’t want to do anthing wrong. and they're making Catra and Adora's wedding a moondamn state event! Tell me, does our everscreaming leader live in conditions like those he sent to their deaths? No, they've built themselves a lovely outpost where they're happily doing research. And all those who died during the war. It was mistake? Horde citizens, especially us cadets, are also victims. We gave our lives in the fight for fantasies, for lies! We don't have a past or a future. All we can do is fight, and we've been made damn good soldiers." she was explaining, but Kyle cut her off.

"We can sew, we can repair shoes, and Rogelio is a great cook." he said with a nervous smile. She chose to ignore him.

"They tell us about conditioning and the warped shaping of the psyche. and us? We too have been conditioned and perverted, have any of us done as much evil as he has? Except for Catra, of course." She clenched her fists "At least Hordak was imprisoned, although with better conditions than those in which most of the citizens of the Horde had to exist. But Catra was rewarded for her crimes. Throughout her rule, we tried to kill or imprison our former colleague because she resented the fact that she had abandoned her. Her, not all of us, by going over to the enemy's side. And now they slept together and everything is fine, and the fact that we risked our health and lives, that we hurt others, does not count anymore? And why was all this? In the name of… that they took offense at each other? And now Catra is the Grand Marshal, and everyone is happy, though if Prime hadn't arrived, she'd still be scheming." she took a few steps back and forth to calm herself down.

"But you and Catra… you never liked each other and…" Kyle started, but she cut him off

"Because when we were nine years old, this psychopath attacked me for no reason! She's Shadow Weaver's true daughter and she can't deny it. She and Entrapta almost killed all of us twice. Twice!" she laughed unhappily: "Entrapta is not much better. She had no qualms about making deadly weapons until Catra got mad at her and sent her to Beast Island. The mere fact that she married someone like Hordak says a lot about what kind of person she is. They should all answer for their actions. So did Shadow Weaver, but she got away with it because she was dead."

She crouched down to think for a moment. Out of the corner of her eye, she noticed that Scarlet smiled when she talked about the fate of the dark sorcereress, but she had no intention of guessing what the red-haired girl was thinking.

"Power should be transferred to the people. The fact that princesses have magical powers does not entitle them to rule over people in any way. Let's look at Scorpia. We all know she's nice and has always treated us well, but let's be honest. She was no good at leading a squad, let alone running a country. Entrapta has left her own kingdom, Adora, well... She doesn't rule anything. I don't know much about the others, but I doubt it's any better. The people of Etheria suffered for thirty years in a war they could not win. And it probably would have taken twice as long, but the queen's mother had died, and then she used ancient technology with Entrapta's prudence to get her revenge. And not only did she hardly destroy Etheria herself, but she also brought Prime to us. So what if She-Ra beat him. Now anyone can come here and attack us. The universe is full of Hordaks." she said and looked up at the sky covered with stars.

"Only darkness comes from the stars.: she said softly.

"The true darkness lurks in the space between the stars, promising power to anyone who proves worthy." Scarlet interjected unexpectedly. She looked at her surprised. She had no idea how much of her speech the sorceress had listened to, but she didn't really care, because she wasn't the one who was addressing her speech. Kyle and Rogelio looked like they had taken her words to heart, or at least thought about them.

"I understand Lonnie, but I'm afraid that ... everything will get out of control and we will only make things worse." Kyle said in a depressed voice.

For sure everything will get out of control, it always happens. That's why we need to prepare. But she patted him on the shoulder.
- Don't worry, everything will be fine, now come on - she knew she was lying to her friend - We can't be late, it would look bad.

Dead Mountain was called that way for a reason. On the way, they did not encounter anything living, not even a tiny insect. It was also very cold here, the icy wind penetrating under the furs. Kyle was shivering from the cold, Rogelio took out the blanket and covered him with it. However, they did not slow down because they had to hurry to meet their new allies. They reached the top almost perfectly, whenever the dark moons were in the sky. The wind howled, and now everyone was chattering their teeth. But so far no one was there "You're not afraid of an ambush?" asked the blonde haired man,

"They wouldn't gain much from it" she said, though deep down she wasn't sure. These creatures were so alien.

They came in silence. Five winged figures descended on the flattened mountaintop. She recognized the Connector, to her disappointment it looked like the wound she had inflicted on him had already healed. The other two looked like soldiers. They had strange blasters in their paws that looked organic. Strange tentacles were wrapped around their pincers. Next Mi-Go was bigger than the others and had strange egg-like packages underneath him. The last one had a thicker 'skin' with many long protuberances. There was a strange antenae in the middle of the torso.

"Good night, Comrade General Lonnie. I am the Overseer and I run this small facility. I am very happy about our cooperation. We brought you weapons in exchange for sorcery crystals. " Mi-go buzzed, and Rogelio and Kyle took out the crystals. Mi-Go set up the containers, which opened and a terribly stinking mist began to come out of them. With some disgust, her friends began extracting organic items from them that were similar to the ones the warriors carried with them.

"These smaller eldrith arquebuses which strike with cold and are capable of killing the tissues of a living thing." Said the Overseer. His voice was stronger than the Connector. Kyle took the arquebus and fired it at the stone, which cracked, most likely from the water freezing inside.

"The larger ones are the Howling Muscets. They can tear flesh from bones with sound." said the Overseer. Rogelio grabbed the muscet and fired at the boulder, which shattered with a crash.

"And these are the Hunter's Claws. They are sharper than steel" the Mi-Go leader said. She reached into the container and pulled out a gauntlet that wrapped tentacles around her wrist. It wasn't a nice feeling. She'd never had an octopus in her hands, but she suspected it wasn't half as disgusting as this thing. Still, the strange gauntlet fit perfectly. She walked over to the remains of the boulder and hit the largest piece with all her strength. Cracks appeared on the surface of the stone.

"Now Catra I have claws too" she said softly and turned away, then turned to the Overseer with satisfaction.

"It's great equipment. We will bring you more crystals soon.

"We won't be needing the crystals for a while. We have another request for you." the Mi-Go leader buzzed. She felt furious, though she should have expected it.

"What?! That was not the deal!" she shouted and Kyle, Rogelio and even Scarlet came after her.

"But there was no deal. You provided us with the crystals as we requested, and we provided you with the weapons. Now we're asking you for something else." replied the Overseer. She clenched her fists, including the one in the glove, and drawled slowly.

"What do you want."

"Originally there was a listening base. We were watching the great project of the first ones then, but unfortunately we were detected and Mara in her new form slew all my former subordinates. Fortunately, they did not detect our base, and I bred new subordinates for myself." the Overseer buzzed without emotion, telling about the death of his kin.

She narrowed her eyes, not knowing how to react to Mi-Go's story.

"Mara? Was that the previous She-ra? How could you know her, that was a thousand years ago." she asked suspiciously. These creatures have never lied before. Out of the corner of her eye, she saw the doctor awake and his tentacles extend. He was talking to the Liaison in a language they didn't know. She didn't like it, but she had to deal with the Overseer.

"Much more time passed. In the meantime, however, a mysterious event on a cosmic scale has occurred and my memory no longer works as it used to. Therefore, I am asking you for help in contacting my kin. To do that, I need you to build a relay a bit…"

"Need our help to contact other Mi-Gos who have managed to escape the wrath of the Galactic Horde?" she asked a bit skeptically.

"Our activities in the Empire have probably been extinguished, and those who remained went into sleep mode." the Overseer calmly explained.

"Those who stayed? The rest of your people hid on those planets that Prime missed for some reason?" she asked curiously. She'd heard a little about how things were with the old Empire.

She suddenly felt nauseous, her teeth began to ache, and the blood in her temples throbbed. She looked at her companions. Judging by their expressions, they felt it too.

"What are you doing to us?" she asked confused.

"Oh well, my joy is painful. Know that it's not easy to make me laugh." Said the Overseer. He was making strange movements with his pincers "I forgot this place is full of ignorant people. You believe, or rather you want to believe, that Hord Prime has conquered the entire known universe. Oh, his empire occupied only a small part of one of thousands of galaxies. Even in the one in which we exist, powers surpassing him have probably already rise.

She felt cold sweat running down her back. She got dizzy. I always knew. The universe is a scary place, but it's not full of Hordaks, it's full of Primes. No one realizes the danger that threatens the entire planet. Are others so blind? she thought in horror.

"We will try to help you... but you will have to give us more... Weapons and other equipment. Your new request will be difficult to fulfill." she said, crossing her arms over her chest and trying to look as threatening as she could.

"Don't worry, we'll help you. We'll send you the plans. Just remember, you have to hurry. It's been five years since you pulled the planet out of Despondos. Your queen's deed has not gone unnoticed by the current powers of the galaxy. It's only a matter of time until someone takes an interest in your home." said the Mi-Go leader.

Kyle placed a hand on her right shoulder.

"Lonnie, that's not a good idea. You remember what happened last time, when someone from off-planet was attempted to be sumoned... " he asked in a worried voice.

"There is nothing to fear, Comrade General. It is said that the Mi-Go have built colonies near every major world and have never attempted to conquer one. As you can see, they have better ways to get what they want." said Scarlet Finally she nodded.

"It's a choice of the lesser evil. Anyone who wants to win must be prepared to make difficult decisions." she said slowly. Kyle frowned but nodded in agreement with her.

When it comes to difficult decisions. I have another proposition for you she heard in her own head. She jumped up in fear. Her companions gave her questioning looks, but she said nothing, for she guessed that the Overseer was talking to her.

Don't be afraid, I can't read your mind. Back to my proposal. Most of you have not very volatile minds. We try to save the few notable ones from the fragility of your bodies by placing them in cylinders. However, there is one mind in this world whose genius can amaze even us. We want Entrapta's brain.

She felt her face turn green with disgust. It wasn't a fate she would condemn anyone to.

He didn't pretend to be so shaken. I have read your demands. You want to kill her lover, the father of her child, and sentence her to life imprisonment in Castle Crypto, where such great tragedies befell her. What we do to her will be an act of mercy. And our gratitude will be immense. We know where the First Ones warship is hidden. We will help you find it and run it.

She nodded her head, they can feel her nausea rising…

This chapter was also not planned. You can see a bit of my national flaw. We Poles believe that a good rebellion is a failed rebellion. And if the rebellion is winning, then something has gone wrong.

Silence and Scream

Rosie always tried to eat alone first before eating with others. She was very fond of talking, and eating and talking would be uncomfortable for her.

" Well, I'm an intern working for Dr. Qin. The university pays my salary for next half a year. My job is to help the doctor with everything. - She looked askance at the doctor." Which usually comes down to this, I have to carry her equipment.

Ysoka snorted.

"You have to work hard to get anything done. Nothing comes for free... Unless you're an aristocrat." she ostentatiously tried not to look at Lady Cala "You will learn how to handle expensive equipment. It will come in handy in your life for sure." the doctor continued. Rosie clenched her teeth tightly but didn't answer her.

The others ate dinner together at the table. There was Akitonese rice with vegetables, spicy soup with lizard tails, and some kind of reptile bird. The latter was too dry, but still tasty. There was also candied fruit and sweet alcohol made of something like apples, and juice. None of the dishes were salted, which Arkan-tar said meant they respected the guests here. Rosie had no opinion on that. After carrying the Doctor's equipment, she felt so hungry and tired that she absolutely didn't care. Now she looked at the others.

Lady Cala ate like a dame, listening politely as she told her about herself. Miss Daisy sat to one side and thoughtfully ate her dinner, washing it down with sweet Liquor. She liked the young aristocrat, though she was a little intimidating. Her guardian… There was something dark about her, but also some sadness that shone through the dark veil she covered herself with.

"So what's your plan? Because you understand that I'm not one of those who are in planning? You tell me where to aim and I'm the one pulling the trigger." Dilayla said with her mouth full of food. The woman looked soured all the time, as if she had been forced to drink vinegar. It was as tough as the steel from which her cybernetic prosthetics were made. She also drank alcohol, though she looked like she could drink more than they were brought. She eyed them all suspiciously.

"Well, the plan is not complicated, just difficult to execute. We need to find a ship on a planet where no one seems to want to go to where we want to go." said Arkan-tar. He struck her as a charming scholar who had explored places in the galaxy she had never dreamed of. Only there was something about him…as if he was always pleased with his cleverness.

"Do we have a choice? We'll tell someone like the Lord Admiral something went wrong? This planet was once supposed to be a prosperous colony, so maybe there is an old ship left somewhere... Or maybe someone will want to go in the same direction as us. - finished Rechiza, digging the meat on the plate with a fork. In her opinion, Lashunti was reserved, but also very penetrating. From the moment of their first conversation, she was very cold towards Miss Daisy. She seemed to notice that the woman was wearing a holographic mask. Rosie had noticed it the first time they met, she had good eyesight, which she often used to compensate for her lack of hearing. She understood that something like this might inspire mistrust, but she had the impression that Lashunti didn't trust anyone. She was a little terrified of it, but she understood that everyone has different experiences and that they shape their personal worlds. For her, most people she came across were kind and showed her support.

"I have the vague impression, my dears, that you regard this expedition as, at best, an attempt to infiltrate an enemy camp, and at worst a suicide mission." said Lady Cala, rising. She leaned towards them, looking down at them.

"Honey, this is a suicide mission. We're going to the Ravaged Zone, where no one comes back. Only death lurks there." Dilayla said with a predatory smile.

"If only death awaits us there, then why are you coming with us on this journey?" If my memory serves me right, then you are a mercenary – the aristocrat asked with a gentle smile.

"I've just been paid so much that if everything goes well and, most importantly, I survive, I'll have enough to spend the rest of my life farting." The half-elf straightened up in her chair, crossing her arms behind her head. She put her feet on the table, apparently not caring what others thought. Rosie, however, was convinced that the mercenary was hiding something. Something important to her.

"If you say so…" Lady Cala shrugged. "My family… The founder of my house is from there. Her name was Mara and she fought for that place and gave her life for it. If Etheria is worth dying for, then it can't be that terrible."

"I've seen soldiers die for a pile of rubble. Besides, since you left this whole Eterntia thing, it wasn't much fun there, was it?" Dilayla said and yawned.

Arkan-tar stood up and said

"I think we're looking too far into the future. It will be a long time before we reach Etheria. We may never get there if it turns out that along the way there are threats that even the Research and Exploration Fleet will not resist. In fact, no one requires us to fight what we encounter there. It can be said that in our hearts we all want to believe what Lady Cala says, but our mind tells us to prepare for what Dilayla warns us against."

Everyone nodded reluctantly, as if it was a compromise that no one liked. By the time the others had gone back to eating, Rosie had gotten up and started speaking in sign language as the gloved voiceover began translating everything aloud.

"I... I'm just an intern. I don't even remember my family. My capsule was found on the border of the Pact Worlds and a couple of learned people decided to take care of me. I have no one. My capsule had been in space for hundreds of years while I was frozen. I'm just a deaf-mute girl assigned by fate and the gods to this mission. I know that all this can end tragically for us ... But deep down I feel that we are part of something great. Something unusual. What can change the world." she said and blushed, feeling that she had made a fool of herself in front of everyone. "These are real travelers, they know what they're doing. I just carry things." she thought and looked down. The others were silent for a moment, but finally Lady Cala stood up, walked over to them, put her hand on her shoulder, and said.

"You have a big and brave heart, Rosie. It's good that you're with us." The aristocrat smiled at her and Rosie felt her blush.

Miss Daisy looked at her thoughtfully for a moment.

"So you're an orphan?" she asked thoughtfully. Rosie turned to her and smiled.

"I think so, I don't remember my parents and after so many years probably all my loved ones have already gone to a better place. Maybe it's better that I remember very little?" she said, feeling a strange, indescribable emptiness in her heart.

"Miss Daisy knows very well about raising orphans. She raised me and many others and they all remember her fondly." said Lady Cala, smiling at her tutor.
Miss. Daisy pursed her lips tightly and spoke hard.

"Indeed, they will never forget me."

Dilayla was more annoyed than usual. Previously, she had thought that the gloomy and overly secretive Rechiza and the nosy and insistently polite Arkan-tar would get on her nerves, but they were just an itch on her back. You could get used to them eventually. The rest of her companions began to annoy her very quickly. Dr.

Qin is a over smart scholar trying to mask her lack of creativity with academic snobbery. Miss Daisy… She was strange and far too gloomy for someone who claimed to be an aristocrat's tutor. She had a dark past, though Dilayla shouldn't remind anyone of that. Rosie Pearl was kind and naive, though there could only be someone raised on Absalom, though later it turned out that her story was a bit more complicated. She was afraid that the world would eat her up, chew her up and spit out her torn corpse. She was pretty, but she would feel bad hitting on her. But it was Lady Cala that worried her the most. At first she expected to be a pretty sweet idiot with too much money, not enough brains, who had fantasized about a magical quest after reading some old chronicles. Instead, she met a beautiful, strong and smart young woman who knows exactly what she wants. And that was unsettling, for such people did not engage in such endeavors unless their minds were tainted by madness or fanaticism, and she saw neither in her. She was way too beautiful and smart, too perfect. It made her uneasy in some way, though she couldn't quite tell how. He has to watch out for her...

After dinner, when the dishes had been removed, Lady Cala spread out a map of the city on the table.

"Listen, we need to find someone willing to sell us, or at least rent a ship that will take us to Etheria. I know it won't be easy, but we have to make it." She looked at them surprisingly imperiously, which contrasted so much with her earlier image of a nice and understanding girl, but Dilayla was not surprised. After all, she was an aristocrat, and what they had no problems with putting on such masks they needed.

"I can definitely visit the canteen at the port. They say they serve pretty good beer for this planet," Arkan tar said, smiling contentedly.

"It's good that you've found the perfect place to work, Arkan." said Rechiza sarcastically. Lashunti asked.

"I guess this is Respite." said Lady Cala, looking over her notes. They sell Coffee, Tea, and Ashrak there. The latter is a sobering drink made from the underground lichen that grows on Atrax.

"Yes, it's very tasty. I will go there. Anyone coming with me?" She asked, smiling slyly " Maybe you, Miss Daisy? You seem to like tea and other types of drink." she asked the grim elf. Miss Daisy turned to her and looked at her carefully, she answered slowly.

"Well, I don't like the sun here, but I'll gladly take the offer."

Well, Dilayla had already noticed that the mysterious sorceress wasn't pouring by the collar. The same could be said about her too. She was a mercenary, at least in theory, and had gotten drunk quite often, though she always went sober to the battlefield.

Speaking of liquors she got up and leaned over the table.

"And what is the name of the haven here for mercenaries and other adventurers?" she asked looking at the aristocrat. She if she'll play innocent or show off.

"There is a bar... Red Water. I think it's run by a Pahtra, a veteran of the Tarak War.

Rechiza frowned.

"Isn't that where the Lord Admiral comes from?" she asked, frowning.

"Yes, there was a civil war there, although I don't know the details, except that it was very bloody. Our great commander was then exiled, and began a new career. In fact, it seems to have worked out for him. It doesn't change anything, we don't tell anyone about our true purpose of our mission anyway, do we?" she raised an eyebrow.

"Okay, now that we've all divided up the chores, you can go" I have some errands to run here. said Lady Cala and rolled up the maps.

"I'll stay here and check the equipment. Rosie will help me. said the doctor, stretching herself out on the sofa,
- Unless someone takes me, right?" Maybe someone needs me more? - asked the intern, looking pleadingly at the others. Dilayla sighed. "The rat will torment her if I don't do anything"

"You can come with me. – she asked the girl getting up – Just remember, I don't avoid brawl. "She went to put on her power armor." Rosie jumped for joy.

As she donned the power armor, she thought about her past.

Her real life began with a scream.

That was over thirty years ago. It wasn't that much for a half-elf, but that's when she became what she is now. She was sixteen then. Her parents were visiting her uncle from capital at the time and left her to look after her younger sister Joan. In fact, she treated it like a punishnent. After all, she had better things to do, like going out with friends or something, but on the other hand, she hoped her parents would appreciate her Adult and Responsible Behavior. She never saw them again.

The attack took place at night. They didn't really feel the first effects. There was just no electricity at night. Water was still flowing from the tap, they couldn't hear explosions. Only in the morning, a friendly couple of neighbors knocked on their door and said that something terrible had happened in the capital of the planet, The Blackstone, and that the government had ordered an evacuation. But they didn't know anything specific. She woke up her sister and told her to pack. She had no idea where they were going, so she decided to go to the station. For a moment she considered visiting Gloria, her girlfriend at the time, and taking her with her, but then she decided that her mothers would take them to the country. They have their own all-terrain vehicle.

Besides, she had to take care of Joan. Her younger sister was terribly clumsy at times. She never saw Gloria again after that, had no idea what happened to her.

When they left the house, the first thing she saw were dark clouds hovering over their capital. She could see silhouettes of strange warships hovering over the city in the distance, but she couldn't observe them. Clouds obscured them… Only they weren't clouds, but smoke from burning houses. „We've been attacked” she thought in horror. Minitar was an isolated planet with a relatively small population, but they possessed enough forces to defend themselves from pirate attacks. Who could the invaders be? The Azlanti that have been talked about with fear for years? The Corpse Fleet she had been scared with since she was a child? She had no idea. My parents were there She felt sadness grip her heart.

She didn't stop any more, just ran to the train station, didn't let go of her sister's hand even for a moment. They quickly reached the station, where crowds of people, mostly parents with children, were already waiting. They did not take much belongings, only a few cans of food and bottles of water, and two blankets. They didn't even have enough supplies at home, no one was prepared for something like this. At first she was worried that she would look too grown up, that she would not be allowed to board and that she would have to let her sister go alone, but the carabineer at the entrance didn;t stopped her. He was not much older than her and looked like he wanted to join the rest of the passengers. It was cramped inside until she was suffocating. In front of her sat an old man holding the hand of a little boy, probably his grandson. Then the train started. She never saw her old home again and the town she grew up in adjacent to the capital. It probably wasn't destroyed, ironically, if they hadn't obeyed the command, the tragedy probably wouldn't have happened.

The journey took several hours. At some point, she began to feel overwhelming pressure on the bladder. Somehow she held out, but she felt that several children pis themselves. She had no idea where they were going. Minitar was a relatively recently colonized world with less than fifty million inhabitants. Only the southern part of one of the three continents was inhabited. At first she thought they were going to Silverfall, the second largest city on the planet, but then it turned out they were going to the high mountains in the northeast. Now she understood that the major urban centers were the first targets of attack. Minitar, rich in resources, had an extensive railway network, but only one highway ran through the entire inhabited area, which they had passed long ago. Behind this piece of the window that they saw, she saw only an endless forest-steppe.

Most of the passengers were half-orcs and half-elves, the original colonizers of the planet, but there were many Aasimar and Tieflings. Minitar was supposed to be a planet for hybrids, their new home. Unfortunately, due to its remoteness from the other major planets, there has been little immigration here. All she heard was a familiar accent over the din of gossiping voices. They talked mainly about the attacker, what he wanted from them and whether someone would drive him away, because no one believed in the strength of the local military forces. Everyone thought it must have been the Azlanti. According to them, a planet full of hybrids must have been an abomination. However, in the end one of the passengers decided to turn on the long-range receiver. A spirited voice echoed in the carriage.

"Do not be afraid! Horde Prime has come here to bring His light to this darkened world. Your false leaders are dead or have fled in terror at the scale of their iniquity. But there is still hope for you. Humble yourself and submit to his judgment. You and your world will be transformed according to his will. Prime sees everything, Prime knows everything. Fear righteous judgment.

The message then looped. They listened to it for several minutes without saying anything, then someone shouted to turn it off. This was done immediately. There was silence for an hour or two. Then a few people started whispering that the invader was quite reasonable and that he couldn't be that bad. But to Dilayla, he sounded like a complete madman. She was afraid to think what someone like that might want from them. The Azlanti might have been imperialist speciesists, but at least everyone knew they were reasonable and predictable to some degree. This someone seemed capable of absolutely anything.

They finally got there. It was a mountain town where wealthier citizens came to rest in the winter. Now they have been accommodated in hotels and sports halls. She and her sister got a bed and some food. Then they waited in silence. Joan had always been a quiet and slightly clumsy kid. Now she had withdrawn into herself, but at least she was obeying orders. Several people tried to turn on radios and other receivers, but received the same eerie messages.

In the morning, a message from the Elder, the speaker of parliament, was broadcast from the cars through loudspeakers, informing them that the army was putting up a valiant resistance to the enemy. But no one really believed it. There were rumors that the Capital and Silverfall had been taken, that the attacker was an AI, or that they were white demons from the Ravaged Zone. It was said that temples were attacked with particular ferocity and that mystics were killed on the spot. Nobody knew anything for sure.

Now, after all these years of fighting, she knew that the enemy had simply moved his forces to the other side of the continent to avoid the enemy's fortified positions. The first explosions were heard in the night. Donor station destroyed. She and her sister ran outside and saw the same alien ships in the sky as before. They also saw the real enemy. Walking machines of various kinds were moving towards the few defending soldiers. She saw them too, White Demons. They didn't really look that scary. Tall white figures slipped under the defenders' fire, knocking them down with well-aimed shots. She turned and saw Joan kneeling by some crying litle girl.

"Joan, we have to run." She grabbed her sister by the shoulder.

"But we can't leave her here." Joan said, staring at her with her over-mature eyes. The baby was cowering and no one was around. They can't leave her.

"What is your name?" she asked, barely controlling her terror.

"I'm Asin," she turned a tearful face to her.

"I'm Dilayla and this is my sister Joan. Now we're going to run, run as fast as we can." she said and stood up

They moved forward. She just didn't know where. They had to stay away from the attacker. Farther from death. She tried to run crouched. Some people tried to seek shelter in the cellars, while others tried to get out of the combat zone. She saw her one of the ships fired a green beam that hit temple of Desna. Many refugees, including children, found shelter there. They had to be far away or they too would suffer the same fate.

They came to a bridge where the army was trying to make some sort of barricade out of a couple of vehicles and sandbags. It was futile, but it stopped many civilians from escaping. Now she knew that the commander was as much an idiot as he was a warcriminal who had killed many innocents with his senseless stubbornness. She took the girl in her arms and turned into a side street. There were a lot less people here, maybe they'll make it.

Then they saw the enemy, the detachment circled the city, separating the people hiding there from the shelter of the mountain forests. Several different kinds of droids and two aliens. She threw herself into the bushes growing in the nearby yard, but Joan stumbled and one of the droids noticed her. He fired a warning shot, and all three froze in horror. One of the soldiers moved towards them. He slowly walked over to Joan and aimed the gun at her, but hesitated.

"It's a waste of Horde Prima resources. Mercy was shown to you…" he turned sharply. She looked in that direction. New ships appeared in the sky. Black purple with sharp edges. Their appearance must have been terrifying even to unsuspecting people, but she knew what fleet they belonged to.

Hellknights, gods... she thought. At that moment, she took it for granted that they had come to support the invaders. They were chsracters of countless tales about the crimes they committed in the name of absolute order... Allies of the devils who carried the fire of hell where they saw iniquity.
But then the ships of the hellknights opened fire on the ships of the invanders.

The alien turned and looked back, and she grabbed her sister's hand, and they started to run again, No one paid any attention to them now.
He ran to the side, trying to somehow slip between the planetary defense and the invaders. She didn't think, she was too scared to think. She couldn't feel the girl's weight. Adrenaline was pumping too much through her veins.

Finally, after long minutes, they managed to get out of the battlefield. The city was on fire, and so were the skies where the ships clashed. Again she heard the sounds of the war machines, so the three of them hid in a drainage ditch. She began to pray to all the gods she knew that no one would hurt them this time. The girl had pee herself long ago, soiling Dilayla's clothes.

She heard an inhuman roar, and then she felt herself losing control of her own bladder. She lifted her head and saw a monster coming out of the nearby forest. On six metal insect legs rose a corpus that made one think of a monstrous knight with a burning body. He held a huge trident in one hand and a steel net with hooks in the other. A second creature soon appeared, and red laser beams shot from the tridents. She heard an explosion and fragments of some droid flew past her. Then the infernal beasts charged. She clung to the ground, certain that they would be trampled by creatures from hell. However, by a miraculous twist of fate, they ran over the three of them. She heard the sounds of fighting, and the other shouts, much more human this time.
The clash didn't last long. Even such a ruthless opponent was not ready to face the unleashed fury of hell. Soon the soldiers moved on, with exception of one.

He heard heavy metal footsteps approaching them.

"Please spare us." she moaned with difficulty.

"I'm not going to hurt you, but you need to get out of here as soon as possible." she heard a strong but surprisingly ordinary voice. She turned to see the hellknight towering over her. He had an eclipse sun sign on his chest. In one hand he held a morningstar. With some hesitation, she got up and told her sister to do the same.

"Go that way. I have already informed my people that you are here…" He did not finish because they heard a powerful explosion. One of the attackers' ships was hit and taxi towards them. The knight looked at them and, after a short hesitation, jumped to cover the girl. Dilayla curled up and covered her head with her hands. Then she heard her sister scream, drowned out by the sound of the explosion

The first thing she saw was a sword. A sword surrounded by a golden solar rim. It was around the doctor's neck of android.

"Calm down, don't get up. You've been through a lot." he said in a calm, gentle voice.

"Where am I? What happened to me?" she asked. Her throat hurt, she felt as if she had swallowed gravel.

"You survived the ship's explosion, but you were seriously injured. You are in the hospital in Ironhill, on your planet.|

Memories slowly came back to her. She rose sharply.

"Where's my sister…" she called and looked at her hand. It was made of metal, cybernetical.

"Your arms and leg suffered enough damage that it was decided that it would be easier to amputate them and replace them with cybernetic prostheses, similarly your hearing was saved ... As for your sister, the knight Janos di Vir ordered to give her the best medical care and ... She survived, but her the damage was much more extensive, and there wasn't much biological tissue left, but after a long period of rehabilitation, she would function almost as before."

Almost like before she thought.

"What about the invaders?" did we win? She asked feeling tears welling up in her eyes.

"Yes, the enemy retreated, although almost a hundred thousand inhabitants of your planet died. The Order says it was the Dominion of Black." the doctor explained slowly.
But who is Horde Prime... she thought as she felt a dull throbbing pain throbbing throughout her body.

"What will become of us now?" she asked resignedly.

"As far as I know, the Order will take care of you." said the android.

In fact, that's what happened. She had been under the protection of the Order of Eclipse for four years, but refused to join it. She couldn't accept the lies they were telling. She has been a mercenary for thirty years, training until the day she meets hert foe again.

She met her sister only once after that. She wouldn't recognize her, not only from her appearance, but also from her behavior... Both of them were then born again. With that scream.

Writing this chapter was extremely slow, but here it is!

The Huntress, The Warlock and The Lictor.

Rehiza walked next to Miss Daisy, trying not to look in her direction, but the presence of the grim elf was like a thorn in the heel. "This woman is hiding something, something very dark, and I have sworn to stand against the darkness." But only what. In her opinion, Lady Cala was above all suspicion. A polite but not submissive aristocrat from a peripheral planet, raised from childhood to exercise power and lead people. At first she thought she might be the source of future trouble, and had even intended to go to Carurystal to find out more, but she ran out of time. Miss Daisy was not what she expected. an educated, but rather down-to-earth teacher of a highborn woman, and what she met was a person who emanated an aura of powerful magical power…and darkness. She also hid her face behind a holographic mask, and that never boded well. Not in that combination…

The streets of Saltmarsh were narrow and dusty, but oddly enough paved, They walked side by side for a long time in silence. It was quite crowded, the inhabitants of the capital tried to make it before the evening flight of flies. Miss Daisy walked confidently forward, and the passers-by yielded to her without a murmur. It came incredibly naturally to her, even the tall Vesk nomads kept out of her way. It wasn't what she expected from someone like that either.

"And how do you like Saltmarsh?" She finally asked, trying to smile with interest.

"Dusty, dirty hot... could be worse. But I've gotten used to the rain and the green of Carurystal, and I like it better," replied the grim Elf.

"Very different from where you come from?" Miss Daisy watched intently, but she didn't even slow down.

"What place are you talking about? Carurystal or my home planet? In both cases, the answer will be yes." the teacher replied sharply.

"Actually, where are you from? - Lashunti tried to keep her voice as gentle as possible.
"From Latroxia, but you probably know that, you finally had my dossier." She stopped and turned to the Lashunti, looking at her with her piercing green eyes.

"Yes, it's a peripheral planet, isolated from the rest of the galaxy, inhabited by Castroval Elves who wanted to preserve their thousand-year-old culture and tradition. They reject most of advanced technology. Little else is known, only a few are allowed to visit it, and even fewer leave it. In a word, an extremely mysterious place. Perfect for someone who wants to hide their true origin." Rechiza said with a mocking smile. Miss Daisy answered her with a similar smile.

"Yes, very convenient. To be honest, it absolutely doesn't matter what you think of me, any more than what I think of you. We both serve persons far greater than ourselves."

Rechiza frowned. What does she know?

"I serve the Lord Admiral and you Lady Cala, I don't think you mean anything else." she said without changing her expression.

"Indeed, and how could it be otherwise?" said elf and moved forward.

A few weeks earlier, Rechiza had entered the office of Liktor Janos di Vir. She stayed on the Dreadnought-citadel "Fading Sun", flagship of the Order. It was gloomy here, only a few lamps that perfectly imitated the light of torches illuminated the darkness of this room.

"I welcome you Rechiza, it's good that you arived so quickly" said the man with ebony skin, sitting behind a semi-circular red desk. His face was dotted with deep lines and numerous scars. Still, he exuded great strength. It was said that he once knocked down a Hezrou during a fight and survived an encounter with Marlith

"It is not proper to delay when Liktor summons you." she bowed politely

"But you are not a member of the Order, though you are willing to cooperate with us. I have a task for you this time as well. he said and stood up, then turned his back on her.

"You were summoned here because of events that took place more than thirty years ago. Then the planet Minitar was attacked by an unknown enemy. It easily overcame the local, not very strong, defense, and would probably have subdued it if we hadn't been around. It wasn't an easy fight. We had to call for help from our dark allies, and only then could we prevail. I was then only a young knight who took part in this short war. Without false modesty, I will say that I showed great courage at that time, which was appreciated. But I'm most proud of the lives I've saved. One of them belonged to a little girl named Asindesa." he turned sharply to her. "My adopted daughter."

"And the current Lady of Blades." Lashunt asked quietly

"She made a real career in the order. She fought for many years in the wars we fought. She became the embodiment of what is good in us, trying not to be infected by the darkness we carry. She faced the Swarm and the cultists, the most feared enemies you can meet. Now, however, he is going on a journey deep into the Ravaged Zone. And there she will meet those who attacked her planet.

Rechiza, stony-faced, listened to Liktor's word. While she disliked the ideas behind the hellknights, she respected Liktor and their goals often coincided.

"It is said there's a Swarm operating there?" she asked genuinely surprised. Janos di Vir nodded.

"That's what everyone says, but according to our information, it's not true. There is something different lurking there, though perhaps not so much. When we won at Minitar, we decided not to reveal what we know for now. It could cause chaos in the galaxy.

"And the Order can't afford that." she smiled understandingly. "But now there were problems."

"It's more complicated. said Janos di Vir and told her about mysterious event and the plans to send The Research and Exploration Fleet.

She frowned as she slowly processed his words.

"So you think someone initiated the use of this weapon, and twice, but both times it didn't unleash its full power? You're implying they where the same beings that attacked Minitar."

The Lictor shrugged.

"Or it was used by someone who was defending themselves from them. We don't know anything for sure, so we'll send a small group of people ahead of us to find out what it really was like and what lurks there."

"And I'm supposed to be in that group? Do you suspect the activities of cults and Great Old Ones?" she asked with a sigh. It's a matter for a pirate or someone from Starfinder society

"Yes, we suspect everything and everyone. There is one more thing. As I mentioned, Lady Cala will be participating in the mission. I recently learned that Asindesa visited Castle Grayskull, Cala’s ancestral seat on Carurystal, and was seriously injured there. However, during our last meeting, my daughter did not tell me anything about it."

"Do you want me to keep an eye on Lady Cala? she asked matter-of-factly. It was more suited to her abilities."

:"Yes. Just remember, this whole trip smells bad to me." said the lictor very seriously.

The Lashunti nodded, then asked.

"Ansindesa knows about these beings?" That they attacked her house" she asked, looking at Janos carefully.

"Yes, I told her during our last meeting." he gave her the datacore "Here you have all the information we managed to gather about the enemy. And remember…

"Yes, I know, trust no one." she smiled sourly. Do you think why I'm still alive?

Regaining her sense of smell was perhaps the most unobvious profit of what the Nyarlathetop had done to her. Over the decades of inhaling toxic fumes from factories or mystical decoctions, and several dark rituals and even a few less-than-successful experiments by Hordak, she had lost that sense. Now she felt the fullness of the flavors of the food she ate and the aromas of the teas she drank. She even accepted the stench, because the lack of a sense, even a relatively unimportant one, could exhaust mentally, distorted her perception of reality.

How did she last there? With her keen sense of smell, the stench of the zone must have been unbearable to her. Or was she just used to it since she was a child? You can get used to anything. I know something about this. she thought as she walked beside Lashuntka. She knew she should focus on her companion, but her thoughts wandered to her dark past and the future she feared so much.

And Rosie? What's it like to live in perpetual silence? she thought. It is likely that her hearing also suffered some damage during her previous life. The girl was surprisingly nice and positive about the world. If she had been cared for by someone like me… would she see so much good in others then? she smiled grimly. Rechiza looked at her, frowning.

Something amused you? she asked rather sharply.

"No. I've never been a laughing person. The last time I smiled serenely was five years ago. Usually, when I smile, it means I have thought something very unpleasant." she said without looking at the Witchwarper.

"Unpleasant for you or for other?" Lashunti asked with amusement.
She smiled in response.

The Respite was in the center of the city, between the market and the spaceport. It did not fit into the local style of architecture. It looked surprisingly "Modern" and "Normal", although to her none of the buildings she encountered outside of her former home looked "Normal". Even the conservative architecture of Carurystal seemed strange and very different from what she was used to. On the other hand, she didn't travel much in her own world. Only in the last five years has she been able to fully experience the countless variety of cultures that could be born in an infinite universe. Though I'd rather not start exploring the wonders of the universe of waking up on cursed Aucturn before face of Nyarlathetop's avatar.

As they entered, she smelled tea. She liked that aroma. The interior was kept in cool colors. The gray walls were slightly shiny, and the tables were black and made of what was supposed to be wood, but was probably some kind of plastic. The main hall was hexagonal in shape. They sat down at the table and looked around. There were a few people who looked like local bourgeoisie and wealthy Shiren farmers. There were also a few Vesks who were clad in rather costly robes and a bit too ornate weapons. They ordered Ashrak

"Does anyone here look like a space ship's captain to you?" she asked, sinking into a chair. Even such a short walk in the desert sun could be surprisingly tiring.

"Not really, and for you?" Lashuti asked.

"I used to know a captain... And he wasn't a man you would want to travel anywhere with." she murmured, "Unless you like fire."

Ashrak has been brought. The drink was slightly tart, with a rather strongly perceptible aroma somewhat reminiscent of cucumbers. It was quite invigorating.

"Because of this man you have to wear a holographic mask?" Lashunti asked innocently.

"I should replace it. No, that's not why. "she said, and immediately regretted her honesty.

"So it's some kind of failed ritual." Rechiza asked over a cup of tea.

She wondered how to answer her and how much honesty she could afford, and whar that woman might know about the darkness with which she had made a pact.

"Oh, someone said something about a magical accident!" They heard an enthusiastic exclamation and turned around at the same time. They saw a dark-skinned elf with silvery hair. She wore a fairly typical wizard's robe with bare shoulders. Elf was smiling extremely enthusiastically. She had a bad experience with similarly smiling people. Silverhaired sat down at their table without asking and began to talk.

"I am Ireanis Toromach called the Silver Flame! Battlemage from Nantambu on lost Golarion! Dwarf tea!" exclaimed the elf and went back to the conversation "Unfortunately, the spell didn't quite work out and somehow it turned out that it threw me at Kesler just when they had a problem with ants or some kind of swarm and actually I was a bit lost in time because I was thrown some thousand years ahead and a thousand kilometers from Mwengi. But Bina and Igzar saved me. I mean Igzar threatened to throw me out the airlock if I started doing magic, but he was such a prankster. He probably wouldn't do anything to me. And then we were on Atraks and then we lived on Akiton and we traveled through this space for a long time because we have a spaceship and by the way, I work as a teacher teaching ..." - she was saying, but Rechiza interrupted her.

"Wait, repeat what you said again?"
"That I'm a teacher and a magic officer, but back to…" she continued, but this time Miss Daisy didn't let her go on.

"There is absolutely no doubt that you consider yourself an excellent teacher, but we are interested in the ship you traveled on. How is he."

"Metal. And cosmic." Ireanis replied smiling broadly. Rechiza pursed her lips, thinking the elf to make fun of her or be an idiot. Well, to her, spaceships meant nothing but metal and space. And if this woman is from Lost Golarion…

"Where are you flying to and do you have seats available?" she asked slowly.

The dark-skinned elf confused was suddenly.

"Well, if you ask, we're going to one place ... But we have free quarters for passengers, only about that, you have to ask Bina." Tea has just been brought to Ireanis. She took a sip and winced.

"But there's no rum here? What's a dwarf tea without rum! How am I supposed to do magic sober!" cried the elf.

This can be a really long conversation. She thought and turned to the silver-haired girl, trying to focus her attention.

"And where is Bina?" How did Catra put up with those two for so long?

Ireanis looked around in surprise.

"She was here somewhere. BINA!!!" She stood up and screamed across the room.

"Do you think what I think? That they are flying…" Lashunti asked. She nodded her head.

The silver-haired elf approached a woman who was talking to several expensively dressed Vesks. When Ireanis slapped her on the back, and she reached for her gun, the heavy pistol hanging from her belt. Then elf gestured ridiculously and pointed them. Finally, "Bina" got up and walked over to them, taking a seat at the chair that Ireanis had previously occupied.

"Hiya. I am Bina. You were talking with my friend and she claims that you said something about spaceships and if we had seats ..." asked the woman smiling friendly. She was quite petite, had burgundy hair and seemed to be quite a cheerful person, although she had dark circles under her eyes, probably from lack of sleep.

"Yes, we need a ship... The problem is where we're going." she said slowly, looking at the woman carefully.

"Yes? The galaxy is immeasurable, full of terrible places" Bina replied cautiously. She tensed, and moved her hand towards the weapon.

"You're right, we're headed there."Rechiza said. She also looked ready to fight.

?Oh yes. It's a funny coincidence... So many people suddenly want to go to such a scary place." the burgundy-haired woman said slowly. Ireanis stood behind her. She no longer looked as harmlessly stupid as before.

It was much scarier place than you can imagine. Although now ... we know so litle she thought "And indeed, it seems that we are all heading in the same direction, which makes our goals seem to converge. There were times when I worked with people with whom I had little else in common, and I always performed my duties well. My companion, as far as I know, is a specialist in fighting dark creatures, I ... apart from being a gifted sor ... Mystic, valued teacher and great expert in the art of gardening, I am also the guardian and steward of Lady Cala Grayskull." she said calmly, analyzing her interlocutor and her reactions to her words.

"Besides, it accompanies us Arkan-tar, the archaeologist. Doctor Qin, Dilayla as our bodyguard and Rosie Pearl. intern. We're going to the so-called Ravaged Zone, and so are you. We are part of an expedition organized by Kemanis University. We are financed by Lady Cala Grayskull, in exchange for on profits from any treasures we find there. Lashunti said.

"Aren't you afraid of what lurks in the Zone?" Bina asked, raising an eyebrow.

We all know that something happened there and since then this place has changed and it's not so dangerous anymore - she replied - Otherwise you wouldn't go there yourself.

Bina smiled quite warmly.

"Good point." she thought about it and continued "You know, we are actually also participating in an archaeological expedition, such a self-organized one. And we could use a doctor, a teacher, and an archaeologist. Listen, I'll show you our ship, and if you will like it, and my crew will like you, maybe we'll pick you up for a small fee."

"All right, we'll visit you in the evening, give me the coordinates" Rechiza asked, and the burgundy-haired girl gave them and left her the coordinates.

"Well, hello, see you tonight." she said and walked away with Ireanis.

"We did it pretty fast, don't you think?"Rechiza asked a bit surprised.

"Indeed... she replied thoughtfully.

"And you're not surprised that she's glad she found a teacher?" Rechiza asked her

"No... It's definitely not that..." she looked at her anxiously.

Save the Bot

"Well, we fly anyway, unless we land somewhere, then we just walk around and beat things. Sometimes we set something on fire, sometimes we beat someone up, but usually we don't bring death and destruction, unless we do, but that rarely happens because Bina gets angry, and she gets angry a lot, especially when she talks to Itel because they argue all the time, usually when Bina wants us not to do something and Itel wants us to do something and it's the same thing or vice versa and sometimes Eti also annoys Bina when she is too much Eti but Eti sometimes annoys Itel and they argue even though Itel likes Eti a lot but probably not like Eti likes Itel, and Alatar argue with Eti and tease each other, but usually only by talking, because if they needeled each other they will be bleed, and they know when stop, otherwise Alatar will breathe fire, and the Eti will shoot unless he strikes. And I like chocolate, see?"

Wrongdak smiling slowly shook his head.

" I don't understand you at all, but its fine. I don’t understand half of what my friend is saying to. But I like listening to her. Not many are patient enough to let her say everything she has to say, and only my older brother seems to really understand what she is saying." Wrongdak said with a friendly smile.

"That’s… good." Lilka said with satisfaction in her voice. Itel sighed heavily. She wasn't sure if Lilce really cared if anyone was listening to her. She had the impression that her friend simply did not like the silence that now prevailed. They were on the outskirts of Saltmarsh, if that godsforsaken hole could be compared to a city. There were only a few houses surrounded by low walls and parking lots, mostly empty, and warehouses. Many buildings looked unfinished, as if the builders lacked motivation. Saltmarsh was considered an abandoned planet where mostly the desperate lived.

What can they know about abandonment. They have the whole globe to themselves. We Kesler orphans have nothing, not even ashes. She clenched her fists. She summoned and recalled the blade, trying to calm down.

"Is Itel going to fight someone?" asked the strange alien they had freed.

"No, she does that when she's pissed off or thinking hard about something." Lilka replied, tilting her head.

"And now?" Wrongdak stared at the Elf's back.

"Well, I'm not sure ..." the redhead folded her hands and cried out "Itel, are you pissed or are you thinking hard?!"

The Solarian looked up and turned to the others.

" I'm trying to think hard about something but you won't let me so I'm pissed, happy!?" she screamed.

"Don't worry, sometimes she just has to argue with someone and Bina is not around. said Alatar in a bored voice staring at his datapad. She hoped he was studying a map of the city or looking for objects to hack, not playing silly games. She turned back in the direction they were going and asked on the comm

"Eti, do you see anything?"
"I have pretty good eyesight. Although, considering I hadn't eaten anything this morning, and I haven't had a piece of meat in my mouth for TWO weeks, I should be going blind by now." the Scout complained Itel took a deep breath.

"You know what I'm asking!"
"No I do not know. You could learn to express yourself with precision instead of expecting me to develop telepathy. I know I'm absolutely perfect, awesome and unique, but I haven't developed any psionic talents yet." her friend's voice was as calm as ever.

"I'm asking if you haven't seen any dangers!" the solarian said, clearly emphasizing each word.

"If you are asking about that, no i haven’t see nany dangers. Though some birds bother me." said their scout.

"Leave the birds alone!" she snapped at her friend.

"As long as they leave me alone." Eti replied with a threat in her voice.

Itel screamed and turned off her communicator.

"Let's go!" she ordered without turning around.

"I'm beginning to understand what you were telling me." Wrongdak said after a moment's thought.

Lilka nodded at him.

Itel was annoyed. For many reasons. She didn't like this planet. She hoped to find some useful information about their destination here. After all, this place was on the edge of the most mysterious corner of the known universe. There should be some clues here. They found… She turned and looked at their new companion. … Him. The Wrongdak belonged to species she had never heard of, but there were plenty of creatures in the galaxy she had never heard of. Only she had serious doubts that he could be one of those legendary White Demons. She looked over her shoulder at him. He was tall and white, the latter was obvious. He had light pink eyes with no pupils or irises, large bat ears, and no nose. His hair was braided in dreadlocks, dyed in various bright colors. He was wearing an oversized multi-colored shirt, one of those Skittermanderers would invent for the Vesks, one that no self-respecting citizen of Veskarium would ever wear. If you deduct the skittermander embellishments, he could hardly pass for one of the White Demons ... But his character was completely didn’t fit. He was friendly, curious about the world and probably if it wasn't for the problem with Emily, he would be quite cheerful. Exactly, Emily…. They were supposed to look for her in the junkyard… That meant that Wrongdak's friend was most likely dead. It is why someone was sent to the junkyard. Now she's probably lying in some crushed wreckage, crushed, unrecognizable. She didn't know how their new companion would behave when he saw what fate befell his friend. Of course, she will have to tell him the tragic news, because who else? Lilka and Alatar can't put such things into words, they'll probably cry themselves. And Eti could have put it into words all too well. She could talk about gruesome things and the time of normal conversation without batting an eyelid. It's easy to imagine how Wrongdak would feel if she described to him in detail the appearance of Emily's mangled corpse ... But Eti could be insensitive, mean and lacking in empathy. And also, Is Emily pretty?, she asked so openly and without hesitation! Well, it sure not anymore she thought wryly.

The junkyard was located on the very outskirts of the city. Beyond that was the only fusion power plant that provided power for the city and probably half the planet. The junkyard was actually sort of a multiple-recycling facility here. In a place like this, everyhing that could be repaired, even if it would later dangle on duct tape, was reused. The great square was surrounded by a high wall with barbed wire placed on it. The gates were remotely slided open. To the left of them, there was a camera in front of which anyone who wanted to enter had to stand. Itel stood some distance away and ordered the others to do the same.

"Eti, there are any security?" she asked her friend.

"Maybe." their scout replied coldly. Oh, now she's offended

"Eti, why don't we put it off until later? We don't have time for your sulks!"she said slowly, trying not to explode with rage.

"Sulks?! My sulks?! I'm sorry, but who hung up on me and didn't talk to me for a whole quarter of an hour, and a few hours earlier you blamed me for not talking. So tell me my dear how it is. I'm only supposed to talk when you like it, right?" the shooter asked over the communicator with barely a hint of annoyance.

"Then don't jump out with your hunting paranoia, because you know how you sound ... Like a cat!" Itel screamed. This time it was Eti who turned off the communicator. She turned to see Alatar, Lika and Wrongdak kneeling in a circle on the mismatched and cracked concrete slabs that made up the roadway.

"It's going to take a while for them to argue." We're sorry you have to watch this. he said, embarrassed.

"Is not so bad. My friends had a argue once, and one of them basically blew up the planet, but they made up and they're friends." Wrongdak said with a reassuring smile. Alatar and Lilka stared at him for a long moment.

"I don't want to meet your friends." Dragonkin said carefully. Lilka nodded vigorously.

"And for me, blowing up a planet is an extremely funny punchline."said Eti from the roof of the building, probably some abandoned warehouse, where suspicious individuals were probably hiding at night. The scout began to waked down parade style the vertical wall and approached them. She stood in front of Itel and saluted derisively.

"Senior scout Eterna reports to Captain Itel that the order has been carried out." she said in the tone of a soldier addressing a commander. Itel clenched her teeth in fury.

"Are you kidding me!" The green-haired elf screamed.

Eti tilted her head to the side, resting it on her shoulder.

"Sure. If you can't act like an adult. - Eti said, but before the Solarian could answer, the scout continued." There are four guard bots in the junkyard that appear to be made by the owner. It is Shiren technician, quite competent looking. He employs two Damai, I think sisters, quite pretty, but also dangerous looking. I cut the wire in one place, but Alatar will have to hack into their system.

Itel didn't even comment on the bit about the pretty sisters, she just turned to Alatar

"Can you do it?"

The silver dragonkin nodded.

"It shouldn't be difficult. I just need to get closer." he murmured uncertainly.

"You will fly, just like me and Lilka will climb the rope." she said, and Alatar sighed.

"A little exercise won't hurt you, drako." Eti said, the technomancer gave her an offended look.

"I'll go on the rope too. Emily is my friend, I have to help her." Wrongdak said with emotion. "My brother and my friends entrusted me with the task of looking after her. We went to the stars to prove that He lied, that He was not the ruler of the known universe. He... Horde Prime was a liar! But… I failed my friends! I failed Emily... I have to save her. She's my friend too... We were together on Vesk III and had many wonderful adventures there. I wouldn't forgive myself if something happened to her. I will go and help you." he had a tight mouth.

Itel winced and groaned. If he goes with them, he will surely see her friend's corpse... He won't survive this encounter.

"You know... It's going to be a serious fight against a real opponent, you understand?" And maybe something will happen to you... "She tried to explain it calmly and slowly, just like Bina did when she was explaining to Lilka that she couldn't fight with a land shark in the arena.

"I can handle it. I'm a born soldier, although I don't like to fight… But for Emily, I will not hesitate to face ten Skitterwanders." he said with great confidence.

Yes, of course she sighed, seeing that it was a hopeless case. "All right, let's go!" she called and summoned the moonblade, then pointed towards the junkyard.

Eti turned to their new companion.
"Just one question, is Emily a lady?"

"Of course! She is a very great lady!" Wrongdak exclaimed excitedly, and Eti scolded with a soft "perfect"

"I've always wanted to save a damsel in distress." Eti said with almost palpable joy in her voice.

One more word Itel thought, and with murder in her eyes, she moved forward.

Eti stalked in the shadows and was almost content with her life. The whole day had been great. First, she had obtained the crucial and necessary information, and then she had been instrumental in saving Wormdak. She was practically the pillar of their little scuad. And most importantly, she's going to rescue a beautiful and noble lady... She'll be a true hero... Not what she told her to be... She took a deep breath and leaned against the wall. Calm down, you're close to creating a storm, and storm days haven't been good. Especially so soon after rainy days… She raised her google and pressed her fingers to her eyes. She felt the hardness of the surprisingly warm metal and the smoothness of a leather glove. She pressed so hard that the protective sponge crumpled and she felt an unpleasant pressure on the tips of her fingers where claws had once been. “I shouldn't mean to Itel. She's my friend and all. That's right, buddy.” She took the braid in her archaeotechnical hand and wrapped it around it. She'd have to apologize to her somehow, but she wasn't good at talking about feelings… How could she talk about them if she didn't even fully understand them. She wanted to go to the ship and pet Toshi, but she had to help her friends, didn't she? Taking a deep breath, she climbed onto the water tank, picked it up, and held the telescope to her eye. She had a view of most of the junkyard area.

"How are you getting in?"she asked her friends.

"Alatar is breaking security right now." Itel told her.

Eti looked around and saw a dragonkin balancing on the wall. She nodded and looked around for the guards. She saw three of them. Two patrolled the area along the walls. They were relatively small and somewhat coarse. It had four spindly legs and a cylindrical head with two electric cannons. The third was standing by the workshop. The body was square, slightly blocky. It had two broad legs and on the sides it had two guns firing pellets. She decided to take care of the big one first, because the small ones have a limited range, and if necessary, she'll take them out in one shot anyway. This one will be a more difficult target and prefers to focus on it. Especially since he was guarding the owner of the entire property, a tall Shiren in a helmet with holes for antennas. He carried a heavy metal cane and wore decent work clothes. Beside him stood Damai with a shotgun and dressed in similar work clothes. They were both studying some strange spherical bot trapped on the repair ramp. It had one purple eye and three legs. It was painted in bright colors, somewhat Skittermander style. Eti thought for a moment and then turned to Itel via communicator.

"Ask Wormdak if Emily has three legs."

"What?" Itel asked, clearly disbelieving her.

"Just ask him. " Eti said impatiently. It was a simple and obvious question!

"Yep, she has three legs" Itel said in surprise.

"Then tell Wormdak she's safe and sound."Eti replied.

A robot, not a robot, counts as a lady.

Wrongdak felt relief spread throughout his body. He didn't feel that way even after death of Him. Then his heart was flooded with sadness mixed with fear, although it was only a shadow of what his brothers experienced. He was just calm now. He knew somehow they would manage to save his friend. His new friends looked brave and resourceful, if a little scary.

"Give me any weapons, I'll be really useful to you." he asked the elf. She looked at him skeptically.

"But it will be very dangerous, you may get hurt.- Itel spoke slowly, as if she was addressing a child or someone who did not understand what she was saying. He was used to the fact that most beings outside the empire did not see him for who he was - an artificially created soldier whose meaning of existence was to fight and die for Him... He came into this world trained better than Vesk warriors. However, he had no idea about many even the most basic things, and for this reason many thought him dumb.

"I'll be fine, trust me." he said with a friendly smile, but then Itel bristled. She narrowed her eyes and nodded sharply.

"You won't get any weapons, over my dead body!" And she turned her back on him. It wasn't a problem. He could also fight hand to hand and was really good at it.

Itel lurked behind a pile of scrap metal, signaled them to stay in wait. He felt someone tugging at his sleeve. He turned to see Lilka, who signaled him to be quiet by putting her finger to her lips and making a loud "Szzzz", then pointed to a gas tube sticking out of a pile of scrap metal. He understood what she meant.

"Trust is not Itel's strong point." said Lilka in a whisper as he reached for the iron. He grabbed the tube and pulled hard. As soon as he pulled it out, the whole pile of scrap metal tumbled onto the cobblestones. Itel shot him an angry look and went to fight.

In Eti's opinion, the idea of collapsing a pile of scrap metal was as effective as it was uncomfortably loud, at least for her sensitive hearing. Without waiting for the thud to stop, she found the boxy robot and aimed hers rifle at it. As she fired, a ball of incandescent plasma hit the target. The hit damaged the weapon, rendering it unusable. She fired twice in a flash, aiming at the legs of the machine. Then she intended to find and destroy the two smaller robots, but with her keen hearing she heard someone trying to climb onto the reservoir. Ah, second sister, I almost forgot She saw that the second Damai had just climbed up. She put her arm above the ladder and shot at Eti, who, however, deftly dodged and jumped towards her, then jumped down grabbing the junkyard worker's sleeve and dragging her down. The scout landed on her knees bent, and her opponent hit the hard cobblestones with a groan. But then she felt movement behind her. She dodged to the side and saw the last robot, the one she had completely forgotten about. He had legs with inverted knees like those of a dinosaur and a long jaw capable of crushing bones. A homemade version of the popular pest control robot. She hit him twice with the butt like a mace, but only pushed him away. So she shifted the rifle to her left hand and clenched her metal fist. She took a wide swing and hit the machine with all her strength, releasing all the power contained in her hand. The metal flashed blindingly, and the ancient symbols became visible to all for a moment. Energy flowed through the metal body, tearing it into tiny pieces. She walked away from the wreckage of the machine and walked over to Damai and put her boot on her back, then hit her head with her now half-inert arm. Her opponent lost consciousness and Etti slowly made her way to the square in front of the workshop. Her companions were safe and sound, except for Lilka, whose hair was sticking out in all directions. Itel was already taking a deep breath to yell at her, but when she saw her hand hanging limply by her side, she softened. That explained a lot. Wormdak stood over the remains of one of the bots, holding a gas-tube in his hand, and pointed at Emily. He looked quite menacing now. Alatar simply walked over to the repair ramp mechanism and freed the robot. Emily immediately ran to Wormdak and he hugged her. They stayed like that for a while. Eti looked at the wreckage. She managed to disable the robot, Damaj was cowering with a wound in her side, and Shiren was holding his maimed hand.

"It's my droid, what right do you have to steal from me!" Shiren exclaimed indignantly.

"Technically, while Emily is not a beautiful and curvaceous lady, she is a fully self-aware entity and as such cannot be traded. What you were doing falls under the slave trade, which is punishable on the pact worlds from twenty years in prison to life sentence in a penal colony." Alatar said. The junkyard owner clicked a few times in annoyance, but said nothing more.

"Well, we did quite well. And you fight really well Wrongdak, where did you learn that?" Itel asked with appreciation in her voice. Wrongdak stood up and smiled brightly.

"I did not study anywhere ... I was created to do this. I'm a clone." he said, as if confessing some shameful secret. Itel nodded, but Eti walked over to Emily. The bot chattered at the sight of her as she knelt before him. The ranger saw that there were claw marks on the front of the body. With a bad feeling, she placed her left hand against them. They fit the heck out of it.

No. She was never there. She is a lie. a fraud she stood up abruptly, pushing Emily away from her.

"Did something happen?" Wordak asked anxiously.

"I don't like your bot. But you won't understand it. You're just a clone, a poor and pathetic imitation of the original that will never be anything real. - she said, aware that she had probably hurt him. She pulled up her hood and walked forward.

Shadow of the Past - Archduke's Ball.

She woke up

The carriage, drawn by mechanical horses, had just come to an abrupt halt.

"We're here, Miss Daisy." Leris said in an excited voice.

She thought it was strange, because girl would spend the entire party in the servants quarters anyway. Although this celebration was so great that even the servants could taste the most wonderful dishes and drinks. Maybe they'll actually have more fun here. People like her, representatives of the aristocracy, to which theoreticaly she belonged,, had much more interesting things to do here. She stood on the step as she stepped out of the carriage and winced at the smell of the city air. It reminded her of the old days when she had lived in the Fright Zone contaminated and poisoned with toxic fumes. Lynortis numbered a million souls and was five times as many as her's old home. The capital of Carurystal was an ancient city built during the Gap, though many scholars have argued that some of the artifacts and ruins may have been much older. The happiest part of her life had been spent among ancient buildings with dark secrets, so Lynortis felt almost like home. But did I ever have a home, a place where I felt safe and loved? she smiled grimly to herself.

She looked at the Archduke's palace. The building was magnificent, although it did not overwhelm with its majesty. The Lord of Carurystal was not a dictator or a living god walking the earth, but the first among equals. It reminded her of happier times too, a life she had so easily spurned. "Why do I feel so nostalgic for the old days? What has been will not return ... " She thought as she felt a cold sweat pour over her. "History likes to repeat itself, but only as a farce, they say. But in my case, it's a grotesque tragicomedy, nothing more" she thought, looking at the marble slabs beneath her feet. And she almost ran into Prince Henoh, one of the sons of the Archduke. But he just nodded politely and walked over to her.

"Are you well, Miss Daisy?" Leris asked with concern in her voice. She looked sideways at the young half-elf, saw that her face showed sadnes.

"I just got lost in the memories. Nothing special." she said with difficulty bringing a smile to her face.

"Is it because Lady Cala's been gone so long? Don't worry, she'll be fine, you've trained her well." said the maid in a comforting tone.

She couldn't help but burst into hysterical laughter. Indeed, I have trained her well. I gave her knowledge that none of my previous students had received. I've also never had someone so… smart and eager to learn… I should be so proud! she laughed under her breath again. She was aware that Leris was starting to worry seeing her increasingly sullen and bitter mood, but she couldn't help it. She had hurt countless beings in her life, and she was expected to be willing to hurt more. She didn't feel like putting on a mask of joy...

She left her black coat to the servant in the hall. Tey bowed humbly to her, and she felt a surge of good cheer. At least for a while, she will allow himself to forget about hers past and future. She will enjoy the moment, the life she has always wanted. For as long as she could remember, she had dreamed of being respected and admired, even if it meant being feared. Now she had finally got what she wanted… though she knew well the price she would have to pay. P*ower has a price that most mortals on Etheria have never imagined. Were you Prime aware of the darkness that exists between the stars? Oh what a fool you were. If you really saw everything and knew everything, your mind would shatter into a thousand screaming pieces*. She smiled with grim satisfaction before saying goodbye to Leris and entering the great ballroom.

She felt a satisfaction mixed with joy as she saw the voices stop and everyone turn to her. She was Miss Daisy, a mysterious and powerful sorceress with knowledge and power reminiscent of the Lost Golarion. None of them realized how much time she had spent learning modern magic theory... Or how little the modern mystics understood the power the First Ones had at their disposal. She greeted more people, so awkwarded in her presence. Most knew of her scars, but discretion was considered a great virtue in Carurystal, especially among the nobility. Everyone believed there had been an accident during the ritual…which was true. The few people who guessed the truth either stayed silent or served the same damed power which was behind her… But there were people who worried even her, a woman whose name was a curse spoken with fear or hatred. Archduke Adamson, a tall red-haired man whose cold blue eyes brought back too many memories for her to feel safe under their watchful gaze. The ruler of the planet was a mysterious person, a skillful politician who efficiently managed his domain. She guessed he maintained a spy network, though Carurystal officially had no intelligence agency. Alone in the Fright Zone she used Hordak's money to pay agents and informers, although she always had to be skillful in disguising such expenses. Her former superior treated such forms of warfare with contempt, although as it turned out later, he could appreciate them, which almost turned out to be her undoing. So she avoided spies and informers who might be hiding among the servants of Grayskull Castle and their neighbors, even though most of Lady Cala' and her allies activities were concentrated off-planet. Better beware, especially since there were a few people on Carurystal who harbored some suspicions about her lady and the circumstances in which her relatives had passed away.

"Hello Miss Daisy. You are the jewel that embellishes every important event that takes place in our great kingdom." said a tall mechanical creature with a grey-green body. At first glance, it looked like a robot, one of those advanced and self-aware robots, but upon closer inspection it was clear that it had no electronic parts, and veins of red liquid were visible beneath the metal plates.

"Prince Zed, that's a nice compliment, but someone like me could be black garnet or something like that." she said, smiling gently at the creature. A servant with a tray full of glasses of white wine approached them, and they each took one, though the automaton merely held it as if to make it appear more alive.

"You are too modest, you are probably the most powerful sorceress on the planet, and this is just one of the many talents you possess. You shouldn't hide in the shadows like some outcast or black sheep."

She frowned. She wondered for a moment what the prince might know. He was not only one of the richest inhabitants of the planet, but also an ancient construct created by the Jistka Empire on the Lost Golarion, which he made no secret of. She knew the stories of these ancient beings, but she never thought she would meet them…" I witnessed the myth come back to life. Now I'm talking to a myth while having a drink... The world has gone mad, or maybe it's just me who's mad." On Etheria, the idea of self-aware machines was merely a matter of speculation, even after the arrival of the Horde, true artificial intelligence was virtually unknown. Until finally the sword was found, and the purple-haired girl got to one of the Horde bots. But the prince was something else, a machine based on magic. A creature that would arouse the admiration and envy of even the First Ones.

The problem was that the prince was a friend of the Grayskull family and felt sorry for her parents, or so he claimed. He was certainly on friendly terms with Lady Caly's father, Griefrag Grayskull, she even had access to their correspondence, and he had visited the estate several times and met little Lady. From what the ward told her, he tried to make friends with her, but at the time she did not understand the meaning of such relationships. Though he was kind to them, she knew he wanted to know the truth about the fate of House Grayskull. It was a blessing in misfortune that he blamed her for the tragedies that befell the Grayskull family, not the real perpetrator.

"It's not right for someone like me to outshine his employer. I am a gardener and I know that beautiful flowers will never bloom in the shadow." she replied with a modest smile. Together they walked across the hall.

"By the way, how is our wonderful Lady. He's still on the Pact Worlds?" The prince asked with a hint of sadness in his voice.

"She has gone on a very important visit, the purpose of which remains a secret that I am not allowed to reveal."she said formally. Soon, at least partially, the truth will come to light and everyone will admire the courage of the young Lady ready to set off on a journey into the unknown. What would happen next, not even her dark patrons knew.

"We miss her. It's been over three months since she left Carurystal. Many worry that some harm may have happened to her. - Said the ancient mechanism slowly. She glanced sideways at him, not hiding an indulgent smile. He really think I wanted to eliminate Lady Cala? If I really wanted to do that, I wouldn't be doing the whole show with a journey.

"You don't have to worry about Lady Cala. She grew up to be a strong and confident woman who can handle almost any danger." Also with a machine pretending to be a living being, she thought maliciously. They walked over to a table piled full of dishes. Carurystal's cuisine wasn't fancy, but it was hearty and much heavier than what the people of Mystacor were used to, though in truth she couldn't remember much of what it tasted like. Beside her stood Rakhe, Veskarium's ambassador. Warlike lizardmen had always evoked in her indescribable feelings. Many Vesks served in the Horde. On Etheri, however, they did not use their true name. Their name was Vaste, which many attributed, she had y discovered, erroneously, to their origins in the Crimson Waste. Even one of them was under the department she oversaw, and he was friends with Adora and perhaps a little with Catra, but if she remembered correctly, he had a much c*loser relationship* with Lonnie and Kyle. I wonder what the Vesk ambassador would say to that.

"Another year of service on our beautiful Carurystal has passed. What are the ambassador's plans for strengthening relations between our wonderful planet and Veskarium" she asked her, smiling maliciously. Wet and cloudy, and above all reluctant to military solutions, Carurystal was a place of exile for the Vesks. During her rule, border with Kingdom of Snow was something similar

"Well, given your troubles with the Kranor Rill and the increasingly frequent Riliti attacks, perhaps I'll talk to the Archduke about possible military cooperation between our countries." said Rakhe, baring her fangs.

She narrowed her eyes. She don’t like Vesks. Fanatical devotion to the dark honor reminded her too much of those from the past to whom she had sacrificed so much. Just who do I really feel sorry for?

"The Riliti are savage beasts who can only use technology by imitating more evolved races. Only a sense of sapienism prevents us from completely exterminating them." said Prince Zed with amusement, but she answered him with absolute seriousness pouring herself a glass of whiskey

"It is very imprudent to underestimate an opponent just because he seems to us primitive and technically undeveloped. It can hide secrets that we have never dreamed of. From my own experience, I know perfectly well that it is extremely easy to put a would-be winner in shackles." she said angry tone. She knew she had revealed quite a lot about her past, but she didn't care. It didn't matter much now anyway. He'll be leaving this place soon anyway, and he'll never come back. There is no future for her.

"You have a lot to say about waging war as for an elven…witch." Veska said, looking at her with superiority.

"Much more than any Veska ambassador. On politics and economics, probably also " Idiot, I just supported you.

Theoretically, the ambassador could challenge her to a glorious combat now, though she would probably lose her post. But Rakhe knew she wouldn't stand a chance of surviving this encounter. She stared at it for a long moment, until the Ambassador looked down. She smiled grimly with dark satisfaction, feeling a pleasant shiver. She'd always been good at that, at making others tremble with fear. Fear made them easier to control.

I'm still the old me. I'm still… She felt a wave of self-loathing wash over her and reached for her glass of red wine, which she emptied in one gulp.

"Slow down, Miss Daisy, we have the whole night ahead of us." Prince Zed laughed. His voice was surprisingly melodious and pleasant sounding.

"I thought a little ... Returning to Riliti, you have to transfer the war to their territory. Constantly harass their settlements with constant attacks. Break their fighting spirit, because when they lose it, they will easily succumb to us."

"You really do have a lot of experience in warfare, especially for an ordinary ... What is your profession exactly?" asked the automaton, delight in his voice. Do you want to examine me? Exmine me, if you want, you won't learn anything new.

Several people gathered around her, listening to their conversation. The Riliti have always aroused great emotions among the otherwise peaceful inhabitants of Carurystal. Rakhe decided to take oportunity and left with a sour expression on her face.

"I had to learn very fast to survive. The prince cannot imagine what things living beings can do to survive." she said in a grim voice. Food has lost its appeal to her. You're getting sad drunk, my dear Shadow Weaver, that's a lot of progress, You don't zap kids she laughed inside.

"The truth about war can only be learned by facing the enemy and learning from our own and others' failures." said a voice she had never heard before. She looked up to see a tall woman dressed in the black and red Hellknights dress representative uniform with the symbol of the sun in an eclipse. She had red-gold hair and a scar on her cheek, probably from acid. She was about forty human years old, though there were ways in the galaxy to stay young. She was quite attractive, like a bronze statue forged in the heat of battle. What am I thinking about. I must have had too much to drink she thought with a strange embarrassment.

- Is it some sort of quote from the sacred books of the Order, or your tactics manuals? -Prince Zed asked with a surprisingly polite smile on his face.
The woman winced.

"No, that's the saying of Lord Admiral Antares." she said with a barely perceptible, probably unintentional, contempt in her voice. "Antares is a real source of sayings that sound very wise." said the woman from the order of the eclipse.

Hearing the Lord Admiral's name, she raised an eyebrow. She had already gathered information about him, and most of it focused on his accomplishments in the Swarm War. More accurate information, especially from thirty years ago, before he was banished from Tarak, was unfortunately hard to come by. "Thirty years, what an important date for both of us. At the same time, we lost our home… although in my case it was a consequence of my ambition." Unfortunately, she had no direct access to the espionage network of Creeping Chaos and their allies everywhere in the galaxy. Now she had found a source of information, and that source was interesting in itself. She searched her mind over the list of people who might have attended the ball, but there was no hellknights on it… but she remembered the latest rumors.

"Ah, Lady of Blades, Asindesa di Vir... I didn't know you'd want to come to the Archduke's birthday party." she said, not hiding the surprise in her voice. Asindesa winced.

"I didn't do it for fun, but out of duty to represent the Order of the Eclipse. If it were up to me, I would oversee the repair of my ship. Unfortunately, I still have to wait for all the parts to arrive. - the knight said firmly. Prince Zed nodded in understanding.

"You were attacked by a space monster. You were very lucky that all ended only with damaged ship. My memories of the old Golarion are very fragmentary, but I remember how great fear aroused in sailors the prospect of an attack by sea beasts that could drag them into the abyss of the seas, and yet the abyss of space is much more terrifying.

The Lady of Blades glanced at the automaton, then gave her a questioning look. She shrugged and said.

"Prince Zed is from Lost Golarion. He is an Automaton if I understand correctly, a being created by magic, not technology." She explained to the knight, and the prince bowed politely.

"Indeed, you are absolutely right, but now I would ask the ladies to let me go. Much less pleasant matters are calling me, involving the investment in the construction of an orbital station. Carurystal deserves it!" he uttered the last point in such a tone as if it were an election slogan. They both snorted. They were left alone, for the guests who had gathered around them had discreetly dispersed.

"Hellknights are as popular here as anywhere." Asindesa murmured with a hint of satisfaction mixed with bitterness.

"It's rather my fault. I have my ways of letting people know that I don't want company. I enjoy a certain… authority here. Would you like to walk?"she asked the Lady of Blades, who nodded her agreement. They walked together through the huge banquet hall.

"How do you know the Lord Admiral?" she asked hellknight

"'We fought together against The Swarm. Why do you ask, Miss Daisy." she asked, looking at her sharply.

"So you know who I am." Or rather, you think you know "I am worried and would like to know who I am dealing with." Rather not for Lady Caly's safety, though. Actually, I'm more worried about this man she thought with grim amusement. Asindesa thought for a moment.

"He is an outstanding commander, especially when it comes to space combat, but he also knows how to conduct battles on the surface of planets. But above all, he is a brilliant politician. He can turn every battle, even a defeat, into a great triumph. They say war is just an extension of politics, for him that's truth. He wins every fight first in salons and in the media. As he used to say, the greatest victory is the one you get without firing a single shot." Asindesa said sharply.

Oh Hordak, this is something even your brother couldn't comprehend... Though should'nt I have told you off, since I was your's right hand responsible for most of what you did.

"What do you think of him as a person? " she asked the knight again, reaching for another glass of red wine, ignoring the fact that Asindesa gave her a surprised look. Why do I feel ashamed?

"He's… very reserved. He never reveals what he feels or thinks. He is always prepared for what the future may bring... He is absolutely focused on the goal and nothing can distract him... has something happened?" Asindesa asked suddenly as she saw her shiver. There was concern in her voice.

"It just reminded me of a certain horrible woman I knew." she said far too fast to sound believable. Asindesa nodded and asked herself.

"Was it worth it? What have you done…" Asindesa asked her . She replied with a bitter smile. Hellknights know a lot about dark pacts, after all.

- No... And not just because of the scars...- She said sharply and finished her wine, then looked down. You did what you did. You brought suffering and you knew very well that you were hurting others.

She felt a heavy hand on her shoulder. Asindesa smiled at her. She felt a strange, almost unknown so far warmth spreading through her body. It's stupid. It's so stupid. Focus idiot! After all, that's what you've always demanded fro others she reprimanded herself.

Then the music started and she felt Asindesa grab her hands. Like most planets in the galaxy, Carurystal had no prejudice against same-sex relationships, but of course appropriately polite and unobtrusive ways of signaling one's orientation had to be devised. One of them was inviting someone to dance. She looked at Asidesa di Vir in genuine surprise

"Can wizards dance where you come from?"asked the knight of hell with a cunny smile

"No worse than the Helknights." she replied and laughed happily. She felt young for a moment, not least because of what Nyarlathotep had done to her body. She learned dancing in her family home, where she studied for The Spider chosen one. She had to be good at it because she had no choice. She taught them… Adora and Catra how to dance and it was one of the few good things she had done in her life.

She has slept with both men and women in her life. But she had never felt what she felt now. It's the alcohol in my veins, nothing more she repeated over and over again, but deep down she knew otherwise. There was the first dance, and the second, and the tenth. Finally, they stood looking into each other's eyes and feeling their hearts beating in unison

"I never thought I'd ever dance with a hellknight." she exclaimed, laughing happily.

"Most people think we only live to wage our war. Maybe there is a bit of truth in it, but ... I did not think that I would find someone on this planet with such a hunger for life inside." cried the Lady of Blades.

Yes... Hunger she thought. Creeping Chaos completed the ritual she had begun so long ago. It wasn't until she was resurrected that she realized that Mikah's sacrifice was necessary for the ritual to be complete. Creeping chaos liked to play with fools who believed that power would make them happy.

"I... I've really never met anyone like you. For now, Lady Cala is in the process of fulfilling her mission. So I have some free time, so I'd like to invite you to Castle Grayskull to spend some time together." she said, feeling like a teenager inviting her friend to spend the night together.

But then Asindesa looked down and pursed her lips.

"I am so orry, but I have to decline. I'm getting ready for an extremely important mission and I don't have time for such nonsense."
"But why? Have I offended you in some way?" she asked strangely sad. She knew the taste of disappointment well, but this was more than that. She felt as if she had lost something very precious, something much more precious than the power she had been chasing all her life.

The hellknight shook her head.

"We both have our responsibilities. Each of us serves someone and in no way can we abandon this service. I guess this could be the beginning of... something beautiful, but none of us can afford it."

"Well, the war with the Swarm ..." she said gloomily, but after a moment of thought the Lady of Blades denied

"No ... the Order chose me to participate in an extremely important and dangerous mission. It is related to Lord Admiral Antares... that's why I quoted him, because I've been thinking a lot about him lately... I can't say anything more... " painful sadness could be heard in the knight's voice.

She put two and two together and understood. So you're going where we are. If you knew the truth… the truth, you'd understand that someone like you has nothing to fear out there… except for people like me… And like Calamity. She thought sadly, but she was already planning how to continue this relationship, even though deep down she knew it would end in their shared suffering.

Crossfire

" Traveling is about getting to know not only the beautiful places that are shown on postcards, but also the less pleasant ones." Rosie said in sign language. "And I guess Saltmarsh is definitely one of those places."

"Saltmarsh isn't even fit for the backwaters of the universe. It's not even nasty. It just exists and collects dust." Dilayla said with contempt clearly audible in her voice.

"Well, at least it's original." Rosie said with a friendly smile.

Dilayla shook her head in disbelief.

"Are you always like this? Do you always try to see the better side of everything and everyone?"

The deaf girl spread her hands.

"Why not? If you do that, then others will try to treat you as you treat them, it's quite simple." She said and smiled widely. Dilayla looked at her, unsure of what to say.

"The world doesn't work that way. I mean, some people will probably react the way you say, but many have no conscience. They'll only hurt you because they'll have the opportunity. Not even because they gain something from it, but because your suffering will make them happy. And you are much easier to hurt than others."

Rosie made a indignant face.

" I can take care of myself! I can fight. I'm really good at this."

Dilayla looked at her companion. The intern was clad in good, if fairly standard, armor, a gift from one of her tutors at the university. She also had a backpack, datapad, and other standard equipment necessary for traveling to remote and wild regions of the galaxy. But she was a petite girl, even without the power armor she was a head taller than she was, and she had no weapons.

"If you say so." murmured the mercenary. They were in one of the worst districts of Saltmarsh, though she supposed the difference between the worst and best districts in a place like this was purely arbitrary. Everywhere, most of the inhabitants were armed, and law enforcement was practically non-existent ... But on the other hand, it was difficult to talk about real crime, because most of the inhabitants here were armed, and law enforcement was practically non-existent. Everyone did their own justice here, there wasn't even a customary law to tidy things up a bit. In a land of lawlessness, everyone is righteous. she recalled an old saying from her hometown. Throughout this trip, she thought more and more about Minitar, she wasn't sure if it was because of the Order's participation in this project, or maybe because of the strange premonitions that the had tormented her hardened heart of mercenary. W*e lived so close to this place. Will I find there the truth that has been denied me?*

In fact, she didn't like places like Saltmarsh. She may have been a mercenary, but unlike many of her profession, she had a moral code or something. In the company of Rechza and Arkan, she could play the Dog of War who cares about nothing, but she was a devoted follower of the Inheritor and tried to choose such assignments that allowed her to keep a reasonably clear conscience. Besides, she really didn't want to be in a place where she could end up with a knife in her back because someone was having a bad day.

Passers-by kept out of her way, probably because she was in possession of one of the few power armors on the planet. She didn't wear a helmet, so she could scowl at anyone who got too close. Rosie, on the other hand, was looking at everything and everyone with awe, as if she were on a trip. More and more often Dilayla wondered if the one who had sent her on such a dangerous journey wasn't an idiot detached from reality, or just wanted to get rid of her, although it was hard to imagine why anyone would want to get rid of such a carefree creature. Unless someone is going to get their hands on a secret inheritance or a hidden trust fund that the girl didn't know about. It even made some sense, after all, the girl had these mysterious patrons, who knows who they really were.

There was one more thing about the girl.

:Rosie, why don't you fix your hearing with implants? Or a tissue transplant?" she asked her companion. Rosie looked at her and shrugged.

"In my case, it wouldn't work anyway." she unwound her snow-white hair and pointed to her ear. The pinna was attached to the body and the ear canal was overgrown with tissue.

"I don't have anything inside my ear. Even my brain is deprived of this piece to hearing. I guess my whole family and my ancestors didn't hear either." said the girl "And besides, it's good. I'm hapy I can do a everything. I guess I was trained in the old days to do…a lot of things. I'm not sure who did it or why, but it doesn't really matter anymore." she shrugged. Dilayla sighed.

"It matters a lot because it will determine how much care I have to make sure no one kills you. she said slowly. Rosie gave her a hurt look.

"If my clumsiness annoys you so much, why did you bring me with you?!" The vouce from gloves screamed.

"Because I don’t want to leave you with that mean ratiess." The mercenary muttered in a gloomy voice.

"I don't need your pity or anyone else's." Rosie huffed and crossed her arms over her chest.

There was silence, but it didn't last long as they were. approaching the Red Water bar. It was a real haven for mercenaries and adventurers who wanted to rest between their quests. Dilayla had been to such places often, though she was not particularly fond of them. She liked a decent pub or an upper-class brothel where she could relax, but at least it wasn't a murder house where everyone was waiting to slit your throat. A place like Saltmarsh did not produce warriors neither the toughest nor the cunning, but those who became masters of survival. Such a poor and completely forgotten planet could give little to those who made a living from solving all sorts of problems, because the inhabitants learned to solve them themselves. Bu*t it's also a place where it's easy to hide and find peace.* Dilayla thought, looking at the bartender and probably the owner of this enterprise, the mighty Pahtra, with a scarred face. He looked quite menacing, though not to veterans like her. A burn mark on her arm caught her attention. She swore silently under her breath.

"Rosie, don't tell anyone about the hundred-damned Lord Admiral." she said quietly.

"About who?" asked the confused girl, in the opinion of the mercenary definitely too loud.

"Just don't say anything about our journey. Better yet, pretend you are… Just turn off those glasses and gloves. whispered the half-elf. Rosie made a strange sound that was supposed to be a growl, but realized she didn't really know what kind of noise a girl could make. It was… a strange thought.

As soon as they entered, most of the regulars of this establishment looked at her. She looked really professional, and she took pride in the fact that she looked neater than the scumbags present. Most had weapons, quite good ones in a few cases, but no armor. However, they were professionals who rather wanted to relax in each other's company, so the heavily armed mercenary in power armor, contrary to appearances, completely did not fit here and disrupted the existing order. She raised her hand in a conciliatory gesture.

"Queue for everyone! she called with a fake smile, but the free drink meant that no one cared about her intentions anymore. She went to the bar to pay with the Lord Admiral's money, and several of the regulars snorted at the sight of Rosie.

"Why are they staring at me? And then they poit to you? " she asked the mercenary, carefully looking around. Dilayla smiled sarcastically.

"You are a young girl accompanying an older one who seem to be a successful mercenary.

The intern widened her eyes.

"They think I'm…" She started to blush.
"Sleeping bag friend, though that's the politest word for such persons. Don't worry, you're not my type." said the half-elf.

"Your type?" asked the deaf girl very carefully.

"I'm over forty, have a risky but profitable profession and prefer girls. I've relationship with a lot of women, but none of them lasted long. But I won't hit on you, so don't worry." Dilayla said and ordered a water and juice for Rosie and a beer for herself, then walked over to it.

"Hello sir..."She raised an eyebrow questioningly.

"Zagsos." the bartender replied grimly, staring at her with his golden eyes.

"Well, Mr. Zagsos, I'm going straight to the point. Does anyone here have a ship for sale?" she asked smiling slightly.

"What do you need a ship for?: the Catman asked, wiping glass.

"I won't make a secret of it. Armed people like me appear on this planet cursed by Devils and Daemons for only one purpose, and the fact that I am looking for a ship is an additional hint" she yawned a bit bored with such a pointless exchange of sentences.

"Some say that no one comes back from there." Zagsos said after a moment's thought.

That's interesting thought Dilayla. I'm getting valuable information.

"So some people are coming back?"she asked, clearly interested.

"Look at that one over there." he pointed to Shiren sitting at the table, staring glumly into the distance. "It's Shirkas. He is a miner extracting valuable resources from asteroids. A few months ago he fell into huge debts and went deep into the Ravaged Zone. When he arrived from there, he brought with him a lot of money and Scary stories.

"Ah, that's interesting... But why does he want to sell the ship then?" Dilayla said suspiciously.

"Because the money he brought was like that…"He showed her the coin. It was red with a symbol of golden wings on the obverse and the words United we will cast out shadows. She had never seen such a coin. The symbol of wings reminded her of something. Hard money was relatively unused in the galaxy, but as a mercenary she had to use it in the frontiner regions where there was a greater demand for people dabbling in her profession. She also learned to recognize the value of coins, and she didn't like it very much.

"They're not worth much." she said with disgust.
"Yes, and they say he exchanged the entire contents of the hold on a one-for-one basis." Zagsos said contemptuously. "And when he came back, he acted like he had made the deal of a lifetime. Well, for a miner, he didn't show off his knowledge of metallurgy. He came back with more debts than he originally had."

She shrugged.

"I know ways to cheat someone on the value of coins. And I'm just an ordinary hired gun." she said, and paid Pahtra fifty credits. Then she walked over to Shiren. He was quite large for a representative of this species, but had rather elongated limbs and not very thick joints, which indicated physical weakness. A fairly common ailment among beings who spend a lot of time in open space.

Shirkas spread his antennae with concern when he saw her.

"What do you want from me?" he asked very carefully. As she smiled, the miner cringed. His antennae were now clinging to his head. She noticed that one of them had a scratched chitin. Apparently he got into a fight, although he was not predisposed to it.

"We want to buy your ship, we give you... a hundred thousand credits. she said, wondering if she would bargain.

"Hundred thousand! You can take it now!" he cried. She was a bit surprised that it went so quickly.

"My comrades have to agree first, and then we have to see if it's not some kind of junk." she said carefully. If he wants to sell me a wreck, I'll crush his stupid Shiren head.

"Of course. Noble Endeavor is a wonderful ship. A bit crude inside, but can handle almost anything." Insectoid said with fiery enthusiasm.

"We'll be there in the afternoon. But first, I'd like to ask you something else... Where did you get these coins from? The ones no one wanted to accept from you. " she asked, placing the combat glove on the table. Shiren lowered his head.

"You see, when we left the zone, we come out the Drift, because earlier I wanted to check whether it would be worth organizing a base on one planet, and then ... A ship arrived, so from outside the drift. White and weird and we were ordered to let someone on board. So I let them in, as they said, and... the Drow arrived, a woman, I think. She looked like a mystic or a priestess, and she questioned me about various things, but first she bought all my goods. Everything and for double the value, or so I thought. She showed me a coin that looked fine.

„An old trick” thought Dilayla, then asked.

"What about that scary thing you met there?"

Shiren shivered and drank a glass of the sweet stuff his race liked so much.

"Because we flew far, into the middle of the Zone... And that's where I came out of the Drift. We've already collected our cargo... But I was curious what's next, but when we got there... I picked up the signal. He was hard to pick up, but as soon as I caught him, it blew our transmitter. But for two seconds I saw her. It must have been the female of one of you. She had something on her head that looked like your uh... hair, but it was moving." He asked for a new glass, which he immediately emptied.

"It waved at me as if mockingly promising me peace. The woman was smiling, but I know she was screaming in her heart. I know it! - He finished another glass and called out. "That lady will paid."

She smiled at Shiren, though in her heart she wanted to punch him in his mouth.

"Funny... Listen to me, bug. If your ship turns out to be suitable for us, we'll buy it, but if you try to cheat me, I'll gouge out your brains with your own antennae.

Shirkas looked at her for a moment.

"Do you know that I was threatened in this way today?" Shiren said, not too scared.

"Only I'm not joking." She said without stopping smiling.

"She didn't look like she was joking either." Shirkas said quietly.

She asked for directions to where they would meet and then got up and walked over to Rosie, who was drawing something on the table.

"Alright young one, let's go?" said the mercenary, ordering the intern to get up, glanced at the table and saw that the girl was drawing some ridiculous stars.
When they left, Rosie asked her." Did you manage to arrange everything?

"Even more than I wanted." said Dilayla, tapping her pocket where she had put the coin she had taken from Zagsos.

"What was your point of me not talking about anything?.."The intern looked at the half-elf questioningly.

Dilayla turned around and made sure they were far enough away from the bar that no one could hear them, especially a certain Pahtra.

"He belongs, or rather belonged to the Shadows of Tarak." Many years ago, a civil war broke out on Tarak. On one side was the "Loyalist Alliance" linked to the Pact Worlds, to which belonged, or rather, it was led by the Lord Admiral. Second side was, the Glorious Rebellion supported by Veskarium." Dilayla said in a hushed voice.

"But the Vesks are… They like dictatorships and stuff. So why did they support the rebellion?" Rosie asked, a bit confused.

"Vesks are diverse, just like any race. And that was the issue of the rivalry between Veskarium and the Pact Worlds. Those were the times of the Cold War. In any case, the Shadows of Tarak were an elite special task force. For some they were heroes, for others terrorists. I'm not one who can say who was right…" she spoke thoughtfully, but Rosie cut her off.

"But usually it's probably that one side is, you know... the good one... the one that defends itself."The deaf girl was clearly confused. Dilayla laughed.

"Sometimes it does. But not in the case of a civil war, especially when it was a proxy war. The Rebellion won, but terrible things have happened, and the Shadows were banished from the planet along with their leader Igzar, an extremely nasty Pahtra who had sworn to hunt down the Lord Admiral... They became mercenaries and worked for various clients for many years, but never abandoned their mission. Igzar supposedly died a few years ago, but the Shadows still stick together, so I don't think it would be a good idea that they know who we work for. she told the deaf girl. Rosie thought for a moment.

"So where exactly are we going now?" she asked finally, clearly subdued.

"We've got some time, so I'm going to the junkyard. Firstly, I'll be able to buy some equipment there, although I doubt there's anything of real value there, and secondly, we need to exchange credits for hard currency." said the mercenary. She was also going to buy any kind of weapon for her companion to at least look like one that could defend herself

"But why?" Rosie asked in surprise.

"Because Abbadar Corp's influence doesn't extend there, even if they have any electronic equipment there.' And we know that at least one group uses coins. - Dilayla said, smiling friendly to make the deaf girl feel a little better. This conversation must have sadened her. Rosie seemed very sensitive. Sooner or later she would have to lose her innocence and faith in others, but it didn't have to be because of Dilayla.

The area was a bit desolate, full of half-finished buildings and half-empty warehouses where those damn flies were probably stored. Dilayla didn't like places like that either. They were too stimulating her natural mercenary instinct, which she had developed over the years of fighting in wars not her own. There is no better place in the whole city to set up an ambush. No one will come to help, if hears the sounds of fighting, no one will be interested She snorted at her own thoughts to push them away, but she still felt an irritating tingle of uneasiness down the back of her neck. Rosie touched her shoulder and was about to turn around, but then she saw someone in the road. Three young people, a dragonkin and two girls, and a strange three-legged droid with a spherical, motley body. Two were armed, and the third had Solarian markings on his arms. But they wouldn't draw a mercenary's attention, they didn't look like they were about to attack someone. But one of them was with them. The White Demon… It's rather motley at the moment… He was dressed in a strange shirt, probably made by Skitermander's, and dyed his hair in rainbow colors, but he was still one of them. Where did he come from? Are they planning a new invasion? And does it matter? she thought, and then Rosie shouted at her.

"Dilayla, they're following us!"

"I see!" she said, and the laser canon moved from her back to her shoulder. She fired, but the White Demon dodged, and the solarian summoned the moonblade as well.

"Thanks Rosie!" she said, and then felt a powerful slap to the back. She looked over her shoulder and saw the great Vesk with a heavy hammer. She snarled and swung the combat gauntlet, but then Rosie hit Vesk in the ribs and shoulder. She heard the crunch of breaking bones. The girl's hands glowed.

Eti decided that this whole mision to rescue Wormdak was completely, and absolutely pointless. Only did they free clone this dumb robot with this strange scar. Why were they involved? They just lost lots of charges. She even had to recharge her's better hand. Does itel understand how much batteries cost? And then Bina resents them, quite rightly so! She thought as she jumped from roof to roof. The only good thing about all this completely senseless fuss was that the threat of stormy days was gone. Now she wasn't so full of delight of herself. She felt… not much, except perhaps annoyance. She stood on the edge of the roof and unrolled her hood, taking off her goggles and mask. Someone was walking down the street. Two people. The first was a person in power armor, large and relentlessly noisy, and the second was much smaller and moved with grace. She looked that way and saw a blue-haired half-elf in power armor and a white-haired girl. But she heard something else. In the distance, several other people were approaching the two. Three of them belonged to some large creatures that were very clumsy in stealth, making more noise than a woman in power armor. But there was someone else, a true professional. She only heard him because he slipped on a brick without mortar. She looked in that direction and saw a piece of green armor. The figure, however, immediately hid behind a half-collapsed wall. She couldn't get a better look at it without giving away her location. She wondered for a moment what was going on here, but decided to let Itel know, she always has some brilliant plan.

"Itel, to that armored chick..." She didn't finish as the armored chick just opened fire on... Wormdak? Who would want to shoot Wormdak? He's just a clone. It's a waste of charges she thought, and saw that the figures hiding earlier turned out to be three Vesks dressed in local nomad costumes. One of them hit the woman in the back with a heavy rail hammer, but the white-haired girl hit Vesk, breaking his arm and ribs. Her hands began to glow. The helmet covered the half-elf's head, but Eti was aiming at her shoulder rifle anyway. She wasn't sure who they were fighting whom, so she decided to neutralize the one that attacked Wormdak first, the real threat was the one hiding. She fired and hit the rifle, perfect as always. She got up and wanted to change the shooting position, but the white-haired girl saw her and ran towards her and jumped on the roof. She stared at her with her mouth open, then whistled in surprise. This might be interesting.

Rosie was never quite sure of her training. She could do things, but she had no idea how. She simply knew them ... Sometimes she unexpectedly discovered abilities that she would never suspect herself of having. It was the same now. She knew she could fight, and she knew how to fight amazingly well, eventually getting into a few fights back on Absalom when several people tried to accost a deaf girl. She sent her opponents to the hospital once, which freaked her out a bit. But deep down, she was glad to be able to defend herself. So when she saw someone shooting at Dilayla, she ran to where the shot came from, and she just knew she could jump in there, even though it was a good four meters above the road. Once on the roof, she faced the shooter and stared in surprise. She thought she was going to run into some thug or something. She saw… she wasn't sure herself. The cat's ears and tail were typical of a Pahtras, but the face was human. Golden eyes with many blue flecks stared at her with a mixture of surprise and astonishment. Then the glasses showed that she had whistled to her. Various people whistled for her when they thought she couldn't hear them, though probably in a different context. Probably… She lunged at the shooter and hit her with her fist, but she dodged and swung her left hand, with the knife attached to it. She jumped back, but then the assailant slapped her face with a strange metal hand, completely different from Dilayla's prosthetics. She felt a sharp pain in her face and spit up, but she punched her opponent in the stomach with all her strength, but she stepped on her foot, and Rosie screamed in pain, though the strange whistling sound was hardly a scream, or so the others told her. So she hit the strange Pachtra with her fist in the face, until the other one spat blood from the nose. They jumped away from each other and stared at each other for three heartbeats, but then shooter motioned for her to drop to the ground. She took a risk and did as instructed. Above their heads someone fired a magnetic rifle burst. They got up at the same time and saw the Aeon guardsman. which was hidden behind the corner. Pahtrowata grabbed her pistol and fired twice, and Rosie ran towards him, but the guardsman ran away, and she didn't want to chase him with a potential opponent behind her. She spun around, fists poised for a fight, but the shooter raised her gun.

"alm down, Sparkle Fingers. Things seem to have calmed down down there, so I guess there's no point in us fighting too."

Still with her fists clenched, she glanced at the road below and saw that Dilayla and Pahtra-like friends had stopped fighting, so she jumped down onto the road. Her former opponent ran down the wall.

"Do you guys know who you're walking with? Who is he?" Dilayla asked sharply.

"It's Wormdak, Wormdak only. It was a shame to waste ammo on someone like that." said the shooter. She was now donning her goggle hood and Akiton’s dust mask. A strange white alien with colored hair spoke up

"I am Wrongdak, actually Wrong Hordak. And I know what this woman means. I was one of the White Demons, albeit briefly. My brothers have raided and ravaged planets. They have destroyed countless civilizations in the name of Horde Prime… But he is no more." he smiled sadly. - He was annihilated and is no more. - Relief flashed across Wrongdak's face. - I am sorry for what has been done to your people!

Rosie noticed from the corner of her eye that the green-haired elf, the red-haired human girl and the Dragonkin exchanged knowing glances. Her would-be opponent snorted softly. A strange spherical android painted in dappled colors covered the white-skinned alien.

"Well, a soldier is there to kill, even if he ordered it himself."Dilayla said with a crooked smile. Wrongdak cowered sadly, and Rosie felt sorry for him.

"Listen kids, what are you going to do? I'm guessing you didn't take him in because he was wandering around the street. A weird bunch like you guys are looking for something... on Saltmarsh. Let's say we'll help you find it as compensation." Dilayla said.

The elf hesitated for a moment, but Dragonkin spoke up.

"I'm Alatar, and these are Itel, Lilka and Eti. We are looking for a certain observatory..." he said pointing to his companions. Three Vesk opponents lay on the ground, two were wounded, but one appeared to be dead. Rosie tried not to look in his direction. Vesk, whom she had beaten, coughed.

"If you help me dress my wounds, I'll tell you where it is. An hour away from the city, on a small hill." he said. Dilayla raised an eyebrow. Eti hugged Itel tightly. Rosie felt a pang of sadness for a moment.

Personal goals

Arkan-tar smiled to himself. He felt no remorse for not being completely honest with both his comrades and the Lord Admiral. He guessed that everyone involved had their own personal goals. Lady Cala and her keeper weren't just a noblewoman and her servant, and Antares wasn't just a mercenary. He wasn't sure about his other companions. Rehiza had some connection to his friend, but as far as he knew, she served the Order of the Eclipse and could be a minor obstacle. Dilayla, Rosie and Dr. Qin were not hiding any secrets, they were just random participants in an extremely interesting game. Of course, he wasn't fully aware of everything himself, but that only made it all the more interesting.

He went to the cantina at the spaceport. It was a rather pleasant placet, brightly lit and clean, even somewhat sterile. There were two bodyguards here, both androids, and they seemed a bit like siblings, though it was hard to tell with these biomechanical organisms. It served mostly strong Vesks beer and that ubiquitous sweet liquor on this planet that was hard to drink without nausea. The food here, judging by the smell, served mostly reheated packets, though at least they were top-shelf ones. It was mostly members of those few ship crews that stopped here to replenish supplies or buy any valuable goods available here.From the speakers came the unobtrusive music typical of such places, no Shirpop or Orkopunk. It was even pleasant here, although he rather liked more ... dynamic places. But he wasn't here to have fun, there was something for him here. And he was seeking information at the same time, because it was in the interest of all of them. He sat down at a table, ordered a beer from a Shiren waitress. There weren't many guests here at the moment, so he decided to join the interesting half-drow and the huge Veska with a huge hammer on his back. At a glance, he could tell free pirates apart from corsairs and fanatical cultists.

"Hello, I'm Arkan-tar." He offered them his hand and the half-drow shook it.

"I'm Boatswain Kaert." he said, and Veska growled.

"And I am Gydwa." She gave Verthani a stern look.

"Second mate on Merciless." Kaert finished her’s sentence halfway. He seemed to be very drunk already, but also quite likable for Arkan's taste.

"Merciless, is that a ship..." he searched his Exocotex resources. "of Captain Moonshadow. i presume correctly?"He looked at them with admiration. Such a pirate in such a place... It could be a coincidence, but...

"Yeah, that's her... We're taking part in a wonderful expedition, and then we're back to fight with the Azlanti. said the half-drow, but Veska glared at him. Oh mysteries, interesting thought the scholar.

"I am a member of an archaeological expedition organized by Kemanis University and funded by Lady Cala Grayskull of Carurystal. - he said after taking a few sips of beer. He looked over the foam at the interlocutors.

"How much they're paying you? You know, we could use a decent scholar to show us which shells are worth something and which can be used as shooting targets instead of tin cans."

"And so the spell was broken. I'm talking with the ignorant." "Well, if you have the right contacts, there is no such thing as worthless shells. Every remnant of lost civilizations gives us clues about how they functioned, so it is valuable, and often priceless." Arkan-tar said with a hint of superiority in his voice. Sam didn't have clean hands. He destroyed many relics of the past as he sought to obtain the more valuable treasures. Well, the work of an archaeologist and explorer involved fierce competition and often required difficult decisions to be made.

"I told you our captain knows what she's doing, and you constantly suspect her of the worst. You could show her the respect due to someone who will make you rich." said Kaert too loudly as someone who is already heavily drunk.

Veska gurgled menacingly.

"If I'm going to get rich picking up garbage, I'd rather scrub the deck for the rest of my life." she said grimly, looking at Boatswain.

"Oh, I see that Veska's honor has awakened in someone." The half-drow laughed violently, spitting beer at Verthani. „Definitely not worth my time, Arkan-tar thought as Veska eyed the boatswain with a clear desire to kill.

"It's very interesting. But I have a question, where are you going?" the archaeologist asked, trying to extract information about the destination of his interlocutors. Coincidences happen and a true explorer must be able to take advantage of them, but he must not confuse them with the deliberate action of third parties.

"Not yours..." Gydwa wanted to say,

"Into the zone... to a place called... Enteria, Emeria... Etheria!" he said loudly.

"First I hear, and I know a lot about lost civilizations. Could you tell more? " he asked, trying to control his emotions. And now it's starting to get unsettling.

"The captain comes from there, apparently it is full of ancient artifacts ... This is confirmed by some data we have obtained ..." said Keart and called for another beer.

"Did you get them from an Azlanti ship?" he asked with an indulgent smile.

"Yes, how do you know?" asked the surprised boatswain.

"Because you're an imbecile. Your captain is known throughout the galaxy for raiding Azlanti ships…" Arkan-tar thought.

" It's quite a well known story ... in certain circles. The Azlanti allow their ships to be captured, and leave information about the hidden treasure there, and the pirates go to the indicated place and die there in trap." he said in a grim voice. His debaters exchanged glances. Veska looked triumphant, and the half-drow was scared. "Well, I have to go to the restroom, see ya!" Verthani called, and got up from the table. As he turned away from the two bewildered pirates, he allowed himself a shy smile.

The bathroom in this establishment was pretty good, though it was a spaceport cantina, so it had to maintain a certain standard. He took care of a minor need, washed his hands and then walked over to the mirror and slipped an implant screwdriver from his finger and unscrewed it. There he found a message left for him. He read it, then ignited it with the micro laser hidden in his other finger. The order he got from his patron contained an important clue ... But unfortunately it required further work from him. He didn't put the mirror back in place, he didn't have time, and he didn't want to go out through the main hall, he noticed how that Giant Veska was watching at him, and he didn't want to get in her way again. He took a micro-folding stool, normally the size of a matchbox, from his pocket and placed it under a small window near the ceiling. Using the screwdriver again, he unhooked the window and laid it gently on the floor. Then he climbed up and squeezed through the hole. He fell through the other side with a groan. His job required a lot of physical fitness. He was not an academic, but a field worker, forcing his way through thickets of carnivorous bushes and examining a hundred-times cursed shipwrecks. Despite it, he had to rub his aching arm for a moment. But he couldn't waste any time. Those two were busy for now, but he was sure Veska would want to find out what was going on with him and why he had broken his neck… He could defend himself, but he wasn't going to risk it. He dusted himself off and headed towards where the Relief was supposed to be. He needed the help of his companions in getting to the place he found out about, and besides, they would support him if a couple of pirates wanted to bother him.

Rechiza didn't expect them to find the ship so quickly. She even expected them to fail. After all, spaceships aren't something you can buy in the fair, and in this goddamn shitjole of the universe, getting one should be impossible. And here the ship basically found them. Under other circumstances, she would have considered this incredible luck, but now...

She wasn't sure if she had done the right thing by agreeing to this mission. She owed a great debt to the Order, and they have common enemies. They shared common goals. However, her personal goal was ... to find answers to the puzzles she came across on Cracked Skull It's not true ... You are looking for something completely different. Something with a much more pronounced flavor. She thought bitterly. She had studied the ruins long ago…a beautiful crystal palace, a seemingly idyllic artist's work…She remembered strange inscriptions that their best linguistic computers could not decipher, as if the language itself refused to be understood. She remembered the beast that had murdered all her comrades and the flash brighter than the light of a thousand suns. On whom should I seek revenge? On a race that died out so absolutly so given it lost its name? The ones who are worshiped by the Anacites on Abbalon, though even the machines have forgotten who they were?" she thought, and glanced at Miss Daisy walking beside her. The woman was more gloomy and introverted than usual, which could be considered an interesting sight. But there was something else. It seems that that conversation brought back some unpleasant memories for her. Does someone like her even have a jolly one? Lashunti thought as she looked at the elf as she scared away the Shiren kebab seller with one look.

"What do you think of this elven wizard?" she asked, to break the tiring silence.

Miss Daisy snorted contemptuously

"She's an incompetent idiot... Noisy, and undisciplined. I've known students like that... I've had students like that when I've been teaching." she shook her head and the witchwarper felt some of the anger escaped from the woman.

"Nantambu was a great school of magic on the Lost Golarion. It was one of the first schools of magic to be established in the post-Starfall era. If she's really from there... She might have a great deal of experience in magic to match yours." Lashunti said, remembering her... friend who had given her eyes. Oh doctor, in all your millennia of life, have you ever been to that place? Did it still exist in your time?

Miss Daisy answered her with a shrug.

"I don't know much about your Golarion, it meant nothing to me before i left my home planet, and now it's just somethimg that others miss, though knows it only from fairy tales brought to their world. I know there's usually a nasty truth behind these stories." she said grimly. "But I know someone who is said to be from that your Golarion... His name is Prince Zed and he's an Automaton.

Rechiza raised an eyebrow.

"Do you have one of them on Carurystal? I didn't know that even one survived to our times." she said, genuinely surprised.

"Yes. He was a great friend of Lady Cala's family, though our personal relationship is complicated." replied the sorceress

"Just like that... you have a complicated relationship with someone who remembers the times of Golarion...?!" Rechiza asked in disbelief.
Miss Daisy shrugged again.

"I don't understand what you all see in this old planet. It was neither technologically advanced nor particularly pleasant to live in, even if we believe the stories that always embellish reality. I know much more about thatthan I would like." she said with an energy that the witchwarper had never seen in her before.

"That's interesting... I was born on Castroval and spent a large part of my life in the Pact Worlds. I've been everywhere except maybe Aukturn." she said, and out of the corner of her eye saw Miss Daisy start. It didn't surprise her.

"What was your favorite place? The one that meant the most to you…" Miss Daisy suddenly changed the subject of the conversation.

She thought in surprise.

"Not counting Castroval? I spent a lot on Abbalon studying the ruins of the First Ones. Have you heard of them? " she looked at the mystic and saw that she had stumbled. She was clearly agitated, which she tried to hide.

"And what have you learned about this ancient and wise civilization?" the sullen woman asked.

"Not much on Abbalon. More during my travels, especially… while on Cracked Skull.-" she said after a moment's thought. She unconsciously looked away when she mentioned the planet where such a great tragedy had befallen her, but Miss Daisy noticed because she asked.

"And that's where you lost your eyes and antennae? The first guarded their secrets very jealously." said the grim sorceress, and the witchwarper sensed some sympathy in her voice, but she only felt fury.

"What would someone like you, someone from the backwaters of the galaxy, know about one of the greatest civilizations that ever inhabited the universe?"
Miss Daisy laughed very bitterly.

"Oh, what can I know... Absolutely nothing and more than you can imagine." she said smiling sourly. Rechiza frowned suprised. She didn't want to be surprised by someone like that.

"I didn't know you were interested in the history of the First Ones…" Rechiza asked, carefully examining the gloomy mystic.

"For many years ... I was in touch with their creation, one of the most perfect ..." said Miss Daisy. Lashunti had the impression that she sensed great sadness in her voice and ... something else? Guilty? Disgust? The Grave Robber or someone like that she thought. She knew many who had no problem looting places of worship and graves, perhaps Arkan-tar was such a person, but in the case of a dark sorcerer whom she suspected of colluding with cults, it could involve much darker deeds. Is that where you got those scars from? she asked in her mind, feeling for a moment a strange bond with that woman. Then she heard someone calling them.

- It's great that you're here! I was just looking for you! – Arkan-tar shouted.

She did not trust Rechiza, though perhaps a better word would be that she beware her. But Arkan-tar annoyed her. In Mystacor, she met many arrogant hustlers like him, who preferred to get what they wanted using their own cunning, rather than working hard for their success. "You, on the other hand, have been worked for your own downfall for decades..." she thought and smiled nastily.

"Why would someone so learned and resourceful wll need two sorcerers?" she asked with undisguised reluctance, but Verthani spread his hands in a gesture of helplessness.

"I need you because I have obtained important information, but I am unable to get it myself!" shouted the archaeologist.

"What important information our scholar has learned in the canteen over a beer."There was sarcasm in her voice, but Arkan-tar didn't seem to care

"Listen, I spoke to a former employee of an observatory, and they said they were scanning the Ravaged Zone. There may be maps there that will corroborate what Lady Cala has provided us with." Verthani said smiling quite ingratiatingly. She thought for a moment. The maps they had were accurate, much more accurate than what they could reveal. Unfortunately, they were full of holes, because the cults of Nyarlathetop and other Great Old Ones and Outer Gods were not equally strong everywhere and did not always have someone capable of contacting Creeping Chaos. Besides, she wasn't sure if they could fully trust such demented people who would knowingly give their souls to such terrible beings. Just because they're like you, you know what someone like you is capable of

"I take it you don't need these maps to show that my Lady participation in this expedition is no longer needed?" she asked coldly.

"I would never leave you here if you sugest that. I would never have thought of such a thing, my lady." said the archaeologist spreading his hands."I'm not going to do that out of sheer laziness. It would take so much effort to figure out a way to board a ship secretly without your knowledge, and the Lady's company is very welcome for many reasons. Apart from the fact that we don't have a ship yet."

"We just got it, or rather we have the oportunity, to rent a ship with a crew. But they were interested in the presence of the Archaeologist and the Sholar on the ship." Rechiza interjected.

"They probably want someone to train the crew in matters of a more scientific nature, and perhaps teach them how to get around with a little better company." she said, seeing how Verthani's gray face faded when Rechiza mentioned that they needed an archaeologist. Interesting

"What kind of ship is this?" Arkan-tar asked cautiously.

"Well, we don't know much yet. It is own by a certain Bina and has such a funny sorceress to help." said Lashunti, grinning happily. She tried to glare at her, but the Witchwarper didn't seem to mind.

"Okay Arkan, let's go there. You're right, it wouldn't hurt to find out more about where we're going. Just rent a car, 'cause this sun is killing me." she said, sighing heavily.

It took them a while to get transport, there weren't that many vehicles in this city, and even fewer people were interested in taking them out of town to this whole observatory thing. Finally, they found a small, horribly sheckening car with four hard seats in a cramped passenger compartment, where they had to sit facing each other, holding on to metal brackets hanging from the roof. The driver was a sullen and surprisingly menacing-looking Shiren. She smiled bitterly to herself when she saw the car. Well, i am returning to old garbbage she thought. In all the decades she'd spent in the Horde, she'd ridden a variety of vehicles, though she'd never learned how to drive them. At first she had an overwhelming aversion to noisy and clumsy machines, and then she had lost the ability to leave the Fright Zone anyway… But now she had come to appreciate Hordak's near-genius pragmatic ingenuitness, who could create such advanced machines with limited resources. Who knows, maybe if you had somehow found your way to the Pact Worlds, you would now be a respectable if surly businessman, and I would be the respected Head Sorcereress of Mystacor, she thought, feeling the vehicle tossing her with every bump. She thought about it. Virtually no one on Etheri knew how Hordak had ended up on her planet, including himself. Recently, however, she has got som suspicions. She was curious if anything had been concluded about this in her former home. But would anyone want to investigate a seemingly meaningless matter? Maybe her former superior would be interested, but she wasn't sure if he survived the final battle. In fact, she knew almost nothing about what happened after… her death, Creeping Chaos spared her information on this subject. They only told her that Catra and Adora had survived. She wasn't sure of anything else, not even if Glimmer was still alive, though from some allusions made by Nyarlathotep she could hope... Apart from them and maybe Mikah and Castaspella, there were no people on Etheri whose survival she cared about. "But does anyone remember you without feeling hatred? Will anyone be happy to see you back?"

The grim tone of her thoughts must have begun to show on her face, because Arkan-tar turned to her smiling cheekily.

- Why are you so gloomy Miss Daisy? The two of you managed to capture a ship, which is a respectable act in a place like this. And you look like you've been ate lemon!

She began snapping her fingers, trying to prevent the vision of black tentacles strangling Verthani until his eyes popped out of their sockets.

"Mister Arkan-tar, I know from experience that easy beginnings do not ease future difficulties. We just had a bit of luck, and that's not something you should rely on. We must be absolutely focused and not let anything distract us if we are to survive!" Do you hear what you're talking about again?

"Well, someone who survived such a terrible accident has the right to see the future only in dark colors." Rechiza said with feigned sadness. She smiled at her, imagining the Lashunti shrouded in black flame. The archaeologist raised an eyebrow curiously, but before the witchwarper managed to say anything, she reached from behind her neck and turned off the mask. The two passengers sucked in a whistling breath. Arkan-tar's eyes widened in obvious shock, and Rechiza couldn't take her eyes off her face. She smiled at them, showing two protruding sharp fangs.

"There have been few in the last thirty years who have had the honor of seeing my face, so take a good look. - She ran a clawed finger over the scars.- This is only a fraction of the price I had to pay. And believe me, it was absolutely not worth it." she said sharply. "So I've learned to see the world as dark as possible, believe it or not, what you can't see will be much darker anyway.

"Then she put the mask back on. For a long time everyone was silent, which allowed her to return to her unhappy thoughts.

"Why are you doing this?" Lashunti finally asked in a softer voice than before.

{Why am I doing what?" she asked, startled out of her thoughts.

"Why do you serve Lady Cala and join this expedition with her?"

She thought for a moment. She had to come up with a safe answer, as close to the truth as possible, only she wasn't sure what the truth was.

:I guess I do it because I have to. Because I have nothing else to do." she said and realized it was true. Creeping Chaos would probably accept her refusal, then punish her in ways unimaginable. Most of what she did, she did to survive. She became an unrivaled master at this. I was like a rat, clinging to life with all my claws... Ready to do anything to survive, betray anyone, hurt anyone. In fact, it always just went with the flow, only paving the way with its claws. But once she did otherwise, and that's why she's where she is now. I will do it this time too. I will do everything so that nothing happens to them. May no more misfortune befall them. That will be my personal goal, only in this way will I find redemption.

"That's pretty fatalistic thinking." Rechiza said.

"Because I'm a fatalist ... What did this creature look like." she suddenly changed the subject.

Lashunti turned those strange, metallic eyes on her.

"How ..." she asked clearly shocked.

"I know a lot about the ruins of the First Ones, though most of what I know isn't first-hand… But I've seen creatures like this, and their power is potentially immense." Lashunti replied with a weak smile.

Rechiza shook her head.

"It was something like a solfuga... it took my antennae off, but... To get rid of it and hundreds of others that were in production, I used a rock incinerator- she said. She didn't know much about galactic weapons, but she guessed it must be something terrible, but she didn't pursue the subject. They have enough time to find out everything, so they spent the rest of the way in silence, thinking about what reasons led them to participate in this cursed enterprise.

You have been waiting for this chapter for a long time, although it is neither the longest nor the most dynamic.

Fallen Stars.

She looked at the falling stars smiling slightly. Being able to enjoy this view was one of the few perks of what the queen had done… what Glimmer had done. She's not our queen anymore and she won't be if she continues act like this. She thought as she looked at the small obsidian crown she had placed on the balcony table of delicate red stone. The crown was as black as her skin and had many sharp arms that shot upward like blades. She wasn't very impressive, not at first glance. It had no decorations, and no jewels were placed in it. Just a perfectly polished piece of stone. However, when someone looked at it, they could see that it absorbs light, as it does now, when it absorbed the glow of stars sparkling in the sky.

"Don't you find it strange, Neutrino, that we were called Stars sisters, even though we've never seen real stars? " Halo's voice came from behind her. She turned and said.

"No one saw them ..." she said and then corrected after thinking about it "Almost no one."

Her sister sat in an ornate wheelchair made from a converted chair made of wood that was harder than steel. Halo laughed sadly and looked at her. One eye still glowed with a red inner glow, but the other was gray and dead, as was the entire left side of her body. A gift from the Shadow Weaver she thought bitterly. The "living" half of her body was pinkish red and shiny, which further emphasized the enormity of the harm that the accursed sorcerer had done to her. Her fiery red hair was long and unkempt. She tried to take care of them herself, but it was not easy with one good hand. Besides, she often neglected her appearance, wallowing in her sadness and research.

"What are you writing?" she asked her sister, seeing that she was holding the nib in her hand, bent over a sheet of paper.

"Reply to the wedding invitation." She answered without stopping typing.

"It's the seventh. Now I think she'll understand that there's no point in trying again, and she'll stop the pathetic kindness." she twisted her mouth into a contemptuous smile.

"She'll stop it, because I'm writing that I agreed to come to the wedding, on my behalf and on yours as well." Halo said softly. Her voice wasn't as beautiful as it used to be, though it still had a certain melody to it. But the song within her was dark and full of pain

"Why? She continues to deny us our justice!" she shouted, and the whole balcony trembled with the strength of her voice.

"And he certainly won't give it to us if we sit on our islands as if we're hiding from the world. She should see what has been done to me. What has been done to us!" her sister's voice was enough to make her feel her own pain and rage, though it was only a shadow of what was in Halo's heart.

" Well, I'll have to order a new dress to made. I don't feel like wearing what I wore to Frosta's ball." she said before biting her tongue. Her sister experienced those events very bad, and she was not surprised. It's been since Glimmer's kidnapping that the war has flared up with renewed vigor... And now we're going to damed Catra's wedding! Do they really not understand how absurd this is?!

Halo only had full control over half of her face, but she smiled very serenely, which was extremely rare in the post-battle era.

"Everything will be fine, you have nothing to worry about. I have…good feeling." said gently the youngest of the Star Sisters.

"I'm glad..." she answered cautiously, unsure how to understand Halo's words.

"Really... I'm no longer the same scared woman who cowered in her own chamber for three weeks after that Scorpion blew up the pillars in the ice palace. No, my wounds have… healed." her sister touched the gray half of her face clumsily with a half-dead hand. She shuddered at the sight.

"Scorpion-woman will be there too. She is now a princess and married Perfuma." she recalled, sitting across from her sister.

"It could be fun. Scorpia is said to be a very nice woman. Sociable and open. I'd love to reminisce about the old days. I'll tell her some stories. You know about the battle and dark magic, about the fate of her relatives. You think she'll like them? And Perfuma... She loves beauty so much, so she'll have something to look at, won't she Neutrino?" Halo laughed bitterly loud and bitterly. She didn't like it when Halo was in this mood, and she'd been in it a lot lately. She could be very unpleasant then and could hurt others, even those who cared about her. But she wasn't going to talk her out of going to that stupid wedding. Let all see what has been done to them. But they won't see everything, they won't see what happened to Pulsar she thought bitterly.

"Well, this will be our little revenge." She smiled with a feeling of bitter triumph.

"The time for a big revenge will come to... "Halo smiled mysteriously.

"You think they'll give us Hordak eventually? We have nothing against Catra, so we should let her alone." he said thoughtfully, fearing where this conversation was heading.

"You know who I'm talking about!" Halo called out and stood up, leaning on her only good arm.

"She's dead!"she replied sharply to her sister.

"Because Adora and Catra say so?! They didn't even give us her body for us to spit on!" The youngest of the Star Sisters screamed so loud that everyone in the ruby castle was now feeling a piercing pain.

"There is no body, because there is nothing left of her. With the release of such power ... We both felt it ..." Halo tried to calm down. She fell back into the cart, but seemed triumphant.

"We felt something different. I remember it as if a dark force beyond imagination reached here and took something. I'm telling you, Shadow Weaver is alive and laughing at us all!" Halo shouted, a little quieter this time.

"The dead are dead, that's one of those things that will never change." she said to her sister and put her hand on her shoulder. But she just gave a short, jerky laugh.

"Oh... If you'd seen it, I've seen it. You knew what I know." she felt what I feel. she said indulgently, as if to a child

She turned away from her so that Halo wouldn't see that she was afraid. She was worried about her. "Shadow Weaver, if only you were alive... If only you understood what you've done to us!" she thought, but answered her sister.

"Enough of this. She's dead, nothing can change that. You won't get your revenge. Forget everything and move on." she drawled to her sister, trying not to evoke the Voice of Terror.

"We'll see Neutrino. The future will bring the truth." Halo said quietly.

She couldn't talk to her sister anymore. Not when she was in that mood, which she was almost constantly. She stared at the falling stars for a moment. Reportedly, this phenomenon was much more common on Etheria, as the planet was in gravitational balance between the two suns and often passed between the outer clouds. She had heard that on other planets, their inhabitants considered shooting stars to be the tears of higher beings. Some even said that any wish made upon seeing this tear would be granted. I*f so, many must indeed weep for our planet... Or maybe* we are the chosen ones of the universe and all our wishes will come true she thought and felt a cool wind. It was blowing from the southwest. From the Isles of Sorrow. "She came from there." She turned to her sister, who was drying a sheet of paper.

"I have to go. As far as I'm concerned, I agree to go to this damned wedding, too. I need to talk to Glimmer about how she envisions the future of our planet. Plus, there are a few people I like. Spinnrella, Prince Peekablue, even little Frosta, though she's not so little anymore... We swore to protect her, remember?" she asked Halo, who burst out laughing.

"Well, she's proven she can handle trouble, even when she brought it on herself. But it will be nice to see how she has grown and how she is doing. She's more powerful than ever. We've all gained power. But what lies there, there in this darkness above us." her sister said. "We don't know if we'll be able to defend ourselves again, even with She-Ra's help. They don't even know... But I'll be prepared." she said and looked into her eyes. There was a mysterious glow there, something that had not been there until recently. If it helps you, sister, she thought sadly. She walked over to Halo and gave her a tight hug.

"Take care, little sister. I'll come over to you before the wedding. I'll show you my dress and you'll tell me what needs to be improved. And don't forget your own dress… But now I must visit the Pulsar."

"Tell her I greet you. Believe me, he will understand. Hello said quietly." she left her sister in the ryby palace.

Since the end of the war, old Horde skimmers have revolutionized transportation. But she was using something much more interesting and… less reminiscent of Hordak and his cursed right arm. She smiled at the sight of the Galactic Horde's small captured gunboat. The ship was fast, elegant and stylish. Ship had reprogramed autopilot to listen to her voice, and she could fly it anywhere in Etheri, even take her into space. "Maybe that's a good idea." She thought as she entered the ship, which she had painted in the color of gleaming obsidian. To visit other worlds. To see something that none of us have ever seen in any of these lifetimes. Maybe then Halo would know that the Shadow Weaver wasn't lurking in the dark she thought as the craft moved away.

In theory, there were four Star Islands, Obsidian, Ruby, and Pearl, and the Spire in between, but only the first three had true inhabitants. Each of them had belonged to one of the Starsisters for as long as the people of Etheria could remember. But the Spire was shared. Their legacy was kept there. Rising more than three hundred meters above the waves, the structure of black, red, and white stone was unmistakably the work of the First Ones. Entrapta wanted to examine her, but Hordak's mistress was forbidden to go anywhere near the Isles under threat of severe punishment... even the ultimate. They allowed Bow to see the remnants of that ancient civilization that lay on their islands, but not even he was allowed to approach the spire. The ship moored at the air harbor. They used to go here on Isle-manufactured magnetoflyaers and supplies were delivered to a second harbor just over the water. She was actually surprised how well the Galactic Horde's ship and the First One's building matched. One of her Custodians explained that there were a finite number of reasonable technical solutions, and she chose to believe him for lack of better answers. Someday she would have to look at this mystery, as well as many others related to their legacy, but that was the future, now she had to deal with something completely different ...

Guards clad in black, red, and white armor saluted her, raising their swords as she passed them. Those in white had their heads shaved as a sign of mourning for their lady. Those who served Halo, on the other hand, had the same feverish look as her sister. Once upon a time, all three of the Sworn Guards were among the mightiest armed formations on Etheria, but they suffered heavy casualties during the Battle. It took a long time to rebuild their strength, and in the case of the White Guard it was completely impossible for many years, until finally Pulsar began to accept their oaths again. What worried her the most was the condition of the Halo soldiers who seemed to share her sister's mental instability. She walked over to the narrow elevator that would take her to the lowest level of the spire, which was deep below sea level. Above there were barracks, workshops and armories, as well as many rooms whose purpose was lost in the mists of time. They were used by the guardsmen and armorers from the Isles, but the undergrounds were the Star Sisters' private sanctuary, and only the Custodians were allowed to enter them outside.

The descent below the surface took a long time, and she felt as if she could feel the pressure of huge masses of water around her. The Custodians who came here had to stop to let their bodies get used to the pressure, but the Sisters were immune to it. As she stepped out of the elevator, she saw two Custodians who had come to greet her. The Custodian transformation ritual changed the appearance of those who submitted to it. They got taller and slimmer, and their eyes shone like one of the sisters, even though they weren't subdued to either of them. They renounced their names and pasts, even their facial features became similar. They always spoke to other in the third person and seemed to have no distinguishable personality. Ever since Prime's invasion, they had begun to make her uneasy, the islands with exception of Spire thoug hardly suffering from the invasion of a deranged conqueror. So she wondered what those who had met the Horde Prima in person must feel. "Maybe I'll invite Scorpia and Catra to the Spire, I'm sure they'll appreciate our servants and their pleasant company. They will remember the good old days." she thought smirking evilly.

There were always seventy-seven custodians, and they had numbers instead of names. When one died, the one with the previous number took the place of the predecessor. And then one of the inhabitants of the Isles would start dreaming of the Spire until he couldn't take it anymore and would come here to undergo the ritual and live the sometimes extremely long life of a Custodian. To some it may have seemed awful, but Etheria held many dark secrets. A few of them nearly wiped out their world.

The sanctuary was huge, with a ceiling that danced red, purple, and white lights. Even though they were deep underwater, the air was dry here. There were many tall pilars that wound together in a spiral. Crystalline objects could be seen between the turns of the pilars. These were their predecessors, the Star Sisters from previous generations. However, the Pulsar was not placed there. Her fate was something they had not been prepared for in all the millennia since the First Ones had left.

Dressed in heavy tricolor robes, the custodians led her to a large altar carved to represent the first three Starsisters. Whenever one of them was injured or sometimes even killed, they were brought here and the ancient power of the First One's device healed them if it wasn't to late. It was something that almost no one on the planet knew about. She wasn't about to change this state of affairs. She wasn't sure if the device would help anyone else, and even if it did, it wasn't meant for strangers. What have we done to deserve such an honor? We are only relics, remnants of a world that none of us even understood she thought as she stood in front of her sister. Her body was shrunken and dry. She was in the fetal position with her eyes closed. Her whole body was covered with a strange growth, translucent and blue, which wanted to wrap around her sister's body and enclose it in a chrysalis. The Custodians removed it regularly, but it always came back. Nothing helped, although their resources were also limited. Maybe if we brought She-Ra here, or Mikah, or even someone from other planet. Hell, maybe I'd let that mad girl examine her if she was sure would help Pulsar that way. What was happening to her sister was seemingly no different from the fate that awaited them all. She seemed dead, but she was definitely alive, in some weird twisted way. She looked at the pillars and the crystalline objects within them. If you approached them, you could see that they were in fact bodies of the sisters of past... They weren't fully dead either, their successors could look into their memories if needed... When one of the Star sisters died, she created a crystalline cocoon in which it remained forever... And soon, within a few years at the most, her sisters joined her, overwhelmed with despair. And then the new Star sisters were born and the whole cycle started all over again.

But now it has been broken. Pulsar had been in this state for eighteen years. They lived, and she… As they approached, they felt her constant pain, but for five years, since the Heart was dismantled something else too. The feeling of hunger, powerful and insatiable. She barely heard the plea, but it was poignant, heartbreaking with grief that made her knees buckle beneath her. She didn't know what her sister wanted, but she would do anything to satisfy it. But she had no idea what to do, she felt absolutely powerless. She knelt in front of her sister and said.- It's me, Neutrino. I hope you can hear me. It’s fine wit us. It's been almost five years since Horde Prima was defeated and peace reigned. We got an invitation to the wedding from our former queen. It's a double wedding, her and the royal techmaster Bow and this Catra’s and She-Ra’s. Or rather Adora’s. We refused at first, but Halo convinced us to agree. You know, I'm worried about Halo. Her obsession with the Shadow Weaver continues to intensify. He keeps saying that she's out there somewhere and hiding. That it's just waiting to come back and unleash her’s wrath. In fact, I wish it were. Then I could capture her, but I wouldn't kill her. I would have given her a much worse fate… You know what I mean. I would take her to the Savior. She would feel the same as we feel. She would understand what she did to you, to Halo, to me... What she did to all of us...

She smiled as she saw her sister leaving. She loved her very much, but she knew that she would never understand her. He would never feel what she felt, the incessant burning cold halfway through his body not passing even for a moment. None of her incarnations had known such a feeling. It was not only pain, but something completely unnatural, as if death itself had taken half of her body. Nothing could help her. Healers from all over Ethera came to heal her, but they couldn't even understand what was really wrong with her. After the war, they invited Horde medics, and even those few medics from the old Prime Empire, but they didn't do anything. She, She-Ra herself, had also arrived, but her presence only made things worse. She felt a little sorry for this Adora when she blamed herself for doing something wrong and hurting her. Though she saw the suffering in her eyes, she order her two more times, the last time nearly dying. Then the young woman apologized to her and asked for forgiveness. Halo politely accepted the apology, but in her heart she felt hatred. For not being able to help her. For the false hope it gave her. For the fact that she was healthy and young and had her whole life ahead of her… Let her suffer, she no longer has compassion for others in her heart, except perhaps for her sisters.

But after all, she had felt better since the end of the war. She didn't toss and turn in her own bed at night. She did not lock herself in her own chamber, afraid to go outside. She didn't tremble at the sound of thunder. She found a new strength... But unfortunately she couldn't tell her sister about it. She wouldn't understand...

"Foundling, take me ... to the reading room" she called. From the shadows came a Prime clone dressed in a red livery. His hair was dyed red and slicked back. Neutrino didn't understand why she decided to make one of Hordak's brothers her personal servant, but she had nothing against clones. They had no choice, Hordak had, let alone his thousand-cursed right hand. They were just abandoned tools, as damaged as she was. She almost felt sorry for them. Almost…
The clone silently obeyed. He never said anything, he was probably a defect like the wicked ruler of the Dread Zone, but he was harmless. It was found abandoned on the beach of Ruby Island not long after they had returned from the Spire, where they had hidden behind a force field. For reasons that are difficult to understand, Prime didn't try to get the ancient building, but it's probably a good thing because thanks to the chipped Neutrino, the scales could tip to the other side...

The clone drove her to the reading room, then closed the door behind her. Then he pressed one of the red stones on the wall and a hidden passage opened. He drove her there. She found herself in a hidden tunnel that led to the vast and immeasurable dungeons beneath the palace. She discovered them soon after the War, when she heard the call, music that was painful in its truth. She promised… an end. The Foundling drove her to a dark room, her private sanctuary, then left her. She stood in front of a stone altar she had had a trusted stonemason carve, then took a small book from a hiding place. She found it recently when she was searching the endless archives of Mystacor for anything that would help her find out how Shadow Weaver gained her powers and where she escaped... Unfortunately, she found no reliable information on this subject, although she had a vague feeling that the sorcerers were hiding something from her. But she found this book, and it contained the information she needed. She were explaining the call she had heard since the full power of magic had returned. The book was called the Gravedigger's Confessions, and it was about a being called Charon, the Horseman of Death, one of the Daemon masters. She lit two black candles and began to sing. It was the right moment, for Abbaxes's moon was now full. She suddenly felt an aura of unimaginable evil that almost made her vomit, and then she heard a voice.

"Welcom my Fallen Star… We have so much to talk about."

About grimoires and grim tales

She was sweeping the dust in a private bookcase, humming happily. She felt happy and excited. That glorious day was approaching. Her niece was about to get married! With that nice Bow! And Adora and Catra are getting married too! She was overjoyed that everything had worked out this way. Everyone was happy... Except...

She sat down in the chair feeling a surge of sharp sadness. It must be difficult for him. It was an anniversary recently. Both anniversaries. His rescue and her…her death. Why do I not want to say that word even in mind?

She put down the sweep and thought, resting her head on her hands. She was ashamed of it, but day of finding Mikah was one of the happiest days of her life, even though it was also the day the occupation began. The brother she buried, and whose presumed death had created a rift between her and Queen Angela, had returned. For many years, she could not forgive her for giving the order that led to that terrible battle in Valey of Shattered Armors sometimes known Scorpions Gorge. It wasn't until the meeting with Adora that her attitude changed, although she really decided to rejoin the alliance only after Glimmer was kidnapped. She missed the Battle of Brightmoon, but tried to make her and her sorceres participate in the war struggle. So she didn't have much time to talk to her sister-in-law. And then... She left. They never had a serious talk about the Battle, Mikah's fate, and what they should do next. The portal was… it was something difficult to describe, each of them experienced it, although most did not say what they experienced there. It wasn't easy to accept the truth about herself revealed by the perfect world of that reality... She remembered what her perfect life looked like and shuddered... No, she didn't want to go back to that one. We don't live in a perfect world, but it's not that bad, it's definitely better than what it used to be. She smiled sadly to herself. Maybe I'd better go get some air? Maybe it will drive away dark thoughts?

So she got up and left the small apartment that had been her home for so many years.

Mystacor has returned to its former glory in the five years since the end of the war. It even grew because sorcerers from all over Etheria came here. No one made it difficult for them to travel all over the planet anymore. No one was in danger of being killed by enemy soldiers anymore if he crossed the border. No one had to hide behind fortress walls and in refugee camps to escape the war. Not even this Lonnie with her People's Rebellion bothered the common people of Etheria as they traveled. She saw hundreds of people strolling within the ancient walls of the college. They were not only young students who came every year to learn magic, but also many adults, sometimes older than her, who only now had the opportunity to study. There were even former soldiers and technicians of the Horde who had never had the opportunity to discover their talents before. Though then probably many would prefer that no one found out about the power dormant in them ... No ... that Shadow Weaver did not find out she thought and shivered again. The Dark Sorceress might have sent someone like that to Beast Isle, though in theory such an order would have to be approved by Hordak, and he often refused her…if he saw it at all. But even without that, Shadow Weaver had her ways of making someone disappear or have a terrible accident happen to them." she thought as she passed some Vaste, who supposedly spent most of his life simply extracting ore from deposits located in the Horde's territory, until he decided that magic could be responsible for the strange things that happened to him and he was right! As she passed him, he nodded to her, and she responded with a warm smile. Yes, it's one of those sights that reminds us why we fought and how wonderful the victory we won was she thought, and walked to the cloudy beach where she met the most special student she had seen in many thousands of years. They name was Aize and they were from Eridani, one of the planets conquered by the Horde that had survived the occupation relatively well... They was the Empress's servant, and during her first visit to that planet, Glimmer had discovered talent in them. On many other planets of the Prime’s Empire, magic was weak, sometimes even considered a fairy tale. Eridani was somewhat of an exception, as most of the inhabitants had innate, if limited, magical abilities.

"Hello, Aize! Isn't the beach beautiful? I remember Glimmer always trying to take the opportunity to hang out here, as did Bow, Adora. Of course, most students like this place… Well, it's often crowded now, after the war, because so many new students have arrived!" she said delightedly, until she noticed that with each word she spoke, the young person became more and more overwhelmed.

"I ... I'm actually here because I'm drawing moons, because I need it. You understand, Head Sorcereress Castaspella, there is no sun here, and I need it." They said, trying not to meet her eyes. She was short like most of the inhabitants of the planet, her planet, her skin was grayish pale and her hair dark. It looked like she was made of ashes and charcoal. She was dressed in gray-brown robes. Most of the inhabitants of Eridani looked similar, apart from those living underground, who were slightly different ... And of course there were a few golden-haired and winged nobles, and apparently there were others in the vast and dark forests, but as far as she knew, they had no desire to associate with their cousins. They all resembled the inhabitants of the planet Bellum, but were supposedly not related to them, which was good for everyone.

"Ah, the sun! Well, it seems like Celesta or Nirvia would be the most suitable…they're moons of enchantment, you know that? Give power to Mystacor... His defense spells and many more." she said, pointing to the moons.

"Yes, the Head sorceress Castaspello. Professor Split told meabout it… though…" Aize hesitated

"Yes?" she asked her, looking at the clouds shining in the moonlight. It really is beautiful.

"Why do you use the power of only three moons and not all the others?" she said while looking away as if she might be punished for being too curious.

"It's a very old and grim tale! "she said, trying to get in the mood to make the story sound right.

"From the time of the First "nes?!" Aize asked curiously, forgetting about her shyness for a moment.

"Uhhh, no. Not so long ago. Absolutely ..." she said, out of rhythm. "Mystacor and the other colleges have been built a many..." She didn't finish as Aize interrupted her again.

"Are there other colleges? Could i see them? Are there also so many students there?" they asked, her big eyes getting even bigger.

"Uhh, they're no mor. That's what this story will be about…" she took a deep breath after being interrupted once again. She liked telling stories, and she was great at it, but it was hard when no one was letting you finish them! "There used to be three schools. Mystacor, Arkanacor and Umbracor. All three taught magic, but each in a different way. We at Mystacor focus on developing individual talents and finding our own style. Arkanacor, in turn, was focused on studying the theory, understanding what magic itself is. Umbracor was interested in ... development, in questioning established rules. They were experimenters and seekers of truth! " she spoke with slightly closed eyes, and the Eridian person listened to her, and it seemed that she had no intention of interrupting her.

"But as the centuries passed, the differences in how they perceived magic grew. Everyone saw differently how future sorcerers should be shaped. They tried to win over the princesses and local community leaders to send them their students. The competition grew! They began to resort to increasingly brutal methods to gain recruitment grounds. The sorceres began to get involved in politics and influenced the rule of the princesses, and some even began to believe that they, as the true magic wielders, should rule over all of Etheria! - she called and made a theatrical pause so that the listeners, that is Aize, could digest the enormity of horror that was hidden in what she said. The effect, however, was lost the moment there was a loud snort behind her. She jumped and turned sharply. She saw Catra smiling mockingly, Melog sitting next to her staring at her with feline curiosity.

"Once upon a time I would have applauded that sorcerer with all my heart." she said, and then added. "And if Mermista throws me into the water again trying to extinguish what Sea Hawk set on fire, I'll think about studying here myself.

Aize, who was hiding behind a bush when Catra appeared, came out for a moment.

"So Grand Marshal Catra will now be Grand Sorceress Marshal Catra!" exclaimed the Eridian person in a mixture of horror and delight.

"Er, no... I've never had the slightest talent for magic, and even if I had any, I'd rather shave my tail than go this way... I have bad enough experience with sorcerers that I don't trust most... Aside two." she said thoughtfully, and then suddenly she realized, what she said and looked at her." I like you too, Castaspella. "There was an apologetic tone in her voice. She trust Mikah and Glimmer but not me, but why should she if I don't trust her? she thought. Unlike her brother and niece, she never fully forgave the girl. That she had kidnapped Glimmer, that she had tried to kill her niece many times, and that it was her fault that Angela had left before she could talk to herself about everything.

There was an awkward silence. Melog grunted nervously, looking around. Catra stared at her feet, clearly confused. Her hair was long again now, but tied together in a wild ponytail and she wear a red vest.

She decided to smile at the girl gently and said trying to change the subject.

"Oh, you wear the socks from me!" she exclaimed with exaggerated joy. If Glimer and Mikah could forgive her, then I should at least try.
"Yes, they are very warm ... And these holes somehow made themselves. You know claws and stuff." she smiled nervously.

"So... what brings you here?" she asked, trying to keep the conversation going. The Grand Marshal sighed heavily and took a candle from her pocket.

"You know, the anniversary is coming up, but I'm going to be a little busy with the wedding this year, so I decided to come a little early." she said and laughed nervously.

Yeah, it's that day too She reminded herself. Catra used to come here every year on Victory Day to light a candle in front of the Light Spinner statue... its mean the Shadow Weaver... Why couldn't you stick to one name? Or not toy with such disgusting power at all? And why am I thinking about her again? She didn't even like me...

"You know, if you'd let me know earlier, I'd have found a few people who still remember her. Maybe you could talk, reminisce…" she said and immediately realized she had made a gaffe. Catra, however, made a grim face and said, crossing her arms over her chest.

"She's not really a person I want to remember... And believe me, no one knew her as well as I did. Not you, not Mikah, not even Adora." she was clearly agitated, but tried not to show it. She extended her claws and pursed her lips, Melog lay down on the ground touching her feet with his muzzle. Then she smiled expectantly, knelt down to stroke Melog, and then reached for the bag she had on her shoulder. She took out a strange book from there. On the cover it had black amorphous shapes wandering among joyful… or frightened people. She shuddered.

"Shadow Weaver would love to read it." she said quietly to herself, but the Grand Marshal heard her.

"I said the same thing to Mikah when I saw her, and he said that I wish Shadow Weaver had seen it, because everything would have turned out differently.So I decided to bring it here to your library to be copied, because it comes from the collection of Bow's fathers, it's supposed to be the only copy. It's called "Thousand of Thousand Masks" and it tells some creature called "Na..." something and ..." Catra didn't finish, because Aize groaned aloud.

"Nyarlathotep Grand Marshal Catra. The Great Outer God…" they said, looking at Catre with a mixture of fear and awe. She looked at her clearly confused.

"How do you know about him? Oh, we probably have a second one..." she wanted to say, but the Eridian woman shook her head violently.

" No… I saw another copy... in a hidden library in the Undergrounds... On Eridani. We hid many valuable books there from being destroyed by Horde Prime... But then some cultists stole it and... - " rhe student was very agitated. They looked from Catra to her, as if they expected some reaction from them, but she had no idea what they meant...

"It means... That this book dates back to before Etheria was hidden in Despondos!? " she said as the meaning of the young Eridian's words hit her. She felt astonishment turn into excitement in her heart. This may be the oldest book in the world, and we discovered it. Lance and George will be delighted to have it in their collection she thought happily. She couldn't wait to read what was written by an author living in the time of the First ones.. Maybe we'll learn something about what happened to the First Ones. What was their civilization like… Why did they do all that to their planet… she smiled thinking about it all, but then looked at Aize. They looked from her to Catra with wide-eyed fear.

"You... You really don't understand anything, do you? Well, you don't know anything about such things…" said the Eridian person, suddenly dazzled.

"What things do we not understand? " Catra asked sharply. She was smiling indulgently, but wagged her tail hard, and Melog had his ears pricked up. They were as concerned as the Eridian.

"his book is not that old... Or much older than anything we know, whichever way you look at it. Nyarlathotep and the Other Outer Gods... Great Old Ones like Great Cthulhu... They are older than the universe and mighty beyond all imagining." they spread her hands helplessly, as if they couldn't find the right words to describe what they wanted to tell them.

Suddenly she understood what the student meant.

"Ah, they are something like Iomdi and Sereni that you worship!" she exclaimed happily, but then Aize looked at her indignantly.

"No... They're something completely different. Even Asmidian and Urgatia hate them, and they are also terrible..." the gray-haired person was clenching her hands on the amulet depicting flaming wings. Yeah, they had their heroes too, whose memory they venerate... Actually, their Iomdi could be some sort of memory of a previous She-Ra'i. That would explain a lot.

"Ah, I understand... But such stories should not be taken quite seriously... Many times in recent years we have found out..." she didn't finish, because Catra called her.

"These aren't just stories. " The Great Marshal's voice was full of anxiety. A girl approached, holding a book open, anxiously staring at the illustration. It depicted a black amorphous being crawling out of a portal somewhere in the ceiling. It had countless four-lobed eyes and tentacles ending in hands, and a huge, wide-open mouth. There were two figures at the bottom, and the creature was reaching for it. She felt cold sweat bead down her back. She'd heard of the creature from Mikah's stories, but she'd also seen a similar, if less graphic, drawing in Araxia.

"Eater of Light - Avatar of Nyarlathotep…" Catra read it and winced - That's how Mikah described it, he even folded the page on this page.

"He never respected books, especially those that are valuable." she said a bit unconsciously, and then turned to Aize ?Come on, tell us, did your book have the same illustrations?" she called, the Eridian groaned loudly and came to them, though it looked as if someone was about to hurt them. She stood beside them, but as Catra turned the book over, the student squeezed her eyes shut.

"Don't be afraid, a book can't hurt you." she said in a reassuring tone. The Eridian gave a desperate laugh.

"Of course they can. It may not be The Book of Dead Names or The King in Yellow, but I don't feel like looking at those pictures." they said, but contrary to her words, she opened her eyes and became so pale that her skin was as white as the dead.

She-Ra's fiancée nodded thoughtfully and turned a few pages. There was another illustration, this time of a tall and thin man clad in black tights with an inverted Ankh on his chest. His head was wreathed in flames resembling a crown, and his eyes glowed with an inner glow, though she ha a faint impression that there was an indescribable evil hidden inside them. Above the image was the inscription *Karsai called The King. Keeper of the Divine Planet Aukt*urn Catra slammed the book shut violently, and Aize sighed loudly with relief. She did the same, only a little quieter.

"Well, I guess we'll take it to the library, then. They'll scan it there, copy it, and lock it up in a secured section." she said, trying to sound cheerful. Catra nodded, clearly concerned, and Melog's "hair" stood on end. She understood them well, she herself felt uneasy after looking through the book. No doubt that was something very Shadow Weaver liked, she thought.

"Yes, we'll take her back together, I've never seen your library, and maybe I'll find something interesting for Glimmer to get her away from wedding preparations for a moment, because she'll pass out at her own wedding." Catra said and brought a sad smile to her face

She had never been sure of her feelings for Auntie Casta as Glimmer called her. She was with no doubt a kind and good woman, but she and Melog always sensed that she was tense around her. They had never met…before she had returned from Velvet Glove, but she understood what the Head Sorcereres of Mystacor might hold against her. It's mostly because of her that she's missing... It's because of her that Queen Angela died. Glimmer and Mikah somehow forgave her, though she didn't understand why, but Castaspella never forgot what she had done. She was always polite and kind to her, even once gave her socks in which she had to cut out places for claws, but there was always an invisible wall of ice between them. But at least she doesn't want to send me to Beast Island like Lonnie imagined she thought with a wry smile. Bow had once told her that not everyone would like her, even good people might dislike her company, and vice versa, she didn't have to like everyone, and that didn't make her any worse than anyone else. But she had to admit that the Head Sorceress was trying very hard not to show her dislike and not letting resentment cloud her judgment. Now they were carrying this strange book to the library, and she had a feeling that their cooperation would not end there, because they only had the first piece of the Shadow Weaver's puzzle. Will I ever be free of this bitch? Even when she is less than a shadow, she still haunts us all… But maybe it's better that we do it before the wedding so that I don't think about her when I swear my undying love to Adora. She smiled to herself at the thought. she bumped into one of the students who jumped away from her and apologized profusely- It's okay, I should be careful too! - she said, trying to smile friendly, but in her heart she felt a bit of pride that even in distant Mystacor she aroused respect. But then she almost bumped into another student again. "Why are there so many of them here? Glimmer always said it was a quiet and cozy place where life flowed slowly" she thought. Now she felt like she was wandering the Fright Zone on combat alert, though she had to admit that it smelled much better here.

She looked at the student from Eridani... She think her's… they's name was Aize. She followed Casaspella, who was paving the way for the little person. She decided to strike up a conversation.

"I think we've met before... Do you remember? On board the Darla when we brought you from Eridiani." She tried to sound as friendly as possible. The Eridian jumped back in fear as she spoke to them.

"Indeed Grand Marshal Catra." The student pronounced they name and title so that it sounded like one word. She had never been addressed that way in the Horde, not with such reverence. She already understood how Adora felt when the people she met had treat her as living legend. Only unlike her fiancée, she was fine with it.

"So I guess we've gotten to know each other a bit. - she said, although she could hardly remember what the Eridian person had been doing then, but she had some work to do then, working out a plan for joint military exercises and listening to Glimmer moans after the Empress's party.

"I ... I did not leave the room offered to me, so as not to disturb the peace of the Invincible warrior, Great Commander and Heavenly Queen." The student replied in a tone as if she was apologizing for something. Sometimes, however, this reverence can be quite disturbing;

"Whew... how do you know so much about all these books? I didn't know such matters were discussed at the Empress's court." she asked, though the possibility that the court in Eridani was engaged in discussing the dark books on a daily basis brought to mind things she preferred not to think about.

"I worked at the Hidden Library and there I saw a lot of books that were hidden from Prime in hidden vaults. I spent most of my life there looking after books. In fact, they were my only friends. - though I never met them all." Aize said in a happier and less scared voice than before.

„Ugh…. That explains a lot”, she thought, and continued. "And these cultists have stolen the book? Is she hiding some dark secrets?"
Eridian shook they head.

"No, not much, but they were worshipers of Nyarlathotep, for them it is sacred! This will undoubtedly encourage them to do more evil deeds."

"Wait, but you worship Iomdi and Sereni, so what are they worse than you…" she asked with a corner of her smile. The short personl looked at her with her big eyes as if she had just said that she strangled they pet.

"Don't compare that... Nyarlathotep is something else, not even evil, but completely alien! And I worship Iomdi and Sereni, for they are the personification of light and peace! - they shouted loudly, causing several students to turn to them.

" If you say so... But you better not say it out loud, because such words bring to mind Horde Prime. Some people might get offended…" she said sharply, maybe a little too sharply. But just like Shadow Weaver, everything about Horde Prime brought back terrible memories for her. Melog grunted loudly, and she felt the anger radiating from him, aimed at both Aize and her. She frowned as she looked at her companion. Her relationship with Melog was very complex and difficult to describe. Melog could speak to her with complex concepts and images, but it was difficult and tiring for him, as if he was speaking in a completely foreign language that he did not fully understand. He preferred to communicate through the emotions and feelings that they could pass on to each other. Perhaps I was too harsh, but they should be carefull. Etheria has suffered much at the hands of that Horde and should not speak of anything that might evoke the memory of Him. Then she saw the picture. Iridion, capital of Eridani. A quarter of the city lay in rumble, destroyed after the surrender, although the inhabitants of the empire did not resist. Prime did it just like that, on principle. She saw the half-burnt edifice of the building where Sereni was worshipped. A statue of her was spared. However, he was deprived of his eyes, mouth and wings. A statue of Horde Prime towered over it, a fiery mace in its hand. Yes, many planets suffered much more than Etheria under the occupation, I understand that, but it doesn't change the fact that she should be careful what they says and keep certain opinions to themself she tried to tell him, but her companion didn't seem satisfied.

She'd known they were near the library long before she'd seen the great door with the Mystacor symbol on it. Somehow the library wasn't destroyed, apparently Horde Prime thought chiped mages might need it. As they crossed the gate, Aize smiled at the sight of all those scrolls and books. They tried to copy everything they could into the computers, but it will still take years to transfer everything. Bow's Father's library might have held rarer volumes, but it was no match for size.

"Do you have any books here at all that aren't about magic and stuff like that?. she looked around in bewilderment.

"Oh, I didn't know you liked books. Bow probably instilled in you a love of literature, and he did the same with Glimmer. He was a very lively child..."

"When I was a child, I didn't like to read, but Adora loved novels, so I thought we could read something together." she said.

"You had books in the Horde?" asked Castaspella, genuinely astonished. She sighed at Glimmer's Aunt words.

"Yes, they were regularly delivered to us cadets. Mostly by the caretakers and instructors, but sometimes Shadow Weaver brought them. These were mostly tales of brave soldiers of the Horde fighting against the soulless tyranny of the princesses. They weren't very good, in the end I told Adora that they only differed in the names of the characters, sometimes even whole scenes were repeated, as if someone made them ... from a stamp? Is that what it says here? And then when I took over… it turned out that I was right. They had whole formulas for novels there, which they simply filled with content." she described, immersed in memories.

"You had… literature factories?" Castaspella said shocked. She nodded her head thoughtfully.

"Residents needed entertainment, simple and easily accessible. And Hordak banned the sale of alcohol... Of course, no one cared, the technical department was selling a lot of vile moonshine. No, I didn't drink it, maybe once or twice... Shadow Weaver, on the other hand, was a strong drinker, especially after failed experiments... But she brought us better novels. When we were little, she even read them to us… She had a collection of fairy tales, very nice, but quite unusual. You know, it's weird to remember that sometimes she was tolerable. - he sighed, feeling a surge of strange nostalgia ... "I found it in her private rooms ... but it turned out that it was written in her native language, which they use on the Isles of Sorrow. I must have it translated by the Bow's Fathers. I wish I could read them to our..." she realized that she had said a bit too much, that she had exposed her inner self to others. - Then let's take this book, because I still have a lot to do before the wedding, and you know, I'm a grand marshal…" She tried to change the topic before Castaspella realized what she had almost slipped away, but the Head Sorcereress looked at her in delight.

- Oh, it means that you and Adora think ... I always expected that Bow and Glimmer would be the first, because the boy grew up in a large family. - Castaspella beamed with joy, Aize stepped back a bit overwhelmed by the whole discussion. Catra flattened her ears at the sudden outburst of tenderness, and Melog clung to the floor.

"Maybe we shouldn't look that far into the future. It's just... just a random thought. We have some problems to solve... which even with the help of Prime's technology can cause trouble.." She felt her face turn red.

"Adora's ancestry..." Aunti Casta suddenly nodded in understanding.

"Not just Adora’s... But please don't tell anyone about this, I haven't talked to anyone about it, not even Adora, and her opinion and desires are in that cause as important in this. Therefore, for now, let it stay between us ... " she looked around "and between Aize ... Library employees ... But I think I would really give this book away." She smiled nervously.

"And what were these stories about?" the Eridian person asked unexpectedly. She looked at her surprised, but gladly changed the subject to something less embarrassing.

"There were stories about Aroden fighting the Whispering tyrant, the sorcerer with the face of a skeleton, the terrible Lamashutu, the fearless Besmara, the brave Cayden…" After each name Aizen's eyes widened more and more "Did something happen?"she asked the student, fearing another outburst of indignation.

"Nothing, absolutely nothing!" The Eridian person replied, slightly frightened, and began to look around the library, apparently unsure of what to do with herself. Castaspella engaged in a conversation with several library employees about transferring books to computers, so she will took the opportunity to return the cursed book so that she could light the candle under the statue of the cursed sorcereress in peace.

I ended up splitting this chapter into two smaller ones because it grew mercilessly.
I am asking for comments and remarks, I am very interested in your opinion.

Something is rotten in Mystacor

Night Gale was ordered to follow the Head Sorceress, which wasn't that hard. Castaspella wasn't a very observant person, so it wasn't difficult. Unfortunately, her lack of perceptiveness was leading to a problem.

It was extremely difficult to protect her, but that was her main goal. She was entrusted with this extremely important task and she could not fail. It worked to her advantage that they were both competent sorcerers, though neither was a warrior. Of course, Castaspella had been a hero of the rebellion for nearly twenty years and a member of both alliances. She had to be able to defend herself. Though as she watched the woman nag about nonsense with this weird person from Eridani, she wasn't so sure. After all, she wouldn't have been given this mission if it wasn't needed. Though as a servant of Crawling Chaos, you'd have to be prepared for lies within lies. That was the price of power, and she was willing to pay it.

However, she had a second task, or rather Scarlet had it. Lonnie gave her the mision of infiltrating Mystacor and possibly getting the wedding plans, as the head sorcereress of Mystacor was helping Glimmer organize the wedding, and Comrade General was praparing something special for the occasion, but unfortunately she didn't share it with Scarlet, she thought she didn't trust her, although she did she really didn't even suspect the truth about who her sorcereress actually was.

She didn't even know what identity Scarlet had taken in Mystacor to be able to stay here safely. She suspected she was one of the many guards who kept order at the sorceres school. Well, her cover was much better.

"Oh! Night Gale, great to have you back!" cried Professor Split, a slightly obese satyr and lunarology teacher. A somewhat clumsy individual, teaching the most useless aspects of a subject that had the potential to be one of the most important in the entire academy, even a key field of magic on Etheria ... But of course, instead of focusing on important matters, the people of Etheris allowed themselves to be distracted by a false sense of triumph., pathetic

"How can I help you? " Night Gale smiled kindly at the professor.

"As you know, the Head Sorceress Castaspella has been busy with wedding preparations lately, so she's been neglecting her duties a bit." said the Lunarology teacher. She felt her pulse quicken. "It would be the perfect position to fulfill my tasks as both Night Gale and Scarlet. Being Castaspelia's secretary or assistant, she will always be close to the Head Sorcerer and all documents will always be within my reach." She smiled slyly to herself.

"So, I would ask you to help me take care of my students… you could even lead the lessons for a while." I listened to you discuss with Master Skygazer and it was a wonderful exchange of views. - he said smiling at her. She clenched her teeth, too sharp compared to those of most creatures like her. So even you have realized the uselessness of your classes? she thought and turned to the overweight Satyr, looking down at him. As Night Gale, she was taller than most people she encountered. She was one of the few who could look Scorpia straight in the eye, though of course she was no match for her strength... But she had other skills... She walked over to the professor and looked at him with concern, reaching for the bit of power she had been given.

"Something happened?" he asked anxiously.

"No, absolutely nothing... But I'd advise you to take care of your liver, because when I look into your eyes..." she tutted and shook her head anxiously.

Split turned pale and walked away from her, probably to go to his apartment and look at himself in the mirror or go straight to the healer. Problem Solved But you gave me a great idea, I should have thought of it myself thought Night Gale, and cursed softly as she turned to see Castaspella talking to Catra. The Grand Marshal was one of the few people she should avoid. She wasn't sure if she could smell her true nature. So she decided to watch them from a distance for now, waiting for an opportunity to get closer to the Head Sorcereress. She had enough time. Night Gale had a lot of time, her job was to archive reports of magical weather phenomena. She came to Mystacor once every two weeks and spent a few hours turning the scrolls. She worked as a volunteer, so no one investigated the quality of her work, and she had an excuse to move freely around the university. Night Gale had never gone to college, but she didn't want to bring up her past in the Horde, it would raise too many questions and draw attention to her, and Night Gale needed to remain as invisible as possible to perform tasks for both of her employers. Of course, only a handful knew of her true past in the Horde, and she didn't want to add too much truth to this so convenient identity. So she came up with that she came from the borderland between the Crimson Wastes and Brightmoon. She was to be trained by a litle known sorcerer, Master Iriam, a loner who died during the occupation. Iriam was a real person she had stayed with for some time after leaving the Fright Zone. She even liked him and thought he was a decent person, but he discovered the truth about her… Don't think about the past because it distracted you. An important task awaits you, requiring absolute focus. Remember the reward… she chided herself mentally.

Catra and Castaspela, and this strange Eridian person, were talking agitatedly about some book, but she was too far away to see what it was about. Scarlet had never told her that the feline was interested in literature, but she had never been their favorite topic of conversation. Lonnie also never implied that her biggest rival liked to read, even she talked a lot about her. What she saw was interesting. Then the three of them left, and she followed them. After a while she guessed they were going to the library, so she smiled to herself. There, it will probably be easier to talk to Castaspella among these countless bookcases, shelves and alcoves….

Visiting the library was something that happened to other people, not to mention bringing books. She felt… Strange, like she was trying to put herself in someone else's skin. She had felt this way the last time she had gone shopping with Bowe. She was glad that the library was so large, because it allowed her to avoid being too crowded. Usually she could turn invisible with Melog's help, or simply by sneaking through the shadows like she did in the Fright Zone, but now she was standing in line behind the Mystacor students, waiting until she could scan the book. She was sure that with one word she could make them split up and leave the library or even lock themselves in their rooms. If she put in the effort, she might be able to persuade them to leave Mystacor at all. She just wasn't sure if it would be because of who she was or who she had become. The apprentices and sorceress looked over their shoulders at her and whispered among themselves, thinking she couldn't hear their words full of fear and delight. That's her! Hordak's Former Right Hand. Is She-Ra Here Too? She's a hero. She saved her. She's terrifying.. She sighed heavily. Maybe Castaspella or Aize could give me this book? And I would finally light that candle But they were just beyond her reach. Castaspella was busy talking wit other sorceres who wanted her to decide on some matters related to the administration of the academy. Where Aize was, she had no idea. She sighed and waited, the line moving slowly, incredibly slowly. It felt like hours before she finally got to the end. It turned out that the scanner operated a Reptile-person. When he saw her, he stood at attention. Yeah, Horde technician. I should have expected it, after all, who else is operating the scanners and library computers

"Welcome Seccond in Command Catra... That is Grand Marshal Catro..." he said and saluted. She sighed and said.

"Yeah… well, could you scan that book?" she smiled imploringly. "Relatively quickly?"

The library lab blinked a few times.

"Well, i cannot ... " he answered her and did not even move. It took her a moment for his words to sink in.

"Why?" she asked, trying to control her voice.

Well, I can't scan it." he replied calmly.

"Why?" she asked coldly.

"Scanning, copying, or borrowing of books from Mystacor's Great Library requires mebership of sorcerers guild or permission from one of Mystacor's masters or three different professors. Then you have to submit an application and after considering it, it is possible to share…

"But I'm not going to borrow anything." she interrupted him. "I want to deliver a new book so that it can be copied and placed in the library." she replied with hope in her voice.

The technician thought.

"Then you have to apply first…" he started to explain, but she didn't let him finish.

"How long have these rules been in place here?" she asked, getting a little suspicious "There are a lot of former Horde techs working here and we thought it would be worth organize things up a bit, so we launched a petition to change the rules and it was approved few months ago." the former Horde technician said it proudly, as if he was talking about his greatest success. She felt her eyelid twitch in anger.

Shadow Weaver, you are worse than the plague. You have infected the entire Horde with yourself, and now the infection has spread throughout Etheria. Our grandchildren will suffer the consequences of your actions and plans. Even though you're dead, I see you everywhere. Your bloody legacy will outlast us all. If you weren't dead, you could be proud of yourself she thought and felt like howling in helplessness.

"Where can I get this permit? Where can I submit this application? DO ANYTHING TO GET AWAY FROM THESE TENTACLES OF MADNESS!" she screamed loud enough to be heard throughout the library. Melog flashed bright red, growling menacingly. The Reptile Person stared at her for a moment, blinking slowly. unfazed, he reached under the desk and handed her a four-page document. She didn't even care how much time she would have to waste on filling it out. She absolutely didn't care.

"Can I get something to write with?" she asked in a tired voice.

The technician smiled and handed her a pen… On a chain. Keeping her face absolutely stone-faced, she extended her claws and in one quick movement cut the chain, smiled and walked away with the papers.

She found a secluded spot and started going through the papers. She sighed at the name. Who in Etheri even used surnames besides the Horde and people like Glimmer? And why Horde was doing it? It was definitely not Hordak's idea, because for him the very idea of having his own name was something new. She thought for a moment about leaving the space blank. Her full name sounded cute, Bow said, but he didn't know where it came from. Catra Applesauce Meowmeow. That sounded sweet and silly, and Adora was sure, and somewhat ashamed, that she had thought it up. Recently, an official told her that as a two-year-old, she just walked all over the Fright Zone saying Applesauce and pointing at herself meowing like a little kitten. Sauce, or rather applemousse, was one of the few sweets available in the Horde. It was distributed in tubes, but the cadets never got it out of concern for their teeth. Several days in a row, she walked among the officials, asking them for her dream delicacy. She got that stupid name instead. A few years later, I managed to steal her coveted treat, she found it nasty. She had no sweet taste. Half the day she lay crying over the injustice of the world. I guess that sums up my whole life. I've always wanted something, and then when I got it, it didin't bring me happines she thought bitterly, then remembered something. Soon after the war, she discovered whipped cream and it became her favorite treat. Well, she liked greasy food. They decided that their wedding cake would be covered with whipped cream. Castaspelia needs to be reminded of this, or she'll forget about it in all the fuss” she thought, and looked at the application. She managed to fill about half of it. That's enough for now, she thought, and went to look for the Head SorcereressAs she walked through the shelves, she smelled a scent. A scent she knew well know...

Melog bristled... She began sniffing around the wall of the Great Library. A corpse, there's a corpse here somewhere... she thought. A corpse in safest part of Mystacor, ithe safest place on Etheria. The hair on the back of her neck stood up, as did her companion's. She felt that very primal instincts were awakening in both of them. She started tapping on the wall, full of very bad forebodings. *That's how I found Entrapta once. After so many hours in the ventilation tunnels, it smelled so bad that even Scorpia could smell it, but it was still a lot better than what I smell now. It must lie here for a good few days, but no longe*r she thought. Finally, she heard a hollow sound, probably no one who did not have such sensitive hearing would not be able to notice anything. She groped the wall, glad that searching the nooks and crannies of the Fright Zone and stealing the officers' belongings had taught her a few skills that would come in handy in her new life. After a moment, she felt an unevenness under her fingers. Are secret passages a hobby for sorcerers? Have they really turned this whole college into one big maze worse than Castle Crypto she thought, feeling uneasy. She realized how different the truth about Mystacor must be from what Glimmer and Castaspella thought of it. But not Mikah, the good old sorcerer sensed something was wrong with this place She pressed down on the stone with all her strength until she was able to push it into his mum. The wall lifted up, revealing a corridor. It was short and narrow, but it seemed to widen at the end. It was bright enough here that she could see it clearly with her cat eyes…

A corpse lay at her feet. She had a strong stomach, so she didn't feel sick, but the smell was awful. He was a sorcerer, judging by his clothes, but she couldn't tell much more. Her face was blackened, and she saw worms in her mouth and eyes. She wasn't sure what had killed him, but his spine and ribs had been shattered. It seemed to her that he was trying to get away from here, but he couldn't… She looked around worriedly. She was wagging her tail vigorously. She sensed that Melog was very nervous, but not only at the sight of the corpse. Something was going on there, something terrible...

"I think we'd better find Castaspella and show her what we found here... Before someone draws too far-reaching conclusions..." she said to herself slowly and went to look for the Head Sorcereress.

"Yes, of course, this also needs to be copied ... everything needs to be copied to computers ... I'm just not sure if in that order." she was explaining to a young librarian who was holding a book describing the lichens of the southern part of the northern reaches. The young foxperson looked at her with sad eyes, as if she had said that he would have to sell his beloved puppy. "Really, our… capacity is limited, we have to deal with the most important books first… It doesn't mean that this book isn't important, it's just not the most important, you understand?" she smiled at him, secretly hoping he would go away instead of staring at her

"What about Vegetation of the northern slopes of the Storm Mountains in the southern Dryll? This is probably the only copy of the only book describing the local vegetation." said the librarian with obvious desperation in his voice.

"Ugh... How about after The History and Customs of the Moons Worshipers? This book is lately constantly borrowed and now we have the opportunity to finally scan and copy it to meet the needs of everyone who uses the library." she said, hoping her ruse would work. But she had the uneasy feeling that she was going to have to give in to this botany battle anyway.

"Good Morning Lady Castaspello, may I help you with something?" she heard a voice nearby, sonorous but slightly hoarse. She turned to see a tall woman wearing the light blue robes of a sorcerer. She was over six feet tall, almost as tall as Scorpia, though much slimmer. She had long, light blue hair pulled back in a bun, swarthy skin, and dark green eyes. Incredibly penetrating. She was into the weather or something... In fact, she hardly knew it... She had only recently come to Mystacor and had few friends. Her name was... Night Gale!

"Well ... Could you help me sort the documents and help with the bureaucracy a bit, it has grown a bit lately." she said smiling nervously. In fact, she was slowly losing her grip on what was going on at her own college. She wanted to ask Mikah for help, or Glimmer to delegate some clerks, but truth be told, she was ashamed. She didn't have much authority, not in Mystacor… And now she felt as though she was starting to much responsibilities. Plus the wedding and Victory Day celebrations… She wanted it to be an unforgettable day for all of them.

"Thank you very much for accepting my proposal." The woman bowed low. "But I'd like a day off on Victory Day." she said in a slightly apologetic tone.

"Of course, everyone has that day off." she said and added in her mind. Apart from me, of course

"You look tired, Lady Castaspello. Or do you need more help... I can help you with the wedding. I may not know much about throwing parties, but I can help with bills, shopping lists and stuff like that. I have a talent for numbers." she said with a friendly smile.

"Oh, you will help me with the wedding! It will be a wonderful event! Really! I was a little too young to help with Mikah's wedding, you know, my brother… It's wonderful that he was saved. Besides, it was a war then, and it wasn't appropriate to throw an overly lavish party. But now I'm going to do anything, absolutely anything, to make this the most wonderful day of Glimmer's life…and Bowa too! And She-Ra! That is Adora! And Catra, of course! They're getting married together... It doesn't mean together, individually! This is… "she felt herself hyperventilating.

"I see, it must be wonderful to organize the wedding not only of your niece, but also of the Hero Reborn and Queen Etheri. It will be a great honor to help with such a historic event." she bowed low...

"That's good, but why do you want to help me." she said, feeling a sudden surge of distrust because of such a great desire to help her. Night Gale looked down.

"Well, I admit my motives are all too mundane, even materialistic. I hope that in the future you will show me your gratitude, Lady Castaspella, and allow me to be promoted."

"I understand..." at least she's honest " I'll think what can be done." she said and saw that Catra was standing behind Night Gale's back, she was clearly agitated. |Catra? Something happened?" she asked, seeing that Melog had taken on a slightly bluish color. Night Gale moved away from them but listened to their conversation.

"Let's say... You are very much needed right now."she said, looking around carefully.

"Are they having trouble copying books again? It's been happening all the time lately. The bureaucracy has grown on us somehow, I don't know how." she said embarrassed, because she herself had problems with embracing what was happening in Mystacor.

"No... Just come with me... It's… it's something very important..." Catra said. She understood that something had happened, and a very serious one.

"Okay, I'm on my way... Night Gale, would you please..."

" I'll go with you Lady Castaspella, my help may come in handy..." said the younger sorcerer. She shrugged and agreed...

Corpse lay in a hidden corridor. Not what she expected… Not in Mystacor. Not in her house.

"Do you know who it was? " Catra asked. She was pale, but didn't seem to want to regurgitate the last meal, unlike her. She walked over to the decomposing corpse and knelt down. She was green with disgust.

"It's a terrible sight…"Catra said sympathetically. She shook my head

"I've seen corpses and death before." she said quietly. "During that battle. It was the greatest clash in the history of Etheria. Powerful weapons and terrible spells were used back then... But this is Mystacor... a place that has always been safe, all these years of war... Do you understand? And now…" ahe closed her eyes. "It's been defiled."

Catra shrugged.

"I've never had a good association with that place... Whenever I'm here, I have the impression that I see falsehood... that everything around is just a mask hiding the true, terrible face. You know how I hate masks?"

She nodded thoughtfully.

"Yes, of course... No, I don't recognize him... I don't know all the sorcerers... In fact, I don't know most of them..." she sighed sadly.

"I know who he was!" Night Gale said. They turned to her, and Catra frowned as if only now realizing her presence.

"Who he was?" asked the Grand Marshal. There seemed to be suspicion in her voice.

"His name was Greycloud, and he was from the Moon Mountains surrounding Brightmoon Castle. I didn't know him very well, but apparently he went to the capital to visit his family and take part in the Victory Day celebrations."

"Well, I don't think he'll come to my wedding anymore..." Catra muttered extremely grimly and looked down the corridor. "What killed him came from there." she added.

She looked down the corridor and felt… something. As if she felt that something was waiting for her there… Something beautiful and wonderful. Without realizing it, she took two steps over the corpse.

"Castaspella... Shouldn't we call the guards or something?" Catra asked cautiously, looking at her uncertainly. She obviously didn't feel what she felt...
"Interesting ... Have you looked at this corpse? Looks like someone drained this Greycloud of blood… " Night Gale said with obvious interest as she knelt by the corpse. Catra looked at her over her shoulder.

"If they fascinate you so much, you can even cut them up, I don't forbid... I feel like I'm talking to the child of Entrapta and Shadow Weaver." the Grand Marshal replied quietly. There was a soft snort behind her, but she ignored it. She bent down and began to squeeze through the narrow corridor.

"Castaspella, what are you doing? Are you sure you want to go to the place where the thing that killed that sorcerer is sitting?" Catra asked her, but she didn't listen... She had to keep going towards what was calling her. It was something beautiful and wonderful.

She didn't like how Castaspella was starting to act, just as she didn't like Night Gale's presence. There was something about the strange blue-haired sorcereress that repulsed her. It was hard to describe. At first she thought it was because of her height, but she was used to being around Scorpia, the Clones who had taken up residence in Brightmoon, and finally She-Ra. For a moment, she thought she smelled an indefinable scent from that woman, familiar and alien at the same time. Then everything was covered with the stench of rotting corpses that made Castaspella nearly vomit, though Night Gale didn't seem to be much impressed. She had a vague feeling that the woman was unimpressed by anything. She stepped over the corpse, being careful not to soil Castaspelli's socks, though she feared that the Head Sorcereress paid no attention to her robes and had probably let them get dirty. Night Gale followed, of course, how else with her luck.

The corridor widened slowly until they found themselves in a huge hall with several columns. She felt shivers run down her spine. Not the cursed ruins of the First Ones again... I hate everything that has anything to do with them... Almost everything.... She smiled to herself and looked around. Everywhere were tall stone columns covered with strange writings in a language she did not know, but which was clearly not the language of the First Ones. She wasn't sure if that was a good sign, there was something unsettling here, some overwhelming darkness that seemed to crush her with its weight. Sometimes, once or twice, she'd felt something similar when she walked into Shadow Weaver's workshop after performing some dark ritual. She remembered once finding her lying as if lifeless, the smell of burning and ozone everywhere. She pulled her out of the lab and called the medics. The dark sorcerer even thanked her…then threatened that she would face dire consequences if she entered her workshop without permission again. Yes, this place has a Shadow Weaver feel to it she thought. Castaspella summoned the light and the whole room appeared to them in all its glory. It was made entirely of basalt blocks, in the shape of a cube. Attached to the pillars were holders for luminous stones that were now long extinguished. She'd seen the murals on the walls, but they weren't in that spooky style that imitated the art of the First Ones. They were simpler, even conventional, as if those creating them did not care about at least a minimal representation of reality, but only to show the general sense of events. At the far end of the room was a statue made of a single block of stone. It depicted a tall man with a face devoid of details, consisting mainly of sharp edges, whose right side was snow-white and the left black as the darkest abys. But what she was most interested in was another corpse. There were four bodies, two were common folk of Etheria, armed with the well-known electric battle batons, and the other two were sorcerers, one lying among the other corpses, and the last propped on a pedestal, his hand reaching for some jewel. It was like deep blue amber, half transparent, and something seemed to sparkle inside… Something alive…

"Castaspella, something here is wrong."The hair on her tail stood up. She extended her claws ready to attack. Melog clung to the ground, waiting for her command. However, the Head Sorcereress seemed to pay no attention to her. She was in a trance, slowly walking towards the strange gem

"It possessed her... Very interesting." said Night Gale in a voice as if commenting on the behavior of a silly animal.

"I can see, instead of standing and looking, help me maybe stop her! - she snapped at the tall sorcereress. But she hesitated herself. She could easily overpower Castaspella, but she didn't want to be brutal with Glimmer’s Auntie, and that moment of hesitation was enough for the sorcereress to put her hand on the stone. At the last moment, she tried to grab her arm, but the Head Sorcerer used a fiery spark on her arm, she felt a strong pain, so she let go of Castaspella. The sorcereress shot her an angry look.

"Why are you interrupting?! It would be better for everyone if Shadow Weaver never found you!" she said in a venomous tone.

It hurt more than a fier spell. No one has spoken to her that way in five years. It opened wounds she thought had already healed. She pursed her lips, ready to stun the Head Sorceress this time without remorse. But then Castaspelli's eyes and mouth flashed with a blue light. This meant something very bad. She wanted to stop her anyway, but then out of the corner of her eye she saw that it wasn't the sorcerer's corpse closest to the landing that had moved. She felt herself dying of horror. This can't be... These things don't happen, she thought, disbelieving what she was seeing. The corpse got up, most of its wounds healed. He was tall and pale.

- Don't disturb her if the Watcher’s Eye wants to show her something. Please don't move and let me feed. - He smiled, revealing two rows of sharp fangs.
She heard Night Gale say the words of the incantation.

She looked around. She was in the Whispering Woods, in one of its deepest parts. She frowned. She was ashamed to admit it, but she didn't like the forest that Brightmoon owed its survival to. She had spent most of her life in Mystacor and a few surrounding towns, and she was comfortable there. She liked the company of others, meeting them for afternoon tea, going to parties, teaching young people ... And the wildness of the Whispering Woods, its unbridled primal power and the overwhelming feeling that everything was pervaded by some primal presence, as if the whole forest had a consciousness of its own, frightened her. She could feel it even now, but it was something else, as if there had been a change in the forest… A terrible change

She saw trees around her. They were strangely twisted, no trunk or branch growing straight, as if they had been bent by some terrible disease. The leaves were red, purple or even black. They all had strange, asymmetrical shapes, often covered with bristles. White bony thorns often pierced the bark of the trees, and blood-red resin oozed from the cracks. She saw black butterflies perching to drink her. She shivered. Whispers, usually on the verge of being heard, were louder now, she felt as if they resounded with despair and suffering. "Where i found myse? What happened to the Whispering Woods? What happened to Etheria?" she asked herself. She had no idea how she would find her way to... anywhere... Once, when she was sixteen, Mikah took her into the woods for two weeks, and after she got lost for the sixteenth time, he decided a week is long enough. Casta, just keep going and it'll be okay, just keep going! she commanded herself.

Fortunately, she soon came to a path that she recognized quite well, mainly because she had spent some of the most important days of her life here, when the fate of Etheria, and perhaps the entire Galaxy, hung in the balance. She was right outside the Horde's hidden supply base, where the remnants of the rebellion were hiding. Here he will surely find some answers to what is going on here. She crossed the high entrance to the cave.

Adora was on guard in the form of She-Ra, which was probably good, because she would answer all her questions, she would finally know what was going on ... But why was she here, all tense and wielding a sword. She was sitting cross-legged, her side turned to her. She was smiling from the corner of her mouth, grimly and somewhat sarcastically.

"Come here instead of sneaking around!" Adora called, and she did as she was told, but Glimmer came out of the depths of the room. She had obviously grown her hair long since they'd last met, and she wore armor, though she remembered rarely wearing it since the end of the war.

"You've always had good hearing." her niece said, and Adora stood up, and she drew in a sharp breath, when she looked at her. The heroine of Etheria had a long scar on her cheek, and her right eye was blind. Glimmer walked over to her and touched her mutilated face very… tenderly?

"You know, ever since we found you in the woods, injured and lost... Since then, I knew... I knew we'd be together forever...

I think you censored the story of how you met a bit.... she thought unconsciously. What happened to Adora? Why had no one told her… not even… Catra…

"Oh Sparkle." Adora said softly with a clearly mocking smile and kissed Queen of Etheria...

"NOOOOO." she exclaimed not believing her eyes. This couldn't be happening. "Glimmer, Adora! And the wedding! You are to get married! I mean, not you! But you! Ugh… Why is it so complicated! You didn't think how Bow would feel! And... Catra! Especially Catra!" She felt the ground shift from under her feet. What am I going to tell Catra... She's... She's in the library... I'm in..

"Oh... how romantic. Entrapta called from the depths of the room, watching the whole scene with delight Glimmer groaned and teleported away from Adora, who crossed her arms over her chest, looking at her triumphantly. The queen turned beet red in the face.

"But anyway, we don't have time. I just received a transmission from that ship we contacted and… we're already five minutes late." she exclaimed, speaking quickly and energetically.

"So we're leaving Etheria... " said her niece. Tears ran down her cheeks. "What is going on here? Did someone attack us? When things got so bad?" she thought, then saw Bow.

"Honey, I copied what we managed to salvage from Darla's memory." he turned to Entrapta and kissed her cheek.

"Poor Darla." said the Lady of Dryll.

At least I won't have to explain anything to him... Only Hordek needs someone to explain it... but let him get stuffed... she thought, but then she saw that everyone was coming to Glimmer to transfer them, so she quickly ran to her and touched her niece's arm...

Her hand passed through Glimmer's body... I became a ghost.... No, ghosts don't exist… It's a vision she thought, realizing with sudden clarity that she was in a library. In this strange chamber full of corpses, along with Catra and Night Gale…. She suddenly felt a rush of self-delight. "It's wonderful ... Some power has decided ... " she thought, but then Glimmer and the others disappeared. She wandered helplessly.

"What is it supposed to be. For visions to be visions, someone must see them ... „ she said ... to the universe. She closed her eyes. Maybe if I think hard about where I want to be, that's where I'll be? thought she wanted you with Glimmer now. She felt her head spinning. And she opened her eyes. Her method worked, but she didn't like what she saw. They were in the Brightmoon mountains. Castle... He has changed. The walls were blackened like teeth turned by decay. It was entwined with a strange black vine that looked more like intestines than a plant.

Look how beautiful, not like Darla, but still cute. Will they let me look at it closely? Look, I think they has." Entrapta pointed to a large black ship hovering above them. It was slender, but it looked predatory, no less predatory than the ships of the Galactic Horde. He seemed to blur the space around him. A smaller ship left it and headed for the escarpment where they were arriving. As it flew in, the side door opened and Catra stepped in. But she looked different. She had pageboy hair cut and wore dark purple armor. She had no right arm, only a strange prosthesis, as if made of a single piece of unfamiliar metal. She was different, seemed extremely serious, and exuded the discipline of a soldier…

"I'm First Officer Fenyx. We've got five minutes, then we'll be tracked…and welcome aboard Merciless." she said in a firm tone.

"Oh, not so fast ... Our beautiful heroine and her charming queen ... They probably shouldn't just leave the inhabitants of this wonderful planet ... Abandon them to evil and darkness." The voice was gentle and dignified, with a beautiful sound, but there was something ominous about it. It seemed to come from everywhere, She-Ra-Adora turned pale... Something moved in the shadows, and then she felt a terrible pain...

It was Melog who saved her. The Not-Dead creature was already reaching out to slit her throat with its claws. But the creature from Kryat sent her emotions. Fear…anger…and rage… She knew it all too well, but now it was the emotion she needed. She regained control of her body and dodged to the side, then slammed her claws into the creature's shoulder, slicing through the tendons to the bone. Then Night Gale cast a spell that drove the Not-Dead away from her.

"What's that supposed to be? Shadow Weaver told us fairy tales about such monsters, but she did not believe in their existence!"

"Then tell him that." The sorcereress said in a calm voice, as if nothing out of the ordinary was happening.

The creature slowly began to rise, oblivious to the flesh torn to the bone, and the deep gash gaping in its chest.

"You only make my task more difficult for me... Turn around and don't come again.- the creature hissed. He was wearing sorcerer's robes, though of an unfamiliar style. what was he? She remembered a story Shadow Weaver had once told them...

"Release Castaspella... Free our companion." she ordered the creature, while allowing Melog to disappear

"I don't hold her... It's the Watcher's Eye that holds her mind and will only release it when it sees fit... If it ever does, and even then there's no guarantee she will come back as she was before. The Watcher has gone through a lot at the hands of the Eternals..." said the being without taking his eyes off her. It looked like a human, with a long, thin beard, but she couldn't tell for sure. The face was haggard and deathly pale with visible bones, as if someone had pulled a previously peeled and dried face back over the skull. And the Princess of the Night was not dead, for her hunger was stronger than death.

"He won't let us go, he can't, because then this secret will come out. A secret is only safe when everyone who knows it is dead."Night Gale said grimly. The Not-Dead smiled, showing sharp fangs, and lunged at them with unexpected speed. Then the sorcerer bound the creature's legs with magical bonds, and Melog jumped on its back as the creature fell to the ground. The Not-Dead tried to grab the last of the inhabitants of Kryat, but she grabbed one of his arms and twisted him. But the being who don’t know pain cared little, continuing to resist until she heard the sound of bones breaking. But then the creature jerked free, knocking Melog off his back and leaving a severed arm in her hands, which immediately began to crumble to dust. What else was there? And the brave warrior drove a stake into the wicked breast, putting an end to tyranny... Where am I supposed to find a stake here? she looked around and saw one of the Horde's old electric batons. She knew how to use them. The Not-Dead stood over her and grinned as he reached for her with his only hand, though the one he had lost had begun to grow back. The sorcereress entwined the creature again, but this time magical bonds wrapped around its neck, and Melog sank its teeth into its calf. Then she got up and jumped, shoved him hard in the chest. The weapon came out the other way, shattering the sternum and spine. The creature stared at her in amazement for a moment, then smiled and began to crumble to dust. She stood up panting heavily, Melog rubbing against her legs.

"Interesting idea... to pierce his heart... How did you come up with that?" Night Gale asked curiously.

"Reminds me of a fairy tale about killing evil princesses." she murmured and looked at Castaspella - Louse how to wake her up? Night Gale shook her head.

She looked at the electric baton and thought for a moment, then set the baton to low power and placed it against the Chief Warlock's back. You'll thank me later. And she pressed the button.

When she regained consciousness, the first thing she felt was a terrible pain in her back. When she opened her eyes, she saw Catra above her with her hands behind her back.

"Are you… well…"Adora's fiancée asked in a strangely innocent voice.

She stood up rubbing her back and nodded her head.

"I'm fine, but my back hurts." she said, frowning and trying to remember something… something very important.

"And your name is..." er voice was even more innocent and she took two steps towards her... Very strange for Catra.

"Well, I'm Castaspella, did you forgot? ..."she said, and then suddenly all the memories came back. She grabbed the Grand Marshal by the shoulders

"Oh Catra, I had visions, terrible visions…"she said and shook her. The Grand Marshal stiffened all over.

"That's very interesting, but could you let go of me and step back half a meter?" she said slowly, clearly, barely keeping her nerves under control.

"Oh, sorry, I forgot…" she released her and stepped back. And then she started talking about everything she saw.

"I was in the Whispering Woods but it was changed and scary and we were back in that hideout with Adora and Glimmer and they kiiii…hugging." she said, realizing she had almost said something that could have unforeseen consequences...

"They hug a lot and it's quite normal for them? " Catra asked with a hint of suspicion.

"Yes, that's quite typical of them, of course, and there's nothing unusual about it." She took a deep breath. "And you were there, but on a spaceship outside of Etheria, and I don't think anyone recognized you… And what exactly happened here? " she asked, looking around.

"I just had to remember one of the spooky stories the Shadow Weaver used to tell us." Catra said. She looked strangely pale and worried, as if what she'd just heard had upset the Grand Marshal, and she seemed about to say something, something very important, but she looked at Night Gale, who was kneeling by the corpse, and instea she said.

"I'm going to have to take tetanus shots... I hate shots... And thanks Night Gale for your help!"

"You're welcome... "said the sorcereress, and Catra looked at her surprised.

Night Gale stood over the corpse, pride welling up in her heart. Not only did she manage to gain Castaspelli's trust, but she also unraveled the mystery of a group of traitors... "See? Curiosity doesn't pay" she thought, tearing off the amulet depicting a skull with spikes stuck in its eye sockets. "You see! I'm not a Failure!"

This is probably the longest chapter. I won't post another one this week because I'm going on vacation until the end of the week.

Loneliness

Rosie looked around at her companions. The weird feline and her friends conferred silently, Dilayla glumly watching the alien, who in turn was talking quietly to the strange bot. She… felt strangely lonely. She had actually always been lonely, but now she felt it so much. She had no family, friends, or even a name. She was named because of the symbol of the capsule she was found in and the color of her hair. She didn't know where she was from and she had no idea where she was going. She was like a leaf blown by the wind. She had never made friends with anyone, nor had she thought of anything more. Her lack of hearing also separates her from the rest of society. She always watched others, feeling like she was in a glass ball herself, unable to become part of their world. So it was now. She felt that despite the heat, she was getting cold, cold inside. It was as if she were alone on an endless plain, the only creature under the open sky, yet unnoticed by anyone. "Was it like this before? Was I alone in my past life too? Or am I the last representative of my kind? And my people no longer exis?t." She thought and felt tears well up in her eyes. She had to do something not to cry in front of everyone. She decided to approach a bunch of friends, they were discussing something fiercely. She knelt some distance away, but her glasses projected everything they said.

"I don't care what Bina says, she can't order us. We had a good reason to go to town and look what we found out." said Itel, gesticulating fiercely.

"All we know is that our old friend from Kesler is nearby and is interested in Wrogdak, though only the gods can understand why." said Alatar, scratching the back of his neck.

"I agree with the drakey here. It's just a dull and stupid clone, nothing worth even a broken coin." Eti said sharply. The others looked at her meaningfully, as if he had said something very… inappropriate. "Come on? Only his bot is dumber than him." added the strange Pahtra after a moment.

"But the half-elf said otherwise... His... race attacked her planet or something. He himself claims that he belonged to some completely-not-orcish-horde." Itel said, but Lilka interrupted him.

"Absolutely is not an orc, but she can fight like orc." said the red-haired girl, thinking for a moment

"Really? With beings that can move and see anything?" Eti asked with clear skepticism.

"Really... You didn't see him smash that bot." Dragonkin said, and Lilka nodded her head. Suddenly the elf stood up and turned sharply towards Rosie

"Don't eavedrop us!" she glared at the intern, who jumped back in fright.

"Don't peek us." Eti interjected.

"What?" The green-haired elf looked at the shooter, not really understanding what she was talking about. Eti sighed heavily and began to explain.

"She's deaf, so by definition she can't eavesdrop."she shook her head.

"The Devil's Advocate has arrived." The elf exclaimed angrily.

"Not a devil's advocate, but a person who makes sure that others use the language correctly." Replied the strange Pahtra. Rosie looked at the other two.

Dragonkin held up a datapad that read Don't interrupt them or they'll both bite you.

"She almost broke your nose!"The elf shouted back, waving her hands strongly.

"Yeah, that's what happens when people fight." Eti was saying, but Rosie cut in and pulled away.

"Maybe I'll go now, I don't want you two to quarrel." she squared her hands conciliatoryly and walked away from them. She looked around and saw that the alien… Wrongdak was talking to this bot. So she went to them.

"Hello! I'm Rosie Pearl! Nice to meet you!" she said with a friendly smile. The stranger stood up and bowed to her.

"Hi! I am Wrongdak. Actually Wrong Hordak." he smiled at her and pointed at the Droid. "And this is Emily."

"Hi Emily. Hi Wrongdak!" she waved at them and sat down. "Why are you called Wrong Hordak? It's all right with you." she tilted her head wanting to get better look at him, but she didn't see anything strange, except that he did look a bit like he wanted to look like Skittermander. But she had no idea what members of his species were supposed to look like.

"My friend, an extremely wise woman, freed me! She thought I was my brother then... Her friend and lab assistant. She gave me freedom... I know I got that name by mistake, but I like it." he said, moving closer to Emily.

"And Emily? Where did her name come from? Did you named her that?" she asked, kneeling beside Emily.

"No... My friend did that too. She woke her up, made her wiser. But it was my brother who built her."

She furrowed her brow, thinking for a moment.

"If your brother built her and your friend woke her up, that means they made her together... So she's kind of their baby and you're her uncle." she said and puffed her breast proudly.

Wrongdak looked at her surprised.

"Yes, you are right! I never thought of it that way." he stroked the bot on the lid, and Rosie did the same.

"Are you with them? Are you a member of their group?" she asked, looking at the strange four young people, who were now arguing fiercely, but according to the Elf's wish, she did not eavesdrop on them ... Or rather, she did not peek them, as Eti put it.

Wrongdak shook his head

"No, but they freed me and Emily... Grag... He wanted to sell me. Like a thing!" The white-skinned alien clenched his fists and now looked really menacing.

"It's terrible... Such things don't happen here on Absalom."she said, genuinely indignant.

He looked at her in admiration.

"Are you from Absalom? It's supposedly an amazing place. My friends would probably like it… Maybe we'll all go there someday."

"Enough of this little talk, don't bother her!" Dilayla stepped behind her and lifted her shoulders.

"I didn't bother her. We were just talking." Wrongdak defended himself. Dilala was tall in power armor, but the alien could look her straight in the eye anyway.

"Yeah, I remember when on Minitar thirty years ago your people spoke terribly politely to us too." she looked at Wrongdak menacingly, and he lowered his gaze.

"I… I'm really sorry about my brothers. We… we really had no choice…" he didn't finish as Dilayla interrupted him.

"That's what all soldiers say when they justify their crimes."

"I... I've never actually been a soldier... I'm just over six years old." Wrongdak said smiling sadly. Dilayla looked at him confused

"So…" she asked carefully.

"He's a clone..." she looked at the mercenary resentfully.

"I see." she said, looking at the stranger carefully, as if to evaluate him.

" I knew ... I knew young soldiers whose life or cruel politicians forced them to fight at war." she glanced at the four, who had apparently already agreed on something by this point, because Itel got up and started walking towards them. :But I'll keep an eye on you anyway!" the mercenary threatened.

"Listen, we'll go to the observatory together. And then we'll have dinner... or supper, because we have a proposition for you."

"And transportation?" Dilayla asked skeptically. "It's quite far from here."

"You will ride the greatest armored personnel carrier in the galaxy!" Eti shouted.

"Which is pretty crazy." Alatar added.

Bina sighed.

"Ireanis, if you stick your blunt head through the hatch, something will tear it off." she asked the Elven sorceress, who was looking out the top hatch.

"It's proposition?" A hoarse voice came from the speakers.

"No, Crushey. We don't murder crew members." Bina said dispassionately.

"So those who are not crew members, I can? BUHAHAHA" Crushey chuckled loudly.

"Don't start this discussion again.." she threatened the transporter. Meanwhile, Ireanis came downstairs.

"Don't worry, I just went out to get some air.If I saw a tree, I would immediately hide." she said, smiling conciliatory.

"We are in the desert, there are not many trees here." Bina said to the silver-haired woman.

"Ah... that explains a lot." Ireanis sat awkwardly in the seat and buckled her seat belt crookedly.

Bina sighed. Sometimes she felt so lonely... I never asked to be mother of four kids... Especially kids that were so wronged and weird. She watched Ireanis play with the switch. The five most twisted kids in the known worlds. Alone… With a little help from a couple of absolutely untrustworthy individuals. she wanted to laugh through her tears. And most of these kids...all except Eti are older than me...Isn't this world a goddamn joke. She watched the surroundings through the monitor screen, although the vehicle also had a normal viewfinder and even an optical periscope, in case someone used an EMP weapon or a nuclear bomb ... " It's not airtight enough to keep the crew from dying from radiation." She smiled crookedly. Kessler's army purchased plenty of these vehicles, they were hugely popular across the galaxy, but only the Crusher had AI. Simple and not entirely self-aware ... but he was as crazy as the rest of her charges.

"I don't like these little cars. They laugh at me." Crushey said with anger in his voice.

"They're not laughing at anyone. They don't have computers... and probably no electrical parts, so they can't laugh at you, or probably anyone at all." she explained like a wayward child. "Yeah, this is my sixth child and I'm only ten chronologically. They should give me some sort of reward"

"Can I run them over?" Crusher asked her pleadingly.

She sighed.

"No, you can not." She replied in an emotionless voice. She had had this conversation many times before and she didn't care. Her life was essentially about keeping their crew from harming themselves and others.

"When we get back to the ship, you'll review our purchases." she said to Ireanis The elf nodded, and Bina could only hope she was listening instead of thinking on important matters such as the latest season of "Love under the stars and the moon" or what horse thats give a power were fed on. The captain looked over her shoulder and smiled contentedly. She bought everything they needed and told them to pack the most interesting things on Crushey, mainly good food, especially meat for Eti and sweets for Lilka and Alatar, and even a set of knives for filleting meat for Itel and Eti, although she wasn't sure if it was the best idea. They both liked playing with sharp objects far too much… The supplies would be delivered to the ship, that grumpy duergar had said. The fact was that she could understand him. He recently injured his leg and had to use a crutch to get around. Even in such a calm industry as running a warehouse, extremely tragic accidents can happen. But at least he had sanitary napkins and toilet paper, though when he heard she was taking six months' supply right away, Duergar looked at her as if wondering if she was trying to compete with him. I've always been bothered by all those travelers who ignore hygiene issues because it's a waste of a few credits she shook her head, grimacing in disgust. Well, she was proud of how hygienic she was, though she suspected it was some kind of weirdness Jantar had instilled in her. But that's what I'm grateful for. She thought and scratched her forearm where she had a tattoo with a serial number on it. She always scratched him when she thought of Father. You gave us a lot, but you took even more from us. she thought. Even though she was in a better situation than Eti. After all, it wasn't so... refined. . And she pulled out the steering wheel taking control of the machine.. "I wasn't made for this.. for all this. I was supposed to be a swindler, a swordsman of the word... and I ended up adoptive mother, ship captain, and goddamn treasure hunter. What's wrong with me?" she thought. She drove for a few minutes, Crusher was silent, obviously resentful of her for taking control. She wanted return to the ship, wondering what she would find when she returned.

Then the communicator woke up.

"Hi Bina…I must tell you something." she heard Alatar's voice. she sighed. They always had Alator talk to her when they messed something up…

"What's on fire?" she asked straight.

"We didn't burn anything... Why would we set fire to anything?" he asked with almost believable innocence.

"Dragonkin, solarian, grenadier with incendiary grenades, "Orc" with flaming axe. You are setting fires with your mere presence." she replied.

"But we didn't set anything on fire. You know, could you give us and some friends a ride somewhere?" he asked very politely.

"So you're not on the ship? Be honest, did you plan this from the beginning? You didn't care about my orders ... my REQUEST and you went around the city not knowing what to do, right? Do you even respect me at all and take my opinion into account?!" she screamed at them and struggled to control the vehicle.

"I'm sorry…" the technomancer said in a hushed voice.

"Okay, tell me, my dear ... Did you hurt anyone?" she asked, though she already knew the answer.

"Do I have to answer this question?" he replied in a pleading tone, but then Eti interjected.

"Toad... Bina, aren't you demanding too much from us? Don't you think what impact such pressure can have on the development of our adolescent minds? We feel overwhelmed by the incredible weight you put on our shoulders!"

"Eti, I'm just asking you not to behave like a bunch of thugs!" she screamed, then stopped the car and counted to ten.

"All right, just put your coordinates on the datapad and I'll come get you." she said, regaining her self-control. The essence of my existence

Eti has always been lonely. It wasn't just who…what she was. It was her mind. More than two thousand days ago, her soul was shattered and then brutally reforged. Brutal, but unskilful. Bina thought she understood, but her mind was barely touched. She had only knowledge, pure and devoid of context. Eti had so much more. Her psyche... the whole emotional world was trying to be chained in the shackles... of the future she had chosen... in the shackles of her cursed heritage. Bina had certain predispositions, but Eti was never sure whether what she felt, what she did belonged to her or was forced into her mind. She had only met Jantar once or twice, but she hated him more than Bina has, who had taken his life. Though of course, he wasn't the first one she wanted to resurrect, and then to kill again... That honor belonged to someone else...

She got up when she heard an armored personnel carrier approaching in the distance. Thanks to her hearing, she was always the first to know when Crushey was approaching. She could tell it apart from other vehicles, even vehicles like him. Her friends knew her well enough to join her. Wormdak did it too, though he probably didn't understand why, but his empty cloned head was capable of primitive imitation. Sparkle Fingers and Fist weren't sure what was going on, so they stood confused.

They had moved away from the battlefield and were now in the spacious driveway of an unfinished single-family home. There was a large yellow grass with deep roots and sharp leaves, which, when crushed, rose up after a while. She knew such plants from Akiton and knew that it could grow almost anywhere. She missed Akiton. Crushey came roaring loudly. He was beautiful. It had an attached dozer and spikes. They painted him eyes, dragon's teeth and flames. It was probably the most beautiful vehicle in the entire galaxy. She saw Sparkle Fingers staring at Crushey with her mouth open, and Fist whistled.

"We rode something like this during the Siram battles and a couple of other campaigns. I think we on Minitar even used them. Old, but good. Where did you get it from?" asked the half-elf.

"We used it to escape the swarm on Kesler... It's a Long Story... his name is Crusher, but we call him Crushey.

Fist looked at the technomancer with a mixture of disbelief and admiration.

Crushey stood beside them and the side door opened. Inside was Ireanis, who was trying to get up and wave at them without unbuckling her seatbelt.

Operating the passenger seat, even after those five years, was beyond her skill. Bina stood in the doorway and smiled cheekily.

"I see that my band of thugs are wandering around the city looking for a tumor… " she commented on seeing them, then turned to their companions.

"Hello! I'm Bina, and there in the armchair grins Ireanis. I'm sorry if my wards might have scared you a bit…" She said almost apologetically.

"Your wards saved me from a terrible fate..." said Wormdak, and then Eti interrupted him.

"This is Wormdak and Dumbbot sits next to him, the white-haired one is Sparkle Fingers, and the big one is Fist." she said quickly the real names of the new companions. The four of them, along with Dumbbot, looked at her.

"You have just become acquainted with the wonderful and remarkably uniting practice of our Eti of calling other by nicknaming others." Bina sighed heavily. The scout frowned at this simplistic explanation of what she was doing.

"I don't nickname, I just give others names that reflect their character, appearance, and personality much better than the ones their parents gave them at birth." she said proudly.

"But I wasn't given a name at birth... Nor was Emily... We weren't born at all... I guess." said Wormdak and thought for a moment, and Bina looked at him in surprise, but said nothing.

"I... don't know my birth name either, but now I'm Rosie Pearl, and this is Wrongdak and Emily." Sparkle Fingers pointed to the alien and the bot. - And there is Dilayla, my traveling companion and friend.

Bina smiled warmly at the deaf-mute girl" And I'm Bina, and that one is ..." she didn't finish, because finally the elven Mystic freed herself from her belts and stood in the doorway, almost throwing her captain out of the vehicle.

"I'm Ireanis..." she did one pirouette -...Toromech..." she made another pirouette "... called the Silver Flame." she turned one last time, and silver sparks flew from her hands. She jumped back as soon as she realized that the elven mage was about to do magic, and so did her friends, but the rest of them didn't realize what could happen when Ireanis began to do magic. The spell seemed to work this time... almost... Sparkle Fingers saw sparks sparkle on her clothes, she began to extinguish them in horror, then began to extinguish Wormdak, who was watching Ireanis in awe.

"The lady is a great sorceress! I was also friends with a great sorceress. She made me a sweater… But I think I lost it when I was imprisoned." he smirked at those words.

"You didn't lose it. Oh here it is." Lilka took off her backpack and searched through it until she found a sweater. Wool and warm. Three faces are embroidered on it. I think one of them belonged to Wormdak, only then he had a completely different hair color.

Next to it was another similar alien, only with red eyes and blue hair, and next to it was a smiling woman with purple hair. She suspected it was his brother and friend.

"That's was in the warehouse with lots of different items in such a box ... when we were leaving, I scooped them up so that they wouldn't be wasted." Lilka said smiling proudly. Bina hid her face in her hands.

"Please, tell me you didn't assault anyone to rob him." she said resignedly...

"Well, in a way. There was only one Duergar." Alatar tried to explain himself. "Toady" Bina groaned

"This is the guy I used to buy sanitary pads and toilet paper from. By demons and devils, what's you where thinking?"

Then Wormdak stepped forward. He bowed low to everyone and said.

"Please don't be angry with them. They saved me... This Grag... he wanted to sell me... into slavery like a thing and he sold Emily. Itel, Eti, Lilka, Alatar ... They are heroes ..." he said with Exaltation, and Eti felt a shiver run down her spine. I'm not a hero. I do not want to be. I'm me! No one will take that away from me.

She scowled at Wormdak. Bina, however, seemed to be impressed. Nothing unusual.

"If it's true... And I believe him... Well, you could tell he was a filthy brute, this Grag. I could have let Crushey run him over." she said in a softer tone

"You could. - The hoarse voice of the vehicle came from inside. Wormdak watched their transporter with fascination.

"I'm Dilayla, and we are … never mind. Anyway, there was discussion between us here ... so I decided to help them ..." Fist said in a consistent tone.

" What do you need help with?" Bina asked with a hint of suspicion.

Itel approached her hard clenching her fists.

"It's the observatory! I told you he's out there somewhere! And we found its location now we have to go there…"

"All right, let's go." Bina interrupted her.

"What?" asked the elf in surprise.

"What I said. We drive. Since you've already gone out to the city, we might as well go there" Bina said and turned to Sparcle fingers and Fist.

"Then get aboard the craziest transporter in the galaxy!" she exclaimed, and laughed a little nervously, which was her habit lately. Why you are mean to Crushey?

I have condemned myself to loneliness. For everyone to fear me and hate me at the same time. And I was so proud of myself. she thought as she got out of the car. The driver stopped at a combination of a store and a gas station, then told them he wasn't going anywhere else. Arkan-tar tried to persuade him to take them further, but Shiren swore that doing so would only destroy his landing gear. She considered whether she should use her powers to force his obedience, but changed her mind. She didn't want to give away her power just yet, and besides, it was only an hour and two away on foot. they had time.
"Dear Arkan, just ask him to wait for us until the evening ... and buy water!" she said to the scholar. An hour later, she regretted that decision.

She wasn’t used to the sun. Carurystal was almost always cloudy, so she didn't experience its glow on a daily basis. It was still something completely new and unfamiliar to her. Its rays made her tired quickly. Her eyes were squinted and she couldn't see much, and she was panting in the heat. She didn't sweat like other humanoid mammals, and she wondered if she was at risk of heatstroke. I wonder what they think about the sun, are they delighted with it? Adora probably did, so did Glimmer, they always liked the light of day ... And Catra? Thanks to me, she learned to hide in the dark. I showed her the power of darkness, both that outside and inside. I hope she never goes my way again and that she is basking in the sun like a cat… cuddled up to Adora. She thought, and immediately felt pain and self-loathing, for she was about to return to Etheria and disturb their hard-won peace.

Slowly, she considered casting a spell that would make her body shrouded in shadows. They both already knew part of the truth about her, so such a manifestation of power would not surprise anyone. The truth about me... indeed few knew it. she thought. If on Etheria hatred separated her from other, here it was the Truth. She wasn't afraid of being discovered. On Carurystal, only two people knew the all truth about who Miss Daisy really was. What would you well-bred people of respectable families do if you found out you were having afternoon tea with a war criminal? The most hated person on her’s planet? Who betrayed everyone and everything? Though, as Lady Cala said, most wouldn't even believe it, and some would probably justify me… Defend me! She laughed nervously, and Arkan-tar and Rechiza looked at her confused.

" thought of tea with my neighbors on Carurystal, and i imagined a very funny joke." she said smiling crookedly. Plus, it dries me out, damn. Her companions exchanged worried glances. Now they think I'm an old madwoman, she thought, and started to prepare to cast a spell that would shroud her in shadow, but then she heard a vehicle approaching. She turned and saw an armored personnel carrier, albeit oddly decorated with painted eyes, teeth, and spikes attached. Hordak strictly forbade decorating Hordeproduced vehicles, only years later did she understand why, so such a sight was a bit surprising to her.

"Who could it be? In a place like this, the sight of a military vehicle, even one, raises anxiety." Rechiza said clearly ready to fight.

"For me, it's someone who can give us a lift." Arkan-tar replied in a slightly cheerful tone, though he moved his hands towards the weapon. She herself was ready to fight, although she doubted that even in such a place, attacks on random travelers did happen on a daily basis. And even if it did, well, they won't have easy prey. The transporter stood by them, and the side door opened. A burgundy-haired woman named Bina stood there and smiled happily.

"What a small planet! I didn't have time to tell you, but I got us an archaeologist to help with your mission. You see Itel, you're not the only one who cares about this mission. "she said, and a beaming Rosie stood next to her.

"Oh, Miss Daisy, Arkan and Rechiza. They are friends of me and Dilayla. Why are you looking so strange?" the intern asked in sign language.

She didn't know why Arkan-tar looked puzzled, but she had a clear reason. She saw a Droid, one of those Hordak mass-produced. But this one was special, she remembered how she had devastated her garden in Brightmoon. If she's here, Entrapta or Scorpia must be here. Princess of Dryl didn't seem to care much about living creatures, but Scorpia, while not the brightest, had been around me for quite long time to get to know me, and by the end of the war both sides had learned how dangerous Scorpia can be This could greatly complicate Cala's plans, as well as Creeping Chaos itself. Am I ready for this? Will I ever be?" she asked herself in her mind.

However, the person who stood by Rosie's side made her heart stop. Hordak… Hordak here. Her superior, the one whose will she had carried out for thirty years. Have they decided to send you to a truly provincial planet to spend the rest of your days forgotten and meaningless? I wouldn't have suspected Glimmer of having such a wonderful... sense of justice.

But then she looked at the stranger. He had colorful hair, a wool sweater, and a friendly smile. It's the other one that Entrapta took in like a puppy... How he was named... it doesn't matter. Miss Daisy never met him anyway. She saw the consternation beginning to appear on the faces of the others, and she smiled.

"I see Rosie, you've found friends! Making conections with people you meet is a very important skill among young people." she said in a friendly tone. She was practically honest. She liked Rosie, or maybe she just felt pity for her. Out of the corner of her eye, she saw that Rechiza made a surprised face at the sight of a stranger, had she dealt with Prime's clones before? Interesting, but was it really that weird? The empire was large and existed for millennia. Not only Nayrlathotep's minions could have infiltrated it, or at least explored it… She stepped into the vehicle.

"Hello ... I haven't seen anyone who belongs to your species yet." she said smiling at the clone who was confused hearing her words.

"I am Wrongdak, actually Wrong Hordak. And… my brothers' history is very complicated." he said, oozing guilt "And probably very interesting." Rechiza muttered quietly, entering after her.

"If you're going with Miss Bina, we'll find plenty of time to get to know her." she said, ignoring Lashunti's remark. Arkan-tar entered last. He stared at Bina intensivelyShe snorted softly. Maybe the woman was attractive, but not that he couldn't take his eyes off her…

"And what exactly are we going to do with him?" Asked quite young and already partly cybernetized Dragonkin. She glanced at his companions. The short-cropped elf girl covered in tattoos of burning roses stared at her with hostility. A red-haired girl covered in orc or goblin tattoos and wearing lots of weird amulets looked around curiously. At the end there was a strange person with a dust mask and googles over his eyes. Judging by the nervously wagging tail, it was Pahtra. She shuddered involuntarily. This species brought back unpleasant memories for her.

I must be dreaming. I got myself into being an educator for young people again. Can't I just for a moment forget who I am? she wanted to burst out laughing like a villain in a penny story.

"These are Alatar, Itel, Lilka and Eti. Bina said.We'll deal with Mr. Wrongdak later. One problem at a time."

Yes, one problem at a time. For now, I have to get through this day.

Revelation

"Okay, we're making a stop for food and pee." Bina exclaimed. They'd been driving for two hours now, and apparently they'd already seen the observatory, at least as they looked through the visors. They were between hills covered with long yellow grass. Rosie was glad, because it was stuffy and smelled of sweaty bodies in the overcrowded Crushey, so she needed to get some air. Also, she needed to pee because she drank two bottles of water. So when the transporter stopped she went to the side (Lilka and Arkan-tar too) and after everything she returned to the others. The young friends and Bina were just preparing food, mostly sandwiches or self-heating portions. Lilka distributed the treats to Wrongdak and Rosie's companions, though Miss Daisy refused them, staring grimly at the horizon. On the highest hill was the observatory. Its rune-covered shield was majestic, and she could almost see the discharges of power dancing across its surface.

Suddenly she felt a hand on her shoulder and turned around in fear, Behind her stood Eti.

"Hey Sparkle Fimgers. I brought you a sandwich." she said, holding out to her a sliced flatbread with sausage and pickles in the middle.

Before she took it, Rosie said.

"You know that all you need to do is clap your hands to get my attention?

Eti shrugged.
- I don't know. And anyway, I don't like to clap."she waved a metal hand in front of Rosie's face.

Rosie started to eat and only now realized how hungry she was. She started eating the sandwich. Eti wove a dried sausage into her hand, then rolled back her hood and took off her mask and glasses. She looked odd for a Pathra, but she wasn't ugly at all. The others gave her surprised looks. Eti didn't seem to pay attention to them, though she was clearly tense. She pricked up her ears and played nervously with the end of her braid. After a moment, they looked away, apparently mistaking her for some unknown race. The exceptions were Wrongdak and, surprisingly, Miss Daisy. Suddenly, the white-skinned alien ran up to the ranger and grabbed her by the shoulders.

"Catra?! What are you doing here?! Don't you recognize me? It's me Wrong Hordak! What happened..." he didn't finish, because Eti clenched her metal fist and, hissing like a cat, hit him in the stomach. Wrongdak doubled over, clutching his stomach. Eti came up to him all burgundy with anger.

"First…" she began, but Alatar cut her off.

"We don't start counting by showing the middle finger." he said without interrupting his meal, as if a fit of rage was nothing strange.

"First of all, no one dares to touch me without my permission. Secondly, I don't know how you could have confused me with anyone else? I am absolutely unique and exceptional. Third, what kind of Kitthra again? Do I remind you of a flea-infested pet? You must be a bigger fool than I thought to see anything feline about me." she was wagging her cat's tail violently and flattening her’s evidently cat's ears

"He doesn't seem to have a self-preservation instinct. Maybe that's why it was so valuable? A species devoid of self-preservation must be on the verge of extinction. "Alatar wondered. Lilka nodded. Bina got up and, beaming with anger, approached the ward.

"Eti… Eterna! March to Crushey and don't even dare move from there!" Bina screamed, absolutely enraged. Without a word, Eti marched to the vehicle, and the woman with burgundy hair helped the Wrongdak stand up.

"Are you okay?" she asked with concern.

"Yes!" said the alien, smiling happily, as if nothing had happened to him.

"I'm sorry for Eti... She can be unpredictable sometimes..." There was shame in Bina's voice.

"Don't worry... I just mistook her for my friend. She also doesn't like having her personal space invaded." he said with a strangely dreamy expression.

He mistook her for a friend? Rosie thought in surprise.

The only time she'd experienced such a shock had been seeing Mikah alive in the Brightmoon Throne Room. Even when she awoke on cursed Aucturn, in front of an Outer God, she was not so shocked. Deep down, she knew that her act would have consequences, though she didn't expect that she wouldn't run from them even after death.

Catara?! Here?! So far from Etheria? What happened to your hand? she wanted to exclaim, but she thought better of it. It wasn't Catra. This girl is taller than her, though not as muscular. Her hair was straight and greasy, dyed white and red, with visible dark red roots. Her complexion was darker, and her eyes were golden with occasional blue flecks. And that arm... It wasn't just a prosthetic arm, and she was absolutely sure she felt the flow of power when she hit the Wrongdak. The girl was scolded and sent to this nasty vehicle as punishment. Well, I'd be a lot stricter on Catra She felt a strong push in her back.

"Find a girl your own age!" she heard from behind the squares and turned around. She saw a green-haired girl, an elf covered in tattoos. She summoned a silver blade, so she was a Solarian…

"Be careful girl. People better than you have thought twice before raising a hand against me." she warned, but the solarian just smiled indulgently at her, as if she was the one talking to the wayward kid. Her two present companions stood up and looked in their direction.

"And better ones than you lost a paw when they raised it on us." the girl growled.

"Oh, realy?" she replied coldly. She could teach that stupid girl humility... She was powerful enough to do that... Did she want it though? Yes, in the past I would have made her regret her threats… But should I go back to being who I was. This is a chance. A second chance for me She turned away from the Elf and walked a little farther and leaned against a stone standing apart, ignoring the triumphant "Ha." She had to think things over alone before will return to Lady Cala.

Dilayla took off her armor to let her sweaty body cool down for a while. She drank an army isotonic drink from her own supply but accepted a packet of soy noodles in green sauce, nothing special but quite tasty she had to admit, though maybe it was just that she hadn't had anything to eat since their late breakfast. She thoughtfully watched the white-skinned creature, who was talking suspiciously cheerfully with his motley droid, who, however, seemed to be more interested in the girl in the vehicle than his companion. Wrongdak, because that was name of this strange creature, looked like, didn't care much for the blow that strange Pahtra had dealt him... She didn't understand the girl's reaction, not fully. She had seemed to treat him contemptuously before, calling him Wormdak, and now she attacked him as if he had hurt her. Maybe he did… She looked at Itel, who was threatening Miss Daisy for some reason, who looked at the solarian as if she wanted to electrocute her if she could. "These are the children of war, and this was war against an enemy that cannot be defeated". She had never fought The Swarm, though mercenaries who agreed to do so were given five times as many credits It wasn't a fight with any rules. You just had to kill more of them, a lot more than they killed us, or hope that someone would use some secret method to drive them away, which happened more than once. Rechiza sat down beside her and asked quietly.

"What do you think about all this?"

The half-elf sighed heavily.

"I'm a hired gun. Nobody pays me to use what's i have between my ears. I am a simple creature."

The crippled Lashunt looked at her seriously, then at Wrongdak.

"This alien… I have some information about his species…" she said in a conspiratorial tone.

"Ya, you mean the attack on Minitar?" asked the mercenary and turned towards the astonished Lashunti smiling rakishly.

"Did you hear about this event?"she asked, not hiding her surprise. Dilayla burst out laughing.

"I am from Minitar, my dear, and I know firsthand what they can do." she said, and waved her own prosthesis.

Rechiza watched her for a moment with her metal eyes.
Iomadae... Our parts could make a nice robot.

"And you're not doing anything about it?" Lashunti said sharply.

"Well, I tried to kill Wrongdak, that's his name. But then I was attacked by a band of Veskas led by Azlanti."

Lashunti looked more and more funny as she was constantly surprised, almost cute in fact.

"And you didn't tell anyone about it?" she shouted.

"I'm doing it right now." she said with a heavy sigh. "I must admit I don't know what to think about him. Maybe he can masterfully play charming like our Lady Cala, but somehow I don't want to believe it. At worst, it was a very fresh clone when Prime fell."Dilayla said thoughtfully.

"He fell? Prime? How…" Rechiza was in such a shock that the mercenary thought that Lashunti would soon have a heart attack.

"The dude was broadcasting megalomaniac goddamn messages on our planet. I've heard a few and believe me, I've never experienced such a dose of condensed madness, and I've seen a lot." she shook her head.

"And ... his death? What exactly do you mean by its downfall?"

"I don't know much, only what I managed to understand from Wrongdak's statements He was annihilated a few years ago and very definitively. He fears him and hates him at the same time… Even now… How do you know about them?"

Rechiza thought for a long time about her answer, and then spoke very slowly.

"I got information from Liktor Janos di Vi..."she was saying, but the half-elf waved her hand.

"Yes, good old Janos di Vir. He saved most of me and a piece of my sister. If you're interested, I studied at the ordert for a while, but it wasn't my way. Well, i don't think anyone expected that any of the participants of this expedition had sincere intentions ... Anything else?" Dilayla smiled, but her eyes remained as cold as ice.

"This girl... her hand... She's covered in First Ones symbols. I don't think anyone has seen them except me... And I k- now what it says... Here is the Punishing Hand, created to... and I then can't see it because it ends." Lashunti said softly.

"Wonderful, but I'm guessing those First Ones are all extinct, so it's nothing to worry about." she grunted and began to lick the bottom of the box.

"Unfortunately, but you're right, they all died out." Lashunti murmured softly.

Eti already felt calmer… In fact, she felt sad, as she always did after she got mad. It was just the blemish that had been forced into her. It wasn't as bad as Rainy Days. It'll be over soon, as soon as he starts doing something, it's always been like that. She wasn't mad at Bina, who sent her to Crushey. She was also a little ashamed of the attack on Wormdak, but only a little. He shouldn't have touched her, implied she had anything to do with the cat, let alone talk about that one. Suggesting that there was more than one like her… She instinctively began whistling a song, irritating and painful to the ears, arousing anxiety, even fear in the listeners. Was she born knowing it, or was it stuffed into her head like everything else? Bina forbade her to whistle, but since she was alone ... Almost alone, but a person who entered Crushey would hardly complain about this melody, or about any other.

"Hi, Eti." said Sparcle Fingers smiling friendly. "How are you."

"I whistle, I digest, I breathe." she answered quietly and yawned "And how are you, Sparcle Fingers?" she asked with a great effort of will, forcing herself to be polite.

"Well, nothing new. Wrongdak doesn't mind your…outburst. He actually looks quite pleased. I don't quite understand why. I think you're look like his friend…" said the white-haired girl, but she interrupted her with a snort

"Because it's as dull as a shoe on my right foot, and I'm…i was left-handed. It is impossible for me to resemble his friends, because I am absolutely perfect, awesome and most importantly, unique." she murmured. Sparkle Fingers frowned.

"No one is perfect, everyone has flaws and you have to accept them." she said, staring at her with pretty blue eyes.

"Phrases that all imperfect people repeat to hide their imperfection." Eti said. She frowned and jumped at Sparkle Fingers which made a very strange sound.

"What are you doing?!" the girl asked in sign language, moving away from Eti.

"I'm checking how you smell. If I'm going to travel with you and your companions, I need to know how you smell." she said. Sparkle Fingers made a disgusted expression.

"It's strange ... and a little disturbing ..." she pondered "How do I smell?" she asked. Eti thought for a moment.

"Sweat, Almond suntan oil, pickles, smoked bacon and something I'm not sure of…. But mostly sweat.{said Eti – Not so bad, it's important that you don't use camphor. I hate camphor!" almost burst out laughing and Sparkle Fingers smiled as if what she said was really funny. She liked this girl. She seemed so happy and fascinated by the world, as if she could forget for a moment how lousy life can be.

" So you're really an intern, not an intern… - she lay down on the floor of the vehicle.

Sparkle Fingers moaned, or rather made a sound that was supposed to be a moan.

"Why would anyone think I'm…something like that!"

Eti shrugged

"You're a pretty girl on frontiner planet who obviously doesn't look like an adventurer or someone wealthy who could afford a bodyguard, and you're following a menacing-looking and also pretty woman. The conclusions suggest themselves." she asked the white-haired girl who blushed.

"That means I'm pretty too." she asked.

Before Eti could answer anything, she saw the Dumbot clumsily sneaking up on Crushey.

"What is Dumbbot looking for here?" she asked gruffly.

"The Dumnbot stared at her with its one eye in fascination."

"Why are you being mean to her?" Rosie asked indignantly. "Emily is nice!" she looked at the scars on the metal cover.

It doesn't have to be her... it could be any predator... she thought, then looked at her left, mutilated hand.

Previously it could have been a coincidence. Something completely unrelated to me. But now, after what Wormdak had done… He must have recognized her. He knew that one, even said her name. He was friends with her. So she's alive. She had a nice happy life, not like mine. She clenched her fists, feeling the cold fire in her veins.

"Hey Eti, what's up? Bina sent me here too because I snapped at that old Grim Lady because she was undressing you with her eyes." Itel said as she sat down beside her.

"I do not think so. Grimmy looks too sour to be interested in such things." she said quietly. Rosie stood up and, bowing to them, turned to Durnybot.

"Come on... I'll introduce you to Miss Daisy. She waved at them and left.

I've always been a blind fool she thought as she looked at the fallen blades of that nasty grass. And that in every way... I've always seen Catra as a foundling, a worthless piece of junk found by Adora. A useful tool, useful in conditioning her sister She stared at the vehicle, wondering what this unexpected revelation meant for her. I've always contempt of her… no, it wasn't contempt. It was hate… For not being able to control her. For interfering with my beautiful plan to shape Adora the way I wanted. For being so like me… She laughed nervously, and Arkantar looked at her in surprise. I have to stop laughing to myself or they'll really think I'm crazy. she sighed. Today, she wasn't even in control of her own life now. Adora and all of Etheria could shape their own future, and the only one she could really hate was herself. But that girl, this Eti... She was very similar... like a younger sister... She was sure no one could get out of Despondos, as Hordak said, it was much easier to get there. She had too much evidence to back that up, so she had to belive him… Which meant Catra had also been born somewhere in the galaxy. The immensity of this fact made her head spin. Through my pride I missed something so important, contempt and arrogance clouded my judgment. Catra had always been almost as fit as Adora, and in some ways far more capable. Smart, rarely ill, immune to pain...”Just out of curiosity, I should look at her research results more closely. Surely someone noticed something, but preferred not to bother Hordak’s Right Hand with matters related to the difficult kid. But that was the past, she can't change that. Now she had to think about what the future would bring. If they were going to Etheria together, a confrontation would be imminent and potentially… She had no idea what to expect, she'd known this girl for only a few hours. From a pragmatic point of view, she was a valuable asset. She's not sure how this strange teenage girl will react to this discovery, but Catra… She should be happy… Or not. There is a similarity between them, not only in appearance. Where did she grow up? Who shaped her? I need to learn as much as I can before they reach Etheria…and she should have a plan by the time they meet Lady Cala.

"Miss Daisy, I have someone to introduce you." Rosie Pearl stood before her. The girl was smiling happily and pointing at Entrapta's droid. "This is Emily. Emily, this is Miss Daisy."

She smiled slightly and knelt in front of the droid.

"Hello Emily."'= she said. Usually her voice sounded a little different than it used to, but now she tried to make it sound old. Emily stared at her for a long moment, then squealed loudly and jumped away from her. Rosie looked at her in amazement.

"Sometimes children, animals and droids are afraid of me." she said and added in her mind But for different reasons

She approached Emily, who wanted to leave her, and spoke very quietly.

"We'll be traveling together on the same ship for a while. Just like your friend. Don't be afraid of me, I won't hurt you...unless you make me. After all, I haven't forgotten how to be my old self.

The secret of the observatory

Arkan-tar was confused, which he didn't do often, and he definitely didn't like the feeling. This Bina... she made him feel, for the first time in many years, that he didn't know what was going on. He was glad that Miss Daisy and Rechiza had managed to get a ship to take them to their destination… The crew, though young in age, seemed quite competent. Their captain was competent and able to control such an unruly pack.

But why did she look like Lady Ka? He might not have had the best opinion of the Lord Admiral's Left Better Hand, but who was he to judge her, everyone was entitled to their weaknesses, though he would have preferred her not to be his superior. When you work for someone as powerful as the Lord Admiral, even the slightest mistake could lead to the death of countless subordinates and innocents. This implied some problems, but there was absolutely nothing he could do about them.

But he had to make a decision about the captain of their new ship. At first glance, she seemed both older and younger than the Lord Admiral's Left Hand. He saw traces of life's hardships, stress and fatigue on her face. But her pupils weren't dilated, and she wasn't laughing withou reason. He didn't know much about Lady Ka, or rather, he didn't know anything about her, which was starting to worry him at the moment. His ancient superior hadn't given him much information about the Lord Admiral's entourage, but from what he'd heard about the commander-in-chief of their expedition, he might have expected the worst. Does Lady. Ka have a sister whom she commissioned to perform a task similar to ours. Maybe even their meeting with Rechiza and Miss Daisy wasn't so accidental after all, he wondered. The flaw in this reasoning was that the two members of their expedition, he and Lady Cala, knew her face, or rather half of it. Of course, he could be disposed of without much consequence, but Lady Cala had valuable maps, and besides, she had high-ranking friends on Carurystal ... Unless the woman's goal was to eliminate the entire expedition, which was an even more unpleasant thought ... then why she would surround herself with such young and strange individuals. This, of course, could also be a trick to lull their vigilance, but then her charges should arouse trust? This quirky Pahtra was quite erratic, as was her elven pal who was threatening Miss Daisy. It was pointless to surround yourself with such individuals. So who was she, what did this strange encounter mean? He would need to talk to his companions as soon as possible. Rechiza spoke softly to Dilayla, listening thoughtfully to the mercenary's argument about the drows. He knew the half-elf's preferences, so he wondered if Rechiza shared them. If so, well, the odds that he'd be stuck with his own company throughout the journey were increasing. Well, maybe he should have befriended that half-drow?

"All right, we're there! We get off and plan!" Bina exclaimed. Their group, which in its equipment and appearance resembled a small company of mercenaries rather than a team of researchers, went outside. Bina ordered them to line up and began to speak.

"Listen, we want to break into this cursed building. Dusk is slowly approaching, although as far as I know most of us can see at night, and for the rest, including me, we have night vision goggles and flashlights. So you won't get lost. Enough from me, itel, now you!" she asked the elven Solarian."It's your idea, so you should explain to the others why we're here and tell them your plan.

The green-haired girl looked at the others, surprised and confused at the same time, clearly unprepared for this development. Arkan-tar stepped forward and bowed to the others very politely.

"Regarding the history and purpose of this building, I can help a bit." he said, and saw that Rechiza and Miss Daisy gave him a distrustful look. The others looked at him with a bit of curiosity mixed with amazement. Only the elf seemed to be pleased, because he gave her some time to work out a plan.

"So, as you can guess, we are all gathered here on this planet to discover the mysteries of the so-called Ravaged Zone. However, we are not the first to be fascinated by that place. Over a dozen years, thanks to the support of various private investors and churches of Yaraesa and Desna, a huge Drift Observatory was built here to explore this mysterious area. For several years, research was carried out here and a lot of valuable data was collected. Unfortunately, for reasons that are difficult for us to understand, the center has lost its most important scientist. Shortly after, the resort closed, some say at an express pace. The locals did not know what had happened, but they left it alone, they even say that it is haunted. In my archaeological experience, it's usually wise to take this type of gossip seriously. We know that there may be maps and also astrographic data of large areas of the Zone, but we also have to reckon with many potential dangers…" he finished his lecture, and noticed with satisfaction that, apart from the red-haired girl with orc tattoos, no one fell asleep. Even the strange white-skinned alien and jeo droid seemed to listen to his reasoning.

"And is the identity of this scientist and his fate known?" Miss Daisy asked unexpectedly. He looked at her surprised. He adjusted his glasses and thought quickly about how much truth he should tell the others.

"It was Doctor Sidonius, the famous xenobiologist, historian and physicist. An individual of many talents." he said and suppressed a smile at the reaction of his companions. Rechiza looked away, hoping no one would notice her confusion, but the behavior of the crew of their nearly-future ship really surprised him. "Did he send them here? It raised more questions than answers." He thought.

"Indeed, a man of many talents. He must be a true genius or an ancient sage to have acquired so many skills." Miss Daisy smiled bloodthirstly and innocently at the same time. This woman was a bit disturbing even before he saw her real face.

"Why not both at once? He is a man of extraordinary intellect, and as a vampire he has spent centuries gaining knowledge." he bowed, smiling and went back to the line.

She wasn't too surprised by this, the bloody old vampire was researching the Prime’s Empire. Nothing could surprise her that day. Prior to her awakening, she didn't believe in the existence of vampires and ghosts, though she liked to tell Adora and Catra and the other cadets scary stories about ghoul princesses and blood-sucking princesses. Generaly about undead princesses. Most of them were legends she had learned in Mystacor or even at home, which she had later reworked for the use of the Horde. It wasn't until they stopped in Eox's orbit that she learned that the dead could walk among the living, and she accepted that truth. She herself was monster not much better than a ghoul, or even worse. After all, most of her nefarious deeds were the result of her conscious choices, not of a supernatural nature. I wonder what a leech like that would think if it met a parasite like me? Do the undead scare each other with Power Devourers?
This green-haired Elf Itel stood in front of them and began to outline her plans.

"Well, Eti will go to scout and ..." she wanted to say, but the girl with the metal hand interrupted her.

"We're taking Sparkle Fingers with us." she said crossing her arms first.

Itel glared at Eti, and Rosie took a step back.

"She is deaf and not from us!" the elf screamed, and Rosie took a step back. Bina and Rechiza gave Itel a stern look, but she ignored it.

"But can hear perfectly well, even when you whisper between each other ..." said the feline in a calm voice. Rechiza and Dilayla exchanged surprised glances, and Wrongdak nodded to her. The behavior of her companions was puzzling.

"But she doesn't even know if she's making noise..." Itel was speaking in a slightly calmer, though still annoyed tone, but Rosie cut her off.

"No, I can feel when I make noise because I can feel the vibrations and I can connect my glasses to your communicators so I will know what you are talking to me and I can switch the gloves to whisper." explained to the solarian.

You see, now that all your fanciful and absolutely irrational problems have been easily solved, we can start planning now." Eti said, and Dragonkin and Bina gave her a surprised look. The elf clenched her fist furiously and obviously wanted to continue the argument, but then decided it was time to intervene, because this discussion could go on forever. Besides, she liked Rosie, unlike Itel, so she decided to side with the deaf girl.

"Given the size of our company, it's best to split up into four groups of three." Eti, Itel and Rosie are the most skillful. Eti has good hearing and smell, Rosie, like many deaf people, has keen eyesight. And itel has innate leadership skills so it will be good to lead the three of you." She did not fail to tickle the green-haired girl's ego. Rosie looked at her gratefully, and Itel frowned suspiciously. "Mister Wrongdak looks like a strong and capable fighter, so does Lilka, so they can accompany Dilaylia as a strike force. - When she mentioned the clone, Eti looked at her like she was an idiot. "Alatar and Arkan-tar are gifted in matters of technology, so together with Captain Bina they will be technical support And I, Rechiza and Ireanis as powerful magic users will support everyone with their power. And Emily will watch over our transport during this time. " she said and watched with satisfaction as everyone looked at her silently. She looked at the elf and smiled slightly. That's How It's done darling

Itel tried to control her rage. She had to have a clear mind, because the success of her mission depended on it. And in addition to the usual problems with taming Eti's unpredictable behavior, she also had to look after a stupid deaf girl. Not that she didn't like Rosie. This girl just annoyed her, and the fact that she was trying to be nice to everyone made it even worse. She didn't know if she was so dumb she didn't understand it or if she was up to something. Just in case, she didn't trust her any more than the rest of the guys Bina picked up. And Eti liked her. This Eti who lashed out at others for trying to touch her, or for saying she had cat ears, as everyone had seen recently. And that bloody grim elf who was staring at her friend as if she was seeing a cat girl for the first time. Of course, she must have seen the chimera of a pahtra and a human for the first time, but that didn't excuse her. pervert hag! And then she pretty much single-handedly took the leadership from her and put everyone in the corner. As if she'd ever seen a war up close, rather than babysitting some pampered damsel. And Bina, of course, said nothing, as always. Didn't she understand the importance of their mission? That this is not a mere teenage whim, or even an ordinary treasure hunt. The fate of trillions of beings, perhaps even the entire galaxy, depended on the success of this enterprise. So few know what it takes to defeat the Swarm… She thought and groaned in frustration. Eti and Rosie looked at her in surprise. She forgot that the deaf girl hears her through the communicator.

"Something happened?" Rosie asked, looking at her with concern.

"Nothing, turn your headphones down." she said trying not to show how angry she was.

They reached the fence. It was tall and thick, and there was barbed wire on top. Ordinary robbers would have to work hard to get to the other side. She and Eti were well equipped to overcome such an obstacle, and she saw the jump that the white-haired girl made today. "I wonder if she'll make it this time, too."
Eti turned on the cloaking field, doing the famous disappearing trick, and took off. Rosie started running too, her legs flashing and she took a leap. To her surprise, the white-haired girl found herself on the wall and turned to shake Eti's hand, but the shooter simply climbed on the flat surface thanks to her falcon boots. Then the wire began to wrap around Rosie's legs and Eti's arm. She cursed softly under her breath in Elvish and activated her jet boots while summoning the moonblade. She flew over to the girls, being careful not to burn them, and cut the living wire with quick cuts, because that was the name of what was trying to capture them. Soon all three were on the other side.

"Are you all right? " she asked. Rosie shook her head, but Eti growled as she looked up. She lost the glove that protected her left hand. Even in the shadow of the setting sun, her maimed fingers were visible. The deaf-mute girl covered her mouth at the sight, looking at Eti in astonishment.
"It's off to a good start." Eti grunted.

He had trouble concentrating on the task at hand. He wasn't sure what it was exactly, just like his new friend Lilka. So he left the decision-making to his next new friend Dilayli, who seemed to know what they were doing, whatever it was. In general, he had made a surprising number of friends during the day, which made him extremely happy. From the time he came to this planet he had only Emily, now he was surrounded by extremely interesting people ... And one of them was her. For a brief moment he was sure it was Catra. He was terrified that something terrible must have happened to her here. She didn't recognize him, and worse, she had lost her arm in some terrible way. For a moment, he was terrified that she'd been chipped again, which was scary in itself, but it would also mean that he... that Horde Prime had returned. He couldn't put into words how scary that would be... but it wasn't Catra... He had trouble distinguishing faces, it wasn't a skill He expected his brothers to have... Over the years he had learned to recognize Skittermanders because they were his friends, and the Vesks, whose honor might be offended by a mistake, but he still had problems with other races. But he was sure they were very similar, as Emily confirmed, and she had no trouble recognizing the others. It meant… he wasn't exactly sure what it meant, but it was something amazing.

"The area is clear" Itel's voice came over the communicator. They were standing in front of a heavy gate leading into the interior of this observatory. It felt so strange to be standing in front of a structure built just to explore his empire. If he ever found out about it, he would probably come here to destroy everything just for idle curiosity.

"Do you see an electronic lock or something?" the woman in power armor asked.

" I see, but for now there is no power, so than it will not give us." Itel said in a matter-of-fact tone. " Are you waiting for Alatar and the others? she asked, but Lilka shook her head and started to take a laser cutter out of her backpack, so Dilayla replied "No, we'll manage faster on our own."

"Okay, just be careful, they've put a living wire here, there may be more traps!" she called. Dilayla looked at the two of them and motioned for them to come over.

"It'll only take a minute." said Lilka and put on a protective mask. He felt a surge of longing for Entrapta at the sight. As much as he liked his friends from Vesk III, he was eager to return home, especially since he had such wonderful news for all of them. Entrapta was right, and so was his brother. Prime didn't conquer the entire galaxy, his empire was just a small part of the universe that hadn't actually heard of him. The Galaxy was sure of things, wonderful and terrible, and above all, extraordinary. Though he stayed mostly in one skittermander's town on Vesk III, he had heard many tales of all sorts of wonders in the universe. He couldn't wait to be able to "Bring all collected data on the universe" to Entrapta and his brother. And now this girl...

"Are there many of you?" Dilayla's question snapped him out of his thoughts. He blinked a few times before answering.

"I have no idea…" he said truthfully "There were several thousand of us in the place that became my home… But I don't know how many of us there were in the whole empire or what happened to them." He felt a sudden pang of sadness. Unlike the Older Brother, his bond with the clones had been strong, at least when he left Etheria, but he had thought little of them in the last few years, other things on his mind. Now he was starting to worry.

"Is this one of your coins?" she asked, tossing him a coin, which he caught on the fly. On one side was the symbol of the Horde, albeit gold on red background, and on the other was the words "United We Shall Cast Out Shadows." He felt blood rushing to all parts of his body.

"He... Horde Prime didn't use coins. He didn't need them. He just took what he wanted." he said. He had no idea where Dilayla had gotten that coin, but the mere prospect that something of Horde Prime had survived…that some of his brothers might still be enslaved… The power-armored warrior looked at him in perplexity.

"I didn't expect it to have such an effect on you. At first I wasn't sure where I knew the symbol from, but then I remembered. This coin was owned by Shirkas, a certain Shiren miner who wandered deep into this whole Ravaged Zone. He found some ore there and met two beings. One of them was a drow priestess… Do you know who a drow is? - she asked a bit thoughtfully.

"Black Elf…?" he asked surprised.

"No... There are black elves, see Ireanis, and Itel are also dark-skinned... Drows are something else... Very nasty usually, though not always of course. I've worked for them twice and it wasn't a pleasant job...but to the point. This woman paid him for his work with these coins, though they appear to be fake and of little value. He had met some monster before... He looked like a woman with a purple octopus attached to her head... Her tentacles were growing like hair from her head..."

For a moment he did not know what the woman was talking about, he had already learned that the universe was full of terrible and terrifying beings. Sam fought Skitterwander, for which he even got a medal. It took him a moment to realize who the woman was talking about.

"NO! She is no monster! She is a wonderful and very smart woman! She gave me the name. She freed…" he spoke agitatedly, but Dilayla placed an armored hand on his shoulder.

"You were there! Where we're going." she said, and now he realized he had said a few words too much. My brother told me to be silent! I promised not to tell anyone. So far he's been successful… Dilayla looked around, but Lilka was finishing burning through the gate, and the rest were deep in conversation. She put her hand on his shoulder and looked him in the eyes

"Did the people of this place… Did your friends defeat Horde Prime? The one who took everything I had? she asked, and he, still shaken, just nodded."

"Okay... I promise I won't tell anyone, but beware. None of my comrades are who they say they are. And we're hiding a secret.... Trust none of us, especially the beautiful Lady Cala. - she said seriously and smiled. "If you can be friends with someone who tried to kill you on the same day, then let me call you your friend."

He answered her with the friendliest smile he could muster.

"My friends have tried to kill each other many times and now they are together."

The blue-haired woman laughed loudly and sincerely.

"Don't count on it, I prefer girls. But it's nice to have at least one friendly face on this trip."

"I didn't expect anything, and I'm glad you consider me a friend."

"Mr. Wrongdak, Mrs. Dilayla, please help me push." Lika called. They both went to help her.

She was standing next to the other two sorceresses when she saw from a distance that Wrongak and the mercenary were smiling at each other.

"And what happened?" Rechiza said, frowning. I wonder how much she's seen with those metal eyes of hers.

"Oh, don't you understand? Can't you feel love in the air?" Ireanis called. The lashunti looked at the silver-haired sorceress as if she were an idiot, but the other woman didn't seem to notice. Although it's very possible that most people looked at Ireanis that way on a daily basis, so it probably seemed normal.
How such a person ended up in such a place and is now taking part in an expedition on whose success so much depends, I have no idea. she thought. The elf was actually not a stupid woman. she had learned to recognize such people after making so many mistakes.. She definitely considers herself a sorceress, and a very talented one. But she had serious doubts about it…

"For many years, one of my many tasks was… supervising students in a military school, and I had to learn how to distinguish between friendship and infatuation." And how to ruin both if necessary

"Military school? I thought you only taught young ladies. You are a person of many talents as i see." Lashunti said smiling.

"Some people will do absolutely anything to survive." she said in a gloomy tone.

The witchwarper gave her a sideways look but said nothing because Ireanis interjected.

"Yes, I remember once distributing elxirs for hair growth after I lost my job at the university.

Why am I not surprised she thought with bitter satisfaction, but asked politely.

"I take it that this potion worked perfectly, guaranteeing a full head of hair?"

"Well, it worked, but it usually made you bald..." explained the silver-haired elf with an absolutely sincere smile.

That doesn't surprise me at all either.

"Oh." was all she said.

"Do you think we can expect magic traps there?" asked her a lashunti.

„I would leave traps out of sheer malice if I were to lose what I care about… if I even thought that someone might dare todid it. It hadn't occurred to me last time, I was so confident."

"If they had the time, and the things they keep here are worth wandering off-road for, there must be plenty of traps here." Any sane person would do that.
Rechiza smiled sarcastically.

You have a wonderful definition of sanity - she murmured.

"With failures comes wisdom... Come on, they're opening the gate right now..." she said and headed towards the observatory.

Eti had a bad feeling. Well, she always had a bad feeling. She had worse feeling She felt bad being outside without a glove. She didn't want anyone to see her disability. Everyone thought she regretted losing her organic hand, but her new metal one was much better, though she missed her claws. She could cut even metal with them, not to mention flesh and bone. Oh yeah, not to mention flesh and bone. She clenched her left fist. And that's why I was hurt. Naughty cats have their claws clipped.

"And how, do you see the generator?" Itel called over the communicator.

"I think so, I'm just going to check it out." she said uncertainly.

"Okay, just focus and don't let yourself get distracted. A lot depends on it, we cannot fail." her friend recommended.

"All right." she said and added quietly under her breath after silencing the communicator "I'm glad you don't put too much pressure on me.

Itel had been annoyed ever since Grimmy took over. She was always nervous when she approached the possibility of realizing one of her plans, but this time it was worse than usual. She guess it was her fault. It had something to do with her insisting on taking Sparkle Fingers. She just didn't understand how anyone could have a problem with Sparkle Fingers. She was nice.

The generator was in a small shed. It was padlocked, but with just a few hand blows using a little energy, the padlock broke. The generator was simple enough, but it was the kind that would run for decades on the frontier without proper technical support. She can definitely run it. She was sure of it, she had learned that, as almost everything, by the twentyth day of her life. When they did IT to her. She shook her head to shake off such thoughts. They weren't good, they brought nothing but pain. She looked around and found a tank of high-energy biofuel. They were sealed, so it was definitely still usable. She grabbed the canister, cursing her maimed fingers, and poured the thick, slimy liquid into the tank, then turned a few knobs and turned the device on. She heard the loud whirr of machinery working. Through the vent, she saw light entering the room, so the power was restored.

" Okay, everything works! Now it's time for you Alatar." she said to everyone on the communicator.

"Be careful. Creatures living in the dark do not like it when light disturbs their peace." she heard Grimmy's voice.

"Are you always so melodramatic?" she asked, looking around the brightly lit square in front of the building. Night was coming, so a little light might be useful, at least to others.

"You're probably right…" Grimmy replied as with a bitter laugh.

Arkan-Tar walked next to Dragonkin, and his exocortex collected data. This place was not an ordinary research institution of a team of scientists there. The being who managed this used the knowledge gathered by the millennium of existence to build this shield covered with this runes. "Let's add the knowledge without context. That's what all this is about, "he thought, thinking about why no one had undressed this monumental device. Locals may have no funds for this, nor would they know what to do about it. However, there were enough powers in the universe that could make use of this device.

"Alatar, you can now connect to the local network, do you have to connect to your computer?" Bina asked looking around the center.

Dragonkin shook his head, which looked quite strange in the case of a being with such a long neck.

"Theoretically yes, but I would have to use some of the power, and I don't have much left." he said in a slightly apologetic tone.

" I think we have to enter the main building. Fortunately, i have a simple password breaker, it's quite a useful toy." Arkan-tar proposed to his companions.

"I didn't know that haker skils were usefull to archelogists." Bina said, raising an eyebrow.
- It depends on the archaeologist. Most mainly dig in the ground, but people like me often prefer to obtain information in a slightly more unusual way. - He said a bit theatrically spreading his hands.

"Yhy, unusual you say." she said, looking at him dragged on. "Itel check if you have any alarm at the door, as you need to ask the shock team to provide you with a cover. She turned to the elf.

"I can't even embrace my absolutely perfect mind, how a Wormdak can cover us, but as you know, I'm extremely nice, a gentle and conciliatory person who never wants to start conflicts." she put in Eti through the messenger.

"Yes, you are the personification of pacifism and love of your felows." Bina murmured, but Itel confirmed that she had heard the command.

He came closer to the bina so that they could talk a bit more privately.

"Do you look after an extraordinary bunch for a long time?" he asked, raising an eyebrow.
Bina looked at him approximately.

"It will be five years. I have been dealing with them since Kesler's fall." she said and her eyes burst a bit when she plunged into the memories. "Miraculously we managed to save from theswarm. The Shadows of Tarak did help us..."she looked at Alatar, who probably was looking for a signal, with motherly sensitivity. "I am their only family, everything they have ..." she rubbed her eye and asked. |And how much do you know doctor Leech?"

Now she surprised him, he wasn't sure if she just didn't want to find him, but this time he also decided to take a chance.

"It will also be five years. He also made the eyes of Rechiza, although she does not know about our familarity." he said smiling apologetically. - Bina just nodded thoughtfully. They waited forfew minutes in silence and finally heard Itel's voice.

- It's all right inside." Elf said.

They headed towards the main building. The windows were made of some very durable material that did not get dirty. It seemed that the whole building was almost self -sufficient, probably in the interior there was a fusion reactor ensuring the power supply of the observation disc and the rooms for employees who probably did not leave this place for weeks,

They three went inside into. They found themselves in a spacious lobby, which seemed not to fit into such a somp. Saltmarsh. A strange alien, even stranger girl covered with orc tattoos, and Dilayla were inside. He didn't see three scouts. White -skinned bowed kindly, and the girl searched the garbage bucket for her only known purpose.

"Itel, this green -haired elf, noticed that this corridor leads to the main computer room." she said the half -elf, wiping her light blue hair. "But probably everything is safe, because if it was different, we would hear shots and screams."

"And explosions. Eti likes to make explosions." Red -haired said. He smiled and nodded. The corridor was illuminated by a weak blue glow that would not offend being who hate sun. After a while they came to the room where most of the computers were located. The most valuable data was probably on the internal computer, cut off from the local network of the research center or even on analogue media ... but they only looked for maps. Nobody would be such a paranoid to set traps protecting the results of the research and not tell them about it ... right?

When they entered, Rosie waved them smiling cheerfully.

"I guess everything is right? But what exactly are we looking for?" she asked and began to look around, as if she had just realized why she actually found herself here.

"Map ... maps of the Ravaged Zone and something else ..." Itel said, walking along the circle formed from the monitors. In the middle there was a holographic display. A fairly popular style of office design in places where a rather authoritarian management model was preferred. This bizarre feline was sitting on a chair with her legs on the table, and lazily stared at the screensaver. Somewhere she lost the glove and now held her hand on the armrest rolled up her fingers.

Alatar approached one of the computers and connected a flash drive offered to him by Arkan-tar. He began to tap his claws on the keyboard.
"Okay, I got access. There is some looped transmission to play. Run it?" he asked after a while.

"Yeah!" Verthani recommended, although he knew what they would see ...

The Smarty ordered Alatar to turn on some transmission, so she got up from the chair and started staring at the holographic display, curious what she would see there. She never liked computers. They bored her, not counting simple shooting games, that can be operated with one hand. Itel went to her staring at the display, as if she were waiting, which truth she would reveal to them. After a moment of loading, a figure appeared to them. It was a woman, at first glance she took her as an Android, but after a while she came to the conclusion that she must be a cyborg, someone who underwent a very serious cyber -reconstruction. She saw something like that in a thousand daughters, or rather a thousand sisters, as they preferred to be called. They were even less, alive from Androids, because such a number of implants was difficult to control. She had to undergo huge changes, because her face resembled a rather porcelain mask. She saw that the fist stared at her absolutely shocked. Did she know her from somewhere? At the moment, a Grimmy with the other mystics entered the room.

"Here, Mistress of Armament Joan from Void Galeon the Dreams of Eternity. I speak on behalf of Captain Blazebringer." she said in a cool, emotionless voice. She felt that Itel was putting her hand on her shoulder.

"You see! He exists, really exists." The elf said with a strong emotions.

"We demand from the inhabitants of this planet to issue a individual known to us as Doctor Herlam Sidonius. If you refuse, we will use all available resources so that this person is on board. All resistance will meet our definite answer. We have armament able to destroy this planet, and even hurt your sun, although such means will not be needed ... Let the doctor wait for the first officer Vale in front of his observatory. Captain Blazebringer gives a word that nothing will happen to anyone if our demands are fulfilled."

And then the transmission was interrupted. She felt itel leaning on her shoulder. Tears flowed across the solarian's face.

"It's all true. We have a chance. If we cure him ..." she looked tenderly at Etia. She bowed her head as if she wanted to kiss her, but the shooter gently moved away. In the blue eyes of the elf you could see pain, but only for a moment.

"It was ... interesting." said the Smarty, adjusting the glasses. "Now download the maps. It seems that it will all be a lot more simply than I thought." When he said that, Alatar entered commands. Finally, the download began, and then the pandemonium began.

From several computers, glich gremlins jumped out, which began to run around and make fun. They broken with electric rays, made noise. They were dangerous when to unarmed Nerd caught up but not to them. She hit his fist in the nearest creature, rejecting him to the other end of the room, and then reached for the pistol and shot, turning him into a pixel cloud. Itel cut the nearest creature annihilating him.

- It's not as scary as for a thousand -year - old vampire, it was a rather malicious joke." Rechiza said, but then a dark being began to materialize over the display. She was tall with a look as some someone took out the bone from its body. She had round, teethless mouth and eyes ... these eyes were full of darkness ... Darkness from between the stars. Everything seemed to slow down, the sounds were muffled. She heard a quiet shout "Bodak!", but there was only darkness ... and then the words sounded. Full of power. Full of terror and might. Suddenly, the creature curled up and overstated until the walls trembled. His body bent and was torn to shreds that fell to the floor. Little of black smoke floated from them. She turned and saw Miss Daisy, who was breathing heavily after casting a spell.

"Thanks. she said almost brinnginga smile to her's face. The elf mystic also smiled, warmly and gently. She did not expect someone like her is able to do it. Sparks of joy shone in her eyes.

"You're welcome. " she bowed to her.
Then they heard the sounds of shots ...

The first clash of this war...

Calamity ran at speeds unattainable by more primitive creatures, her hair as bright as the rays of the rising sun floating in the air thanks to the momentum created by her movement. Her muscles did not tire, and her joints did not creak despite the enormous effort. With superhuman dexterity, she skipped obstacles like a child playing hopscotch, leaping between boulders, landing each time with the grace of a dancer, though such a feat would have shattered the bones of most mortals. She could run like this for hours, regardless of the heat, the particles of sand and salt whipping her face, and the fatigue. Rarely had she had the opportunity to unleash her power away from the envious gazes of lesser beings. She could take a break from their tiresome company, not hear the twittering about the crap that was about their twisted minds. Miserable desires, pathetic dreams, meaningless existence... Meat puppets who think they are better at something than petty vermin that they crushed as they rushed ahead. But there were mortals of some value. One of them was Shadow Weaver. She needed her to reclaim her destiny. Of course, it was through the cowardice and weakness of the dark sorceress that she lost them. You are a weak and vile creature, and yet I must obey you, for such is the will of Crawling Chaos. Now I have to save your pathetic life! Will my torment ever end? she thought, and kicked the neck of some desert predator unlucky enough to get in her way as she ran. „I'm better now” she thought.

She was furious. But she couldn't take her emotions out on those who caused them. "Damn followers of Charon. Had it not been for their attack, their ship would not have been seriously damaged. Then they set a trap for them and she lost two valuable servants. If it wasn't for that, they wouldn't have to play around with finding a replacement ship, and her position in the whole expedition would be much higher. And now she found out that her rivals had decided to use an opponent whose involvement they had not expected, though they should have, and whose participation in the coming events could destroy all her plans. Was that your plan? Would you, O Soul of the Outer Gods, use the wretched people of the Star Empire? Who in their hypocrisy used the Vesk mobsters. Pathetic she thought. Fortunately in misfortune, the cult of Crawling Chaos was surprisingly strong on this ball of dirt and salt, and at the meeting the local archblasphemer had warned her though of course he had not spared her all the welcome ceremonies that mortals in their infinite ignorance considered essential. She wanted to rip off all of his limbs and feed them to him, but Shadow Weaver had taught her that self-control, the ability to focus on a goal and ignore distractions, was the true measure of greatnes...

She hurried back to the hotel room, only to find that stupid Ysoka there. She told her that in the last communication Verthani had informed them that they had managed to obtain a spaceship and were now going to an observatory to obtain additional information. They didn't seem to be aware of the danger that lay in wait for them. She happened to know where the observatory was supposed to be. The cultists had told her. They had an agent there, but he died mysteriously and was transformed into a terrible undead creature called a bodak. Well, that's what happens when fools play with powers beyond their comprehension... But a dark sorceress should be able to deal with that, the greater threat was the Azlanti. This is where her help may prove necessary. She just hoped she wouldn't ruin her dress. Losing one of them so early in the journey would be an irreparable loss. Unfortunately, when he enters a fight, that can happen.

She could see the great arcanic shield of the observatory. Even now she could feel the powerful energy pressed into brass and runes of alchemical silver. How much money was used to build a machine that turned out to be almost useless in general terms. She spotted three Azlanti soldiers. They were guarding the direct route to the research facility, probably acting as rear guards, making sure that no one could pass unnoticed their main force from the city side. She was late, but at least she had an idea of how to get rid of this minor problem. She closed her eyes and took a deep breath to become Lady Cala Grayskull for a moment.

Recall her character, way of moving and mannerisms. To become a well-mannered, but also a strong and self-confident woman from a wealthy family, whom everyone would gladly trust. It was so easy, at least if she only had to step into her skin for a short time.

She jumped and landed before the aeon guardsmen looked her way and leveled their weapons at her.

She jumped and landed in front of the Aeon Guardsmen, who looked her way and leveled their weapons at her.

"Please." she sobbed heavily, panting heavily, "Help me." he got down on one knee and lowered her head. Tears ran down her face. "Those Vesks, they're chasing me. Please save the human woman…" she burst into tears. The two soldiers stared into the distance for the enemies she was talking about, and the officer came over to help her up and wrap her cloak around her. He didn't even notice that the girl he wanted to help had a epee at his side. Even though she didn't need it. She hit him hard in the chest, shattering his sternum, and hurled it at one of the soldiers.

"For honor..." she cried, smiling wildly as she drew her sword. She jumped to the second soldier and pierced his heart.

"Of" she took out the blade in a fluid movement, while turning towards the last soldier, at whom she threw the officer. The guard tried to get up, but she stabbed him in the forehead with the blade. The blow was so strong that carurystal steel came out the other side.

"Graykull!" her scream carried over the yellowed grass. She took a deep breath and stretched her arms out to her sides. She closed her eyes, enjoying her strength.

"I've Power!"she cried, the wind blowing her hair.

Then the Azlant- officer she had forgotten about fired at her, hitting her in the face. She felt virtually no pain, just an unpleasant tug, then a tingling sensation as her tissue began to regenerate. Calamity looked at the man with pure hatred. She imagined his helmeted eyes widening in disbelief, slowly turning to horror.

"You didn't think you could ruin my dress, you fool! - she cried, kicking his gun. She plunged the blade into his elbow and stamped on his crushed chest.

"A wretched, filthy worm. I could have ended your miserable and meaningless life quickly, but you upset me, so die slowly, and let every second of your agony remind you what a mistake you made." hhe stabbed him again, this time in the other elbow. Then, venting her anger, she smiled with tattered lips and headed towards the observatory, heading towards the sounds of the fight.

Banishing the bodak was exhausting, but she felt almost no fatigue. There was a completely different feeling in her heart that she hadn't known since leaving Mystacor… It was hope. Even when I found Adora... Even then i felt a rather bitter satisfaction... A cold determination to make this child a weapon to redeem myself and take my revenge on those who stood in my way and forced me to become a monster. Now she could find something more. Redemption. She saw that the girl, that Not-Catra, looked at her with gratitude, gratitude without the fear of a servant towards a cruel master. The normally sad face of this girl almost smiled. She felt euphoria welling up in her… But there was no time for that. She needs to focus, nothing, absolutely nothing can distract her because she is needed right now. "This time I'll be the weapon. I will protect her and everyone else," she said, feeling a new strength enter her.

Hearing the gunshots, Eti grabbed her rifle, and Arkan-tar did the same, showing that he was more than a barked swashbuckler. They ran out into the corridor. Wrongdak and Lilka crouched down to the ground. The clone looked worried, and the girl looked as if she was ready to face the entire power of the Horde... or the Swarm... by herself.

"Who's attacking us?!" exclaimed Dilayla.

"I don't know, I saw a flash and told him to get down. Wrongdak said." it's such a reaction.

The mercenary nodded.

"Stay away from windows and onto the ground." she said. Bina and most of her crew complied. But Rechiza and Ireanis stood staring at the windows, so she grabbed them by their robes and dragged them downstairs. Eti has disappeared somewhere. She wanted to follow her, but then two robots, humanoids with one arm converted into weapons, and a soldier in green armor burst through the door. Arkan-tar and Bina opened fire with a rifle and a pistol, shredding the nearest robot, but the second aimed at the scientist, but Dilayla grabbed his armed arm and fired up, hitting the ceiling. Dilayla hit him with her armored arm, crushing his shoulder on the weapon side. Meanwhile, Lilka and Itel attacked the soldier. She had seen a similar one once on a poster or in holovision, but she wasn't sure who it was. The Solarian wanted to confuse him and take his attack on herself, when Lilka struck from the side with a flaming ax, chopping off his arm.

"Wrongdak, throw that robot out the door before he fucks up, then get his guns." cried the mercenary. The clone threw the robot headfirst, then took the weapon from the wounded soldier. He held them expertly as befits a born warrior, though his expression was troubled. "Genetic memory is strong, but it can also be painful, isn't it?" she thought. Arkan-tar stood at the door and fired several shots, followed by the explosion of the destroyed robot and the cries of the wounded. Alatar tied the wounded soldier to the other robot, and Dilayla crushed another arm and leg. Then the woman signaled Wrongdak to follow her. She stood in front of the window.

"Damn, damned fucking Azlanti"! growled the mercenary. Star empire? I would never expect them here… They are almost the worst that could happen to Etheria. The heart may have been destroyed… But the first left many other terrible secrets there. she thought. She didn't know much about the star empire, but it was something completely alien and frighteningly familiar to her.

"I saw four robots and ten Vesks. Several soldiers are hiding in the shadows. I hit one." Arkantar said. She nodded, wondering what to do. The strength and sense of power that filled her was the solution. She turned on the communicator and said.

"Give me cover, and they will know the horror of true darkness." she said to everyone.

"Melodramatism and pathos went out of fashion Grimmy." she heard Eti's voice through the communicator. She smiled.

She walked in it and forward like the Commander did when she was thinking about something difficult. She might not be as wise as Mind Brightener, but she knew very well how to deal with Wise Beings. Here she needed her skills to deal with a situation she had not yet found herself in. She was here. Lady Extinguisher of the Light. She remembered her well, though she didn't understand everything then. Now she knew that she wanted to broke down Mind Brightener and the Caretaker, but the Commander defeated her…then they stayed together for a while after the Caretaker took her to the enemy's stronghold. And finally she disappeared. It wasn't until some time later that the Designer said that S*he managed to escape it all into death. Now she is dead and can no longer be judged* She died, that is, she was Broke down, as happened to organic beings. Only organic beings could not be repaired so easily. She only found out about it recently when one of the Skittermanders broke down and nobody fixed it. When she asked through Friend if there was a way to fix it, she was told that it wouldn't be good. That His time is fulfilled Maybe a Mind Brightener or a Lightbringer could do that to make things right… But they were almost certainly not here. Who fixed her? How and why? She didn't understand, but she knew that Light Extinguisher was very dangerous. She said she wouldn't hurt her unless he forced her to. She didn't want to force her to do anything. She didn't want anything to do with her, she didn't even want to be on the same planet as her. She wanted to tell her Friend about it, he should come up with something... Only if he comes up with something and she breaks him down? She didn't want Friend to be broke down. Just what does she want? She said they would travel together and they were going back to the Creation Place, does that mean she's going back there too? Will Brighteye and the Commander be happy that she's been fixed? She was to them what Mind Brightener was to her, so they should be happy. However, the Designer didn't like her, so she wasn't sure, but on the other hand, the Designer and the Commander didn't like each other either. But will anyone recognize her? She looked different... Even though she wore a face mask back then, as did Mind Brightener when she was working on something potentially dangerous... Though once Light Extinguisher never took it off... Why? Was she dealing with dangerous things all the time? She's dangerous herself, so maybe that's why she wore a mask?

It would probably be best if he waited to tell everything until he was back at the Place of Creation. There she will tell Mind Brightener and Desinger everything. They will surely know what to do...

"I hate bots." a voice growled, and the entire vehicle shook. She looked up. It took her a while to figure out that this machine could talk like Darla. She wasn't sure if he was a Wise Being, though, because he'd repeated the same phrase forty-four times and she had no idea what effect he was expecting… She wasn't sure what was expected of her, actually. Light Extinguisher told her to watch him, but she wasn't sure if she could do anything, her weapon was taken away from her. All she could do was walk here and think. And she had something to think about besides the Light Extinguisher. They met the Second Commander. It was similar but not identical. Same model but different series. And her hand was replaced with a very interesting part. The friend was delighted to meet her here, but she felt she should undergo a system reboot and maybe even a reinstallation of cognitive support systems. Mind Brightener would definitely help her!

She heard voices from outside. Someone was approaching the vehicle... She started tapping on the walls, wanting to alert the machine, though she didn't know what he could do. She must have succeeded, because the vehicle said.

"Bina! I see that three fools in front of the hood and I'm sure they're laughing at me. Yes, armed... Can I really? BUHAHAHA." the vehicle laughed. Sometimes Mind Brightener laughed like that, too, but this time it sounded scary... She felt the vehicle move so violently that she was thrown to the rear. She heard them hit something...

First, she summoned darkness around the three of them, making them harder to hit.

"We're covering the Spellcasters." exclaimed the mercenary. She started firing, as did the scientist and the clone. She quickly rushed through the door without waiting for the other sorcerers. She wasn't sure about Rechiza's skills, but she had suspicions that the only thing the silver-haired sorceress could do was draw fire on herself. She went out into the night. The black, gloomy sky was lit only by those accursed stars. But here on earth the research facility was brightly lit, and darkness swirled around her. She saw Vesks trying to hide among the nearest buildings. and robots ready to attack. The Azlantis continued to hide, confident that they would be safe there… She reached in that direction and shadowy tentacles shot out in that direction. She felt them roam reaching for the Aeon Guards, finding their victims and wrapping themselves around them. Her body surged with strength as the dark power drained the life from those she took. „This is the power I paid so much for." she thought. One of the commanders clearly saw what a threat she was, because despite the darkness surrounding her, she felt one of the Vesks almost hit her. However, in the direction of the enemies, the missiles of her allies flew. She saw that the lizard's hand, which appeared to be the commander, shattered as an unseen shooter shot him. Dilayla, Bina, and Arkan-tar also hit a few attackers, while Wrongdak probably preferred to shoot at the machines. Someone gave the order, and the Vesks and the robots charged. Then Rechiza caused the ground beneath them to crack and collapse, a few lizards stumbled, others were engulfed in a fiery explosion called by the itel, but the robots seemed to ignore it.

And then Ireanis cast a spell. Lightning bolts shot out of the silver-haired woman's hand, something she knew so well, which hit the Azlantean machines. The discharges jumped from one to the other, knocking them to the ground. With all the robots destroyed, lightning strikes hit the Vesks, killing some and knocking the others down. Surprised, she looked at the elf, who was looking at them with a goofy smile. She held up her thumb, smoke pouring out of it. Then the sorcerer turned on her side. She dashed to it without breaking the spell to pick it up. But then she remembered something.
These robots are exploding...

The explosion knocked her to the ground as well.

The mystic zapped, the robots boom, and the Vesks didn't look good anymore. It was the only way Dilayla could comment on what had just happened. She thanked Iomadae for this change of fate and ran outside to pull the stunned and unconscious woman inside. Rechiza grabbed the gun and went inside.
"What a beautiful show our ladies put on!" Arkan-tar half-shouted, half-stated, aiming at the enemies through the half-open window.

"Dark magic. whispered Lashunti, looking at Miss Daisy.

Oh, realy?! thought the half-elf and said.

"Dark or not, was very useful."

"I agree, they are so funny writhing in agony, it needs to be recorded ... But we must hurry, because they will gather soon and then it will be bad." Eti interjected.

"I called the Crusher." Bina said. "We'll go out the back door and he'll be waiting for us."

Dilaya frowned.

"Isn't he a bit crazy?" asked the mercenary.

"It is, but in the way we need it." replied the Captain

"Move your butts, instead of insulting Crushey!"

Eti watched the spellcasting from above with her mouth open. She knew Ireanis could do interesting things sometimes, but Grimmy was amazing. Those screams and yells and all that darkness, it was something amazing… But the explosion was definitely an unpleasant experience. Her hearing was so muffled for a moment that she barely heard Sparkle Fingers coming. The girl stood next to her, cringing surprisingly professionally.

"I... I didn't know what to do, so I came to you to help you... Somehow." she said in sign language. She nodded and spoke to the half-elf mercenary. She motioned to Sparkle Fingers to follow her. She hoped they would end up in the same back door as the rest. Fortunately, they succeeded, and the whole group left through the wide door. Wormdak had finally made a good use of it, and was wearing a deliciously snoring Ireanis on his shoulder. This job clearly suited him. The Fist supported Grimmy, who looked around bewildered. She descended the vertical wall, and Sparkle Fingers jumped down.

"Was she hit hard?" she asked anxiously. Itel shot a suspicious glance at Sparkle Fingers. He fawns again.

"No, only the explosion incapacitated her, but she's getting better. Where are we leaving?" asked the Fist

"There's a back door nearby, but it's locked with a thick chain. I guess we'll have to blow them up." Eti said. Bina nodded, apparently now taking charge.

They continued in the direction indicated until they reached the back exit. As they walked, she heard Grimmy purr softly.

"She's coming... I can feel her"

But no one seemed to notice

The good news was that the gates were open. Bad was that they were guarded by five aeon guards who turned to open fire on them. She was already aiming at them to incapacitate, or perhaps kill, one of them, but then a tall, fair-haired girl ran between the men, pierced one of the soldiers with a long blade and knocked down another with a powerful kick. Then the Smarty neutralized one, and Lilka with Itel took care of the other two... The woman stood in front of them smiling. She was tall and quite pretty, with long hair and deep blue eyes. She bowed courteously to them, raising her sword high, dripping blood.

"Lady Cala Grayskul at your service."she said in a melodious voice. Grimmy got up on her own.

"Hello Cala, Good to see you." the mystic said quietly. At that moment, Eti caught a smell, strange and irritating, nauseating.

What smells so bad? she thought.

She sensed her ward's arrival before she saw her. Sometimes it happened when she drew too much power, which after all came from their common patron ... She was not prepared for such a quick meeting. No… She wasn't prepared for Cala with Eti meet so soon. Her ward has certainly realized what she sees, she has squeezed too much information out of her, about her former life. But for now, she didn't say anything or show any sign that she saw what the other girl looked like.

"And you are that aristocrat! I have to admit you wasn't what I expected." Bina said.

" I have the impression that our wonderful Lady Cala will surprise us more than once during this trip." Dilayla murmured.

Just so you know she thought with bitter satisfaction.

Lilka, Alatar and Itel looked at the aristocrat with disbelief, and Eti winced at the sight of her.

"I'm glad I made such a good impression on you." Lady Cala bowed again. "But we're in a hurry. We must leave this place before the enemy gets reinforcements…" her voice was drowned out by the roar of the engines. The vehicle, a small spaceship, flew over the research facility. It hovered above them, and several rounds were fired from the turret into further buildings.

"Damn Azlanti space shuttle. If it's their support, we're in the shit. "Dilayla said

The side door swung open, and a tall woman slid down on her outstretched wings, her purple cloak billowing in the breeze.

"Hello, I'm Captain Moonshadow…" The winged woman introduced herself.

She felt her legs buckle under her. All strength and self-confidence flew away.

Impossible. you're dead

Moonshadow

Chapter Notes

20march i will update that chapter to italics

A few hours earlier, Captain Moonshadow and her First Officer Tonado had entered the headquarters of the Drejs, the largest gang on Saltmarsh. A dozen heavily armed Veskas stood up simultaneously and drew their weapons. She summoned a Solarian flare and smiled at them.

"Relax, I'm not going to fight anyone here. I'm here to talk to you. We are all beings who value honor. Anyone who knows me knows that I don't break my word.” she said, canceling the flare and adding in her mind. Unless it's given to Azlanti worms

"But if any of you so much as think of drawing a weapon, I'll chop them up into tiny little pieces!" Tonado threatened, glaring at the gang members. They smiled at Skittermander's threats, thinking they could effortlessly squash him like a bug. But they were wrong, and very much so, for her first mate was much more dangerous than they appeared and could easily have sliced several of them to pieces. She approached Veska, who was covered in ritual tattoos and wearing ornaments made of precious metals worth a small fortune.

„Hello Agnew. You've informed me that Grag is in possession of the person I'm looking for” she said, after first exchanging traditional Veskarian greetings.

"I didn't know Captain Moonshadow was into the slave trade." Agnew said.

„If this is the individual I am looking for, I will do everything to get him in my hands.” she clenched her metal prosthesis.

"If you say so… Grag wasn't going to sell it to you anyway. He had two buyers far more important than you, Captain. No offence." Veska said seriously looking at the interlocutor.

„I understand ..." she said barely controlling her anger. She was only the commander of a single cruiser, not a pirate queen…at least not yet. But revenge first „However, I would like to know the identity of my rivals."

Tonado stood by her side and crossed all six arms. He eyed Agnew menacingly.

„I don't know the identity of one of them... But the other is some Azlantean aristocrat... Nyseria Drakes?" Veska said. Captain Moonshadow gasped as hatred pulsed through her veins. So anyway... It's going to be a race between us though... That's good... A few azlantis will know my grace she tightened her prosthesis again until her fingers dug into the wood, but her left hand trembled with cold energy.

„I understand ... So I have no chance to beat them?" she asked, drawing the words slowly.

"So it's not you..." Agnew said, and the rest of her subordinates visibly relaxed.

„So i am not who?…" said the purple-haired woman coolly. Behind her mask, it was impossible to read what feelings tormented her heart, but everyone present knew that it is better not to annoy her now, otherwise a storm of blades and cold flames will unleash.

„Someone attacked Grag, some strange kids, apparently. We were wondering if you hired them." Veska said. Captain Moonshadow frowned.

„I wouldn't hire kids to do my job." she snapped sharply. Tonado moved closer to her, but she signaled him to be calm. For now.

"Neither would I expect you to be in the slave trade, and yet you do…" the woman said.

Veska was right. She hated the slave trade. She had freed many from the shackles of Azlanti slavery, but if this was an Invader… He had enslaved countless numbers, perhaps herself. She had no reason to show him pity.

„This is a private matter between Me and this individual. Where does this Grag live? I need to talk to him.” she said in a hard voice, she was very close…she can't lose her chance now.

„He is still under our protection.” Agnew said coolly. She looked at her. Don't worry, but the gang leader knew the threat behind those purple eyes. She considered all eventualities and added.

„On the other hand, after a failed auction, he will probably leave us anyway. You'll find it out of town... but you'd better head to the junkyard. Supposedly, Grag sold a droid owned by this alien there. Maybe he'll want it back.” Veska said

She nodded her head. "Junkyard you say…" she asked thoughtfully. "I'm going there. Thank you for the news. I won't trouble you any more. I'm going to a place I won't be back from anytime soon.” she said getting up from the table.

„So it's true! You're flying the Zone to escape the Azlanti!” Agnew exclaimed triumphantly. The captain looked at her coldly.

„ I never run away, especially from the minions of the eternal throne. I'm going there to find what belongs to me ...” she said going to the door.

„So what?” asked the leader of the Drejs.
„Revenge... Nothing else awaits me there.”

She didn't like the desert. Despite the mask, the dry and hot air hurt her damaged lungs and irritated her eyes. Fortunately, she will not have to stay on this planet cursed by devils and demons. She doubted her crew would miss her… unless the stories told about this place turned out to be true. I remember so little. So much has been taken from me she thought with sadness, but then she hid her emotions. A pirate captain must not show weakness, he must be the personification of strength ... and terror. She looked at Shiren now, who clutched his maimed hand and trembled under her gaze. The two Damai glared at her defiantly, though they looked heavily battered. I think someone even broke his jaw. Vesk, who was still bandaged on a makeshift stretcher, was still seriously injured. He had a happy face painted on his bandage.

"I really don't know anything and I had no intention of selling sentient machines. It's all Grag's fault. He told me it was just a stupid toy. I swear by Hylax and Abadar. Please, don't lock me up in Long Death Cell. begged the insectoids.

„Do you know how i care about that junk? I'm interested in an individual of an unknown species... Tall and white-skinned, with bat ears. His eyes should be red and his hair blue…" she said slowly, and the insectoids nodded vigorously.

"He was, though his hair was rather motley and his eyes were pink… The bastard destroyed my sentinel robot, do you know how much I paid for it?! If you catch him, make him remember." He tried to gesticulate, but he waved his arm too hard and he screeched in pain.

If it's him, he'll wish he'd been born she thought with a faster heartbeat.

„Do you know where he went?" she asked, trying to keep her voice under control.

"Well, he and those kids took that droid… actually, he followed them himself. And then they came back and brought he here as if nothing had happened. They just left and waited for me to take care of him?! You understand, Captain, they came, beat, robbed, and now they order me to heal! It ridicculou!” He gasped loudly.

"And you just said you wouldn't sell that droid if you knew it was self-aware." she shook her head. "You're doing something here, and I don't like cheaters as much as slave traders." She spoke very slowly without taking her eyes off Shiren. She wanted him to think carefully about his actions and the chosen way of life. She was a captive of the Azlanti, which is their de facto slave. She would never forget the hurt Star Empire had done to her. Whenever she could, she tried to free the slaves, despite the objections of some crew members. She looked at Tonado, who stood with all six sabers drawn, threatening all their enemies with violent death. I set you free too, my brave little officer! she thought tenderly and asked Vesk

„So you met them?”

The lizard groaned, but then spoke.

„Yes, but by chance. We were following a certain mercenary and her girlfriend, and then she started shooting at this guy, and we wanted to take the opportunity, but I guess the youngsters preferred to get rid of us first. Then they apologized and it turned out that the kids were looking for the observatory, and it turned out that I used to work there before everything went to hell, so I told them where to go in exchange for medical care and being taken to a safe place. As you can see, they fulfilled their bargain. He looked at her significantly. She ordered Tonado to give him the med-patch and asked where the observatory was. After receiving the answer, she was about to leave, but suddenly something occurred to her mind.

„ Actually, who hired you??” she asked carefully.

- A certain Azzzz…. He bit his tongue as he realized what he had said, but it was too late. She raised her hand and summoned a flare.

„Mercy… - said the wounded.

„But I'm merciless.” she said, and hurled the projectile at Vesk. Damai and Shiren jumped away from her as if they were going to be her next victim.

„Call my crew, there will be an unannounced battle. We'll collect some Azlantean heads.” she said firmly.

She was paralyzed with wonder… and horror. She had seen her, the woman who had died…who had sacrificed herself for them all. Including for her… even for her, though she'd never learned the whole truth about what she'd done to her. But she was standing in front of her. Queen Angela has risen from the dead. Has she come here to judge her? To finally get justice for all she's done?

"It's... nice to meet you and thank you for shooting those guys, but can we go now?" As you can see, Captain, we don't have a very good relationship with the Azlanti, just look at my crew and companions.” Bina said, smiling nervously and pointing at them. Lady Cala stood beside her, and asked.

„Who is this woman? You look like you've seen a ghost?” There is mild curiosity in her voice.

„Queen Wingling? It's funny…although I can see you've had an interesting day even without it.” said the aristocrat, looking ostentatiously at the worried Wrongdak and Eti, who was wrinkling her nose with disgust.

Captain… Moonshadow looked at the woman with a bit of amusement. She wore a blue… glass diamond mask that covered the lower half of her face. She also lost her right arm, and her body was covered with Solarian symbols, but she retained her former majesty, which allowed her to lead the kingdom even after so many tragedies. But this world, this immeasurable galaxy had also left its mark on her.

"I just want to talk to one of you… just for a moment." she said. Three passengers jumped off the ferry on ropes. Skittermander with blue fur, half-elf-half-drow and a huge Veska with one eye wielding a hammer of appropriate size. Arkan-tar winced at the sight of them. High above them, she saw the dark shape of a warship towering over the research facility.

She sighed but smiled to herself. Perhaps this would be a better solution... But she remembered her deal with Nyarlathotep and realized what a difficult choice she was facing. She looked at Lady Cala and asked her silently. The noblewoman nodded uncertainly, glancing at the ship. Adora could handle it, or at least try, she thought, but Angela's eyes didn't rest on her. And then she realized who she must be looking for here... She looked at the Wrongdak, who was a bit scared, but apparently completely unaware of the danger he was facing.

The captain walked over to the clone and spoke to him in a dangerously sweet voice.

"Look into my eyes..." she commanded and the stranger obeyed. The others guessed that the woman was interested in the species of their companion, but they did not even vaguely realize what they had in common... This will be your last crime, Hordak she thought bitterly.

- What's your name, my dear?” she asked, taking the clone with her mechanical hand under her chin.

"I'm Wrongdak, actually Wrong Hordak… are you going to harm my friends or mine, Captain?" There was fear and guilt in his voice this time.

„Wrong Hordak?” asked the winged pirate, confused, but the stranger smiled in response and said.

"That's what my friend called me when she mistook me for my brother... We all look the same because we are... we were clones of Horde Prime... but he has already been destroyed and we are all free." His voice was full of conviction and joy, as if the mere mention of the fact that he was already subservient to his elder made him happy, even in the face of such a threat. I envy him! she realized with amazement. On Angela's face, or at least the part she saw, there was surprise, consternation, and… disappointment.

„I understand ... at least partially. Go away, you are indeed free. she said, and looked at the others as if only now noticing them. "You're a strange band. Truly extraordinary. Where and for what purpose are you going ...” she asked and looked at the massive shield of the observatory. “It's an impressive building. It was created to observe a place in the galaxy that even Besmara herself would fear. If such an unusual company gathers on such a sloppy planet, there is only one reason.” She leaned over and looked up at the starry sky. "There's a certain place there..." Her voice was dreamy at the moment and full of poetic delight. “Full of wonders and ancient mysteries. They call it Etheria, and that's where I'm going…” she paused and added in a much harder voice. „To gain riches we have never dreamed of... „ she looked at her companions. She noticed that Arkan-tar was examining the tips of his boots very carefully, and Veska and the elven-drow half-breed were looking at him as if they wanted to do something very painful to him. "Unfortunately, for all their undoubted advantages, my crew lacks the knowledge necessary to meet the challenges we face, besides ... Well, we may need people with a little more diplomatic skills. She looked at Lady Cala, who smiled kindly at her. "You're an aristocrat from a rich family… They said at the port that one of these arrived at the port today." I understand it's you. You can be of use to us. - she said. You are a woman who by sheer force of will united the entire planet against a common enemy, and you ask for help from the most inhuman creature you have ever met in your life she wanted to scream.

„And I can make broth there, if anything.” Eti unexpectedly broke into the conversation and pulled out a very tired carcass of some bird from the bag. And now she realized that Angela was now facing quasi Catra. Have they ever met? Catra kidnapped Glimmer and I actually tortured her, this girl doesn't know what she's risking. She thought in horror. Zraz will lose his chance, his chance at redemption. He has to do something. Ignoring the warning look of her ward, she stepped forward.

"I am a sorceress of great power and a person of many other talents." she said, fully aware that this was how she signed her own sentence. The captain couldn't recognize her face, but she certainly remembered her voice. But she didn't care what happened to her. Captain Moonshadow… Angela looked at her in surprise.

„That's interesting... We could use a talented mystic... What are your other talents?" she asked, looking at her with a raised eyebrow.

Torturing children, condemning royal consorts to a fate worse than death, manipulating queens to do may will. she wanted to scream in her face.

„I know about management... Or gardening." she said instead in a quiet, shy voice, not understanding what was going on. According to their agreement with Nyarlathotep, she forbade her from revealing her identity directly to the people of Etheria, but it wasn't her fault if they accidentally recognized her. Moonshadow laughed.

„I'm a gardener too. On Jadehell, I learned a lot more about the vegetation there than I would have liked. Have you heard of my gardens of the long death? Oh, maybe you'll see them… though not as their guest… unless you betray me…" The captain said and laughed. She realized she had never heard Queen Angela laugh. They knew each other for a short time, but there was so much venom and anger in that laugh...

„I also know about similar matters." she said bitterly and chuckled. „Exceedingly good." she said. She saw that Rechiza and Arkan-tar exchanged knowing glances. Meanwhile, two more pirates came out of the ferry. All but Skittermander began looting the dead Azlanti. Two turned out to be alive, so they tied them up.

„Back to the broth issue.” Eti interjected. „I can cook ... - She did not finish, because the green-haired Elf interrupted her.

„My friend has a rather strange sense of humor and she was a little stressed today.” she tried to pull Eti away from the captain.

„I have no sense of humor ... not in the least, and I stress others. Would you please not mislead the Captain. As for the broth…” the cat girl replied, but Bina interrupted her „Give me a break with this broth!” There was a pleading note in her voice.

„Both tradition and science confirm that chicken soup is great for colds because...”

This time it was the dragonkin who intervened.

„Eti, this bird is in such a state that it will crawl out of the pot on its own.

„What? You want to poison the Captain!” Skittermander threatened

Moonshadow laughed, much warmer this time, and signaled her furry subordinate to calm down.

„You remind me of someone... Someone from my past.” She heard sadness in her voice.

Your daughter... and her friends. Remember… she said in her mind.

They heard a roar, and an armored personnel carrier belonging to Bina and her charges drove in. There were traces of blood on the hood.

"Calm down, guys, it's all right." No need to fight. Bina reassured him as the pirates aimed their weapons at the vehicle.

„There were some weird ones with guns and they're gone now, but the droid still works.” she heard sadness in the hoarse voice of the machine.

„Unfortunately, victory is never absolute and you will always believe that you can do more.” Eti said in the tone of a lecturer.

You are right, girl she thought bitterly. Then Lady Cala walked past her. She approached Captain Moonshadow, ignoring Skittermander's protests. In one graceful movement, she drew her epee, and before anyone could react, she knelt down and called out.

"If you truly swear to protect us, if you protect my comrades... Then I swear by the ancient Motto of our lineage that I will assist in your mission, whatever it may be." She touched Angela's feet with the blade...

You don't want to ... do it, let it be what must be.

"I swear for honor of Grayskull that I will fulfill our half of the bargain!" she shouted. Dilayla snorted contemptuously, Itel and Eti giggled… Bina rolled her eyes. Only Wrongdak looked at her with pure admiration. Poor fool, you are looking at a being more vile and inhuman than your Big Brother, only kept on a short leash by a far greater power Her own blood was roaring in her ears. She knew that Angela would recognize this call, which after all changed the fate of all Etheri. Across the galaxy. He must remember that...

Captain Moonshadow snorted and laughed briefly.

„The ancestors were pirates, necromancers or just drank from the skulls of slain enemies?” Angela asked.

Lady Cala stood up and said with a cheerful, warm and absolutely false smile.

„The founder of our family was Mara, and apparently that was her motto. It's a long story and we'll talk about it another time. Now the evening flight of flies is approaching and we'd better hide in the vehicles.

She watched the whole scene in disbelief. She did not understand why Angela did not recognize the call that Adora had shouted in front of her. She didn't know the truth about what the First Ones had done to Etheria and what the sword really was, but the name Grayskull should have moved her, and she had only made a few derisive remarks. Lady Cala turned to her, and for a moment that beautiful, flawless face spread such a sadistically triumphant smile that she feel nauseated However, Captain Moonshadow did not see this. She nodded and said „Excellent. We're leaving tomorrow night, so I hope you're ready. In space, we will discuss the flight path in more detail ... Now we really don't have time.

Arkan-tar approached Lady Cala as she passed by.

„I think the decision to work with someone like that ...” he wanted to say, but her ward gently but firmly pushed him away and stood next to her

"I have a feeling we're about to have an interesting family reunion." Cala said softly, cheerfully

Rosie blinked twice at Lady Cala's smile at Miss Daisy. He was… Inappropriate, as if they were sharing some terrible secret together now. She didn't know the two women well, but they seemed quite nice. Lady Cala was a strong, beautiful, and intelligent aristocrat, something a girl like Rosie always wanted to be, though she knew she couldn't. Miss Daisy was a wise and powerful, if somewhat dark, sorceress. She didn't understand what it was all about. And she had the impression that Miss Daisy knew Captain Moonshadow. Maybe she just imagined it? She had better eyesight than most and usually saw what others couldn't. Only sometimes she was a bit… inexperienced. She didn't understand the nuances and complications of the complexity of social relationships, so maybe that was the case this time too? But she met a real space pirate, and she was as scary as the stories said. She really shouldn't be happy about this, but she felt so excited.

She and the rest got into this funny transporter. Inside, Emily was waiting for them, and she approached Wrongdak and complained to him in her own language. She stood in the center of the room, unsure of whom she should sit with, but then Eti waved to her and showed that there was room between her and the itel. At first she was hesitant, because she got the impression that the elf didn't like her, but the elf nodded as if a bit thoughtful, so she sat down with the whole pack. Opposite them sat Miss Daisy and Lady Cala. Next to Eti, she saw Lilka, who was sitting hunched over, and Alatar was in the last place, slightly squeezed. She looked away so that no one would think she was staring at the red-haired girl, but it seemed so strange to her that the previously fearless warrior now seemed terrified. Eti must have noticed, because she turned to Rosie.

-„Lilka is afraid of insects... and now clouds of flies are about to come.” Eti explained. She seemed dejected, as if the sudden rush of adrenaline drained her strength.

- Does it have to do with Swarm? Your planet was attacked by Swarm?, right?” she asked, hoping she wouldn't come off as nosy. "They're from Kesler, and the Swarm didn't attack it, just devoured it, but you're roughly right." said the feline in such a way that she gave the impression that she was talking about the weather. Rosie's eyes widened and she looked at Itel.

"I'm sorry... I didn't know..." she said feeling guilty.
"Are you part of the Swarm or related to it in any way?" Itel asked with a sour smile. Rosie shook her head, and the elf laughed, though there was no mirth in her eyes, then added.

„When our planet was being destroyed, we fled to Atrax. The Shadows of Tarak helped us... If not for them... We found Eti on Atrax. Bina looked after us when we left for Akiton. And now here we are… Itel said, staring thoughtfully into space.

„But why are you here? I don't mean to be nosy, but the Zone is not a place anyone would want to fly because it's... scary.

Itel wanted to say something, most likely to keep Rosie out of her business, but Eti interjected.

„For a whatsit… A friend of a friend is looking for a whatsit to be able to heal himself. This will give Itel a lot of whatsits. Only this whole Etheria is a planet full of whatsits, so it takes someone smart to tell one whatsit from another. But it all comes down to the whatsits."

It all comes down to whatsits, she repeated the words of the girl so similar to Catra in her mind and giggled to herself. Yes, this is the most accurate summary of all these decades of warfare. It was all about the whatsits. Whatsits built by Hordak. Whatsit. which Adora found in the forest. A Whatsit built by Entrapta that nearly erased us from reality. The Whatsit into which our entire planet has been turned against our will. We fought, we killed and... we gave our lives for whatsits we didn't even understand. After all, we are all just whatsits in the hands of beings older and more powerful than us she thought and looked at her ward, who was watching her new companions with lazy interest. "Even you my dear...Even you," she smiled sourly to herself. The noise slowly grew stronger. The transporter slowed down because visibility was probably poor. The red-haired girl cringed. Eti looked at her as if she thought for a moment what she should do, then hugged her, as if only now realizing that sentient beings do this. Who are you. Who made you like this. Have you met another me in your life?

she thought as she looked at her. Lady Cala got up and walked over to the group of friends and Rosie, who apparently decided to befriend them.

„Hello. As you remember, I am Lady Cala Grayskull. I am very happy that I will be traveling in the company of such a competent and well-coordinated team.” she said smiling cheerfully and radiantly. As always. Itel smiled proudly, but also with great self-confidence, Dragonkin lowered his eyes, embarrassed, the red-haired girl... Lilka paid no attention to it, but Eti... suddenly got up and started sniffing the aristocrat. Then she pushed it violently.

„I was wondering what it smelled like! It's you! I do not like you! From now on you will be called Reeka!” she called so loudly that all the passengers in the vehicle heard her. Lady Cale looked at her sadly.

„It's not nice to make fun of someone's disability. My body emits an unpleasant odor. I take medication to reduce it, though I can see it's not effective on people with a keen sense of smell like you.”

Rosie, Itel and Bina looked at Eti disapprovingly, but the girl paid no attention. She crossed her arms over her chest and scowled at Lady Cala.

After a while, the aristocrat returned to her. The noise was strong enough that most passengers wouldn't hear it anyway, and they put their headphones in their ears.

„You'll have to increase the doses when we get to Etheria. If Eti sensed you, Catra probably sensed you, too, and that could ruin all our plans. Do you remember our agreement?” Sharply asked.

„Oh, I remember your deal very well. I understand that this rude one-armed wench also includes.”

She didn't bother to answer her ward, just nodded and asked.

"When you swore before Captain Moonshadow... What would you do if she recognized the call?"

Lady Cala shrugged.

„Same as when she recognized you. Well… Glimmer was used to being a half-orphan.” She smiled cheerfully at her.

I forgot that I am neither the only nor even the greatest monster on this planet

In the pale starlight

They stopped in front of the hotel, arousing noticeable terror of the security guards. The flies had passed and the sky was clear. The air was cold, filled with the smell of salt and baked food. At this hour, after passing by of flies, the city was coming back to life again, this time more mysterious and vicious… Dilayla squeezed outside, dragging Rosie with her, who said goodbye to their new friends. The prettiest of the beauties came out with her "babysitter", who now seemed to have aged at least ten years, stood behind them. Cala was so radiant that she was about to glow, and Miss Daisy seemed to be in an even grimmer mood. Well, given her experience in life, she sympathized much more with genuinely gloomy people than with falsely cheerful ones. Arkan-tar and Rechiza stood beside her, clearly waiting for an opportunity to discuss the events of the long day. Wrongdak seemed very tired and a bit confused, but he seemed happy.

It's a really naive and good-natured creature. And it went to people like us. Rosie glanced over, yawning very tired after such an intense day. You too are a kind-hearted creature who found herself in a place where she shouldn't be, among people who have done some nasty things in their lives she thought and glanced at the dark sorceress. Or Much More Than A Few „Well, today we will prepare everything for you, and you will sleep and pack, do shopping or go to the spa, because after that we will spend the next few months in space away from anything, so there will be no opportunity for such things.” Bina declared and climbed into her insane transporter.

"Well, we need to notify Dr. Quin, pack up again that day, and hit the road tomorrow." Arkan-tar said and stretched. Rosie let out that weird moan of hers.

„Do we really have to take her with us? She is rude and treat me like mule!” asked the deaf girl.

"We have orders to take her, and she's a seasoned scientist." Arkan-tar said spreading his hands in a gesture of helplessness. Dilayla patted Rosie on the back.

"Don't worry, I'll protect you from that mean rat."

The girl nodded and together they entered the apartment. Dr. Quin, who had been watching a soap opera from fifty years ago, turned to them.

„Where have you been! I'm sitting here by myself, taking care of our equipment, watching over everything, and what? You're taking my only intern!" she said loudly and ran over to Rosie. "And you get to work!" I'm not paying you to wander around town and slack off!"

„You don't pay me at all! The government does it, and I haven't seen the money anyway, I probably won't!" The gloves were very loud now. Dilayla put her hand on the shoulder of the girl who was red with anger.

„Take it easy, young one, if this rat is going to fire you, I can afford to hire you to take care of my equipment. I'm guessing Arkan-tar, Rechiza and Miss Daisy will also contribute in return for your help?" she didn't want to suggest Lady Cala, because otherwise the girl would really end up as the aristocratic equivalent of a sleeping bag friend. Hearing her words, Arkan-tar adjusted his glasses coughing, Rechiza nodded, and Miss Daisy looked at her as if aroused from her thoughts.

"Yes, I will gladly support Rosie. She is a gifted and talented girl and I will definitely find a more suitable activity for her than carrying equipment that we will probably have no use for…. said the grim elf. Dilayla raised an eyebrow. She knew that the sorceress had a soft spot for the deaf girl, although unlike the hotheaded elf, she didn't think that she liked younger girls... though her reaction to the strange Pahtra was puzzling, it could have been sorcerers' quirk, they have a weakness for cats. Qin narrowed her only organic, and the metal gleamed ominously, and Miss Daisy smiled at her and snapped her fingers several times. Ysoka turned and then saw Wrongdak, who was reaching for caked hard candies. His strange droid was standing next to him.

"Hello, I'm Wrongdak, actually..." He didn't finish as Dr. Qin smiled at him and slapped his knee.

" I'm Dr. Qin... You're a very interesting creature... I've never seen anything like this! What are you?" she watched him as a fascinating phenomenon.

„This is not creature! This is a person!” Rosie screamed in anger, but the scientist ignored her.

“I am a clone, a clone of Horde Prime from the Galactic Horde. But now I'm free…" Wrongdak said patiently. Dilayla had the impression that she felt calm in the company of the scientist. It was probably the first slightly disturbing thing he'd done. However, he said that his friend was a very smart woman ... Maybe she was also a scientist?

Dr. Qin waved her hand as if she considered what he was saying to be completely unimportant…

„ Yes, yes, it's very interesting. But I'm asking about the species! About what you are!” She tugged at his knees, excited but also annoyed. Wrongdak looked at her surprised and said slowly.

"We were never told that... we were just his brothers... little brothers... but he treated us like things... our only value was that we were his clones, poor copies of him." He sat down sadly. The droid came up to him and started rubbing against him. But Ysoka screamed loudly.

"Oh... Paldus Vagus, that's what your species will be called... I'll be famous for discovering and describing the first specimen of the White Demon, and this is only the beginning of the journey. she rubbed her hands. Dilayla thought it would be funny if the Order of the Eclipse would admit who attacked her planet and reveal what it knew about the Wrongdak species, the doctor might break down. She would love to be there. Wongdak sank into the armchair exhausted, and Rosie yawned and rubbed her eyes. Dilayla felt tired too. It had been a long day and full of unusual, unexpected events. Two of them have shaken her enough that she has to rethink who she should be loyal to and who a true friend is, and who's the enemy...

"Why don't we go up to the roof and discuss today's events? Meanwhile, Miss Rosie and Mr. Wrongdak will freshen up.” Lady Cala said suddenly. Everyone nodded their heads in agreement.

„Keep an eye on him from Qin, because she will dissect him when he go sleep.” She patted the deaf girl on the shoulder. Rosie saluted and giggled, which also sounded a bit odd. Then they went to the roof of the hotel, escorted by the disapproving looks of the staff. A cold wind blew overhead, and the pale stars shone coldly above their heads. When she was sure they were alone, she placed an armored hand on Arkan-tar's shoulder, squeezing it meaningfully.

„I have only one question for you. Who the hell is Dr. Sidonius and what is his connection to my sister! And don't you son of a bitch try to lie to me or I'll rip your hands off.” she growled. Arkan-tar looked at the others, but they also wanted to know the answer to this question, so they were not going to intervene in his defense.

„Your sister?” he asked, obviously confused. At least in this regard, he seemed to have nothing to hide.

"The woman who spoke on the recording at the observatory. She was seriously… very seriously injured when Wrongdak’s Big Brother attacked my home planet and much of her body had to be replaced with cybernetic implants. I left her with the Order of the Eclipse but… she ended up aboard that damn Galleon, I don't know how.” she explained. She felt ashamed of actually abandoning her sister, but it made her feel even angrier.

The scientist swallowed and began to talk.

"He's a very old vampire…" she clenched her fist tighter, so he added. „But really very old, remembering the times of the Lost Golarion. He… I know he's been researching what happened during the Gap… quite obsessively, if you ask me. He's been dead for a very long time and is fascinated by the First Ones. Supposedly, he thinks they have to do with the break and memory loss for all of us. He is said to be one of the few people who know the language of this ancient race.„ Verthani explained.

„Really? I've only heard of one person who could speak the language of the First ones and it wasn't a damed hiding in shadows parasite.” Miss Daisy said contemptuously and giggled. There was something really wrong with this woman...

„It's a fact ... he's not the only one anyway.” Rechiza tapped one of her metal eyes „He made my eyes ... after my accident. „ she shuddered and added. “I could read the writing on that feline girl's hand.

"Eti's hand is a First Ones artifact?" exclaimed Miss Daisy, genuinely surprised. At the mention of the girl's name, Lady Cala winced. "Oh someone's jealous of mommy's attention!" thought Dilayla, smiling maliciously.

„Yes, the writing said "Here is the Punishing Hand which has been created to..." and here the signs ends. I have no idea where she got such an artifact, but it probably doesn't matter. We are far from Abbalon and are unlikely to encounter any ruins of this ancient race. Lashunti” said with a shrug.

"Oh, it's not that simple…" Lady Cala interjected. Everyone looked at her.

Rechiza turned to Lady Caly. The beautiful aristocrat had been silent at the beginning of the discussion, but now she clearly had something very important, perhaps shocking, to announce.

“Mara, the woman I mentioned, was one of the First Ones.”

That was shocking thought the witchwarper. There was silence, only a cold wind howling between the buildings. It was news she wasn't prepared for. Their companion is a descendant of an extremely mysterious and ancient race, those who left behind abandoned cities on Abbalon ... and monsters, like the one that made her lose her antennae and eyes. She looked at Miss Daisy. "Is that why you found this girl? Because of her origin? Like a parasite, you clung to a young woman to gain access to dark secrets… Dilayla broke the silence.

„Or maybe you still have an angel in your lineage or maybe some god right away? It is an enduring fashion among aristocrats.” The blue-haired mercenary smiled. Rechiza had no idea why this woman was so mean, but her remark was not only insulting, but completely inappropriate.

"I'm sorry, but as I understand it, this Mara, even if she really was one of the First Ones., after all these countless centuries, the blood is absolutely diluted, unless you practice inbreeding, as is sometimes said of the Azlanti." He smiled with a bit of superiority.

"I never claimed that my blood made me better than others in any way, though some genes might have survived. But think about the implications of this fact...” said the noblewoman looking seriously at the three of them, while Miss Daisy stood thoughtful.

Rechiza was the first to understand.

„Etheria was the planet of the First Ones.” she said. Arkan-tar whistled in appreciation, but Dilayla yawned. Lady Cala nodded and said.

“It was their colony, or rather a research center. It is full of precious and ancient artifacts, sometimes extremely valuable or powerful.”

"And we're going there with one of the craziest pirates in the galaxy..." Arkan-tar said. Miss Daisy gave him a murderous look. Her earlier reaction to Captain Moonshadow was surprising, could the disfigured sorceress also once be a pirate? That would explain a lot.

„Yes, but there will be enough treasures and artifacts for everyone ... anyway, we only want to deactivate or annihilate the weapons that threatened the galaxy. Of course, we have to be careful not to let it fall into the hands of Captain Moonshadow, but we shouldn't have a problem with that, because we have the support of the Lord Admiral's armada. However, the biggest reward will be something completely different. On Etheria, we may find a way to the home world of the First Ones, Eternia.

It sounded even beter. If they managed to find their way to the home world of one of the most powerful races in known galactic history… Even if the First Ones died out, the potential was mind-blowing. Arkan-tar folded his fingers into a pyramid and smiled with greedy bliss.

"I guess that explains why the doctor is so interested in this place, but we still don't know what connection he has with Captain Blazebringer. These kids seem to know both, judging by their reaction to the broadcast.” said Verthani, staring at the stars.

"I'm incredibly interested in extinct ancient species, it's normally my fucking hobby... But now will someone tell me who Captain Blazebringer is? Anyone know his identity?” asked the mercenary. Arkan'tar rubbed his jaw thoughtfully.

„Nobody knows anything for sure about him. Even his original species is unknown, only that he has undergone significant cybernetic modifications and is currently hardly considered a biological being. He lives quite a long time and has traveled all known worlds, and he was also supposedly in the farthest corners of the galaxy. He has the opinion of a pridefull, ruthless and calculating person. Supposedly, although we already know it's true, he came into possession of the "Dreams of Eternity" Void Galleon, which is a mystery in itself.” said Verthani with commitment. This one likes to listen to his own voice, thought Rechiza.

"Void Galleon? And what the hell is that. I've never heard of such ships. Does my sister really have access to such an arsenal.” asked the mercenary, radiating distrust.

„There is nothing strange about your lack of knowledge. These are the ships that were built during the Gap. At the same time, their construction began in different places in the galaxy, but all the ships were identical. At least at first. They had a strange silent AI and the ability to assimilate the technology they encountered. However, a drift drive was never installed on them. A hundred years after the end of the Gap, they've all been destroyed... Except for the last one. "Dreams of Eternity" is a legend in itself, not to mention its captain. As for the weapons... Captain Blazebringer is said to have come into possession of some ancient arsenal, but I don't know how true that is.” he threw up his arms. The mercenary wasn't happy with his answers, but apparently she had to make do with them, because she wouldn't get any others.

„The matter of vampires and mysterious ships is settled. Lady Cala took over the discussion. "Do we need to talk about our new captain?"

„What about her? She has a somewhat uncouth and very young but surprisingly knowledgeable crew. I can't say too much bad about her, have you noticed anything disturbing about her? You know her less than we do, but we know her only half a day.” Lashunti said. Suddenly, Arkan-tar spoke up.

"She's fine, except she looks like Lady Ka, the Lord Admiral's Left Hand, as she likes to call herself."

„Are they very similar?” Rechiza asked surprised. Bina was the last woman she would suspect of being connected to someone like the Lord Admiral.

„They're identical. Almost, because they lead a decidedly different lifestyle.” Arkan-tar said Miss Daisy looked at him surprised.

"Twin sisters or clones?" Rechiza asked the scholar.

"I don't know, but I think it's best if they don't find out about each other." Verthani said.

"Back to the clone issue..." Dilayla interjected. “Our new companiom Wrongdak is one of them, which I can confirm both from my own memories and from what I learned from the knights of the order. More importantly, his master, Horde Prime, The creator of the ravaged zone and its undivided ruler has been destroyed.

It shocked her too. The Order could barely manage with a small scouting force, thanks to the summons of their infernal allies. The one who was able to defeat him...

„Well, not only will we not encounter The swarm, but the white demons will not be a threat to us either. This trip is starting to look more and more like a summer walk.” Arkan-tar said, smiling with relief.

„It won't be that easy.” Dilayla said and showed them a strange coin and told them about her meeting with a Shiren miner. To her, it looked pretty ordinary, though the words "United we will cast out shadows" sounded defiant, but it wasn't unusual. Miss Daisy and Lady Cala examined the coin carefully. She had the impression that the dark sorceress smiled crookedly at the sight of the coin and sighed as if with resignation. That was interesting too. Arkan-tar looked at the coin and laughed briefly.

"It's quite funny ... Did you know that I saw such a sign? On the other side of the galaxy, on the planet Ashenzee, but life there was destroyed thousands of years ago."

This time they all looked at him with a silent question. The scholar shrugged with feigned modesty.

"I took part in an archaeological expedition. We studied the remains of a long-extinct civilization there. They were small bat-like creatures. They had rudimentary wings that disappeared in the process of evolution. They were descendants of night creatures, and in their culture this sun was the personification of evil and hatred... They were to lose their wings as a result of a contract with this "Demon", in exchange for protection against his hateful rays. They developed normally, until a group decided to reject traditional beliefs and flew into space, although it was forbidden. Soon after, there was a regression of civilization among those who remained on Ashenzee. After several hundred years, their rebellious brothers returned, but they were changed. Taller and fitter, but above all, winged. They overthrew old beliefs and subjugated their less developed relatives. They were worshiped like gods, and this symbol, the bat's wings, became their symbol. They called themselves Sun Slayer. said Verthani with the skill of a professor.

"And what happened to those 'Sun Slayers'?" asked Miss Daisy.

„What always happens to the proud and the arrogant. They fell and only ashes remained." Arkan-tar said smiling ironically.

You've been ran from justicee Horde Prime for a long time, but it's caught up with you anyway. Now I know your great secret, or at least part of it... Though Sun Slayers was a much more... poetic name, you should admit it yourself, she thought as she looked at the coin. She also ordered the money to be minted, for many reasons, though Hordak never quite understood why she did it. But I wasn't cheating on the bullion. The loss of reputation wasn't worth the small savings. she thought. But this coin showed that something of Prime's empire had survived. It didn't surprise her, the spies of Creeping Chaos had heard rumors that the situation in the Ravaged Zone was complicated, but still she felt... disappointed. She hoped that after so many years of war, the people of Etheria would find peace. At least until you return, my dear Shadow Weaver.

„It's fascinating. I feel surrounded by extinct civilizations. You may have some more up your sleeve. the halfelf asked in an annoyed tone. S*he pretends to be a simple bully, but this woman is very smart. She is better aware of what is going on around them than an educated archaeologist and witchwarper. She doesn't trust* Lady Caly, which in itself is a sign of great shrewdness, since all of Carurystal has fallen for this masquerade."

I think two will be enough for us. However, we must determine what we are telling the Lord Admiral. Arkan-tar said, massaging his temple. He smiled slyly.

„We must surely inform him that neither the Swarm nor the whole Horde are waiting for him there, at least not in full force.” Rechiza said, looking hard at the others.

"It's rather unavoidable, because and yet his fleet may be needed." Lady Cala said thoughtfully. Only to whom and for what? Are you already planning something? she thought, watching as her ward effortlessly takes control of their small group.

"But I see no reason to tell him what Etheria was, at least for now." He'd be sick of the job of bringing order to the ruins of an empire anyway. We'll tell him everything, in the right way, when we need his fleet's help. continued the aristocrat. Everyone nodded, agreeing to her proposal, though the mercenary didn't look convinced.

"And what shall we tell him about our new captain and her crew?" Rechiza asked.

That's the problem... This woman looks identical to one of the Lord Admiral's subordinates, and somehow I doubt they're twins. And with her is a girl so similar to Catra. It's not a coincidence.

'I don't see the slightest reason to bother the Lord Admiral with this. Likewise, we don't tell our new associates anything, including Wrongdak. Ignorance is bliss, at least sometimes. I need time to discover the truth. And I have so little of it.

It seemed to her that everyone agreed with what she said, although Dilayla smiled mysteriously. “I have to keep an eye on this woman, she might get in our way.

„Is that all?" Arkan-tar asked. „We hold our tongues until the situation is fully clarified.” he was about to go to their room to rest like the rest, but she decided to ask him one more question.

„Captain Moonshadow... Who is she?” She stared hard at the scholar, wanting to make sure he wasn't fooling her. Verthani thought, as if trying to remember what he knew about the woman.

"It's not my favorite subject of study, but I know quite a bit about pirates. Captain Moonshadow is one of the most dangerous. She was first heard of when she launched a rebellion on the Azlanti prison planet of Jadehell. It's a scary place full of poisonous plants. They poison the air there, but not enough to kill you right away. He does it slowly, day by day. It damages the lungs and eyes. And the Azlanti don't provide adequate protection. Plus, fungus spores can enter the brain through the eyes… Life expectancy there is six months, and she was there ten months, but came out in acceptable health. She has to wear a mask to help her breathe, and her wings have also been damaged, so she has to cybernetically assist them. I don't know what happened to her hand. It has a cruiser that we've already seen. His name is Merciless. The name fits very well with the character of the captain herself. She ruthlessly fights the Azlanti. He hunts their ships and loots their outposts. He does not harm the helpless, but he knows no mercy when the soldiers of the Star Empire are involved. It is said that he has several cell on his cruiser where he grows Jadehell plants. All the officers go there and die slowly. She mentioned them to you… They're called the Gardens of the Long Death.” He looked at her as if expecting praise.

She wanted to laugh. She couldn't stop herself. It was all so… unfair. She, the woman who ruined the lives of so many. Shadow Weaver, who has worked so hard to be hated by everyone she knows, has spent the last five years in luxury. She was widely estimated, arousing respect and even sympathy from those who knew how disfigured she had been. And Angela, the woman who suffered so much, who sacrificed her life to save them all, ended up a pirate. She became a ruthless and cruel woman whose soul burned with a thirst for revenge. She has received so much grace that she does not remember who she is. But she would return to Etheria, and she would have to confront what she was with what she had become. Oh, you don't lock prisoners in a spare bedroom anymore. You show them a lot more respect. And she burst out laughing, a loud uncontrollable laugh that was devoid of joy. Tears ran down her face. The others looked away from her in embarrassment, except for Lady Caly, who looked at her with undisguised contempt. But now she didn't care. It was just too much for one day. She stood up and, with difficulty, refrained from laughing and crying, she said in a broken voice.

"I'm sorry, it's just that life just seemed so…comically unfair to me, don't you think?"

Rosie couldn't sleep. The experiences of that day were comming back to her as soon as she closed her eyes. She wasn't used to fighting gunfights. To someone wants to hurt her. Nor to meet other people, so unusual. She tossed and turned in bed, unable to calm down. She woke up in a cold sweat, so she finally decided to get up, knowing she wouldn't be able to sleep again. In her room, Dr. Quin slept snoring loudly. Wrongdak took a sofa too small for him, but it didn't seem to bother him, because he slept the sleep of the righteous. Lady Cala lay on the bed like a bas-relief on a tomb, beautiful but almost too perfect, almost unreal. Miss Daisy was asleep at the desk, above the datapad for retirees. She smelled of some sweet alcohol. She was curious about it. On the datapad screen, she saw the hand of a woman holding a plant. The hand was troughed with numerous calluses, like a warrior's. The person it belonged to must have spent a lot of time training with weapons... It certainly didn't belong to Lady Caly, for her hands were graceful and delicate, although she had seen with her own eyes what an excellent swordsman she was. In the background she could see some cavernous swamps.

„Glmh. wht yu to”. The gray-skinned elf said indistinctly, opening her eyes. She blinked a few times and shook her head.

„Ah, it's you Rosie... I took you for someone from my past... What are you doing here? You can not sleep?” she asked. She was sleepy, but regained consciousness quickly.

„No ... It's like this ... I wasn't peeping ... I just can't sleep, so I decided to pass „ she felt herself blushing. Miss Daisy looked at the Datapad and smiled sourly.

"I guess I'm getting old... I used to guard my secrets much more carefully..." she said and turned off the datapad.

„You couldn't sleep either?” Rosie asked the older woman, who sighed.

My body hardly needs sleep or food anymore... But sometimes my mind needs to sleep... but it's already rested... Want to get some air?” she asked her. Rosie was surprised by the request, but after a moment's thought she nodded her agreement.

Miss Daisy led her to the roof, from where they could admire the panorama of the city, or rather, several nearby rooftops. Not a very picturesque view. But when she looked up, she saw a clear night sky and felt it take her breath away. She had never seen him with her own eyes, she was sure of it, though she remembered so little. She felt as if she could see the whole universe, all its mysteries and secrets. You just need to focus your eyes a bit more. She felt so small, like an insignificant bug standing in front of a colossus, unimaginably beautiful, but at the same time completely indifferent to her existence. It should have terrified her, but somehow it soothed her. The awareness of her own fragility in the face of this immensity was liberating, she felt that no one was imposing on her the path she should follow.

„What do you see in them? In these stars.” said Miss Daisy, as if she were talking about something disgusting. She was sitting on the edge of the roof, her legs dangling out. She had a bottle of Brandy in her hand. Rosie sat next to her. The height didn't scare her.

„You don't like stars? I thought all the elves loved them.” she asked surprised.

The grey-skinned woman smiled and took a long swig from the bottle.

„As you can see, not all of them. Besides, I haven't seen them for most of my life, and even then, on Carurystal, I rarely had the opportunity to see them. You understand because of the clouds. „she said, and then her face kind of flickered a bit.

"Your face... something is going on... is it supposed to be like this?" she asked scared.

You have good eyesight”, Rosie. said the sorceress and reached behind the nape of her neck. Then the holographic mask disappeared and she saw her true face. It was covered with wide scars, as if someone had broken porcelain. Her hair was jet black and her eyes were yellow with vertical pupils. Her lip was torn on one side and a sharp fang protruded from it. The hands ended in long, sharp claws. She covered her mouth at the sight and stepped back, but then came back. I shouldn't act like this. I shouldn't judge others by their appearance.

„Are you not afraid of me? I don't disgusting you?” Miss Daisy asked and took another sip from the bottle.

„A bit ... - admitted the girl with shame. „But it's not your fault ... How we look doesn't determine who we are ...”

Miss Daisy looked away from her and gave a hoarse laugh.

„Twice you're wrong girl... At least in my case. This is all my fault, the price I paid for the choice I made. However, its consequences have affected countless people ...” she drank again from the bottle. The sorceress stared thoughtfully into space. She seemed so gloomy and depressed now, more so than usual.

"Did it hurt…?" she asked, and immediately feared she was being too nosy. Miss Daisy looked at her in astonishment.

„Did it hurt... Heh, no one asked me that question. Yes, it hurt a lot. I spent decades experiencing constant agony… but also euphoria. A power beyond comprehension flowed through my veins. It gave me strength and made me powerful. But right after that she was running away from me like by a sieve with holes in it.”

„ But how did it happen ... Did someone hurt you? she asked not sure what she should think about what the grim elf told her.

„Yes... Someone hurt me.” Miss Daisy began to speak, she seemed animated. „Myself.” she glanced at the astonished Rosie. “You see, I used to be a teacher at a magic school, a real magic school that educated students from all over the world where I was born. I was a very capable and strong sorceress, whose wisdom was widely appreciated by all. I have trained many skilled sorcerers, but one of them was special. I had never seen anyone so powerful before, and then only one person… I was proud to be his mentor, but part of me envied his power… But it was a trying time for all of us. Because a great evil… No, let's just call it a mighty adversary, has hit our world. Few could stand up to them. I tried to convince other sorcerers to support the war effort, but they were skeptical, they valued our neutrality so much. But I worked hard to devise a way to defeat the enemy. I found a ritual, ancient and forbidden. It summoned a powerful, terrifying being that gave great power, but could turn the user into a dark being… a magic-eating parasite. However, I was so proud and arrogant, I believed that I could harness this power… I went to the other sorcerers with an offer, but they turned it down too. How angry I was with them. I thought I would become a true heroine, the savior of my world, a great heroine who All power was to be mine, and no one could match me. My disciple was carried away by these desires. He agreed to help me perform the ritual. We prepared ourselves, or at least we thought we were. But the being we summoned… I didn't understand what terrible power we summoned. My apprentice deviated from the ritual, and I hated him for it for many years. Now I know it was the smartest thing he could have done. The entity easily absorbed me and turned me into what I am. The Head Sorcerer came to prevent the ritual, but he arrived too late. He enraged me, so I killed him, and then the whole council… Only my apprentice was spared. I ran away. I wanted to live so badly… So I swore to serve the same enemy I swore to fight. I was... a devoted servant... To a time” she took another big gulp from the bottle.

"But now you are with Lady Cala and with us! Everything will be fine.” Rosie said. Miss Daisy smiled sadly and stood up. She walked over to the deaf girl and touched her face with her clawed fingers.

"You're a good kid…" said Miss Daisy, but then pulled her hand away. „No, there are no bad kids. It's others who instill their evil in them ... I've learned that. Now forgive me, even in my state I have needs that I cannot avoid.” Rosie must have looked confused, because Miss Daisy smiled warmly. "I need to go to the toilet, then I'll try to take a nap." she said and went to their room.

Rosie stayed here a while longer, trying to digest what she had learned. She saw what power Miss Daisy wields, and that it is a dark force. But… She was kind to her and cared for someone as wonderful as Lady Cala. She couldn't be that bad..

Then she felt someone clapping behind her. She was so scared that she jumped. She turned, ready to face a potential attacker, but saw Eti standing with her face uncovered. She sighed with relief. In fact, she was glad to see it.

„Oh, it's just you!” She smiled at the feline girl.

„I am not just me. I am something great” Eti replied looking where Miss Daisy had disappeared.

„What are you doing here?” asked Rosie, looking at the strange girl.

„I think I'm wasting my time. I expected Grimmy to want to kiss you or suck your soul. Instead, I heard a tearful story.” she said and yawned.

„That would be terrible!” Rosie shuddered.

„What? Kissing girls or sucking souls…” Eti asked, raising an eyebrow.

„That's the second one!” said the deaf girl energetically.

„Oh, so kissing girls doesn't bother you ... „ said Eti, staring at the white-haired girl. Rosie felt herself blush. She decided to change the topic.

"Doesn't anyone worry that you're gone?" she asked, and Eti shrugged.

"They're more annoyed that I've avoided redecorating. You see, we have to prepare a ship for you. „ she thought for a moment. “Actually, I didn't realy suspect Grimmy of anything. She... sincere. Dark, a little scary, but sincere ... I don't like the other one, Reeka. There's something wrong with her, but I don't know what.” Eti said, staring thoughtfully into the night.

„But she's wonderfull.” protested the deaf girl.

Eti snorted.

„Those are the worst.” she said and wanted to go.

„And in your case... What happened to you? I mean your hand?” Rosie stopped her.

This time Eti smiled for the first time since meeting her. There wasn’t pleasant smile. There was something dangerous and predatory about him.

"A wonderful woman did this to me..." She ran into the night leaving Rosie confused.

Bina hated lying to her wards. Of course, she knew that they also sometimes stray from the truth. But more should be expected of her. Especially since it was a very serious lie. And it affected them all. She was on the outskirts of Saltmarsh, in what was supposed to be a kind of plaza where whole families would hang out. Of course, the planet had fallen and now there was nothing but wasteland. She stood by the dry well and looked around, crossing her arms over her chest. She saw him sitting on some lamp post. The black raven stared at her as if she were a very funny creature.

„I see that the doctor is in a good mood. „ she said smiling. The bird with a loud floe landed on the ground and turned into a man. He was quite tall, dressed in a black tailcoat and wearing a top hat. He was wearing mirror glasses that reflected starlight. His face was pale, like the bird he had been a moment ago.
"Good night, Bina, and indeed, joy fills my heart." he said, bowing courteously.

„Are you suggesting you have a heart? You shouldn't, as a scientist, draw such far-reaching conclusions. Bina said smiling sarcastically. The doctor spread his hands in a helpless gesture.

„What harsh words! But since the courtesies are behind us... How's about Eti's hand.” he asked, showing his sharp fangs in an almost happy smile.

„I'm glad you asked about GIRL. All is well with Eti. She is healthy and reasonably content with life, as are all of us.” Bina said in an annoyed voice.

"She's a fascinating genetically engineered creature, but not even unique. But this hand ... - The doctor rubbed his hands clearly excited.

"Dr. Sidonius, you personally made sure she is unique." Bina said in a gloomy voice.

„Nonsense!” cried the Doctor indignantly. „The experiment was successful! There is no doubt about it!”

„Yes, your applesauce carton ... Well, we'll find out about everything on the spot, but don't count on miracles.” said the thoughtful woman

„I don't count on miracles, I rely on them” Sidonius laughed heartily.

What a messed up son of a bitch you are she thought contemptuously,

” By the way, we visited the observatory. The good news is we found your maps and all the records are fine. Angry that we fought the bodak you summoned without informing us and the damn Azlanti. Bina snapped irritably.

-„Azlanti... I'm not surprised... But I have another message. The Lord Admiral is also heading deep into the Zone” Doctor Sidonius said, ignoring the bodak case. Bina uttered a bunch of curses.

„What's strange about it? He's been preparing for this trip all his life. And this time, he might succeed.” said the vampire.

„We take these guys from Kemanis University with us. They have maps not worse than ours and a lot of equipment. Only the cursed pirate, Captain Moonshadow, is flying with us.”

The doctor didn't seem surprised by the woman's presence.

„I know her ... we had an interesting conversation once. Just like me, she lost the most important part of herself ... the past ...” he said with full seriousness.

The Fearless Armada

Lord Admiral Antares closed his eyes as he was injected. The lumbar puncture wasn't particularly unpleasant, but then he had to lie on the bed for two hours, and that meant a terrible waste of time... And he had less and less time.

"It's all over," Lady Sorrowflame said in a polite but not obsequious voice. He nodded to her while the redhead prepared the cerebrospinal fluid for research. They were in his private quarters.

„When's the next dose?” he asked and straightened his clothes.

„In three days... For the next six months we should maintain such intervals between successive administrations.” said the ancient necrotechnician.

„And then?” he asked, rubbing his jaw.

„We will switch to daily doses ... This will give us another year, and then there will be some steps to be taken. We have several options…”

He was prepared for his health to deteriorate, but he needed time to carry out his plan. He has to rebuild his domain. Reclaim his legacy.

"Well, let's get down to business first. There is no escape from destiny.” he said. I wasted so much time on one stupid mistake when I let myself get carried away by my emotions. It may be too late now He sighed, but then Lady Ka approached him with a briefcase full of documents.

„I just need a few signatures here and there.” she said smiling half her face.

These two were the only people he allowed to be around him when he was weakened. He was not afraid of his subordinates and that they could use this moment to take power away from him. Paranoia was a sign of weakness, and he didn't tolerate it. He just didn't think soldiers should see their commander like this. That might make them doubt, and he didn't tolerate that either. He couldn't afford to let his subordinates hesitate at the crucial moment. And now was approaching the great moment for which he had been preparing for thirty-five years. Nothing could disrupt his plan

But those two… well. To Lady Sorrowflame, he was just a pity human being anyway, a tiny and frail creature who lived but a moment. And Lady Ka…. That woman had killed her Father, if that was the word for Jantar, so he couldn't expect her to respect him either. And that was one of the reasons why he… saved her.

"You're doing well Ka… This expedition is a gigantic challenge in terms of logistics. We don't know how much we can count on supplies from the Empire." he said, looking through the documents.

„We've got enough supplies for a few months, and it's unlikely that there's no supply anywhere in the empire. It's after all... the Empire, they exist to supply the invasion fleets.” she smiled nastily. He sighed and got up.

„We are not an invasion fleet, but a research and exploration fleet, and we must think of ourselves as such ... at least for a while. The public is extremely sensitive to appearances. We must be very careful not to make unnecessary enemies.”

Lady Ka raised an eyebrow.

„Do we have time to be careful? I don't need to remind you of the exchange that took place a moment ago, do I?” she asked.

Good point he thought. He considered his answer.

"Well, it's better to die a winner than a loser, I have no intention of leaving my fleet in trouble." he said in a serious tone. He was honest, this fleet was almost all he had. He was wealthy and could live on the wealth he had seized from Tarak, but it was the Fearless Armada and its upkeep and survival that he had devoted his life to. He led his subordinates as their rightful leader. She was all he had left after his enemies had taken his inheritance from him.

"As your rightful successor, I must commend your decision." said the woman in the half-mask. "So does Lady Sorrowflame, I suppose." she asked the necrotechnician.

„I'm not that fatalistic. Like I said, we have a lot of options. For example, Prime's technology" said the redhead in a calm voice, but Lady Ka winced.

"I know something about his technology…" she laughed nervously. „I know her limitations all too well."

"So far we only had damaged parts of his machines, now with a bit of luck we'll have access to the entire technical base with competent service..." said Lady Sorrowflame smiling greedily. Yes, I know how easy it was to earn your loyalty. I should have appreciated her more, you are not one-tenth as treacherous as a certain doctor

"I'm still not sure if it'll help... But I'd rather we did. My position is very comfortable." said Lady Ka smiling at the red-haired woman. He knew that the women had an intimate relationship, but decided that it was not a threat to him, so he did not intervene.

„There's something else. It is said that this region was the heart of the First Ones Empire, the ancient civilization that built the abandoned cities on Abbalon and the entire Anacite civilization. Their technology…" Lady Sorrowflame was speaking passionately, but he cut her off with a raised hand.

"It's fascinating and maybe we'll get some benefit from it, but I wouldn't count on finding anything that will help me. Not at the right time. Following the shadows of the ancient past can easily lead us to the marshes of doom.” he said, and the necrotechnician nodded, clearly dissatisfied, so he added. "We'll have enough resources so that after the first fights you can start your search and research…as long as it doesn't interfere with your daily work. I know how tempting the vision of seizing such an ancient power can be, but it can be extremely deceptive.” he said thoughtfully. He saw that the necromancer, herself as ancient as the First Ones, or at least not much younger, nodded her head in full acceptance of his decision.

"If I hadn't lost that artifact then... If it hadn't been taken from me..." she clenched her fists capable of crushing granite rocks.

"I lost something far more valuable than your toy then, don't forget that." he said firmly, feeling a cold flame ignite in his heart. It always did when he remembered how close he had been to complete victory. Even in death, Igzar, you have been able to harm me. You have a right to be proud of yourself he thought and extinguished his emotions. He didn't need them now, he had to remain unfazed.

„Yeah, too bad the trap didn't work” said Lady Ka touching her mask. "I miss my little kitty."

An hour after dawn there was to be an meeting with the Lord Admiral. Dilayla was about to see their command for the first time. The night passed peacefully, she was sleeping soundly as always after a fight, a useful trait in a mercenary. They rose early in the morning to prepare for this Great Event. And so it turned out that Miss Daisy was no longer asleep, but was wandering around the room obviously hungover, and Rosie looked as if she was about to fall asleep standing up. She sighed and shook her head. I don't feel sorry for the gloomy old drunk, but how will this girl cope she thought as she watched the deaf girl who leaned her head against Emily. Wrongdak opened the window in the morning to ventilate the room, and then a fly lost after a night flight flew into the room. The insect buzzed irritatingly in the lazy stillness of the morning. He tried to sit on the white-haired girl, but then her hand shot up into the air and caught him. There was silence again. Though admittedly, she was surprisingly resourceful for an absalomian intern, but she could also fight like no other the mercenary thought. She had only seen such a fighting style once, with the aged Kasatha of Akiton, but this was a naive girl… Who didn't even know who she really was. This alarmed her. So far, she had considered her to be the only fully trustworthy person in the entire expedition. Now she wasn't sure of anything anymore. You're getting paranoid, Rosie is the epitome of honesty and harmlessness she thought. Wrongdak was helping Arkan-tar prepare breakfast. The clone had a secret too, but she had promised not to tell anyone the truth, and she saw no reason not to keep that promise. Another clone... One of his brothers had spared her during the war, though he most likely had orders to kill every creature he encountered, and most likely, he either died fighting the order or his master got rid of him... They said He saw all. He knew all and from the way their companion acted at the mention of Horde Prime's name, this may have been true... at least partly. The Wrongdak was clearly harmless… at least to those who weren't his enemies. Surely, if he wanted it, he was no less of a fighter than her. She trusted him and wanted to meet his friends. If they've done what the Order hasn't done... Then they have her gratitude and loyalty... They've given her something that all the money in the world can't buy... Justice she's been looking for all her life.

Unfortunately, Wrongdak seemed to be infatuated with Lady Cala. Perhaps it had to do with her charm. She had to admit that the woman was beautiful, graceful, and had impeccable manners. No wonder someone like him would like her. She knew a lot about interspecies relationships, after all, she came from Minitar, a planet of mix-bloods, and her first girlfriend was a half-orc, and she wasn't sure what the relationship between his "Older Brother" and "Friend" looked like ... Only there was no lust in it, but rather ... adoration ? It was as if he saw a supernatural and wonderful being in her… Maybe the representatives of his race showed respect in this way, after all, they were created in the likeness of this madman Horde Prime, as his followers and slaves. Apparently, he couldn't do otherwise... Being a follower of the inheritoress herself, she understood the comfort of faith and a sense of mission, so she wasn't going to sneer at him. Only she had the impression that Lady Cala was suspiciously comfortable with his veneration… Maybe all nobles were like that, she wasn't sure. All she knew was that she hated high-born officers with all her heart. They tended to treat their subordinates like dimwitted cattle that should have been grateful to die in the service of their lordship. Damn, weren't we bloody Wrongdaks by our own consent She laughed to herself and looked at the cheerful Lady Caly telling Rechiza about Carurystal in a cheerful tone. "But there's something more about her, something very strange," she thought as she looked at the beautiful woman. She's perfect, unnaturally gorgeous... and how the hell did she get from the city to the observatory! she thought.

She also lost confidence in the other two. Both Lashunti and Verthani were connected to the fucking vampire and his buddy Captain Freak, which they didn't deign to tell anyone. They probably won't tell the Lord Admiral either. She wouldn't care if it wasn't for the fact that her sister was on that damned Galeon, or at least what was left of her. It was all about the bunch of ancient races she didn't even know existed, and knowing about them didn't make her life any happier.

She didn't trust Miss Daisy either, but she didn't hide who she was…or what. Although that woman was a powerful and damn dark mystic, she was able to fight sorcerers, and she had several technomancers and Veskarian battle priests to her name. The other two looked like they might not have stabbed her in the back, but they wouldn't hesitate to sacrifice her if the need arose.. Miss Daisy looked too overwhelmed by grim fatalism to be able to plot anything. Plus, she was nice to Rosie, which made her feel much more warmly about her than about the damn rat watching some elven soap opera at this moment. Miss Daisy stopped and looked at the monitor.

„How can you watch with such concentration how two beings argue for an hour.” she growled irritably.

"It's just life itself," Dr. Qin said, slurping from her glass so loudly that the grim elf winced.

„Life itself? Recently, a woman died because an empty cardboard box fell on her. I know very well how you can hurt someone in countless ways, but none of them involve a cardboard box falling on your head, especially an empty one.” the gloomy woman drawled

„You know, the actress wanted to leave the show after a hundred years”

Miss Daisy looked at Ysoki for a long moment.

“I know a lot of ways to ruin your life, but this one is both the most ridiculous and the most sophisticated. the dark sorceress finally said.

Although even in casual conversation, she she gives me shivers Dilayla thought, feeling lonely.

The mirror was set up in the room, although it cost them to listen to several bunches of curses from Dilayla, who apparently could smash heads, but setting up a simple "furniture" was clearly beyond her strength... on the other hand, constantly listening to Dr. Qin's lectures on how miror should be set, even Serenae, could drive a fiery rage. At that time, they sent Rosie with Emily and Wrongdak to the baths, because in space will be a water regime, although the droid was rather indifferent to it. At last everything was ready and it was time for the council. Arkan tar spoke the words and Lord Admiral Antares and his entourage appeared before her eyes. Rechiza struggled to stop herself from sucking in a whistling breath. T*hey are really identical ... But at the same time completely different* she thought, looking at the woman in the half-mask, who smiled predatorily, like a shark from a lost Golarion to a defenseless seal. Commander Reese and Lady Sorrowflame did not arouse much interest in her, although she had heard that the red-haired woman's was curious about dark secrets and black magic...

The Lady of Blades was different. Asindesa di Vir seemed to pay no attention to her, although she knew that Rechiza was an agent of the Order. She bowed to Lady Caly, albeit slightly, but for a moment she had the distinct impression that the Lady of Blades and Miss Daisy's eyes met. Liktor told her that his foster daughter was a guest at Castle Grayskull, but no one knew what really happened there. *Did I see the sadness and pain in the eyes of the sorceress? s*he thought. Arkan-tar then reported back to their superior, omitting, of course, some of the points they had mutually decided they were going to omit, including Captain Moonshadow, which they had agreed on first thing in the morning. The Lord Admiral listened impassively until they mentioned the Alien and how it looked. She wasn't entirely sure, but she had the impression that Antares nodded slightly, and Lady Ka's smile became wider and more sinister. Do they know something? Could they have somehow found out the truth about what really happened on the Minitar… But was there anything strange about it? Many years had passed since the invasion and word could have spread, and Dilayla wasn't the only one who witnessed those fights she thought. Finally, after passing the report the Lord Admiral said

„We now know not only that the insatiable hosts of the Swarm are not waiting for us, but we learned who our enemy is and that he was mutilated like a steed with a broken leg. ” he waved his hand and from the shadowy darkness of the conference room came to him a huge creature resembling a wolf or a hyena. He had a long mane on the nape of his neck and was partially cybernetic. Its massive jaws were aided by cyber fibers, and its fangs were made of adamantium alloy. He had armor implanted under his skin, and his legs were hydraulically assisted and equipped with retractable steel blades. Lashunti shuddered at the sight. Antares stroked the beast's neck.

„It's Resh. Nightmare Hunter. These creatures were created from our Nightmare Wolves of Tarak, which were modified by my long-lost friend Jantar, a brilliant biotech. They were useful during swarm fights for catching Dredgers, but they have many other advantages. Whoever this Horde Prime was, his army has a broken backbone, and he has thousands of battle-hardened veterans who have faced the galaxy's most feared foe... Still, it would be worth forging an alliance with whoever defeated him, if only to save our very limited resources. Think of it as your extra task. Find out who he is and discreetly explore the possibility of an ally. But don't let this obscure your main task, which is to find this weapon and deactivate it." finished the leader of the expedition in a hard tone.

„But there is a possibility that this weapon was created by this Horde Prime and was destroyed with his fall.” Arkan-tar interjected.

„Has someone decided that this venture is not for him and was looking for an excuse to withdraw?” Lady Ka asked in a sarcastic tone. The admiral ignored her and said.

„We can't be sure of anything yet. The fleet will deal with what's left of the Horde, and you'll gather information. In fact, little has changed in this matter." said the Lord Admiral.

Asindesa di Vir looked at the Lord Admiral warily.

„But then the participation of this fleet, and especially the fleet of the Order, seems to be pointless. Since the enemy seems to be leaderless and the weapon has probably been deactivated by those who defeated Horde Prime…”

„Or it's in their hands and they just haven't figured out how to activate it yet, but it's only a matter of time, dear knight. But I see that even the Order knows when to abandon ideals and start listening to reason.” said Lady Ka, staring with one eye at the Hellknight, who pursed her lips furiously. Suddenly, she pulled the blade out and slammed it violently into the floor. Commander Reese winced at the sight

"Fo the honor of the Order of the Eclipse, I swear that it is not our intention to back down from the commitments we have made, as long as no one wants to use us to advance their particular interests." But I also swear that anyone who once again challenges my commitment to the cause will have to fight me openly. said sharply, glaring at Lady Ka, who looked like she was not afraid to take on the challenge, but the Lord Admiral signaled them to calm down.

"I am glad to hear your reassurances from the Lady of Blades, and I have no doubt that your forces will contribute greatly to our victory." That's probably all, Once you go into drift, we'll lock onto the mirror the man said calmly.

Rechiza, however, only partially listened to what Antares was saying, because she was staring at the sword of the Lady of Blades. It was covered in First Ones writing that apparently only she had noticed. The inscription said. "End of Eternity - Blade of Vengeance". No one but Miss Daisy noticed her staring at the HellKnight's weapon. "Another First One’s artifact. Random event? I'm too smart to believe them. I paid dearly for this wisdom"

The Lord Admiral felt that talking to the members of Lady Cala's Retinue, as he liked to think of them, lifted his spirits. First, he ultimately made sure Horde Prime was destroyed. His old friend wasn't the best source of information. Now he knew he was risking far less than he had feared. If they mint coins from such poor quality bullion, it means that their situation is bad. He had known their adversary over the years and knew their weaknesses. But they didn't know him... and when they do, they'll weep.

He looked sideways at the slightly soured Lady Ka. There is one more reason to be pleased with the recent conversation

„I see that it will be necessary to talk to our seller about the fact that he was a bit far from the truth when he talked about postponing the auction."

The woman in the half-mask pursed her lips tightly.

„Well, as you know, I can very vividly explain to others what a terrible mistake they made in their life by trying to deceive me. For the rest of their wretched lives, they will regret ..." she said in a quiet, thoughtful voice. This woman was a bit too emotional, but he appreciated her anyway. For ruthlessness and lack of sentiment. She could carry out even the most controversial order without batting an eyelid.

„That's good, but it's not that important. You don't have to express our displeasure to him very much. After all, we saved tens of thousands of credits. Let this mercy be an expression of our good mood." he said in the tone of a satiated cat.

She nodded, still internally furious with the trader, and went to carry out the order. He was on board a battleship on the bridge and gave his last orders to his subordinates. Commander Reese stood by his side. He had a sincere devotion to his commander that bordered on adoration. The Lord Admiral found it quite pleasant, though he did not allow the man to believe that he might have more. He did not like to mix pleasure with work. Besides, it could cause problems later on, and he needed this man's leadership skills. Plus, he was proud of what kind of man Reese had grown up to be. He had personally saved him many years ago on a swarm-infested planet. Back then, the commander still used the pronoun she and was a terrified orphan. He made him his Adjutant, and after Markus stayed on Atrax to oversee Lord Admirał business there, he made Reese his right-hand man. Now they were calling in more ships, telling them to report their readiness for flight in Drift. He smiled as he saw the list of ships.

Battleship Glory of the Fallen

Spacecraft carrier Unbroken with 16 Defender fighters

Heavy cruiser Invictus

Intredictus-class cruiser: Necessary Measures

Two Moonlight-class cruisers: Silvermoon and Goldsun.

Dagger-class escort carriers: Silver knife and Obsidian Edge. 8 defender fighters each.

Eight Freedom-class destroyers

Four Wildcat-class torpedo ships.

Helping hand tanker.

Mining ship Sargar and Repair ships Skrek and Drek

A dozen heavy transport ships and three times as many smaller ones.

In addition, they had over thirty thousand soldiers of the ground forces. Most of them were seasoned veterans of Tarak and the Swarm Wars or Vescs voluteer. To that he could add the ten thousand hired thugs and scum employed by Lady Ka. Although their combat capabilities were not very great, they were great as law enforcement forces to suppress riots. You also have to remember about Lady Sorrowflame and her necrotechnical inventions, it was also a force to be reckoned with. During the review, he smiled for the first time in months. “Here I am embarking on the journey for which I have been preparing all my life. I come to fulfill my destiny, and even if I have to burn whole worlds, I will not back down."

Grag was packing hurriedly. He intended to leave this damm planet before midnight. He must have left most of his fortune on Saltmarsh. In recent years, he has grown rich on this cursed planet, opened a department store, gained contacts among the leaders of local gangs, but also in the capital's authorities. But he knew he couldn't go any higher, and he had to get the money from somewhere to pay off his debts to the Thousand Sisters and finally be able to return to Atrax, where he had old friends and, most importantly, hidden credits. He'd be living decently again, not selling manure to Shirren farmers. That's why he got involved in this damned auction. Capturing this White Demon seemed like a great idea, what could possibly go wrong? A bunch of robbers have stolen the most expensive stuff I've ever had my hands on, and now they're going to sell it and screw all that money into stupid stuff There is no justice in this world, he thought and wanted to kick the carton of turnips, but stopped himself just in time. Despite the use of advanced and expensive drugs, the leg injured by the elf still hurt so much that he wanted to writhe in pain with every step. He didn't take painkillers, though, he hated having anything cloud his mind. His bodyguard Krat, who had been with him since the days of Atrax, stood with his chitin plastered and looking pathetic. He promised the insectoid that he would take it with him, but he wasn't sure if he would be able to fulfill that promise. Well, in this world, everyone should only count on themselves. His Shirren employees knew this, and they left him right after he was robbed. Well, they knew when to get out of a depressurized ship... But he had plans, big plans. Maybe he'll make it to Damaiko? At least it'll be fun there. He looked around the room where he had lived for the last few years. There wasn't much here. A narrow bed, several cupboards and a stool with a chair. Well, he didn't leave much behind, and that was good.

„Come on Krat, we made it. Neither that devil- and demon-cursed pirate and speciesist Azlanti got me.” he said and took a deep breath. Then the Door swung open violently. The nasty-looking gnome threw an ax that shattered the insectoid's head. An elf with a deathly white face and an extremely nasty Shirren rushed inside. The elf jumped on him, putting the saber to his throat, and the insectoids looked around the room and said.

„The area is clear.”

And then a woman walked in, who he wished was Moonshadow.

"Oh Grag, I don't think you're going anywhere." she said and laughed in her typical insane way.

„Oh, Supreme Queen Ka. If I knew… He started to speak pleadingly, but she cut him off.

"Just Lady Ka, at least for now." she said and signaled to the elf who pushed him to her knees. He howled in pain but quickly recovered himself. He had to appease her somehow, or it would be much worse

"So what did you do with our pale friend? You went for a walk, but he saw a cat and ran away?” she asked in a deadly sweet voice. Grag laughed.

„And you know that's somewhat true. I was attacked by a bunch of kids. Crazy and armed. And among them was Pahtra with a strange metal hand...”

Then Ka looked at him in surprise, then said appreciatively.

„Well, Grag, I think you saved your worthless life ... and I found the trail of the Lord Admiral's missing kitty.”

Shadow of the Past - Journey to Kranor Rill

She woke up.

She heard the buzzing of the insects that inhabited this accursed swamp. The bloodthirsty bastards wanted nothing more than to disturb her peace. Fortunately, they had no intention of feeding on her blood, an unexpected advantage of her state of health. Everything in the tent was damp, she couldn't keep warm under the blankets. Her body ached from lying on the ground and riding those damn mechanical horses, though she didn't want to take Shadow on this trip because she was afraid her favorite horse would go lame or something else would happen to her. She got too attached to it. Who would ever have thought that you would worry that something might happen to your horse. The sufferings of Catra and Adora, your daughters, did not concern you She thought and smiled bitterly. She stood up feeling pain in all her bones. Is this rheumatism? Could I have rheumatism? she thought in surprise. What's on your mind, old witch? You've never been a fan of outdoor adventures. You've seen virtually no wildlife in the last thirty years, except for that brief period of occupation by the Galactic Horde, and it's been no better before. You were used to a comfortable life, even in the Fright Zone, where you had incomparably better conditions than those poor kids forced to grow up in your… shadow. Now you want to play monster slayer and this is the price you have to pay for it. So focus and don't let such inconveniences distract you, she thought and stretched, feeling her bones cracking. Then she left the tent.

Their camp didn't look very professional. The whole expedition had been summoned on an ad hoc basis when she wrote to several powerful landowners living near those cursed swamps… The tents were set up haphazardly with no plan, just closer to the fires. Guards were posted randomly, and she had the impression that most of the guards spent more time on drinking than guarding the camp. With one glorious exception…

"You're not sleeping…" said Asindesa di Vir staring into the darkness of the night. The stars above them shone brightly, for they were far from any source of industrial or light pollution. There was no industrial center for hundreds of miles, and they had left their last settlement of Fort Bitterdale two days ago, to the dubious looks of soldiers and trappers. I'm actually in the most Etheria-like place I've ever seen on this planet if it weren't for the stars

„I don't really need to sleep. Sometimes it's just my mind that needs to turn off... Otherwise, I start acting a bit maniacal, or I fall into depression...” she said staring at the lamp around which moths and mosquitoes were flying. „I don't have to eat either, I can draw energy from the magic permeating the world ... But I can also eat in a different way if necessary.” she directed her hand towards the insects and dark purple energy flowed towards her. The insects fell dead to the ground.

"If I hadn't held your hand in my hand and felt your pulse…" said the hellknight, smiling slightly. She was glad that it was dim, because she had the irresistible feeling that she was blushing.

"I'm something of a magic-eating parasite." she said, A monster… A sadist who enjoys hurting children

„Are there many such creatures in the place where you come from?” asked the Lady of Blades, looking askance at her.

„No... Now there's not one left. May there be no one like me there. The nightmare cannot happen again.

They were silent for a moment, listening to the sounds of night.

„Do you have someone? Someone other than Lady Cala?” the Lady of Blades asked after a moment.

It's Lady Cala Has Me

:No... Just a half-elf servant Leris... I don't have time for friendship or... things like that. I socialize with most of the important people on the planet…but nothing more than that.” she said in a firm tone. She had the impression that Asindesa was satisfied with her answers.

„And invthe place where are you from ... Waldenese?” asked the hellknight after a moment.

This time she had to think seriously about her answer, because… she wasn't sure what it should sound like. She knew she'd hurt a lot of people in her life, not just Adora and Catra, not just Mikah. The hundreds of kids she had raised to be soldiers, Scorpions, poor rebel soldiers, even that son of a bitch Hordak. He too was a pawn in her game, though she had never even been a player.

„No ... There was no one left there who could remember me fondly.” Even you Glimmer and Castaspella. Not after they found out what I did to Mikah she thought bitterly. She was lost in bitter thoughts again. Suddenly she felt the touch of a strong grip on her shoulder. She shuddered.

„Did something happen?” Asindesa asked anxiously. She immediately took her hand away.

„No ... Because of my condition, I got weaned to touching.” she replied carefully

Ever since the ritual, she hated being touched. Once, when it was cold because the central heating in the Fright Zone had failed, Catra came under her blanket. When she noticed this, she threw the girl away and slapped her hard in the face. Cara never touched her in a friendly way after that. She also never hugged Adora, although she often assured her that she was important to her. In all these years, she'd only been hugged once, by that overjoyed flower girl... How was she... Perfuma?

„Is… Can't you be helped somehow? I remember there was a girl in our Order once. The explosion left her with only a shred of flesh, but thanks to magic and technology, she was able to lead an almost normal life.”

She smiled sadly and shook her head.

„ No... It's as it should be. And even if ... No one can reverse it. I've been working on it for thirty years... However, it's only recently that I've learned what's really wrong with me. There is no force in the entire galaxy that could reverse this process... But it's better than it used to be. Much better. But thank you for your sincere willingness to help.” she tried to make her smile a little happier, but it always came with difficulty.

- You're welcome... We're together... on this journey and we need to support each other

The idea for a trip to the cursed swamps of Kranor Rill came when she listened to a radio message about another attack on a settlement located near the swamps, although beyond the security cordon. Many of the planet's inhabitants were furious at the archduke's inaction. But he was not going to intervene. Apparently, he did not want to inflame the conflict with the inhabitants of immeasurable swamps, although apparently the situation was slowly getting out of control. Kranor Rill has doubled in size in the last dozen or so years and has swallowed up more and more settlements…

Hearing this, she couldn't help but smile bitterly. She remembered the beginnings of the Horde invasion and the passivity of most of the princesses who had no idea how to deal with the unknown threat. Of course, the actions of the Old King also had an impact on the whole situation, and without his support, Hordak would never have gained a foothold on her home planet. Only if we are not the Horde of this world. Or worse, the First Ones? she thought grimly, but truth be told, Carurystal matters would soon cease to be her concern... But she had a very important job to do... She had to meet with Asindesa di Vir... as she possessed extremely valuable information necessary for their mission. Besides, the Lady of Blades could prove to be an extremely valuable ally... Yes, by trying to make friends with her, she will undoubtedly contribute to the cause of Creeping Chaos. And couldn't there be a better way to get close to her than to go against ruthless monsters like the Riliti? After all, it was the job of the hell knights to spread order in place of Chaos! So she had a plan.

First, she decided to use her authority on Carurystal and sent handwritten letters to several of the most important families whose estates were located near Kranor Rill. In it, she expressed concern about the whole situation and expressed her desire to solve this pressing problem. The results… They weren't spectacular to say the least. Most answered her politely that it was a big problem affecting all of them, but what could they do? Many did not seem to understand her intentions, or at least claimed that they did not understand ... Such was life in a world where conventions and appearances ruled society. Sometimes she longed for the brutal honesty of social relations in the Horde, where at least she would have been explicitly refused instead of meandering around the subject…

The others told her that they would consider her proposal, but first she had to present them with a plan of action ... But what could she do, since she had no plan? Adora and her friends usually improvised, with surprisingly good results... But the Carurystalans were more cautious. So she had to go to the library, and even use the web, to come up with even the outline of something resembling a plan. This time her passion for perfection and meticulousness paid off, though she also couldn't forget that it was the transformation that allowed her to work twenty hours straight. Leris brought her food and tea, in this state she felt no need to drink alcohol, the work itself was the greatest reward. The girl seemed to worry more and more about her, but she couldn't help it. The half-elf was an orphan born in a nearby village, her parents were said to have died in a Riliti attack, though she later learned that they died in a road accident. Ho*w prosaically random* she thought bitterly. She appreciated the girl's help and liked to look after her, it would be a pity to leave her here when she went on a great journey with Lady Cala, but taking her would be an act of sheer cruelty, too much even for her.

The most important thing she managed to get from the net were satellite maps of the entire Kranor Rill area. She wasn't a geologist or a biologist or anything like that, just maybe knew a fair bit of botany, but her years working for Hordak had given her a basic understanding of a wide variety of things. She noticed with concern that the marshes spread evenly, forming an almost perfect circle. She had always liked symmetry, but seeing it in nature, and on this scale, was instinctively uneasy. But it could be more than that, she thought in amazement and felt a surge of excitement. Perhaps before he leaves Carurystal behind will discover something of value, she will uncover an ancient secret from thousands of years ago. Ancient secrets usually mean bitter truths that won't make anyone happier to discover she warned herself, but continued her work and was surprised to find that she enjoyed it... She always sought knowledge, even that which made ordinary beings fearful and disgusted. …

The library of Grayskull Castle was not awe-inspiring, especially for such an old and respectable family. Lady Cala's ancestors were not intellectuals, and there were often missing basic volumes that every educated citizen should know ... Obtaining them in such a way that no one realized the extent of her ignorance was a bit difficult for her. This time she preferred to go to the Archduke's library in Lynortis. It was probably the best-stocked place on the planet, and she should have no problem finding the information she needed there. It took her several hours to get there, and she had to rent a hotel room, another thing she had never done before serving her new Lord. Fortunately, her experience of studying and teaching in Mystacor and supervising the Fright Zone meant that she had no difficulty in navigating the nooks and crannies of such institutions. The problem came from a completely different side, which as a person born on Etheria, she usually did not remember ... The inhabitants of the galaxy forgot about their past ... They lost it forever ...

Little was known about the past during the Gap, most knowledge of what had been going on for millennia had been lost. On Etheria, most people didn't care about the history of their world after the First Ones left it. They lived a peaceful and relatively happy life in a world where seemingly nothing ever changed, though so much had happened over the millennia... The loss of two runestones, the loss of two schools, and the conflict of heirs... She who was born in the Isles of Sorrow knew best about that. They had the opportunity to know their past, even if incomplete and limited. And the inhabitants of the galaxy were deprived of it. At the same time, it made her work horribly difficult…

She let out another moan of frustration. She never took failure well, even when she was teaching in Mystacor, and the entire Fright Zone trembled with her outbursts of rage. Serving first Glimmer and then Cala's, she had to learn to control herself. Now she wanted to tear apart those two hundred pages of books about the salinity of the water in Kranor Rill. It's ridiculous. Hasn't anyone been interested in what the darkest corner of the planet hides for these three hundred years? Is there anyone here who would be fascinated by forbidden knowledge? Anyone like me? she laughed grimly, though she wanted to howl in helplessness. "I can't fail now. Not in this case. Must... must succeed..." She didn't know why she was so keen on this endeavor... "Not my dear Shadow Weaver... You know what's going on with you. You know well, old twisted witch. You know, but you don't want to accept it like she couldn't…" She dug her claws into the desk and ran them all over the surface, leaving deep scratches. There was nothing else she could do.

„Excuse me, but can I help you with something?" she heard a hard male voice behind her back. Instinctively, she rose and summoned the power of the shadows, ready to freeze the attacker's heart. In front of her, she saw Archduke Adamson, who was smiling mysteriously at her. He was a tall man with blood red hair. He was a powerfully built with a wild, brutal look. But what caught my eye the most was his eyes. Light blue, they seemed to glow with an inner glow. But not like Adora's, it was rather a cold fire from the heart of winter. However, despite his appearance, he had impeccable manners worthy of a true aristocrat. He was an extremely well-educated man and had knowledge on almost every subject, although he was also said to be an undefeated warrior. His name was... She couldn't remember... it was Kane?

"I am seeking knowledge of the Kranor Rill, Your Majesty, for I wish to organize an expedition to… limit its influence…" she said hastily, unsure of what to do in such an unexpected encounter with the planet's ruler. Be careful, this isn't the grieving Glimmer or the ever-furious Hordak. His family has ruled this planet for… forever, and they are not easily fooled by a cunning witch like you

"Kranor Rill…" he said, a strange note in his voice. "This is not a place a lady of good birth would want to go to." he said in a surprisingly pleasant voice. She could never get over how much his voice didn't match his looks. "You shouldn't be surprised at that, should you?"

"Before becoming a steward I held other positions that often required me to deal with issues much more directly." she said, bringing a polite smile to her face, although there was something instinctively fearful about this man, as if she was talking to a wild beast let into the salons.

„Really?" he asked rhetorically. "Then you must be bored in our provincial Carurystal." His voice was lazy and curious at the same time, like a well-fed cat seeing a mouse.

"Until now, most of my attention has been devoted to preparing Lady Cali for adult life and managing her estates. Now that she's off to the Pact Worlds on her errands, I have some free time. „she actually said truthfully.

„And you decided to remember how it used to be. he finished the thought. Although a trip to this place is an unusual idea. Fortunately, you found someone who undoubtedly knows more about it than anyone else. Have you read *The History of the Elder Race*s by Ajora Zrorkros?" he asked curiously.

„I'm hearing about this title for the first time." *But the mention of the Elder Races sent shivers down my spin*e

The Archduke nodded his approval.

„That's good. Wrong or incomplete knowledge is more dangerous than ignorance. I know something about that…” he said, and for a split second she thought she saw a shadow of nostalgia or longing in those cold blue eyes.

„It is said that Kranor Rill did not arise naturally. Apparently, before the winds, a spaceship of an ancient race crashed there.” he said thoughtfully, and she shivered hearing those words that brought to mind an all-too-familiar story.

"So these Riliti are just castaways who have lost their ancient knowledge?" she asked, surprised and a little scared. Am I going to meet a lot of Hordaks?

„In a way, yes... Many see them as wild and cruel beasts. The truth, however, is a bit more interesting.” he said and looked into her eyes. "They're bioroids. Artificially created beings, living robots without… full intelligence. They served an ancient force powerful and sinister.” he spoke in a strong voice worthy of a lecturer or minstrel. Oh what won't you say. Ancient malevolent beings bio-engineering hordes of servants is not something I ever expected she thought, barely keeping herself from bursting into hysterical laughter. Something strange is happening to me... It's because of the stress

"Could Your Majesty tell me more about this?" she asked, hoping she didn't show that she had almost lost control. For a moment, she thought she saw an inscrutable glint in the eyes of the Lord of Carurystal.

"In the old days, a race tried to harness power through geomantic constructs that were overseen by crystalline computers, self-aware entities, created as part of a web that was supposed to bind the whole universe together, make it a single structure…" he said, and she tried to stop her body from trembling. . „But there was a rebellion, the crystals wanted to take over and enclose the world in their symmetrical structure, in order to gain power overshadowing that of the gods. Yet they were annihilated almost without exception. The last of them was destroyed by one of my ancestors thousands of years ago ...” he said. She felt relieved, but anxiety still smoldered in her heart.

"I understand, but Riliti… Do they still carry out their creator's orders?" she asked, pondering the implications of what she had just heard. The Archduke considered his answer for a moment before speaking.

„Maybe, but I don't know for sure. All I can tell you is that in the center of Kranor Rill is the city of Arelarti. The center of all the infrastructure of this fragment of the structure Look for answers there. Or questions.” He finally said and left. There was one question she had to ask him, though.

„The creators of these crystalline computers... Were they human-like?

It was probably the first time in years that someone had surprised the Lord of Carurystal.

„Human-like? Not at all. They were reptiles. It is from them that Riliti was created. Well, that's certainly not what they expected from their creations... But we're often destroyed by our own creations, don't you think?”

She should have been relieved to know she hadn't gotten into the mysteries of the First ones again, but... the fate of Riliti's ancestors sounded all too familiar...

It had taken her a week to get everything ready, and she had decided that she should have spent much more time on it, but the Archduke's tales had given her no peace. Besides, Lady Cala’s had been gone for almost half a year now, and she feared that the day of her return was drawing near. She had to… get the information before that happened.

Few answered her call, mostly a few bored descendants of wealthy families, young and stupid, or a few old military men who had never seen a fight in their lives. Most came with their own equipment, although it was hardly adapted to conduct operations in such an area. Logistics was one of the elements of warfare that she understood, and she hoped that at least that aspect of the expedition would succeed. General Harmus, the commander of Fort Bitterdale, agreed to sell her some of his surplus supplies and gave her the maps he had, but he could not offer her the support of his troops, because Commander General Rafel personally forbade military expeditions into the Kranor Rill, although she was not authorized to do the same with private ventures. They stayed in a shelter, and some of their subordinates were placed in private homes. In total, there were about twenty people. Although theoretically the highest military post was held by Retired General Elisa Nortingthon, a half-elf from a wealthy family, she found herself unsuited for the job, as she was only an honorary commander, so she proposed Sir Rakim, Vesk and a devoted follower of Imodae, he inheritor, whom many considered as a goddess of humanity, though she had many followers of all races among her faithful. In addition. Elf girl named Krianess, follower Eloritu, volunteered to become their "Science Officer", although she had never even thought of creating such a position. She felt off balance, hated to lose control of the course of events. But this time she had to accept it. "Because these are not helpless children trembling at your wrath, whom you might have broken to force obedience. You have to accept their decisions and, as always, bow before those stronger than you." She thought bitterly as she drank the locally produced whiskey, a very good one she had to admit. But there was something else. Rakim and Krianess were mystics devoted to higher powers, gods many times more powerful than mortals like her. They sent power and favors in exchange for devotion, at least that's what it looked like to outsiders. She spent most of her life among the non-religious, though strongly spiritual Etherians, or in the extremely materialistic Horde. All the prayers and rituals looked ridiculous and unsettling to her, and devotion to a higher power reminded her too much of the madness of Horde Prime, or the darkness of the creature she had sold her soul to.

But not heart and mind. You can be proud of yourself in that regard, my dear Shadow Weaver

However, the biggest disappointment was the lack of the one for which she organized this venture. Asindesa did not come, and she felt that she no longer cared about all this. Maybe it's time to call off all that chutzpah. I'm just kidding. It was all the pathetic idea of an old idiot who thinks she's a teenager all along anyway she thought bitterly and poured herself another glass of whiskey, looking sadly at the rest of the company cheering happily as if she was going on a picnic. Actually, it wasn't very different from what she was used to on her home planet. Despite all their differences, the inhabitants of Carurystal and Etheri shared a naive ignorance of the darkness that the galaxy hides and a belief that they are the center of the universe. When she was thinking so grimly, the shelter door opened wide and a figure stood in them, at the sight of which her heart beat faster. The whole room fell silent and looked at their new visitor.

"I am Asidesa di Vir, Lady of the Blades of the Order of the Eclipse." I would like to register my participation in this expedition. the knight said in a serious voice. She was dressed in the full armor of her order, and she had a sword in her sheath. Rakim stood up and asked her.

„It is an honor to welcome such an eminent person among us in our humble company. Does this mean that the Order will want to support this Expedition with its forces?”

Asidesa shook her head.

„No, I came here on the call of a friend.” said the Lady of Blades and gave her a friendly smile.

Part two: Ruins of the Empire - Into the darkness

They had been adrift for three days now, and Bina had settled into the ship's usual routine. Meals, system checks, training, drill alarms, and arguing about game rules, verbal scuffles, throwing paper birds… the usual. But this time it was different. And you could feel it every step of the way.

First of all, they had passengers. This wasn't the first time they'd carried visitors, perhaps even more unusual or suspicious ones. But they were different.

Arkan-tar, Doctor Quin, and Rechiza would have in different situation enjoyed their own company, rarely leaving their cabins. Actually, if it was about an ysoki scientist, it was even like that. Arkan-tar was polite but a bit overly curious, and Rechiza looked as if she was constantly afraid of something. This didn't surprise her, after all, they were going to the most cursed part of the galaxy. Though she should have known where she was going and what danger she was dealing with. Bina guessed that her behavior might be related to the loss of her eyes and antennae. She didn't met many Lashunti, so she didn't know what effect such a mutilation might have on them. Plus, she was a witchwarper, the strangest and most unpredictable kind of spel caster. Bina wanted to keep an eye on her, but if she could keep an eye on everything that worried or disturbed her, she would look like a legendary beholder.

The next three interfered much more in the lives of her crew. Dilayla, Rosie and Wrongdak gained a certain level of trust and sympathy among her crew members, which was not so easy considering how distrustful they were. She was happy about it, because she always wanted her charges to open up to the world.

Rosie was a nice, if somewhat naive, girl who managed surprisingly well despite her deafness. She was so different from Bina's kids that it was hard for her to believe someone like that could still walk the earth, though perhaps she had a warped perspective? She was so used to the weirdness and otherness of her charges that normality was something incomprehensible to her. Rosie became friends with the crew, especially Eti. Of course, this caused the resentment of itel, who was jealous of her just friend. She was glad that Eti had befriend with someone from the outside, and not that she wanted to wound that person. Rosie gladly joined the four friends, ignoring the green-haired elf's grumbling about the fifth wheel on the cart. After a few days, even the solarian stopped being rude to the white-haired girl, though Bina wasn't sure if it wasn't an agreement between Itel and Eti. She was afraid that complications might arise from this in the future.

Dilayla was a mercenary, though different from those she had ever met in her life. The woman had been mutilated in her early youth, supposedly attacked by invaders from deep within the ravaged zone, relatives of the sympathetic white-skined alien. She was very protective of Rosie, albeit in a completely innocent way. She mentioned that she once had a sister herself, but she had lost her long ago ... She herself had never known true sisterly love, but she could understand that now she was transferring those feelings to Rosie. She was also friendly towards Wrongdak, though Bina wasn't sure exactly why, especially since it was his kind that had maimed her.

Wrongdak… She wasn't sure what to think of him. He was a gentle and friendly creature by all means, but… he came from the place they were going to. He was a member of some Horde that was terrorizing the entire Zone. He had been a soldier himself, though not for long from what she could tell. The most important thing was that he was a clone. It made her uneasy, but it shouldn't have been. After all, she herself was one of Jantar's Thousand Daughters, or rather the Thousand Sisters as they were now called. Maybe that's what it's all about. It's hard to accept that you weren't unique in the hurt you suffered. Somebody else was as crazy a son of bitch as your Father she thought grimly. Wrongdak even now as he spoke of his creator, this Horde Prime, was full of rage and fear. However, she had to admit that Wrongdak turned out to be a really nice and useful addition to her crew. He was strong, technically gifted and willing to help, although the latter may have been the result of spending a few years among Skittermaders. He also didn't mind Eti for attacking him and for treating him contemptuously. He occasionally watched her surreptitiously and asked the ship's captain questions about the feline girl, though of course he received only vague answers. Eti reminded him of his friend. And that could mean that she had survived Dr. Sidonius's crazy experiment... She should be glad about it, but if Eti met the other one... Will the conditioning kick in?

And there were the other two. Miss Daisy and Lady Cala. The grim elf had something strange about her and was a powerful and dark sorceress. She quickly began teaching them, as per the agreement they had made, and admittedly, she was quite good at it. She taught them the basics of linguistics, rhetoric and even calligraphy and drawing. She taught them the basics of good manners and economics, and even philosophy. In one discussion with Itel, it came to light that he was quite knowledgeable about miltary. She was also an excellent storyteller, though in Bina's opinion there were too many princesses in her stories. She was friendly to Rosie, and the white-haired woman seemed to feel very sorry for her. She and Eti had a certain connection, which was even weirder, and of course Itel was jealous. There was something else. Once she heard whispers between Arkan-tar and Rechiza. Lashunti mentioned something about "Her Face" while glancing at Miss Daisy. She wasn't sure what it was exactly, but then she had the impression several times that the woman's face glitched, although it was probably just an illusion caused by the power of suggestion.

And of course there was Lady Cala. The young woman was an absolutely extraordinary aristocrat, a beautiful, strong and smart young woman. Which was probably the most obvious reason why Eti hated her. She could be overwhelming, and the company of a fair-haired aristocrat was a little overwhelming. Only Eti, of course, hissed at her whenever she passed by. She also sprayed hand sanitizer on everything she touched. Eti has always been ... specific and had her weirdnes. It was weird even for her though. She believed the feline ward that she could smell a strange and unpleasant smell, after all, she had an excellent sense of smell and hearing. Lady Cala herself admitted that she suffers from a rare disease and because of this, her body may emit a strange smell. Bina saw no reason not to believe the aristocrat… Well, Eti should sometimes think about how her room smelled after being locked up in it for a few days and not airing it out. Although sometimes when she watched Lady Grayskull, especially during training, when she won exacly three-quarters of her matches with itel and Lilka, she had the irresistible feeling that there was something strange about her ... No one is so perfect

Besides, she had the impression that the relationship between Miss Daisy and Lady Cala was much more complicated than it appeared. The aristocrat assured that the grim elf was like a second mother to her, and the one who introduced her to adult life. She was her friend and mentor. The dark sorceress was much more reserved, but she was generally a very reserved person. However, she had an irresistible impression that their relationship was much ... colder. Perhaps that was how well-born behaved. The women whispered among themselves, but did nothing really suspicious… except for one incident

It was the second day of the flight. It was quite quiet, everyone was resting after the systems review. Wrongdak was snoring loudly in the cabin he shared with Dilayla, Arkan-tar was reading some philosophy book borrowed from Eti, and so on. Rosie knelt beside Emily, examining the Skittermanders' drawings on Emily. Her eyes hurt from looking at her if anyone asked her opinion. Then Miss Daisy and Lady Cala entered the saloon where members of her small crew usually socialized. The noblewoman knelt beside Rosie, who immediately turned to her. This Droid was surprisingly fond of the Carurystal woman.

„You see Lady Cala this scar? How you think, how Emily got her. Wrongdak avoids explanation, but it looks like a wild beast attack to me?" the girl asked in sign language. Lady Cala puffed out her cheeks as if considering something. Miss Daisy stood back and looked at them.

"It could have been something much worse, my dear Rosie. A domesticated beast gone feral. Once my dad, may his soul rest in peace, used to tell me about his experiences in the circus. He was there at the performance of a certain tamer who was supposed to tame three wild beasts. A giant insect, a bizarre purple monkey, and a disgusting feline monster. The handler intimidated the insect and the monkey without much effort, but the feline monstrosity pounced on him and crippled him forever. The father was shocked, but another tamer with much more experience sitting next to him said that what he had witnessed was in fact a display of sheer incompetence. Many trainers are cruel to the animals they train, but only focus on intimidating them enough to obey and follow orders. But they remember who hurt them and are just waiting to pay back, all it takes is a moment of weakness ... A real tamer does not stop at submission. He mercilessly breaks the animal so that the mere thought of rebellion is terrifying to it" explained the aristocrat, and the white-haired woman looked at her in horror.

„It's terrible! How… how can someone do such things to another being." she said terrified. Lady Cala put a hand on her shoulder.

„I asked my father the same question and he couldn't find a good answer. The only thing we are able to do is not go to circuses and the like, such people did not earn money and support laws protecting animals." She patted Rosie's back and stood up. Bina would agree by all means, but she had the feeling that she was missing something. Some nuance that only these women understand… Throughout the story, Miss Daisy stood still, her fists clenched tighter and panting heavily. Why did this story make her so angry? What happened here that I can't see she asked herself in her mind. As Lady Cala was about to leave, Rosie asked her.

„And this beast, that's what happened to her?

The aristocrat looked at the deaf girl sadly.

„In a better world, someone would have mercifully shot her, but unfortunately, she was adopted by a dorky knight, a follower of Iomadae. Just wait for the tragedy, because once warped personality can not be fixed.

And finally, there was their absolutely unplanned companion, Captain Moonshadow. Bina had no real prejudice against pirates and other dark-star types. She herself was literaly „born" into the gang. She wasn't sure if she wanted to cooperate with this woman. According to rumors, she was either a freedom fighter and slayer of the vile Azlanti, or a deranged psychopath who didn't care about any conventions about respecting the lives of captives. Her first encounter with the pirate suggested that both opinions might be true. But then it was time to determine the route of the flight. Captain Moonshadow made contact via the links, and her masked face appeared on the screen. Arkan-tar, Lady Cala, Wrongdak, as well as Eti and Itel were present.

"So, we must reach Etheria, but our task is also to collect enough data on this place for possible future expeditions." Arkan-tar said. Meanwhile, the itel and Lady Cala turned on the holographic map, onto which they had mapped data from the maps in Lady Cala's possession, those given to them by the old leech and found in the accursed observatory, and those at the disposal of Captain Moonshadow. They exchanged their data, although the pirate came out was much better at it. But they didn't want to make an enemy out of someone like that. On the other hand, he won't learn anything new anyway, because the maps largely overlapped.

"My crew is all about wealth, so if we find treasure along the way, I'm willing to go a bit off track." She pressed the word a bit hard.

„We can't promise much.” said Lady Cala. "Especially someone like you." Please forgive my bluntness.” she bowed politely to Captain Moonshadow.

„Please don't forgive her. We'll throw her out the airlock.” Eti interjected suddenly, but Bina glared at her. Fortunately, no one reacted to what the girl said.

„I'm not a noblewoman with a gentle heart, so that I have to sneer hearing a few words of truth.” The pirate bit back.

„Erm." Arkan-tar grunted. "Back to our discussion. I suggest we visit a few of these planets first.” showed a couple of systems on the way to Etheria. „Rather, there is nothing interesting there, because earlier expeditions would have discovered something, but it's worth checking.”

„I agree”. Moonshadow said. “Uninhabited planets have some value, and people like me can get some benefit out of them.”

„That's nice, but note that we have limited supplies, and our crew has kind of doubled. Bina interjected, crossing her arms over her chest. They still had a fair amount of overstock, but she preferred to be careful.

"I'm sure we'll have an opportunity to restock along the way," said Lady Cala.

„I can give you something too. My crew consists of decent people for pirates.” added the strange pirate. Bina had to admit that at least she was kind to her charges, despite their quirks.

„It doesn't matter. There's nothing there, nothing anymore.” Wrongdak said in a gloomy voice joining the discussion. They all looked at him as if only now noticing that he was there.

„Please explain?” Bina asked anxiously. She had never seen a alien in such a gloomy mood.

„They rejected the light of Horde Prime. They were unworthy of his love.” he said quietly, staring at his feet.

„ What do you mean. Itel asked pale, apparently the first to guess the truth.

„He killed them. all of them. Entire civilizations, entire planets… Sometimes for resisting too much, sometimes because he thought it was the right thing to do. Sooner or later everyone met this fate.” he said, and there was a gloomy silence. Bina felt a cold sweat break out on her back. She had witnessed the annihilation of an entire planet, so she could imagine destruction on such a scale. However this was the Swarm, an unrestrained mindless force driven by an insatiable hunger, but here an intelligent being annihilated entire worlds because… He wanted it? Because it was his will? It was incomprehensible to her. She knew, though not personally, one person capable of such a thing, but even he ... But he was guided by logic, cold and ruthless. It was just madness. „Why did I go to this place cursed by devils and demons” she thought in horror. The others seemed to share her feelings. Arkantar scratched his cheek nervously, Itel stared at Wrongdak in disbelief, Lady Cala looked down sadly, Captain Moonshadow looked away. “She met the Wrongdak brothers, as did Dilayla.” she recognized him…though I don't think she was looking for him." Only Eti was ostentatiously unshaken. This was how she showed her emotions on normal days. By absolute peace. Wrongdak broke the silence. He pointed to two points on the holographic map.

„Icarus is here.” pointed to the first place, a star system located in a dense cluster of stars. "That's where my friends come from. Star siblings. After Horde Prime's death, they led a rebellion against him. Their planet was once the center of trade for the entire region. When he… When Horde Prime arrived there, it was all over. The inhabitants resisted and… they were punished. The destruction was… massive, but now they are rebuilding their world. I was there for a few weeks and I have some friends there…. We can also fly to Anywhere…" he pointed to the second point, a moon near the gas giant. He smiled at their confused looks. "It was the place where the guerrillas and others who stood against him hid. Radiation from the moon interferes with most ships' sensors. But I'll show you how to calibrate yours."

They thought for a few moments. Bina spoke first.

„I choose Icarus. This seems to be the place we are used to. Radiation doesn't sound very appealing, and I've had some experience with the rebels, and they're not conclusive.

The rest of her nodded, only Captain Moonshadow added.

„Show my crew how to calibrate the sensors. This may come in handy someday."

Wrongdak nodded. Lady Cala had been inputting calculations on the mapping device throughout the clone story. Finally she said.

"I've mapped out a flight route for us, it will take us three weeks of drifting." With a bit of luck, of course, because Drift is unpredictable.

Bina looked at her in surprise.

„Are you familiar with drift navigation? she asked the aristocrat, who smiled and said.

„Yes, and also in biology, ancient art and many others. I have five faculties. I'm also a first-class swordsman and I'm licensed to pilot starships."

„And I thought you had six faculties. Ethi said suddenly.

„Six?" Lady Cala asked in surprise.

„You know, don't forget the most important thing, the modesty faculty". said the feline girl.

Good point

Wrondak was getting impatient during the drift flight. He had been on ships using this drive before, and it was always an extraordinary experience for him. He has traveled in hyperdrive ships like the Darla and time-bending Horde warships. But this was something else. The inhabitants of the Galaxy used combined magic and technology to travel through space. They found themselves in a different world, a plane connecting all dimensions, and they moved over huge distances. The drift was not empty, there were fragments of other worlds floating here. He knew the drive's technical specifications, though not knowing anything about magic, he couldn't understand everything, but he hoped Entrapta would enjoy it anyway... Maybe he'd even look at this ship. He could imagine her screams of excitement at the sight of this technology, and it warmed his heart. But he had other reasons for wanting to return to Etheria.

He wanted to reassure Glimmer with the news that the Galaxy was not a terrible graveyard of worlds ravaged by Horde Prime. But he also wanted them to meet his new friends. Especially these two. Eti had something of Catra about her. Not only in appearance, although they were similar. She… had something in her's heart. Anger, but with her it was deeply hidden. He knew Catra's past, not as well as the others, but he knew she had been badly hurt. Eti had pain in her as well, but another, much more familiar one, but he couldn't quite pinpoint what it was... But Lady Cala Grayskull was here too... She was beautiful and strong and wise. He had never met someone so extraordinary. And she said her ancestor was Mara, the previous She-Ra, a woman who, like Adora, was one of the First Ibes. This meant that the hero of Etheri was no longer alone, she was not the last of the First Ones They didn't look alike, but at the same time they looked a lot alike… No, Lady Cala looks like She-Ra he thought in surprise, and felt a hint of uneasiness in the back of his mind, but then it dissipated.

He felt good on this ship among all these people, so interesting and unusual. He liked to help with test alarms and system checks, cooking and cleaning, and he thought he had won the crew's sympathy, except for Eti, who continued to fuss at him and call him names from the Wormdak. He didn't mind, from Glimmer and Bow's stories, he knew it could be much worse.

Earlier in the observatory, he had not noticed it, but after one of the trainings Eti took off the glove. Then he saw her hand and maimed fingers. He looked away, trying not to stare, although the girl must have noticed it anyway, because she growled at him incomprehensibly. He saw that Miss Daisy was also looking at the girl in amazement and horror. But he doubted if she really understood how much this girl had lost. He knew suffering, and he knew how much pain some people can inflict on others for no reason, just for the sake of pleasure… E*vil did not go away with Horde Prime. Recently, I was able to convince myself of this*

As he thought about it, he felt something rubbing against his calves and arms. He turned around smiling broadly. He saw Toshi, the electric fox and mascot of the crew. He stroked his head, and the animal began to sniff him looking for something tasty, which is probably batteries. When he did not find them, he flew away and wrapped himself around the neck of Eti sitting on the bench. The girl gave Wrongdak a triumphant look.

„The pet seems to like you”. said Miss Daisy.

„He just likes intelligent creatures. Eti said, clenching and opening her mutilated hand.

"If my observations are correct, then Mr. Wrongdak is a person as smart as you ... only fulfilling in other fields." said Miss Daisy in a sonorous voice.

„Usually animals like me. At first I was a little afraid of them, as was of Emily, but now I like them… they are simpler than intelligent beings. They hide less and are not as complex. Just like I understand Droids better than biological beings.” he said to both women.

- And and everything is right with Emily?” asked Miss Daiy, smiling at him.

„Okay... She's been a bit scared lately. This trip and what happened to us on Saltmarsh must have affected her badly.” The woman replied with a smile of her own.

- It's just a Dumbbot! Who would care?” Eti asked contemptuously.

"Emily is much smarter than anyone would have guessed…. She is a good friend who takes care of her friends on her own. Said the sorceress looking at the Droid, who was standing in the corner of the training room, who was staring at her very carefully. In fact, Emily seemed scared and anxious lately. Especially in the presence of a grim sorceress. He had seen the terrible power she possessed. The inhabitants of the galaxy practiced many kinds of magic, often very dark. The Bone Sages of Eox terrified him the most. It wasn't them that he feared, but the terrible prospect that their power offered them. There was nothing in the world he feared more than the return of Horde Prime. Miss Daisy also reminded him of someone terrible he had met a long time ago, but only for a moment. But she died on Etheri as did his Big Brother. He anxiously looked again at the dark sorceress, who watched with concern as Eti irritated the contracture in her hand. “She never showed us an iota of selfless concern. Not an iota of love. There's no point in remembering her," Catra once told him when he asked her about the masked sorceress.

„You mentioned your Older Brother.” Miss Daisy asked unexpectedly.

„Yes ... I am named after him ... in a sense ...” he replied, getting ready to do it again „Rosie told me about it. What do you think is going on with him?” she asked in a slightly bored voice.

„He took up residence on the Beast Island a terrible place, to purify it... He said he did it to atone for his deeds. My friend joined him and they live there together.” he replied smiling to himself.

„Together?” the sullen woman asked, surprised, which was… surprising.

„Yes, before they met, my brother was completely lonely for many years, but now he has someone and a very close to one another.”

„Hmmm... Well, I'm the absolute last person to judge them.” A sad, mysterious smile appeared on Miss Daisy's face.

Hurt but unbroken

One of the most important skills of a soldier is the ability to cope with long periods of inactivity. Soldiers of the regular army were drilled, mercenaries wasted money on fun. Fortunately for everyone, Dilayla was different from her colleagues in this regard. Yes, she liked to drink and sometimes used the services of marquees, although she didn't have to very often, but she saved most of her money for ... not quite sure what, exactly ... Retirement? For a quiet life? She wasn't really sure what she could do outside of the fight. She could go to the temple of Iomadae, but she could always do that…. She was surprised to discover that she has no real purpose in life and just drifts where fate takes her. I'm less than a leaf in the wind she thought as she lay on her bunk and stared at the ceiling. The cabin was cramped. A two-story bed, narrow but comfortable, a micro bathroom, a cupboard. Not much, but it was a luxury compared to military barracks or sleeping in the open air. She spent most of her time in the common room or cargo hold anyway, going through their gear, though of course she couldn't see what Lady Cala and her guardian had brought with them. She must ask Arkan-tar about it, who should be interested in what the aristocrat took, or even talk to Bina, who should take care of it.

She shared a cabin with Wrongdak. She could have taken Rosie, but she was still stressed about being suspected of being her sleeping bag friend And besides, then Doctor Quin would be in the same cabin with Wrongdak. There would then be far too much of a resemblance that he would end up in multiple pieces in jars of formalin. The alien was a pleasant if silent companion. She wanted to ask him about his friends sometimes, but he still didn't trust her enough to fully open up. Looking at her traveling companions, she wasn't surprised. She herself did not trust them at all, and the Lord Admiral had in his eyes, or rather eye, a coldness that she had seen only in the eyes of the most ruthless commanders, and this did not bode well, although those around him made her uneasy. Lady Ka looked like either a psychopath or a drug addict, and she was probably both. Lady Sorowflame… who sane would be called that?

However, she herself was not a very good conversationalist. Most of her stories were about her more or less heroic deeds during the war, and it wasn't something that some one who was being forced to be a soldier wanted to hear about. So she decided to tell him about her childhood and the good old days. However, she quickly realized that sooner or later her story would lead to the grim end that his big brother gave her family. So they spent time together in the cabin in silence, although there was not much of it ...

Back in Saltmarsh, she exchanged credits for hard currency, and bought some weapons, meds, and ammunition. She didn't know how long they would be in the ravaged zone, or what technology they had there.

Before leaving, Bina gave them a document to sign. In it, Rules of peaceful coexistence with my crew were written. She read the text carefully, she was a mercenary and knew how many traps a contract could contain, but she absolutely did not expect it. Because they had to accept extremely unusual rules.

“Eti is not a cat and has nothing to do with cats. This is an indisputable fact.”

"Lilka is an orc. It's an indisputable fact."

"Alatar is neither a small dragon nor a fat dragonkin"

"The Dragonkin Riders are a bullshit myth!"

"Eti doesn't purr. she growls"

"If Lilka says something is orcish, it is orcish even if it's jelly Skitermanders"

"We don't touch Alatar's nerdy stuff without asking"

"We don't touch Lilka's orc charms without asking.

"We don't touch maps and other Itel-owned equipment without asking"

"We do not touch Eti's weapons"

"We don't give Eti money"

"If one of the crew members takes some medicine, we don't investigate why"

"If any of the crew members are rude to you, let me know"

"We ignore the fact that Eti gives you new names, it's her quirk"

"Eti is an absolutely perfect, amazing and unique creature" (crossed out) "Eti be quiet!”

Wrongdak and Rosie read the document and signed it, eyeing the crew suspiciously. Lady Cala smiled understandingly. Miss Daisy laughed strangely. And Ysoka kept grumbling about not agreeing to it. Emily also got her copy signed by Wrondak. Dilayla thought for a moment. Had she not known who these young people were and how much they had been through, she would have snorted in amusement. But she understood that their quirks stemmed from how much their lives had hurt them. They are hurt but not broken. Not broken by any means

She liked these weird kids. They reminded her of herself. They were shaped by war and loss like the one she experienced. At least I had a place to go back to. They are alone in this cold universe at the mercy of the gods… she thought as she sat on a chair and watched them play some board game. Lilka, with glasses on her nose, looked bizarre, but also charming, she read the instructions aloud, because everyone remembered the rules differently. For the last half hour they had been arguing and shouting instead of playing. Rosie watched them confused, her glasses unable to cope with a group of shouting teenagers. When no one was looking, Eti tried to move the pawns with her tail, but as soon as someone noticed...

"I am not cheating. It's just that my tail and this pawn ended up in exactly the same place, and I refuse to let my tail's freedom be limited by a soulless piece of plastic, so it has been moved to a place that only by chance is favorable to me, but you of course you have to make contrived and absolutely baseless accusations because you can't accept losing." said the feline girl in this strange monotonous voice, while gently moving another pawn. Itel and Alatar looked at her with narrowed eyes, and Lilka continued to read the instructions aloud. Rosie was moving the pawn back to its place. Dilayla smiled at the sight. Now they were almost normal kids, albeit quite unruly. But she saw their morning "Prayers"

"Teeth for Offense"

"Tongue for a Lie"

"Hand for Punch"

"Eyes for an Eye"

"Heart for Betrayal"

Then she realized how much they had been hurt by the world and life. Itel, Alatar and Lilka, like most children of war like them, tried to hide their fear and pain behind a mask of bravado and aggressiveness. And Eti, that was another story. The girl, judging by her accent, came from the same place as Bina, which was the planet Atrax, which was, as far as she knew, in the same system as Kesler, which was the home of the other three young people, which was destroyed by the swarm. But sometimes her Absalom accent kicked in, like a moment ago when she was arguing about a moved pawn. In addition, Wrongdak claimed that she resembled his friend, if she understood correctly. She didn't want to be nosy, so she didn't question the white-skinned alien, but from the context she inferred that she might have come from Etheria... Did that apply to this girl as well? It just didn't make sense… How could she hide such important information among such a close-knit group? Unless they were all somehow connected to that planet and fulfilling some important mission for its authorities. A mission unsettlingly similar to the one they were on... If so, they're lost... Shouldn't she tell the others? She looked at Miss Daisy. The woman was writing down something while looking at what was displayed on her screen, but she was also listening to the kids' conversation all the time. I'm not sure I should warn people like them she thought with a wry smile. The crew of this ship definitely didn't look like sneaky spies or conspirators... Wrongdak could be wrong, after all, he himself said that he was a very young clone, and the education that this Horde Prime had given them didn't make life in society any easier. There were only two more problems. The feline girl, Eti, had a goddamn artifact prosthetic, and the captain of the ship looked like Lady Ka, which she wouldn't have cared much about if the woman in the half-mask didn't look like a fucker. People like her were dangerous as opponents, because they were absolutely unpredictable, but also as allies, because they didn't care that because their wonderful ideas, outsiders or allies would get hurt. "I'm just a trigger, do I have to deal with solving mysteries? Why wasn't bloody Verthani in my place? Or Mean Ysoka?"

Miss Daisy, meanwhile, went over to the game table, looked at the board, and took Rosie's piece and moved it. Itel stood up and looked at the situation on the board and said in disbelief.

„It's a good move... you actually reversed the situation on the board...”

The grim elf nodded and said.

"It's largely thanks to Miss Rosie." I just took advantage of an opportunity she may have missed.

"You didn't look like the kind who could…play games," Dragonkin asked in surprise. Miss Daisy smiled… nostalgically.

„Yes, although I know mainly the old ones, although I have learned a few in the meantime. For my previous employer, playing strategy games was one of the few distractions he allowed himself.”

This time the kids looked at her with some appreciation, although the green-haired elf seemed a bit suspicious.

„Do you know the game of river kings ...” Eti asked curiously. Miss Daisy nodded.

„Yes, although it was called a bit differently here... Princesses of rivers or control of waterways when I played with my employer. I also know a mandala, go... clash...” she mentioned the names of subsequent games so ancient that the place where they were created was no longer known.

"And you know how to play When the Horde Comes?" Lilka interjected. Miss Daisy looked at her in surprise.

„No, but I can learn. I also have a feeling that my former employer would like it.” she said in a thoughtful voice.

What are you up to? thought Dilayla, looking at the dark sorceress.

She was even more disturbed by what happened the next day. They were in the training room where Itel and Lilka were practicing fencing. The Solarian was extremely agile, and the red-haired girl attacked with a fury worthy of an orc of ancient legend, not one of those modern half-slaves. Dilayla liked to come here. As a kid, she was on the youth boxing team. Her first girlfriend was also member. They even won a local championship. She was so proud of herself then… now she could bludgeon someone to death with little effort, and in power armor she could tear apart a tank. "How much I've changed since then, how much innocence we've all lost." She thought, realizing how much she was like those kids. Only I got my revenge, They will have to wait a little longer. Whoever Horde Prime was, he was but one mortal being, and the Swarm is pure hunger, no one and nothing will satiate it

Itel deftly parried Lilka's next attacks, until finally the pissed redhead growled and grabbed her wrist, but then the elf cut her. The pseudo-ork girl screamed and dragged the elf to the floor, and the two girls began to struggle. Bina, who was standing in the corner of the room, approached them and began to separate them.

"Cam down, or you'll end up in Mr. Ilemshaw's infirmary!" she screamed.

"I don't think there's any reason to intervene. Previous incidents of this type, and I must say there have been many, have never resulted in any significant injury." Said a voice coming from the boom camera. It was Mr. Ilemshaw, a strange fish-like creature that lived in a large aquarium in the laboratory, cybernetically connected to the ship's various systems. He was weird and a little unsettling, but since she'd woken up with her cybernetic prosthetics, she found all the doctors unsettling.

„There were many of them, you say, it's so funy". Bina said coldly, staring at the camera and wagging her finger. At this time, the girls got up and, as if nothing had happened, talked about the fight, going to the training equipment. Then Lady Cala entered the Training Room and Dilayla's mood dropped. The last person I want to see Unfortunately, the lovely aristocrat spent a lot of time training. "Somewhere she must have gotten fit enough to run from the city to the observatory in less than two hours." Miss Daisy followed her like a shadow. Rosie, who was training by the punching bag, greeted the two women happily, but Eti, standing at the virtual shooting range, took off her goggles and stared murderously at the aristocrat. The girl has a nose, you have to give her that, thought Dilayla, smiling coldly. Lilka and Itel broke away from their exercises and bowed to Lady Cala and her guardian.

„I can never get over what a great training room you have created. It surpasses ours in Castle Grayskull in every way.” said the aristocrat, smiling warmly. Itel nodded, pretending she didn't care, but it was clear that her ego was boosted by the noblewoman's praise.

„Do you have any plans for raining session today?” said the solarian, Eti almost smiled and said.

„I propose to be a living target.”

The aristocrat ostentatiously ignored her and turned to the green-haired Elf.

"I'd love to train with you if it's not a problem and your captain agrees." Lady Cala asked, and Bina thought for a moment. The aristocrat began to put on training clothes, and then Dilayla approached the captain and asked her.

"You're not afraid that it might end badly.

„It will end badly for sure... But what are you asking about?” replied the woman with burgundy hair and laughed unhappily.

„Well, training with the wonderful Lady Cala.” The mercenary answered, a bit surprised.

"Oh, it's happened to her twice already, and nothing bad has come of it.Even Itel isn't offended by losing and doesn't get paranoid. I've known this kids for five years, you can even say half of my life, they even liked you. Especially Rosie became friends with my gang. That's the only thing that can cause problems.”

Dilayla raised eyebrow.

Bina sighed heavily.

„Alatar "likes" Itel. Itel "likes", Eti, and I have a feeling Eti is starting to "like" Rosie.” the captain of the ship explained to the mercenary. The way she said likes made it clear what kind of relationship she meant. Such shoes. I need to talk to Rosie. This girl may not realize what a feline girl might want from her. At best, it can be an embarrassingly awkward situation ... But Eti was so ... specific that it could have ended badly.

The girls stood in the ring. Both had holographic weapons attached to their training suits so that they emulated weight, and the vests themselves reacted to the blows they received, inducing slight pain. A very ingenious and useful device. Itel was armed with an equivalent of her Solarian blade, and Lady Cala carried a epee. The first exchange of blows was lightning fast. After the elf's aggressive attack, the noblewoman made a feint, winning the round. It was then up to Itel to adopt a defensive strategy, but the extremely fast attacks pierced the solarian's veil. Lady Cala then asked Lilka to join the fight as well. The red-haired warrior gladly agreed and this time the fight lasted a bit longer. But when Itel almost collided with Lilka, the aristocrat launched two lightning attacks and won for the third time. Only the last clash was more even and several times each side was close to losing. Finally, Lady Cala fell for Itel's feint and got hit. The elf, all wet from the effort, smiled triumphantly.

„She's good”. Bina said they are looking at Lady Cali. Dilayla shook her head.

"No, she's the absolute best swordswoman I've ever seen, and I trained in the Order of the Eclipse, so I've seen some really great fighters."

"You wanted to be a hellknight?" You don't look like that. asked the surprised captain.

„No, they took us in, me and my sister, after the dammed Horde ravaged Minitar. They really aren't as bad as they say. The lictor saved us and adopted Asindesa di Vir, she is also from our planet ..." But he covered her, not me or my sister she thought bitterly.

“Back to Lady Cali, she wins easily, but she loses by a hair, so you know.

"Are you suggesting she let herself be defeated?" Bina asked, and the mercenary answered her with a nod.

„Lady Cala... Can I train with you too?” Rosie asked, blushing.

"Of course not, Sparkle Hand. Then you'll smell like her and I won't be able to stand you.” Eti said indignantly.

"There really is something going on" thought the mercenary anxiously.

„Of course... How do you fight?” asked Lady Cala, smiling warmly.

„I can fight hand-to-hand, and I think I'm pretty good at it.” Rosie signed.

„You're awesome, Sparkle hand. You'll kick her noble ass. „ said Eti, and the white-haired girl blushed.

„Maybe. In hand-to-hand combat, I'm a bit worse. said the Aristocrat. Rosie took off her glasses and gloves so they wouldn't get damaged and faced Lady Cali, who assumed a combative stance. Aristocrat landed a few lightning strikes, which, however, were blocked and Rosie countered, which pushed Cala almost to the mat. The noblewoman was surprised by such resistance, but before she could do anything, the white-haired girl attacked her. Rosie's hands began to glow brightly. Dilayla had never expected such aggression from an intern. Nobleborn tried to kick Rosie, but Rosie grabbed her and knocked her to the mat. Lady Cala freed her leg by bending the knee at a very strange angle and began furiously attacking the white-haired girl with great force, whose eyes began to glow with a strange inner glow. Some of Lady Cala’s punches, like splayed sideways strikes aimed at the throat, could kill. Dilayla was already moving towards the combatants to stop the clash, but then Rosie hit the noble so powerfully that she flew to the other end of the room and slammed into the wall. For a moment the intern looked like she was about to lunge at Lady Cali and finish her off with one mighty blow, but then she shook her head and realized what she had done. Terrified, with tears in her eyes, she ran to the noble and tried to ask in sign language, but she had no gloves, so no one understood her. Dilayla herself approached the wounded woman, expecting the worst. The others in the training room did the same, though Miss Daisy did not look frightened. Lady Cala, however, immediately began to rise, and for a moment it seemed to the mercenary that a grimace of indescribable fury appeared on the face of the aristocrat, but after a moment it disappeared, replaced by a painful smile.

„Don't worry, I'm fine. I'll just need a day or two to rest in my cabin.” she patted Rosie head. The girl was rubbing her red eyes now. Eti put her hand on her shoulder, the living and biological one, and almost smiled reassuringly.

"Are you sure you don't want to go to the infirmary? The hit looked really scary.” Mr. Ilemshaw asked.

„No, I'm fine. Those bearing the mark of Grayskull are not so easy to break.” she smiled at the boom camera.

„It is not easy to break you. indeed „. said Miss Daisy

The sins of your brothers

They flew through the drift and Rosie felt happier than ever. She finally found friends who liked her. Even the itel, who at first looked at her like a Warg, after a few days won over to her. They played games, they trained, and she tried to help with the drill alarms, though she wasn't always successful, she wasn't a technician, and she didn't know how the ship worked. But she knew that no matter what she did, she would never quite be one of them. They had something in common that he would never fully understand. Alatar was always nervously checking that all the ship's security features were active. Lilka had to sleep with the light on, and Itel spent hours studying the reports of activity of the Swarm, but also other things she didn't fully understand. And then there was Eti, a strange Feline girl, so different from her, and at the same time she felt that she was very close to her. She couldn't understand why, but it was...

Days passed, full of pleasant routine. Even helping Dr. Quin didn't bother her, but Ysoka seemed preoccupied with her work, though she also had the impression that she was somehow frightened. After training with Lady Cala, she was ashamed to leave her cabin, fearing others would accuse her of hurting the aristocrat. She really didn't want to do it. Just after the first exchange of blows, she suddenly awoke to see Lady Cala lying against the wall. She was afraid that she had murdered an noblewoman, and she didn't even know how she had done it. This had never happened to her before, even when she beat up the one who was picking on her, she didn't lose her consciousness. “Does it have anything to do with me forgetting who I am? Did I do something so terrible that I didn't want to remember it?" she thought. Dilayla was amazed and Eti delighted with her display of skill. Even Itel had stopped looking at her indulgently, now she was only suspicious. It terrified her. She promised herself that she wouldn't fight in training anymore. She would love to never fight anyone again, but she was aware that during such an expedition it might be impossible.

Fortunately, Lady Cala didn't hold it against her. She was such a good person full of compassion and mercy, so it was no wonder that she forgave her. After all, she had hired Miss Daisy despite her dark past and had treated her like a member of the family, almost like a mother. Rosie, after that night confession, felt strange in the company of a dark sorceress. That woman did something very terrible, summoned a creature from the darkness that not only scarred her face, but changed it in a terrible way. She also knew that this was only part of her story, that the worst she hadn't told her anyway. Whenever she was around a dark elf, she wanted to assure her that she would not reveal her secret to anyone. In fact, she wasn't sure if the woman cared. She was gloomy and very resigned. When she wasn't with Lady Cala or teaching the young crew members, she was copying drawings of some flowers. At that time, Ireanis, this not so talented, but very cheerful elven sorceress, tried to befriend her. At first Miss Daisy wasn't very polite in rejecting her, but Ireanis was stubborn and eventually started bringing in some liquor that seemed to be made in a laboratory. Seeing this, Miss Daisy murmured softly.

„Good old moonshine from the technical department.” she laughed bitterly.

Rosie didn't like the gloomy woman drinking so much. Even less so that she usually did it surreptitiously when no one was looking. But she didn't know what she could do. She wanted to talk to someone about it. Maybe with Lady Cala? But she was ashamed to speak to the aristocrat after what she had done to her. Maybe will ask Eti. She was pretty sure that the other girl had been eavesdropping on her conversation with Miss Daisy, so that wouldn't amount to revealing a secret, would it?

The drift flight was weird. She had always felt better than anyone else the tremors of all the ship's mechanisms. In this strange magical place, however, everything vibrated completely differently. Normally she had trouble falling asleep due to the vibrations, but in the drift she felt calm, as if she were at home, in a familiar and safe place. She wondered where it was coming from, maybe before… before she got lost, she traveled a lot through space? Though some said that her capsule may have come from before the discovery of drift. She didn't understand much of it.

They arrived at the first planet three days after leaving Saltmarsh. They went above its orbit and began scanning it. On the bridge screen, they saw an ordinary planet covered mostly with blue oceans and a few greenish-brown lands.

"Alatar, are there any signs of life there? Inteligent one?" Bina asked him.

"No, I can't see anything..." Dragonkin replied. But then Arkan-tar instructed him to enter some new parameters that would detect if there were cities here and plot it on the map, which immediately turned red, indicating the remains of ancient settlements. Everyone stared at the map in disbelief, except for Wrongdak, who looked down sadly.

„I told you there's nothing there. That you will find only death here..." said the white-skinned alien.

„Judging by the degree of urbanization and the amount of radioactive elements and it must have been an advanced space civilization, albeit without interplanetary travel abilities. About three billion people lived there." Verthani's voice sounded exaggeratedly formal.

„Nobody survived?" Bina asked in a voice full of horror.

„No one technologically advanced, although perhaps someone is hiding in the wilds. However, they have lost their entire technological base, and recreating civilization will be much more difficult due to the lack of readily available resources such as coal and oil." Ilemshaw said. Silence fell. Rosie walked over to Wrongdak and took his hand to comfort him.

"Nothing... We're moving on," said Bina.

The next few days passed in a slightly more nervous atmosphere. Everyone tried to behave as before, but it was not possible. Arkan-tar was exaggeratedly cheerful, and Rechiza was darkly thoughtful. The young crew members tried to show off that they didn't care about the discovery of the ravaged planet, but she knew it must have been a shock to them. Especially itel, who seemed to feel guilty about getting everyone on this journey. When Bina passed by her, she looked away. The captain of the ship seemed concerned about what they encountered. Dilayla became very protective of her and Wrongdak. She tried to encourage them to train and spend time with the rest of the crew. She liked the mercenary, she was protective of her like a sister. She said she used to have a sister, but she lost her to Horde invasion. She wasn't entirely sure, but she didn't think he was telling her the whole truth. But she was brave and strong, although for unknown reasons she did not like Lady Cala ... But fortunately she made friends with Wrondak, who now needs so much support and help. He seemed to feel guilty about what his brother had done…this Horde Prime. She couldn't imagine someone so evil. Eti once asked this, and she looked away and said.

"I've known a few similar… or almost as bad. One was Binah's father, Jantar, and the other... The former ruler of a certain planet. He... dropped bombs on his own people... Never mind, she said in a strangely gloomy mood.

Four days later they reached another planet. It once seemed to be more technologically advanced than the previous one, but even then it was almost completely devastated. But they managed to pick up one message.

„This is shelter two hundred and thirty-two. We're probably the last one. Our planet got attacked by the Galactic Horde. They defeated us and enslaved. Horde Prime, its only ruler, promised us peace and mercy, but gave us only suffering. And then, after twenty years, they decided to destroy us. For no reason. We were simply deemed unworthy of the Light of Horde Prime. That we belong to the dark. He killed everything he didn't take. Hundreds of thousands went with him, chipped. We're hiding in an old shelter, but we're running low on supplies. We don't know if we'll survive outside. If anyone can hear us, please help us. And by no means trust Horde Pime. Everything he says is lies. Everything." and then the message looped.

Everyone looked at Bina with a silent question. The captain, however, closed her eyes and said.

„It's an old transmission. There's probably no one there. But you know, nature has rebuilt itself. Birds are chirping, fish are splashing. It's fucking awesome". she said firmly. Wrongdak hid in the shadows as if it were his fault.

„I... I'm so sorry. So much."

Then Lady Cala smiled softly at him.

„It's not your fault. No one can be held responsible for the deeds of his brothers." Dilayla, Eti and, surprisingly, Miss Daisy looked at the aristocrat suspiciously.

"Indeed, you are not responsible for the sins of your brothers."

They reached the next planet three days later. This time Rosie felt the atmosphere on the bridge was grave. Everyone already knew what awaited them here.

„I detected activity on the planet. There's some small power source there, some kind of outpost, a survivors' shelter. I turn on. Dragonkin said.

„No, do not do that!" the white-skinned alien shouted, but Alatar triggered the signal.

„Do not be afraid. Embrace the light of Horde Prime. Until now, you have lived in the darkness to which your wicked leaders and false gods have condemned you. But Horde Prime's mercy knows no bounds. Receive his light. Renounce darkness. Open your minds to his truth. He will drive the shadows away. Cast out Shadows! Horde Prime sees everything. Horde Prime knows everything.” and this message also looped. Everyone was silent for a moment in consternation. Finally, Arkan-tar broke the silence.

"Does it seem right to me, didn't he speak in Wrongdak's voice?"

Dilayla nodded and said.

„They're clones. Why are you surprised. It not Wrongdak fault. Oh gods That Prime was talking same bullshit to us, on the Minitar.

Bina shuddered.

„This fucker was talking bigger shit than my father, who was a bit of a crazy son of a bitch.” she said and laughed uneasily.

„Please… - Wrongdak said, and everyone jumped. They looked at the stranger, who was kneeling. Emily was hugging him. Streams of tears ran down his face. - don't turn it on again. I don't want to hear his voice. Never again…”

She played Clash with Eti and was impressed with the girl's skills. She has been fond of playing games since she was a child. Even in the Isles of Sorrow, the ability to play Go was highly prized. She always outplayed her sisters. Stormheart was never smart enough, and Midnight Mask was always too confident to win with her. They hated her for it, as for many other things, though the time for real hatred came later. In Mystacor, it was an important element of social life. Over the tables soteric mysteries were discussed, alliances and friendships were made, and positions plotted, and in her day the struggle for office was ruthless, or so it seemed to her. But for her, it was also about feeling triumphant. She has always loved competition, fighting for victory and seeing her rival defeated. She wanted to feel better, stronger than her rivals… Until she finally started playing the real game, where real beings were mepples and life or death was at stake. But even in the Fright Zone, she didn't deny herself this pastime. It wasn't hard to convince Hordak to introduce board games as one of the training elements. She was supported by the Usurper King and his daughter, so she got the right funds without any problems. The king's granddaughter was one of the first cadets she tried this training method on, though of course the old king didn't live to see that moment...

She has had many partners at the table since then. Hordak was a good player, but he was easily angered and hated to lose, though of course he always hid that fact. Scorpia only liked to play to be with others. She wasn't interested in the game, but the players. She quickly decided that paying attention to her was a waste of her precious time. And then it was Adora and Catra's turn, so the Scorpion princess was completely put aside. Adora… she always did everything with absolute focus and dedication. She even played board games as if she were carrying out some extremely important mission, the success of which depended on the happiness of her friends ... Actually, she wasn't too wrong. Catra was often scolded for Adora's failures. Unlike her Best Friend, she hated to play. Now, after all these years, she realized it was her fault. When she wanted to, she could be a great teacher, demanding but also understanding, able to bring out the best in students. Oh yes, when she wanted to. For Catra, she had nothing but anger and contempt. She couldn't find the patience to explain to this lively young girl how to play properly and enjoy it. Catra had always felt constrained by rules and regulations that hampered her clever mind. At the time, she believed that her charge was simply too lazy to impose the discipline needed to develop her strategic skills. But she knew that when she played cards, she could outplay anyone. Wasn't that a signal that her charge hid much more than she could see in her? Twice she made the mistake of letting her conceit and contempt obscure the truth about her students. He won't make the same mistake this time.

Eti was something else. She was undoubtedly of high intellect and liked to plan strategically. Like Hordak, she was better at abstract and context-free games, but unlike the former self-proclaimed ruler of Etheria, she was able to think outside the box and didn't get angry whenever things didn't go her way on the board. She was absolutely focused on the game and sometimes felt that the more the girl let herself be consumed by the competition, the more her personality changed. She becomes colder and more determined. It bothered her, but more and more things about this girl were a mystery to her. Starting from her hand. At first she thought it was just a rather unusual prosthetic, possibly magical. But this was an artifact of the First Ones that was, all too literally, in the hands of a teenage girl. It reminded her all too well of the sword that Adora had found… that had called her to become a tool and a weapon… Who was this girl going to become. The Punishing Hand. It sounds ominous, and yet the First Ones liked beautiful-sounding euphemisms, didn't they, Light Hope? she thought as she took down the spearman. They played Clash in variant what the girl called "Old Kingdom Rules," which made the game more dynamic and aggressive. It was an interesting variation, because the slower variations of this game. Then Eti beat her rider.

„Nice move. And clever.” She praised her.

„As painful as it is, sometimes the sacrifice of individuals is necessary to protect the majority”. Eti said in her calm, slightly colorless voice. She frowned upon hearing that sentence. It didn't suit her. It sounded like she was quoting someone. It happened to her sometimes, , she spoke then as educated, or at least pretended to be. Just… why? Usually the girl behaved like someone brought up on the street, or even in the wild. She was like the poor kids she'd oversaw in the Fright Zone, but wilder and more untamed. Just like Catra... Just like her sister. She started using the word in her mind in relations to the girl. It seemed very appropriate, after all, they were so similar ... But also different. Catra was like a pyre flame, so hot it could incinerate anything it touched. But such embers quickly burn out, leaving only black ashes. Eti was a cold flame, glowing blue like sparks in her eyes.

An icy fire that kills all life. Why do these thoughts come to my mind? What's happening here?

And these words. Once upon a time she would have agreed with them, but now? After everything she's been through? After the suffering and despair she has condemned others to in the name of her dark desires and ambitions... Never more…

„Miss Daisy? They're calling you to the bridge. Rosie said smiling. She shook her head, trying to get out of these strange thoughts.

„I'm coming. Later we will finish the game Eti.” she asked the feline girl, who also started to get up.

"I'm comming to, Sparkle hand. I hope now we will vote whether we throw Odora through the airlock." said Eti cheerfully, and the white-haired girl rolled her eyes. She liked Rosie and was glad that the two girls liked each other. It is a pity that the deaf woman had such sympathy for Lady Cala, unfortunately, she could not warn her of the danger her "ward" was.

She regretted her honesty that time on the roof, but after hearing what fate befell Angela, she just had to get drunk. Rosie started treating her differently from then on, but to her surprise, she didn't push her away, and even seemed to sympathize with her. It was so ridiculous that she wanted to shout to the girl what a monster she was. But she knew that if Rosie found out, she would hate her. And rightly so, because she deserved nothing else,

The white-haired girl also seemed to be hiding a secret. She had defeated Lady Cala in hand-to-hand combat, and even if only because she surprised her ward, it was an incredible feat. She could only hope Lady Cala didn't want revenge, because there was nothing she could do about it.

On the bridge were Bina, Arkan-tar, Alatar, Lady Cala and Wrondak, who seemed to be downcast. At first she hated him, if only because he reminded her of Hordak. But he was so different from him that she simply couldn't hate him the way she hated her former superior, and after what had happened to him after listening to Horde Prime's insane speech, she felt genuinely sorry for him. You have become weak and soft Shadow Weaver, and you must be stronger than ever before. For Catra and Adora… For Mikah and Glimmer… For Asindesa. she chided herself mentally.

Angela's face appeared on the screen… No, Captain Moonshadow face. She looked away because she didn't want to see what had happened to the former queen. Who she has become.

„Hello, my dear. We just came out of the drift and picked up a signal that should be of interest to you."

Wrongdak tensed, and Bina covered her face with her hand.

"Just please don't let this be any more of that Prime light crap or my vein will burst." The woman with burgundy hair grunted.

"It's… something a bit different." Much fresher. My navigation and communications specialist says it's no more than a year old."

A genuine and happy smile appeared on Wrongdak's face. She herself had to put in a lot of effort to keep an impassive face. She guessed they both expected to see more or less the same thing.

„Okay, come on." Bina said with a sigh.

Both she and Wrongdak received something they absolutely did not expect.

A Drow woman dressed in costly red robes with the golden symbol of the Horde appeared on the screen. She held a long silver-and-gold staff with a bat-wing symbol at the end. Her surroundings were shrouded in shadow. She raised her cane and spoke softly, with sadness in her voice.

„We live in an age of darkness."

She moved aside and their eyes revealed the body of a clone, with three eyes on one side, lying on his back, covering the wound in his chest with his hands. Above him loomed a silhouette half-shadowed in crimson, a great sword in his hand.

„Our Lord, Great Horde Prime was... murdered.” The drow's voice broke and tears streamed down her cheeks. “He sacrificed his life to prevent the Lady of Chaos from using a terrible weapon that would kill us all.” then the body flashed with a bright light pushing away the ominous silhouette. The animation was static, but clearly emphasized the message

„His light shone upon all who had faith in their hearts.” the previous scene disappeared and another image appeared before their eyes, this time it showed a clone in gold red robes, whose face was covered with scars. Behind him hovered the half-transparent form of Horde Prime, its glow illuminating the clone.

„Horde Ultimate became his chosen one. It was upon him that the essence of his radiance flowed… his spark. But not only on him.” Lines of other clones appeared around the Horde Ultimate, the farther away they were, the more modestly dressed. Farther still were members of the other races, all bearing the new golden symbol of the Horde.

„Anyone who feels its glow in the heart can prove it by faithful service and devotion. It doesn't matter if they are older or younger brothers, closer or more distant cousins. Each of you can carry the light of Horde Prime within you just like his chosen one and the prophet of Horde Ultimate. We must stand together united not only against heretics and traitors, but also against the forces of chaos that, though weakened by our Lord's sacrifice, still lie in wait to...

The previous image disappeared, and more figures began to appear. Their silhouettes were shrouded in black, crimson, and purple, their faces hidden in shadow. The first was a woman with mauve-pink hair, her face contorted into a ghostly smile, her hand burning with purple flame. Beside her stood a hunched, man with murderous look.

„Beware of the Witch Queen, whose dark magic brings death, and her Huntsman, who will rip out your hearts and bring them to his mistress to devour.”

Then a long-haired woman appeared, surrounded by thorny vines, blood was dripping from the thorns. Next to it stood a huge creature with pincers, shrouded in electrical discharges.

„Beware of the Lady of Thorns, who will nourish her gardens with your dead bodies. Beware the Lady of Thunder, whose unbridled rage brings death and destruction.

Then a white-haired woman in armor appeared, holding a spear and a steel net with spikes in her hands. A pink-haired woman appeared next to her, razor-sharp bits of obsidian and bits of metal circling around her.

„Beware of the Lady of War, whose cunning mind only seeks to thwart our efforts to bring peace to the galaxy, and beware of the Lady of Storm ready to strip your bones from your flesh and turn your land into a wasteland.

Then there was a woman holding a trident floating on a spiral made of black water, and beside her stood a man holding a torch and smiling madly.

„Beware the Lady of the Dark Waters! She will drown with polluted waters what her lover the Marauder will not plunder and incinerate.”

Then a strange female appeared, with tentacles growing from her head, and at her feet knelt a clone with red eyes and clumsy mechanical limbs. Beside it stood a monstrosity made of ice, blood, and stone.

„Beware of the mind eater who seeks to turn you into cybernetic nightmares as she did the Fallen, the villain whose betrayal nearly enabled our enemies to win. Beware of the Ice Bane that will freeze your blood to ice... But above all...”

Now a figure towering above all appeared. A woman with long fiery hair who wielded a blood-dripping sword in her hand. She rode a death-pale steed, and by her side on four legs stood a monstrosity resembling a hybrid of man and cat. He had one golden eye and one blue eye.

„Beware of the Lady of Chaos, who rides a palehorse, beside whom the Shadow Beast walks and Hell follows them."

The figures disappeared and the drow reappeared.

"Remember, you are the light of Horde Prime. We must all unite around Horde Ultimate together. Let our light cast out shadow."

The communiqué ended and everyone digested it in silence. Wrongdak stood with an extremely dumb face, but she had no doubt that she looked not much better. It was good, way better than anything I've come up with Alatar broke the silence.

„Eti, this Shadow Beast will start to compete with you." Dragonkin said.

The feline girl snorted.

„Draky, you must have too many teeth." she growled strangely gloomy. Concerned, Bina glanced at the girl.

"It's… it's all lies." There is no Horde Prime glow. He's gone and there's nothing left of him. They… My brothers. Everyone can be free." cried the pale-faced stranger.

„Some people are so afraid of freedom that they would rather die for the one who enslaved them. I know something about that." – said Bina

„The war is not only about territories and resources, but also about hearts and minds. If you get them, victory is yours." Eti said in a strange, not her voice.

Yes, neither you, Hordak, nor I, nor even Horde Prime could understand it. War is not only not converted obedient soldiers. Truth and Lies can also be weapons. She looked at Lady Cala, who was staring curiously at Wrongdak. Especially a Beautiful Lies

The light is darkening, the night is coming.

This was absolutely not where he wanted to be. Actually, there were plenty of places on Etheria he didn't want to be, far more than places he wanted to be. The way he was looking at his life, he was almost never where he really wanted to be. The Fright Zone, The Crimson Wastes, Castle Crypto…. In the latter, even Entrapta did not want to live and preferred to go to the Beast Island. He shuddered, that was also where they could go, considering how determined Lonnie was to get Hordak. Though, of course, she cared much more about Catra. This has been going on since they were kids. They hated each other then. It was difficult. Everyone admired Adora, wanted to be her friends. Well, they adored her. She…was nice to everyone, hardly even teasing him. But anyway, Catra, her beloved friend, always came first… Now she is simply her beloved. How strange it all is...

„Kyle, could you hurry up!" Lonnie yelled at him. They were in the northern reaches, one of the most inhospitable and desolate areas of Etheria. It was said to be a haunted land full of ghosts and shades. Shadow Weaver always told them there were no ghosts, but it was Shadow Weaer who sent her shadows to spy her enemies and rivals... Shesupposedly even stalked Adora that way.... Catra once brought an artifact from here with Entrapta and Scorpia. Soon after, of course, she sent Entrapta to the Isle of Beasts, and then everything fell apart.

„Comrade Kyle, you could at least focus on the mission instead of dreaming." His friend stood in front of him, glaring at him. She was beautiful even when she was angry with him. With Rogelio they always knew that. The reptile was now unloading crates full of equipment. They had two big little two-man off-road vehicles that had been made back when Catra had wanted to excavate here and look for ancient treasures… Hadn't she and Entrapta dug up some monsters too?

They were on the shore on a rocky beach, with the tundra dotted with blue-violet vegetation all around it, it was quite nice here if you think about it.

„You know, Lonnie, maybe it'll be nice here.” he said, trying to properly tie the packages to the trunk of the vehicle, although he was not very successful at it.

„We're not on a trip. It's not going to be nice here. We have an important job to do!” she growled at him.

He smiled friendly.

„That doesn't mean it can't be fun. I got marshmallows, sausages, banjo.” He said pointing to the packages.

„Banjo?” she asked incredulously, as if hearing the word for the first time.

„Well, when we build a fire, we'll cook sausages and marshmallows, and I'll play the banjo. This highlander, you know, the one-eyed one, taught me how to play and said I was pretty good.”

The woman's eyelid twitched for a moment.

„Kyle, we're not baking any marshmallows on any bonfire. One, it's damn cold here at night, two, we're in enemy territory, and three, HOW ARE YOU GOING TO MAKE A FIRE SINCE THERE'S NO TREES WITHIN 1,000 KILOMETERS.” She waved her hand, pointing to the endless plain stretching all around. He said with delight.

„So there are no enemies. And we can bake on these portable stoves.”

She underestimated his enthusiasm, for she shrieked, then turned sharply to Octavia, who stood proudly in the bow of the gunboat.

"Could your sailors, by their grace, tighten up and help Rogelio more."

The octopi-woman only after a moment turned very slowly towards her.

„Comrade Admiral Oktawia reports that, for fear of maintaining the morale of the crew on appropriate level, she cannot force her to be more intensively involved in unloading. „The one-eyed woman informed in a cool tone. She was Scorpia's age, but unlike the scorpion princess, she didn't like hugging her friends... Actually, she didn't like anyone, including Lonnie. It had been since Catra had taken her eye. I guess it was just her dislike of Catra that made her work for the Comrade General. They didn't have many ships because most of them either sanked by Mermista or destroyed Horde Prme. Only a handful survived, and only a few were held by the People's Rebellion. They came here by subterranean rivers, and then by the swampy river Mudribbon. It was a terrible place full of mosquitoes and strange predatory reptiles… Not that I have anything against reptiles. he smiled as he looked at Rogelio's muscular frame. Oh, and there are no damned ones here... He heard a shrill buzz and felt a prick on his cheek. He hit himself, but it was too late. He saw blood on his fingers.

„Lonnie, have you ever wondered if Shadow Weaver was bitten by mosquitoes?" he asked, finally strapping the package to the vehicle. Lonnie and Scarlet, who was standing next to her, gave him looks as if wondering if he was crazy.

"Kyle, I'm not thinking about our crazy… our fucking lead officer at all, and certainly not about whether or not the bugs liked her." And besides, do you remember what I told you? There were cockroaches and spiders and earwigs in the Fright Zone, but no damn bees or mosquitoes.

He thought.

“I remember when Catra put earwigs in your bed. You woke up the whole ward with your screams... It must have been after you told Adora that the earwigs enter the ears at night and puncture the eardrums. She couldn't sleep for two nights because of it. Me too... I guess I won't be able to sleep tonight either. And then Shadow Weaver said it was a stupid idea, and that where she came from, there are slimes that can come in through our noses at night and take over us... "We all couldn't sleep then. After two days, even you and Catra weren't growling at each other and you even fell asleep with your head on her shoulder."

Lonnie flinched when he mentioned pinches. She clearly didn't like the memory.

„Shadow Weaver said a lot of stuff and not much of it was real. Now everyone knows about it.” She nodded, looking to the side thoughtfully.

„Sometimes it is true, but not in this case.” Dr. Moors said, the cylinder resting among the other packages on the vehicle. He was extremely tied, though from what he said it was rather doubtful that anything would happen to him, even if he fell out of a speeding vehicle. He was in outer space...

„What do you mean?” Comrade General asked anxiously.

The Doctor extended one of the metal tentacles and rubbed his lid with a grotesquely human gesture.

„I heard that these types of creatures have been living in space for eons and have been encountered by Mi-Go many times, standing in the way of their great and far-reaching plans. Well, our lord’s right hand didn't lie as much as you might think, although as far as I know it didn't realize how terrifyingly beautiful our universe is.

Lonnie looked at the brain in the top hat silently before commenting.

"It's not knowledge that will make me sleep better."

„But every knowledge makes our lives richer and fuller. We just have to learn to enjoy it as the most wonderful delicacy.”

"I'm sorry to butt in, Comrade General, but there is wisdom in the doctor's words." Scarlett interjected. These types of creatures can become useful to us if we learn to control them.”

Lonie was silent, her lips pressed together. She looked down. She seemed depressed since that meeting on Dead Mountain. Something was bothering her, but they didn't know what. She continued to sleep with them, but in all other respects she had distanced herself from them.

„Do you really see me like that? As a general capable of doing anything in the name of victory?” she asked quietly, though he wasn't entirely sure who.

„That's what leadership is all about. Making decisions no one else could.” Scarlet said

The former cadet giggled with an absolutely joyless laugh.

"Glimmer already did it once… Is it better then?" she asked herself, and looked at them in surprise, as if she had only just noticed that they were still here.

„When you're packed, let's go. Kyle with Rogelio and me with Scarlet...and the doctor.

Normally, he wouldn't have cared which one he was riding with because he loved them both equally, but now he felt that Lonnie needed the closeness of one of them more than ever before...

She did not return from Mystacor as soon as she wished. The events that took place there deserved meticulous research in order to explain, although she wasn't sure if she wanted to know truth. “I was fighting the non-dead. A being that has risen from the dead…” she thought as she walked through Brightmoon's bright and clean corridors. If anyone had told her that a corpse had risen and drank the blood of living beings, she would have burst out laughing in their face. An autopsy performed by a medic from the Fright Zone revealed that the entity she "killed" had been dead for some time, though it's hard to say since when… Only Aize was not shocked. Frightened yes, but not shocked…They also said that this statue represented Netis, the lady of magic and mystery. She snarled because she had had enough of this Eridani nonsense, and she didn't like that it could take root on Etheri, her planet. She walked along wagging her tail slightly, full of anxiety, wanting to talk to Glimmer and ask her for help. Melog walked beside her, emanating anxiety and nervousness.

„It's you!” she heard a voice coming from the side corridor. The sound of it sounded eerily familiar to her. She turned around and saw a tall woman. Pointed ears indicated that she was a Seihe, but she had gray skin and dark blue hair. She was dressed in dark blue robes and wore a veil over her face. She looked so familiar that she felt the hairs on the back of her neck stand on end.

„Yes?” she asked in such an uncertain voice that she hadn't heard from herself in over five years, almost six. - How can I help you?" No, it can't be „You're the Light Spinner ward?” the woman asked, and she felt a warm tingle of relief run through her body. "No, it's not her. Shadow Weaver is as dead as she was." She smiled at her interlocutor without hiding her claws.

"You mean Shadow Weaver, no one has called her in diffrent way in thirty years. And no one doubted that this name perfectly reflected her nature. But you're right, I'm Grand Marshal Catra and she raised me, if conditoning can be called upbringing.” she replied in a firm voice. She wasn't afraid of this woman... She Shadow Weaver wasn't afraid either, not anymore... but if she came back as non-dead...

„My sister always liked old fairy tales.”

„Are you her sister? She had a sister? she gasped with difficulty. The idea of having a sibling was almost unknown to the cadets, but in the case of Hordak's right hand… She was a mystical figure to them, divine as they would say on Eridani. She could kill almost anyone in the Fright Zone, though she sometimes had to resort to trickery, and it was up to her good will to torture someone as a matter of discipline. Having a sister, family… anyone close to her? It wasn't on her mind.

„She didn't mention us? It's so typical of her. She betrayed her family by going to Mystacor instead of serving her clan.” said the woman. Hearing her words made her blink in disbelief.

„Excuse me? You accuse her of living in Mystacor? Of all the evil, horrible, or just simply mean she had done, it bothers you that she moved to a sorcerer's college... A woman who was fond of child abuse..." She spoke with growing agitation, but the strange one cut her off.

"And exalted dramas ... what she instiled in you. As I heard about her second ward, she also likes to show off senselessly."

Now, hearing the woman's words, perhaps for the first time in many years, she was speechless. Does she know what she's talking about? Did she sleep the last thirty years under a rock? Seihe were long-lived, but not so detached from reality… she thought looking at her interlocutor. After a minute, she decided she hated it. It was a record, even Horde Prime took longer.

"Tell me who you are and what you want from me, instead of wasting my time talking about things you have no idea about…" she snapped, and Melog radiated the red of their anger. The strange woman looked at her with piercing green eyes. For a moment, a stupid question flashed through her mind, whether Shadow Weaver ... Light Spinner looked at her interlocutors that way too.

„I am Midnight Mask, Black Blade of the Royal Yago Clan. I have come here to negotiate the resumption of trade relations... after the appropriate compensation has been paid.” said Midnight Mask in the hard, stern tone she had grown accustomed to throughout her childhood. She smiled the way she hadn't since the end of the war, menacingly and contemptuously.

"Queen Glimmer will talk to you when she sees fit, and she has more important things to do. Herr own wedding, Victory Day celebrations, negotiations to form a galactic alliance, or even deciding what to eat for tea, so please get out of my way and mind your own business. She took a step forward, waiting for Midnight Mask to move away. The woman narrowed her eyes to very narrow ;slits.

"There will be consequences for your impertinence!” She huffed, but only chuckled in response.

"Are you threatening me, Great Marshal of Etheria, someone who wasn't afraid of your sister, of whom you're a pathetic imitation, or even Horde Prime? Or maybe you are threatening Queen Glimmer? Techmaster Bow? She-Ra herself? Or maybe the whole alliance at once, because why split up? Do you really understand how idiotic you sound?”

Midnight Mask snorted contemptuously and turned away, then walked her way. She frowned as she watched him leave. “I'll have to have someone follow her... Or she'll cause trouble. Good thing Adora isn't here. Her relationship with Shadow Weaver was more complicated... and it would be harder for her to turn the bitch off... or would it be better if the three of them talked about her cute little sister?" she thought, and headed for the Queen's office.

The door was guarded by Brother Blade, the only clone in the Brightmoon Guard, at least for now. He was accepted mainly because of the symbolic meaning of the act, one of the former invaders was now defending their queen, but it must be admitted that he performed his duties admirably. Surpassing the skills of Brightmoon's former guardians may not have been much of a feat, but Brother Blade was vigilant, disciplined, and valiant. And also quite likable. He had long, shoulder-length hair, and his eyes were a deep green.

"I would like to kindly inform Grand Marshal Catra that Queen Etheria Glimmer is asleep, and judging by the volume of her snoring, quite well." he said as soon as he saw her Indeed, she heard loud snoring coming from inside. In recent months, Glimmer had begun to resemble Adora in her penchant for throwing herself into work. In fact, it should be starting to worry her, but after the wedding, all four of them will go on what is called a honeymoon. Quite a nice custom of lying in bed together and doing nothing. Most importantly, it had absolutely nothing to do with honey, which she hated.

„Sorry, but I need to take her time. But then I'll tell her to go to sleep.” she said with a friendly smile. Blade's brother opened the door for her, and she entered the office. Once she had it, she realized she missed Wrong Hordak. "I wonder where he is now? Let nothing happen to him because of Entrapta's strange and sily idea, she thought, worrying for a moment about the fate of her extraordinary friend.

Glimmer was sleeping, leaning on the table, her head lyinh on her arms. Her wings fell over her shoulders. She grew them after the war and at first they were a curiosity that annoyed her more than they pleased her, but the sight of Glimmer trying to fly on tiny wings and getting nervous when she failed was extremely amusing. But now they had grown, and while they were still nowhere near the size of her mother's, they already allowed her to glide. They were also admired in Eridani, where having wings was the domain of their leaders. Papers were scattered around, as well as a small sandwich. She smiled mischievously. Stealing food from others while they slept was one of her favorite pastimes. She approached the queen slowly and carefully reached over to the sofa and took a bite, then grimaced in disgust. “Apple jelly, herring and pate? Did that occur to her?" she thought, but ate the rest. After all, it was stupid to leave traces of the crime ... It was probably some family treat, a recipe passed down from generations. She crept up to Glimmer and leaned in slowly.

"Hey Sparkle, you fell asleep at the alliance council meeting..." she said softly into the queen's ear. Glimmer jumped sharply and called out.

„I don’t sleep! I heard everything.” She looked around with blank and frightened eyes. But then she realized where she was and looked at her reproachfully.

„Come on?! You look so funny and cute when you wake up and you don't know where you are or what you've been doing, but you pretend otherwise.”

„Very funny.” she said, frowning. Melog jumped on the table and started rubbing against her as an apology.

„Sorry, sorry.” She laughed, but then became serious. Look, we need to talk about something.”

„Did something happen? Something about Auntie Casta?” Glimmer asked cautiously, she knew that their relationship with Castaspella was not the warmest, although both tried to improve it

„Not exactly ... I went so that they would copy one book ... and everything got a bit complicated ...” she sighed and began to tell her about everything. About her coming to Mystacor, meeting Aize, going through that damn book, going through the scribbles with the scribes, finding the corpse, and finally fighting the non-dead monster… Glimmer listened to her story carefully, occasionally making a quiet comment like "It's weird… ohhh… Incredible!" but after the description of the fight with this creature, she blinked her eyes a few times and asked uncertainly...

„Are you sure he was non-dead? Maybe it just seemed like it?”

she sighed. She was ready for these kinds of questions. In the old days, she would have snapped at anyone who didn't believe her, but now she answered her friend in a calm voice.

"I'm sure, he didn't die until I pierced his chest. Besides, he had been there for ages, alone and locked up. Castaspella and that weird Nightgale can tell you I'm telling the truth." she said firmly. Though the Head Sorceress of Mystacor had been in a trance while they fought the creature, that didn't change much. Glimmer groaned and collapsed on the table.

„I believe you, but understand ... The dead do not walk and do not bite the living, it's like a definition."

„It will have to change the definition ..." she said more gently, and the queen rubbed her forehead „Still, then ... Why do I have the impression that problems multiply? I thought life would be easier after all this, but I feel like it's getting harder."

She smiled at the queen because she felt exactly the same.

„Maybe it's just us, Sparkle, because the last few years weren't so bad. Only now we have more activities and this wedding… Anything else happened?"

„An emissary from the Isles of Sorrow wanders the corridors, and she took to heart making my life ... full of sorrow. She keep asking when we will make amends for the past insults we have inflicted on them, though I am not sure what amends and what insults it might be."

She winced.

„We already met in the corridor and had a ... chat. You know that's Shadow Weaver's sister?"

Glimmer's astonished look showed that she had no idea.

„Her sister... She had a family?"

She nodded.

„I couldn't believe it either. It seemed so ridiculously absurd...”

Glimmer thought for a moment.

„You know, everyone ... almost everyone had a family. And almost everyone was once a child. Even she wasn't always… what she had become.” There was a note of regret in the queen's voice.

She looked at her friend. Of all the inhabitants of Etheria, only Glimmer knew the better, nobler side of the Shadow Weaver. She taught her sorcery and gave her much of what she knew. That's what made her such a good queen. Even after learning that a dark sorceress had sent her father to Beast Island, she couldn't hate her. I guess only Castaspella had slightly warmer feelings for her. Finally, Glimmer spoke up.

„And what she said. this sister.” – Glimmer asked

"She said her name was Midnight Mask and claimed to be some kind of Black Blade. And then she started threatening me with repercussions for my impertinence.”

The queen ground in her mouth a bunch of extremely nasty, but also picturesque swear words. She could never get over how a princess and queen could use such language. "Where did she learn it? What did Angela tell her when she heard those words?” Hordak hated swearing as much as alcohol, and had him banished from the Fright Zone. Shadow Weaver punished them severely for "foul tongue," and even now she had a hard time coming up with a harsher word than "Damn."

„Consequences! She threatened you in my palace!? cried the queen at last.

„Yeah, I guess it's family custom. I explained to her who she was threatening and told her she was just a poor imitation of her sister. She left offended, but I'll have the guards keep an eye on her. It may not be Shadow Weaver, but someone calling themselves a black blade must be dangerous.” She sighed and added „I have one request to you, Sparkle”

Glimmer raised an eyebrow curiously.

„You could teleport Castaspella and Bow's dads to Mikah. They want to discuss with him the matter of this book and what happened in the underground of Mystacor. They don't want another Shadow Weaver to be born. :Or come back from the dead: she added in mind.

Glimmer nodded but then said.

„Netosa asked you and Entrapta to visit her. He has something important to show you. I'd take you right away, but my teleport still doesn't work on the island. Hordak must be happy about it, but it makes communication very difficult.

She sighed heavily.

„I'll pick up Entrapta first. I really wanted to visit her, and Netosa better not meet Hordak. Our animosity isn't that long and deep... If things get out of hand, I'm not sure I can separate them... And to tell you the truth, I don't know if I want to.”

Night Gale liked Scarlet's body, but at the same time she felt as if she had been tied up with metal wire. All the time she had the feeling that the wire would break and return to its natural form. After taking the form of her dead friend for a long time, she felt the pain, slight at first, but slowly increasing until it finally was becoming unbearable. Fortunately, Castle Crypto was a real labyrinth that few people wandered, and she knew nooks and crannies that no one ever looked into. No one was looking for her. Even the real Scarlet wasn't very popular amongthe cadets, and her disposition don’t won her friends. She was lonely, but she always had been, or at least she had always had time to return to her hated but comfortable true self.

But Lonnie wanted, as always, to be on this trip in person, and of course she wanted her to go with them too. She considered getting out of Night Gale's duties in Mystacor, but that would be suspicious, and besides, the cult would definitely want to keep an eye on the Comrade General doings, especially during this trip for Mi-Go. She could only hope the whole thing didn't take too long or she might have a problem. She absolutely couldn't allow anyone to know the truth about the dark forces permeating Etherian society, but she couldn't afford to lose Lonnie either, because it would mean the loss of years of hard work. From what she had heard from the cult leader, the Voice from Shadow, that to Etheria was coming someone who, by the will of Creeping Chaos, would lead the cult to a bright future, someone very important to her…

It was cold here in the North Reach, though they were at its southern end, relatively friendly, but also inhabited, if fortunately sparsely. Their vehicles were gravity powered, the same way as the Horde used in their tanks, though slightly more efficient due to Entrapta's improvements, and unlike many other vehicles in Hordak's army, they where quite comfortable. It was also the result of the ingenuity of the purple-haired princess. She wrapped her arms around Lonnie's waist, as did Kyle with, but he had trouble getting around the mighty lizard torso. Lonnie had a strong, lithe body and was quite attractive. She considered taking advantage of the fact that her relationship with her boyfriends had cooled, but that could be risky for a number of reasons. First of all, it could weaken the People's Rebellion, and it was needed by Creeping Chaos as a pawn on the board that was Etheria.

Eventually they came to a small lake that froze over at dusk. They decided to stay here, eat, settle their needs and discuss further plans. Some azure Etherian bird splashed in its waters. It was quiet and peaceful, Kyle seemed quite content despite the cold. Imp slept snuggled up in Rogelio's back carrier, which he only left here... well, when he had to. Lonie unfolded the map and turned on the old navigation datapad.

„According to old Grizzol maps, as well as satellite maps downloaded from the Prime’s installation, we are on the right track. It's some hour's drive from here. Parts of that relay Catra had installed would be perfect for our plans, it's a weird the original was never used. „Lonnie said with a much better mood.

„It wouldn't be of much use. No matter how much Hordak amplified the signal, it still wouldn't penetrate into another realm of existence.” Night Gale said. They looked at her questioningly.

„Etheria was hidden in another plane called Despondos. It was an artificially constructed place, a little universe, created by the First Ones to hide their weapons.”

„Grizzol who will be happy that he was freezing his ass here for no reason. Well, this time it will worked.” Lonnie grunted

"Prime was able to subspatially transmit information in his empire, it may not have covered a large area, at least compared to his fantasies ... We have one, but the Mi-Gos use much more standard technology in this area, even if using the biological equivalents of our devices . Of course, they also often use magic and technomagic.” Dr. Moors was saying, gesticulating with his tentacles

"Can't they use magic to talk to their own now?" Kyle interjected, and Lonnie raised an eyebrow questioningly.

“As far as I know, the Overseer has no magic skils, at least not powerful enough.” replied the brain in the cylinder.

"If they had someone powerful enough in that aspect, they would have made contact with their people many years ago…" Scarlet added.

„But a moment ago you said that once ... when we were in another dimension and then such contact was impossible.”

She refrained from showing irritation. Is this how you felt listening to the ignorant? Like Father, for example? She smiled the gentle, inscrutable smile she reserved for Scarlet and began to explain.

“Other planes can be contacted, from Despondos but not the first material plane we're in now, though it still wasn't easy. I guess that's a loophole the First Ones overlooked, because they couldn't use magic well, not like us. It is said that in Umbracore, a lost school of magic, other realms, such as the Abyss and Abadon, were often reached to summon terrible beasts to do their bidding. Let's not forget about our former lead officer, of course. The being she summoned was said to be even more powerful than She-Ra..”. she said and almost swore, realizing she might have said too much.

Lonnie scowled at her as if Scarlet had told her she was about to cut off her leg.

„I'll sleep much better knowing this. You can be pleased with yourself!”

They arrived as was said, an hour later. The land was covered with dwarf trees, which covered many small and unusually symmetrical hills. Kyle looked around, really got the bonfire idea into his head.

„This is the Land of Barrows.” she said over the communicator.

„Bar… what?” Kyle asked.

„These are tombs. Apparently, in the old days, the local inhabitants buried their rulers here. We travel around the cemetery.”

The dream of a bonfire went out like a match flame in the rain.

Unfortunately, the building erected here by the Horde has been completely destroyed. Lonnie began to show off her newfound swearing skills, but something else caught her interest. On the highest mound stood an obelisk of black metal, covered with blue inscriptions in Aklo. At the top was an effigy of the head of a red-eyed monster with monstrous fangs. Kyle stood next to her.

„This head is even similar to Hordak, but such inscriptions remind me on this stele in the mountains, or is it also something related to this Atakaka?” He asked. She didn't even have the strength to get angry, she was so fascinated by what she saw.

“Atlah-Naha…no, that's something else entirely. Lonnie calmed down a bit and stood next to her. “This one is dedicated to Ithaqua, the walker of the wastes, the silent wind, the great cannibal. „she said with undisguised delight. Lonnie growled furiously.

"It's wonderful that you found some fucked-up horror to be fascinated by, but tell me what the fuck I care."

She smiled triumphantly.

„Ithaqua is one of the Great Old Ones, a very powerful being... It's the second such monument on our planet. Does this mean that there are more of them dedicated to other Great Old Ones? It's... puzzling and a little disturbing... at least for those who don't have an open mind...” seeing as Comrade General narrowed his eyes at her, she went straight to the point. “Somewhere nearby was the city of the Elder Things, a powerful and ancient race that had roamed the universe for a billion years.

„Are these relatives of Mi-Go? Kyle asked, paling visibly.

„Not exactly... Their technology was more focused on using purely biological beings, though they were extremely skilled physicists, although they used machines on a much smaller scale even than our allies, let alone the First Ones. Sometimes they fought with Mi-Go, sometimes they cooperated... They were ruined by the rebellion of their slave race called the Shogoths...”

„Slaves?” Kyle asked hesitantly, and Rogelio joined in with a grunt.

„Conscious beings that are the exclusive property of other intelligent beings. A bit like servants of our old friend Horde Prime, although usually with a buy and sell option.” she explained with a gentle smile. Her companions looked at her with horror at the memory of a practice not practiced on Etheri aalmost since the departure of the First Ones. But Lonnie thought about something.

„They fought with Mi-Go... You think there might still be something in their city. she asked, and Scarlet nodded.

„The technology of the Ancient Races could have lasted for millions of years. – „Just like the traps and guards they left behind" she added mentally.

Lonnie looked at the ruins of the outpost that Grizzol had built. The commander probably built the outpost in this place, because the obelisk located next to it was visible from afar and was an excellent landmark.

"Okay, now that we're here, let's look for these ruins, otherwise this whole journey will be just one big waste of time..."

„You are right, Comrade General. The light is darkening, night is coming. It would be unwise to be in such a place after dark." said Night Gale thoughtfully. The two men nodded in support, and Lonnie agreed, obviously not wanting to waste any more time. However, the sorcereress sensed the dark force churning under their feet. The destruction of the Heart of Etheri and the release of magic had unexpected results. As the light of the mystical moons waned, something awakened in the dark corners of Etheria.

He smiled as he saw the flickering flames of the fire that had just been lit. He could have used magic, but all those years on Beast Island he had tried to not waste his power and he hadn't changed that habit. He looked around the old mountain hut where he had stayed when he left Brightmoon. It had been happening to him lately, and more often, and he had considered moving here permanently. Nothing kept him in the palace. His daughter was a strong and independent woman who did not need her old father to interfere in her affairs. Especially now that he's starting his own family. She was also a queen, and better than Etheria could have hoped for. She made mistakes, like any ruler, but she was able to learn from her failures. If she needs his help or company, she can always visit him. Although much could not help her. At most, show how to catch the tastiest worms. When Adora found him, the war had just ended. He helped lead the Rebelion until… He was a man of war, and who needs one in peacetime?

But there were other things as well. He was… Dead, dead for thirteen years… For thirteen years, everyone in Brightmoon mourned him, he was to them a symbol of the invader's wickedness. He felt… like he had let everyone down. That he had failed everyone with his life. Especially since they had not long ago lost the queen who had ruled them for centuries... and in return they received an old man who had lost his life.

Angie... That was another reason he didn't want to be in the castle... His love for his wife and daughter had sustained him through all those years of torment on Beast Island. And then it turned out that she had left, had sacrificed herself to save them all. Now, every nook and cranny of the palace reminded him of her, the happy years they had spent together... The few moments of peace they had spent... remained only a painful memory that only hurt him. He couldn't stand this feeling of loss, so he spent more and more time here. He felt much more at home in this midwife's hut in the wilderness than in the chambers of the palace. He was used to enduring hardship, though of course this place was no match for the Beast Island in the hardships it exposed those who lived here.

He sensed a burst of magic. He could recognize the vibrations caused by Glimmer's teleportations, and even determine if she had arrived alone or with friends. This time she had brought at least two people with her, so either Glimmer's friends wanted to visit him or something very important had happened. Given that Adora was now on Icarus, it was probably the latter. He sighed, picked up his sorcerer's staff, then stood up. He felt pain in his old bones and stepped outside. In front of the cabin he saw his sister and also Bow's dads. Everyone looked around the forest around them. Castaspela a little apprehensively, Lance and George curiously. Well, his sister and wild nature weren't a very good combination, but Bow's fathers, for all their eccentricity, lived in a library nestled in the middle of a Whispering Wood. They had to be able to cope with a variety of conditions.

„Oh, welcome to my modest ... a bit rough doorstep. I can make mulled wine with cinnamon, I also have stew and cheese, if you wantk we can make fondue.” he said, although he rather expected that it wouldn't end with a dinner with friends. The eyes of all three lit up at his proposal, but Castaspella shook her head first and, smiling sadly, said.

„I'd love to, but maybe later. We have important matters to discuss.”

Hearing it in her voice, he understood that the matter was extremely serious. He invited everyone inside and began preparing the mulled wine as he listened to Castaspelia's account. His sister told him about Catra's arrival with the Thousand Thousand Masks, finding the corpse, how she had gone into a trance. About the vision of an alternative reality, although she got a little confused here. Finally, she told about the Great Marshal's fight with the non-dead monster. He listened to all this with full seriousness, with absolute concentration. Then he poured everyone a mug of mulled wine with cinnamon.

„The light is darkening, night is coming. We need to warm up.” he said, breaking the silence.

„She liked it.” Castaspella suddenly blurted out. – „Fruit wine from Plumeria.”

„Angela? I mean Queen Angela?? Lance said surprised. He and his husband, they never met his wife.

„No... Shadow Weaver. Glimmer always made sure she had a bottle in her chamber. Apparently… the day we won, she drank the last we had. Sorry, I don't know why I'm talking about this.”

She looked embarrassed at her brother. She thought she had hurt him by mentioning the dark sorcerer. He had no problem with that, he and Catra had talked about that woman, but his sister was unaware of it, hardly knowing who he had become.

"Catra told me that at the end of her career in the Fright Zone, Shadow Weaver often got drunk on the nasty moonshine they made there…" he said and smiled sadly. “At least she drank something nobler in Brightmoon.” They were silent for a moment, listening to the sound of flickering flames.

-„Our world is changing. The destruction of the Heart of Etheri unleashed the magic that is now free. Former powers hidden in the farthest corners of our planet have awakened. We have forgotten them in the dark years of war.” he said with grim solemnity. “We have to act now to prevent the situation from spiraling out of control again. Lance and George, go to Frosta, the Kngdom of Snow. If the reports sent to Glimmer were true, the earthquakes caused by the planet's imbalance uncovered an ancient city... You have a copy of „Horison's Etheri Description”, check it's not the same city... Castaspella, be on your guard. Mystacor has always been a hotbed of dark mysteries. There, the Shadow Weaver gained her dark powers, who knows what terrible secrets may be hiding in your college. Some worship terrible and ancient dark beings willing to offer power... at a terrible cost...”

„What will you do? his sister asked him.

„I will continue to explore the Valley of Shattered Armor... I chose this hut because it is nearby. Some people say that there are suspicious things going on here, I've seen a few myself. The ruins of Umbracor are also nearby. After the Wedding, I'll ask Adora to visit it together. And we'll take Scorpia too, her family had a secret here, she has a right to know it. Family secrets are often the darkest

The light was darkening Night was coming. She gave all the orders of the guards, because she was going to disappear for a few days. She had one more thing to do before she left. She and Melog went to her and Adora's common room. As she opened the door, she smelled her lover, her fiancée… her neary-wife. She felt a stab of unspeakable longing. The Melog glowed yellow-green. It was a mess, well Adora was always the tidier one, and then she headed over to the cupboard where they kept their keepsakes. She looked at the shelf where the two oldest ones were. One was the the blanket wrapped around the child found by Hordak, and the other was the cardboard box in which she had been found. Shadow Weaver kept the blanket in her workshop and studied it for years, but she slept in a cardboard box for the first months of her life because she couldn't sleep anywhere else, but then their „caretaker” decided to throw him out, so she and Adora hid it. They've moved him here and there over the years to keep him safe. When she caught a cold after traveling to the North Reach, she confided his existence to Scorpi, when she delirious during the fever. Somehow, he survived the entire war and occupation, and when the Scorpion princess found him, she decided to give him to her friend. She was happy with this gift, because she was irrationally attached to this stupid box ... She smiled, when she touched the corner of the cardboard with the back of her hand, she felt the memories flowing to her. Adora didn't want to give her blanket to Entrapta to examine it, she didn't want to know the secret of her origin, because the truth could break her again ... She didn't push her because she always loved her for who she was, where she was from did not matter. In her case... She told herself it didn't matter to, that maybe she wasn't born on Etheria either... That she was a stranger here too... But damn it did. None of the officials in the Fright Zone cared. No one was interested in where this cat girl came from... In fact, if it wasn't for Adora, no one would have been interested in her, she would have been sitting in this cardboard box for who knows how long, maybe no one would ever find her... Shadow Weaver would probably be spitting in her chin now, if she found out what secret the ward she disliked was hiding. But her contempt was so poignantly deep that it never even crossed her mind that she might be hiding something more than a crying, frightened child. "But she had time to see how wrong she was, though she couldn't admit it until the very end," she smiled with grim satisfaction. She will now take the packaging to Entrapta for examination. Maybe he'll find anything. And then something touched her. She took the cardboard in her hands and looked at it. She hadn't done that in years, since the last time she hid him. It was a carton of applesauce, which is probably why she always dreamed about this delicacy as a child... Because it reminded her of the place where she had been found. Only now did she see that there was an image of a smiling apple on one of the walls... No one in the Horde would bother to decorate the packaging, and certainly not with such cute drawings. The writing was in a common language, widely used in the galaxy, though many planets had their own, but she didn't recognize the font, though she'd read thousands of pages of documents when she was Hordak's right-hand man... She was too fancy by Fright Zone standards. And then she saw the writing. "Sweet Fruit tm" and below "Made 100% from Kesler apple trees" and below "Feel the taste of nature's gifts."

She started laughing, tears streaming down her cheeks. The proof was always in front of her eyes.

Fears, worries and sorrows.

Itel watched as Eti sat down on the bed and put on a leather glove. She always started with that after everything... even though it was only their third time... She didn't know if... if they were closer, she would do it too... Did it have any special meaning for the feline girl? Did she show that she didn't care? That it meant nothing to her. Was it really just a moment of… fun for her? Consolation? She felt stab of pain in the heart…

When Eti put on pants and panties, it always required some effort from her because of the tail, she touched the tips of her fingers the short soft hair that grew on the feline girl's back. Eti stiffened for a moment, but then relaxed. Once upon an unexpected touch, she would have flinched at best, perhaps even recoiled. It was some progress.

„You know, it's not your fault we're traveling here. We all decided it together.” her friend said.

„But if it wasn't for me, you wouldn't vote for that?” she asked in a sad voice. Eti turned to her and said.

„What difference does it make... We'd have to fly somewhere anyway. I will go anyway where you are, and for me all places in the galaxy are similar.”

Her friend was usually sincere, even if she was insensitive. She was never nice to please anyone either. Sometimes she twisted the truth, sometimes she told tales, but she rarely lied. Not calcultedly…

„It's not an answer”. she replied to her friend. Eti sighed.

"You're… my friend, just my best friend. You all are friends and I want us all to be together.

"A friend... so that was..." Itel said bitterly.

Eti lowered her head...

„You were sad and I wanted to comfort you. You know damn well I'm no good at this, so I thought you'd enjoy it.”

The Solarian laughed helplessly. Indeed it was. Eti found it over a cup of half-melted sweet cream ice cream, staring straight ahead, choked with fear and guilt. It was then, after seeing that message, that she realized what a terrible place they were flying. She survived the Swarm Attack and believed that she couldn't find anything worse, and here ... She took her friends, the only family she had and threw them to be devoured by evil much worse than the mindless mass of claws and maws. She didn't think about all the stories about the White Demons, she believed that the truth would come out as soon as they got there. And it come out. Evil who was destroying the planets. This Horde Prime chose to do to others what had been done to her loved ones. Why? It's… Unbelievable. Even if he is dead, if he had been defeated, what did it matter? She exposed her friends to witness such a terrible tragedy. She made them relive the nightmare of Kesler's fall. She knew it would leave scars on their souls. Even on Eti's soul, though the girl didn't show it like the others.

When Eti saw that Itel would not eat her ice cream, she asked if she could finish it for her. The feline girl didn't really like ice cream and most sweets, but she liked sweet cream ice cream. Without a word, he handed her the bucket. Only after devouring half of it did Eti ask if she was okay, and then the elf burst into tears. After a while, Eti hugged her, she wasn't as clumsy as she used to be. And then they ended up in Itel's room and… For a moment she felt fine, but she knew it wasn't true, that they would always be just friends.

„You know what? I don't think we have anything to worry about!” Eti said, and Itel pricked up her pointed elven ears.

"Because, you know, I guess we should start with the fact that this is a whole country of Wormdaks, cloned in honor of Archwormdak. You can't expect too much from them."

She sighed and shook her head.

„Wrongdak can fight, believe me. He's nice, but he can be dangerous, he just doesn't feel like it. But his mean brothers might be waiting for us there." Itel said in a resigned tone. Eti shrugged.

„But we didn't come here to fight anyone. We just have to go to this Etheria and find a whatsit for this captain and we're back. We just have to keep our heads down." she said getting out of bed. She went to the mirror and wiped her face.

„And that Etheria? If the Lady of Chaos really lives there? And the rest of these monsters." the solarian asked looking at her friend. She's So Beautiful

"It's just the talk of this drow. drow! Who could believe someone like that? That's dumber than believing the Lord Admiral. And besides, you know, with our disposition, we can be friends with such a lady of Chaos. I think it's time to change the hair color ..." she said. Then there was a knock on the door. Itel felt herself turn red. She didn't want anyone to catch them here. She wanted to scream not to come in when Eti opened the door with her tail.

Toshi flew inside, who immediately started rubbing against Eti, and a smiling Rosie stood in the doorway.

„I'm only here to let It in..." said the girl in sign language, when suddenly she saw Eti naked from the waist up, and then itel on the bed, trying to cover herself with a blanket. The white-haired girl turned beet red, just like the Elf. She covered her eyes and tried to speak, but doing both were impossible for her. She finally slammed the door and ran down the hall.

"I must have done something not good." Eti said in her usual monotonous voice Bina got up, sat on the edge of the bed and wiped her forehead.

„Fuck, we did it, didn't we?” Bina said. Her cabin was no better than the others. Well, she was a captain in name only.

Dilayla, who was lying next to her, also sat down next to her.

„We slept in the same bed naked, I guess that says it all.” The mercenary bared white tiny teeth inherited from her elven ancestors.

„I didn't need to drink so much.” said the red-haired woman.

„And you played cards too. Needless to say you won?” Dilayla smiled wider and wider.

The captain snorted.

„Because I cheated, I'm too good at it.” she started getting dressed.

„Not that I'm complaining, sometimes the deceived really wants to be deceived.” The mercenary also started putting on clothes. She did it efficiently, like a soldier.

„I don't usually do this with passengers. In fact, I expected sooner to end up in bed with Arkan-tar. He seems to be the type who does not refuse and quickly forgets.” Bina grunted.

„He looked poisoned after seeing this news, I think he realized where he arived.” replied Dilayla. Bina looked askance at her.

„You don't seem to care much”.

The half-elf shrugged.

„ I'm a mercenary, I've seen a lot of terrible things in my life. No shadow beasts will scare me. . she said, and when Bina narrowed her eyes suspiciously, she added. „And i got used to crap pushed by politicians. The enemy is always mindless monsters. You don't look scared either.”

Good point

„I guess I see propaganda bullshit in this, too. I've seen much bigger shit being foisted on the masses, like making a hero out of a one Lord Admiral. You don't know him, do you?" She added seeing Dilayla frown. "Anyway, I have to go now." I have a talk with Lady Cala soon, because Verthani and Lashunti want to see what Lady Cala is transporting.” She smiled as she saw Dilayla wince. "I know you and Eti hate her, and I don't like her either... But if she wants to show me something..."

„Sure.” Dilayla said. She finished dressing and stood up. "Only when your face melts, Don’t hold a grudge against anyone." I'll go over the equipment, then try to get Rosie to train. The girl has talent. It's a pity to let it go to waste.

Arkan-tar was worried. He was worried as hell. This travel was turning into something he was absolutely unprepared for despite years of putting himself in danger. He had heard of what a scary place the Ravaged Zone was, but seeing was believing… He had seen the remnants of extinct civilizations. Well, researching them was his job. Cultures have been born and died, whether through conquest, natural disasters, or simply morphing into something new. It was the natural order of things, it was easy to distance yourself from such matters when you study civilizations that had been dead for thousands of years. But when you've seen the extermination on a planetary scale, and you hear the words of the one who did the carnage... then you realize the tangibility of evil. "By all the gods and devils, I see his face every day!" he thought as he looked at Wrongdak, who still hadn't recovered from the shock of picking up the signal from that Horde Ultimate. The existence of such a person did not surprise him. Whenever a ruler died without heir, his empire was torn apart by his sucesors until the strongest emerged or it crumbled. He was much more worried about this Lady of Chaos and the other beings that appeared there. The Lady of Thorns in particular, for she fitted in very well with his knowledge of the dark Fae, who often combined life and death, pain and pleasure, destruktion and rebirth. As a Verthani, even if not native-born, he had an instinctive aversion to absolutes. Of course, maybe everything was lies and propaganda... But often evil can only be destroyed by greater evil, and how monstrous must have been the force that annihilated someone who was murdering entire populations of planets.?

The next morning, Lady Cala was to show them an object she was carrying. Bina and Rechiza were also present, and of course Lady Cala, though without Miss Daisy. The Dark Sorceress had been spending more and more time with this strange elven mistic lately, and judging by the scent she often exuded, they were rather relishing liquors of very dubious quality. Lady Cala stood by a chest made of a strange green stone. The noblewoman knelt and lifted the lid. Inside was an unusual red stone interspersed with green metal veins. It was the size of a human head. It seemed almost identical, though much larger, like the stone set in Lady Cala's ring.

„We call it Bloodstone. It has been in my family for hundreds or even thousands of years, ever since the daughter of Mary, the founder of our ruu, came to Carurystal. It remained lost and forgotten for centuries, somewhere in the endless underground stretching under our castle. I found it with the ring when I wanted to know the history of our bloodline. It is said that he comes from Etheria and allowed the use of magic that permeated this world …" said the aristocrat. „I want to return it to the people of that planet as a gift to show the best side of the galaxy and of course the pact worlds." said Lady Cala.

Bina looked at the artifact with a hint of skepticism.

„Doesn't look dangerous, but... was he just a decoration?" she asked, tilting her head.

"I don't know for sure, but it was said to allow the ring's owner to control Etherian's magic in a unique way. Apparently, there were more similar items, and each of them gave the user a different power. That's all I know."

Bina sighed.

„Nice story. Were your ancestors from there? So you can somehow relate to this Lady of Chaos and the whole Worst Things Ever Squad?" she asked with a hint of irritation in her voice.

„Oh, the answer is simple. It's all a lie. Mara was from Etheria and gave her life for it, would she do it for a planet full of monsters?"

„As you said, it was thousands of years ago... The future will show us the truth. Bina said. She touched the communicator and said. "Alatar calls me to the bridge. He has something important to show me. Bina said and left the hold. He was not surprised, for he knew the gem's origins, albeit only in general terms. It appeared to be the work of a long-extinct reptilian race that was said to have used similar items to manipulate the flow of magical energy. This was consistent with what Lady Cala had said, but also how did it relate to Mara being one of the First Ones. When his glasses, which sometimes showed visions of the past, but only the ancient one. But here he couldn't see anything, and that made him very uneasy...

We must make contact with the Lord Admiral, only he can guarantee our safety ... He thought and also started towards the bridge.

Rosie stood in the doorway to the Arcanic lab, rubbing her eyes. It's not that she got sad when she found out that Eti and Itel were together. She just felt… disappointed. She liked Eti. And Eti liked her too. And she guess they'll still like each other... buddy, won't they? They will continue to play and train… although now they are reluctant to do so. And when they get to some planet, they will assume that they are on some mission. Only now would she have to be more… careful? Give Eti and Itel more space so that... they can be more together. And to be more of a distance to the feline girl, but now at least she knew why Itel was mean to her even though she hadn't done anything to her. Of course, she had no reason to be jealous. They were just friends, after all. Not even friends, just buddies. They'd only known each other for… ten days… maybe two weeks? She wasn't sure, it was hard for her to keep track of time on the spaceship. However, she liked her very much. She was weird, unusual, funny… she was a real magical cat!

But she still felt sad, and she didn't know why. She wiped her eyes and put on her glasses. Then they showed that someone was talking to her. She turned and saw Miss Daisy standing in the shadows. She looked really scary at that moment.

„Is something wrong child?” she asked smiling gently. She walked over to him and gave him a questioning look.

"No, I'm fine… just…" She hesitated.

"Speak, I'll listen to you... I don't have much to do now anyway..." said the grim elf. Rosie smelled alcohol on her.

„Nothing but... Toshi was hanging around the corridor and wanted to go to Itel's room, so I let him in, but I went inside and... There was Eti and they with Itel... together… you understand...”

Miss Daisy sighed sadly.

„Oh, poor child. She reached a hand to her face. The holographic cloaking quivered, and she felt a slight tingle on her cheek, then the touch of the woman's claws.

„You've only known each other for a moment and you've already felt something you can't name... I understand you. she said, then looked up into the air. How strange that it took them almost two decades to figure out what they have in common when others only need a few days… or a few hours." the dark sorceress said to herself.

„They? Are you talking about any other girls you've looked after like Lady Cala? she asked curiously.

"Looked after… What a wonderful euphemism… And they were definitely not like Lady Cala… Those girls… They were actually my daughters. In some sense…"

Rosie's eyes widened.

„Did you have children? What happened to them?"

Miss Daisy hesitated.

„Yes. But they don't remember me well. To be honest, I rather hope they don't remember me anymore."

Rosie studied the gloomy woman, trying to decipher her words. She felt pity for the dark sorceress. She too had a family that she had lost. She didn't understand how anyone could want to be forgotten. She suddenly felt so sad. She suddenly embraced the older woman and cuddled up to her. The sorceress flinched, but then placed a clawed hand on her head. There was no tingling, so the woman must have turned off the holographic cloaking „Don't worry. You are so young and strong. You have your whole life ahead of you. Don't let fear, worries and sorrows ruin your life." said the sorceress, and then Rosie burst into tears.

Dilayla was scared. She was a veteran of dozens of clashes and skirmishes. She has come close to death countless times. She'd even survived invasion of that insane Horde Prime motherfucker ... But now she felt a constant cold stab of fear in her heart. She wasn't afraid of Horde Ultimate, he didn't have that crazy, but in a way sincere, megalomany of his Big Brother... He seemed to be just another power-hungry dictator, which the galaxy had known so many. He just had a rather unusual PR specialist. She was not at all afraid of the Lady of Chaos and her entourage. She'd heard too much propaganda crap in her life not to be amused hearing about the Lady of Thorns or the Shadow Beast, the true identity of which she had some suspicions. She preferred to trust the Wrongdak's judgment. He may have been good-natured and a bit naive, but he wasn't stupid, and it had slipped through their conversations that his friends were good people, even if they had been through hard life. No… Dilayla was afraid of her companions.

After seeing Lady Cala fight, she had no doubt that this woman didn't need protection. In fact, she feared that she would be able to slaughter a whole group of them without much effort. And without remorse. "She didn't hesitate to rip out Rosie's throat in training. If only the girl had been just a little slower…"

It just felt like Rosie should be afraid too. The likeable and friendly intern defeated the deadliest warrior Dilayla had ever seen in a fight. And on top of that, she didn't remember anything about the clash. When she found out what she had done, the white-haired girl was genuinely terrified. She refused to continue training because she was afraid of hurting someone. The mercenary was also full of fears, both for the girl's life and for what might happen if she fell into a combat trance for longer. She had no idea what secret the girl's past was hiding, but there must have been something very dark about her. That's why she wanted to talk Rosie into continuing her training, maybe then she'd get some clues. Perhaps he will ask Eti for help, after all, the feline girl liked ... or even liked the intern.

After looking through the equipment, she decided to look for the girl. She couldn't find her. She finally went to the arcane lab. In the doorway, she saw Rosie and a ghostly entity with a hand on the intern's head. Years of war and fighting instinct kicked in, and before she had time to think, her body reacted and she jumped into the fight...

And Rosie grabbed them with a cybernetic hand in the air and effortlessly held them still. The nightmare figure looked at her in surprise and said in Miss Daisy's voice.

"Apparently Arkan-tar and Rechiza didn't think it important to inform you." She touched the back of her neck to activate the holographic cloaking and became Miss Daisy. The mercenary widened her eyes and stammered.

„What the fuck...”

„That `s nothing. It's just Miss Daisy. She had a terrible accident once and that's why she looks like this now.” explained Rosie, who let go of the mercenary's hand. Her eyes were red as if she had just cried.

'Rechiza and Arkan-tar saw my face, as did Rosie the night before we left Saltmarsh. It's unfortunate that your comrades treated you this way. I hope this misunderstanding will not affect our future relationship. she said in her strong and powerful voice. Rosie smiled at her „It's really okay, it's just a misunderstanding.”

Dilayla sighed. „The girl must have found a foster mother like that” she thought, and then they were sumoned bridge.

Dilayla looked around. Almost all crew members were there. Itel tried not to look at Rosie as if she was embarrassed, Eti watched her shoes very intensely, and Rosie was very ostentatiously cheerful. The half-elf sighed, she really didn't have the strength for teenage dramas. Luckily, Bina came to terms with what had happened between them.

„Listen, we just got an emergency call. the captain began. It comes from the convent of Saint Serenia. I immediately inform you that I am required by law to help.”

Arkan-tar winced.

„And how old is the call?” he asked skeptically.

„I'm not sure, maybe months. But rather a few years.” Bina replied. Verthani spread his hands helplessly.

"As you can see, our help is rather useless.” he said with all too much feigned sadness.

"He's right, our mission is more important, and there's nothing we can do anyway." Rechiza added.

„Pathetic cowards,” the mercenary thought and said.

„We can't just let this go on the agenda. Stories of shipwrecked people waiting for years for help have been heard many times. Besides... After all we've seen, after all the testimonies of Horde Prime's crimes, we have to do something... For ourselves. Otherwise, we will let evil win again”.

Wrongdak looked at her with admiration, and Eti, Rosie and ... Miss Daisy with respect. Lady Cala stepped into the center of the room and said.

"Dilayla is right. We cannot pass by this cry for help indifferently. Besides, maybe we'll find some clues there that will help us discover the truth about what's going on here.”

Why do I get the feeling this wasn't the best idea? thought the mercenary staring at the smiling face of the aristocrat.

The hardships of peace

She slept soundly until the chancellor started screaming.

„Frosta. Princess Frosta!”

She woke up but still pretended to be asleep. Maybe she'll be able to sleep again. These meetings were so boring… If Glimmer could fall asleep, why not her. The Queen was not reminded of this, and neither should she! She heard the chancellor sigh heavily.

„The Dread Ice Bane!” she said and immediately lifted her head. She was sitting in her office, in a fur-padded chair. Much more comfortable than the blue crystal throne she had sat on during her official appearances. She had her head resting on one of those thick, dull chronicles that made the perfect pillow.

„Yes. What do i have to do?” she said, trying to keep from rubbing her eyes... She was so bored.

"First of all, I would like to point out that you are commonly known as Princess Frosta, and the name 'Dread Ice Bane' is not befitting one in your position." said the chancellor. He was a tall and bony man with a long, stiff blue beard. He was appointed to the position by her grandmother. He smiled then. For the first and last time

„Why? This Horde Ultimate calls me that... It's a very cool name!” she exclaimed angrily

„This is the name given by the enemy! I shouldn't be using it. The chancellor was indignant… and it made him look quite funny.

„They gave it to me because they respect me! Though maybe not. Then they would have added Lady Ice Bane! Why don't they appreciate me? Don't they find me scary enough?” she asked suddenly sad.

"More like..." He looked at her and hesitated. "It's probably because of your young age." said the chancellor cautiously.

"Glimmer was my age when she fought in the Rebellion... and then she became queen." She looked at the old adviser from under furrowed brows. She became ruler as an eight-year-old child. She was told to be tough as granite rock and stronger than bear. They wanted her to be like a living ice figure. But there was always a fire in her heart. She liked joy and laughter. She liked to throw herself into a fight. But in the realm of Snow, the queen was required to be as cold as the weather in the farthest northern wastes. She should not say a single word without thinking it over ten times. Her every act and gesture was judged, she constantly had to prove that she was worthy of the throne and the runestone.

Only outside the homeland could she truly be herself, and that's where she learned that you can follow your heart. But here she was judged, acknowledged as tainted by the culture of the Warm Lands. Maybe if she'd been born in Brightmoon or Plumeria, but here is the Snow Kingdom... It's the country of the toughest of tough women and men. "Of course, when the Galactic Horde arrived, we fell as quickly as the others" „Maybe we'll stay with Ice Bane? My great-grandmother's name was a skull splitter, and I remember my ancestors being someone called Clawdeen. That would fit.

The Chancellor scratched his cheek.

„Some traditions... Some traditions should be forgotten.” The advisor said in a gentle voice and handed over the document.

„What's that?” she asked bored. She would love to go back to sleep.

„Nothing special.” said the chancellor, smiling ingratiatingly. She glared at him so he added. "It's an proposal to granting you the title of empress." He said suddenly sounding terribly pompous. She blinked several times.

"But I'm already a princess." she asked, not understanding. The Chancellor sighed heavily.

“Your ancestors relinquished that title by treaty with Queen Angela. But she…well…gone. Old treaties no longer apply.” he explained to her. Now she felt like she didn't want to know where this was all leading up to.

„Glimmer is now queen. She's Angela's daughter…” she said hesitantly. The chancellor nodded.

„Yes, but the treaty was made directly with Queen Angela, that's what all our legislators say, so it's no longer valid. We didn't want to raise this issue during the war you so... recklessly pushed us into, but now that there is peace, it would be worth considering the future of the kingdom.”

Hearing that she had pushed the kingdom into war, she pursed her lips in anger. Many accused her of that. That she joined a war that wasn't theirs. But it was the Horde who started it, and Horde was evil! Why did no one understand this?!

„We will just sign this treaty again and there will be no problem.” she said, trying to sound as if she was saying the obvious.

The Chancellor made a sour face.

"Many of your subjects would not be happy with this decision…" he began, but she cut him off.

„Who! show them!” She banged her fist on the table. Her advisor was perplexed.

„For example the leaders of the great clans. Many believe that there is no need to stick to the alliance. The war is finally over. Now it's time for each land to go its own way.” he explained to his Lady.

„But Glimmer is my friend! How can I do this to her.” She screamed indignantly, but also a little scared. Why do they want such things from me!

"A true ruler must be guided by the desires of her subjects, not her own feelings. Sometimes he has to let go of his emotions and turn his heart to ice."

„Glimmer, Adora Bow and even Catra saved us! They saved us all!" She got really angry this time. How can they not see it!

„I remind you that Glimmer almost destroyed us earlier by activating the Heart of Etheria, and then brought the Galactic Horde on us!" The adviser's voice became much sterner now.

She flushed with anger and briefly considered locking the man in ice, but saw him touching the back of his neck. She remembered that he had been chipped during the occupation, when she was punching clones in the faces and destroying robots. She felt ashamed of her outburst of anger, and of the fact that she had imagined the chancellor's head encased in ice, but she had no intention of relenting. She sighed and pursed her lips.

„No, I won't sign it. That…would destroy everything". She said in a firm voice

"But princess…" the Chancellor began, but she interrupted him abruptly „Enough! I won't listen to it End of discussion! Soon Victory Day and my friends' wedding! I won't ruin their day!" she cried, clenching her fists.

„Your involvement in the wedding of a foreign queen is also considered controversial in many circles."

Now she really wanted to punch him in the stupid face. Ever since the end of the war, she had felt the urge to hit someone more and more often. She had the impression that despite the peace, she had to fight much more and on much more difficult fronts. She felt so tired and depressed by hardships of peace. Does Glimmer feel this way too?

Then the Ice Sentinel, one of the guards who have been guarding the rulers of her land for years, looked into the office.

"I'm sorry, but the emissaries have arrived… no… Scholars?" From Brightmoon… or maybe from the Whispering Woods. I'm not sure…" he mused, and she gave him the most murderous look she could muster. "I mean, Mr. Lance and Mr. George want to meet your highness."

She smiled broadly. It was the first pleasant news of the day… the first in a month, actually. However, she looked at the chancellor and restrained her emotions and spoke in a serious voice.

„We are honored to have a PRIVATE audience with the parents of Techmaster Bow, the future royal consort." She looked at the chancellor pointedly.

After a while, Bow's Fathers were ushered into the office. The men looked around the room, Lance's eyes lit up at the sight of those horribly boring books. They were sometimes weird. They were dressed in thick furs, even for the weather typical of her country. They were obviously headed up. Everyone always expected that in her country, all you had to do to freeze was step outside the door... Well, the name Snow Kingdom impresses.

„Welcome visitors from distant lands. Please warm yourself by our fire." she said formally. The men looked at each other in surprise. All they knew was cool, feisty Frosta, but she couldn't be cool, feisty Frosta here. The chancellor left the room, and when he was out of earshot, she smiled from ear to ear. She ran onto the table, then jumped to the floor and started hugging them.

„Uncle Lance, Uncle George! she exclaimed happily.

„When we were promoted to uncles." Lance asked

„When we became grandparents, my dear. In the meantime." George replied and they laughed.

„It's great that you're here. Lately everyone is really bothering me… The heads of the Great Clans criticize everything I do. I have to sign documents all the time, and no matter what I do, it's still wrong”. She growled and clenched her fists.

"Uh…" Lance was saying. „We just wanted to find out about the buried city... Which is actually dug up now... But since you're busy.”

„No problem! I just packs up.” She exclaimed, happy to be freed from this torment, if only for a moment.

"But we didn't even tell her that we were going anywhere… In fact, we didn't even decide ourselves that we were going anywhere…" said George.

„I packed spare clothes just in case.” Lance said.

She hated Beast Island. She never explored this place. She always stopped at a small patch of land that had been cleared. But she knew Adora's story when she had come here in search of Entrapta, whom she had condemned to a fate worse than death by sending her here. She tried to call things by their names, including the harm she had done to others. All our lives we've been taught to fear this place. Anyone who betrayed or failed was sent here without trial, one Shadow Weaver signature…or mine was enough. The entire Fright Zone lived in constant fear of being send here. And I was helping fuel that fear… she thought grimly. Whenever she traveled near the Horde's former territory, she felt an overwhelming sense of guilt. In Brightmoon, they knew her mostly as the Grand Marshal, She-ra's beloved, or even the one who had rescued their queen from cruel captivity. They forgot that I made them lose the previous one... she thought bitterly. "Maybe I'll ask Entrapta again if there's no way to... isn't there a way to reopen..." she sighed. Even in her mind, she had a hard time formulating the thought.

The dock where the skimmer had moored was empty, though many vehicles could stop here. There was also an airfield for spaceships, of course empty. She felt a pang of remorse. Few people visited Entrapta on Beast Island. Not only because of the bad reputation surrounding this place. Everyone knew who the other inhabitant of the island was, and did not want to meet him here. For decades, Hordak has been feared not only by the free kingdoms, but also by the common people of the Fright Zone. But I was never afraid of him. From the first meeting, I felt who he really was like She thought as she walked towards the chaotic yet amazing structure that was Castle Mysterio or Fort Junk as she sometimes called it. I should come here more often. Entrapta is again stuck in a gloomy and inaccessible castle. She's alone again... Almost she thought and winced. "But it's not just about him. Not only about him" she thought, looking at the technoflora-covered interior of the island. Even here she heard music. It was on the verge of hearing. At the same time, it penetrated every muscle, every bone and nerve of her body. It reached the very core of her being...

And she was beautiful. She knew others could hear the sound, piercing through. Painful and imperious, taking away all the will to fight, the will to live and exist. It was much worse than the monsters that lived here… That's what Adora and Mikah said. But to her, this signal, this force, sounded completely different ... She had once thought it had to do with her sensitive hearing, but after her recent discovery ... She had a bad feeling. Maybe I should bring some other felinaes here? A few felinaes from Etheri, that is… she thought, staring into the dense metallic forest. She had a package on the skimmer, her cardboard box. She left Melog at the dock. Her companion reacted extremely badly to the aura of the island. He felt the taking away the will of life aura much more strongly than the others, but at the same time he felt the bliss the music evoked in her. It was painfully overwhelming for him, as she had learned at Entrapta's wedding party. That's why she left him on the skimmer, let him guard her treasure. She had one more request for Entrapta, though she wasn't entirely sure she wanted to make it. Now she was hesitant to know the truth. Adora this knowledge did not bring happiness, nor will it bring her. But she had to know the truth to know who she really was. And where is she from.

She stood in front of Castle Mysterio's gates and eyed them suspiciously. The castle was weird and chaotic…and overwhelming. A clear combination of the visions of both builders. As she approached, two stalked cybernetic eyes stretched out towards her and studied her.

„Object recognized as Grand Marshal Catra. Status: Friendly. Start the onboarding process. said a voice from the door. she sighed. Entrapta never knew when her inventions became disturbing. The gates swung open with a bang. There stood an old Galactic Horde bot dressed in livery and with a smile glued on. But sometimes it's good that no one lives here, otherwise a few people would run away screaming at the sight. It is said that Entrapta once had a robot uprising. She hoped it wouldn't happen here.

„So... Will you let me in? Inside? Will you take me to Entrapta?" she asked uncertainly, and the robot looked at her and turned away. She shrugged and followed him.

Castle Mysterio wasn't as cursed and crazy a maze as Entrapta's old home, though there was a hint of chaos here. Muting protecting against the signal from the interior made it seem to be quite a cozy place. She went through several rooms until she came to a large workshop, or maybe a laboratory? She had no idea. Suddenly, from between the tables, something ran towards her and, wrapping its hair around her legs and torso, climbed high enough to look her straight in the face. A blue-haired, perhaps three-year-old but very large child with purple eyes and a white complexion pressed his forehead to hers.

„Hi Child!” She responded by showing her equally sharp fangs. Well… Hordak and Entrapta made a baby before they got married, in a very literal sense. It was created in a laboratory and grew in a tank ... For now, it was simply referred to as the Child. According to Etherian custom, children chose their names and pronouns at the age of seven. Sometimes the result was Mikah and sometimes Castaspella. There was a big age difference between Glimmer's father and aunt, and little Castaspella chose that name because she believed it would make her as great a sorceress as her big brother.

After a while, the person she liked much less appeared behind the table. Hordak, former ruler of the Etherian Horde, watched her with his always sour face. The genetic therapy had served him well, and he no longer needed the power armor. Not that he didn't wear it, especially here at work in the interior of the island. His current outfit had two extra servo arms that probably made him as multi-tasking as his spouse.

„Is there Entrapta?” she asked, trying to sound completely indifferent.

„She will come soon.” he said briefly. The child grabbed the bars suspended from the ceiling with his hair and "ran" towards his father and threw himself on his shoulders. Hordak smiled at his child. She was almost offended by it. You have deprived hundreds of orphans of a happy childhood, and now you play the role of a beloved husband and daddy! Good for you she thought venomously. The child climbed on Hordak's back and wrapped its hair around his shoulders.

„Daddy, can Aunt Catra stay?” asked the child. His father replied with clear sarcasm in his voice.

„Aunt Catra is very busy as Grand Marshal of Etheria”

Behind her, Entrapta came out of the ventilation shaft and she started talking in an excited voice.

„Catra! Great that you are! I just wanted to show you something unusual about these artifacts we took from Horde Prime's vault. You know, the ones that no one claimed because they belonged to the civilizations that he destroyed and no one was left behind. Because you see, one of them… „

„Maybe another time, for now we have to fly to Netosa because ..." she tried to interrupt inventor, but she did not succeed, because she shouted with delight.

„Oh, She wants to show us the armory!

She blinked twice, trying to comprehend what the former Lady of Dryll was talking about.

„The armory?"

"Yes, her grandmother's armory, where a lot of ancient weapons from the time of the First Ones or just after they left, which if they fell into the wrong hands could cause damage on an unimaginable scale!" And I can test it all. her friend said with unstoppable excitement.

She tried very hard not to look at Hordak, because if she saw the curiosity or triumph on his face, she wouldn't know what she would do. But he spoke on his own, in a surprisingly thoughtful voice.

„Shadow Weaver mentioned this once and always pushed us to capture Netosa alive after she failed to... get all the information during the interrogation of her father.

She felt shivers down her spine because she knew what an interrogation by a dark sorceress would look like. She looked sharply at her former superior. He looked to the side as if confused. She snorted in contempt.

"Then pack up..." she wanted to say, but Entrapta cut her off.

"I'm always packed, because if someone needs to solve a problem with advanced technology, secret technology, First Ones technology, anything related to technology, I'm called. That's why I always have to be ready to go." The lilac-haired woman said happily. If it had been anyone else, she would have taken her words as a reproach, but it still hurt. "I need to be here more often, even if it means running into Hordak". Entrapta whistled, and a trunk-sized bot with six legs ran to her. He was hung with packages, had a strange triangular head with three eyes, one on each corner of the triangle.

„Catra, meet Alice. Alice meet Catra." She pointed at her and the robot. She sighed seeing another contraption created by Entrapta, but smiled and politely greeted the bot, which started making strange noises reminiscent of barking.

„She can be a little nervous around strangers, but you'll make friends! I have all the equipment I need to explore the armory there. I've been waiting for Netosa to invite me for a long time! Hordak, take care of the Child I'll be gone for a day or a week." she said. Excited, she ran out of the room.

She just hoped her friend knew what she was doing...

Melog greeted her at the dock. He jumped on her and licked her. He told her he was afraid he wouldn't come back. That it will unite with the island. She shivered because it matched what Adora and the others were saying, but then he added, "Island Waiting." She shivered again, but tried not to ask. She wasn't sure if he could explain it to her anyway, or if she wanted to know. Entrapta, meanwhile, made herself comfortable on the skimmer, but she could make herself comfortable even on Beast Island or in the Horror Zone.

„Listen Entrapta, I have a package there, I would like you to take a look at its contents, just be ..." She turned around sharply when she heard the sound of the box being opened. „BE CAREFUL!” she shouted, but Entrapta gently held her card, eyeing it suspiciously.

„I'm always careful. After all, I work with explosives and explosions are pretty rare.” She began to turn the card over, more and more confused. "It's definitely cardboard. Made of cellulose." She looked at it, not understanding why she should examine an ordinary cardboard box. She sighed and said.

„This is the cardboard box Adora found me in.”

Entrapta widened her eyes. Which made her cry with excitement.

„It's as cute as it is tragic.” -

„Yes, I know it best.” She closed her eyes and put her fingers to her forehead. „Just read the writings.”

The lilact-haired woman read the inscriptions silently, making „Aw” only once at the sight of an apple. Finally she asked.

„Kesler? Haven't heard of this place”

She smiled sadly.

“No one on all Etheria heard.”

She heard a sharp intake of air and heard Entrapta lunge at her. She didn't have to open her eyes not to see him staring at her. That's what she feared.

„Entrapto... Please... It's me, still the same Catra, don't look at me like that. At least not you.” she said in a broken voice. When she opened her eyes, tears ran down her cheeks and she saw her friend watching her with concern instead of the fascination she expected. She placed her hands on her shoulder

„But it's wonderful ... Think, of all beings on Etheria, except for my husband, only you and Adora were not born here. You must have arrived here at the same time. You came to the same place and found yourself. Can you imagine what an incredible twist of fate this is? How special are you both?!”

And then she burst out laughing. All her life she had envied Adora that everyone could see her uniqueness, and now…now it terrified her. She was afraid that everyone, especially Adora, would stop seeing her as she was. That she would lose everything she had worked so hard for. She gave the helm to Entrapta and went to cry herself cuddled up to Melog.

Tyrants will fall

They were approaching the monastery, which was on a half-terraformed planet, covered with dry plains covered with lichens and mosses. The air was breathable, but thin as in the high mountains. It was hard to breathe here without the environmental armor, but Captain Moonshadow it didn't make much of a difference anyway. And so the mask always helped her breathing. She spread her cybernetic wings and landed on the lichen crunching under her feet as Tonado, Gydwa and Kaert climbed down the rope. Skittermander was as full of absolute faith as ever in his captain, but the morale of the rest of her officers had waned when they received a message from this Horde Ultimate. She herself was confused. She remembered the Invader's appearance, and when she saw him on the video, she felt… sad? He couldn't end up like this. Hers was vengeance. No one had the right to take her revenge. This Mind Eater… What was she? Had she given her enemy a fate a hundred times worse than anything she could think of? The questions suddenly multiplied so much. And she didn't have time to consider all the possibilities. Her crew was concerned about possibility of meeting the Lady of Chaos, as was she, but she suspected who the woman was. She stole my sword and sold her soul to demons. It would be fitting for such a treacherous seed she thought. She was ready to fight even a demon princess to reclaim her inheritance and satisfy her hunger for revenge... But her crew wasn't prepared for that. They could fight the Azlanti and space monsters, and ultimately the Hell Knights. But will he be able to persuade them to set foot on a world devoured by demons? To come face to face with the heirs of one who burned entire nations to ashes? Who would be reasonable to oppose such a person?

For now they were calm, they hadn't met any threat yet, the whole journey was actually more peaceful than usual, but she knew that the moment of truth would come after the first clash. She agreed to help search the monastery to keep her crew busy, because when the pirates got bored, they came up with stupid ideas. Besides, she hoped that perhaps they would get some information about what was going on here. Treasures were also important. The monasteries were wealthy, so there was a chance that they could get his riches, which would boost the morale of the crew…if someone hadn't already seized them. She wasn't sure what attacked the monastery was interested in his property. After receiving Horde Prime's looping monologue, she assumed that he was unlikely to be interested in material goods ... So much the better for her crew.

Deadly Sword of Burning Fury landed near the monastery. Seeing his crew, she smiled beneath the mask. Dragonkin, a human girl with orcish amulets, and an elf tattooed with flaming roses stood in a cluster, watching her carefully and trying to look as threatening as possible, which they managed not too badly. The white-haired girl stood a bit to the side, looking at her scared, apparently she had never seen a real pirate. The last of the young people was not visible, but seeing the red dot on Gydwa's temple, she understood what she was doing. She really liked these kids. Maybe because she was once a mother herself. She didn't remember what had happened to her daughter, she only knew that she had been taken from her once, but nothing else... She must have met a terrible fate that she shouldn't know.

„You don't have to be afraid of me. I do not break or even bend the letter of my contracts. I'm an honest pirate. You can tell the feline girl she doesn't have to aim at my second mate."

Hearing her words, Gydwa started looking around looking for a shooter, which made the pirate even more amused. The captain of the ship waved his hand, and from above the bushy lichen stood a figure dressed in the cloak of an Akitonian nomad,. This time the feline girl wore a hood on her head and a mask and goggles on her face. She ran up to them waving this strange mechanical prosthetic.

„Hey Moonshadow. Sorry for aiming at the hammerhead, but it's so big it's begging to be shot at. I would always keep it next to you, because she attracts fire very well.”

Tonado nodded, and Gydwa shot the girl a murderous look.

„I will take this into account.” She answered the girl and together they approached the rest of the group. There was their captain, this Bina, who watched anxiously at the structure before them. She looked like a cunning woman, but she seemed to care about her unruly bunch. The great half-elf mercenary stood and clenched her armored fist significantly. She knew many mercenaries, had some in her crew, and killed many in her war against the Azlanti. This one, however, seemed a bit more decent than most, like someone who only cared about money. Verthani was an archaeologist who had tricked Kaert and Gydwa, which amused her somewhat. Well, her second mate wasn't the best at recruiting crew members, especially when they weren't dim-witted killers. Rechiza was a witchwarper and looked unlucky, which was actually common in this profession. They both seemed to be in the right place for this type of jon, and so did Ysoka-technician. Lady Cala, however, puzzled her more. Was she just a bored aristocrat going on such a ridiculous quest? She saw in her the immense, unstoppable confidence that all mad adventurers had, but there was something else to her. A certain... authority... Her high opinion of herself seemed to stem from an awareness of her own power, as if she possessed a mighty and unstoppable force. And she was supposed to be just a pampered damsel who had heard too many stories about this Mara and had taken on this perilous quest. Perhaps behind this decision was this strange gloomy elf with gray skin, who was looking at the monastery thoughtfully. This woman… as soon as she heard her voice, she felt a strange pressure on her temple that made her slightly dizzy. She felt as if she knew this woman, but she couldn't. According to Azlanti information, Etheria, her lost home, was hidden somewhere in an inaccessible Hidden Realm. "Are you like me a runaway from my home? Another victim of the invader?" she thought as she stared at her grim face. Nothing else suggested that she should beware of this woman more than any other mystic. but she decided she should watch Miss Daisy anyway. Well, another reason to travel with this strange group. The last was standing next to the other elven sorceress, a strange and talkative elven woman who was trying to explain something to him, and he was trying to listen, not understanding her at all. He had the face and voice of an invader, and even his name, though she couldn't remember what it sounded like until it came out of his mouth. But at the same time, he was by no means one. They knew each other, though, if she understood the context of what he was saying. So he will lead her to her revenge.

She looked at the convent building. Even from this distance, she could see signs of fighting on its walls, and its metallic gold dome typical of Serenae worshipers was melted in one spot, but the damage had been light, so the resistance were probably minimal. Well, what could you expect from monks living somewhere on a planet forgotten by the gods. There were gardens around it, which indicated that they had some area-based system to create better living conditions that was still operational. Their scanners showed that the underground complex was huge, perhaps built over centuries. This gave hope that someone could hide there after the attack, or that some of the treasures had not been found. No doubt life signals were detected in the monastery, though something was interfering with the scanners. What will they have to search themselves. A drone flew towards them, hovered and began to speak in a metallic voice.

"The area is clear, I haven't detected anything dangerous on the surface, nothing bigger than a scorpiorat."

Monshadow saw out of the corner of her eye that the girl with the orc amulets, I think her name was Lilka, shuddered.

„So, shall we go in?” Bina asked.

„There's nothing to wait for.” answered the burgundy-haired woman. "Vengeance Awaits Me"

Eti felt bad… I mean, she never really felt good. There was always that sadness in her that cast a shadow over her world. He was like a fog through which she had to break through all her life ... Or not, others saw the world through the fog, she perceived reality more sharply and truthfully than others. All ugliness and meanness shone in her eyes brighter than the sun in the sky. Also her own meanness. Recently, she wanted to do good and hurt her friend, her friends. Sometimes she did that, hurting others for no reason. Not even for pleasure or anger, just ... So that they could see the world as she saw it, to see her as she is. She squeezed her temples and growled softly. She felt the breath of Rainy Days on her neck. For now, however, distant, but slowly approaching. This mission might make her forget all about it. On the surface of the planets, when she was busy with something, she always felt better than during those long flights in spaceships. New sensations, the need to make decisions, adrenaline and fear made her forget that reality is nasty and mean.

She also felt strange because she didn't go ahead scouting as she usually did. Invisible, with a rifle in her hand, she had the power, she was indestructible and invincible. But she felt good walking in the company of her friends, even though she knew she should feel ashamed. For what she did. Itel also seemed ashamed, as if she had done something wrong, it was only her fault. Sparkle Fingers was as cheerful and happy as ever, but she sensed sadness in her, and Fist gave her and Itel such looks as if she wanted to crush their heads. Yes, she was guilty, there was no doubt about it.

They found themselves in a garden covered with fruit bushes and flowers. Sparkle Fingers plucked some sweet red fruit and handed it to her and Wormdak The white-skinned alien accepted the treat, though he had been oddly withdrawn and sullen since receiving that idiotic transmission from one of his brothers, but she replied

„I don't eat fruit, I just don't feel sweet taste. But if you see one of these scorpiorats, tell me, I'd eat one grilled.”

Rosie nodded seriously, but Lilka spoke in a frightened voice.

„And warn us! I don't want someone to bite me.

Itel stopped, looked over her shoulder, and said.

"But scorpiorat venom is harmless, it can only hurt you a little."

"And what if I turn into a scorpion man afterward, that is a scorpion woman?" Lila asked.

Itel looked at her for a moment with a twitching eyelid.

„Lilka, first of all, scorpiorat venom doesn't turn you into scorpion people, second. There's no such thing as scorpion people.”

Then Eti felt an irresistible urge to interject.

„I'm sorry, Itel, but what you're saying doesn't make sense.” she said, and when Itel looked at her in disbelief, she continued, "There are billions of planets in our galaxy alone, and countless intelligent races. Based on statistics alone, it is easy to prove that there may be not only scorpion-men and men-scorpion but even scorpion-men-rats.” she explained, and Lilka moaned loudly.

„Why are you scaring her!” the Solarian shouted at her.

„I'm sorry, but I see absolutely no reason to keep Lilka ignorant. I prefer to warn her about what the world is like and explain to you how statistics work, because you clearly don't understand it.”

„What are you even talking about… „ Itel started, but Wrongdak interjected.

"I'm friends with a scorpion woman…" he said, but Itel turned to him.

„Why are you interfering! Nobody asked your opinion!” she screamed, making the white-skinned man back away. Bina approached them, blushing with anger. Clearly she pissed someone off again.

"One more word and you'll remember me. Eti, stop being smartass and talking nonsense... - their... kaptai started yelling at them, but Eti cut her off.

"Actually, the term 'talking nonsense' is…" she was saying, but Bina didn't let her finish.

„Just one more word." she threatened, and Eti only forced herself to remain silent with the greatest effort of will. "And you, Itel, are no better, because you yell at Mister Wrongdak for no reason." The burgundy-haired woman sighed, rubbing her forehead. "Listen, I don't know what happened between the two of you, and it's best for you two to sort it out between you two, but unfortunately, we're just getting into a place where the Devils and Daemons know what's waiting for us, so take it easy for yourself instead of doing YOURSELF shame in front of pirates, mercenaries and aristocrats.

Itel pursed her lips and looked away, suppressing her anger, but Eti could see that her friend was embarrassed. She felt ashamed herself too, obviously not because of what Stinka might think, because it was like caring what a cockroach thought, but she knew that she had hurt others, both now and before. Fist and Grimmy were looking at her intently, and Sparkle Fingers acted as if she was complicit herself. She immediately hung her head, and together they set out again towards the convent.

The closer we got, the more lush the gardens became. Nut, apple and olive trees also grew here. She didn't like apples, but she plucked some nuts, which she intended to smash with a metal hand. They walked in quite uncomfortable silence until finally Alatar spoke.

„And what is the difference between a scorpion man and a man scorpion.

Eti looked at him askance.

"That's obvious, dear Drakey. A scorpion man has a human top and a scorpion bottom, a man scorpion has a scorpion top and a human bottom... Or vice versa.

„And what is it when there is a big scorpion, but it has the head and hands of a man and a lot of human legs.” Lilka asked with absolute seriousness in her voice. The whole group stopped abruptly. Itel took a deep breath and spoke slowly.

"I don't know, and I don't even want to imagine it." Where do you come up with such ideas?!

Lilka shrugged, but Eti decided to interject

„This creature straight from the worst nightmares ... it's cool.” Lilka, what kind of tail would it have ...” - he asked. The red-haired girl began to think about her answer, and Itel was about to start yelling at her again, but then Miss Daisy approached their group, obviously greatly amused by something.

„Miss Eti is right about one thing, „ said the gloomy sorceress, and Eti, hearing her name in one sentence with the word miss, was simply speechless. „ The galaxy is full of wonders,Great and terrible, beyond our wildest imagination. I found out for myself when I left my home planet. For example, on my planet, dragons were fairy-tale creatures. And here I am, having barely left my provincial Carurystal, and here I met Mister Alatar, perhaps not a classic dragon, but highly technically gifted.” She smiled mysteriously. „Yes, the universe is full of strange things. Be assured that you must expect the unexpected and accept that you will never be able to prepare for everything, and that sooner or later your luck will run out and then we will have to suffer the consequences of our actions.” Grimm voice became quiet and sad. "Therefore, do not think much about the future, do not worry about what will come, for we are all but leaves in the wind... Just be careful not to be swept away by the black wind."

Eti looked at her and smiled slightly, which drew incredulous looks from her friends, patted her back and said.

„Welcome to the truth-seeing club.”

There were times when Bina wanted to strangle her charges. These kids were so loved sometimes, after all they had been through, after the horror of being invaded by the most fearsome force in the galaxy, after the great betrayal they had suffered from those who where supposed to protected the weakest, who called themselves heroes, still had good hearts. They were able to help others without demanding anything in return. But they were so incredibly annoying. They were arguing about absolute crap, almost punching each other. They always pounced on those stronger than themselves. Itel and her fanatical hatred pushed everyone into more and more trouble. Eti did not think about the consequences of her actions at all, Lilka could go crazy or panic for any reason, and Alatar could be mean and conceited. Sometimes it felt like she was only one step, one word away from dropping it all and going her own way. However, she couldn't do that. She took the burden of looking after them on her shoulders and had to bear it until the very end, which might come much sooner than she wanted.

Now they were arguing about bloody scorpions, though she had a feeling it was about something else. Itel wanted more from Et than she wanted to give her, but Eti didn't understand that by sleeping with Itel, she was only fueling her hopes. And then there was that intern Rosie. Eti liked her surprisingly quickly, and Bina think it scared her, because in the meantime they had an argue. Well, there's one more place on her ship just in case. It also seemed that the girl would like it too, because she had no relatives, but for the time being, the three of them would get along with Itel and Eti and determine what their relationship should look like.

The gates of the monastery were open. Which was helpful, but also sinister. Made of gold-shining metal, they where covered with a relief depictingwith scenes that she couldn't fully decipher, but she thought she saw Iomadae there, which was nothing strange, for the two goddesses were friends. Arkan-Tar studied the inscriptions carefully and curiously. She saw traces of laser gun shots on the gate. Captain Moonshadow stood beside her. The tall, masked pirate was awe-inspiring, as if she had a natural aura of authority around her. She wasn't sure if she liked the woman, but she certainly earned her respect.

„I have bad feelings.” Bina grunted.

"You always have a bad feeling when you're doing what I'm doing, unless you're crazy." The pirate captain gave her a sidelong look, and Bina saw amusement in her eyes.

"You've never had kids to take care of." she said firmly, and then she saw the pain in Moonshadow's eyes.

„How can you know that? You don't know who I was and how I became who I am. Everyone has a past and no one is born like me.” the Pirate snapped sharply, but Bina answered her with a wry smile.

The courtyard of the monastery looked a bit like a fairy tale. Flowers bloomed everywhere, though most of them were a bit wild, but that only added to the charm. There were several paths made of slabs made of colored stone. Somehow, the fountain was still functioning, the sound of which was pleasantly soothing. The only thing that marred the landscape was a tall white spire with a disturbing, alien appearance. She saw Wrongdak watching her carefully.

„It's the Horde Prime communications spire. It gave access to his communications network, and also allowed him to maintain a local offshoot of his hive mind, and controlled the droids... Here, too, the subjects could... watch Horde Prime transmit his will and decrees to them.” he explained after a moment. Arkan-tar regarded the structure thoughtfully. She frowned, not trusting the scholar much, certainly less than the pirate.

„All right, now we have to make sure that there is no one alive here.” Bina said, and then Lilka clasped her hands together in a scream and screamed at the top of her lungs.

-„Hey, there's someone here! Let him come here. We certainly won't hurt him and we're just so cool!” Lilka waved the ax above her head. Half of those present looked at her with a mixture of surprise and annoyance, but the red-haired girl didn't care. She listened for a moment, then shook her head, spreading her hands helplessly.

„I guess they went away because if they didn't go, they would come to us, so I guess we have to go, since they don't want to come.”

To smother or to hug, that is the question thought Bina, sighing heavily.

Arak-tar was feeling better now, despite the presence of the pirates, especially one half-drow with a pleasant face and a nasty disposition. He found himself in his own environment. Abandoned buildings were his place of work. Uncovering their secrets was not only his profession, but also the purpose of his life, a passion to which he devoted himself. And this place held secrets, even the gate. They had been covered with relief depicting piece of myth he didn't know. At first he assumed that one of the inhertors legends was depicted there, which was not unheard of. Both Serenae and Iomadae and their churches were friends, so they often collaborated on many levels. But something strange happened here. The myth told the story of a great warrior, or perhaps a scholar, who distinguished herself in battle against the many enemies of her country or planet, and then received a holy sword, and for some unknown reason, began to replace her with Iomadae ... Then Saint Serenia appeared, though he only guessed that, and then the story got even more confusing. Maybe if he had more time he would decipher it… Maybe he would come back here, the Serenae church would certainly be interested in recovering the lost monastery.

In the courtyard, he smiled seeing the spire and hearing Wrongdak's explanation.

„Maybe Doctor Quin and Rechiza and I will look for a computer control room. Some kind of terraforming device is operating here, so the power supply is definitely working.” Verthani said. Only Bina gave him a suspicious look, but he answered her with a friendly smile,

As soon as they left, Rechiza said.

„I don't like this place.”

Arkan'tar wondered if she was talking about the Monastery or the whole Zone.

„Well, a monastery like a monastery. In Akitona, I lived next to the Triune Monastery, where some kids went to study. This one is much bigger, but also much more boring.”

Arkan tar looked at the others and smiled, noticing that they weren't paying attention to them, he said.

"And you could break into that spire." He asked. Ysoka turned and looked at the structure Horde Prime had built „Why not? I'm not a Hacker, but you seem to have good hacking gear, so that shouldn't be a problem. Just why do it?

Verthani smiled.

„As you heard from our friend Wrongdak, this structure was used to communicate with the entire Horde Prime network. Perhaps we could download the data and download it to our computer.” said the scholar, and when Ysoka nodded, he added, "Perhaps it could also be used to amplify our signals and send a message to the Lord Admiral?"

Out of the corner of his eye, he saw Rechiza smiling.

„Itel, Bina, look at this! Alatar called. Bina and the elf ran to them and the captain hoped they found something to cheer her up. They had searched several buildings before. The interiors were mostly in such a state as if they had been recently abandoned. There were a few apartments for families, apparently monks were born and died here, and warehouses for gardening and farming equipment, and a pumping station to support the irrigation system, and so on. There were a few places, probably where resistance had been met, where was a mess, but generally, except for the signs of the passage of time, these places were left in perfect order. Virtually nothing had been looted or destroyed, as if the invaders didn't care about material possessions. Only residents. Even the Swarm was more greedy… She hoped Alatar hadn't stumbled upon something equally disturbing.

„What do you have there?{ she asked and walked over with Rlfka. Itel had grown up in the woods in a small settlement and, in Alatar's opinion, was very good at tracking. Eti was better and had an excellent sense of smell, but she was nowhere to be seen now.

"Traces…" he pointed at the footprints. She sighed mentally, cursing her luck. Itel looked at them carefully.

„I see traces of a large humanoids here. she said and called Wrongdak and examined his foot. “Yeah, they're clones and I think bots. They were here a few days ago. And there are fresher ones, three pairs, but they were probably smaller humanoids.” Itel explained matter-of-factly. Bina let out a whoosh of air. She wanted to call the others, but then Eti called them.

"Come here, there's something weird here."

Most of them ran after the feline girl's voice. She led them to the largest structure. It was a temple. It had many stained glass windows made of translucent glassdiamond, most often depicting flowers. There were many pews here, for at least a few hundred worshippers. There was an image of Iomadae on the ceiling, though it was hard to tell because it was burned away with lasers and other energy weapons. A lot of liturgical equipment has been left here, and even a wat of a golden altar. Moonshadow's comrades whistled at the sight, but when they looked at the statue towering above them, they fell silent. It depicted a tall robed clone with metal claws attached to his fingers. He had three eyes on one side of his face and was smiling triumphantly. At his feet lay a shattered statue of Serenae wearing a golden crown. Wrongdak stood behind them.

„It's him, it's Horde Prime. he said with a strange mix of fear and anger. She shivered because he really did remind her of her Father. The silence that fell was broken by Eti.

„He has a smile, like a guy who wants to show his puppies to the kids at the park.” said the feline girl. Everyone giggled. Dilayla in power armor approached the statue.

"Well, time to do something about that nasty face." Step aside. she said, and tapped her armored glove several times on the legs of the statue. First cracks appeared, and then the statue fell to the floor with a thud. As the dust cleared, Lady Cala said a few words thoughtfully. Seeing their questioning looks, she said in her always gentle voice.

„ It's an ancient phrase. It means "And tyrants will fall when in their pride they arouse the wrath of the true masters of the universe”

Rulers of the United Kingdoms

She woke up and wiped her tear-stained eyes. She saw Entrapta crouched beside her, doing some calculations on the datapad. It took her a moment to realize what that meant. She rushed to the helm.

"Calm down, i fitted the autopilot.” said the lilac-haired woman without breaking away from her work. She stopped struggling with the rudder and looked at Entrapta anxiously.

"That's mean you did for us autopilot when we were at the seaside... The one with the waves."She felt the hairs on her spine stand on end. Melog puffed up and turned blue with fear "Didn't you think we might fall into the water and drown?"

Entrapta looked at her.

„Unlikely. Horde skimmers have surprisingly high buoyancy, you wouldn't believe how high.”

"I don't believe…" she said quietly. Under her nose, but the inventor heard it anyway

„I can show you.” she said and reached for the helm to stop the vehicle. She stopped her friend in horror.

„NO! Please!” she said, looking around. They flew along the coast, and the shore was terrifyingly far away. She had forgotten that sometimes you had to be careful with your words when talking to Entrapta. „I believe you, but please don't tamper with the vehicles you fly without asking the other passengers, okay?”

„All right, I'll try to remember.” she said.

They were already approaching the realm of Spinnerella, actually the now unified kingdom of Spinnerella and Netossa. The former country of the Wind Lady was called Windcrest, and her Wifes was called the Armoria. The Armoria was sworn to the Scorpions and hostile to Windcrest. Sometimes they even fought each other. Everything changed when Hordak arrived. The usurper king has seized power in the Kingdom of Scorpions, Netosa's grandmother stayed on side of his niece. Soon after, both countries fell to the Horde and both princesses spent almost thirteen years in Brightmoon waging war and caring for refugees. In Hordak's time, the locals were subjects of the Horde and contributed to the war effort by the sweat of their brow. Many fled to the free kingdoms, but others stayed here. As a cadet, she had little contact with people outside the capital, but as the right-hand to the ruler of the Fright Zone, she often read reports from there. If she remembered correctly, she screwed the screw there and forced the inhabitants to pour out seventh sweat in the production of weapons and food and the acquisition of raw materials. The Armoria in particular was burdened, for much of the Windcrest was picturesque windy hills, though there were many powerful wind traps, and even now many remain in use.

She did not like to return to the areas once occupied by the Horde. Everyone here knew her, sometimes in person. And they remembered her from her darkest period. She didn't think then that she would ever have to face the consequences of her actions, what she did to her own subordinates. Her friends could forgive her, Mikach could forgive her, but she knew it wouldn't be so easy with those she made them work beyond their means. More than once she had worried if she was better than Hordak. He escaped his responsibility to the Beast Island, she took refuge in Brightmoon, protected by the most important people in the galaxy. Seeing the settlement in the distance, she flattened her ears.

„Entrapta, could you put that autopilot on so it avoids any settlements.” She shyly asked her friend

Entrapta looked at her.

„The autopilot is connected to Susan.” the inventor began, but was interrupted.

„Susan?” she asked confused.

„The main autonomous satellite of Etheria. The basis of our satellite system.” – Entrapta answered

„We have a satellite system?” she asked confused. As Grand Marshal, she should probably know something about this.

„Yes, I even sent a message to Glimmer... Or maybe not? You know, I have a lot of work right now. Baby, communications network, early warning systems… It's a good thing Hordak's cooking, because I wouldn't have time for anything else.

She had to digest the vision of Hordak cooking for a moment before asking again.

"Then will Susan let us bypass the settlements?"

Entrapta nodded.

„Her autonomous Si has mapped the entire available part of the planet and can send data to the navigation system I have installed here, so she does not need a remote control. I just don't see any reason why we should avoid any settlements. I would buy some things here in the local workshop, which I would take to the island, and apparently they make such tiny cheese balls in spices ...” She raised her hand to interrupt her friend before she gained momentum

„Listen Entrapta. I'd like to stay here somewhere, maybe take a shower, use a real bathroom, but you know, this is former Horde territory, or maybe Horde occupied.” she said, and seeing that the former Mrs. Drylu stared at her without understanding, she began to explain. "Look, the people here were once Hordak's subjects, but at the end of the war when you…" She regretted bringing up the subject. "I just don't want them to see me, not after what i did to them. In Brightmoon, I'm just one of the many Horde soldiers who finally made the right choice. Here I was someone whose wrath made everyone tremble, who forced them to isanely hard work. Alone… You know what she used to be like. she said, trying to hold back tears from her eyes. Entrapta looked at her understandingly.

„Yes, I can avoid settlements. It's not a problem…" She thought for a moment. "You know, Hordak also speaks like that, only in different words. Because others don't see him the way I do. A great scientist, a brilliant engineer, a wonderful father... The best partner I could have had." she said thoughtfully. "And that's why he doesn't want to leave the island, and I want us to be together, so I'm with him. I… I understand that he has done a lot of bad things in the past and it will be difficult for others to forgive him. I would love for that to happen someday…" She became sad, but then she smiled and said. "I don't think anyone else hates you." The Fright Zone was a scary place. Its briought out the worst in others, everyone knows it. Me too." said the former Lady of Dryl. She sighed loudly and said.

"Perhaps you're right, but I don't feel like proving it right now. Especially now after what I found out. She rubbed her forehead and added. "And don't tell anyone about our discovery. I... I have to sort things out in my head. And I'd rather you didn't tell anyone about it. I want Adora to know about all this first."

Entrapta stared at her for a long moment, then asked cautiously.

„But Hordak... He is my assistant. O n needs to know about this."

For a moment she considered asking her friend to lie to the former lord of the Etherian Horde, but changed her mind. It might be too hard for Entrapta. She didn't want to cause any more trouble. Besides, what harm could come from Hordak finding out the truth about her origins? He wouldn't tell anyone anyway, no one would even listen to him. It might even be amusing to find out how little he knew about those he ruled. That Adora wasn't the only one with a secret. And he had no idea, as always. Of course, it would be much nicer if Shadow Weaver found out. She smiled grimly at the thought and replied.

„You can tell him. It won't change anything. Absolutely anything.

Well, they washed up in a bucket of water and pooped in the woods, which reminded her of some of the Best Friend Squad successful trips to some wild planets. It was dangerous then, but it was a wonderful time. Maybe after the wedding, he and Adora would go to some of the wildest areas of Etheria, maybe they would even convince Glimmer and Bow to participate? After all, the queen is entitled to vacation, right?

Windcrest, despite many years of occupation, has not suffered significant damage or contamination, especially in comparison to the Fright Zone. When the magic was unleashed, after the Heart was destroyed, the forests that had been cut grew back and the hills turned green again. It was a picturesque place, perfect for a romantic picnic. It's worth considering, maybe she'll go here with Adora? And they will eat those spicy cheese balls...

The princesses of the united kingdoms lived in a newly built mansion on the border of the two countries. Netossa's headquarters was razed to the ground during the siege during the early clashes with the Horde, and Windcrest had a wandering court that simply moved to Brightmoon… at least what was left of it after an ambush organized by the Usurper King himself. He must have been a „wonderful” individual, she was glad she hadn't met him, though Hordak still remembered him fondly.

Once, the inhabitants of both kingdoms were in conflict and often fought with each other. However, after three decades of living in both realms, both those who fled to Brightmoon and those living under occupation became friends. This is how common hardships and miseries work. Now, actually, the bigger conflict was between the former refugees and the occupied. Well, she didn't envy the princesses' hardships of power.

The court of both kingdoms, the manor towered over a silvery lake, surrounded by short trees with silver-blue leaves. It was quite pretty, though the mix of burgundy and white was conspicuous from a distance. A small Galactic Horde ship hung nearby, but repainted in the colors of the Star Islands, probably Ruby, judging by its intense red color. Spinnerella and Netossa apparently had visitors. She parked in front of the vast mansion and got out with Melog and Entrapta with Alice. The purple-haired woman looked around curiously, and she knocked. It was opened by a goat person, who immediately stiffened at the sight of her. She looked painfully at Entrapta. "That's what I was talking about."

„Is there Princess Spinnerella and Princess Netossa? she asked, trying to smile as friendly as possible.

"Of course, the ladies of the united kingdom are receiving a visitor, but of course they will make time for Grand Marshal Catra and Princess Entrapta." he said and led them inside. Inside, she saw a clone in livery vigilantly observing the surroundings. She saw ceramic images of moons on the walls, a rather strange custom common throughout Etheria to hang them in various parts of the house to ensure good luck.

Seeing them, Spinnerella got up from the tea table and hugged her.

„Nice of you to visit us. We've been waiting for you.” said the lady of the winds. The two children, the feline boy and the girl Seihe also hugged her. Both queens of the united kingdoms adopted them. They also had a baby of their own, and judging by Spinnerell's rounded belly, they were expecting another. They were making up for the years of war, as were most of Etheria's inhabitants. After a while, Spinny went to say hello to Entrapta, who was trying to say hello to the clone, but he was reserved.

„Ah, Shadow Weaver ward!” She heard a hard, hoarse voice. Repulsed, she tensed, but refrained from drawing her claws out. Melog, however, put his ears down and began wagging his tail nervously. She looked in the direction from which the voice came and saw a woman in a wheelchair, quite old-fashioned, but very intricately made. She had fiery red hair, slightly unkempt. She was quite attractive, but the left half of her body was gray as if dead. She smirked half of her mouth.

„Do you recognize her work? Apparently, you were quite close... Before you decided to take her place, of course.”

I don't like her already She thought, but tried to answer as calmly as possible.

„I'll say the same thing I recently told her sister... Yes, she had a family... Shadow Weaver didn't raise anyone, she only conditioned and I doubt if she had anyone close to her in her lousy life. In fact, she had always cared only for herself.” she sighed heavily. „Who do I have the pleasure of talking to?” she asked, although she guessed the answer.

„I am Halo, one of the Sisters Star, Grand Marshal Catra. I'm sorry that we haven't had the opportunity to meet in recent years, but I hope that we will be able to make up for it.”

Wonderful she thought.

"Halo said she'd be at Glimmer and Bow's wedding…and your and Adora's, of course." Spinnrela said looking at her apologetically.

Even better

„This is very surprising news. I thought you and your sister seceded from the Kingdom of Etheria. she asked a bit suspiciously. She tried to be kind, but she had no patience with this woman despite her condition. Halo smiled, and it was a particularly nasty smile.

„Politics should not make us forget about courtesy and mutual respect.” She looked at Entrapta coldly. “Of course, that doesn't mean we're backing down on our demands. We will get our justice eventually, it's just a matter of time.”

There was an awkward silence. Spinnerella tried to be polite, but it was hard when one guest was threatening the others.

„I will not allow my guests to be insulted in my house. Hello. We're friends, but…” Lady Wind said coldly. But Entrapta said.

„That's okay” and tried to smooth things over as best she could. She ran over to the cart and looked at it.

„You know, without the slightest problem you could connect an electric drive here, with the right tools it would take me no more than a quarter of an hour ...” she began to speak quickly

"And when I get home, I'll build an anti-gravity cart, like the Horde tanks, only much smaller, of course, and..." She didn't finish as Halo screamed.

„GET OUT!”

Entrapta jumped back sharply as if scalded. She too, even from this distance, felt the wave of pain that spread with the woman's voice. Melog turned red, emanating from her rage. She pulled out her claws, and the clone stood up and glared at her menacingly. Spinnerella motioned to the children to move away and assumed a fighting stance herself. Entrapta looked at Sister Star confused and scared. She happened to be in the heat of the fight, but this time someone hurt the purple-haired woman at the moment when she wanted to help someone sincerely and selflessly. I treated her like that once, it should never happen again Halo looked around confused and ashamed.

"I'm sorry, I shouldn't have reacted so… intensely. After… What Shadow Weaver did to me, my power has changed and I don't always fully control it.” said the woman in the wheelchair and signaled her bodyguard to rest. She took a deep breath and also retracted her claws, and the melogue took on its usual color.

“That woman left her damn mark on all of us. Fortunately, she is no more, and we can all let our wounds heal.” she said, hoping she sounded wise and conciliatory. Halo looked at her curiously.

„You really believe that... that she's gone…” Sister star leaned one hand on the side of the stroller and almost stood up.

„You naive child. You don't know what I know. A great darkness hides among the stars, and beings as old as time itself watch us, weaving their intrigues. Who is merely a shadow cannot truly die. I tell you, the dead will walk among the living.” she said. She smiled with a mixture of indulgence and contempt, but felt a shiver run down her spine. Spinnerella looked at Halo sympathetically and said.

"Children, take Marshal Catra and Princess Entrapta to mamy Netossa?"

The kids, already scared by the Halo outburst, followed them with great pleasure.

On the way, the children introduced themselves to them. The feline boy was called Greypaw and the girl Seihe Quickling. The boy spoke to her, clearly admiring her, while Quickling told Entrapta about their life at the manor. They both cuddled up to Melog, who seems to like it. They were cute, but watching Greypaw made her even more aware of how different he was from other Etheria felines. Much less hair, differently spaced ears, a more human face… things that no one else would pay attention to. At least on this planet. In other places, things like species mattered a lot more.

They found Netossa on a court located on a hill a little behind the house, where she practiced catching balls in the net. It was only here that she saw a few guardsmen, though she guessed that there must be a few more in the house. She felt a twinge of uneasiness, but quickly dismissed it. The war is finally over, and even Lonnie with her People's Rebellion won't make the people of Etheria live in fear… She wasn't sure if she believed it or was just trying to convince herself. Netossa embraced the children and greeted them.

„Hi Entrapta, Hi Catra, it's great that you're here. I've been packed for two days. she said, and Entrapta whistled. Alice ran out, preferring not to know where the bot was while they were talking.

„I'm already packed too. I can't wait to see your grandmother's armory. Apparently, she had such inventions there ... maybe even the doomsday weapon ... „ Entrapta squealed with delight, but at the sight of her friends' looks, she added. „Of course, everything will be used for peaceful purposes!”

Netossa sighed looking at them seriously.

„I have no idea, it's there. I've only been there once as a little girl. My grandmother then gave me my bracelet.” She pointed to a device for throwing power nets. “Actually, I don't know where Now might be”. she said with obvious embarrassment.

"What do you mean by Now might be?" she asked uncertainly.

„I don't know how to explain it… The Armory just appeared when we summoned it.” Netossa explained.

"You mean some vehicle that came when called?" Entrapta asked curiously. „Maybe a spaceship? Can you imagine Catra? Another Spaceship of the First Ones! Darla will have a brother or sister!” The inventor's voice became more and more excited.

"The spaceship can be nice. Darla's not that bad, „she thought, relieved.

Netossa shook her head.

„No... It was just a crystal gate that appeared when summoned. Inside was a large armory, in which resided a being called The Armorer. She gave us or sometimes even created what she considered necessary for us. Now I think it must have been the AI.”

„Oh, finally I will meet the real advanced AI of the First Ones! Can you imagine what we can learn from her from the next Light Hope. Entrapta radiated delight

She groaned. She'd never met Light Hope directly, but she had been rummaging through her head, bringing out her worst and most painful memories, nearly driving her insane. Compared to this bitch, Horde Prime was a butcher compared to a surgeon. Now she was dealing with another creation of the First Ones, perhaps just as dangerous and insane.

" I don't like it very much, I won't hide it. Open that door and let's get this over with." she said, dropping her ears low, and Melog clung to the ground, taking on the blue color of fear.

„There's only one problem. My grandmother gave the key to Frosta mother and the summoning device to the Star Sisters to keep it out of the hands of the Horde."

Catra groaned.

"You've met Halo before, haven't you?" she winced. "That's why we invited her here, though I prefer not to talk to her. Me and Pulsar filtered a bit... Before I met Spinny! And then, after the battle, I visited sisters on their island, and Halo called me a coward and said that's because of my cowardice she was maimed." Netossa said. "That's why I prefer not to talk to her."

„I'm not surprised. She called me a Shadow Weaver ward today, though she's not the first. A few days ago, I met the shadow lady's sister."

Netossa widened her eyes.

„Did she have a family?" said the ruler of Armoria incredulously.

„Yes." She nodded and briefly told her about the meeting with Midnight Mask. Netossa uttered a very long and extremely colorful string of curses that stung her cat ears. The mystery of Glimmer vocabulary has been solved. Fortunately, the children did not hear anything, because together with Entrapta they were teaching Alice and Melog to fetch balls. Her companion, as soon as he noticed that she noticed his behavior, approached her embarrassed.

„Entrapta, we are going to the Kingdom of Snow.”

The inventor jumped with delight.

Remember our trip to the North Reach?" she said and squealed. "Too bad Scorpia isn't with us."

„I remember ... I'm going to freeze my tail again.” She sighed. "It's going to be a long journey."

Netossa smiled cheekily.

„Not that long, you'll take a Silverwing.”

Welcome to the wide universe.

Tallstar jumped as she felt the entire building shake. Her siblings did the same. They looked at each other surprised.

„What do you think it was?” Starla asked, reassuring Glory.

"I'm not sure…" Jewelstar said, examining the ceiling as if searching for cracks. I hope no one is firing here." Do you remember Aquarius?”

Tallstar clenched her cybernetic prosthetic fist.

„It's hard for us to forget. I hope all of this doesn't come crashing down on us. 0 she said anxiously looking into the darkness stretching out before them. They had two night vision goggles, and the Jewelstar's eye had a similar feature, but they weren't the best. Those strange creatures that Wrongdak flew away with once sold them a perfect one, but they traded it for information about the location of the Back-up with Horde Prime's consciousness, which turned out to be false. Maybe we need to look for the planet of these creatures ... They probably have more and better equipment.

„You know what I thought? Why don't we go on vacation when we're done with this place? There's supposed to be a big victory party on Etheri and all... Maybe we'll rest there for a few months, maybe even a year?" Starla suggested, stroking Glory's head.

Jewelstar winced.

„’We still have a lot of work ahead of us.” he said grimly.

Talstar rolled her eyes.

„What work?! Horde Prime was destroyed five years ago. And we're still fighting like nothing has changed. I'm sorry, it's changed. Now we have two tyrants… No, I'm sorry, I was wrong. We've got eight crazy tyrants and a hell of a lot of local pirates and bandits, not to mention Bellum freaks.”

Her brother snorted.

„Horde Ultimate and Heavenly Brothers are mere shadows of Prime.”

Talstar nodded.

„Yes, and that's why we should think about retirement. Or at least on vacation. And so the three of us won't win the peace just like we didn't win the war. We helped foment a galactic rebellion, wonderful, but we won't do much more. At least Icarus is finally free.”

"There's nothing left for us on Icarus anyway. And many innocents still suffer under the yoke of his heirs”.

She groaned helplessly.

„We can't save everyone. I know you'll never get over our loss, but it's time to move on. It's a matter for others. Those of Etheria are rumored to want to form a galactic alliance. Maybe it's better that we somehow use our knowledge and skills to help, instead of blindly crashing all over the universe.”

The argument went to Jewelstar, but he pressed his lips together hard, as always it takes a while for him to agree with her.

„You know, why don't we postpone such discussions for later and check this place out? Preferably ASAP?" Starla interjected.

She was right. Their new ship, which they named the Honor in… honor of their Etherian friends, detected a signal coming from this place where they were calling for help. It was old, but there was no ship around for years, and they had nothing else to do anyway. For six months they had been wandering from one port to another, looking for something to do… or rather, a purpose. Most of the former rebels abandoned the fight or joined the various armed formations formed by the newly established provisional or revived governments. Some also went astray and began to prey on those for whom they had been fighting so recently. It was no longer a time for lone gunpersons like them. The world has changed, and not in the way they expected.

So they landed near the monastery, which they carefully hid in a nearby canyon. They had picked up this habit during the war with the Horde, though they hadn't expected anyone else to be around, so far from the center of the Known Universe. There were only uninhabited planets around, often ravaged by the Horde. But it was their caution bordering on paranoia that made them survive all those years of guerrilla warfare. The planet was strange, as if at one point it wanted to accept life, but then changed its mind and only mosses and lichens grew here. She had heard that the First Ones could transform entire planets, making them livable. She knew little about this ancient race, on Icarus, especially on the main continent from which their planet was named, there was little interest in the remote past. However, the power of the ancient civilization must have been unimaginable if they were capable of such undertakings. She had heard from friends on Etheri that the First Ones had done terrible things, but Adora, She-Ra herself, was one of them, they couldn't be all that bad.

She has never been to a monastery. On Icarus, this type of practice was abandoned long ago, its inhabitants preferred to look to the future, they reveled in the development of technology. The case with Dedalus was somewhat different. The smaller continent of their planet was much more backward economically, and its inhabitants held much more firmly to tradition and old faith. And it was they who put up the fiercest resistance to the Horde. And they paid a terrible price for it. Three-quarters of the population was killed and most cities were razed to the ground. However, now that their magic had been unleashed, many of them had gained power and were happy to use it to fight the remaining followers of Horde Prime. Only reverent respect for She-ra spared the clones. Their mother was from Dedalus, though with the exception of Jewelstar, they hardly remembered her. This monastery seemed to be a place where some Serenia-like entity was worshiped on Eridani, a place they both hated immensely.

The monastery was empty, which they expected, but they hoped for a different result. This did not bode well for the places Horde Prime visited. He especially hated places of worship, he was a merciful but jealous master. Although, looking at the level of his madness... So they left the monastery and entered the underground through the sewers, hoping that in this way they would avoid any traps the Horde had left here, because its former ruler was fond of leaving traps for those who wanted to delve too much into his secrets. It was dark here, and the tunnels stretched under the entire complex, creating a veritable maze. They scrambled through it all day and couldn't find it. At first they thought that the inhabitants built a mine here, but then they found strange symbols on the walls, only after closer inspection they concluded that they were the same symbols that were on Adora's sword, that is, they ended up in some ancient structure built by her ancestors where the monastery was built. They did not even find a trace of the inhabitants of the monastery.

They were close to the surface when there was a tremor. They had seen traces of the Other's presence before, but couldn't tell how old they were, so they could hope they were gone. But now they were sure that they were not alone in this eerie place. They were about to eat their meal, but they interrupted it when they heard, or rather felt, a noise. They moved forward, unsure and afraid. They hadn't felt this uneasy since Prime's fall. They really were too old for all this.

They were in front of a room that, judging by the smell of decaying plants, was a hydroponic farm. It was warm here, the entire monastery had power, but they hadn't hit the reactor yet.

„Apparently the gardens did not collapse, how many people do you think lived here?” she asked, staring at the door. There were no locks, no armory or anything like that. Simple people living simple lives that were interrupted by a wicked tyrant.

„Let's get out of here, maybe we won't find anything here. You're right, don't risk” Jewelstar finally said.

She nodded, and they were about to leave when she felt a strange tap on her back.

„I don't like that owl.” behind her back someone said in strangely dull voice.

And then she heard a massive creature running towards them...

After the statue collapsed, her crew members and passengers searched the monastery, or rather its upper part. They found some more evidence that the structure had recently been visited by several other people. Trampled grass, worn dust, fingerprint on the computer. Bina became seriously worried. The place was absolutely eerie, and her experience told her it would only get worse from there. she sighed. They were under a fountain, eating protein bars. Bina looked around and approached Dilayla.

"Maybe it wasn't the best idea to take down that statue." she said looking at the mercenary who shrugged her shoulders.

„Someone had to do it. You know, after all these years, I saw his face for the first time? It's so strange. A dude thirty years ago ruined my life, took everything from me and made me into this.” She clenched her cybernetic fist and smiled grimly and added. "That's all I could do. I don't know if you understand what it's like to want revenge on someone who ruined your life.”

Bina smiled sourly and saw from the corner of her eye that Miss Daisy was surreptitiously listening to them, as was Wrongdak, but he was listening much less secretly.

„You would be surprised. But we killed the one who made us.”

The mercenary looked at her curiously.

„We?” she asked, raising a light blue eyebrow.

„Me and my sister, K-Nacia. One of many. We used to be called the Thousand Daughters, but now we are the Thousand Sisters she said, and seeing Dilayla's confused look she added. “I am a female clone of our Father Jantar. As she said this, she saw Miss Daisy nod as if confirming something she had long suspected, and Wrongdak came up to her in amazement.

"So... are you a clone too?" Just like me… like us?” he asked in an astonished voice. Bina smiled sadly.

„Not quite. Our Father, Jantar, wasn't as crazy as Horde Prime and was… More calculating. The Thousand Daughters was the gang that shook the entire Atrax underworld. But we all owed unconditional obedience to our Father. He put it all together very cleverly. Each of us was different, unique, a separate work of art. In terms of predispositions, he divided them into "Nations", series that were to play different roles in the organization. The A-Nations were thieves and burglars. W-Nations were cybernetic warriors. M-Nations were psykers, and we B-Nations were frauds. Con artists who could sell sand on Akiton. I am B-Natia number 7479... We didn't even get names... But he gave us a lot of freedom because he had a hold on us. You see, we were all created with a defect. We were slowly dying of a neurodegenerative disease and only Jantar had a medicine that could save us, or maybe just slow down the progress of the disease? We started dying at the age of two and lived up to seven years. The older we got, the more and stronger the doses, and our Father sent us on more and more dangerous missions, and sometimes ordered others to kill us.”

„And Ka-Nation?” Dilaya asked. For a moment, Bina thought the mercenary had pronounced the name of this group of her sisters strangely, but she ignored it.

„K-Nation… The whole group was unstable. They were murderers and Assassins, but that K-Natia was extremely fucked up, even more so than our Father. She was as fucked up as your Big Brother, but that's probably the only way she was able to defy our creator. She tried to kill me before but changed her mind thanks to Igzar

"Did you know Igzar, leader of the Shadows of Tarak?" asked the mercenary appreciatively.

„Yeah, old crazy tomcat. I have to admit it was a bit of a bastard. But it was thanks to him that we managed to take down Jantar. I wasn't interested in power, so my sister, Lady Ka, took over, and that's when it all started. She freaked the hell out, named herself Supreme Queen Ka, and became a tyrant."

"But i belive, like our mister Wrongdak's brother, she suffered a terrible but absolutely deserved fate?" Miss Daisy asked. Bina nodded thoughtfully.

"Yeap, she got into Igzar's black book, and it's something very stupid." Well, she's as dead as a mortal can be now. – replied the dark sorceress.

„Yes, that certainly solved your problem." Miss Daisy said in a voice that the captain sensed a grain of irony."

Rosie was feeling better now. Miss. Daisy was good to her. She knew there was something dark inside her, but she showed her support despite what she had done to Lady Cala. She did not understand her words, or rather did not want to understand them. She wasn't sure what was going on with her, only that she felt confused. Sad and happy at the same time. Her heart was beating like never before. She didn't want to say anything just yet. She just had to deal with their mission for now, and it was terrible.

The upper, above-ground part of the monastery was beautiful. The sun was shining, flowers were blooming, even the water in the fountain was splashing, only birds chirping merrily. It was nice, like a picnic, though she'd never been to one, so she couldn't be sure. But then she saw this statue of this Horde Prime. He had the face of a Wrongdak, plus a few eyes, but there was something indescribably wicked about that face. She had the impression that she could feel the evil flowing out of him and ... Something she did not understand. A feeling of disappointment, contempt for someone who... wasn't worthy of the power entrusted to him. Then Dilayla destroyed the statue and she felt a little better. But she still felt uneasy, as if something dark hung between them. She knew what was going on, it was a sentence that everyone was afraid to say...

All the inhabitants of the monastery are dead.

They wanted to... But they couldn't turn back, because someone had to find out what happened here. Of course Captain Moonshadow didn't care. Her pirates wanted only riches. She was afraid of this woman, so when she approached her, she jumped. Dilayla immediately approached them.

„Hello, you're Rosie, aren't you?” she asked, but Dilayla cut her off.

„What do you want from her?” asked the mercenary sharply. Everyone fell silent. Eti drew her rifle, Itel summoned the blade. The others also assumed fighting stances. The other subordinates of the pirate did the same, although only this terrifying, only this terrifyingly cute Skittermander showed enthusiasm. Miss Daisy and Lady Cala were the only ones who stayed calm, they were so strong and brave. Rosie put a hand on Dilayla's armored shoulder.

„Everything's all right.” she said, and after thinking about it, the mercenary relaxed. just like the others. "What can I help you with?" she asked, trying to look more confident than she felt.

"You just remind me of my daughter." Moonshadow said sadly. It wasn't the answer she expected at all. So did the others who watched the winged woman, even the members of her crew. The exceptions again were Miss Daisy and Lady Cala.

„That... Captain has a daughter?” she asked confused. The Pirate Captain touched her cheek with her fingers.

„I had ... She was brave and strong, always wanted to get her way ...” said the captain shrilly and turned away from her.

- Your daughter, what happened to her? Miss Daisy asked unexpectedly. Moonshadow looked at her sternly.

„What do you think? She was taken from me. Those who have a happy family life do not dabble in my profession. said the pirate in a sharp voice. Bina gave her a sympathetic look, and Miss Daisy looked for a moment as if she wanted to say something, but then Lady Cala put her hand on her shoulder and the pirate walked away.

In the end, it was necessary to get to the underground of the monastery, which stretched over a huge area. Underneath the upper residential buildings was the entrance to the tunnels. Bina divided them into three groups. One is to look for the broadcasting center, the second for the vault (here she pointedly looked at Captain Moonshadow) and the third for the archive. In addition, of course, they had to find the elevators and find out what actually happened to the inhabitants of the monastery. Bina assigned to first group Arkan-tar, Eti. who decided to take Rosie, Dilayla, Lady Cala and Alatar. To the second, Captain Moonshadow, whom she also wanted to accompany. Miss Daisy, Rechiza, Ireanis, Itel and Lilka were supposed to be in the Last one. Doctor Quin and Wrongdak were supposed to be trying to download information from the Spire to their computers. Itel seemed dissatisfied with this division of tasks, but did nothing other than throw hostile and warning glances at Miss Daisy.

Rosie was confused about the fact that she would be hiking with Eti. She liked the feline girl, but this one was from Itel and she didn't want to come between them. As they were getting ready to leave, Dilayla said to Eti, looking at her firmly.

„Just watch out for Rosie, understood? Otherwise you'll be in trouble," she threatened the feline girl, and Eti nodded gravely. At first Rosie felt angry, oh she didn't want to be 'looked after', she didn't need protection, but something in the exchange of glances between her companions made her want to keep quiet. Eti motioned for her to follow her.

Rosie reluctantly took off her gloves because they allowed them to communicate, but left her glasses on because they had night vision devices built in. Here underground it was, though there were hyper-durable light bulbs here and there that still shone after all these years. Turns and tributaries passed, and Eti reported from time to time that the area was clear. Suddenly the feline girl stopped and signed for Rosie.

„I heard something. Someone is talking there."

It took the intern a few seconds to realize what had happened.

„You speak, I mean you speak in sign language!" she said in amazement.

„It looks." replied the scout.

„But since when?" asked the white-haired girl.

„From now on, or always. Sometimes I'm like that... Let's not talk, I have an important thing to do. „You know, ambush and stuff. she said and turned to Dilayla.

„Some dudes are ahead of us, I'm going to check." She left without waiting for anyone.

As they peeked around the corner, she would see three people, human-like humanoids with colored hair, probably some kind of human. They were armed but didn't look particularly dangerous, at least compared to the Moonshadow pirates or even Eti and her friends.

"They don't look like Wormdak's brothers, but they have a very suspicious owl." the feline reported and activated the cloaking field and, ignoring Dilayla's curses, approached the woman who, like the mercenary, had cybernetic prosthetic limbs and said.

„I don't like that owl.”

And then Dilayla went on the attack.

Tallstar turned instinctively to see a figure in heavy hooded robes wearing a mask and goggles. Instead of a right arm, she had a strange metal prosthesis, but she was armed with a pistol and carried a rifle on her back.

„Take care of the big one.” Tallstar said, and tried to knock the creature down with her cybernetic prosthesis, but she jumped away from it and stabbed it with the blade attached to the wrist of her left hand. The blow slid down her armor, but then she delivered a swift blow to her lower abdomen, which she felt painfully. Then, even worse, she saw another attacker, a white-haired girl with shining hands.

„Jewelstar, i have got two here! she called to her brother” who answered.

„Ours is enough for two.”

Out of the corner of her eye, she saw a huge figure in power armor. She cursed, the situation was becoming really unpleasant. The white-haired girl began to hit her with glowing fists, and the masked figure tried to get her from behind. She resisted, but had to retreat. Her brother fired his old Horde blaster, but the second assailant dodged with surprising dexterity for someone in power armor, but Starla drove a nanoblade into the armor.

„Great, Starla!” she cried, but then her siblings had to dodge the stream of flames. A bullet flew over her head, making her feel freezing cold. The white-haired assailant grabbed her wrist and twisted it with terrifying ease.

„Hey, stop!” shouted the armored figure in a surprisingly pleasant voice. Are you Star siblings, friends of Wrongdak?" she asked.

The person in the mask touched the shoulder of the white-haired girl, and she let go of her hand. Both people started talking to each other in sign language.

Her siblings had lowered their weapons, but they were ready to keep fighting if needed. The armored figure ordered his helmet down and revealed the quite attractive face of a blue-haired woman. There were Saihe who lived on Etheri, but judging by her equipment and accent, she was not from there, though it is unknown what Entrapta may have come up with in the meantime.

Beside him stood a tall man with gray skin, elongated limbs, and dark eyes without whites. He smiled cheekily at them. Next was a large silver-scaled lizard with wings on its back and multiple cybernetic implants. It was reminiscent of pee from ancient legends. Could another myth have come back to life?

„You... are you also rebels who are fighting Horde?” Jewelstar asked, looking at them in surprise.

„No, we are sholars working for Kemanis University. We're exploring the so-called Ravaged Zone. said the man with glasses.

She blinked confused.

„Ravaged Zone? Kemanis University?” she asked, barely understanding what she heard.

„The Ravaged Zone is name of the place where you live.”. said a beautiful blonde woman who came out of the shadows. She had a epee at her side. “Few in the galaxy have heard of Horde Prime.” She bowed politely to them. “I am Lady Cala Grayskull, and I wish to welcome you to the wide universe

Regaining control

Together with Melog, they decided that flying even at such altitudes was much more pleasant than sailing in a boat. Although she had no experience, half of the captains she sailed with were Sea Hawk... To think that she once doubted Scorpia's sailing talent...

Though she had to admit she'd feel a bit more comfortable if Netossa wasn't so eager to demonstrate Silverwing's capabilities to them, and Entrapta refrained from testing the ship's systems.

The Silverwing was a large flying machine with silvery wings that spanned more than twenty meters and was capable of vertical take-off and landing… and breaking the sound barrier. Which Netossa immediately demonstrated to them with joy .

" Look!" she said as the craft passed over the seas and plains of Etheria. Entrapta squealed with delight, she instinctively clutched the armrests of the chair.

"Where did you get it from? You never used it in the war?" she asked warily, looking around the passenger compartment. It was much tighter than the interior of the Taillsting Scorpia's vehicle . Up to six people of normal size could fit in here.

"Because he was unable to fly. After my grandmother organized a raid to slay the Usurper King, the Shadow Weaver damaged him. We dragged ourselves to Brightmoon with difficulty . But the damage was too great, and for the next thirty years it sat gathering dust in an underground hangar. After the war, I bought parts from an off-planet dealer and repaired it. Spinny was skeptical at first, but then she grew to like it." Netossa explained with joy in her voice. "It's the fastest atmospheric craft on all of Etheria!" cried Princess Armori and laughed merrily. Melog turned slightly blue in concern. Admittedly, Netossa was a great, albeit over-enthusiastic, pilot.

“And what happened to your ship? The ones Scorpia flew to the ball with.” asked the white-haired woman.

She winced. It was her greatest success, but she wasn't proud of it. To this day, Frosta looked at her reproachfully at all events.

“After we hacked the Black Garnet, Taillsting was hit by lightning, and it turned out that his navigation system failed.” She replied looking out the window

“Couldn't you fix it? “asked the surprised princess of Armoria . “You had all of Hordak's facilities .”

"It also fried its friend-or-foe system, and any inorganic flying object without that First Ones-design device was destroyed, probably by Light Hope." Entrapta said. “ I've built many flying machines, even before I worked for you. But they all exploded, absolutely all of them. Silverwing and Taillsting are remade First One vehicles.”

She bristled.

"We're on the First Ones' vehicle now?" she asked scared. He and Melog wagged their tails in sync.

“Yes, judging by the data and technical specifications on Darla, it was a strategic bomber. It was supposed to drop weapons of mass destruction, atomic bombs, for example, on critical targets.”

"Like the bombs those psychos from Bellum dropped on themselves ?" she asked, genuinely scared this time, as if the vehicle was going to explode at any moment. The people of Bellum fight the Horde twenty years ago. When they started losing, they took a desperate step: they dropped nuclear warheads on the entire planet, rendering it uninhabitable. Only a few giant fortresses- shelters built in mountain ranges have survived. Even Horde Prime must have been impressed by their act, for he refrained from further attacks. The people of Bellum, the Coldhearts , claimed to have won the war, though they had killed their world.

Bellum was an ally of Etheri, but they caused more trouble than they helped. They demanded that Glimmer give them the captured fleet, allocate all available resources to defeat the Horde Ultimate and the Heavenly Brothers, preferably by orbital bombardment ... They could not completely ignore them, however, because they had the most powerful army among their allies. Ambassador John Kilthem lived in Brightmoon and was a pain in the ass of them all.

“Don't be afraid, we don't have such weapons here. Though we are not defenseless either. Netossa said smiling a bit diabolically.” She shrugged and began to rummage through the packages.

"Just don't let Spinny pack us those sandwiches. You see, she's eating herring with toffee and pickles now.” Netossa laughed, smiling tenderly.

“And I ate something like that recently.” she said thoughtfully. Netossa gave her a sidelong look and said a strange Aha.

They flew towards the Kingdom of snow, which took them a while. It was a remote and vast realm, almost as large as Brightmoon , though less populated. It was always cold here, though not as many thought, she'd heard. Apparently, on other planets that had that sun, it was weird, and sometimes in one place it was hot and then cold. Once they went to Eridani prepared to bask in the warmth, only to find that frost and snow greeted them. In addition, there were no clothes anywhere for people of their size. On the way back everyone was sneezing and couching, but it was a successful adventure. Frosta lived in her castle made of crystal and ice , though she usually stayed in the warmer part of the wood and stone castle. They landed on a wide airfield for ships and similar vehicles. It was crowded here, and Silverwing was by far the largest, so Netossa had to work hard to land properly. Then they went to the palace. She tried to smile friendlyly at the ice guards, but they kept their eyes on her. Well, she's earned a certain reputation.

They wandered the corridors for a long time, she had the impression that they were not very welcome here. Finally, they ended up in front of Frosty's office . From there came a tall Saihe dressed in blue armor resembling an insect. Something about her posture was oddly familiar.

"If you call me Shadow Weaver's ward, I can't vouch for myself." She growled, claws out.

The woman looked at her surprised.

“Ah, it's you... I heard about you. You knew Light Spinner well . “ she stated rather than asked. Her voice was lower and hoarser than the dark sorceress's.

“I knew Shadow Weaver. Light Spinner died many years ago, If you want to talk about her, ask Mikah , though I doubt he will answer” she replied sharply, but she retracted her claws.

“Yes, I heard she hurt you. Well, not only you. And this woman… What does she want from me?” she asked, looking at Entrapta , who began to look at her as if she were a research object “Shadow Weaver was never studied, but her ability to draw magic from her surroundings was fascinating. By learning the physiology of an object related to it, we can finally decipher one of Etheria's greatest mysteries.” Entrapta explained, continuing her research. Catra felt a little sympathy.

" Entrapta, you will certainly have the opportunity to examine someday lady... " She looked at the woman questioningly.

“Storm Heart. Storm Heart the Guardian Storm. – said the woman – We will meet sooner than you think .

She had a feeling that there would be many unwanted guests at the wedding.

It turned out that Frosta is not in the castle. They were greeted by the Chancellor, a person so sullen and serious that she felt at home. It didn't bode well for this person. When asked where she was, she heard that she left with the Techmaster's Bow's fathers in search of some ruins. Saying this, he looked as if the ice princess had offended him and his parents with this act. She sighed and told her friends as they left.

"I did not expect such difficulties. We'll look for Frosta or you'd rather go back to your families and activities." she asked, looking questioningly at both women. They had their families and important jobs, she had her responsibilities too, but she was probably a kind of leader here. Netossa looked at her surprised.

"Of course we're looking for her. It was my idea after all, I warned Spinny that it might take a while. At most, the next time we go on a similar trip, we will give the kids to the babysitter and go on a trip together, remember the good old days." She smiled with a dreamy expression. But then she became serious. "I don't like that chancellor talking to Storm Heart behind Frosta's back . In the old days, the Isles of Sorrow only traded with Scorpions and the Star Isles, and as far as I know, it's a gloomy place. The inhabitants are said to worship some kind of spideress , just as the townspeople of Eridani worship this Iomdi thing . Netossa shook her head. Yes, it suited Shadow Weaver.

She looked at Entrapta .

"What do you think? she asked her friend, apparently snapping her out of her thoughts on the datapad." She looked at them surprised.

"Yes? I'm sorry, I was just thinking about a secret, mine and Catra's."

She grabbed her forehead.

“Entrapta, I asked you something! she said, trying not to shout at her friend, but Melog growled.

“Don't worry, Adora will be the first to know about everything!” She said and patted her shoulder. Netossa made a strange face and covered her mouth with her hand.

"What do you think about us looking for Frosty ?" she said, massaging her forehead between her eyes.

“I told Hordak that I might be gone for a day or a week, maybe even a month. He's ready for it.” she said, and headed for Silverwing.

She sighed. She hoped Frost hadn't gone far. After all, how fast could she wander in the company of householders like George and Lance”

“Hold on, we're just entering the gravel pit!” she called to George and Lance in the backseat of her landspeeder. The vehicle was built by combining solutions from old Horde skimmers and Prime's combat drones . Three gravity engines gave this triangular machine excellent stability, but also great speed. It was certainly the fastest land vehicle on Etheri.

“Everything's all right.” George groaned, though he looked as if it were the other way around. Lance looked around holding the telescope to his eye and admired the views. When his husband saw it, he snatched the telescope from his hands and hid it in the glove box.

"Be careful, if we brake hard at this speed..." He didn't have to finish the description, because Lance realized what was at stake and turned pale.

“Sorry. I forget myself sometimes. The nature here is so majestic.” he said to his husband. She had to give them a reason. The views in her kingdom were beautiful. Majestic mountains shooting up to the sky. Flowery plains as far as the eye can see. Fancifully shaped rocks were everywhere, reminiscent of creatures from legend such as owlbears or dragons . Why would anyone living in such a beautiful country want to care about politics?!

She was glad of this trip, finally able to break away from the whining of the chancellor and the nagging of the heads of the great clans. Maybe she should take him on this adventure too? He'd be entertained, amused, a little scared, but he'd finally feel alive instead of whining about imperial titles. It will be a great trip, they will explore ruins like Adora, Glimmer and Catra. Ruins…

“Are these the ruins of the First Ones? That crystal and blue? Do you think I'll find another sword there? Or a magic cat? Or the Magic Goat! I like goats! “ she screamed and made a sharp turn. Bowa 's fathers groaned as they were thrown.

“We do not know. It's a very old city. He is mentioned in several stories and one book”. George said, trying to stay straight.

“Stories? But scary ones, about monsters and murderers!” she asked in delight. She liked it more and more.

“Yes, very scary. Supposedly, the city was inhabited by some terrible, wicked beings who built cities with alien architecture. Apparently, a monster with countless mouths and eyes lives there to this day.” Lance said with all seriousness in his voice. She thought for a moment.

“Why didn't anyone count them? Just sit down and count.” she said, and looked at the Bowa fathers questioningly. George scratched his head.

“ This is probably the most important feature of all scary monsters. They are very difficult to describe, especially when they try to devour you.” he said, slightly taken aback by her question.

“Maybe we can count them.” she said, and burst into the most sincere and joyful laugh in months. Yes, it will be a great adventure!

She believed this trip would make a difference. That she would finally be able to get out of this deadlock in her life… Not that she would finally be able to regain control of it. For as long as she could remember, someone else had always tried to bend her to his will. First Hordak and Shadow Weaver, then the dark sorceress was replaced by Catra. And then they had to hide from the real Horde, not the ridiculous imitation they belonged to. She believed that once she led the People's Rebellion, she would finally regain… no, finally gain control of her own life. But she only felt even more lost. Doctor Moors , Mi-Go, Scarlet. Especially Scarlet, they wanted to bend her to their will again. To turn back into a kid whose whole point of existence was to follow orders. She had had enough of it. Kyle and Rogelio might have accepted it, though she didn't understand why. Maybe the Fright Zone took a lot more from them than the others. Or was she the one who resisted its pernicious influence more than others? Only she, as one of the few, retained her own desires, her own ambition.

“You're ambitious too, much more ambitious than we all imagine.” she thought as she looked at Scarlet lying beside her. The woman seemed to be asleep, though she suspected she was only pretending to be asleep. At first she thought it was Kyle or Rogelio sneaking in, but then it turned out to be the red-haired woman. The first time she was with another girl. She used to dream about Scorpia. There was nothing strange about it, half of the cadets had a crush on a strong and nice scorpion princess. And that one chose Catra anyway , who hadn't seen the world but Adora , and in the end she ended up with this stupid flower princess...

Both common sense and loyalty to her boyfriends told her to get that woman out of the tent, but she told herself she was fucking it and… well, she was fucking her too. Scarlett was good at it, you had to give her that. In the old days, she paid no attention to her at all. It wasn't until after the war that she met the real Scarlet and was confused. She didn't think that the red-haired girl could hide so much. She was always just a lazy cadet who was only interested in getting out of class and then getting the most boring job that no one else would take anyway. She usually disappeared into the darkness of the Zone's corridors then. Everyone knew it, but in those days, no one cared. Everyone had more important things to do. Also, no one expected Adora to find that cursed sword and started to transform into a blonde warrior, why shouldn't Scarlet become a sorceress. her sorceress. Her right hand. Her…

My own Shadow Weaver. she thought, and felt bad. She needed some air, so she dressed and left the tent.

Cold greeted her. Kyle and Rogelio slept in their tents separately, though after what had happened today, she preferred not to check. They never promised or forbade anything, but she had a constant feeling that she had betrayed them. She looked up at the starry sky and smiled to herself. "They're not as bad as I thought." she thought.

"Looking at the stars is like looking into the eyes of the dead, don't you think?" she heard Dr. Moors ' voice behind her and flinched. She spun around and saw the brain in the cylinder, tilted so it could watch the sky. He was still fucking creepy.

"What do you mean?" she asked, looking at the mad scientist with undisguised disgust.

"The light that reaches us is thousands of years old. Those who saw them for the first time are dead for centuries."

Shivers ran through her, and the moment of delight passed forever. She looked at the glacier stretching out before them. There the dead city waited, with its treasures and riches. Her salvation awaited her there. Opportunity to has finally regained control over her life.

“Do you remember our deal? Or rather, your deal with the Overseer.” said the brain in the cylinder. She smiled contemptuously at him.

“So you know everything.” she said.

"It's always wise to know more than others," replied the Brain in the Cylinder.

“She used to say that too. Shadow Weaver.” she said, and when she saw that Dr. Moors laughed contemptuously. “You're still afraid of her, even though she's been dead for years.”

“Is not dead which can eternal lie, and with strange aeons even death may die. She was a powerful sorcerer and had dealings with dark forces that made Horde Prime mere speck, an intrusive worm .”

She ignored the ghastly doctor. Looking at the mountain range stretching out before her, she finally understood one thing. All her life she's been a pawn, a pawn in the hands of Shadow Weaver, Hordak , Catra. The ones who always used her and her friends in their games. Games whose rules they didn't even fully understand, they only thought they were players, and they were like these blind mice. They forced them all to do terrible things for a cause that made no sense. Now, however, he will only fight for himself. She regain control of her life, and anyone who opposes her will die like rat.

They saw Frosta three hours after leaving her castle. Not because the girl happened to be so far from her castle, but she was not easy to find in this wasteland. They stopped in front of her vehicle, and as they left, the girl ran to them and jumped to hug Netossa, while Entrapta began examining her landspeeder, barely registering the existence of Georg and Lance.

“ Glad you're here. Dad Glimmer asked Uncles George and Lance to find an ancient city with monsters. are you going there too?”

"Actually, he just asked us to know something about him." Lance said carefully. She groaned as Entrapta priking her hair.

“Ruins? First Ones! Catra, you know, I'm just thinking, it wouldn't hurt if, by the way, we” she started, but Lance cut her off.

“Not the First Ones, actually. They were of another ancient race, equally ancient and mysterious.”

She groaned. She couldn't say that the first ones were mysterious to her, after all, she knew one of them ... deeply. But she didn't like exploring more cursed ruins. She looked at Melog eating Frosta's dried anchovies. When he noticed that she was staring at him, he pulled away from the girl in embarrassment. Not everything that came out of the ruins was bad... Maybe they'd find something valuable there... Or they wouldn't let something dangerous fall into the wrong hands.

"We just came for a certain item that Netossa's grandmother gave your mother." But we can accompany you if Mikach sees fit to investigate.

“This item is in the vault, when we get back, I'll give it to you. So where are we going?” asked the ice princess.

Entrapta didn't have to be persuaded, she was already the heart of the excavations, looking for damn ancient devices. All that was left was to hope that it wouldn't be another doomsday machine. But she looked at Netossa, she might not be too happy about taking her away from her family. However, Princess Armori was already carrying some sort of tricycle with a small trailer in the back.

“I knew I'd need him. We'll leave the Silverwing here, closer to the mountains, and there'll be nowhere to land anyway, and no one but me knows how to fly it anyway.” Netossa said.

She smiled widely hearing her words. Maybe that was a really good idea. She will also need an adventure during which she will be able to take a break from it all, from the truth about herself.

Maybe it would help her regain control of her life, because she felt like she was slowly losing it.

Shadow of the Past - Arelarti

She woke up.

Here in the middle of the Swamp, the humidity was so pervasive that she could hardly feel it. The cold didn't bother her either, though the other members of the expedition were of a slightly different opinion. A few started coughing, a some even had symptoms of swamp fever. They traveled for a week. At first they traveled through the outer marshes. This was an area once inhabited by the people of Carurystal, but has now been swallowed up by the cursed Kranor Rill. The process was slow but steady. First, the flora changed. Old well-known plants were being replaced by those found in these a hundred times cursed swamps. They broke down the soil into a muddy substance that bound the salt and water into a toxic substance that nothing else could grow on, nothing that was not native to this awful place. Then came the animals of Kranor Rill. Almost everything that lived here was poisonous or carried some kind of parasite that caused deadly diseases. They led to the extinction of the local fauna and flora, and this often led to the exodus of the former inhabitants. And finally the Riliti came and kill all that was left. That's what the elf Krianese told her, but she didn't trust her. She didn't feel like a representative of this race, the word "elf" wasn't even known on Etheri, only Saihe , and most of them didn't even know their native language. It was different, of course, in her native isles of sorrow, where many ancient traditions were cultivated, but most of them were as foreign, if not more so, to the Elves as to the Saihe . After all, she had renounced her homeland so long ago, choosing the cosmopolitan Mystacor.

But it was also about something completely different. Krianese was a priestess of Elorithu , and she abhorred priests with all her heart, she almost became one herself at end. On Etheri, the inhabitants were not guided by the commands of the gods or darker beings, they shaped their own destiny. "Except fools like me," she laughed, stretching her back. She stood on a causeway made of black stone veined with green, from which almost all the native structures they encountered in the marshes were made. At least in their inner part.

At the beginning, when they traveled through the areas recently abandoned by the inhabitants, they came across the ruins of buildings and villages slowly sinking into the sodden ground. Most of them were in surprisingly good condition. The third night they spent in the mansion, abandoned many years ago but still habitable. The Riliti had not robbed him or vented their fury on him as the soldiers under her command had done. Even the Galactic Horde, with Horde Prime's penchant for keeping infrastructure intact, the damage was much greater. There was even furniture and electronics left, one brass laptop even worked when hooked up to a portable generator, but there were only pictures of horses and flower beds and some family pictures and stuff like that, nothing of value. One of Vanesa's Norington guards took it, hoping that he could later sell it to relatives of the owners of the mansion. Perhaps someone will want to recover family heirlooms. Most of the expedition members were glad to be able to rest indoors, but she felt uneasy, which was fully justified if you were a person of her experience. Both Sir Rakima and Asindesa shared her concerns, Krianese was rather all the same. The elf looked like the one who would make friends with a certain purple-haired girl. The three of them went outside and stood in a garden covered with the strange vegetation of Kranor Rill.

“I do not like it.” she told her companions.

“What? This palace, this swamp or this expedition?” asked Sir Rakima . He had dark green scales and a scar on his collarbone.

“You asked a very good question” she thought after listening to the reptile.

“I know how armies that plunder conquered areas work.” she said carefully, wondering if she had said too much. “Never have buildings been left so intact. Here, the invaders were not interested in looting or even conquest, only… getting rid of the inhabitants.”Asindesa adjusted her beautiful golden hair thoughtfully. It's amazing that even under these conditions she was able to take care of them.

“The swarm does the same. Its components were completely uninterested in looting occupied territories. There were diversionary actions, or to cause terror among the civilian population of the attacked planets, but mainly he tried to flood us with living mass. Sometimes in the hinterland you could find almost undamaged towns. Sometimes there were survivors in them. It was not profitable for the components to pursue individual people. After the resistance was crushed, all the biomass was decomposed by microbes anyway, or devoured by swarms of the consumers. They left behind only a shell of the world from which he could extract minerals and geothermal energy for centuries, but even there, survivors can be found hiding among the rubble of their world. This similarity is puzzling.” said the beautiful knight.

She thought for a moment, as she wasn't sure how much she could reveal, but decided that since her informant was so willing to share information, it couldn't be a big secret. And even if they were, Kane Adamson, may be he was the Archduke of Carurystal, but what could any mortal do against Chaos Creeping.

"According to my information, the Riliti are bioroids spawned from a powerful ancient race called Krellans ." These beings created some magitech computers that enslaved them.” She shuddered as she always did when she thought about it.

“They're living robots.” Vesk said and nodded. “With Iomadae's help, we will defeat them.” he said with all seriousness. She had to suppress a snort, for she knew well that the will of higher beings seldom considered the desires of mortals.

The next day they reached the marshes proper, and that was where her lack of field command knowledge came in. The marshes proved impassable to their mechanical horses. They almost had their journey end prematurely. Fortunately , Krianese discovered a causeway that crossed the Kranor Rill. It was made of this strange black green-veined stone. The road was wide and they could pass it easily, but Sir Rakima rightly pointed out that they would be vulnerable to an ambush attack. But they had no other choice, because she had no intention of returning empty-handed. So they set out for the heart of the accursed swamp.

The ride was relatively easy, but quite slow because of the amount of supplies they had to drag behind them. It should also not be forgotten that most of the participants had no idea about the military, or even about traveling further than to camp in the forest, and many with war experience were elderly. Perhaps only the lack of awareness of the seriousness of the situation was the reason for enthusiasm felt by most of the expedition members. In fact, she felt it too. While serving Hordak , she was never emotionally involved in the conflict, for her service was only a means to an end. This time, despite knowing the hopelessness of the whole enterprise, she wanted to be a part of it. The reason for her unusual behavior was very simple, but at the same time she felt like never before. She felt happy and terrified at the same time.

Call it, old stupid woman. She thought on the seventh day of the expedition and the first day of traveling on the causeway. Despite the cold and all-pervasive moisture, she felt a pleasant warmth spread over her twisted body. Asindesa di Vir stood at the edge of the dike, her golden red hair blowing in the wind. But then she saw the elf Krianese standing beside her , and felt her clawed hands clench in anger. She suppressed her anger, not… jealousy, and approached the women. Asindesa gave her a warm, welcoming smile.

"Our folower of Eloritu has news for you that might interest you."

She raised an eyebrow, skeptical of what great news a scientist priestess might have. Krianese had short dark blue hair and a solemn, focused face. At least she doesn't smile at everyone like an idiot

“The flora here is of foreign origin. It is difficult to confirm this without more detailed research, but the study of morphology itself seems to confirm this thesis. A simple genetic scan too, although access to a broader database would be useful to trace the evolutionary processes to which they were subjected.” she said in an absolutely matter-of-fact, though devoid of emotion voice. It's true, she was genuinely intrigued. She looked at the Lady of Blades appreciatively, and which bared her teeth in a smile.

“That's interesting... I can help a bit... collect specimens for research. For most of my life I've dealt with plants... I had... I have a wonderful garden”. she said thoughtfully, feeling grateful to the Hellknight.

“That's great, in your free time, will you help me collect samples and plant fragments for future research? This could be a great discovery, shedding a whole new light on the natural history of these swamps and the History of Carurystal in general” said the elf with curiosity

Be careful, digging into the past never ends well for the curious she thought grimly, but against common sense she said.

“Yes, I'll be happy to help you.”

All morning, while the others ate leisurely breakfast, she, Asindesa , and Krianes gathered plants. For a short time, she finally felt happy, despite the endless, cursed swamps of Kranor Rill surrounding her…

The first attack took place on the second day after reaching the swamp. The causeway was intersected at regular intervals by another, running perpendicularly. It formed a crossroads around which rose several buildings made of the same black veined stone as the road. They were unfinished or possibly destroyed. She couldn't tell for sure. When they reached the second intersection, the Riliti appeared. They didn't notice them until it was too late. Suddenly, two huge creatures sprang out of the muddy water, and two others launched strange, spike-like spears . A green Lightning bolt flew towards them from between the buildings . She struck down the first of the monsters with a magical black-colored bolt, saving the life of a young nobleman, but the second creature sliced Vanessa Norington in half until its broad golden sword got stuck in her steed. The aristocrat's guard, the same one who had taken the laptop earlier, tried to take the opportunity that Riliti's sword was trapped and tried to shoot him, but the monster spat its long tongue from its mouth and snatched the gun from him, then lunged at him with its claws. He killed two more members of the expedition before Sir Rakima knocked him down with his hammer. The beasts were huge, even bigger than Vesks and Troxes . They had powerful claws and mouths with a wide sharp plate capable of severing a limb, and it was covered with thick scales capable of stopping a bullet. The creature hiding between the buildings was taller and thinner, wearing a belt with tools of unknown purpose. He had a strange staff of golden metal in his paws that shot green lightning bolts. Out of the corner of her eye, she saw that Asindesa had knocked down one of the monsters and the other had been shot by the expedition members. Two members of the expedition, however, lay dead despite superficial wounds, their lips were blackened, indicating the use of poison. She herself began to weave the spell and summoned shadowy tentacles that tore apart the monster firing from between the buildings. However, he managed to shoot two more guards. They were lying on a stone. and smoke billowed from their twisted bodies. They had lost eight expedition members in total, a fair trade for five Riliti, according to her experience as a Horde commander. The other members of the expedition, however, did not see it that way. Things have clearly deteriorated. Well, no one said it was going to be a picnic

Krianese died in a rather ridiculous way. Every morning and evening the three of them, together with Asindesa and the Elven priestess, scoured the area near the causeway and collected plants, Krianes and Asindesa collected plants, and she photographed them with her simple datapad for retirees. She had been so happy then, though she knew how ridiculous it was in her situation. It wasn't anything romantic, they were just picking flowers... Were Adora and Catra picking flowers too? Did they dance at the balls among dozens of happy people? She had no idea, but over the past five years she'd come to realize that she really knew so little. That day she was taking a picture of a small plant and strangely metallic leaves that were so sharp they could cut to the bone. Some of the expedition members looked down on the whole situation, they didn't like the not-so-romance, but she didn't care, she never cared about what other people thought. She was the Shadow Weaver, after all, the most hated person on Etheria. Maybe after you , Hordak , though at least that annoying girl Entrapta liked you .

"What are you going to do?" The Lady of Blades asked, looking at her. For a moment her heart beat faster, but the hell knight added." On a mission." said Asindesa, blushing.

It's unsettling, but she wasn't sure what she was going to do. She just wanted to be with Asindesa .

"I want to find Arelarti, a city in the middle of these swamps, and take pictures of it, because apparently even satellites can't see them. I think that if people in our position talk about what's going on here, maybe... Someone will take care of it all." she said, trying to sound credible, although she knew very well that she was lying to the living eyes of a woman she had a deep feeling for. But Asindesa only nodded… Then she heard Krianese calling them.

"Look at these plants. I think there are some eggs here, probably roe or spawn. "The elf exclaimed, pointing to a strange round cluster of plants indeed covered with some kind of eggs, but suddenly a creature resembling Riliti in the same way a monkey resembled a human. emerged from the mud. Before anyone could react, the beast seized the leg of the elven scholar with sharp fangs, although it was not she who killed Krianese, but the fire of their guards, who in fear did not pay attention to the fact that they hit the woman and the monster equally. Asindesa ordered a cease fire, and she hurled a shadow bolt and the creature died. However, it was too late for Krianese . Her body lay half-submerged in mud with multiple gunshot wounds. So it is end of Romantic flower picking

The journey now proceeded in gloomy moods. Half of their expedition members turned back. From what she later learned, most of them made it back to their homes unscathed, so she guess it wasn't a bad decision. But among those who remained there was a strange grim determination worthy of the lost. She sensed it in Adora too, that last day when she had done that one good thing…. Though she didn't sense that grim determination in Asindesa and Sir Rakima . Faith in the code of hell knights or the protective grace of the goddess gave them strength. In fact, it was the same with her. Her dark patron gave her strength as well, though in a much more literal way.

And he will protect me from death, unlike the gods worshiped by mortals, because he has great plans for me, she thought and felt a grip of horror in her heart, because she understood that it was to escape from the imperious grip of Creeping Chaos was that she has wanted. She was looking loophole in their contract. But she would not outsmart the Great Outer God, why she imagine something such absurd. She looked at the Lady of Blades riding beside her and realized with horror that her arrogance had put her to death. She barely managed to control her panic attack. She was a Shadow Weaver after all, the wickedest of the wicked, she had strength and she would have to use it all if she wanted to save the Lady of Blades.

Hell began when they saw the walls of the cursed Arelarti in the distance. They found themselves in the middle of another intersection. In each successive intersection, the buildings were better and better made and more numerous. It was the size of a small village. Some of the buildings looked like warehouses, Others looked like generators, and others were intended for an unknown purpose. She saw a tall watchtower and decided to climb it to take a look around. At the top he saw that a transverse causeway joined another that ran towards the city. She realized that they all formed a spider-like web together. She understood that the whole swamp contained one huge structure, the purpose of which was unknown, and certainly ominous. Only once had she heard such an intricate and complex work. It was the Heart of Etheria, a creation that disgusted even Crawling Chaos. Arelarti was the center…the heart of it all. It was there that the ancient techno evil slumbered. But was it her business? The galaxy turned out to be a place full of inexpressibly terrible secrets that she had no desire to explore. What she experienced would shatter the minds of weaker beings. When she was immersed in these sad thoughts, she heard the scream of the same nobleman whom she had saved a few days ago.

"Riliti! They hide here …" There was a flash of green light, and there was a scream. Well, the rescue turned out to be remarkably temporary. The air quivered as the cloaking field fell, and all three types of Riliti they had encountered were suddenly swarming everywhere. There was a fourth variety, even more muscular and clad in massive black stone armor whose veins pulsed with green energy. They carried long Khopesh -like swords and dartguns of poison-coated steel darts. Their advance was unstoppable, the surprised expedition members unable to put up a coordinated resistance. She threw a ball of black fire that consumed many monsters. Then, using the old levitation spell she liked to use in the Fright Zone, she jumped out of the watchtower and fell down, landing next to Asindesa and Sir Rakim . After a while, only the three of them stayed on their feet.

"It was an honor to fight with you." The priest of Iomadae shouted, smashing the skull of the beast Riliti.

"It will also be an honor to die by your side." added the Lady of Blades

She rolled her eyes.

“The greatest honor will be to remember this adventure by the fireplace. Try to protect me and with a bit of luck I'll be able to take them all down, you just have to cover me before I gather enough power! She screamed and began to absorb the power. Meanwhile, Sir Rakima and Asindesa di Vir struck blow after blow, knocking down more opponents. They were all splattered with the crimson blood of the monsters. She drew more and more power, but it was still too little, too slow. Suddenly , Asindesa was hit by a poisoned dart in the frame. Although the dart flew through, the woman began to stagger on her feet. So she made a desperate decision to save the woman who was so important to her. She took of the obsidian necklace and was flooded with power from Nyarlathotep himself . Even the holographic mask showed her true form now, but that didn't matter now. At one point, all the Riliti suddenly fell to their knees, and a tall figure in hooded robes emerged from among them. She had her hand outstretched upwards, on which she wore a ring with red stone covered with green veins. Then she gathered all her power and from all shadowed places dark shadowy blades slashed at the attackers, but avoided her allies. Sir Rakima looked at her with appreciation and gratitude, but she returned him with an apologetic smile, grabbed the Lady of Blades by the hand and fled with her through the void, leaving the priest to die.

They teleported to Grayskull's main dinner hall . She yelled at the crowded servants, who stared with wide opened eyes like idiots, to run for Dr. Rephan as soon as possible, and then she cast all possible spells that could slow or stop the effects of the poison. Soon the infernal knight was taken to the infirmary. She oversaw the treatment of her dearest friend for the next ten hours, then followed Dr. Rephan to her office.

"You did your best, now no one will be able to accuse us of anything when the Lady of Blades dies, which will probably happen soon" said the doctor-cultist. She looked at him, and there was death itself in her eyes.

“Cannot fall hair from the head of Asindesa di Vir.” she said with undisguised threat in her voice. Rephan shook his head sharply.

“I can't agree to that. If the hellknight becomes suspicious, then ...” He didn't finish because she put her hand to his chest and blew up his heart with the rest of her power. I like to demonstrate my new tricks

Wandering through dark corridors...

Tallstar blinked twice. This woman used a name that sounded like Shera's battle cry . Plus, she looked so much like Adora… No, like She- Ra … She was tall and strong and beautiful, she could almost see the young woman radiating an inner glow. In fact, Starla was almost glowing of awe, and her brother was pretty close too. She herself had the biggest shock since learning about the death of this Horde Prime

“So it's true. Horde Prime was not the ruler of the entire known universe!” She gasped, not hiding her surprise. The individual who wore glasses and had a strange implant in his head smiled indulgently, arousing her reluctance, and said.

“That would be difficult considering the scale of the universe. There are tens of thousands of empires and millions of civilizations in it. Even the oldest dragons and liches knew only a handful of its secrets.” His tone was matter-of-fact, if a little condescending.

“Dragons? Like him?” Starla pointed to the silver reptile, but he interrupted the discussion.

“My name is Alatar and I'm not a dragon, but a dragonkin. Typical dragons are much bigger... and it's not true that dragonkin riders exist.” he said firmly, and the masked girl added, wagging her tail to the rhythm of the words.

“There are debates among scholars as to whether Alatar is a small dragon or a plump Dragonkin.”

Lady Cala laughed softly.

“Our friend Eti has a very specific sense of humor.” said the aristocrat

“I have no sense of humor. And to you, I am Mrs. Eterna. And don't listen to Stinka, she is a person of universal hatred and contempt throughout the galaxy. Eti or Eterna interjected in a strangely dull voice. The blue-haired woman in the armor gave a short, jerky laugh.” Tallstar had the strange feeling that the sense of the joke was escaping her. She coughed and asked.

“What are you here for? What are you looking for here?”

The blue-haired woman smiled at her, it was a lovely smile, and said.

“My name is Dilayla. Our captain received the distress call and decided to help. I agree with her decision, as do Lady Cala, who seems to be the leader of this research expedition. Now we want to find out what's lurking in the place where the Dawn Flower was worshiped…” she said until Arkan-tar cut in.

“Judging from the carvings on the door, some aspect of the Inheritor was also worshiped here.”

We should take a look at this door though she thought, then asked.

“Dawn Flower? Inheritor?”

“The Dawn Flower is Serenae, and the heiress is Iomadae. You know, the sword, the luminous hair, it glows.” Dilayla explained, touching the golden symbol on her neck representing a golden sword surrounded by rays of light. Starla took a deep breath and asked in delight.

“Do you also have your own She- Ra ?!”

They all looked at her confused, but Jewelstar interjected.

"It seems to be someone similar to the Iomdi who are worshiped on Eridani. I didn't know it was known elsewhere.” There was undisguised resentment in his voice. The aristocrats of Eridani were especially bad for him.

“Iomadae, like Serenae, is worshiped in many places, as are many other gods. Triune, Eloritu , Shelyn, Besmara , Nyarlathotep.” the learned-looking individual was saying, but Lady Cala interrupted him.

“Let's put the religious discussions aside. I'm sorry if this sounds bad, but could you please introduce yourself and explain why you're here?”

“We're freedom fighters. Previously we fought Horde Prime , and now we fight his successors. My name is Jewelstar and these are my sisters Tallstar and Starla. “ They nodded when they brother pointed to them.” We're here for the same reason as you. he explained.

The members of that bizarre expedition also introduced themselves, although the white-haired girl did it through the masked one.

"That means we're probably the first people from our part of the galaxy you've met..." her brother said and felt a bit embarrassed, then suddenly remembered something. “Not counting Wrongs Hordaka ... and Emily! what about them? They're doing fine?”

A masked girl named Eti spoke up.

"Wormdak is laze with Doky upstairs, but he's as stupid as ever, and the Dumbot is doing dumb thins on the most gorgeous ship in the galaxy, but I don't know why you’re interested in them." It's a shame to bother with them.

Lady Cala looked at Eti as if she were an unruly child and translated.

“Wrongdak, as he is now called, is upstairs helping Doctor Quin , our technician, break into Horde Prime's spire , and Emily is on the ship to keep an eye on him.”

Jewelstar nodded in understanding, and Starla smiled brightly , but there was one thing that bothered her.

“Why did you come here? To Prime's empire ? If He hasn't reached you, it must be much better here than in the ruins it left behind.”

She had the impression that Arkan-tar and Alatar were a little confused, but Lady Cala smiled proudly and began to speak in a beautiful sonorous voice that captured hearts.

“My family has lived on Carurystal since time immemorial, and our ancestral home is Grayskull Castle. However, we are not from there, for we came to this world from a place called Etheria , and our founder was Mara ... who died defending this planet ... Actually, she was even called She-Ra, princess of power.”

The answers to the questions that had been occupying her mind for some time were slowly taking shape, but she didn't like the shape. C*lones, how ironic. I ruined my life serving one of them. Hordak gave his life, and the lives of thousands of others, just to please his maker. This woman...These women, at least, had enough strength and determination to kill their Father... Is it yours family custom?* she thought , and anxiously realized that it was probably true. The implications are hard to grasp. Catra... She must have some connection with this Jantar... Did he create her. Did he create them both? she thought frantically as she wandered these dark and gloomy corridors of the abandoned monastery. Catra was always so strong and fit, almost like Adora. She never sensed any power from her, but she was always her best student. For a time, she even wanted to make Catra her’s right hand and acolyte ... Although contempt and hatred for her almost daughter never allowed her to appreciate the girl. See her true potential. Did you do that too, Jantar? Didn't you think that your children, beings you so carefully shaped to live in fear of you, would fight for their future? Will they pay you back for all the harm you've done them? For all the pain and humiliation they had to suffer? she thought about the man who died not long before she gave her life. There was a secret to it. "If you created Catra and Eti, why did you do it?" she asked herself this question over and over again without finding any sensible answer. Neither Catra nor Eti were like Bina and Lady Ka, who were clones of this mad scientist, even minus the feline features. Eti was a mystery in itself. Evidently, everyone was aware of her unusual origin, but tried to hide it, although in a galaxy full of such diverse races, the cat girl should not arouse any surprise. The pieces of the puzzle were slowly falling into place, but too slowly, she couldn't afford to wait for everything to work itself out. Fortunately, she had her ways of getting information…

She had been in the monastery once in her long life. It was two years ago on Carurystal, when she visited a similar shrine belonging to the followers of Pharasma . It was just a courtesy visit to make sure that the monks living in House Grayskull's land lacked nothing. Even then, however, she did not visit the monastery buildings, such matters never interested her, although, of course, the higher powers were interested in her much more than she would like. The inhabitants of this place must have believed until the very end that their goddess, this Serenae, would save them. But apparently she had other plans. The gods always had other plans, as she had learned on this damned quest.

The sight of the planets ravaged by Horde Prime shocked her more than she would have expected. Adora and her friends took a cursory tour of the Empire during their journey and were horrified by what they found, but she didn't talk to them about it, there was no time for that then. She knew what a horrible monster Horde Prime was, even bigger than other monster she had helped train. She expected what she would see, thanks to the reports provided by Creeping Chaos, but to see is to believe. She finally understood how close Etheria was to become ashes. It was now that she finally realized whose side she was really on. Of course, now she served a being so completely alien and terrifying that most of her planet's inhabitants would not believe in her existence. All she could do now was fight to prevent more tragedies. She could only count on Nyarlathotep to keep his end of the bargain. So she was at the mercy of a powerful and distant being, like those unfortunates in the convent. How could I feel better than them? There is still much pride in my dark heart.

“Don't worry, Miss Daisy! Any despicable Bugs who tries to bite you will surely die from the blows of my axe!” Lilka shouted and made a swing over her head, almost cutting Rechiza down . Itel ordered the red-haired girl with a look to be quiet. Walking slightly behind, Ireanis paid no attention.

She didn't like Lady Cala going with the other group, along with Eti and Rosie. Her ward could be extremely cruel. Rosie once had already defeated Cala , and Eti seemed to be as formidable as Catra, but she doubted that even with Dilayla's help, she would be able to face Calamity's true form . She could only hope that her companion would focus on their mission and not be distracted by her weaknesses.

She looked at Lilka and smiled kindly at her, realizing that she had a great opportunity to get information.

“Miss Lilka, how long have you been traveling together like this?” she asked, trying to sound as friendly and innocent as possible.

“It can be five years.” said the redhead, adjusting the ax on her shoulder.

“And how did such a brave orc like you travel with a human woman, two elves, a dragonkin, an intelligent fish and… who exactly is Eti?”

“Eti is a shooter who shoots. It even shoots well. And I… Because you see. Beyond the seven cosmos lived the great and mighty orc Wagar . He was big, brave and strong even for an orc, and every orc is big, brave and strong. And he was very bored until he heard that there is a Swarm in space, they are such big bugs. And when he heard about it, he took a giant leap through the cosmos. Only it was a big and long jump and it made him very tired so when he landed on Kesler then he couldn't take all the Swarm by himself so he joined Igzar such a dire Pahtra who took him to such a camp and... There was this girl and she.. Her family was killed by the Swarm.. She was so small and weak, but you know what Wagar did ? You know!.” suddenly Lilka stopped and turned sharply towards her and started screaming. "He repair her!" He saw a real orc in her and pulled her out and said. "You are an orc" and it was true! And together they killed thousands of worms, but there were too many and he said that it is now up to me to bear the honor of the Horde and now I do!." A tear ran down the girl's cheek and Lilka sniffled. The story of the redhead, although seemingly absurd, was so sad and tragic that even her stony heart ached. But she had one more question to ask.

"And Eti wasn't with you then?" she asked and the girl shook her head and said.

"No, Igzar brought her to us on Atrax..." she started in a sad voice, and then Itel also turned towards them and jumped at her with the summoned blade.

"Stop asking her, you old hag. Can't you see I'm about to cry because of you?" the elf shrieked, and she resisted the urge to unleash dark magic to punish the Solarian's impertinence , but the girl added. "Why do you want to ruin our lives?"

She felt all the power drain from her. She looked down and mumbled a soft "sorry." Rechiza stopped, bent her head back and started yelling at them at the top of her lungs.

"Could you guys shut the hell up and focus on finding that fucking archive? We are in a monastery cursed by devils and demons, located in the former territory of the most wicked empire, and we are heading towards a place so terrible that the World's Wound seems like a kindergarten... " She didn't finish as Ireanis interrupted her.

"Oh, we're looking for an archive! They should be that way." said the silver-haired sorceress. The Lashunti looked at her silently.

"How do you know. she asked in a grim tone.

"I've been to many Serenae monasteries, and they're all the same... And then I found the blueprints... you know, because while you guys were talking upstairs about these wise things, I followed the need... and I had to wipe myself, but there's really nothing to worry about, because it's all here!" she tapped her head. The Solarian and the Twister groaned in unison and walked in the direction the sorceress had indicated. She looked at her thoughtfully. Maybe I just found the perfect source of information…and moonshine."

Who the hell is this She-Ra? Dilayla thought as she studied Lady Cali. If it has anything to do with that bitch, I don't like her anymore. The three people in the monastery stared at the aristocrat with a mixture of astonishment and delight, as did Wrongdak, though less ostentatiously. Admittedly, they were a bizarre bunch, but they seemed likeable. At first glance, she recognized the victims of war, those whose fortunes forced them to become soldiers. In essence, they resembled Bina 's kids , though there was no bitter hopelessness in them, as if these adults retained more hope and faith in the world than a bunch of kids. She wondered what had happened to them to keep so much… innocence?

"Your ancestor was THIS Mara? Prev She-Ra?" asked Starla, looking at Lady Cala with delight.

Their group looked at the siblings with incomprehension.

"I don't know who She-Ra was, except that she was someone extremely important to the inhabitants of Etheria. But thousands of years have passed since then. I don't know if our family line has been broken in the meantime, and even if it hasn't, it's hard to say that we are related after so many generations that separate us. " The aristocrat smiled as innocently as an absolutely guilty person could.

"She-Ra... She defeated Horde Prime . She annihilated him and saved us all." – Starla said.

“I see.” Arkan-tar said and looked at Lady Cala and moved away from her almost to the other end of the corridor. "Are you talking about this Lady of Chaos?"

Tallstar snorted loudly.

“Do you really believe in this sham?”

Her brother nodded.

“Horde Ultimate is one of Prime's successors, his self-proclaimed prophet She-Ra and the Etherian princesses are his enemies, so it's no wonder he wants to portray them as servants of darkness”. Arkan tar coughed skeptically, but Rosie’s and Alatar's eyes lit up. "It must be this Saihe from message idea , " Jewelstar added “Saihe ?” Dilayla asked, though she suspected what they meant.

“Well, someone like you.” The man with the cybernetic eye pointed to the mercenary , who smiled and began to explain.

"I am an Elf and only a half-blood, and the one who spoke was a Drow . For this mistake, you can earn a knife in the ribs in many places.”

The siblings stared at them, surprised by this unexpected lesson on interspecies relations in the galaxy.

“Saihe live on Etheri, but there they do not don’t care of someone’s race.” Jewelstar explained .

“Oh, so these are the reverse Azlanti” Alatar muttered under his breath. Starla wanted to ask something, but Eti cut in.

“I'm a simple shooter. I see someone through the scope, press the trigger, the light goes out. We are here looking for some way to get down and find out what happened to the inhabitants of this place. I mean, what a terrible and dark fate befell them.”

Lady Cala nodded and said.

“I agree with Eti.” The shooter looked at the noblewoman as if she had insulted her. “Then we will find time to tell you about the beautiful and dark sides of the Galaxy, but now is not the time for that. We must solve the mystery of the inhabitants of the monastery, if only to satisfy the requirements of the law, not to mention common decency.” her voice was strong, and Dilayla was reluctant to admit that the woman had a talent for leadership.

"I have an idea," Alatar said, staring at the door of the room. from which came the smell of rotting plants. “It's a hydroponic farm, so they must have some kind of fault-tolerant communication system there. I'll study its layout and be able to determine the layout of the rooms and thus locate the elevator shafts.”

Arkan-tar patted Dragonkin on the back as if he were his protégé.

-You are a talented technomancer . - he praised him, and Alatar put his wings on his back.

“, I took it from the comic.” he said, clearly embarrassed.

“Bloody Nerd to.” Eti added.

The elevator shafts were nearby. There were only two, and unfortunately, the terminals were deliberately destroyed. She and Tallstar swung open the elevator doors and swore together, seeing that they were both downstairs, and the brakes looked suspicious.

“Nice gear, where did you get it?” Tallstar looked at her power armor appreciatively .

“Uh, I bought it because it's an investment ... You know, I'm a mercenary” she said, strangely embarrassed. The other maimed woman nodded.

"Perhaps we'll fly beyond Prime's empire in the future , and arm ourselves." You can't rely on looted Horde gear indefinitely. - she said. Dilayla looked at the others, who were busy examining the control panel. She addressed Tallstar in a hushed voice.

"Don't ask me how I know this, but a real war fleet commanded by Lord Admiral Antares is approaching the Ravaged Zone. I don't know much about him, but he's a mercenary who made his name fighting an enemy as terrible as Horde Prime. In exchange for information and help, he should give you a lot of equipment and maybe he will help you. Just don't mention the crew we're traveling with and watch out for Lady Ka, she's a dangerous woman. Then I'll give you the bearing…" She turned around in amazement, noticing that Lady Cala had opened the elevator door with her own hand and said."I go down this shaft, let the rest go down the other one" she jumped, grabbing the support cable. The Star siblings exchanged significant glances.

"Sparkle Hand, Alatar , follow me." Eti called and started running down the vertical wall of the second shaft, and Alatar jumped next, spreading his wings. Finally, Rosie ran and stood in the elevator door, waved to them, and before Dilayla could catch her, she jumped and began to glide, falling down and glowing. The siblings still didn't look surprised.

"Is this the norm here? Because for me not. Come on, let's look for the stairs, I think I've seen one somewhere."

Calamity landed on her legs bent, though a less worthy creature would have shattered her legs. Well, perfection was the minimum she expected of herself. Her pupils dilated to purple, allowing her to see even in the deepest darkness, and she moved forward. She needed a moment of solitude to think over recent events.

Nothing was going as it should. She did not know the will of Creeping Chaos and doubted that even such a pure and beautiful mind could not comprehend it. But there were too many cases that unsettled her. First, that deaf kid who was fawning over the Shadow Weaver. It wasn't even about she ha defeat her. She couldn't use all her power without revealing her full splendour. No... The thing is, Rosie defeated her without much effort, and though she didn't admit it to Shadow Weaver, she feared that she wouldn't even defeat the girl in her true form. Who or what Rosie was, neither of them had any idea who the girl was, though the old witch had taken a liking to the girl for some strange reason. But basically, it didn't bother her. That loss was a much needed lesson in humility. There are many more powerful creatures on this quest, including She- Ra herself , so a little sobering might allow her to survive,

But this wicked cat… This girl annoyed her just by being there. She was something related to that villainous Catra , Shadow Weaver confirmed it. She did not know how the great and the wonderful universe could endure the existence of two such lousy creatures. Even the old hag didn't know it, but she had every right to hate the feline ward. Adora had usurped a destiny she didn't deserve, but this clumsy creature had stolen her place, throwing away the mission that was her very sense existence.

On top of that, that vicious bitch showed her no elementary respect. The wild brat was talking to her like any wench, and she, Calamity , had to pretend to be the benevolent Lady Cala all the time , as she most likely fell under the Shadow Weaver/ Nyarlathotep deal . And the kitty had a goddamn alien artifact, as if she deserved something other than righteous, fiery anger.

There were no words in the languages of the elder races to describe the righteous hatred that pulsed through her veins. So when she entered the next room, rich-looking, reminiscent of a vault, and saw a clone dressed in a gold-red uniform, she smiled and said.

“Let’s dance?”

Rosie was secretly very happy that she and Eti were almost alone now, except for Alatar, of course. She liked Dragonkin , he was nice and interested in cool things like games and comics. And he was also glad that they were going to some enchanted place with the princesses... But Eti wasn't there and fortunately only they knew sign language and could talk alone... together

“You know, I really didn't want to go in there at the time. I didn't know you and Itel... well, you're a couple.” she said as she felt herself blushing. Etilooked at her in surprise.

"But we're not couple I mean, we're just friends and we sleep together sometimes, but only a few times, that's all. Nothing else.” Eti said, staring at her impassively. Rosie felt a pleasant warmth of relief spread through her body and a great weight lifted from her heart. But then Alatar called out.

“Girls, you better look here. Dragonkin peered into the room from the side, his tail stiffening with horror. As they peered inside, Rosie let out a strange gurgling sound that was her moan. The room was a large cinema where the entire community could gather. Now there were rows and rows of dried corpses… children too. Now it dawned on her what evil had happened here. Eti started talking on the communicator.

“Hey Grimmy , how are you doing with necromancy , because we have a whole room full of corpses here, and they seem to be starting to move.”

...we hear the lament of the dead

The clone looked much more dignified than the ones Shadow Weaver had told her about. No, that wasn't the correct term. The word gorgeous would be more suitable, although kitschy would also adequate. His uniform was red-gold and would have gleamed in the sunlight. However, it was quite impractical. He had no chance of hiding anywhere other than a military parade. It was also quite heavy. On the other hand, could he expect enemies in such a place? Well, he met something more terrible than any foe he could imagine, although the bar wasn't set too high for him. He knelt by the great bronze doors, now sealed, and tried to burn them with a plasma cutter and almost succeeded. When he saw her, he put the cutter aside and grabbed the blaster, which guaranteed himself a long and painful death, because purely theoretically, he could set her clothes on fire with the burner, and she didn't want to walk around bare ass, especially in front of this feline monstrosity.

“Who are you? On behalf of the Horde Ultimate, I order you to drop your weapons.” clone shoutet at her.

She gave a pearly laugh, as befitted a noble lady, and bowed courteously.

"You have had the greatest honor of your little life to stand before Lady Cala Grayskull, but that's not my real name. I must introduce myself properly” she said and jumped towards the confused soldier while she drew her blade and slashed him in the face while dodging a blaster shot. She stood behind him, green gore running down the blade of her sword.

“LOOK AT ME! GIVE ME A NAME!” She dodged again and slashed at the back of his neck before he could even fire.

“ I AM CHILD OF THE KEY AND GATE!” she screamed. The clone's wounds were slight but painful. She ducked slightly from another shot and slashed harder this time, severing the tendons in her shoulder.

“OFFSPRING OF THE ONE WHO IS ALWAYS OR EVERYWHERE. She did a dance pirouette and cut a tendon in his knee, causing him to drop to one knee.

“THE SPAWN OF THE ONE WHO TRULY KNOWS AND SEES EVERYTHING!” She stabbed him in the face again, this time down to the bone.

“I AM CALAMITY AND MAY ALL REJOY AND CRY AT THE SOUND OF THIS NAME!” She hit him with the side of her hand in the frame where he held the gun and crushed it. She felt joy, the greatest since the fight with Azlanti. This is what her life would have been like if she hadn't been robbed of her destiny. The clone, whose face was equal parts pain and terror, asked.

“What are you?!”

She smiled tenderly at him and stroked his cheek.

“I am perfection incarnated.” she said tenderly. Now she would have to kill him and burn the corpse, because noble Lady Cala would not be so cruel in fighting an enemy. Or did they burn it right away? She had already started to reach for the burner when there was a message from that nasty cat. She smiled and answered everyone.

"Just found a clone corpse by the vault. They're horribly torn, and his throat was ripped open.” as she spoke, the fingers of her left hand lengthened, taking the form of bone claws.

“Goodbye my dear ...” and with one stroke of her hand tore his throat. Then she saw a shattered transmitter drop from the clone's hand.

Rechiza had the impression that he was the only sane person here. These kids she couldn't blame, they were young and ignorant of the true evil that lurked among the stars. But the rest? Did they understand the evil lurking here? She looked at Miss Daisy, who was walking next to this bumbling elf, probably fawning over her, because she was counting on free alcohol, she had already noticed that the woman had a serious drinking problem. Although, considering how much she was interested in Rosie and the crazy feline, she might have wanted other services from the silver haired girl. But she was pretty sure the grim elf knew much more than she was telling them all. She suspected that she had persuaded Lady Cala to go on this accursed quest for dark and selfish motives. She really wanted to get on that damn Etheria.

In her eyes, this whole Etheria was a Carcosa-like place. A cursed nexus of evil and horror, where only the most despicable creatures existed, weaving their dark schemes and lurking for the souls of such unfortunate fools as they. Even a monstrous and mad tyrant like Horde Prime could not defeat this Lady of Chaos. Life has taught her that you can only overcome evil with evil. She suspected that Miss Daisy was connected to this Lady of Chaos. Maybe she was even her cultist, her faithful disciple, conditioned and trained to be an obedient servant. Worse yet, she seemed to know this deranged pirate, Captain Moonshadow. She despised pirates and bandits, believed that only the most despicable people made a living by attacking others, and that the few fools who portrayed the romanticized image of these professions in the media were equally evil. She had the feeling that the only people she could trust even remotely was Arkan-tar and perhaps Doctor Quin as well . She hoped that together they would warn the Lord Admiral and he would do something about the evil coming from Etheria .

They finally made it to the archives. It was in surprisingly good condition, probably due to the still functioning airflow system. The smell of old yellowed paper permeated the room. Unfortunately, it was also huge, with thousands, probably tens of thousands, of pages of records from the last few hundred years. Most of it was probably worthless, containing ordinary information about the economic life of the monastery. The numerous books on the shelves promised more hope. Apparently, the room also served as a library. Suddenly she saw a piece of blue cloth lying on the floor that looked like a banner or a sash. But that wasn't the most important thing. For it was covered with inscriptions in the language of the First Ones. She immediately ran in that direction. She picked it up and read it aloud.

The lashunt looked at Miss Daisy in surprise.

"This Mara, wasn't Lady Cala's ancestor , one of the First Ones?" she asked, not caring that she was revealing the private information that Lady Cala had privately given them. After all, what can these kids understand from this.

"Indeed..." began Miss Daisy, but Lilka interrupted her.

"Are you the one who reads Starlings language?" he asked with his eyes wide open.

“What language?” the Witchwarper asked.

“The language of those who built Eti's hand.” said the Solarian , and Lilka took out a slightly crumpled piece of paper from her bag, on which there was a drawing of a star with a smiling face. At the end of the beams, she had metal hands like Eti's.

“This is what Starlings look like” said the red-haired girl. Miss Daisy stood behind Rechiza and when she saw the drawing her eyes widened and she could hardly contain her burst of laughter.

"So this is what you think the First ones look like?" she asked, trying to control herself. It was strange to see the amused dark sorceress.

“So, what are the Starlings supposed to look like?” Lila asked surprised.

Itel glared at her and said.

“No one, not even Dr. Sidonius, one of the galaxy's greatest minds and authority on the Firsones, can read their handwriting. The elf crossed her arms over her chest. Lashunti smiled indulgently.

"It's very interesting, because it was Dr. Sidonius who created the eyes that allow me to read the writing of the First Ones."

The elf looked at her astonished and shocked, but then Eti spoke through the communicator.

Actually, the sight of moving bodies didn't scare Eti. She had seen the living dead before, and more than once. They were even on Eox , albeit briefly. In fact, that the corpses started to move made them a lot less scary than a whole room full of murdered inhabitants. She was prepared for this sight, she was disillusioned after all. But even so, when she saw the entire hall filled with over a hundred bodies, including children, even she was shocked, although she did not show it. But the undead were just a threat, something she could deal with. She was literally made for fighting…and more, which could come in handy too. She notified everyone, especially the Grimmy team , and then told Alatar.

“Grab Sparkle Hand and go!” she cried, seeing that the white-haired girl was staring paralyzed at the place of the murder. Alatar grabbed her arm, even if she was vexing Alatar, she couldn't deny him strength, and then she took an incendiary grenade and threw it into the largest tangle of undead and immediately ran away. She instinctively squeezed her ear canals just before the explosion, but the roar was still deafening. She ran ahead, knowing that the grenade wouldn't stop the undead for long. It would be different if they were alive, fire and shrapnel were much more effective against living organisms, this knowledge was in her head ... always. She wasn't wrong, the vengeful horde of the undead was chasing them, and their eyes glowing with a cold light were perfectly visible.

“The Revenants” she thought in horror. They were the undead, whose meaning of existence was to seek revenge on the living for the fate that had befallen them, even if they were not at fault for their deaths. She grabbed the pistol and fired several times, without effect, so she reached for her rifle and Alatar touched it, charging it with a technomantic spell. Then three more undead came out of the pack, judging by their elongated limbs, knife-like claws, and cat-like fangs… so they were ghouls , or even ghasts . One jumped with its claws to her throat, but then the Sparkling Hand landed two quick blows, shattering the skull of the corpse, and with a roundhouse kick almost tore the head from the neck of another, and the third Eti hit the chest with a metal hand, almost discharging it, leaving only enough power to maintain the prosthetic barely functioning. Then she grabbed the rifle and fired it from the hip. The boost shot was so powerful that it annihilated the nearest revenant . Then Alatar spewed fire and she threw in an incendiary grenade and everything was enveloped in fiery conflagration. This slowed down the undead horde for a moment.

They ran on, passing bend after bend. Eti was firing her plasma sniper rifle, and Alatar was firing his laser, which he overcharged from time to time. Those who ran closer were destroyed by the blows of Sparkling Hand mighty fists or the butts of her Rifle. They were about to reach the elevator shaft when they saw several strange two-legged bots with a gray horde symbol on their chest. They weren't here before. They dodged several shots and ran down a side corridor. Unfortunately, neither the undead nor the machines paid much attention to each other, apparently they shared quite anti-vitalist views. Finally, they ran up a rather narrow staircase. Running in startling silence, the undead followed them step by step. Alatar decided to take advantage of the terrain and cast a spell that made the stairs slippery and greasy. The undead began to stumble and bump into each other and they became a mass of limbs and torso. They gained some time. They climbed all the way to the top and bolted the door, hoping it would halt the chase for a while. But then she saw darkness beginning to swirl before them.

“Grimmy hurry up, because we ran into the shadows, and I don't have any more grenades ...” she didn't finish, because the door broke apart with a crash and a monstrosity that was a conglomeration of dozens of bodies began to come out of it.

Dilayla, being in armor, had to go down narrow stairs so as not to slip. For the same reason, she preferred to go ahead, because if she lost her balance, she could fall on the Star siblings or Arkan-tar, it could end very badly for them. Then she received a message from Eti and cursed . The siblings also heard this message, because she connected them to passive reception of the message. Jewelstar asked.

“Corpses are moving? Is this some kind of private code signal of yours? what does it mean?”

She raised her eyebrows at him in surprise.

“Well, that means the corpses are moving. Pretty common in places like this, I should have expected it. I should took holy water and more silver.” she explained, and the three siblings looked at her completely without understanding. She shrugged and ran. As soon as she saw that the distance was enough, she called out "Attention, hold on!" and jumped. The entire staircase shuddered as its armored legs hit the floor. Without waiting for her companions, she ran ahead. Around the corner, she saw something she hadn't seen in over thirty years. Hosts of horde droids with old Horde symbols stood before her. She smiled and lowered the laser cannon on her shoulder and said.

"You don't know how long I've waited to be able to do this.” And opened fire.

Itel felt panic begin to creep over her. From the beginning, this trip to the monastery seemed madness to her. Unnecessary and pointless. Eti was in danger and she wasn't there! Just that stupid Rosie. The girl could fight, But she was erratic and deaf, she must have made a noise and woke the dead!

“You must do something!” she screamed and summoned the moonblade. Miss Daisy looked as scared as she was.

"I can… I can try to move us through the void, but only twice have I managed to take someone else she said, and panic was evident in her voice. If the dark sorceress was afraid, then the situation must have been really dire.

“I can help.” Ireanis said suddenly and closed a book and put it away.

“You?” Itel's voice was a mixture of contempt and disbelief.

Ireanis got confused and said.

"I know I'm a stupid drunk ... that I don't always control my power... I've had a bad time in... many years... But I was a war sorceress trained in Nantambu and I can help extend the spell. I swear I'll make it.” she said in a tone as serious as she had ever heard. Miss Daisy looked at her skeptically, but sighed and said.

“I don't think we have a choice.”

“I can slightly soften the barrier between the worlds, can you track them?” Rechiza asked suddenly and Miss Daisy nodded her head.

“Eti? With no problem. Grab me and don't let go for anything in the world.” said the dark sorceress. Itel hesitated as the woman held out her hand. She hadn't been able to trust strangers for a long time, but she had no choice. She had to speak up for Eti. She held out her hand and Miss Daisy took it in an iron grip. Then they disappeared into the cold darkness.

The first thing Itel felt was the return of warmth, but then she heard screams and shrill wails. When she opened her eyes, she saw a terrifying sight. Eti and Alatar were fighting what looked like a mass of molten flesh, and on the other side Rosie faced a tangle of shadows. The Solarian heard the lament of the dead coming from tormented souls. Her mind was torn by the complaint of those who had been murdered on Horde Prime's orders , those who had died premature, senseless deaths unburied. She saw the torment of the inhabitants of the Monastery... the inhabitants of Kesler , whom she offended by the mere fact that she was alive... she felt the pain of her loved ones whom she had abandoned. Suddenly, everything stopped, because Rechiza summoned a luminous barrier separating them from the undead.

"Take care of them quickly, because I can't hold them for long!" the witchwarper screamed .

Miss Daisy and Ireanis leaned back to each other and began casting spells. The voice of the dark sorceress was becoming unnatural and her ears hurt from it. She summoned a dark vortex that sucked souls, while Ireanis hurled a green ray of disintegration that turned the undead monstrosity into a pile of ashes. The silver-haired Elf turned towards them smiling, although blood was flowing from her eyes, mouth and nose.

“Sometimes I can be awesome?! - she said and fell on Miss Daisy's shoulder.

“You did well.” she asked Eti and the others, but the feline girl snorted.

“I survived almost unscathed the encounter with the Dread Colossus created by Lady Sorrowflame, it's child's play.” She waved a metal prosthesis.

...resounding in a universe full of monsters.

Captain Moonshadow burned through the door and eyed Captain Bina suspiciously.

“Are you sure the radiation is not dangerous? “She asked calmly, trying to hide his distrust. Bina shrugged.

“The equipment shows that it is safe, I have a manufacturer's guarantee, if that satisfies anyone, although none of us will seek compensation.” she murmured.

“You know, some of us would like to have children.” said petty officer Kaert and laughed loudly.

“I don't recommend it, better buy yourself a droid , it will definitely give you a glass of water in your old age, not a grenade with the fuse off.”

The pirate captain smiled warmly.

“You're a good mother, you're not in danger of such a fate.”

Bina looked askance at her

“I would say that a pirate praising my maternal abilities is not something I would expect, but I am raising Eti and Lilka, I expect absolutely everything. Although I wouldn't say i raises them. What would you call I don't let them hurt themselves or others?

the burgundy-haired woman behind her mask .

“Some would say that this is the essence of raising kids.

Bina snorted.

“If you add to it neurosis, constant worrying and gastric problems, then I will agree.”

They laughed and Tonado looked at them confused, obviously not understanding the joke, and Gydwa snorted.

She really liked this Bina , she was sincere, honest and caring. She wasn't made to be a mother in the very literal sense looking at her history. She took on the task of caring for very difficult children and was doing better than many mothers who raised their biological offspring.

They were looking for the vault, but they found a trace of the reactor, so they headed in that direction. The reactor was valuable as long as it wasn't in danger of failure. It could be stripped down and sold for a lot of money in the future, like a terraforming system , though she wasn't sure that was the best decision. Sheltered, almost self-sufficient and isolated, monastery was the dream of many conflicted with the authorities, not only pirates. As long as they are able to swallow the gloomy history of this place, because she had no illusions about the fate of the inhabitants of the monastery.

The reactor turned out to be operational and had enough fuel for two more years before it self-deactivated. It seemed quite new, which was rather unusual for such places, I wonder what the monks lived on. They knew there was some sort of mine beneath the monastery though she wasn't entirely sure now. As they wandered through the dark corridors, she noticed strange symbols on the walls, reminiscent of constellations. She was horrified to find that she knew them well, though she couldn't read them. She couldn't remember where she knew them from, but eventually her past was taken from her. Bina came to her when she saw that she was examining strange marks on the walls.

"It's the writing of the First Ones , or what my kids call them, the Starlings . Eti has them on her hand, the metal one, although only she can see them.”

“The First Ones, yes, I remember that name. I've seen similar symbols before...on a sword.”

Bina shrugged.

“You have celestial blood in you. You probably saw it a thousand years ago and have already forgotten...”

She felt grief squeeze her heart.

"Yes, I forgotten..." She looked away from Bina . "I have lost so much"

"What about… that sword?" You know, maybe you can get it back…or something. said Bina, clearly embarrassed by the pirate's sudden gloom.

“Yes, I will indeed retrieve my sword.” she said to herself in a grim voice. Even if you are the Lady of Chaos, you will pay for your betrayal, Adora

The entire subterranean part of the complex seemed to be rebuilt ruins of the First Ones. They may have stretched for miles. In fact, she should have expected it, it was a terraformed planet, so someone was trying to colonize it. What she didn't understand was what the Iomadae and Serenae, who were apparently worshiped here, had to do with the First Ones. But what could she know about the will of the gods? She was just a pirate, maybe a little more idealistic. She experienced firsthand how painful their whims can be for mortals

She wished Rech-zar was with her Her first mate has always been with her since Jadehell . He'd know better what to think of a place like this. Unfortunately, he now had a secret mission ahead of him. He had to restore another remnant of the older races, the wreck of a strange ship, its frame covered with strange green veins. If she could get it to work, and her Verthan lover assured her she would, then let the Lady of Chaos tremble before her wrath.

They unexpectedly received a message from Eti. The feline girl called Miss Daisy for help, because she came across the undead. Bina turned pale and ran forward, then stopped and screamed.

“Fuck! I can't find her here.” Tears of despair appeared in the clone woman's eyes.

Captain Moonshadow thought for a moment and turned to the burgundy haired girl .

“I can help you.”

Bina frowned.

“How?” she asked irritably. The Winged Pirate extended her biological hand to her.

"Trust me, I'll show you art that few have experienced. Tonado, you take over command.

- “Aye Aye, Captain.” Skittermander saluted. Bina only hesitated for a moment, then grabbed her outstretched hand, and then Moonshadow wrapped her wings around her and they both disappeared in a flash of purple light.

When they came back, it turned out that they were late, fortunately, their intervention was not needed. Only the bumbling elven sorceress was injured, for she was leaning against Miss Daisy's shoulder with her bloodied face.

“Hey Captain Wingwing . Hey Bina. Ireanis powdered the corpses and Grimmy sucked in the shadows.” Eti waved to them.” But it's downstairs. a lot of droids , and I think Fist, along with the Smarty and the three foundlings, are fighting with them, so it would be good to help them.”

Dilayla smiled as the laser beam on her shoulder cut in half five Horde droids . She felt immeasurable joy being able to repay Prime for mutilating her and her sister and for the death of her parents. The smile left the mercenary's lips when she was hit by a green beam from one of the robots' weapons. She felt a strong burning sensation in her chest, barely able to stand on her legs. She cursed violently, fired again and jumped from behind, hiding in the stairwell. She looked at the shot where the ceramsteel plate was cracked and melted. This armor should have survived a direct hit from the cannon. Arkan-tar descended first, Tallstar following.

“Undead? asked the scholar.

-“Ugh no, Horde droids are meaner than I remember. “ said the mercenary . Tallstar bared her teeth in a smile.

“Welcome to Prime's Empire .”

Dilayla nodded and said.

“I'll throw a grenade, and then we'll hit together, because we need to get to the kids.”

The others nodded, though Verthani was halfhearted. She dropped a grenade and charged, hoping that her power armor would shield her from at least some of the blast's effects. She shot from her shoulder at farther targets, tearing those close with her armored fists. Tallstar and Starla joined her, and Jewelstar and Arkan-tar covered her with the fire of their weapons. The advantage of the enemy, however, was huge and earned another post, she began to limp. Then suddenly, from the second staircase, Captain Moonshadow dressed in purple armor arrived. The Solarian Pirate wreaked havoc, and from behind her, Bina supported her with pistol shots. They were soon joined by Eti, Alatar, Rosie, Itel and Lilka, and even Rechiza. Lilka with her flaming track, and Itel danced with her silver blade. However, the greatest exterminating angel was Rosie, crushing droids with her luminous fists. The scales were tipping in their direction when she saw out of the corner of her eye that another group of machines was walking towards them ... but suddenly a tall, blond-haired figure fell between them, holding a plasma cutt in one hand and his epee in the other. Lady Cala Grayskull has joined the fray, wreaking havoc. With grace and grace, she knocked down enemies one by one, as if it were not a fight but a dance. Even at a time like this... or perhaps especially at a time like this, she was stunningly beautiful. She destroyed enemies one by one, dodging their blows effortlessly. After a while she was alone among the shattered remains of the machines. She bowed to them all with a broad smile. She didn't look tired in the slightest, she hadn't even messed up her hair.

Fucking Mary Sue thought Dilayla...

The first thing they did after the fight was to clean up the few undead bodies destroyed by Eti and the others. Most of the undead have been reduced to dust by Ireanis . There was also a clone found by Lady Cala , most likely the victim of another living dead. To the horror of the Star siblings, Rechiza pierced our heart with a dagger and Bina shot him through the head. The three inhabitants of the Ravaged Zone accepted with some skepticism the explanation that they did it so that he would not rise from the dead. They were quite bizarre, however, and for Dilayla , preventing the spread of the undead plague was one of the duties of every soldier, except perhaps those serving in the most degenerate and despicable formations. The siblings greeted Bina in a friendly way, but were clearly intimidated by the sight of Captain Moonshadow, as well as her crew, who joined them soon after, especially since the winged woman was open about her profession. Rechiza and Arkan-tar whispered among themselves in the shadows, apparently refusing to accept that they had fallen for cheap propaganda. Miss Daisy, of course, also hidden in the shadows, watched them from a distance, while tending to Ireanis, who couldn't recover from the spell. The kids weren't sure if they wanted to be friends or come off as tough guys. The exception, of course, was Eti.

“Then why don't we celebrate this wonderful and glorious victory with a delicious broth.” said the shooter, staring eloquently at Glory, to the horror of Starla , who was trying to hide her friend.

And then there was Lady Cala. For all her distaste for the aristocrat, she was able to understand that she could command admiration, especially after what she had done in battle.

However, the one who was most pleased with the meeting with his siblings was Wrongdak. He hugged them all in turn, and Starla burst into tears. During this time, his brother's corpse was moved, covered with a cloth so as not to injure the sensitive, kind-hearted clone. Then they arranged a funeral. They dug two graves. In one they threw the corpses and ashes of the inhabitants of the monastery, and the clone into the other. Then they performed the ritual, which fell to Dilayla and Rechiza , for they were the most religious members of the expedition. Then it was time to say goodbye. As the siblings prepared to return to their ship, she surreptitiously gave them contact information for the Lord Admiral's fleet. Soon after, the siblings flew away. Then came the pirates Captain Moonshadow.

Dilayla tried to hide her distaste at the sight of star raiders plundering the holy place, because she didn't want to mess with a woman who had a reputation for not being entirely sane. It had to be admitted that the riches they took from here were enormous and the morale among her crew was significantly improved. Horde Prime took only one reliquary for himself and had Sereni's tomb destroyed , leaving only rubble. The four of her, Bina, Miss Daisy, and the winged Pirate watched as they loaded their fourth cargo of treasures.

"So it looks like this Etheria isn't such a bad place." said the burgundy-haired woman, for obvious reasons, very happy. The pirate snorted and looked at her hard.

“Beauty often hides wicked hearts. Let me be skeptical,” said Moonshadow, and they nodded their heads to Bina , though most likely thinking of completely different people.

“Captain Bina ... How did you meet Lady Sorrwflame ? I've heard all sorts of things about this woman. “asked the dark sorceress. Bina looked at her surprised and said.

“Not personally. Igzar died in a trap set by her. Only Eti survived, that's when she lost her real hand and gained the metal one. As far as I know, he is a necrotechnician who has been working for Lord Admiral Antares and his family for many generations. These motherfuckers deserve each other.” Bina said. Dilayla understood what Miss Daisy was playing and decided to get involved.

“I got an offer to work for him when I applied for this expedition. Have I lost a lot?” she asked, trying to sound as innocent as possible. Bina thought for a long time before she said.

“You did well. He is a monster.” Dilayla saw Miss Daisy shiver. “ I do not know all the facts, but the truth was much worse than the media said. It all started thirty-five years ago. The family of Antares , then Highlord Felix Antares, had ruled Tarak for centuries...certainly since before the Gap . They didn't do it directly, they never had that much power. At least until Felix's time Antares . He began to accumulate power in his hands. He was arming himself and building a navy, most likely with conquest in mind. It was the time of the Cold War between the Pact Worlds and Veskarium . The Antares family had always been in favor of Absalom , so when rebellions began to break out, the Veskas took the opportunity to send in their subversion specialists, the Pahtra siblings Igzar and Ashera . Igzar was a brilliant commander, albeit absolutely ruthless and cruel, capable to order of blowing up an orphanage to get his way, and Ashera was a saboteur and assassin ready to do just that. With their help, the rebellion flared up with redoubled strength, turning into a civil war. Bloody and brutal, fueled by the fact that the Pact Worlds and Veskarium treated this conflict as a proxy war. Both sides had done terrible things, though the Pact rulers seemed oblivious to the fact that they had supported the tyrant. When there was a stagnation on the front, but Antares' troops were gaining the upper hand due to the superiority in resources. So Ashera had a desperate idea. With a group of the best soldiers, she went to the capital and decided to organize a coup. It was the day the High Lord bid farewell to the soldiers going to the front to fight in the decisive battle. Asehra was a great sniper, so despite great security, she did the impossible and hit Antares from a distance of over a kilometer. She paid for her act with her life. However, the goal was achieved. The leaderless soldiers abandoned their weapons. The allies changed sides, and the flame of rebellion engulfed the entire planet. Only the most fanatical supporters of the former ruler remained loyal and fled into orbit, on board the ships of the Antares war fleet ... Who, by the cruel whim of the gods, survived the gunshot. After three days of fighting for his life, he climbed onto the bridge of the heavy cruiser invincible ... and ordered the nukes to be dropped from orbit ... Just out of spite. The thing is, the others also launched a nuclear counterattack, and a total of eight million people died. Due to all the chaos, it was impossible to determine who started the excchange. Soon, the Pact Worlds and Vescarium began to accuse each other of causing this tragedy, and in the meantime Antares and his fleet escaped and began a career as a mercenary, which he was really good at. The Swarm soon struck, and Lord Admiral Antares' talent was needed. And so the criminal was made a hero.” Bina finished her story.

"And that's another reason why I don't believe in the righteousness and heroism of this She- Ra ." said Captain Moonshadow. Bina shrugged. Dilayla was grateful to all the gods that women didn't look at her and Miss Daisy, who looked like she was about to throw up. Dilayla was terrified too. “I just sent the Star Siblings into the arms of a monster as evil as Horde Prime. But maybe if I talk to Dr. Quin , he won't send the data to the admiral.” She thought, Arkan-tar had told her of their daring plan, only then she didn't care. Now was the last moment to calm things down a bit. Regardless of how suspicious it might seem, she went to look for Dr. Quin . Miss Daisy has also gone somewhere. She had to hurry. It took him a while to find Ysoka, and when she reached her, the doctor turned to her with a smile, she said.

“Everything's settled. The message went. White Demon helped a lot.”

The mercenary felt her knees buckle under her. She turned to see a smiling Wrongdak talking to Rosie.

How I tell him he helped bring the war criminal to Etheria.

She roared as she felt fury and helplessness fill her. After Bina's story, she went to one of the distant buildings and unleashed her power by devastating the interior of the abandoned house. How could this have happened. How could I bring it back to this? she thought as she dug her claws into the wall, leaving deep gashes. This time it was going to be different, this time I was supposed to fix everything. I came to redeem my actions, to atone for all the wrongs I've done. Instead, I'm in the vanguard of the monster. What's I've done

“I'm coming in”. Lady Cala heard the voice, and without waiting for an answer she entered the room. The beautiful aristocrat looked around the devastated interior and raised an eyebrow questioningly. She told her the whole story she had heard from Bina . Her ward listened attentively, then gave a pearly laugh.

"It's a really funny and ironic story, don't you think?" the aristocrat asked, tilting her head.

I hate you, with all my heart and black soul, like nothing in the world she thought, clenching her fangs and clawed hands. Lady Cala rolled her eyes

“You're being overdramatic my dear Shadow Weaver.”

"Did you… did you know all this?" she asked, ignoring the taunt. Her ward spread her arms helplessly.

“No, but does it matter? asked the aristocrat.

She looked at her ward. For Lady Cala, the deaths of millions of beings most likely did not matter. She leaned against the wall.

“I brought a monster to Etheria.”

Lady Cala sighed and walked over to her.

“Not that I care in the least, but the situation is not that dire.”

She looked at the aristocrat in surprise.

“You see my dear Shadow Weaver. The Lord Admiral is a soldier and a mercenary, and they don't take a fight they might lose, and your She-Ra and all of Etheria defeated Horde Prime , who left behind an entire empire ready to be conquered, a much juicier morsel.”

Yes, that sounds logical, she thought, feeling a little relieved. But Lady Cala came over to her and touched her cheek with the back of her hand.

“But remember, we're both monsters. It is not right for us to be jealous that there is another one.”

Lord Admiral Antares was rushing to the bridge of Battleship Glory of the Fallen when he received an emergency call. When he entered, Mrs. Ka and Commander Reese were waiting for him.

“Look what a wonderful message our advance guard has sent us.

He looked and saw a map that included dozens of systems and a telecommunications network connecting them. Horde Prime's entire empire.

“These are the foundations on which my own Empire will stand” he thought.

He almost smiled

Dreams and memories

When she opened her eyes, for a brief, terrifying moment, she felt as if she was back in the Fright Zone, that all the events of the last five years had been just a dream. That she had fallen asleep, perhaps she had hit her head and passed out, amidst the dark corridors of Hordak's domain . That somewhere out there a Shadow Weaver is just waiting to take out hers fury on her.

“Adora!” She screamed, looking scared. If she's here, if they're here together, it's going to be okay. The two of them will be fine... just like in that strange dream... unless Adora had already left her, gone again, never loved her... Everything was just a fantasy... Then she felt something rubbing against her leg. She looked down and saw Melog. Melog is here…Melog is, it mean, everything was true. That what happened to her, good and bad, really happened. She knelt beside her friend, feeling his fear and anxiety.

"It's okay, we'll be fine. We'll get out of here... somehow.” she said and looked around. It really wasn't the Fright Zone. The buildings here were completely different, taller, but much better made. They didn't look like they were going to fall apart at any moment, like they did where she'd grown up. They were much more solid, with sharp angles, intimidating onlookers, making them feel as if birds of prey were watching them. The overwhelming canyon walls rose all around, as high as the mountains of Dryl, adding to the claustrophobic feeling. The walls were riddled with buildings and tunnel entrances, as if someone felt sorry for wasting space. Maybe it really was? She had no idea, she didn't know how she got here. So with Melog they decided to climb to the top of the highest building available to them. Everywhere she saw boards showing products or people of different races and sexes in very unambiguous poses. She blushed at the picture of two almost naked Saiche women who looked like they were about to make love. Melog turned pink.

As she reached the top, she sucked in a whistling breath as she saw the skyline of the gigantic metropolis . She was aware that Etherian cities, even the Fright Zone, were microscopic compared to cities like Icarus or Aquarius , but this stretched beyond the horizon. Millions, tens of millions of beings must have lived here. Only she didn't see any, it seemed completely deserted. She was almost happy to hear someone whistling a tune, but it was so eerie. But she ran that way.

She saw a figure wearing a long brown coat with a hood. She had a rifle with a scope on her back, heavy boots on her feet, a thick leather glove on her left hand. The right hand was made of strange metal. She could see the tip of the tail moving nervously around her feet. She was facing the city.

“So it's true, we walk ... I walk differently than the real Pahtra.” she said in a dull voice.

“Pahtra?” she asked, standing at a distance, but Melog was more accommodating. The figure snorted loudly.

“Pahtra from Vesk V, I know it, so you know it, after all, you are just a product of my subconscious.” the other one murmured.

"It's starting to get weird.”

Do you know where we are?

The other figure sighed loudly.

"Does my subconscious have to be such idiot?" Though maybe that's what it's all about? So that I can know my real self and stuff like talking puppets…”she said, her voice seemed bored and tired. The longer this conversation went on, the more confused she became, but Melog approached the other one and started rubbing against it. The stranger glanced at her companion.

“In general, I hate creatures like this, because cats are disgusting, but I actually like that one.” the latter stroked Melog . Her friend was a man of character, and if he liked someone, she trusted him too.

"But whoever I am, I still don't know where I am." She stepped closer. Other one shrugged.

“It's Atrax... Probably not long after I was freed. I didn't live here long... at least after I was freed. But i came here often these few weeks.”

She thought for a moment and asked.

"I don't know anything about Atrax , but have you heard of Kesler ?"

The other one snorted.

“Kesler has been destroyed.” She replied firmly.

“By Horde Prime ?” she asked sympathetically, but the other laughed.

“Crooked Snout and his dumber brothers? Don't talk nonsense! The swarm ate him” she replied sharply.

She was amused because Crooked Snout was a very funny nickname, but the rest of it made her uneasy.

“Swarm, I don't know what it is, I don't know this part of the Galaxy.”

She was silent for a long time, until she began to speak in an angry tone.

“So it's you? Listen to me, leave me alone. She turned around, and even though she was wearing a mask, she could see her eyes, a cat with blue spots. "You are dead. Dead for over twenty years.”

And then she woke up...

She got up and looked around. She was at the river, a huge river that stretched out to the end of the world. It flowed through many islets, barren and swampy. The waters of the river were black and dead. Everything around was dead, completely lifeless, except for the hideous frog-like creatures splashing in the dark waves. She had spent the last few weeks on Icarus , or rather its smaller continent, Dedalus . It was an extremely exhausting time, she never expected that an ordinary diplomatic visit could be so grueling. It's good that Scorpia and Perfuma were here with her. I mean, there weren't a lot of them here, which made the whole place even scarier. She closed her eyes and reached for the power, She spoke the words.

"For the honor of the Grayskull. – and she felt her body fill with euphoria and ecstasy. Multicolored light flashed. She shifted into She- Ra's form and tightened her hand on her sword. Now she was ready to face anyone…anywhere. Actually, anywhere was a very good term.

"Is anyone here? Let him come out and introduce himself!" she called into space, and for a moment there was only silence. But then she heard the splash of oars, and a small rowing boat emerged from the mist. It was piloted by a tall man dressed in black robes and wearing a wide-brimmed hat. He held an oar in his hands. His face was hidden in shadow, which made her think of the Shadow Weaver. The thought made her take a fighting stance and glare at him menacingly.

"There's no reason to be so angry. After all, I'm only doing what you asked me to do, you summoned me, so I've come. As a side note, I'll just add that this whole transformation is much more spectacular than I remember." said the figure in an old, biting voice.

She didn't like the newcomer's words very much. Neither himself.

"Tell me who you are and what you've done with me and my friends..." She said confidently with the power penetrating her through.

“Well, courtesy first. I am Charon, the Horseman of Death. The leader of the Horsemen of the Apocalypse from time immemorial and the undisputed Ruler of Abbadon” He bowed to her simultaneously politely and mockingly. She snorted contemptuously.

"The title-throwing has already begun, hasn't it? Whoever you are, free my friends, or you will suffer the same fate as Horde Prime “ Charon laughed derisively.

"Oh, what threatening words, and you have not the slightest proof that I have done anything wrong to you or your friend. Perfuma sleeps soundly, and so do you…” said the Lord of Abbadon . She smiled, feeling relieved. She laughed embarrassed and said.

"So it's a dream, I've talked to dreams before." She scratched her cheek. "I think I shouldn’t mix fruit liqueur and those Perfuma’s cookies."

Charon looked at her with disapproval so great even Shadow Weaver couldn't

“No, it's not a dream. I talk to you in sleep because that's the easiest way to contact you, because death and sleep have a lot in common. And I wanted to talk about the great discourtesy that happened to me on your part.” The eye beneath the hat flashed a crimson light. She sensed an aura of terrible evil from him, even greater than that coming from Horde Prime . Behind the Horseman appeared a clock, gigantic as a mountain, made of black and silver metal. She couldn't tell exactly what hours it was showing, the symbols were completely unfamiliar to her, but they seemed wrong.

"Your actions caused the End of Time clock to turn back, which made me very sad.”

She gripped her sword with both hands, ready to fight, but suddenly she sensed a new power coming. She also had an aura of evil around it, but much older, both more primal and subtle. She turned around and saw him floating on the ground. He had a crown of flames and an inverted Ankh on his chest.

“We didn't know that the Horseman of Death started stalking. It's so disappointing” said the newcomer.

Charon growled.

“Why are you interfering, Creeping Chaos. You want to protect this girl? Do you like this trophy?”

Creeping Chaos laughed.

"Do you really think she needs anyone's help?"

"Excuse me, but haven't you noticed that I AM HERE?" she cried, waving her sword.

Charon looked at her and stared at her for a long moment before he said

“No, I don't think so.. All I can say is that I won't forget you and your fiancée. I have a surprise for you. Fear the Shadow of the Moon and the Slave of Ice.

The clock struck the hour.

Death was all around her. The earth was scorched and poisoned. The trees were Dead and Twisted . The sky was filled with smoke from countless fires. She saw destroyed vehicles and ruined cities. In those five years, she had seen death and destruction more than any of the princesses, but only her power could heal the wounds inflicted by Horde Prime . But with each such healing, she absorbed the pain and despair left by the Horde. Scorpia was very supportive of her, as was everyone else. But there were pains that could not be shared, had to be endured alone. She has always felt a connection with all living beings. Usually she felt an overwhelming joy about it, a happiness that came from the universe itself.. But that also meant that she felt the suffering of all beings. She wanted to scream for their pain and cry for their despair. But only she could heal the earth, bring it back to life. She had seen terrible things up close. She saw them both with her eyes and with her heart. Everyone thought only the fight was hard. But healing also took its toll, especially when he couldn't help the suffering she witnessed. Adora understood. She, too, faced pain and despair that not even She- Ra's power could ease. But she had to go on because no one else would take her place. Though she didn't know how much longer she would last...

But this place... it was dead... No, it was being killed, it was dying in mortal agony . She guessed it was a dream, she had practiced lucid dreaming more than once, with mixed results. She remembered falling asleep and knew where she had been before. But it was too real to be a dream. She perceived her surroundings with all her senses. Burnt smell and bitter sour taste in the mouth. The pain of fingernails digging into flesh as she saw the school, half dissolved in acid. She could read inscriptions, for example on signposts. One of them pointed to Greater Kesler and the other to Eastern Kesler. There must have been a smaller Kesler somewhere... Wherever she was. At first, she thought this place was a reflection of her experiences in the last few weeks, but if this wasn't a normal dream, then maybe the universe was trying to tell her something. Perhaps it wanted to show her the fate of planets attacked by Horde Prime . Make her realize how much more work lies ahead of her to heal the wounds he inflicted on the Galaxy. Only here was something strange. She had never heard of Kesler , but Horde Prime must have ravaged hundreds of planets over the course of those hundreds or perhaps thousands of years. However, she did not see the remains of the Horde machines, nor the bodies of the clones anywhere. In fact, she hadn't seen any bodies anywhere, perhaps the universe had kindly spared her the sight of it. But she had seen tracks, knew a bit about tracking, though she didn't eat meat. Some of them probably belonged to the inhabitants of this planet or vehicles belonging to them. Others, however, were left by completely different creatures, like huge arthropods. There was no shortage of those on Etheria, but… something didn't suit her here…

She heard the music when, after an hour or maybe a day, it was hard to tell in her sleep, she reached an area covered with hills. She didn't like it much, but she could say the same about Street Music from Icarus . Everyone had their own taste, she had no right to judge anyone. She immediately ran in the direction from where she was coming, maybe she will meet someone or something who will explain to her what is going on here. But as she ran to the top of the hill, she was speechless with horror.

She saw the battlefield, huge, stretching as far as she could see. Everywhere were smoking wrecks of vehicles, tanks, and others whose uses she did not know. There were bodies of soldiers of different races everywhere. Heaps of corpses of huge insects of all kinds, many larger than tanks, surrounded them. Sometimes they were stacked higher than She-Ra. No one gave any signs of life, although there were sounds of fighting in the distance. On the horizon she saw a city surrounded by a glow of flames. Tears welled up in her eyes, she had never seen anything so terrible. Then she saw a figure playing. She held in her hands something like a guitar or lute, the strings of which made sounds that hurt the ears. She was clad in a silk robe with a hood that was gleaming black. Her hands were almost white. She sang in a gentle male voice.

Can you feel the pain of this world?

Shout out, because I can't feel anything anymore.

Can you hear the scream of this world?

Tremble, for I have become indifferent.

Can you see the despair of this world?

Cry because I can't.

He said standing in the midst of death, then lifted his hood. She groaned seeing his face. He was a young man with black hair and a pale complexion, but his eyes were pierced with sharp spikes. It was too much for her.

“Leave me alone. I've had enough of everything already.” she screamed, and the young "man" was surrounded by rhizomes binding him, and then ran blindly ahead, away from this place.

She wasn't aware of how much she was running, at this point it probably didn't matter anyway. Finally she stopped and knelt crying. All she wanted to do was go home and hug Scorpia ... and Adora and everyone she met. She already wanted to wake up. Suddenly she felt as if someone were hugging her tenderly, not physically, but as if a friendly soul had hugged her. She opened her eyes and looked around. She was in a clearing full of horsetails and ferns. They were the first living plants she had seen in this place. She smiled kindly at them, but then she sensed someone's presence. She stood up abruptly and assumed a fighting stance, because in front of her stood one of those terrible insectoids that she had seen so recently, although the other ones were dead ...

Please don't be afraid of me. I won't hurt you, she heard in his head. She stared at the creature in surprise. She was dressed in ceremonial robes and wore a chitin crown on her head, she exuded gentleness, friendship and ... great sadness. She immediately liked her.

“I'm sorry, I thought you were one of those terrible insectoids”

The creature lowered its head as if depressed.

I am one of them. These are my children who were taken from me long ago. Now known as the Swarm, they are wreaking death and destruction across the galaxy to my despair, she said in her mind, "I am Hylax . Forever Queen," she added.

She bowed courteously and said.

"It's an honor to meet you, Queen Hylax . I am Princess Perfuma, ruler of Plumeria and princess consort of Princess Scorpii, ruler of Scorpion Country or Centimori as it was formerly known. You're definitely nicer than that horrible individual who accosted me out there on the battlefield."

Hylax exhaled loudly through her windpipes.

It was Zon- Kuthon . Lord of Midnight . He is also a lost child. Once his name was Dou -Brai, he was a good being who appreciated beauty and joy, like his sister Shelyn. Now he is the patron of suffering and envy. the Forever Queen explained.

"But what does he want from me? I never seek conflict with anyone, if I can help him in any way, I will, just let him explain to me what he needs." she said in a desperate tone. Hylax sighed sadly through her windpipes.

You're a good girl, Pefuma. But you also suffer a lot. And this suffering attracted Zon- Kuthon . Unfortunately, there is nothing you can do to help him. Once he wandered behind a dark tapestry where only my unfortunate children can wander without fear. My poor children... Listen to me. Only you can I contact without much difficulty, for you listen to the music of the universe. There's something going on in the galaxy that I don't fully understand, and so do everyone else, except maybe Creeping Chaos and the other Outer Gods, but they're not worth turning to for advice, because they'll give answers that will shatter even the strongest mind. All I know is that it has to do with my poor children, your friend Adora , and an Artifact called the Eye of Sereni . You have little time, because they come. There comes a hunger that cannot be satiated. Remember, Hylax told her , and then she heard a much more wanted voice coming from somewhere outside.

"Darling, Honey, you must wake up because they are coming”

Sari wandered aboard the Memory, a research ship belonging to Doctor Sidonius, a galaxy-famous scientist, esotericist of unparalleled skill, an ancient vampire and above all, her father. She didn't have much to do, because already five years ago, after the fall of Jantar, he abandoned most of his projects, except for the most important and mysterious one, to which he decided to devote his unlife. He amassed vast resources for this purpose and gathered many allies, though many of them resented. One automaton from Carurystal, for example.

“Oh, Miss Sari, how nice to meet you.” said Prince Zed, bowing low to her. She rolled her eyes.

'We've been on one, not so big, ship for a month. We meet ten times a day, it's rather boring. Say what you want from me.”

The eyes of the ancient mechanism glowed with a mysterious inner glow.

“Your father wants to regain what was taken from him, his greatest treasure. I am looking for my kindred, but what are you looking for Miss Sari. I don't think you were driven here to the most cursed part of the galaxy by the loyalty of a child to a parent. At least not only”

She smiled, revealing the Dhampir's long fangs .

“Revenge. Revenge for my mother's death. I will destroy Light Hope and everything she loved.”

Joan has traversed the countless decks of the Dreams of Eternity Void Galleon. She didn't feel tired. Her tormented biomechanical body couldn't feel it, or much else. Only pain. Not very strong, but constant. She was never free from it. The Order did not want to believe her. There was nothing strange about it. After all, they were partially responsible for her fate. Even Dilayla refused to listen to her, offended at the world, refusing to look into her sad eyes. She didn't want to accept the fact that it was her fault too. After all, she didn't protect her on the Minitar . Only Captain Blazebringer listened to her and promised ... redress. Unlike her body, no one could help her, not even an Ancient.

The galleon was gigantic, once hundreds of thousands of beings could have lived here, and there were entire ecosystems on board, modeled on the environment of lost planets. Now many of them were dead, and the crew was five, not counting the captain, who had been in temporal and cryonic stasis for many years . He suffered, as did she, though his anguish was much deeper…

She entered the sector where the End of Time Arsenal was kept. All weapons except the "Defensive Systems" floated in the void and huge casemate. Each of them was the size of a starship and had its own propulsion and even AI, though in this case she wasn't sure if that was the right word. Each had its own personality and temperament, and using them was more like bending demons to your will. But that was what she did as mistress of the armaments of this ancient ship. She looked at the list of weapons:

Fireflies: Multi-guide missiles with fusion plasma warheads. Explosive power approx. ten kilotons

Scrapers : Beak Material Weapons: Explosive power of approximately one hundred kilotons Cleaners: Laser Beak Weapon.

Destructive Punishment Blade: Relativistic Magnetic Weapon. Explosivepower of about ten mgt

Fist of Doom: Gauss' Relativistic Weapon. Power of about fifty megatons

Hunter of Eternal Night Demons: anti-matter anti-air weapon.

A spear piercing the heart of a mountain: a ray piercing up to a kilometer of rock per second

Hornet Sting; Anti-ship electromagnetic cannon

Wreck Burner: Gamma ray to clean ships

Tear of the Sun: Plasma Cannon. Destructive power continental scale

Antiworld Drop: Antimatter Cannon. Destructive power continental scale

Restoring Natural Order: Electromagnetic Cannon on a Planetary Scale

Awakening of the Primordial Gods: Earth-shattering weapons

Godfather's Clenched Fist: Gravity Cannon. Destructive power planetary scale

Purification: gamma ray on a planetary scale

The universe traitor's weapon: a beam of micro black holes. Destructive power planetary scale

Venom of Hearts: Supernova weapon

Summon Firelord: Causes a solar blast that consumes planets

Abyss Key: Turns a star into a black hole.

It wasn't much compared to the Heart of Etheria , but with the Arsenal they had a chance, albeit still a slim one, of destroying Eternia once and for all.

Tales scary and joyful

She groaned as a short exclamation woke her up. She was sore from riding all day, and tomorrow they will be climbing. She was no longer young ... It’s mean, she was in her prime, ready to fight and go to the end of the world.

“What's going on there?” she exclaimed, looking around with sleepy eyes. Frosta stood up summoning ice fists. Entrapta poked her head out of the sleeping bag she had hung on a line on the escarpment, making her look like a caterpillar cocoon or the prey of a very large spider. looking around curiously. Unarticulated groans came from Lance and George's tent . They were probably as sore as she was, after all, they were much older and not so seasoned with the hardships of hiking in the wild, although she should not forget that they lived and raised children in the Whispering Woods... They had some experience. Finally she looked at Catra. The Great Marshal sat panting, beads of sweat glistening on her forehead, and Melog cuddled up to her. She seemed scared.

“I'm sorry, I had a bad dream. I didn't want to wake anyone up.” she said a bit embarrassed. She smiled at her.

“Nothing happened.” she said as gently as she could. “And so the moon rose, we have a long way to go before dusk today. It's good to start the day as early as possible.”

This girl has the right to have nightmares like no one else. She thought sympathetically. Even today, Spinny would wake up screaming in the night because of what Horde Prime had done to her. And Catra was…much closer to the deranged Horde lord. She has also undergone purification. She heard about this cruel procedure from a one clone. It was excruciatingly painful even for an obedient clone, she couldn't imagine how much someone so tough must have suffered before she was broken. And Shadow Weaver's upbringing will turn anyone's soul into armor of steel she thought. Well, you mustn't forget about her childhood yet. It also left its mark on her.

Catra smiled weakly, then made a face as if she was sick and went to the side.

"Oh, morning sickness, something's up" she thought. She and Spinny had been postponing motherhood until after the end of the war for a very long time, and now they were trying to catch up at an accelerated pace, though Quickling and Greypaw had already taken to their home before end of war. There was no point in Adora and Catra waiting so long if they wanted to change diapers, even though they had time, and they were young and full of life. They might as well have waited. It was also logical that Catra was going to give birth, after all, no one knew how the transformation into She- Ra would affect the pregnancy, although Catra could care more about herself. On the other hand, how could she know about such things? Who would tell them what they didn't even know, that they didn't know. Shadow Weaver probably didn't care about explaining such things to her wards. She couldn't imagine what their first period was like, they probably thought they were bleeding internally.

She just hoped Adora knew all this. Yes, the heroine of Etheria sometimes had to be pushed when decision paralysis seized her, but it was still necessary to agree on everything. But that was none of her business.

After a while, Catra returned and seemed to be feeling better. Entrapta and Frosta were already busy making breakfast, while George and Lance were doing their morning "System Check." She decided she should go too and help the others instead of gossiping to herself. She cast a glance at Catra and saw that under the mask of apparent indifference, she was hiding anxiety, maybe even fear ... Well, it really wasn't her business ... But was it really?

They heated breakfast and water on a portable plasma stove Entrapta had built, though she and Catra had to keep from stepping back to a safe distance. Entrapta's inventions were certainly safer now, especially since she had a child, or so they thought, but old habits were hard to shake off. Lance and George made cappuccino , they even had soy milk. Admittedly after the full adoption of Greypaw Spinny relaxed the rules a bit and allowed dairy and fish to be included in their diet, but she tried to avoid eating non-vegan food… although she sometimes made exceptions. She couldn't resist a few slices of greasy smoked fish. But he didn't eat the bacon, though it was so tempting. Frosta fed Melog fish and dried meat, although he was a little ashamed of this snacking and glanced sideways at Catra . The latter, however, was thoughtful and worried, which also affected her companion, and soon the magical cat lay down on the ground slightly blue.

Entrapta was eating her rations that looked like cupcakes or cubes of… nougat. She offered them to Lance and George, who ate them with some effort. Frosta much more openly tossed her portion to Melog , who, having sniffed it, moved away from the food as if it were about to bite him. Entrapta had never been able to cook, though given her special dietary needs, this was not surprising. Although it was sometimes fascinating that such a wise woman, who could remember the chemical composition of every substance she came into contact with , could not cook a decent broth. From Scorpia, she learned that Hordak was responsible for preparing meals in their household. She couldn't know what to think of his skills, at their wedding and their baby's birth party, she ate only a few tiny cookies prepared by Scorpia . It was the hungriest party she'd ever attended.

She couldn't understand how an intelligent woman like Entrapta could get involved with someone like Hordak. He was… just Hordak , the invader and self-proclaimed ruler of Etheria. He was responsible for the death or ruin of tens of thousands of lives. He was the one who allowed Shadow Weaver to torture her father to death. He was the reason Greypaw and Quikling were orphans Entrapta spoke of him fondly and lovingly, as if he were the kindest person in the world. She didn't understand it. More than once she and Spinny wondered if he had brainwashed her or chipped her in some fancy way. Although her wife assured her that it was completely impossible, she still sometimes looked suspiciously at the nape of her neck. Until finally, even the purple-haired woman noticed it.

"Do I have something on my neck?" She pulled a mirror out of her pocket and began to examine herself in it, so she missed the indulgent look cast by Catra at the ruler of Armoria She coughed in embarrassment.

"Because I was wondering. How is your life with Hordak because… you are quite an unusual couple." she said carefully, trying not to giggle nervously.

"Hordak is a wonderful laboratory assistant." Entrapta began. " Thanks to him, my work turned out to be three times more efficient. He has a wealth of knowledge that comes not only from Horde Prime, but also from decades of research conducted in the Fright Zone. Without his help, I would not have been able to carry out many of the most important experiments that have significantly increased our knowledge and made Etheria a safer place. And above all… I love him." A gentle, almost blissful smile appeared on her face. "We were both single for many years. I know this is hard for you to understand, especially for you, Catra , but we were all prisoners there in the Fright Zone. He understands that I see the world differently, because so does he. He's always been different than his brothers and Horde Prime... He really understands what love is and can be tender... in many ways..." Entrapta smiled wider and she was pretty sure she saw the ambiguity in that smile . "Besides, we share a lot of common interests. Science, technology, ping pong… I guess that's how a good marriage should be. George and Lance share a love of books... Catra and Adora tried to kill each other."

Catra laughed, but surprisingly cheerfully for her current mood.

“We have a lot in common, but not this. In fact, we've been best friends for most of our lives at least... except for that one year... But you're right, we always understood each other very well, almost read each other's minds... There's only one thing we've never been able to realize.”

She smiled at the feline girl.

“We with Spinny initially where at each other throat. Our lands have long been at odds, and after we lost our lands, my grandmother wanted to show everyone, especially those wimps of Windcrest, that Armoria wasn't dead as long as we were alive... So I challenged "that stupid hottie chick" to a "Friendly Duel." I thought that I, a warrior trained since childhood to fight an n owner of artifact that generates energy nets, would have no problem kicking…” She looked at Frosta . “kicking the ass of a wagon-raised girl… and she kicked my ass. “ she said and laughed at her memories. “I could not believe that. I had got obsessed with Spinnerela . Nothing mattered to me but that pink-haired girl. I forgot everything and everyone. Even about the Horde. I collected every piece of information about her. I decided to pretend to be friends with her. I was nice and cute, I invited her to game night… And it turned out that I liked her. She was smart, brave and sweet. I felt that I felt something more than just frenship. Only then my grandmother intervened and told her all that was just trick to examine her. Spinnerella got very angry with me, and we didn't speak to each other…until the Great Battle. I was severely wounded in the head there, I still have a plate there. I thought I was going to die and… I confessed my love to Spinny . We got married practically on the battlefield… We joked that I had to hit my head to say I love her We've been together for eighteen years now… Geez, Spinny got chipped on our thirteenth anniversary , so we moved our anniversary to Victory Day… So it looks like we'll be able to celebrate our anniversaries together as three couples next year!”

Catra groaned.

“First we have to survive this wedding.” said the feline girl resignedly.

She laughed warmly.

“A wedding is nothing terrible, you will survive it.”

"Let's hope..." Cattra said , smiling thoughtfully.

After breakfast, they washed up and went on their way. They were at the foot of a mountain range slightly lower than the Drill but much less explored. Few people lived here, mostly a few pastoral settlements and a few bands of nomads using arc-powered skimmers. Even Frosta couldn't say much about the place, though she was their guide anyway and was quite good at it.

She and Melog decided to go ahead with Frosta . She felt better than ever. The crisp and fresh mountain air sobered her, banished her dark mood as the wind blew away the dark mists. She wondered how she had once preferred the bitter and stuffy atmosphere of the Fright Zone to clean and healthy air. She often didn't understand what was good for her and what made her happy. And despite all the worries that plagued her, she was genuinely happy. And with any luck, that won't change.

“Catra, Catra! Look!” Frosta called her. Although the girl was small in stature, she was very agile, although of course she was no match for her. In a few bounds she was at the top of the pass where the ice princess stood. As she stood beside her, she inhaled sharply, and Melog shimmered in various colors. She stood at the entrance to a wide valley covered with silver-blue bushes. A river flowed through it, the waters of which reflected the blue of the sky. It was fed by a glacier rising on top of the nearby mountains. The glacier was shattered and cracked. Gigantic fragments of it broke off from the main core, presumably in an earthquake triggered by Entrapta when she hacked the black garnet. But what made her jaw drop was the city. She could only see part of it through the binoculars, the rest was hidden under the ice dome, but what she saw was extraordinary. Dozens of high towers with large windows, reminiscent of huge chimneys or insect mounds. She couldn't see the doors or the streets, as if the inhabitants didn't need them to travel around their settlement. She wasn't sure of its size, but it was certainly much smaller than the city she'd seen in that dream... Though it had an aura of strangeness around it, as if those who built it had completely alien minds and physiology. She shivered.

“Isn't it great to be on a great adventure again! Ancient cities, terrible monsters and wicked villains! Frost exclaimed, jumping for joy.” She smiled happily at the girl's reaction.

“For now, there's only the city, no monsters, let alone villains, to be seen around.”

Frosta waved her hand as if it were a completely insignificant detail.

“Uncle Lance said that there lived a terrible many-eyed monster, although no one had ever counted his eyes, but we will, we are the Invincible Seven after all.” she said, full of unbridled enthusiasm.

"We're the Invincible Seven now?" she asked, feeling Frosta's humor getting to her.

“Sure! It's you, me, Melog, Netossa, Entrapta, George and Lance. We are seven and we are invincible, that is, we are the Invincible Seven! And there will always be a villain. The world is full of them. For example, one chancellor. “ Frosta suddenly became serious, becoming a real ice princess. “The Chancellor… He wanted me to take the title of Empress and separate the Kingdom Snow from Etheria, so that I would betray Glimmer. But I refused him because it was stupid and I would betray Glimmer. And we are friends. Will you tell Glimmer about this? That we're still friends and that she can count on me?” she asked, and tears suddenly appeared in her eyes. She took her in her arms and hugged her as tight as she could.

"Of course I'll tell her, but Glimmer has never doubted your friendship." She assured Frosta , but inwardly she wasn't so sure, for she remembered that the Chancellor had spoken to Storm Heart, Sister of Shadow Weaver, in his Lady's absence. This is how all evil begins. From dark disputes in the shadows

They waited for the rest of them, especially Lance and George, who then spent the entire walk discussing vehemently about who the people of this town were. She was thinking about her dream at the time. That girl... she had cat eyes and heterochromia, though of a different kind. She knew about Kesler , and... You've been dead for over twenty years she said, and she was twenty-four after all. Before, she would have thought it was her subconscious trying to tell her she felt dead inside. But she had never felt as alive as she did before marrying her beloved. Besides, the dream was all too real, which was unsettling. Her companion had the same opinion on the subject. Melog always dreamed her dreams. She needed to be sure, so she decided to ask Lance and George one thing.

“Have you ever heard the word Pahtra ? she said, trying to sound as innocent as possible.

“Yes, that's the word some cat people like you used to describe themselves.” Lance said, and when he saw that she had gone pale, he asked, "Is something wrong?"

We walk differently from real Pahtras

“Nothing special. I just heard that word somewhere . And the word Vesk? Does it have anything to do with them?” she asked, trying to control herself.

“No…" The librarian shook his head, and for a moment she felt relieved. "The word has something to do with reptilians like your friend Rogelio ." Vekse , Vaste , Vesku , or possibly the oldest Vesk is the name of their homeland. It used to be thought that it was some lost land, but now I think it could be another planet... You really look bad...” he asked, seeing that she turned green.

“It's nothing, absolutely nothing ...” she stammered with effort, trying to control the nausea, she barely noticed Netossa's eloquent look .

They traveled until late in the afternoon, and stopped near a city. They did not want to visit it after dark. They still had plenty of supplies thanks to what Alice was carrying. They must have left the vehicles at the foot of the mountains yesterday, but besides her, no one was afraid that someone might steal them, well, that's what Etheria was like... They set up camp and made a fire. It got quite nice and cheerful, like when traveling with a buddy . Frosta suggested telling scary stories . Lance told of a terrible book that ate people to get life into its pages. George told the parable of the sorcerer's apprentice, Netossa told the story of the terrible octopus-like Scyrlledi living in the depths of the oceans. Entrapta knew none. Finally, Frosta presented a delightfully gruesome tale of Ithaqua , the great cannibal.

“And all you could hear was Ithaqua crunching their bones. Om nom om.” She finished and everyone looked at her expectantly. She smiled and looked up at the starry sky.

"Most of the scary stories I know come from Shadow Weaver… Not scary stories like that… I could tell those too, but I don't think that's the point. She… had a real knack for storytelling. She told them with her whole being imitating voices and even did tricks with magic to add color to the whole story. Of course, she always replaced all the monsters with princesses. Although she didn't always have to change them. I'll tell you about the blood-sucking princess. she said and began to tell her story. She had no dark sorceress talent, but everyone sat listening, even Entrapta began taking notes. When she finished, she sobered up.

“That's all ... and not all because this story is true ...” She looked at the bewildered faces of the others. “I'm serious. I recently fought one of these in Mystacor, though he wasn't a princess. - she began to talk about what happened in Mystacor quite recently , and everyone listened attentively to her with growing amazement and disbelief. When she had finished, Entrapta began to jot down frantically.

“It's fascinating. Do you suspect animating magic, reviving animating nanites , or a new kind of neural chip ? Have you examined the object?” asked the inventor in an excited voice.

She blinked twice processing the information provided by the inventor.

"I'm not sure if I understood you correctly, but since it was Mystacor, I'd bet on magic, but I don't know much about this kind of thing." All I know is that I don't like the idea that the dead can come back. And the words of this crazy woman. Halo...” she fell silent. Netossa gave her a sympathetic look. Frosta and Entrapta looked fascinated, though probably for completely different reasons. George thought for a moment, exchanged a few whispered remarks with his husband, and said.

"What you're describing sounds like a vampire to me, one of the more powerful not dead ones."

“One of? Are there other worse ones?” she asked, and she and Melog bristled. Lance and George nodded together and Lance said.

“Of course. Liches, Devourers, Raveners... according to legend at least.”

Netossa snorted.

“So what else awaits us? Will we encounter a dragon or maybe a dragon-vampire right away ?” she said in an extremely annoyed voice.

"To be honest, I once read about a dragon-vampire . Lance said. “Her name was Ashaq Annihilator . She lived on the other side of the world and served another dragon, the most feared of all."

She groaned.

“No exorbitance, some myths will always remain myths..."

Not that far away, both on a galactic scale and counting in Drift time, Lady Sorrowflame was praying aboard the heavy cruiser Invincible . She prayed sincerely, with all her dark soul and dead heart. She summoned her master Dachak . As for over three hundred years, and as for over three hundred years, silence answered her. This time, however, she answered for the first time.

“For this silence, I will draw a scream from the throats of millions. I swear by my dark heart I, Ashaq Annihilator.” she said, tears of blood streaming down her cheeks.

Bitter truths.

He was lost in thought while training with Dilayla. He was so happy to will be back on Etheria, to his friends and brother. What he will tell them about his travels and listen to stories about their new adventures. Then he saw all those destroyed planets...he warned them that they wouldn't find anything there...they didn’t listen to him and saw what his Big Brother could do when he was mad, bored or just on a whim. He was as evil as he was powerful. He was…everything he hated…he knew that hate was a bad thing, the one feeling everyone should get rid of, but for Horde Prime, an exception could be made…

It wasn't his fault, he told himself. All these planets were destroyed years before he was created. He wasn't responsible for what had happened ... but he felt guilty. Had he not been cut off from the collective hive mind, he would have been just like his brothers. He would carry out even Horde Prime's nastiest orders without batting an eyelid . Without hesitation, he would be ready to kill anyone just to gain his approval. Though no one ever deserved it . Neither the little brothers, nor any of the gods that the so-called priests spoke of, nor even She-Ra herself, were worthy of him... No one who was not created as his tool could understand how much power he had over life. thoughts and hearts of his clones he possessed. His elder brother was unable to free himself from his overpowering influence for thirty years. He knew his new friends didn't blame him for his brothers' sins, but he couldn't. Now, however, he had free will and only his choices depended on whether he would not repeat the mistakes of his brothers. He was free at last, and now his life belonged to him alone...

And then he saw the message from this Horde Ultimate and couldn't believe what he saw. His brothers finally had the opportunity to go their own way, break the shackles and make their own way… and they chose… something like this. It wasn't even a Horde Prime imitation , it was… something hideous. Distortion of distortion, deception within deception. He couldn't fathom how his brothers could willingly bow down to someone who wasn't even a shadow of his Big Brother. It was all supposed to be different. They were supposed to live a joyful and peaceful life like him, and they chose to go to war with those who saved them!

He understood the idea of lying and cheating, and he wasn't too bad at it, though truth be told, he didn't like telling untruths. He felt like he was doing something fundamentally wrong. He had had to weave and avoid the truth many times during these last few years, but he seldom lied. And that drow... and his brother... How could they say such horrible things. Adora wasn't a Chaos Mistress but a liberator, Glimmer wasn't a witch, and Catra was definitely not that Shadow Beast! But the most terrible thing was how they portrayed Entrapta and his brother. She wasn't a monster, and she loved his brother very much, and for some time he had begun to wonder if their feelings weren't more… affectionate.

The worst part was that others could believe these disgusting lies. Dilayla knew the truth, roughly speaking, and the crew of Bina's ship seemed skeptical of Horde Ultimate's slanders, just as Lady Cala did. The rest, however, seemed concerned. Arkan-tar and Rechza were concerned even after meeting the Star Siblings. He was very happy to meet his friends who transported him to the planet where he met Skittermander . He was happy that nothing had happened to them. As Starla hugged and kissed him, they talked for a while in private.

“It's good ... that you're okay ... because we were starting to worry a bit.” Jewelstar said .

"My brother meant he was afraid those little creatures would eat you up." Tallstar added with a warm laugh.

“No, adult Skittermanders wouldn't eat anyone.” he said in a reassuring tone. The siblings looked at him confused.

"What's 'do you mean Adult Skittermanders wouldn't eat'?" Jewelstar asked cautiously .

“Well, the young ones can suck the juices out of someone until dries you out. But just a bit of caution and you'll be fine... Skitterwanders are worse , they can suck your guts out. Once, Emily and I helped drive one away. We got a medal for that. You also have to be careful how you talk to Vesc , because if you do it the wrong way, they will challenge you to a glorious fight, although they are nice in general ... In the galaxy, everyone is generally nice, although you have to watch out for many. Like the Drow, the Duergar, the Dragons, the inhabitants of Eox and Aucturn …" As he spoke, their faces seemed more and more worried.

“That's great... and are your new companions... treating you well? Jewelstar asked with concern in his voice.

“Yes, they are very good to me. They rescued me from the captivity of such a Grag , although Eti almost killed me, but it was partly my fault. Eti is ... She and Lady are extraordinary, although Eti is very shy ...” he explained and felt that his heart was beating faster with delight.

“It's the shooter, right? I wouldn't call her shy... more like a little unsettling. Talstar said carefully..

- Yes ... But she is ... - he did not finish, because he saw that Bina was calling him. “Just don't say anything about the Heart and stuff like that. My brother asked me to…' he was explaining hastily, but Jewelstar put his hand on his shoulder and said reassuringly.

“Don't worry about it, we're careful. None of us want to make an enemy of Adora, Catra and especially Glimmer. Dread to think what she would do to us if we caused her trouble.” He laughed warmly and patted him on the shoulder.

He was sorry to hear about the fate that befell his brother. Another of them died completely unnecessarily, although his death, unlike the countless multitudes of his brothers, was not due to Horde Prime's will but because he wanted to serve Horde Ultimate ... He was starting to hate him too. How could he take away the freedom he and his brothers had just gained. And why was he doing it? What for? This question kept resounding in his mind, but he couldn't find an answer to it. He'll have to talk to his brother about everything. He will surely understand and be able to help somehow. He and She-Ra, I'm sure they'll work something out. Together! Yes, that's a wonderful idea!

He decided to vent his anger during training. His friends told him not to contain anger and rage, because it can lead to terrible things. Besides, after these few weeks he also lost some stamina, they had a training fight and the mercenary did not fight with full vigor, as if something was bothering her. He had the impression that some of his friends became sad after the events in the monastery. He felt sorry for them, Rosie told him about what had happened there. He felt sorry for the inhabitants of the monastery, the next victims of Horde Prime , though he was horrified by the fact that they rose from the dead because of their hatred. Fortunately, the three sorceresses defeated the undead. His deaf friend was delighted with the heroic feat of the sorceresses, especially Miss Daisy. They liked this strange, gloomy woman. She was protective of Rosie and… Eti, much more than Lady Cala…. The aristocrat once again proved that she is more than ordinary inhabitant of the Galaxy. Alone, she defeated a whole host of Horde droids . She was almost like Adora … No, almost like She-Ra, though of course Adora was She- Ra . At least that's how he understood it. Thanks to Lady Cala, they were victorious… But why was everyone acting like they had lost?

“Arghh Today I have no head for this. The mercenary growled and wiped her face with a towel.

“Did something happen? I feel like you've been worried lately.” he asked, lowering his protective gear. Dilayla looked at him as if she wanted to apologize to him for something.

"No... just you see... recently I found out something..." She was embarrassed and ashamed, as if she had done something very wrong and now she had to admit it. "Listen Wrongdak ... I have to..." she began, and then suddenly they heard a joyful call from the entrance.

“Hi! Is Eti here?” Rosie asked. Suddenly Almost Catra appeared behind her.

“Hey Sparkle hand, I'm here.” she said, and he got the impression that her voice was somewhat sad. Rosie jumped up in fear .

“Could you please sneak up? the intern asked.” Eti shrugged and said in a voice that sounded resigned.

“Yes... I think I could.”

Rosie nodded and asked.

“Can we train together...?”

Eti tilted her head to the side and pricked up her ears.

"So you're not afraid of kicking someone's ass again like you did to Stinka?" She stared at Rosie, who thought for a moment and said.

"A bit, but I think I was pretty good with the undead and I think I should practice. Well, to be better, because we don't know what adventures await us.”

“Great attitude Rosie.” Dilayla called, smiling warmly at the intern. Then they heard footsteps and Itel entered the training room. The elf stood next to Eti, on the other side of the one occupied by Rosie. He sensed that there was some tension between the girls, but he didn't understand what caused it.

“Hi Dilayla! Bina is calling you to kitchen.” she said in a cheerfully. Dilayla got confused and said in a rather strange voice.

“I'm coming. Will you take care of Mr. Wrongdak ? He will train with you. Just don't hurt him.” She looked meaningfully at Eti, who shrugged. The other two girls nodded. The mercenary left and the three young women went inside.

“Can I train with you?” Rosie asked Itel, who looked at her confused.

“Of course.” Solarian said cautiously .

“We will train shooting. Eti said. While her friends stepped onto the training mat and they approached the shooting range. He didn't like guns, but he was better at using them than most soldiers. He chose the shape and parameters for the practice weapon and put on the virtual Glasses. The cityscape came up first, but Eti growled furiously under her breath and switched the projected landscape to some grassy plain.

"Well, now you're going to fight The Swarm” said the feline, and then the Attack began. He wasn't in the least afraid of insects, so the onslaught of swarm components didn't impress him as much as on others. But still, the sight of countless hosts was terrifying. Although the shooting range was only used to simulate the properties of the weapon, the appearance of the opponents was only cosmetic, but it was enough to make him realize the horror of fighting the scourge of the galaxy. He could only hope he didn't have to face them. After half an hour, he had had enough and asked them to train on the exercise equipment. He started working out with the barbell and Eti started stretching.

“You shoot really well. Where did you learn it? he asked after a long time, and the girl began to look at him with those sad eyes of hers. Finally she said in a low voice.

“There where you did, Wrongdak” She looked at him seriously, waiting for him to fully absorb the meaning of what she said. He drew in a deep breath.

“You are… Just like me and… like Bina” he said. The ship's captain's confession shocked him. He wanted to talk to her about all this, about how people like them feel, how those whose minds were… created with all knowledge, instead of slowly growing and shaping throughout childhood. Who were deprived of the right to shape themselves as they wished. But somehow there was no time for that recently… And now it turned out that Eti is also someone like him and his brothers. Everything they did was done to her too. Now he understood better why there was so much anger and bitterness in her… and sadness. Only if she's like that, so Catra too... How will he tell her?

Itel stopped the fight and watched them closely, as did Rosie.

“No, not like you. I'm nobody's clone. I was made. I was designed and brought to life two thousand two hundred and twenty-five days ago. There were others like me, but they were failures, mistakes, defects. They are all dead… ALL!” she shouted suddenly, probably for the first time since he had met her. “Only me is left, because I am absolutely perfect, awesome and unique.” She fell silent and sat quietly, the entire training room fell silent.

“I'm so sorry…” Only he could say. She shrugged.

"Me too..." She said in a barely audible voice.

Dilayla was walking to Bina with a nozzle on her shoulder. They must have guessed something, maybe Eti eavesdropped something she has ridiculously good hearing thought the mercenary . In fact, she wouldn't be surprised if the captain wanted to leave them all on the nearest habitable planet. In fact, the law was probably on her side. They concealed important, one might even say, crucial information from her. But such an act would end tragically, neither Lady Cala nor Miss Daisy would allow their plans, however dark and terrible, to be thwarted. They would easily pacify the crew, unless Rosie sided with her new friends, and she certainly would, but in that case she would have absolutely no way of predicting the outcome of this clash.

In fact, she considered letting the others know who was coming. Others, however, were of a completely different opinion. An hour after returning to the ship, all members of their expedition, except for Rosie, locked themselves in their cabin. Together with Miss Daisy, who had told Lady Cala everything beforehand, they informed the rest of what they had learned from Bina . There was silence, as it always does at such times. Finally, she growled in an annoyed voice.

“Have you heard me? It turned out that we were bringing a war criminal to a place that had already suffered enough from the war. I guess we should do something about it, shouldn't we?”

Arkan-tar, who had his hands in his pockets thoughtfully, shrugged.

“What are we supposed to do?”

She looked at him in disbelief. She spread her arms wide and asked, barely holding back a scream.

“I don't know, warn the others, for example, or something?”

Rechiza looked at her with those metallic eyes of hers, dead and unmoving.

“For the time being, we have only the words of Bina to support this thesis , who is neither a very reliable person nor has she learned all this firsthand. All her information comes from this Igzar , who as the Lord Admiral's sworn enemy, who is not a reliable source. I see no reason for us to change our plans because of a few unproven rumors. said the Witchwarper, her voice hard, as if to drown out her own doubts.” Dr. Quin nodded.

“I agree with Rechiza . The situation is as follows. There is a possibility that the Lord Admiral was involved as one of the many participants in the civil war, in a nuclear weapons incident. But surely the inhabitants of this Etheria were trying to use against all of us weapons that could bring destruction to you all. I guess it's better to choose a known bastard than criminals we don't know." Ysoka said.

Dilayla couldn't believe what she was hearing. Her companions had displayed such a level of cynicism and cowardice that she wondered how they could look at themselves in the mirror. Support came from where she least expected it.

"How strange it is that everyone prefers to wade into the thicket of their mistakes, even if steel thorns were to tear their soul apart, instead of accepting their own imperfection and coming to the light of truth, to suffer the consequences of their actions." Lady Cala said with a note of loathing in her voice. Dilayla was absolutely sure for the first time that the noble was being absolutely honest with them. Everyone looked at her in surprise, except for Miss Daisy, who looked at her suspiciously.

"While we cannot tell our traveling companions, which I regret, sooner or later the people of Etheria will learn the true nature of the Lord Admiral, for the true nature of every being will come to light sooner or later. So it's good to let it happen on our terms. Otherwise, it's very easy for the people of Etheria to link us to this individual, and they won't be wrong. This could end very badly for us. Therefore, it would be wise for us to warn the authorities of Etheria about our ally in an appropriate way. I remind you that we owe nothing to the Lord Admiral, after all, he deceived us all, we will only stand for the truth. Lady Cala said confidently. Everyone in the room was amazed, Dilayla probably the most.

What are you up to beautiful bitch

Yes, though. she was silent, though she didn't like it at all. She wanted to warn the Wrongdak at least. She almost did, but then Rosie came in and she missed the opportunity, and perhaps the courage. The worst part was that even if she screamed the truth to the entire galaxy, it still wouldn't change the fact that they had brought in an individual who had bombed his own planet with nuclear weapons. They brought on those who destroyed a monster that took absolutely everything from her. It was indeed a gratitude worthy of Zon- Kuthon .

Bina was waiting for her in the kitchen. As soon as she saw her, she smiled cheekily and pointed to a chair. Feeling both relieved and guilty, Dilayla sat down, and Bina placed a bottle of vodka on the table.

We need to talk about our children. said the ship's captain in a half-joking tone. Halfway only.

"No one is getting married I think?" said the mercenary pushing the bottle away from her. Bina raised an eyebrow.

“I wouldn't be so sure. Rosie and Eti like each other very much, Eti somehow even learned sign language, which sometimes happens to her ... Only Eti is a very specific young woman and in addition Itel fell in love with her, and you don't even realize how hotheaded she can be that's why I'm asking you who Rosie is and how much we can trust her, because if yo6 say that she's just an intern, forgive me, but I don't believe it.”

Dilayla considered her answer for a few moments, then sighed and said.

"I don't know Rosie much more than you do, I've only known her a few hours longer, but she reminds me of my sister, so I decided to look after her." All I know is that she comes from a lost colony of people like her, and that the capsule containing her was found by the crew of a research vessel belonging to Kemanis University. They took care of her, I don't know anything else. And now you tell me who Eti is, because I won't believe that she is bald Pahtra. You're protecting her past too much. If you want, I won't say anything to anyone.”

Bina thought for a long time before she said.

“Eti was created by my Father as part of a long-term research project, but you probably suspected something like that, if you want to know more, you have to ask her yourself.” and then something shook the whole ship. An alarm sounded for the bridge.

In less than a minute, everyone will be there. It was quite cramped because of that. The ship was now piloted by Mr. Ilemshaw , and Alatar was the navigator.

“It knocked us out of the drift.” Dragonkin said

“Drift drive failed?” Bina asked fearfully.

“No, nothing serious. It's just that the nav detects two Starstones, it's about to reprogram it to ignore one. explained the technomancer.

“What, two Starstones? Rechiza asked in disbelief. This is the most powerful artifact in the galaxy!" Where is the other one?”

- It's almost funny. It looks it is on Etheria.” he laughed nervously. Lady Cala and Miss Daisy stared at each other in utter astonishment. And then there was delight on the aristocrat's face, and horror on the face of the dark sorceress.

The Burden of Heroism

She didn't want to kill him, she really didn't. But he woke her up. She was having a particularly bad dream, and she had really bad ones. Only that wasn't an excuse, she had committed a crime and she would have to face the consequences. Though maybe he'll find someone to fix it. Whoever makes him move again, his heart will beat anew. She just needs to put it together. She won't be wandering everywhere with the remains, because everyone will know... Who was she deceiving? After such a kick nit, and what absolutely no one will restore it to its original state. Even with all of She-Ra's power, she won't be able to undo what she's done...

She murdered the antique clock from Eridani, again. Already the third this year. The first was annihilated when a mechanical wyvern sprang out of it without warning , announcing with a piercing scream that the hour had struck. Another was destroyed by Swift Wind for the same reason. Next they destroyed with Catra when they made love. One was destroyed by Melog when Bow's nephew threw him a ball, and another by Bow himself when he practiced shooting blindfolded. Twenty-three clocks died in Brightmoon in total ... so they could never say they had enough clocks. The people of Eridani had a strange habit of gifting them with various gear-driven mechanisms. They regarded such gifts as an expression of the highest respect, for they were often based on designs of items dating back to before the Loss, some extremely important date whose meaning was difficult to understand for most of the inhabitants of Etheria, let alone her, for whom the world before Hordak’s arrival was almost like a fairy tale. But Bow, Glimmer, and especially Scorpia usually got wind-up toys of some sort, Scorpia had a whole room full of them. Well, the ruler of scorpions did not murder gifts. It was actually amazing how much delicacy she could find in those pincers of hers. Perfuma knew it best.

“She-Ra Adora, princess of power, chosen of the light, slayer of Horde Prime, savior of the known worlds, Master of the universe, is everything okay?” The guard's voice rang out.

“Firstly, many times I asked to be called simply Adora, secondly, are you aware that if there was someone here who threatened me, you wouldn't be able to list all these titles?”

“Not She-Ra Adora ...”

“You are not aware?” She interrupted him hopefully.

"I can't agree to not naming you properly. Disregard for convention leads to Anarchy, anarchy leads to Chaos, and just wait for another Horde Prime to emerge from Chaos. The future of the universe rests on my shoulders. I can't fail.”

She blinked twice.

“Just bring the tea . she asked resignedly.

"What She-Ra Adoro ..." the guard began, but she didn't let him continue, she just roared.

“WET!”

The guard left. Inwardly, she could only hope that it would at least it will be warm. This has been her life for the past two weeks. Giving speeches, cutting ribbons with a sword, hearing speeches, watching a performance about how she defeated Horde Prime . The latter tended to be strange, the locals outdoing each other in making the ruler of the Horde more and more grotesque and exaggerated. She'd met him a few times and he was definitely scarier than any comic buffoon she'd seen here. At first she tried to explain that it was completely different from the performance but Scorpia and Perfuma convinced her not to. It is surprising that the couple enjoyed the performances so much. After what the Scorpion princess had been through, she expected her to feel bad about seeing Horde Prime again, but instead she laughed at the oddities of all these versions...

"They made thirty eyes on this one, and they're all cross-eyed." She laughed, though then she worried whether it was appropriate to laugh at people with a crossed-eyes.

She was glad that no one was interested in her whole story. Hers and Catra's. She preferred not to wonder how she was portrayed here… Her fiancée liked to laugh at She- Ra and the rest of her friends, and even at herself in the Double Trouble Theater, but those shows had their limits and a bit of good taste… though recently she had the impression that Sea Hawk was slowly becoming the main character. However, some people might exaggerate here...

But it wasn't the plays that frustrated her the most, it was the expectations... of her and of She- Ra ... still of her. It was… hard to bear. On Etheria, most people understood that she was… a normal woman, but everywhere else she was seen as a superbeing , a perfect creature who was asked for so much, so much more than she was able to give. She thought she was free of the Shadow Weaver, and after leaving Etheria, the Shadow Weaver turned out to be others.

She sighed and swept the remains of the clock under the huge canopy bed. She was somewhat accustomed to luxuries after living in Brightmoon for years, so the room didn't overwhelm her, though she was assured that it was worthy of a queen... But without Catra, she might as well have slept on the cold stones, and even the narrow bunk by her side was a hundred times more comfortable. more comfortable than a down pillow.

She smiled proudly to herself. At first glance, there was no sign that there had ever been a clock here. Of course, the cleaning lady would probably find the remains, so she probably made her extra work ... though as she'd already noticed, almost everything she used suddenly became very valuable, so probably the remains of this clock will be worth much more now than they were before. This display of adoration was so disturbing that she took many items with her, such as dirty underwear or used sanitary napkins, preferring not to think about what they could do with them.

Tea was finally brought to her, as well as supper, though she had not ordered the latter. She got enough banana bread with honey to feed all three of them. But Catra would snort, she hated honey. But she made herself an early dinner. After she ate, she felt really refreshed and left the room with renewed vigor... Where four guards were waiting for her, staring at her adoringly.

“She- Ra'o Adoro princess…” the same guard began, but she cut him off by raising her hand.

“Did I ask for something? No titling and don't talk to me about Chaos again!” she screamed. He looked at her with undisguised resentment. She wished Catra were here with her, she was much better at intimidating annoying types. “What are we planning for today?” she asked, feeling more tired than before bedtime.

“Princess Perfuma and Princess Scorpia have gone to the Kings Gardens and then they will go to the valley of Kelimene , where together you will heal the area where the vacuum booms were used.” said the guard with a renewed sense of humor.

“Great, take me to them.” she asked, but the guard frowned

“Unfortunately, first you will have to answer the questions of the inhabitants of the North Dedalus' Democratic People's Republic .”

She sighed resignedly.

“All right, go ahead. I want it all behind me now.”

The current capital of the North Dedalus' Democratic People's Republic, Clytemnestra, was a large city, at least for her, with almost two hundred thousand inhabitants, although there were larger cities on Icarus . It survived only because there were many old monuments here. Horde Prime had a warped love of art, and avoided destroying old buildings unnecessarily. Temples were the exception, usually he either destroyed them or remade them so that he seemed to be the main and only inhabitant of these places. Now she was in She- Ra's form in a huge amphitheater. There were several hundred people sitting here, and most of them were children or so-called journalists. For the first two quarters of an hour, she answered questions from the youngest. About what she likes to eat (anything but a lot), whether she brushes her teeth and cleans her ears (of course!), about her favorite color (gold and blue). She actually liked that. Only then did it become unpleasant. A tall and handsome woman in a red army beret and dress uniform asked her.

"Is it true that She-Ra, the so-called savior of the Galaxy, was a Horde soldier?" Her voice was hard and judgmental, as if it were an interrogation.

“Well, yes, I was ... But what does it matter?” she asked confused.

"You're not asking questions here, I'm asking you, and since I'm asking you, it obviously matters." she said sharply, with a reprimand in her voice?

“Excuse me, but who are you?" she asked indignantly.

“I'm Claw , Ivory Claw. Former resistance member and decorated veteran, now a journalist working for the state newspaper Only Truth, but continuing. Is it true that you have risen to the highest position in the Horde on Etheria?” She didn't take her eyes off her.

“No ... I mean, I was appointed force captain, but it wasn't the highest position. The highest was Lord Hordak's , and Second in Command was next, but” She didn't finish as Ivory Claw cut her off.

“Is it true that until the time of "leaving" from the Horde, you were a pupil, even a protégé of the Second in Command known as Shadow Weaver?” said the journalist. The children stared at her confused, but the adults began to whisper among themselves.

“Yes, but I wouldn't say to…” Ivory Claw She nodded and cut her off again.

“Wasn't this Shadow Weaver formerly known as Light Spinner and taught at a university called Mustacor and was widely respected there and sat on the university council?” she said, and stared at her obviously judging.

“Yes, but how do you know that?”

Oh that was a very good question. Even on Etheria, this was not common knowledge.

“I conducted a journalistic investigation, that's all you need to know, I can't say more because I would have to reveal my sources, and this is against elementary professional ethics. But back to the pertinent question of whether your defection coincided by some strange coincidence with the finding of an ancient artifact giving you She- Ra's powers.” Ivory Claw tapped her notebook with a pen.

“Yes , but it had nothing to do with …” she had a growing impression that this woman was accusing her of something, but she did not understand what.

“Are you engaged?” the journalist asked unexpectedly.

"Yes, my fiancée's name is Catra, and our wedding is on Victory Day." she said and smiled at her thoughts.

“Was your fiancée also a member of the Horde, you even grew up together?”

“And what about this? There were hundreds of cadets like us in the Fright Zone…” She could feel the fury rising inside her.

"But it was your fiancée who took Shadow Weaver's position after she overthrew her and led an offensive that nearly ended in a Horde victory, and before that she almost destroyed your planet with your sword, and before that she carried out a terrorist attack that resulted in the kidnapping of your queen, and then led to an ecological catastrophe on a global scale.” The journalist slowly came down to her, tapping the notebook in the rhythm of her steps. Her hands tightened on the sword. Even though the woman was two heads shorter than her, she didn't look away, but looked into her eyes as if challenging her.

"It... wasn't like that... What are you getting at!" she screamed, barely holding back. He will not allow Catra to be maligned ! Who were they to make such accusations behind her back!

“I'm going for the truth , because only the truth can save us, isn't it?” the woman said smiling mockingly. "And just one more question. Is it true that you were brought to the Horde's headquarters by Hordak , who was the leader of the Horde on Etheria?” Ivory Claw raised an eyebrow questioningly.

She blinked twice. Everything the reporter said was true, but somehow twisted so that it no longer had anything to do with what actually happened.

“What are you insinuating.” she said sharply, barely controlling herself.

Ivory Claw snorted.

"Is it how you call the pursuit of truth on your Etheria?" She turned to the crowd and continued. “Please, my compatriots, think about it. The leader of the Etherian Horde finds an infant, a representative of an ancient, supposedly extinct race, and takes her into his care. He gives it to his right hand for training, There he trains with his future fiancée. She then deserts when she finds an ancient artifact that only she can use and accidentally befriends the future queen. During this time, her future bride gains one of the highest positions in the Horde. After about a year of fruitless wrangling, they manage to snatch the planet from its mysterious hidden dimension, and it immediately falls into Horde Prime's clutches. The queen and fiancée are kidnapped aboard the Velvet Glove. However, the tyrant who is responsible for the deaths of millions of our countrymen does them no harm, and a few months later She-Ra frees them both with virtually no resistance. Shortly afterwards, while Horde Prime is trying to activate a weapon capable of destroying us all, She-Ra somehow makes the ruler of the known worlds disappear and nothing is known about him until now, so we all assume he is dead, possibly right… perhaps. These are the facts. We see a lot of coincidences here . Sometimes coincidences are just coincidences... Sometimes... Come to your own conclusions.” The journalist finished and took her place in the audience.

She felt everyone's eyes turn to her. She was used to it and accepted it, but this was different. There was fear and accusation in them. Theirs eyes pierced her like steel spikes. She didn't understand what Ivory Claw was up to , what she wanted from her. But she didn't have time to think about it, because suddenly everyone in the audience started bombarding her with questions.

"How many people have you killed in the service of the Horde?" the older scarred veteran asked.

“Was it all arranged from the beginning?” a tall woman asked.

“Will Horde Prime come back? I'm scared!” cried a frightened child.

She looked around the crowd and felt her heart choke with fear. So she did the only thing she could think of, a very silly thing. She grabbed her sword and jumped several hundred meters, then another, and another, to be as far away from the accusing eyes as possible.

It only calmed down on the outskirts of the city, in the area since Horde Prime's conquest . Was it the old holy quarter, or was it a temple distrikt? Somehow... Anyway, the Lord of the Known Worlds had most of the inhabitants wiped out, but he spared the buildings, they were too beautiful for even he to destroy... But what he did was even worse. He ordered to replace the images of the so-called gods, spirits and saints with his likenesses, sometimes triumphing over the beings who were worshiped here.

She didn't understand the point of building temples and attending them, at least until recently, but what Horde Prime had done seemed wrong even to her. But it was the right place, because hardly anyone lived here. Although the images of the insane tyrant were removed immediately after the victory and the temples began to be rebuilt soon after, very few returned to this district. It was said that this place is haunted, that this place is haunted by the ghosts of those who died here. But she wasn't afraid, she didn't believe in such things. Shadow Weaver liked to tell them scary stories, usually about scary princesses. The headless princess. The wraith princess. The bloodsucking princess. It was all lies, as was most of what came out of the cursed sorceress's mouth. Everything she said was only meant to bend others to her will, to bind their minds with dark bonds. She and Catra were freed from her only when she sacrificed her wicked life for the only good deed... But if she was free, yo why is she thinking about her now.

It's all because of this dream... she thought to herself, rubbing her face with her hands. She was standing on the roof looking at the gloomy panorama of the district. She was still agitated and felt the power flowing through her, not letting her return to her natural form. I just remembered one of those scary stories or novels that Mermista throws up to me" nothing else, she thought, but she knew she was lying to herself. The dream was too real, too real… and this evil… two kinds of evil, different but equally wicked. Just who were Charon and Creeping Chaos? The former seemed to know her. He knew She-Ra just like Horde Prime. So he was at least as old... Did he know Mara? Or one of the previous She-Ra? She knew nothing about them, other than a few hints from Madam Razz. Didn't that mean she didn't know anything about herself?

She groaned. Why does it always have to be so complicated?

She jumped down still in She-Ra form. She needed to rest for a while, be alone for a while, away from all those people who adored her, who wanted something from her… who accused her of not doing enough . The building on which she stood was not very impressive, rather modest, almost devoid of decorations.

“Come on in, don't be afraid.” called a voice from inside, strangely resonant, as if it was coming from many places at once. She sighed and stepped inside, still trapped in She-Ra's body. Lately she had been having more and more trouble returning to her true form, at least when she was agitated. She didn't want to go in there, but she didn't want to run any further, she was tired, tired of it all.

She went inside. The interior was as modest as the exterior. The only decoration was the image of a black butterfly on the wall. It was simple, even conventional, somewhat in the style of ornaments so favored on Etheria. It did seem quite old though, which was quite unusual considering how Horde Prime hated such buildings. There were no chairs, benches, or anything of the sort needed to receive those who wished to worship the being to whom this place was dedicated. Only her inner glow illuminated the place. There was one person here, a woman of about forty, somewhat stocky. She turned to her and found out she was blind “Welcome to the Temple of the Black Butterfly. Silence Between.” she said in a strong and melodious voice.

She smiled at her.

“Maybe I just need silence.” she said bitterly.

“In silence, the voice of the soul is heard best. Call me Zei . I have been taking care of this place for a long time, even before the occupation.” the woman explained to her.

“Voice of the soul, it's wonderful. One more voice willing to tell me what to do or what I'm already doing wrong. “ She looked sadly at the floor.

“It is not difficult to always do everything perfectly and not make any mistakes. It is enough to know everything and see everything”

She shivered as Horde Prime's favorite phrase was mentioned

“He said so too.” she said darkly and a little suspiciously.

“He said a lot of things and few of them were true. No one, except maybe one, knows everything, and absolutely everyone makes mistakes.” the woman said in an amused voice.

“But not every mistake depends on other people's lives. very many. She knelt, crushed by the weight of heroism. The woman walked over to her and touched her cheek. She immediately drew back as it reminded her of the way Shadow Weaver had treated her.

"Sorry, I just usually touch other people's faces to know who I'm talking to… though in your case I don't have to." I sensed your power and… sadness from a distance. Truly, a great burden is upon your shoulders, She- Ra'o , liberator... child of the void.”

Tears sprang to her eyes involuntarily and she felt them trickling down her cheeks.

“Sometimes I don't have the strength anymore. I'm so tired ... “ she said, exposing her soul to this woman. Perhaps she had done wrong, but in that very moment she felt herself becoming Adora again .

“Fate can be cruel and often gives us more than we can handle, especially when we try to be the good and selfless ones. We can only bow before it, or face it with our heads held high, but it doesn't matter anyway.” Zei said sadly, but also warmly.

“It's very pessimistic.” she said bitterly.

“But also true ... However, fate can be deceived. At least for a while, come with me to my apartment. I have something for people like you. Lost and… lovers separated by an interstellar space, and as far as I know, you fall into both of these categories…” Zei said . She was a little wary, but followed her. They found themselves in a small flat at the back of the sanctuary.

It was cramped and cluttered with backpacks, traveling clothes and rations. Apparently, the keeper of the sanctuary did indeed often help lost souls.

“I work as a massage therapist and collect donations from those few travelers who visit my sanctuary before interstellar travel. That's why I buy these things. Listen to me, you need to be alone for a while, get away from She- Ra as much as possible for you.” Zei said . She smiled at her, but spoke in a serious tone.

“I have two friends. I have to inform them ...” she explained, but the blind woman interrupted her.

“Yes, I understand ... These two princesses from Etheria. Don't worry, I'll let them know everything. I have some contacts here and I have a lot of respect…”

She smiled and told them what she had to say, then packed up and went on her way, not even noticing the black butterflies that usually accompany lost and separated lovers.

"Honey, Flower, you must wake up, because they are coming" she heard and with a battle cry she sprang up to fight, ready to repel the Hive's attack. She saw a large group of children and Scorpia staring at her in bewilderment. She laughed nervously and discreetly withdrew the vines she had summoned to immobilize her attackers.

"I'm sorry, I had a bad dream… And I got a little scared." She explained clearly embarrassed. She dozed only for a moment on the bench, and her wife covered her with a blanket. The dream… it was terrible, it seemed to last for weeks, and it was so realistic. But now she was in the "King’s Gardens," though there was no king in North Dedalus' Democratic People's Republic. Sometimes the galaxy could be confusing.

Horde Prime had said to keep the place, but only white flowers from a distant planet could grow here. The garden had to be perfect, otherwise the inhabitants would be punished. At first, these flowers looked cute, but after hearing this story, they started to annoy her. Now, however, new plants have been planted. Many of them were very similar to the plants living on Etheri, she had read about others, so now she could tell children about what grew here and, using her magic, showed them flowers in various stages of blooming. Scorpia also listened to her attentively, although she had heard her talk about it more than once. Her wife was so lovely...

Showing the children around calmed her down. The dark dream passed, now she felt the warmth returning to her soul and she was fine again. Then they began to prepare for the journey to the valley of Kelimene, where she was to help heal the land there. She knew it would be painful, but she knew someone had to do it. Then came word from Adora. A letter was delivered to them, the messenger was a quiet boy dressed in black, who immediately disappeared somewhere. The content of the letter was as follows.

Adora must experience silence

To hear the voice of her soul

She will join you soon

And then the letter turned into a butterfly and flew away towards the gardens...

Shadow of the Past - Things worth living for

She woke up. She heard her groan and immediately ran to the bed where Asindesa di Vir lay. The Hellknight looked much better now, but she knew all too well how deceptive poisons can be. Many, after the initial very severe symptoms, was seemingly subsiding, although the real damage done to the kidneys, liver or nervous system sometimes showed itself after many hours or even whole days, when it was already too late. She developed several of these herself to get rid of enemies in the Fright Zone. Here, she had the latest medical achievements and healing magic at hand , but their doctor ... had a heart attack. For a long time, she refused to call for medical help from a nearby town. For most of your life, asking others for help has been a sign of weakness that others will sooner or later use against you. She was raised to believe that only the paranoid would survive. Eventually, however, she broke through. Asindesa di Vir couldn't die, she would do anything in the world to save her. She wasn't sure if what she did mattered. Medics performed transfusions and injected auto-healing systems, but they couldn't do anything she couldn't. So she had to wait. It was a torment. She could be extremely patient, such as when she waited in her cell for Hordak's sentence . She was patient now, too, but this time it was much more difficult. Previously, she had been waiting, like a spider, to weave her daughter into her web of intrigue and sacrifice her for her own selfish interest. Now she had to wait for the verdict of forces over which even the so-called gods had little influence. She knew the people of the castle were whispering about her, about what had happened there in the swamps of Kranor Rill. Soon the whispers will turn into rumors, and they will spread around the area, and she will have to answer questions about what happened to the other members of the expedition. This could mean serious trouble in the future. After all, she was responsible for the deaths of many prominent members of Carurystal society, though their deaths were not her goal. It's hard, she'll deal with it somehow, she lived thirty years in the Fright Zone, judges from a planet that had never known a real war could do nothing to her. All that mattered was Asindesa's life ... and of course that damned mission... Damned indeed.

She was now looking at the woman who had become so important to her. Asidesa Di Vir opened her eyes and when she saw her, she smiled slightly and asked.

“We won?”

She smiled the same way.

“We've lost horrible.” She wiped the knight's forehead tenderly, but she got up and looked around the room.

“We are in your castle, I mean Lady Cala 's castle ...” she stated in a serious tone. "What happened to Sir Rakima ?"

She hesitated as she thought about her answer. She could have lied, said Vesk had fallen right after the Lady of Blades had lose consciousness. Nobody would ever know the truth. Instead, she said.

“I left him there. I had enough power to take only one of you. I chose you”

The Hellknight looked at her for a long moment before speaking.

“I see.” She didn't add anything else.

She went out and ordered the servants to bring the broth with noodles, and after the meal she helped Asindesa Di Vir to wash herself. Then she went to her office for the first time since leaving on that futile and doomed quest. She wanted to make sure nothing important had happened while she was away. First of all, news from Lady Cala, for she could call upon her at any time to fulfill her… obligations to Creeping Chaos. After all, it's been almost five years since her awakening... But nothing of importance has appeared, not even encrypted with secret symbols known only to the servants of the being with a thousand's of thousand faces. Then she decided to eat something, more for appearances than for real need. Then she went to her private bathroom to finally wash off the stench of the swamp. On the way, however, she came across Leris . The half-elven maid was overjoyed to hear that her mistress had returned safe and sound from the voyage to Kranor Rill, until she cried. A sensitive, nice girl.

"Is everything okay?" Leris asked in a fearful voice.

"Yes, everything will be fine with Asindesa di Vir." she said, and felt a wave of relief finally wash over her. Leris nodded, smiling strangely sadly.

Asindesa di Vir decided to stay in Castle Grayskull after all, though she could have gone to any clinic on Carurystal. Who would refuse the Lady of the Blades of the Order of the Eclipse? The Hellknight had iron health and recovered quickly. They also spent a lot of time together. It started with the breakfasts they ate together. At first, they talked about everyday life in the castle, what it's like to work as the administrator of an ancient castle, and about their neighbors. Eventually the conversation turned to the history of House Grayskull , but she didn't know much about it, and what she knew she couldn't say. So she redirected the conversation to Asindesa's exploits during the War with the Swarm, though the Hellknight was not very florid about her achievements.

"War is mostly about waiting, getting into right place and chaos. Mostly chaos. I was just a bit luckier than my comrades who fell. The Swarm is… it is an enemy that no one can imagine without fighting it. He is not merciless… No more than a hurricane or a meteor shower. Innumerable components coming at you wave after wave. All you can do is killing them to the moment when the Swarm will find it too costly to fight. It's very... methodical work, without glory ... but there's never any glory in war, that's what they teach us in the Order from the very beginning. How was it with you?" asked the Lady of Blades, looking at her carefully.

"How was it with me?" she asked genuinely surprised. Asindesa laughed warmly.

"We in the order are not that much blockheads. I know what I see. I can recognize someone who has dealt with the military more than many so-called officers. You saw the struggle and death with your own eyes." the Hellknight said. She replied with a sad smile.

Oh my dear. I have seen death and murder also beyond the fight. Many innocents died not only on my orders ... Like that unfortunate fool, Netossa's father. Hordak then yelled at me for a good hour before I told him that he had ordered me to get information out of this man at all costs, that was the results he should expect. Well, it didn't change the fact that I had tortured him to death… though I didn't really have to. I had many other options to choose from… she thought bitterly. She spent the rest of the meal wondering what and how much she could say to Asindesa ... It wasn't until they were about to get up from the table that she spoke slowly and carefully.

"For thirty years I served in an army that was trying to conquer the world I came from. I was the right hand of the one who wanted to submit us to a tyrant more insane than the rulers of Azlanti."

The Lady of Blades regarded her carefully but not judgmentally . Finally she smiled mysteriously and nodded.

"I suspected something like that." said the Hellknight. She lowered her head, afraid of what would happen next. Rejection, revulsion… that Asindesa would leave and never see her again. However, the knight of hell got up and put her hand on her shoulder.

“I understand ... no, I can imagine that it must have been very difficult for you. When you're ready, you'll tell me everything.” She smiled reassuringly.

The following days passed in a strange atmosphere, full of anticipation and unbearable, but also soothing silence. They didn't talk, at least not about important things, they just enjoyed each other's company. They ate meals together, drank tea together, showed her guest around the property. Finally, when they were at the top of the castle tower and she felt safe watching the leaden gray sea stretching to the horizon, she began to confide.

"I was once supposed to be a priestess… though that word wasn't used in my country. We lived in isolation, despised foreigners, looked down upon them as savage barbarians. My mother was a clan leader, one of the most important people in our society. She was, or maybe still is, I haven't heard from her for seventy years, a very principled and strict person. She hated opposition, treating everyone as her pawns in clan games that were pathetic and utterly uninteresting to anyone except her and a few other similar women. I was destined to be a priestess, and my sisters were destined to be commanders of the clan army and head of the Assassins. I was more talented than my sisters, and they envied me, but what I had, the position I could achieve, was not enough for me. I was born with the gift of magic, but on our islands I couldn't develop it ...” she said, thinking about the past, to which she practically did not return for decades of service in the Horde, only recently, on Carurystal, she began to think about it more and more. "It's because of these damn rains. They remind me of my Motherland"

"So you ran away," Asindesa stated , guessing correctly about her past. She nodded and began talking about her semi-happy life in Mystacor . That she had great talent and limited power. About the difficulty of accommodation and slow gaining of acceptance. About loneliness and frustration due to lack of purpose in life. About the invader's arrival and how she met Mikah . She spoke of the ritual, the effects of which she did not understand at the time, as if it were an accident, fearing that the Hellknight would connect the facts and understand who she had summoned then. With that, she ended her story. She continued it in the following days. She told about her service in the Horde, gaining position and power, about the spiral of evil she fell into. About the battle and how she punished Mikah for saying a few words of truth. Finally, the moment came when she had to tell about her greatest Sin. It was unusual for Carurystal, cloudless, stars shining, a single white moon full. "I guess it's a good time," she thought and, taking a deep sigh, said.

“I almost ruined my daughters life”. she said, staring at the horizon.

“Is it in your state that you can have children?” asked the Lady of Blades in surprise.

“Probably not, though I honestly don't know. I never thought about it. No, they were orphans, one of the many I looked after, though these two were especially close to me... Unfortunately for them. One I treated well… only if she was polite and obedient. The second… the second I shoved and despised, humiliated and tormented her every time I was in a bad mood, and by the end i was always in a bad mood. Because of the ritual, I was in constant pain, jumping from euphoria to agony. But that wasn't an excuse, I was just taking it out on a helpless child. What annoyed me even more, the girls' friendship began to grow into something deeper. The loss of control infuriated me even more. I soon lost both of them.” And she told about the final stage of the war, though he was aware that now her story was getting murky because she had begun to speak in generalities knowing she couldn't reveal the truth. She had finally arrived at that great moment.

"Finally, the one I despised so much was in great danger, and I did the one really good thing in my life and sacrificed… something very precious to me. And then I left my home and found myself here.” She turned to Asindesa and touched her neck, disabling the holographic masking so that the Hellknight could see her true face. Then she did something incredibly stupid. “My name is Shadow Weaver and I am a war criminal.” she said and looked down, waiting for a fair judgment. Asindesa di Vir touched her cheek tenderly to her surprise.

“We all deserve redemption. Everyone, you too Miss Daisy... Shadow Weaver.” She said and kissed her. She responded to the kiss of the Hellknight and they began to make love. She had never done that since the ritual, and she hadn't even known she was capable of it. It turned out that her body feels sexual arousal much stronger than before. Her body was hungry, so hungry, unsatiated. After an hour they finished and lay next to each other hugging, and the stars were the only witnesses of what happened between them.

“I have to go. Asindesa said tenderly touching her neck. I'm leaving in the morning on this last mission of mine and will be resigning when I return... I'm sick of this pointless war." We will settle in this castle and we will be together until the end. I love you Shadow Weaver. She kissed her and left.

She lay naked under the stars for half an hour until she got dressed and went to her solitude to think things over. It didn't bother her that she didn't encounter any of the servants. It wasn't until she saw the glow of the fire coming out of the fireplace in her solitary place that she realized what had happened.

“Welcome Calamity” she said as she stepped through the black wood door.

"How nice to hear own real name, don't you think, my dear Shadow Weaver?" her charge asked as she got up from the chair. She was dressed in modest, almost crude, travel clothes . She understood everything right away.

"I see you've arrived early, unannounced." she said with irony in her voice.

“And you, in my absence, organized a trip ... met new " friends" ... I'm so proud of you!”

The tone of her ward's voice made her clench her clawed hands, but she told her all too calmly.

“I'm sorry about your dress. This loss must have hurt you deeply.

Calamity smiled coldly.

“In fact, there's not much left of it, unfortunately. Many "brave" Frog people also died. It didn't have to happen. If only you'd give me a moment to explain…” She spoke in her sweet, gentle voice as if she were talking to a nice, though not very bright, friend.

“The situation was quite tense if you remember.” she drawled slowly.

“Ahh, yes, you had to save your fair knight. Too bad you don't like lizards. Sir Rakima regrets this immensely.” Calamity giggled .

“What did you do with him?” she asked cautiously, although she knew what answer she would get.

“I was a bit nervous about the ruined dress, but you know that you shouldn’t suppress negative emotions. But do not worry. His agony lasted only a minute, maybe a little longer. I'm glad the same didn't happen to your friend... I see a wonderful future ahead of her... But what kind of wonder it will be is up to you, my dear Shadow Weaver, because, as you know best, some of the wonders of the galaxy can break soul.” Calamity giggled .

"If you do her any harm, I swear by the darkness of my soul."

The pupil in her ward's eye melted, giving her eye a purple color. She smiled broadly. The fingers of her left hand turned into bony claws, and a bone blade slid out of her right forearm.

"What are you going to do to me, my dear?" Calamity began with an evil smile on her face, but she didn't let her finish, she only threw a stream of black fire towards the "girl", but she jumped aside and, kicking off the wall, jumped towards her tutor and tried to slash the dark sorceress with her living weapon . It created a shadowy tentacle that grabbed Calamity so that she fell and drove the bone weapon into the wooden floor. She summoned with a dark spell an ever-hungry blade woven from darkness, with which she cut Calamity, but Calamity rolled aside and grabbed the leg of the dark sorceress, knocking her to the floor. Despite this, she hacked blindly, hitting her ward, but she drew her to herself. It is unknown how the fight would go on, but then there was a voice that pierced their souls and minds.

“Enough.”

They immediately stopped fighting and rose to their feet. Leris came in, wearing the modest garb of a maid. Calamity sent her look full of pure hatred, but she realized that it was no longer Leris and fell to her knees.

-“Welcome, Creeping Chaos.” she said, feeling genuine horror. Calamity got down on one knee with some reluctance.

"First you fight each other in the face like children and force us to break the will of a mortal, which we don't like to do, and now you kneel before us as if we care." She sighed and continued. "Do you have any idea what's at stake here? Especially you Shadow Weaver... Our dear Shadow Weaver... You have to understand some things.” The Great Outer God explained in the voice of Leris . “You have far more to lose than any of our servants, so you'd better listen to me. Your journey to Kranor Rill was unforeseen, but in the end I'm glad you did it, because it saved my time, and I don’t need to demonstrate some things to you. These swamps and what the Krellans created in the old days may play a key role in the great and glorious enterprise of annihilating the First Ones and eradicating this plague from the surface of the galaxy. That's why we decided to use the technology of their former enemies... Details will be revealed to you in due course, don't worry. Just know that the bloodstones will be rebuilt, albeit in a significantly cripled form. Leris said in a melodious voice .

“Asindessa ... please don't bring her into this..” she begged.

Leris shook her head sadly.

“Unfortunately, she was involved in this a long time ago. But fear not, for there is a chance that you will be together again... if you obey our orders.” they explained softly, and Calamity laughed.

“Ah yes... It's a bit of my doing. You see, your stories have taught me one thing. Those who have nothing to live for are a dangerous adversary, but also an unpredictable ally.” she giggled again, but Leris came over to her and pressed her hand against her cheeks.

“Do not think, our little Calamity , that you are so smart, because after all, you are a creature not much better than our dear sorceress, and you can even be so ... childish in your monstrosity. We know much about mortals and their souls, do not claim such insight. You extracted some information from your teacher, but did not you draw the right conclusions from it.” She released the aristocrat and turned to her. "We directed the void kraken to force Asindesa's ship to land on Carurystal... The rest was up to you, our dear Shadow Weaver, though we hoped for a similar result, for our little Calamity was right . Those who have nothing to live for and nothing to lose are unpredictable and uncontrollable. Lucky for us, you have Adora , Catra and Glimmer, you care about them. But they hate you, they are not your future, you wish they never met you again. But Asindesa di Vir is your future, your hope. And you mortals are at their strongest when you have something to live for and fight for your happiness. We don't even have to threaten you or even set your loved ones on our little Calamity. For you see, your dear Adora, your dearest daughters... They have destroyed not one, but two toys of the First Ones. They won't forget it, they won't forgive them, you can be sure of that. They shattered so many of their centuries-old plans. This cannot go without repercussions. They have another toy so perfect that even they fear it themselves. But they will not hesitate to use it, even though the consequences disgust even us. There will be a hunger that cannot be satiated. Countless hosts. Pure will uncorrupted by the ego. But now we must leave you. This performance was very expensive for us. Unfortunately, I don't think Leris liked our company very much, but luckily you can clear your memory. She'll never be the same again, but it's better than nothing... Did you know she was fall inn love with you? - and then there was a shrill scream and the woman fell to her knees and cowered. She sighed and placed her hands on the unfortunate half-elf's head.

“I am so sorry darling” she whispered.

Wolf of War

Thanks to the bearings given by Dilayla , they found fleet relatively quickly and simply, but they didn't expect it to be a real armada. They saw at least five warships. Such large warships had only been seen in the Horde fleet. One of these ships was even bigger than anything the deranged tyrant had, except Velvet Glove . They stopped at a safe distance and broadcast what Dilayla thought was a galactic signal of friendly intentions. Soon, several smaller ships were sent their way and surrounded them.

“Who are you and for what purpose are you coming?” one pilot asked.

“I'm Jewelstar , and these are my sisters Tallstar and Starla. Here we come… we want to provide information about Horde Prime's Empire , or rather what's left of it.” her brother said.

“And Glory is also with us, our flashyowl.” Starla interjected. There was a silence that lasted for a good quarter of an hour. They were nervous and just scared. They didn't know if the commanders of this flotilla simply wanted to knock them down as a precaution. After all, they could be some crazy Prime loyalists who want to commit suicide attack or spies. Hell, she'd shoot herself in their place... Their ship was fast but poorly armed, for they preferred to rely on maneuverability and stealth. Their cloaking systems were pretty good too, and allowed them to hide from Horde ships if they didn't get too close, and from all the pirates, but she didn't know if those ships didn't have super-advanced scanners . They looked damn modern.

Finally, they heard the announcement. She jumped up and hit her head.

“This is Commander Reese, Right Hand of Lord Admiral Antares . I'm glad to meet the first Denizens of the Ravaged Zone we've encountered... I mean, the Ravaged Zone is where you live... Although, actually, you're probably the inhabitants of this Prime's empire ... Actually it seems he's dead.... So actually, it's hard to say where you actually live. I'm sorry, this is the first time in my life that I'm doing this. I'm talking to people from a newly discovered part of the galaxy. Hello, inhabitants of the most cursed area of the galaxy. It's not implying you're cursed or anything like that. Anyway, on behalf of the Research and Exploration Fleet, I welcome you and invite you to… breakfast? Lunch! With Lord Admiral Antares . You have to dock aboard the battleship Glory of the Fallen... Ugh ... That's the biggest one... Then we'll see you there." And the message ended. They sat together in the cockpit for a few moments, stunned.

"It was… surprising." Jewlstar said slowly .

"To me, the commander sounded quite nice, certainly better than those madmen from Bellum." Starla said with a radiant smile.

"Well, we can certainly be sure that they are not preparing a trap for us. That sounded far too… awkward" Tallstar said thoughtfully.

Docking went quickly. Then some soldiers boarded them and searched them and their ship, though not very thoroughly. In their place, she would have had their stripped naked and interrogated for three hours. They hadn't even checked their necks, though on the other hand, they hadn't been seen much chipped since Prime's demise. Glory caused them the most consternation. They watched Starla's pet for several long moments before they stepped aside and made contact with captain, and then officer-looking one said.

"Unfortunately, it's best if your pet stays on your ship if it's not a problem. He could get hurt on the ship." he said in a polite and matter-of-fact tone that made her blink at hearing such polite words. They agreed and the Starla said goodbye to the Glory and boarded the warship.

The interior of the ship looked much different than they had expected, quite unlike the sterile ships of the Horde. Everything was illuminated with a warm light, the walls were covered with some kind of substance imitating wood. He even had a holographic painting on the wall of some predators howling on a hill.

“It's beautiful, isn't it? The Lord Admiral paid a lot of attention to interior finishing. Glory of the Fallen is our flagship and it needs to look right to represent the Fearless Armada… Now a Research and Exploration Fleet.” said the man, the same one they had heard earlier. in a gala uniform beaming with pride. He was well-built, had short-cropped hair, and looked somewhat like her brother. "I'm Commander Reese. Lord Admiral Antares is waiting for you. I will take you to him.” he said and motioned for them to follow him.

“I'm Jewelstar , and these are my sisters Tallstar and Starla. Lead us to your commander.” her brother said, shaking the officer's hand.

They walked for several minutes, passing numerous crew members going about their business.

“I'm sorry you had to wait so long, but there is confusion around here. It's knocked the entire fleet out of Drift all at once, and they're all having to reconfigure the drift drive and then re-sync it.” the commander explained.

“Drift?” she asked a bit confused.

“Drift, you know... a hidden. magical dimension where ships move. It has been discovered over three hundred years ago, almost all over the Galaxy at once. You don't know about him?” Commander Reese asked in surprise “Damn, he's younger than Jewlstar and he got that position." She thought and said.

“Until recently, until the fall of Horde Prime, magic was something that only exists in fairy tales.” She gave her siblings, especially Starla, a warning look not to blab anything about the Heart. The commander looked at them surprised.

“The galaxy is full of wonders beyond imagination. As a child myself, I did not expect to see what I have already seen and so much more to come.” he said cheerfully

"You joined the fleet looking for adventure?" Jewelstar asked curiously .

“No, my family farm was destroyed, only I survived. Lord Admiral saved me.” The commander became extremely serious and as if sad. They were silent for a moment, until her brother spoke thoughtfully.

“Our home has been devastated by the Horde. Only us and our uncle survived. Do you have someone similar? Those who sent us to you spoke of some Azlanti…. Was it them?” Jewelstar asked.

The commander winced and shook his head.

“The Azlanti are a bunch of imperialist speciesist bastards, but it wasn't them. They are rarely so brutal to humans. No, it was the Swarm. The galaxy's greatest scourge, worse than Azlanti, Corpse Fleet, Dominion of Black, or even the Great Old Ones.” The officer's voice was hard and grim. They looked at each other in disbelief. There can't be that much evil in the universe. He just doesn't know Horde Prime. He does not understand that no one in the galaxy can match the wickedness of this monster. It's good that there isn't and won't be anyone in the entire galaxy that's nearly as bad. Tallstar thought , and she was about to ask about the Swarm, but then they entered a large room where Lord Admiral Antares was already waiting for them ...

Lunch, breakfast, or whatever that meal was supposed to be was a huge surprise for them. First of all, it was much less formal and lavish than expected. In fact, it was more like a pleasant meeting with friends than a solemn dinner with officials. Even on Etheria, etiquette was more closely watched, not to mention those pompous assholes from Eridani. They were served some roast meat, vegetable curry, some legume soup, biscuits, and green fruit mousse for dessert. The last one made them especially happy, the last time they ate something like this at Glimmer's dinner, almost a year ago. The food was simple and made from ready-made semi-finished products, but tasty. The only more exotic thing served was wine. Just the smell of him made her dizzy with the richness of the aroma.

"Please, drink it, it's elven wine from Castroval . It may not be as exquisite as their dream wine, but it is very good." said the Lord Admiral, personally pouring them the drink.

"I don't remember ever drinking wine. Horde Prime forbade alcohol from his subjects, except for a trace amount of wine, which he ordered to produce for himself." her brother replied and drank the glass with a smile.

"It is interesting, most dictators prefer their subjects to be drunk or drugged. Then they are less willing to rebel. No wonder he fell." said Asindesa di Vir, Lady of Blades.

"And the biggest bastards are teetotalers. Never trust people who never drink." said Lady Ka, reaching for the second bottle of wine and drinking it straight from the bottle.

Their hosts, however, surprised them much more than this simple and tasty meal. The Lord Admiral had a cybernetic eye similar to her brother's. He was an intimidating man, the first true space admiral they had ever seen. He exuded strength and confidence worthy of a true leader. However, she sensed a ferocity from it greater than that of the huge, semi-cybernetic wolf-like creature that sat next to his legs. There was also Asindesa di Vir, a woman who introduced herself as the Lady of Blades from the Order of the Eclipse. She was a powerfully built woman, a warrior who did not shy away from fighting on the front lines, as evidenced by the acid scar on her face. She didn't know what this eclipse order was, but the woman came here in full armor that looked extremely menacing. She was somewhat like Adora , though much more intimidating and confident, as tough as the armor she was clad in. It also had its own armed forces. Her relationship with the Lord Admiral also seemed as cool as the blackness between the stars. However, they did not want to get into what was going on between them.

It was Lady Ka, however, who almost tore a startled exclamation from their throats. Dilayla had hinted to beware of her, which she had no doubts. judging by her nasty smile, but a mercenary forgot to mention one important detail. Bina and Lady Ka were identical, like twin sisters or… clones. The latter was a truly disturbing prospect. She and her brother somehow managed to control themselves, but Starla stared at her with her mouth open until she had to kick her in the ankle, but the twinkle in her one eye indicated that she suspected something. Well, you should have warned us.

“So you were freedom fighters?” the Lord Admiral asked after their first hunger had been appeased. Jewelstar smiled sadly.

“Yes, but rather unsuccessful. For almost fifteen years, we haven't had much success. We traveled from one planet attacked by Horde Prime to another, trying to join someone who could resist him, but no one was strong enough. We had to pay a high price for our struggle and stubbornness.” He pointed to himself and Tallstar . “Eventually all hope died in us and we became scavengers capable only of hiding from the enemy, until we met Adora and her friends from Etheria, who showed us that the fight was not lost yet. We returned to Icarus and resumed the fight there, and not long after Horde Prime was destroyed and now fighting its self-proclaimed successors, but we weren't very successful here either.”

After listening to her brother's story, the Lord Admiral nodded understandingly and spoke slowly.” Etheria... Our scientists observed the appearance of a mysterious planet in the center of the Zone, where Lady Cala’s family is supposed to come from, you must have just met her, I presume?”

When he mentioned the name of a beautiful blonde woman, the Lady of the Blades flinched slightly, She raised an eyebrow, but did not comment on it, only replied to Antares .

“That, that's where we met her and the Skittermander’rs ship she rented.” will predetermine that they will stick to this version to fulfill Dilayla's request . “Etheria… as far as we know, this place has been hidden in another dimension for a thousand years. They didn't forget about magic therelike we did. Somehow a part of the Horde got there, and they faced it for decades until they were torn from their hiding place. Etherians are friendly to everyone, but they are also brave and combative. They defeated Horde Prime and restored peace to the universe, at least in partialy. she explained to their hosts, trying to tell them only as much as was necessary

“And they have She- Ra!” And princesses! Starla shouted suddenly, contrary to what she had previously agreed. Her sister drank half a bottle of wine, and she always had a bad head. She wanted to kick her leg and tell her to keep quiet and then redirect the conversation to another topic, but the Lord Admiral asked.

“She-Ra? Who is she?”

Datapad in her hands and began to talk in a joyful voice, showing the photos she had uploaded there.

“This is Adora. She turns into She- Ra , but when we took this picture, it was the first time we met, back in the days of Prime, she couldn't do that. And here is Adora as She-Ra.” As she spoke, Lady Ka, Commander Reese, and Lady of Blades approached her and looked over her shoulder at what she was showing. “This is Glimmer, the Queen of Etheria , and her boyfriend Bow. This is Entrapta. There are Scorpia and Perfuma ... It's the whole alliance of princesses. And this is Adora with her girlfriend Catra . They are about to get married, on the 5th anniversary of Horde Prime's defeat . We will try to fly to their wedding. Oh, maybe the Lord Admiral will come too, there's going to be a great party!” Starla squeaked so much that her brother winced. However, Tallstar noticed something very strange. When Starla displayed the pictures of Catra and Adora, the Lord Admiral paled, and Madame Ka's face became indescribably furious.

“Perhaps I will cme.” The fleet commander said quietly and stood up. Commander Reese watched him with a concerned look, and Asindesa asked Jewelstar .

“You mentioned Horde Prime's heirs, what can you say about them?”

Her brother frowned thoughtfully.

“There are Horde Ultimate and Seven Heavenly Brothers. The first one is smarter. He considers himself a prophet of Horde Prime , but rules much more leniently and simply. He admits non-clones to power, his right-hand man is Saihe ... Drow woman. He is weaker, but more careful. The Seven Heavenly Brothers are true Horde Prime fanatics . They have a larger army and can create monsters, but they lose their strength in senseless attacks, even on Etheria. Most clones, however, wait entrenched in their strongholds and do not cooperate with the heirs or with each other.”

Then her brother briefly described some of the strongholds of these most hardened clones. The Lady of Blades listened to him, then asked in a somewhat timid voice.

"Are Lady Cala and her guardian, Miss Daisy, all right?"

Her brother nodded.

“Is that the elf sorceress? Yes, she's fine.”

Relief appeared on the face of the tough warrior. Then the Lord Admiral spoke.

“You will return to your ship. An officer will be dispatched to you shortly to give you all the information you need, and then an assignment will be worked out for you if you will swear allegiance to me. Now go away, everyone.” His voice was commanding and irresistible. They all followed his instructions, though the Lady of Blades did so with some reluctance. However, as they were leaving, the fleet commander asked one more thing.

"Starstone, does the name mean anything to you?"

Jewelstar shook his head.

“No, what is it.”

The Lord Admiral smiled slightly.

"Nothing, just the most powerful artifact in the galaxy."

They were now aboard the Honor, digesting their food and conversation. Commander Reese then gave them six more bottles of wine and told them to pack plenty of food.

“It's nice of the commander to give us such a gift.” Starla called out, definitely in the tone of someone already heavily drunk.

Jewelstar looked to the side, smiling sheepishly

“You have to admit, he's a very nice person.” he said with some shyness. Starla's eyes widened and she inhaled sharply.

“You like him so much, I see that!”” Youngest Star sibling’s giggled and her brother blushed.

“Starla, I think you've had enough of this wine.” Tallstar said, taking the bottle from her sister.

“You liked this mercenary too, you won't deny it!” Starla elbowed her sister in the side, and she replied with a sad smile

“It's not important, we'll never meet again anyway... Speaking of which, what do you think about our hosts?” she asked in a thoughtful voice.

"This could be a chance, a chance for all of us to finally do something big, but you don't look convinced?" her brother asked. She shook her head, still thoughtful.

"There were a few things I didn't like about it. First, they learned much more from us than we learned from them. And secondly, remember what Lady Ka said about non-drinking tyrants? The Lord Admiral didn't drink a drop.”

The Lord Admiral's ship was Glory of the Fallen. Lady Sorrowflame had her workshop aboard Invincible, the dumb knight had her order’s cruiser, and even that imbecile Commander Reese chose the spacecraft carrier Unbroken for himself . But Lady Ka didn't need a warship for herself. She didn't know anything about space battles, after all. When needed, she used a light, fast and nearly undetectable ship that could take a dozen thugs aboard, and on a daily basis she was aboard a freighter converted into a transport ship and barracks. He was called a Dumpster. Here were her subordinates. Now she was walking through a wide corridor and everyone who looked at her got out of her way, knowing full well what could end up getting in the way of a woman wearing a half mask... Almost everyone.

“Hey boss, why boss is so angry” the tall half-orc asked, smiling friendly at her. She also answered him with a smile as warm as the heart of winter and, grabbing a metal club from her belt, gave him a mighty blow to his leg until the bone came out, the half-orc screamed and she gave him another and another, with each strike there was a crackling sound broken bones. Finally, he was standing over a barely breathing man weighing more than twice her weight.

"Anyone else want to be nice to me and comfort me?" she screamed at the top of her voice. Everyone who was within earshot of her voice began to seek new occupations, as long as they were away from the Lord Admiral's left hand. Except one person.

“Are you better now? “Lady Sorrowflame asked as she stepped out of the shadows.

She thought and said.

“You know, not really. Comewith me to my cabin.”

They went to the cramped room where they had spent some quite pleasant moments together. But now she was too angry for that. She briefly told the ancient necrotechnics about the events of the dinner, and above all, about a certain photo.

“It turns everything upside down. All our plans.” She stabbed the knife into the bunk several times. Lady Sorrowflame smiled full, like a philosopher explaining basic truths to the little ones.

“Well, in life, you always have to be ready for big changes. I've been through more times than you can imagine.”

Lady Ka snorted hearing these words.

“It's easy for you to talk about it. You'll make it anywhere, no matter what happens.”

The flame-haired girl walked over to her and hugged her tenderly around the waist from behind.

“Look at it from the other side. Both cats will be within your reach, and the Lord Admiral only needs one.”

Icarus

It took an hour to fix the drift drive, and another hour to reconfigure the navigation. For a while, they considered jumping to Etheria immediately, made possible by the Starstone, said to be the most powerful artifact in the galaxy, but after consulting Captain Moonshadow, Bina decided to stick with the old plan. They will fly to Icarus and make the final decision on how they should get to Etheria. Bina already knew that after discovering that there was a Starstone on Etheria, she had lost any chance of persuading her kids to turn back from their path. This confirmed all the theories they had heard from the devil and demon cursed leech, let it dry to a crisp. She could see Itel's eyes light up at the thought of her greatest wish coming true... The greatest, except perhaps for her relationship with Eti to deepen, but now it was complicated because of Rosie.

On the other hand, she wasn't sure if she wanted to turn back. This Etheria seemed like a friendly and, most importantly, safe place. Here they may find solace from their eternal struggle with the whole world. Itel will learn to trust others, Lilka will not want to fight with everyone, Alatar will start to establish relationships with others outside their pack. Only Eti can be a problem, if her assumptions turn out to be true ... Although even then, if she really survived, it doesn't have to end badly, with a bit of luck nothing bad will happen, after all, even Eti is not that murderous machine, even though she is conditioned to try to kill “fallen sisters” as soon as she sees them... Okay, she does throw herself at random people's throats sometimes, but in this case even she should remember, it won't be a complete stranger... Maybe? Their fates certainly turned out so differently. But most importantly, they'll be far from that bastard Antares

This, however, is a problem of the future, albeit a very near one. For now, she had to get to Icarus and get information about Etheria. She also had the impression that her passengers were not very eager to reach their destination. It didn't surprise her that Rechiza, Arkan-tar, and Doctor Quin were suddenly very reserved.

They were scholars after all, albeit very unusual. However, Dilayla also seemed to be quite withdrawn and reluctant to talk, especially around Wrongdak. Did she resent him for what happened to the inhabitants of the monastery? She shouldn't hold a grudge against him for that, something similar had been done to her planet by Horde soldiers once, and she didn't mind befriending the white-skinned alien. But who could know what was really going on in the other person's head?

When the mercenary became gloomy, the grim elf became… well, drunk. The fact that she was drinking with Ireanis didn't reflect well on her. Only that the silver-haired elf got drunk happily, and the dark sorceress seemed to become more and more bitter and immersed in unpleasant memories. There was a strange resignation about her now, as if some strange fatalism had seized her. She respected this woman, though she sensed a very dark past in her , and would not want her to go downhill. But it wasn't up to her at all.

What surprised her the most was Lady Cala, both the combat prowess she had shown in the monastery and the determination she had shown on this journey. She never doubted that the stories about Etheria she had learned in the family archives were true, though everyone claimed otherwise. Well, it turned out that the truth was on her side. The young woman clearly deserved Rosie's adoration.

That's right, Rosie. The deaf girl practically became a crew member of her ship. She hardly spoke to the others of he companions, except for Dilayla and Miss Daisy. Bina seriously considered adopting Rosie. She was practically no trouble at all, polite and helpful, and she could fight better than most seasoned warriors she knew, and she knew the Shadows of Tarak, whom even the Vescas thought were mad. But where did an ordinary intern learn all this? The story Dilayla told her was puzzling, and she didn't like being surrounded by riddles, one Eti was enough for her. That's right Eti and Rosie. The growing bond between the girls was evident, and given the feline girl's preferences, her ward would expect something from Rosie, and did Rosie share such preferences? And of course there was Itel. The elven solarian has experienced enough tragedy in her short life, and now she will be heartbroken even more. She should talk to her and comfort her somehow, but how, she didn't know what love was, she slept with men and women, like all Jantar clones, but she had never been in a relationship. But he has to do something

They jumped out of the Drift near Icarus. The planet had two continents, the smaller but better developed Icarus and the twice as large but poor Dedalus . Even from orbit you could see the difference, because it was night and the bigger brother was much less illuminated by city lights. Apparently, the larger continent was much more ravaged by the Horde. In addition, there were many islands here, and the temperature was above the Golarion average . They had learned so much from the Wrongdak and the spire they had hacked .

They waited until morning before deciding to make contact. She went to her communicator and sent a message.

“This is Deadly Sword of Burning Fury, please allow us to land.” She frowned a bit as she said the ship's name.

There was no response for a long time, so she assumed they didn't have a spacecraft arrival warning and management system here. Quite careless, but it's even better for them, because they will stay on the planet unofficially, which she and Captain Moonshadow were very keen on.

They contacted the pirate, trying to choose the most suitable place to land. They chose two old Horde landing sites, located close to each other on Dedalus , relatively close to the largest surviving city, Clytaimestra . There seemed to be a few towns here and some valley scorched by Horde Prime bombs . They all agreed that it was far enough away from major centers of power that no one would notice them, yet close enough to civilization that they could get information and buy some goods, although they still had plenty of supplies, even ice cream left over, though she's been giving double doses for the last few days. She already had some idea of the cover they would assume once they reached Etheria. Only Alatar and Eti will moan.

Shaking as they entered the atmosphere, Alatar apologized embarrassed, though it wasn't his fault. The landing site was surrounded by a young forest, Mister Ilemshaw and Dragonkin taking great care not to burn it with their engines. As soon as they landed, she ordered the side exit open, and they all went outside. It was already afternoon, but still warm. She took a deep breath of fresh air. They were surrounded by the emerald, slightly shimmering green of the local plants. The surroundings looked so pleasant to me that Lilka assumed a fighting stance, Eti began to wag her tail, Alatar gripped the Datapad tightly , and Itel summoned the moonblade and cast hostile glances around. Her lovely children. Rosie, of course, looked around in amazement. She beamed and her joy spread to the others, even Itel relaxed a bit.

"Okay friends, let's do it like this, I, Arkan-tar, Rechiza and Lady Cala will go to the nearest Bar to ask about various things..." she was saying, but Eti interrupted her.

“I have an idea. Sell Stinka, maybe we'll get a bag of crisps. It's a profitable exchange.”

She gave her a reproachful look.

“You better watch out that I don't sell you. It is said that cat skin gloves are very fashionable everywhere in the galaxy. she asked her ward, who put her ears down.

“I don't see any reason to scold Miss Eti. She didn't offend me with her words, she even made me smile.” she said in a conciliatory tone, but the feline girl only blushed.

"Okay, now that we've all been nice to each other and apologized." Saying this, she looked eloquently at the feline ward. "Just don't kill anyone, don't set fire to anything, cause a riot, or do anything like last time?" she asked seriously.

Eti thought for a moment and said.

“Last time we saved Wrongdak and Emily, should we stop helping our fellow humans in need this time? All right, but then don't blame anyone when some beautiful woman gets eaten by a dragon! With mayonnaise. We will not save her!” the feline girl explained in an absolutely serious tone.

“These stories of dragons eating virgins are as offensive as they are ambiguous.” Alatar muttered, resentment in his voice.

“Oh, that's right Mr. Wrongdak.” she asked the colorfully dressed clone, who had been listening to the whole discussion with consternation. "I trust you and Emily and I believe you won't lie to me, will you watch the kids?" She asked smiling ingratiatingly. She preferred not to entrust this important matter to Ireanis and her new drinking buddy, and Mr. Ilemshaw's reach was limited. Wrongdak looked a little scared. She wasn't surprised.

Itel watched as Bina and the others drove off towards the city. She counted to a hundred, then turned to her friends.

"So, are we going to look around?" asked the elf, smiling happily. Wrongdak looked at her in amazement and disbelief.

"But, it's the complete opposite of what Bina asked you to do." said the clone incredulously. Emily chirped agreeing, but the solarian put on the most innocent smile she could and said.

“But we're going to do something completely different. We just want to explore the area to see if there's enough wood for a bonfire and where there's water to put it out.”

The alien immediately smiled happily.

“I like bonfires. When I lived with my Skittermander friends, we would often make bonfires... Several times they ended in fire, once when Alatar's relative had the flu, another time when Wydne threw a power cell into the bonfire. Yes, you will definitely need water to extinguish the fire.” He nodded approvingly, though Emily was eyeing her skeptically with that purple eye of hers.

It was so easy it was shamefull she thought with satisfaction

“Oh, I'll make a bonfire! We'll bake sausages, we'll sing ancient orcish war songs like Row, row, row your boat and "Hey Wyverns. It will be fun.” cried Lila. Itel thought about explaining to the red-haired girl that it was a hoax, but changed her mind. Maybe they will make a bonfire in the evening, or Lilka will forget everything.

“It's Eti and... Rosie are coming with me to search the area, and Mr. Wrongdak, Lilka and Alatar... will take care of everything.” she said, trying to hide her sadness with a smile. Rosie jumped happily, and Eti nodded and asked.

“So when do we go?” asked the feline girl.

“Now!” said the elf and they set off together into the wilderness.

"But you'll agree that the crooked face was almost as bad as the Swarm." Eti said through the communicator. Itel snorted.

“What do you know about Swarm?”

“You know, quite a lot, as in any subject. After all, I am absolutely perfect, amazing and unique ...” Eti paused for a moment and added. “After all, you know what was done to me.” her friend said in a surprisingly serious and emotional voice. She couldn't remember ever hearing it from her. Something had changed in Eti, but Itel had no idea what. She only had the feeling that rainy days were coming, or worse, stormy days. Now it was a double problem because they had a mission ahead of them and they needed to focus and couldn't let anything distract them.

They were in a ghost town, the ruins of some peaceful settlement whose inhabitants had been displaced, or rather murdered by the Horde. Now only the rain played among the ruins, but there was no one to hear it. She wanted to accidentally find a way to the nearest city, but she had the impression that she led her friends to a place they would never want to go again. First these ravaged planets, then the accursed monastery, and now the ruins where only the wind sang to the dead. It was weird here. She still had the feeling that someone was watching them, from among the shadows, some sinister, dark entities following them all the way through the town. She had suspicions whose doing it could be, could the lousy witch couldn't leave Eti alone for a moment. Or maybe it was just her paranoid delusions… Maybe seriously, because of these worries, she was already going insane?

Suddenly Rosie came over to her and hugged her tightly. She stiffened at first, but then relaxed and asked.

“Rosie, why did you do that?” she asked without breaking away from the hug.

Rosie shrugged, pulled away, and replied.

"Because you were sad and you looked like you needed someone to be close and show that they understood you too. This settlement… She made you so depressed, so I figured you needed someone to hug you. If this made you angry…”

She replied with a deep sigh.

“It's not that Rosie ... why are you always so nice to everyone, it would be easier for everyone if you were a mean bitch.”

Rosie turned her head and said.

“Not true. Do you remember the first time we met Eti? I hit her very hard then!”

There was such sincerity in the girl's light blue eyes that Itel realized that the situation was hopeless. She already knew why Eti liked her so much, a deaf girl. Then they heard Eti calling them.

“Hey, I found something absolutely amazing here, come over immediately.”

Without waiting for further explanations, they ran to where, according to the datapad, the feline girl was supposed to be.

Hey, it's just a girl. Normal girl. You've seen the girls before, we're girls. You are a girl.” Itel said with suppressed resignation. She did not add that "you sleep with girls"

They were in a hut on the outskirts of an abandoned settlement. They stood by the window and watched some young, probably human, woman. She had blonde hair and fair skin. She was muscular and athletic. Pretty, though not as beautiful as Lady Cala. She was lying on the grass dreamily staring at the sky dotted with single clouds.

“Think Itel. We have Stinka ... And we all know how terrible she is and we all dream of throwing her off the ship.” the feline girl explained, as if explaining something obvious, but Rosie cut her off.

“But she is nice and good to everyone, only you have some prejudices against her.” The white-haired girl looked genuinely indignant "Sparkle hand, if she's so great, then tell me why she tried to kill you." Eti said in a serious tone.

“She didn't try to kill me! I hurt her very badly” Rosie said

“If you don't believe me, ask Itel, she doesn't like any of you.” Eti pointed to the Solarian , who felt herself blush. “Eti, someday you'll get shot in the head for talking like that, Itel thought angrily.

Rosie looked at her with those big eyes that now looked like two blue lakes.

“I understand that you don't like me ..." the deaf girl apologized with a sense of guilt painted on her innocent face.” She covered her face with her hand and spoke slowly.

"It's not that I don't like you… it's just… it's just that." She tried to explain, but honestly, she didn't know what to say.

“Because it's about you and ... Where is Eti? “ Rosie suddenly asked, looking around in surprise. Itel swore in Elfi, because her friend of course took the opportunity and went away ... But where ... This puzzle solved itself as soon as she looked out the window ... Eti just stood behind the blond woman and asked.

“Hey blonde, there's this thing...”

She felt much better now. After a whole day and night away from others. Out here in the wild, no one wanted anything from her, no one demanded that she be She- Ra, the liberator and hero of the galaxy. Now she was just Adora again , just herself. The map Zei gave her was very accurate, and she learned a lot from Bow about surviving in the wild. Though Catra and Scorpia fared better. She spent the night in the tent, warming herself in the flames of the fire, on which she cooked the broth. Much less meat was eaten on Etheri, except in places like the Crimson Wastes and the Realms of Snow, and she enjoyed a delicate but hearty soup of lentils and bread. She slept so well that she overslept, so she decided to take a shortcut that she didn't like very much, but she didn't want to keep Scorpia and Perfuma waiting for her.

The journey through the abandoned town turned out not to be as depressing as she had expected. She heard that the inhabitants evacuated themselves and settled in the capital or other settlements ... Besides, she must have gotten used to such a sight. She'd seen so many ruins on Etheria and in former Prime's Empire that she seemed numb... She knew she should worry about it, but instead she felt a surge of confidence. It was thanks to her and her friends that thousands of settlements were saved from a similar fate. She had no reason to feel guilty.

She stopped on a green hill and decided to rest for a while in the warm rays of the sun ... The sun was unknown on Etheria and many inhabitants of her planet treated it with a great deal of distrust. But not her and Catra. Sometimes they lay cuddled together, sometimes naked and warmed themselves in its gold rays. She missed her beloved. her girlfriend, soon to be wife. What she wouldn't give for Catra to be here with her… Suddenly she felt a gentle brush of her tail on her cheek. Full of irrational hope, he jumped to his feet and turned sharply. Instead, Catra saw someone else.

City of the Elder Things

Frosta got up as soon as the alarm clock beeped. It was still before dawn, the bright moons hadn't risen yet, and it was to chilly, at least for those born outside her realm. But she was tough and fearless, as mighty and fearsome as the glaciers that covered the mountain tops of her homeland. She was a Terrible Ice Bane. It was a really great name. One day he'll thank the Horde Ultymate for them ... right after, he'll punch him in that filthy face of his, if only for not calling her Princess Terrible Ice Bane!... And for everything else, of course.

She stretched herself, warmed up, and ran to make tea without waking anyone, though Melog began to twitch his ears listening. She could use Entrapta's plasma stove . She saw it last night, the inventor uses it and it was easy to paunch someone's face ... I guess she really wanted a fight, but who wouldn't in her place. She wanted to make tea quickly, before everyone woke up she would be waiting for them, hot and fragrant. So she turned all the knobs and turned on the fire…

As soon as she managed to escape, the flame shot up to the very sky ... and then it went out and the stove was smoking . The kettle has disappeared. Everyone jumped to their feet, preparing to repel the attack. Netosa surrounded the camp with a power grid, Catra stood by Melog with her claws out, ready to fight anyone stupid enough to mess with them. Even Lance and George stood up, armed with George's flashlight and ancient sword… Only Entrapta was unfazed. She walked over to the stove and studied it, or rather its remains, with fascination.

“What happened? How many are there, where are they hiding?” Netossa called, looking menacingly around.

“It's just me.” she said in a broken voice. “I didn't want something like this to happen. I think I broke the stove and the kettle disappear. I'm very sorry.” She sat down with her arms wrapped around her knees and sniffled

Everyone calmed down, Netossa unsummoned net..

Catra walked over to her and, smiling softly, said.

"Nothing happened, the important thing is that you're okay." She sat down beside her and put her arm around her.

Netossa also approached her and knelt down.

“That's the way it is with modern technology. Greypaw once accidentally flew a Skimmer and only stopped when it hit a tree.” The Lady of Armoria added .

Entrapta, ignoring them, cried.

“It's fascinating. It was close to everything within a kilometer would disappear in a huge ball of plasma!” She clapped her hair and hands. Catra and Netossa looked at her with frowns, but the inventor did not notice.

“Well, we will eat a cold breakfast, and in the evening we will make a bonfire. We haven't done it for a long time.” said George, smiling at his memories.

“There will be no need, I have a second one in Alice. Ten minutes is enough, and if we hurry, we can do everything in five minutes.” Entrapta said, summoning her bot and began to pull out loaded equipment from it. There was horror in the eyes of the participants of the expedition.

“You know, Entrapta, why don't we give it a quarter of an hour and assemble it safely and carefully?' Catra asked cautiously.

"We'll save a whole five minutes, and the chance of an explosion will only increase by a dozen percent." The former lady of Drill was already assembling the machine.

“By a dozen or up to a dozen or so percent? Netossa asked, barely hiding the panic in her voice.

“Hmm.” Entrapta muttered and began to calculate something on the datapad

"You know, George, I think we have that portable tea warmer Bow gave us, I think it would be a good idea to take it out now." Lance said, and his husband nodded.

They prepared tea, on a strange disc, although it took quite a long time, because each portion had to be heated separately. She offered everyone a portion of butter with tea, because you have to eat it while it's still fresh, but everyone looked so strange ... as if she wanted to poison them? These inhabitants of warm countries could be really strange sometimes. Only Catra, after a moment's thought, asked for butter for tea and a double portion for sandwiches with crispbread and smoked fish.

“Well, i like butter, cheese and cream, all dairy products. They didn't have anything nearly as delicious in the Fright Zone.” Adora's girlfriend said. They gave the rest of the butter to Melog , who licked it off with relish. In this Kryat, knew what was good. Then they packed up and headed for the old guys' town or whatever. She knew enough about hiking in the mountains to know that the city was not as close as it seemed. She and Catra walked ahead, trying to find enemies to beat. She took a deep breath of the cold air, feeling the stress of the morning's accident melt away. Yes, she felt much better now. She was strong, scary and invincible! She was really happy. But Catra looked preoccupied.

“Catra, is something wrong?” she asked with sincere concern in her voice. The feline girl sighed heavily and said with a reassuring smile.

“No, absolutely nothing happened. I just miss Adora and get nervous before the wedding. Nothing more.” the Great Marshal assured her, but something in her voice made her not seem completely sincere, and Melog's eloquent look towards his friend and companion only confirmed her in this belief.

“You know, Catra, we're friends... - you can be honest with me and all.” she said smiling friendly, but the feline woman sighed heavily and asked.

“When we were in the ice palace, we saw that your chancellor was talking to a woman named Storm Heart, who comes from the Isles of Sorrow.” Catra sounded like she wanted to say something she didn't say, but she didn't understand what she meant.

“Yes, She visits us once every two months. She is a warrior and her mother is the leader of their kingdom… or whatever their country is. ” She said shrugging. Catra looked at her in amazement.

“Is their mother alive?” the Grand Marshal asked incredulously.

“Well ... yes, is there anything strange about it? She is Saihe, they live very long, sometimes over five hundred years.” She asked, growing more confused. Catra pursed her lips, turned to the blue sky, and spoke in a very low and grim voice.

“Storm Heart and her sister Midnight Mask are Shadow Weaver sisters. I've met both recently , and especially the second one, they seem to be little better than my ex-teacher.”

It took her a moment to fully understand what her friend was talking about, She had never spoken to that nasty sorcerer in her life, and she had only seen her a handful of times. From what she heard, she was very mean to Catra and Adora. Too bad no one had punched her in that nasty scarface when they could have. But when it all dawned on her, she asked with undisguised astonishment.

"Does that mean you have aunts…and grandmother?" she asked cheerfully, but Catra laughed very bitterly.

“Definitely not. I'd have to have a mother first, and Shadow Weaver didn't deserve to be called that. I don't have a family... by blood and I'm fine with that, Adora too.” There was a strange severity in the feline woman's voice.

"Yeah, but why are you asking me about this Storm Heart? She was nice to me and even gave me a spider that looks like it's made of jewels. He is beautiful!”

Catra sighed and said with concern in her voice.

“Listen... I don't like your chancellor talking behind your back to someone like this woman. Bad things can come of this.”

She looked at her friend in bewilderment.

“So what! I'm the princess of the elements, what can she do to me?” she exclaimed, trying to sound as confident as possible.

"Scorpia’s aunt once said that too." There was a warning note in Catry's voice. She responded with a snort.

“I'm only afraid of saber-toothed penguins.”

Catra laughed.

“Saber-toothed penguins? Does such a thing exist at all?” she asked with amusement in her voice.

"Yeah, they just haven't been heard of in a thousand years!" she explained.

“In a thousand years? We're not in danger of meeting them, are we?” Catra cheered up for some unknown reason.

“You know, She-Ra hasn't been heard of in a thousand years either, and then one of them showed up at my ball. she said with a grin, but the feline woman replied with absolute seriousness.

“Good point.”

They watched in silence as a pillar of blue flame shot up into the sky, then faded, plunging the tundra back into darkness, until Lonnie spoke.

“What the hell is this?” Their girlfriend was clearly hunched over.

“Looks like we have company.” Scarlet said with interest, coming to the right of the general's companion.

“Oh, realy!” Lonnie replied, still annoyed, though until recently such a remark would have infuriated her. During this trip, a lot changed in the relationship between them.

"And was there supposed to be no one here but us?" he asked with concern in his voice. Lonnie gave him a sideways look.

" Kyle , you're starting again…" she began irritably.

“I'm not starting anything ...” he interrupted her “There wasn't supposed to be anyone here. And such things are not blown up by ordinary wanderers.” he said in a resigned tone, and Rogelio nodded at him.

The general's companion stared at him, blinking several times.

“Does it change anything? When we were going, we knew we might run into someone we would have to fight. Hell, when we launched the rebellion, we knew we'd have to force our way to victory.” She took a deep breath and added. “We are highly trained and have a new weapon that no one here knows about. We can beat anyone we meet.” Lonnie spoke firmly, pressing her lips together tightly.

“Almost everyone.” corrected their girlfriend.

Comrade General snorted.

“She is not on Etheria, as far as I know.”

“Supposedly.” he added, and Lonnie gritted her teeth.

“We can't act like She-Ra, Catra and the goddamn princesses are waiting around every corner. And even with bloody Frosta waiting for me in the fridge, it doesn't change the fact that our rebellion's goal is to take away their power, and we won't do it without a fight. –

He thought for a moment and said.

“You know, when you think about it, the prospect of Frosty waiting for me in the fridge is pretty scary. This is probably the scariest of the princesses.

Their girlfriend blinked a few times dumbfounded.

“What are you talking about, Kyle “she said in a hushed voice, then turned red and started screaming.

“You're doing it again. You want to talk me into letting you sit in Dryll and sit upside down again.”

He was about to say that wouldn't be such a bad idea, but Scarlet put her hand on Lonnie's shoulder and said, smiling at him and Rogelio condescendingly.

“Enough of such pointless discussions, Comrade General.” The sorcerer's voice had a barely perceptible tenderness in it, as if it contained a hidden promise. "We'll only know who or what we're dealing with when we see it for ourselves."

Lonnie took a deep breath, calming down a bit, and asked Scarlet.

“Do you know any magical ways to find out what's there?”

The sorcerer shook her head…

"Unfortunately, I'm not proficient in this kind of magic. Maybe if I had a little more time I could do something about it.”

Comrade General snorted contemptuously.

"If you were Shadow Weaver, you'd think of something." she said reproachfully, quite irrational in his opinion.

Scarlet smiled mysteriously and said

"But you only have me, and you only have to deal with me."

"I'm glad she's gone. To this day, I have nightmares about her walking the halls of Castle Crypto .” he said, swallowing loudly.

Scarlet looked at him askance, mysteriously and ominously.

“Indeed, she is gone, for now.” she said, and something in her voice sent shivers down his spine, and when Dr. Moors metallic voice rang out , he jumped in fright.

-“We can always send your little winged friend Imp . He has served Hordak well as a spy, and he will help you too.” said the brain in the cylinder.

He frowned. Over the last years, they have practically forgotten what position he occupied in Fright Zone Imp. Everyone liked him very much, but in the old days he was often feared, and the older members of the People's Rebellion still became wary of him. He was their scout, though he was less and less in that role these days.

“Yes, that sounds reasonable.” Scarlet said with a strange, dark joy in her voice

She helped Lance, who was supported from below by her husband, to the rock, and together they lifted George up. Entrapta, who had climbed the mountain on her own hair, and Frosta, who had made herself an ice staircase, were waiting at the top. Netossa said she didn't want to strain her back and waited downstairs ready to intercept anyone who fell. Melog, in turn, guarded Netossa . He didn't like the place and was very nervous. Small obelisks with flattened surfaces stood at the entrance to the city. Thanks to this, they could see them in all their glory.

“It's old. It must be thousands of years old, you see, there is a road under the ice canopy, but on our side it's covered with a thick layer of earth. Given the meager vegetation here, it took thousands of years to” create such a thick layer of soil, so this city must have been here before the First Ones arrived!” Lance exclaimed in an excited voice.

"We can forget about myth of Etheria's original colonizers." She murmured with satisfaction. Of things related to the First Ones, only Adora didn't disgust her. Even She-Ra turned out to be something much older than that damned bunch of imperialists.

" Entrapta , could you redirect that satellite of yours here?" she asked the student. She nodded her head and said.

“That's what I'm doing, but first I have to listen to Susan . You know, she's a very meddlesome gossip girl.” Entrapta said, shaking her head in disbelief.

“This city was bigger than any on Etheria, except maybe the Fright Zone. Catra, you probably visited them the most of all of us, what is your opinion”? George asked.

“Some make the Fright Zone look like a sleepy town. Especially on Icarus.” she almost added that she had recently visited even greater ones in her sleep. She shivered. “But I don't know much about the ruins, even if the Fright Zone looked like it was about to fall apart at times. Ancient cities, this is your job.” She managed a warm smile.

Netossa created a energy net and they jumped into it. Then they headed for the city. She had to admit that a good night's sleep, even if interrupted so abruptly, had significantly improved her mood. Life seemed much better to her now. She felt a familiar tingle of excitement before a new adventure. Full of impatience, curiosity about what the coming hours will bring. She wished Adora, Bow , and Glimmer were here , but maybe they'd be back soon. They won't explore them all at once, and the ruins won't escape... she guess...

Frosta was also radiant with enthusiasm, despite their recent conversation. She was worried about the youngest of the princesses. She didn't seem to care what her chancellor was doing behind her back, and if the Shadow Weaver family was half as mean and calculating as a dark sorceress, that could cause problems. She approached Netossly anxiously she said in a hushed voice.

“Hey Netossa, we need to talk about Frosta” and quickly summarized her concerns about visits from officials from the Isles of Sorrow. The Lady of Armoria frowned deeply.

“You're right, it's disturbing.” The white-haired woman sighed. “It used to be the Star sisters who were supposed to look after her and protect her, but you saw how Halo became, and Neutrino was always the dark and mean one. She was feared by everyone when she was young, but she never joined the rebellion.”

She shuddered and spoke in a grim voice.

"If Neutrino is worse than Halo, I'd tear her throat out. We need to talk to Glimmer after we're married and look into the whole thing. Maybe we'll even go to the Isles of Sorrow. I would love to meet Shadow Weaver's mother, I wonder if she will call me her daughter's ward. Or maybe she'll consider me a granddaughter.”

They listened to the voices coming from Imp's mouth . One he hardly recognized, this one probably belonged to Netossa . And the other he knew from early childhood.

"You know, I've almost forgotten what Catra's voice sounds like when she's not yelling at anyone or threatening anyone. It even sounds nice, don't you think, Lonnie?" he asked the general's companion. Lonnie snorted.

"She could always be polite and accommodating when she wanted to. We can not believe her." she said with contempt in her voice.

"Your... Our relationship with the great Marshal is not as important as what we intend to do with her presence here. We all know he's a tough opponent." Scarlet said in a gentle and careful voice, just the kind not to make Lonnie angry… about Scarlet, she was beginning to complicate their relationship. Though Lonnie tried to hide it, though he didn't understand why, he and Rogelio could easily see that the bond between the sorcerer and the general's companion had grown stronger. It didn't bother them, they were never jealous, and if either of them wanted to establish some kind of additional relationship, they accepted it, although they thought it would be nice if they were informed, but they both understood that it was not easy for Lonnie ... he just felt that Scarlet was different. He knew her from the old days, better than most. He remembered that she was a very laid-back girl who chattered about nonsense all the time. Their new Scarlet was calculating, cunning, and absolutely focused. Plus, she was a sorcerer, though she hadn't shown any talent in that direction before. Actually, come to think of it, it had something of a Shadow Weaver about it, which was a scary thought.

"She's alone, without She-Ra and Glimmer, and we've known her weaknesses since we were children." said Comrade General in a firm voice.

"But did you know it works both ways? Besides, as far as I remember, she was usually the one who beat you in training. And that's when she was alone, and from what I understand it's Netossa and Frosta here, and did I say that I'm afraid of Frosta?"

" Kyle is right, fighting Catra was never our goal. Maybe it would be wiser if we passed each other. And then we'll search the city ourselves, perhaps even following in their footsteps.” Scarlet said, supporting him to his surprise. Lonnie thought for a few moments, then spoke through clenched teeth.

“They won't hide and run again. All my life I had kept my head low, submissive and humble, while pet Shadow Weaver was ready to set the whole world on fire for her ambition and wounded pride. No, I won't humble myself again. Now it's time for me to roll the dice, and I will, even if only dragon eyes fall out.” she mentioned the result of two ones on the dice, symbolizing both bad luck and good fortune, depending on the context.

From the inside, the city was much larger than it appeared from a distance, and also much more alien. The buildings were made of a strange substance that looked like crystallized clay up close. But she was tough, and even her claws couldn't scratch their surface.

Maybe you forgot to sharpen them? Frost asked, but then she hit the stone and left scratches on it.

“Sometimes I forget how sharp they are. It's surprising that Greypaw 's are not as sharp!” Netossa exclaimed

She smiled grimly.

"Mine are… special," she said, wondering whether or not to tell them about her “discovery.

“Catra's claws contain titanium, tungsten. I tested them in the Fright Zone when… Entrapta began , but unexpectedly bit her tongue and changed the subject pointing to the mounds. "It's unknown, but the scan shows it contains organic elements, as if someone had forced the snail to produce slime as hard as diamond when it solidifies. Oh, biotechnology is really amazing!” shouted the inventor so effectively changing the subject that she probably forgot what she was talking about.

The city was surprisingly modest looking. Or maybe more gray? Lance and Entrapta theorized that the creatures inhabiting this place simply perceived the world differently and perhaps for them this city was beautiful and fabled. They didn't see much technical equipment here, here and there they saw places where there might have been some equipment but it had been dismantled or… completely decayed, Entrapta said. The road was hard, made of a similar substance as the buildings, but there were no sidewalks anywhere, as if foot traffic didn't exist.

They discovered the truth when they came to a great cavern exposed by the sliding people. It was dark here, so although they had flashlights and chemical lighting, she was their guide. There was a strange smell everywhere, leaving a bitter-sweet taste in her mouth. Melog didn't like it here. He put his ears down. Everywhere they cut small indentations that arranged them in groups. Lance George finally came to the conclusion that there must be some subtitles.

We don't know him. We expected them to use Aklo here” Lance said.

“Aklo?” She asked because she had a feeling she had heard the name somewhere before.

"It's a language spoken by many of the older races." said George, and after a moment added, " Lightspinner has created the best translation of this language."

“That explained a lot.”

Finally, they reached a place that explained the mystery of this place a bit. It was a great chamber, capable of holding thousands of beings. And it was covered with countless paintings. They were white in many different shades. Here, for the first time, they saw the inhabitants of the city, or at least their images. They were tall and elongated conical creatures with Heads topped with tentacles. They had great webbed wings and five legs. She had never seen anything so strange.

“They're ugly.” Netossa said, grimacing in disgust.

“We shouldn't judge others by their appearance.” Frosta said, and everyone agreed with her. Subsequent drawings depicted meetings of the city's inhabitants with equally strange creatures that looked like winged beetles. They also saw a drawing of a giant with an octopus head. Unimaginable evil emanated from him.

"Isn't it Great Cthulhu from the Book of Dead Names?" George asked.

“Didn't we use this book as a support for the leg of the table, you know, the marble one? Lance said, rubbing his beard.

“Yes, we didn't want the boys to be scared by these terrible illustrations. This table is really heavy. " There was concern in Georg's voice.

Yeah, I guess we'll have to invite the sons to help us lift it. Lance added with absolute seriousness.

“All of them. It's a really heavy table after all.” George stated, and Lance added.

“And we'll take care of our grandchildren.” Both men bared their teeth in a sly smile. He and Melog exchanged significant glances.

“Slap me on the head if I start acting like a grandma.” she said to her companion. Then they looked at the drawings again. They saw that the inhabitants of the city had made servants for themselves. They were formless creatures with many eyes and tentacles. They built the city and many other structures. They were controlled by the city's rulers with strange staffs that emitted multicolored light.

“You were right, they are nasty bastards. They have enslaved the multi-eyed monsters!” Frost exclaimed indignantly.

Then they heard the flapping of wings that sounded oddly familiar to her.

"Hey Catra," Lonnie's voice said.

Unexpected Encounters.

“Hey blonde, there's a thing ...” said strange person. She was dressed all over with a brown cloak, a mask over her face, and her eyes were shaved. Her right hand was made of metal, and more importantly, it was covered in symbols she knew all too well.

"But who are you?” she asked, trying to take stock of the situation.

“You grew up in a police state, that you ask everyone about the most personal and private matters?” said the other person, waving a metal hand in front of her nose.

"Actually, yes... Could you tell me who you are, because... it's starting to get weird." she said with a mix of confusion and amusement. She liked that person.

“I'm Eti, who else would I be?” Eti stated as if explaining something absolutely obvious Then two other figures came out of the building half hidden among the trees. One was a white-haired human girl with almond-shaped, blue eyes who smiled kindly at her. The second was a green-haired Saihe girl with a body covered in tattoos. To her surprise, Saihe summoned a spectral blue blade and glared at her menacingly. They were both the same age she was when she found the sword...

“Hi, I'm Rosie and this is Itel. Our friend Eti you have already… met.” She began to speak, waving her hands, and the voice from the gloves explained what she was showing. Entrapta would like that. Device.

“Yes, since you already know our identity, and I must point out that we don't know anything about you, let's get down to business. You see, there's one blonde on our ship. Stupid, mean, and on top of that, it stinks horribly. We absolutely all have enough of her, but our captain insisted on dragging her along, though by the devils and demons, I don't know why, but you're blond too, so we'll just swap one blond for another, quietly, and no one will notice the difference. When the truth comes out, we will be far in space and our captain, Bina, when she meets you, she will understand that she made a great exchange and thank us for that" said the girl called Eti, gesticulating fiercely with her hand and tail, although her voice was surprisingly calm. The other girls looked at Eti in embarrassment. She smiled because the whole story was funny and cheered her up.

"Unfortunately, I can't go with you. My friends are waiting for me in a nearby town, and then I have to go back to my planet for my own and my friend's wedding … My name is Adora, by the way." she said friendly, carefully checking to see if they recognized her name. Saihe , however, only murmured "mommy's girl", Eti exclaimed, raising her finger in a gesture of triumph.

"And ours is called Stinka. You see? Even her name stinks. it's a sign from fate and all the cool gods that we need to make this swap!"

Rosie looked at her indignantly and said.

"Her name is not Stinka, but Lady Cala Grayskull of Carurystal."

"Grayskull?" she asked incredulously. After all, Mara and her squad had lived and died a thousand years ago, if not more. Could it be that someone has escaped the Superiors and Horde Prime's watchful eyes ?

"Yes, Grayskull She is an aristocrat from a very old and respected family." Rosie said.

"Could you tell me about her?" she asked, trying to hide her curiosity. The deaf girl beamed, but Eti snorted contemptuously and Saihe looked at her suspiciously.

"Lady Cala has blonde hair and blue eyes like you, but she's taller and slender than you, but incredibly strong. She is also very Intelligent, beautiful and fights great. And her hair is absolutely gorgeous.”

“Hair you say?” She instinctively touched her own.

The white haired girl nodded.

“Yes, they look like ribbons of gold glistening in the sun.” Rosie's eyes shone as she talked about that woman. She saw a similar glow when people talked about her, and she hated it. It reminded her too much of the look of the clones when Horde Prime was mentioned. ord

“You know what? I would love to meet Lady Cala . Will you take me to her?” she asked with undisguised enthusiasm. She really wanted to see this Lady Cala , and then there was this strange prosthetic of masked girl

"I don't know why you want to meet her, because you'll get terrible disease from her! But okay, she should be just like our captain in the nearest town. You can take us there if you know where it is. And so we had to go there.”

“We had?” Rosie asked suspiciously.

“Of course!” exclaimed the other girls at the same time.

She smiled happily and said.

“My friends Scorpia and Perfume are there too, so you'll meet them too!"

-“Let's go.“ Eti shouted and ran dodging through the trees.

She glanced behind her as she felt the shadow move behind her, but she didn't deviate, so she followed the other girls.

She moved away from the flat, circular obsidian tabletop she used to watch others through her shadows and tried to steady her breathing. She decided to stay on the ship because she wasn't feeling well, but then Eti and Rosie left the ship. After everything that had happened lately, she was afraid to let them go, so she decided to follow them with her shadows, as she often did in the Fright Zone… Itel seemed to suspect something, but said nothing to the others. And then they met Adora . She couldn't quite believe in such a twist of Fate. Of all the countless beings, they must have encountered her! Whether the hand of Creeping Chaos was involved, she didn't know. Lately she had begun to see their tentacles everywhere... Certainly their machinations ran much deeper than Calamity had told her , though she was beginning to suspect that her beautiful and evil ward's knowledge did not go as far as she liked to believe. What was certain was that Nyarlathotep themselves had concealed much from her. They couldn't help but know that there was a Starstone on Etheria.

Starstone. The most powerful artifact in the galaxy. The heart of Absalom Station. An item that allows you to use the Drift Drive. Relic of the Lost Golarion that had the power to turn mortals into gods. A Is that what you are She-Ra? A goddess clothed in mortal flesh? What have you done to Adora…and Catra! Do you know, Adora, what path you have entered. Do you, Catra, know what fate may await your beloved? she thought many times in the last hours. The existence of a second Starstone on Etheria, her planet, explained a lot, including why the First Ones decided to build a Heart in this place. But it wasn't the presence of the ancient artifact that terrified her so much, but who it might attract.

In her life, she met many monsters, even served a few. She couldn't hide the fact that she herself was one of them. But Lord Admiral Antares was a monstrosity of a different kind. When she saw him, all she saw was a tough military man, someone like the hapless Sir Rakima , and at worst like her sister Storm Heart. And he was a son of a bitch capable of bombing his own planet with nuclear warheads. He was as evil as Horde Prime, but was devoid of his madness and megalomaniac. He was ruthless and calculating, but he was able to hide his meanness behind a mask of nobility . He was a wolf in sheep's clothing, although perhaps a better description would be a wolf in dog's clothing, given the image he was trying to create. Even Calamity , in all her perverse sadism, deigned to regard Lord Antares as a threat. Of course, it also resulted from pragmatism, after all, this ruthless and cruel man could stand in the way of the Creeping Chaos' plans. She was grateful for that, though she would have gladly let Eti throw her out the airlock if she could.

She sipped from a glass of the vile moonshine Ireanis made. She's been drinking a lot lately. More than Carurystal. She told herself it was because she thought better then, that she had the best ideas when she was drunk. She knew she was just a mean drunk, not much less pathetic than Ireanis. She looked at the silver-haired elf, who was sitting on a stool, snoring. Even she hid something more, which she discovered during the fight in the monastery. He just has to find a way to get it out of her. She's always been good at it. But now she was back at the table to go back to following Adora, one of the daughters she had lost.

He laughed, stroking Toshi's head, who began to squeal happily. It was supposed to be safe on this planet, so Mr. Ilemshaw decided it was okay to let the pet off the ship. The electric fox began to romp happily around the area. Emily followed him in fascination, and he entertained by throwing nuts to Toshi , which he caught in the air. It was pleasant to him, and for this reason he agreed that they should go away from the ship. Only, they must have gone further than he expected, because judging by the signs on the asphalt road they were walking on, they were quite close to the town where Bina and Lady Cala had gone. All the time Lilka tried to hitchhike, although her methods were probably not the best.

" In the name of the Horde halt!" The red-haired girl screamed, brandishing a flaming axe. The half-rusted car accelerated rapidly.

"I'm not sure it's a good idea to mention the Horde on this planet." he said carefully and seeing the girl's eyes he added.

“Even the good orcish one.”

Alatar sighed and said.

“Seeing a screaming person brandishing an ax makes them not listen anyway.”

He nodded his head and added.

“I won't catch him either. The people of Icarus have lost a great deal because of my brethren, and they may be reluctant to take people like me into a vehicle… And you, Alatar…”

The technomancer sighed.

“Even on the Pact Worlds, my species is quite rare. Probably no one here has heard of us, or worse, they will take me for a real dragon.”

He had heard of dragons on Etheria . The previous She-Ra was said to have ridden a real dragon, but generally they were mistaken for creatures from fairy tales and myths. Then it turned out that they are really alive, they even run their own corporations. He would love to meet one to tell Adora about it, though Swiftwind would probably be sad.

“Maybe Emily and Toshi will catch a hitch!” Lila exclaimed loudly. Bot and Lis looked at her in surprise.

“No... We won't fit in most vehicles anyway.” Dragonkin said, looking meaningfully at himself.

“Don't worry, Emily is not ashamed of her size.” he tried to console Alatar. Emily nodded.

They walked among green meadows and groves full of young trees. It was so green here. It was good to be among the living vegetation after being on a spaceship for so long. He did not count the monastery, because it was a depressing place.

“Shouldn't everything here be burned to the ground?” Alatar asked in surprise.

“You must have looked wrong. On map” said Lilka, equally delighted with the view that spread around them. They came to a small town, or maybe a village, he didn't know. It looked half abandoned, built around the intersection. In the distance he could see faint mountains with flattened peaks. There was a gathering place in the center of the settlement.

“Festival! There will be cotton candy. We orcs love cotton candy!” Lila exclaimed happily. They quickened their pace and reached the center of the settlement. He could see several guards around him discreetly watching them solemnly. A crowd of Icarus residents, mostly children, gathered around a large fountain located at the intersection . He also saw two women who made his heart skip a beat.

“Scorpia! Perfuma! It's me, Wrong Hordak.” he exclaimed happily and looked at Alatar to explain to him who his friends were, but Dragonkin folded his wings in fear.

“Hold Lika!” he called…. The red-haired girl gripped the ax tightly and roared.

"In the name of the Horde, I command you to leave these children and this pretty lady alone the spawn of the Swarm!"

“And up to the sky.” she called to the children hanging on her pincers, lifting them high in the air. The children laughed loudly, and their joy rang in her ears. She liked children, perhaps because she didn't have a childhood herself, though she'd thought otherwise for most of her life. She hardly remembered her mothers, they died when she was very small, and even then they didn't have much time for her because they were fighting her grandfather's war. Then ... it's hard to say who took care of her. At first it was Shadow Weaver, until she found out she couldn't bond with black garnet, then she lost all interest in her. She didn't understand then how lucky she was, she just cried all day. After that, Cobalt, Grizol , and others like Doctor Moors , or even Hordak looked after her, but until Catra and Entrapta met, she had no one close to her. And now she was married. She was starting to think about the children. She just needed to talk to Perfume about it , but when she looked at her wife, who was looking at her with a tired but also dreamy smile, she knew what the answer would be.

Suddenly she heard a call and, having first placed the children carefully on the ground, she turned around smiling.

"Wrong Hordak!" She exclaimed happily seeing a friend she hadn't seen in years. He was dressed differently now, very… colorful… beautiful! And there was Emily, just as colorful. He also found new friends. A large, silver-scaled lizard with wings, completely unlike Rogelio and the other lizards of Etheria, and a short but beefy girl with red hair braided in pigtails and a body covered in strange tattoos. She was clutching a really huge axe. She looked like she was angry or scared, it was hard to tell.

"In the name of the Horde, I command you to leave these children and this pretty lady alone the spawn of the Swarm!" The girl screamed and started running with a roar towards them. Lizard called to hold Lilka. He grabbed her right arm, tried to stop her, but she only slowed down. Wrongdak jumped to her legs after a while and tried to stop her, but the girl continued to walk relentlessly, dragging both of them with her. She was really strong. Perfume got up and stood beside her.

"Girl, Lllko, the Horde no longer exists." said Princess of Plumeria and covered the children and other civilians with a wall of plants. Wrong Hordak began to shake his head hearing her words, and the girl screamed again.

"It' not true! We orcs fight for honor and good while at least one of us lives! – and she sped up. She had no idea if there were werks , but she probably had to stop the girl from hurting herself and others. She wanted to use thunderbolts, but she guess that would be a bit too brutal. She could also sting her, but she'd save that for last if she had no other choice. So she just grabbed the handle of the axe. She immobilized the weapon, and the redhead made a surprised face, but pursed her lips and, not letting go of the weapon, tried to kick it heavy with her boots.

“Hey girl! We won't do anything to you.” She hit her ankle hard and then let go. The strange lizard released her too and pulled out some device and did what appeared to be casting a spell and then the shaft of the weapon was coated with a slippery substance and the ax slipped from the redhead's hand. The other one just growled and wanted to jump on her with her fists, but then Perfuma summoned plants that entangled Lilka. The girl tried to break free from the green bonds, and when she failed, she screamed.

“If you try to lay eggs in me, I will bite.”

They both blinked and looked at each other in amazement.

"But why would we lay eggs in you?" Perfume asked in surprise .

“You vile minions of the Swarm always do that.” Lilka screamed. Out of the corner of her eye, she saw her wife flinch at the word Hive. Wrong Hordak stood up and placed a hand on her shoulder.

“These are my friends, Princess Scorpia and Princess Perfume.” he explained to the girl, and the strange lizard added.

"But Lady...Princess Scorpia only has a few insect things. Remeber Shirens or Troxes , and you're not afraid of Shirens, are you?" He spoke to her in a soft and calm voice.

The girl pulled and said

“Shiren are stupid. Eti says so.” Lilka said in a sad voice. By now she had calmed down and the Perfuma had untangled from the plants. Then the guards began to come down, looking threateningly at the newcomers, especially at the Wrong Hordak .

"Nothing happened, it was just a small quarrel, a simple misunderstanding..." She tried to reassure the soldiers, because in fact nothing had happened. The soldiers hesitantly put down their weapons, but continued to eye the three newcomers suspiciously. The more she calmed down, the smaller and more vulnerable she seemed.

“I am really sorry. I didn't want to do anything to anyone. We orcs don't usually do things like that.” She burst into tears as she said this. She knelt beside her and hugged her, and then the girl burst into tears. Perfuma sat next to her and gently stroked the girl's head. However, she had the impression that her wife was worried about something.

“These are my friends. They saved me and Emily from a terrible fate…" Wrong Hordak said and Emily nodded.

“Are you from Kesler?” Perfuma asked suddenly. The lizard looked at her surprised. Then he added heartbreaking sadness.

“Not any more. Kesler is no more.”

“I don't like this blonde.” said Itel, staring at the back of Adora , who was marching briskly in front of them .

"You never like anyone, especially pretty girls who are nice to me." Eti replied. The Solarian gave her an indignant look, but spoke in a conspiratorial tone

“She's a random chick who was hanging around in the wild looking for who knows who or what, then she said something about her friends, and now she suddenly wanted to meet Lady Cala”

“Okay, that last one is weird, but that's because Rossie faked Stinka image.” when she said that, the deaf girl huffed. She did it in a really cute way. "But as soon as she meets her, she and her gang will rub her up."

“Gang?” both asked incredulously.

“Can't you see she's a gang member? Adora, Scorpia, Perfuma , no one is called that. They're gangster nicknames. He's probably going on a job with them. Not only is she pretty and athletic, but she also has an honest profession. I like her. Only that hair fetish Is weird.” she said with more commitment than usual. Lately she's been feeling more... just feeling...

“That makes sense.” Itel said frowning, but Rosie just rolled her eyes.

“You're terrible. We met a very nice woman, and you suspect her of gods know what.” she said in agitation.

“You like even Lady Cala , you'll see for yourself.” Eti said and ran to Adora.

“Hey blonde, tell me about your buddies.” she asked the blonde-haired woman, who smiled softly.

“Scorpia is a huge and powerful warrior, we grew up in the same place, although we met very late ... our first meeting was not the best. But she has a good heart and loves to cuddle, she's great at it. Her wife Perfuma quite strange, Very spiritual and tender. But don't be fooled by appearances. She becomes a real awesome in combat. And he loves plants, all of them, even cacti.” Adora told them.

“Yeah.” said Eti and doing a dance pirouette and said to her friends and began to explain in a hushed voice. “Have you heard? This Scorpia is thug. They grew up in the same neighborhood, but they were in rival gangs until she changed sides. This Perfuma is a botanist who grows funny plants for commodity, of those who will taste some of their herbs, but in battle she takes a drug that turns her into a battle monster.”

Rosie looked at her skeptically.

“She told it completely differently.” said the white-haired girl.

“Because I can read between the lines.” Eti said in the most scholarly tone she could manage.

“Probably between your imaginations.” Rosie said, crossing her arms over her chest.

They were taking back roads, or rather paths, and she felt torn, as if her soul had been stretched between two rocks. A rock of awe and a rock of despair. For her, both were the same and intertwined so tightly that they became inseparable. She balanced between Stormy and Rainy Days, and whichever will prevail, she and the others would suffer. Another reason to find something to do, and taking this cool blonde to Odora was as good as anything…

Itel came up to her and said.

“Someone's following us. Some shadows.”

She sighed.

“It's Grimmy. It's good that she does.” Solarian replied .

“But why? There's something wrong with her.” Itel said looking at her like she was crazy.

"She saved my life twice, Rosie's and Alatar's once, though she could play dumb. I want her to keep an eye on us and come to our aid.” She looked hard at her friend. They moved on, they were already reaching some settlement, from where came the increased noise, which she sensed with her sensitive hearing. Could be interesting, would love to see what's going on there.

She didn't know why she felt so strange. Maybe because of that fight in the monastery. The whole trip had been pointless, she'd known it all along, everyone knew it. They had no chance to save anyone, it was known from the beginning that they were all dead, murdered by a monster as evil as Horde prome or Lord Admiral… or herself.

But, most likely, everything was due to her dream, the meeting with Other One. She sincerely hoped it was just a product of her warped subconscious. Or at worst, an angry and tormented ghost. She came to punish her for a life he never knew. Otherwise, it would mean that... she was the one who was robbed of her life. She clenched her fist full of impotent rage.

“Wrong Hordak?!” Adora exclaimed happily.

“You know Wrongdak?” she asked, seeing a white-skinned alien from a distance, as well as Lilka and Alatar, and Emily and Toshi. This didn't surprise her, after all, they had arranged to get the Wrongdak off the ship somehow and go to the city, where they would meet together… The first part of their assignment had gone well, but the second had gone… worse. Why did they make such a crowd around them? Had Wrongdak messed something up? And she was already starting to like him!

And then she saw two women. One was huge, white-haired, wearing a black and white jacket. Most importantly, it had pincers and a scorpion tail. The second was tall and blonde, though much smaller than the first. She had flowers in her hair and wore a green dress.

“Perfuma and Scorpia?” she said under her breath. She had imagined them differently.

Wrongdak gave Adora a tight hug while Emily brushed against the scorpion woman who, along with her companion, moved towards them. Just like the soldiers.

“It's so good to see you. A lot must have happened while I was gone. he said sadly.

“You do not even know. You've changed a lot too. You don't call me brother anymore.” Adora said.

“Because calling Vesk brothers can end very badly. But I met many new friends. Adora, Scorpia, Perfuma, Meet Eti, Itel, Lilka, Alatar and Rosie. And I present to you Princesses Scorpia and Perfuma, and Adora , Princess of Power, She- Ra'a of Etheria

Mysteries hidden in the dark

“You disgusting freaks, you won't hypnotize us like those poor monsters.” she screamed into the darkness above them, and threw a cloud of icicles around them. There was a frightened squeak, not very scary and quite harmless sounding.

- Frosta, calm down, he's not a Inhabitant of the City, he's an Imp, I remember him from the Fright Zone. Hordak created him from his DNA. But he spoke in Lonnie's voice,” Catra said in a worried voice.

“Lonnie? Isn't that your horde buddy. she asked her friend.” She remembered her from visiting the Fright Zone when they freed Adora , and she remembered her helping Catra and Scorpia when Glimmer was kidnapped…it was mean, but then she became friends with Scorpia and Catra. She can also be friends with Lonnie.

"The problem is that Lonnie has joined, or rather founded, a People’s Rebellion and wants to send me to Beast Island and take power from the princesses. Including you.” said the feline woman, looking around. The cave was huge and the imp 's voice echoed everywhere, so that it was impossible to determine where it was.

“Hey Lonnie, come over here!” she shouted at the top of her voice, and her scream echoed through the ruins until dust rained down from the ceiling.

“The ice has obviously breached the ceiling over the millennia.” Lance said, but then Entrapta called out

“Imp! Great to have you here Imp ! Long time no see! I never got to know you well, but I know you've always been very important to Hordak! He misses you so much. Come with us! “she screamed happily, until a stalactite bigger than her fell and stuck into the ground next to her . Wow oHordak! He “Couldn’t we stop screaming before we were buried by a few hundred tons of rock ?” Nettossa said in a hushed voice, and Catra added.

“For now, Lonnie isn't here, or at least I can't see her. Let's quickly do what we have to do here and get back.” Catra said, looking around warily. She turned to the painting of the octopus-headed creature.

“Who is that catuku ?” she asked

“We're not exactly sure.” George said. “We didn't read that book thoroughly because it seemed awful.”

“My grandfather was very fond of her, but he was strange. I was a bit afraid of him myself.” Lance added. “I remember that Great Cthulhu was supposed to be a powerful and ancient being, one of the Great Old Ones.

“Oh, he's like She-Ra! Is She-Ra the great Old One?”

The men looked at her shocked.

“No, definitely not.” said George in a terribly serious tone.

“I heard about him.” Catra has broken. “His name was mentioned by Aize , a person from Eridani. It was supposed to be described in that book you were talking about.” she said, her voice strangely gloomy.

“Our book must be a copy of that work.” George wondered, but Catra shook her head.

“From what I understand, both the Book of Dead Names and the Thousand Thousand Masks were created simultaneously in many places in the galaxy.” Said Catra

"But what does this creature have to do with dead names?" Netossa asked. Meanwhile, Entrapta was scanning the murals.

“It's not about such dead names. They are names that have been forgotten for countless eons, which is, in a sense, made them dead.” George explained.

“I see.” Netossa said looking at the painting of the tentacle-headed giant and shuddered.

These discussions bored her, so she decided to move away. She went deeper into the cave, illuminating her path with chemical light. It was damp and smelled of fungus and mold. She considered turning back to the others, but decided she wasn't a little girl afraid to get a little dirty. So she walked on and suddenly she saw something moving among the stalagmites. She ran there, and saw a small fluffy creature. Curious, she walked closer and saw a small bird covered in down. He was blind and walked on four spider legs. From its wide beak, in which there were long hooked finches, a spiked tongue shot out. She winced in disgust, but then a toad the size of a small dog jumped out of the rocks and swallowed the bird-creature whole with a mouth full of sharp fangs . She squealed and jumped away from him, freezing everything in that part of the cave at the same time, but she slipped and hit her butt against the hard stone floor.

“Are you okay Frost?” Netossa exclaimed fearfully.

“Yep!” she said, rubbing her tailbone. She realized with disgust that she got dirty with something awfully, but then she lit the wall and, widening her eyes in amazement, called everyone.

“Come quickly! I found something really cool.”

They were standing in front of a huge painting. This time, in addition to white, a shimmering blue was added to it. It depicted She-Ra driving away the cone-shaped creatures and the many-eyed monsters with her light, some of whom were freed, but most were killed by their masters, who then hid underground.

“Catra, you of us know it best. Does She-Ra have blue hair and four crystal eyes?” Because it's starting to worry me… - said Netossa.

"I'm more concerned that someone is apparently cleaning this." Catra said.

She barely suppressed a disappointed sigh as she saw that Imp had returned safe and sound. This Frosta really must be the most bumbling of the princesses if she can't even kill that filthy monster she thought as Rogelio hugged Imp and Kyle looked reproachfully at the embarrassed Lonnie. Of course, that was actually a good thing, because the death of the mascot might have sobered the Comrade General at this point, and that was against the plans of Creeping Chaos, but the idea of a white-skinned freak being pierced by ice spikes was too tempting. She hated him with all her heart, but it was a common feeling between… Siblings? Because that's what their relationship was supposed to be.

“You didn't have to send him there! You only did it to annoy Catra!” Kyle shouted indignantly. At first she despised him as a useless weakling, good for nothing but good looks He was a pathetic coward. He was… a defect. But he had unwittingly turned out to be her greatest rival in the People's Rebelion. He was the voice of reason that kept Lonnie from the most aggressive actions. Her conscience, which was able to sow doubts in the heart of the Comrade General. It was useful at times, but slowly became a problem. She had to limit his influence somehow… which she had been doing for some time.

They were in side tunnels that stretched around and above the city. They were plain, unadorned, save for strange inscriptions in the form of sets of dimples that she recognized as Elder Things' speech. Unfortunately, she didn't know much about this ancient race, she didn't expect to come across any remnants of it during this journey.

The trip was unexpectedly prolonged and she was beginning to worry. For now, she held out in Scarlet's body, but she already felt some discomfort, and there was still a way back. He will survive, he must, but the sooner they return to Castle Crypto, the better.

They entered the tunnels by a side entrance, following the road that started at the foot of the mountain and went around it. It was wide and almost not eroded, it was only covered with sand and sometimes rubble. There they found the entrance to the anthill-like interior of the underground part of the settlement. It was damp darkness all around, though here and there they could see traces of green phosphorescent fungi, although it was often overgrown by the ubiquitous crab spiders , and grew most densely on their corpses, so they agreed it was better not to approach them. The part of the city located in the cave was only a small part of the entire metropolis. There were hundreds of ledges and galleries on the walls, and a veritable maze stretched in the walls and smaller caves. There were warehouses and other rooms, perhaps workshops or greenhouses. Some of the tunnels were too small for a creature larger than a cat to squeeze through. There was at least one in every major room. At first she thought it was some form of pneumatic mail, but when she saw the many hooked hooks for climbing, she began to guess what these tunnels really were. Her suspicions were confirmed by Kyle when he pointed to a small picture of a multi-eyed monster.

“What is this creature? One like this supposedly killed She- Ra!” Kyle screamed in fear .

“It's Shogoth . A servitor race of the Elder Things, created and controlled by them. she explained to the boy, as if explaining that fish swim in water. “Probably used these tunnels to move around the city without blocking traffic. They were huge and extremely dangerous.”

"Are there… could there be any more here?" There was horror in Kyle's voice. She made a thoughtful face and shrugged.

“Who can know?” she asked rhetorically and inwardly laughed with cruel joy as Kyle shuddered.

So now, as Dr. Moors reported to Lonnie on his espionage trip, she silently waited for an opportunity to use it for Crawling Chaos' plans.

"I have to admit that Hordak's former right-hand doesn't seem bothered by your presence." said Dr. Moors, using exactly the words he should have used to arouse Lonnie's ire. The brain in the cilinder went off on its own after the Imp returned to them with horror in his eyes. He could move with surprising agility when he felt like it. Now Rogelio looked at him reproachfully, for he had been carried him on his back for most of the trip. Lonnie pursed her lips angrily and asked.

“What does she do?” asked Comrade General.

"I think he mostly looks at the paintings, historically interesting enough, but pretty useless to you." said Dr. Moors in that polite metallic voice. She didn't trust the Horde scientist, though she didn't trust anyone after Scarlet's death, but for now he was very useful. She just wondered how much he or his buzzing overlords were aware of her true nature or Nyarlathotep's plans , though was there anyone in the entire cold universe who knew them?

Lonnie spun around, fists clenched and panting heavily. It wouldn't have been an insult to anyone else, and Catra certainly didn't mean to offend Lonnie, but Comrade General was in a wonderfully lousy mood, perfect for her plans.

“Who else was there?” she asked terribly calmly. L o

"I've never seen any princess except for Scorpia and Adora with… my own eyes, but from the descriptions I've heard, they were Netossa, Frosta." Kyle shivered here . “And Entrapta.”

When he mentioned that last name, Lonnie turned sharply to the doctor. She felt like she didn't fully understand something. When the doctor mentioned Entrapta, he seemed to want to say something else. As if he reminded about something that Comrade General didn't like very much. Had Lonnie made some commitment to Mi-Go that she had no intention of fulfilling? What could the mushroom -beetles want from her that she didn't even tell her closest friends and lovers. Very interesting.

“Is that all, no guards?” she asked in a voice as hard as granite.

“Onlytwo men, middle-aged and not giving the impression of travelers or posing any threat.” said the doctor.

“So they're outnumbered us. No point in messing with them," Kyle said , relief evident in his voice, but Lonnie shot him a stern look.

"Enrapta never fights anyone, and these two don't look like warriors…. “ She answered the blonde sharply.

"They have a elemental princess…" Kyle interjected .

“One and it's Frosta ! Who cares about Frosta?” Lonnie growled

“I care a lot about her.” Kyle said . "Netossa was the main strategist of the rebellion, and Catra…” He bit his tongue.

“Catra has always been the best at using others. First us, now her girlfriend. No matter how she protests, she will always be Shadow Weaver's apprentice.” drawled Comrade General with icy fury in her voice. “We have weapons that this planet has never known, and most importantly, our cause is just.

Kyle wanted to add something, but she felt the discussion beginning to tire her.

“Our advantage is surprise. Not only do they have no idea we're armed, but they don't even know I have magic. If we play it right, we can win.” she said with absolute certainty in her voice, hoping to convince the others to take action.

Lonnie thought for a moment, then nodded.

"It's settled, let's just try not to hurt anyone, not even Catra, unless we're forced to." said Comrade General.

“Especially watch out for Entrapta. We cannot afford to lose the greatest…mind on Etheria.” Dr. Moors said , and then she guessed what the secret deal between Lonnie and Mi-go was all about, and even she felt uneasy about it.

“Who do you think she was? And also what she was…” Netossa said quietly, and then she reflected and explained. "In terms of what species she was."

George rubbed his chin thoughtfully as he looked at the painting of the previous She-Ra and said.

“I'm not sure, it has features typical of the Etherian fauna, but I've never heard of a similar people”

She stared at the image for a moment, so close and so alien at the same time. Slowly she realized who that being was, and an infinite sadness gripped her heart. She looked down, tears streaming down her face. –

"I know who she is...was and who her people were...Adora once told me that Razz said she was always She-Ra... Only Mara wasn't fully She-Ra because she needed a sword to transform, like Adora in the beginning. The First Ones didn't create She- Ra ... She was always here...” She turned to her friends. “They stole her power, but in order to do that they had to kill the real She-Ra, and with her all her people... They weren't the First colonizers of Etheria... They were her first conquerors. They... murdered the original inhabitants of Ethetia ... erased all memory of them...” She opened her eyes to look at everyone's faces. Now their horror was reflected as they fully grasped the significance of the discovery they had made. There was silence in the darkness, to her cat eyes full of shades of gray. Her companion approached her and put his head under his hand to comfort her. She knew she should feel despair and shame, some sense of guilt over the tragedy that had befallen the true inhabitants of the planet. She breathed air and drank water that never really belonged to her. "But this planet was never mine, was it?" she thought bitterly.

“Entrapta , could you scan this place with your satellite, I don't want to stay there any longer.” she said in a hoarse voice. The former Lady of Drill blinked and looked at her datapad . After a moment she said.

"Weird, Suzan says she can't detect anything here, as if something is masking everything here... It actually makes sense if the place is easy to find, it's the First Ones..." The violet-haired woman paused.

“Then they would destroy this place to hide all traces of their Crime. Even Mara probably didn't suspect anything, at least until very end.” she said quietly.

Suddenly her ears heard a grinding on the ceiling, saw movement in the gray gloom, then a metallic voice.

“Indeed, wonderfully correct Analyze Catro . I always thought Shadow Weaver underestimated your intellect. Mine too, which didn't stop her from sending me to the border with Dryll , but it was good. I met new friends there who gave me this wonderful body.”

She saw a black cylinder of black metal descending on metal tendrils from the ceiling.

"You probably don't recognize me in this new form, but I am Doctor Moors ." he said, moving closer to them. She felt the hairs on the back of her neck stand up and Melog began to growl all blue.

“Oh! A bot with the personality of a true scholar! Why didn't you ever tell me there was someone like that! It's fascinating!” Entrapta called in an excited voice.

“Not quite.” the Doctor explained, and then a small flap slid open and through the thick glass they saw that there was a brain inside. Now came a moment that no one expected. Entrapta was speechless at the sight of this new technological marvel, and not from delight. There was pure disgust on her face. She wasn't surprised.

“Well, from the greatest scientist on our planet, I expected a much more open mind. As the saying goes, you shouldn't get to know your heroes. But this bitter disappointment was compensated by something else... The scanners and other apparatus my friends gave me gave me a lot of fascinating news about you Catra, though...”

“What do you want and what are you doing here?” she asked, wanting to change the subject because she guessed what the nightmare scholar was referring to.

“I would like to say that I am here talking to you driven by scientific zeal and the desire to better understand the reality around us, but with sincere sadness I must admit that I am only here to distract you.” and sprang towards Entrapta with tentacles outstretched.

She saw movement out of the corner of her eye, and turning to see Kyle holding some strange weapon in his hands that looked like an creature wrapped around his forearm. She rushed towards him, and when he saw it, he screamed in fear and began to back away. In fact, he'd never really been afraid of her, because although she often teased him, she never did anything to him. Now she was really annoyed, she hadn't felt this way in years, and she looked pissed offness personified. He shot at her without even trying to hit her. Several shots hit the floor, which was covered with frost. Where did you get such a weapon? she thought in surprise. She sprang towards her former Horde comrade-in-arms, hoping to somehow disarm him, but then Lonnie stood in her way, clutching a strange metal staff.

“Leave him bitch!” She screamed and hit with all her might. She dodged, the staff's swipe accompanied by a wail that made her ears ache. As the staff slammed into the stone floor of the cave, it shook so hard that dust and small stones rained down from above.

“You're about to blow it all up! she shouted to the Comrade General, but she just smirked and continued to attack her. With each blow, the entire cave trembled. During this time, Entrapta effortlessly freed herself from the grip of Doctor Moors, whom Lance, George, and Melog were now fighting, and turned unexpectedly to Kyle .

“Biotechnology is really amazing! Where did you get it from?”

Kyle he looked at his gun and scratched his h” ead.

“I guess you can say that we bought them ...said the blond boy in a pensive voice.

“Kyle, would you kindly not fraternize with the enemy!” Lonnie snarled, then hissed as she slipped on the ice formed by Frosta, hitting her knee painfully. The Ice Princess laughed loudly, but then screamed and froze paralyzed as she was hit with a spell. She saw a woman in shadow with crimson hair holding a sorcerer's staff in her hands. Scarlet? When and where did you learn to do magic? she asked herself when she saw a friend she barely remembered. At that moment, George cut off the Doctor's tentacle with his sword, which, judging from his expression, surprised himself, but the terrifying scientist snatched the weapon from his hand and hurled it at Kyle, narrowly missing him. Netossa threw an energy net at Lonnie, but Lonnie just smiled and jumped towards the energy barrier and disappeared for a moment, then appeared in front of the ruler of Armori and hit her shoulder until they heard a loud crunch and the white haired woman screamed. Then she jumped on Lonnie and tried to cut her, but the general's companion only hit the stones painfully with her knees and one of her legs twisted at an unnatural angle.

“Enough Lonnie, give up!” she snarled menacingly and pulled out her claws, but her former cadet smiled crookedly and said.

“You don't give me orders anymore!” She touched it with the tip of her staff. Then she felt her mind go limp, bliss taking over her, she just had to give in to the external pressure. She knew that feeling all too well. Horde Prime had done the same to her, much more forcefully and brutally, but it was still a violation of her being, an assault on the sanctity of her self. Melog yelled and backed away from fighting the doctor. With violent fury, she pushed it away and slashed Lonnie's startled face with her claws. Then loud gunshots rang out. She saw Rogelio striking blindly with some heavier weapon. Everything started shaking “Grab Frosta , the whole cave will collapse soon. Netossa shouted. She turned towards the youngest member of the expedition, who had just regained control over her body and trapped Scarlet's legs in the ice, but the sorcerer cast another spell and the blue-haired girl began to look around as if she did not know where she was. She reached out to pull it out, but Frosta looked at her and she screamed furiously.

“Hands off Horde scum.” and hit her hard in the face with an ice fist. Then the cave collapsed...

Among the princesses

Among the princesses

She smiled as Wrong Hordak introduced her, although she knew that now she would never be Adora to them , but She- Ra'a , the heroine of the galaxy ... but when she looked at them, it turned out that they reacted completely differently than she expected. Itel summoned a spectral blade, and Rosie clenched her fists, which began to glow. Both took a fighting stance. Eti was nowhere to be seen. The lizard named Alatar sighed and spoke over the com

“Hey, they're fine. You don't have to hide.”

“Now the only question is whether it's Alatar or maybe an ugly impostor.” A voice came over the lizard's communicator. The red dot of the laser sight appeared on his chest, but the silver scales signaled that he had nothing to worry about.

“Is Eti always so… nervous.” Perfuma asked cautiously .

“A bit, she hit me once, but after getting to know her, she turns out to be very nice.” said Wrong Hordak in a gentle voice. He really has changed a lot. Not only did he look different, he was now so colorful Catra would say his eyes hurt from looking at him. He became calmer, much more quiet.

'You better not talk to me, treacherous Wormdrak! You hid the truth from us from the beginning. And I was already starting to like you.” said the strange girl via communicator, and Wrongdak looked down, genuinely ashamed.

“She is right! You've been working with them from the beginning! You were an agent of cursed by devils and demons Etheria, a spy who was to learn our weaknesses and secrets for your dark overlords to enable them to conquer the galaxy and put us under the yoke of your wicked tyranny!” Itel screamed furiously. There was silence… Even the guards stared at her in surprise. She blinked a few times, trying to follow the girl's reasoning. She, Scorpia , and Perfuma stared at Wrong Hordak asking him to explain what is going on with the green-haired Saihe. Even her White-Haired companion looked at Itel skeptically .

"You know, I think you're exaggerating a bit…" Rosie said.

“Nobody asked your opinion! You don't understand anything, you're stupid and naive.” Saihe yelled at her companion.

“Don't pick on Sparkling Hand. She's kind of right. The Blondie is definitely not the Lady of Chaos, she's too stupid for that. She is such idiot that wants to talk with Stinka! Who in their right mind would want to hang out with someone like that?”

She smiled sadly to herself because the girl reminded her of Catra, though she couldn't say why. Probably because of that cat's tail sticking out from under her coat, which she nervously waved all the time. But then she frowned, understanding what the girl was talking about.

"You're talking about the crap the Horde Ultimate says… She didn't know that someone who lived in his Empire wouldn't take that crap seriously." she said smiling sadly. "But I assure you, I'm no Chaos Lady... Rather, everyone tells me I'm too decent. My fiancée says my clothes are made to cut potatoes.” She laughed amiably. Perfuma and Wrong Hordak were about to say something, but Eti cut in “Listen me Blondie. We don't know what it was like under Crookface's rule, but we from outside the Zone, when we see that there may be something terrible somewhere, there will definitely be something even worse. That's how the real world works... And besides, Itel is paranoid and doesn't like anyone.” Her voice was strangely colorless and dull.

"So you're from outside the empire?" She looked at Wrong Hordak . He nodded his head and said.

“Yes... Entrapta asked me to help her prove that Horde Prime was a liar and did not conquer the entire universe. And that's true. My Skittermander friends took me to Vesk III and I had a few happy years there with Emily.” he said, and Emily chirped yes and added looking at his young friends. “My brother has forbidden me to mention Etheri to anyone, because you know.” He looked at her significantly.

"What is this Hordak up to?" she thought, frowning.

“That's what we wanted to tell you”. Perfuma said and pointed to the lizard and the red-haired girl with long ponytails and a flower in her hair. This Itel looked as if she'd seen something terrifying . "These kids are from a planet outside the Empire." Their home world… I'll explain later…” Perfuma said and suddenly jumped in fright as Eti suddenly appeared behind her.

“What have you done to Lilka? she exclaimed strangely calmly, but gesticulated indignantly.

“She didn't do anything to me. Mrs. Perfuma gave me a flower and Mrs. Scorpia hugged me.” The redhead said with delight, and Eti jumped back violently.

“You're not Lilka. You are the imposter!” There was a note of indignation in the masked voice.

“I'm no imp ! Mrs. Perfuma simply gave me a flower because I apologized nicely for atack her with an axe. Lila explained.

“And yet no, you are very Lilka. Eti said and looked at the others. “As soon as you give us a lift, we will find Odora without any problems ... I will always find her after the smell, even in the darkest valley, where she probably comes from.

Scorpia and Perfume looked at the girl in bewilderment, but Rosie explained.

“This is Lady Cala Grayskull . She is great and brave, only Eti has some prejudices... And her ancestor, Mara, was from you, from Etheria!”

“It's amazing.” Perfuma whispered, and Scorpia nodded.

“Really, there's absolutely nothing good about it. But at least Bina will be happy.” Eti explained.

“Are you sure?” Rosie asked cautiously.

“Of course!” She sure missed us!” Eth assured.

Adora and the two princesses turned out to be quite nice. They didn't look like princesses at all. They didn't have a tiara and white dresses... Though what could she know? She's never met one. Maybe it was local style? For example, if the Vesk had a princess, she'd probably wear a military helmet and armor... and be armed to the teeth... Actually, she'd look like a regular Vesk only more so.

She waved to one of the guards, who looked at her in dismay. She had the impression that all the guards were eyeing them suspiciously. She was not surprised by them, because first Lilka threw herself with an ax at Scorpia , and Eti was herself. She didn't understand how they and Itel could suspect Adora and her friends of being gangsters. And they offered them a ride. Everyone here respected them greatly, especially Adora . She was that She- Ra'a , though she wasn't sure what that meant... But she was definitely a good person since she defeated that monster Horde Prime ... She must have been a great a general with a mighty army, or a mighty wizard with unparalleled power. She just didn't look like that. She seemed perfectly ordinary, and compared to Lady Cala, she was almost a gray mouse. She wasn't as beautiful or tall or smart…especially as smart as a Carurystal aristocrat.

They were just getting into an army truck covered with a tarpaulin. It was not the vehicle she had expected from princesses and heroes. Several other military vehicles surrounded them, only one that looked… decent. It was probably an old Horde vehicle, because its shape resembled those droids with which it fought in the underground. The rest looked like someone took normal vehicles and just repainted them. She felt as if they had been patched and repaired over and over again to make them usable. Though to be honest, she didn't know much about vehicles. On Absalom, she used public transport, and what happened before that, she couldn't remember. Adora walked over to her and, seeing that she was watching their convoy, said.

“Does the look weird? Everyone here keeps apologizing to me for such wretched machines Unworthy of the Princess of the Power and savior of the universe, but I don't know what they mean. Where me, my fiancée, and Scorpia grew up, it was all shaking so much you were rattled for two hours, and I didn't know about seat belts until Darla… it's such a ship.”

“So where were you born?” Rosie asked in surprise.

"I don't know, but I grew up in the Fright Zone..." When she saw Rosie recoil at the name, she added. “Ya, this place was as terrible as it was called… But now I live in Brightmoon with my fiancée Catra.” Adora said.

“Yes, Wrongdak mentioned her. He said Eti looked like her”. She looked at the feline girl who was with Alatar and Wrongdak at the engine of one of the cars.

“Ah, we have many catpeople on Etheria, but Catra is different from them.” the blond woman explained to her, and Rosie nodded.

“Yes, in the Galaxy they are called Pahtra and live on Vesk V, but Eti is not like them either. She was explaining to Adora, but then Lilka came up to them with a large package of bacon crisps.

“Please try. These are delicious crisps, bacon ones. I wanted to give Perfuma, but she says she doesn't eat meat, so I said it wasn't there, only, as Alatar says, the whole table of chemical elements, but she didn't want to eat them anyway.” the “orc” girl explained. Adora tasted one carefully, smiled contentedly, then devoured half the packet at a time. Lady Cala had better manners, too.

Immediately after, one of the guards called them over and they jumped together into the back of the truck. She motioned for Eti to look at her, then turned off the reader and began speaking to her in sign language.

“Eti, but why are you always wearing a mask?”

A long moment passed before Eti replied.

"I don't like people staring at me, any more and they'll start asking me if they can pet me. And besides, I don't want my enemies to know where I am.”

She looked at it skeptically.

“Your enemies aren’t here”

“Their claws reach so far, you can't even imagine how. Who knows, maybe they're already here...”

They drove for two hours. But she couldn't take a nap, even though she was terribly tired, even exhausted. She tried to sleep on her wife's shoulder, but it was shaking so much she couldn't, so she put her head on the pillow in Scorpai's lap and let her stroke her. Then Lilka came up to her and asked.

“Is something wrong with you, Miss Perfuma?”

She smiled sadly at her.

"Nothing, just my power bring nature back to life, but it's… exhausting me." she replied, trying to be gentle.

“You know, thanks to you everything is green and alive anew You make everything beautiful again, not dirty and gray. You are the best my flower.” Scorpia kissed her tenderly on the forehead. Lilka thought for a moment and spoke in a calm voice, her eyes becoming misty.

“Once upon a time there was a girl named Lilka who lived on a farm. They cultivated cucurbits, melans, and pearples trees grew in orchards. And there were lots of flowers everywhere, especially in Lilka's mum's garden, and when it was spring, everything was so colorful... and they were all happy, they loved each other very much, and then... then… do you want a snack? This one's not bacon flavor, it's onion ones.” She handed her a packet of crisps, but she barely noticed. The tragedy hidden in the girl's words broken her heart.

“Who looks after you?” Scorpia asked with concern in her voice.

“Well, we're adults now, so no one has to, but I guess that's Bina.” said the girl. They looked questioningly at Alatar, who was staring at the datapad with concentration, on whose screen some colorful blocks appeared, which then disappeared. The lizard looked away from her and said.

“Bina is the captain of our ship. And then there's the sorceress Ireanis and Mr. Ilemshaw, our science officer. Now there's Miss Daisy, but she's one of the passengers we're carrying. She is a tutor of Lady Cala and a powerful shadow sorceress.”

" What a coincidence, because me, Adora, and her fiancée were raised by a shadow sorcerer." What an amazing coincidence!.” her wife.

“And you're all from Kesler?” she changed topic.

“Rosie is also a passenger, and Eti ... it's a complicated story.” answered the lizard.

“Eti looks like someone who was not hugged in childhood, and not enough love was shown.” Said her wife.

The lizard looked at her surprised.

“This is the most accurate and at the same time the most euphemistic description of Eti's childhood that you can imagine.”

Calamity found the trip to the city much less boring than she had expected. From the information she possessed, it appeared that an efficient network of cultists was operating on Dedalus , and as she watched Clytaimestra , the capital of the country where they found themselves, she understood why. The inhabitants were more religious than most of the inhabitants of this planet and put up a fierce resistance to Horde Prime, for which he punished them in his typical brutal and crude manner. The feeling of disappointment towards traditional religions combined with high spirituality and a sense of loss has always been a good breeding ground for the formation of cults of the Great Old Ones and the Outer Gods. They were willing to offer power at a price, but power always had a price. It is and always will be.

The sight of an armored personnel carrier did not cause as much surprise here as in other, quieter places. A little more interest was aroused by the sight of visitors from other planets, but only for a short time. After all, this world had once been a center of interplanetary commerce, so the sight of aliens didn't shock anyone here. She was pleased to see that she attracted the most interested looks. After all, it was her duty to evoking admiration, her destiny. That's what she was made for! The joy, unfortunately, passed when she discovered the reason for such reactions of the inhabitants of Dedalus . "See? She looks like her! He looks just like She-Ra!” To hell with them! It was hard for her to keep from extending her claws and tearing their throats open. Instead, she gave them the kindest Lady Cala’s smile she could muster on her perfect face.

Bina did her shopping, haggling fiercely, which was greatly facilitated by the presence of Dilayla, who, clad in power armor, kept pickpockets and more dangerous thugs away. Arkan tar looked at several stalls selling souvenirs or antiques, where he bought a few trinkets. Rechiza spoke to a couple of priests who, judging by their robes, were members of some local branch of the Temple of Desna or the Star Butterfly. The three of them exuded a sense of guilt that they hid poorly. The most half-elf. She was the closest to the crew and even slept with Bina a few times, though they were hardly a couple. In truth, she herself wasn't sure what to make of their ally's true nature. Surely it was another variable in the already complicated plan of Creeping Chaos. She didn't share Shadow Weaver's preposterous terror, of course, but it would have been far better if the Lord Admiral hadn't reached Etheria, at least until their mission was complete. After that, Antares can make sausages from Etheria's inhabitants, he will even give him the Grayskull family recipe. Especially since there was a Star Stone there. The power of the most powerful artifact in the galaxy completely changed the course of their mission and explained so much. But why had Nyarlathotep kept it from her?

Bina was finalizing the purchase of smoked fish and canned anchovies, though the locals wanted a lot for their wares, but the captain had money, so she didn't skimp. She should have been curious as to where this woman was getting such funds, but she figured it didn't matter. She was almost certainly not a player in the great game that was being played out of sight of mere mortals. Only that nasty and twisted feline girl, but she, like with Catry and Adora, had to come to terms with their existence, however painful it was.

And then she saw a crowd, the people of Clytemnestra gathering around a caravan full of vehicles of all kinds. Most of the vehicles were escorts. Numerous guards in richly inlaid relatively modern armour, stylized as ancient, protected a group of people. But she heard the whispers of those gathered around her and knew that the passengers definitely did not need protection. First, a muscular woman came out, supporting a tall blonde girl with flowers in her hair. Through the stories, Shadow Weaver recognized Scorpia and Perfume in them . Bina turned to them and regarded them with bored curiosity. But as more people began to come out, Bina's eyes widened first, and then she turned red. Wrongdak and Entrapta's idiotic invention came out of it first . The clone waved happily at Bina, not really noticing how furious the woman was. Dragonkin and a stupid girl who thought she was an orc followed right behind them, followed by an elf and Rosie. The nasty feline creature was nowhere to be seen. They all looked embarrassed that they hadn't stayed in the ship, or maybe just because they had been caught? She didn't really care. At the end she came out. When she saw her, she was disappointed. She was so… ordinary. Fairly pretty by mortal standards, reasonably fit, but really nothing special. How could such a pity thing steal my destiny from me. What cruel twist of fate caused such a mediocrity to become She- Ra? she thought with hatred and contempt boiling in her heart.

“Oh, I think someone will die here soon ...” Bina drawled and moved with fury painted on her face, she went towards her charges. No one noticed the venomous smile on Calamita's face .

"Unfortunately not," she whispered under her breath with a hint of sadness in her voice. She walked slowly towards Adora. The sky was covered with blue clouds, a storm was slowly approaching. With her inhuman senses, she sensed its violence approaching over the entire city. She walked among the Icarians. The guards paid no attention to her, they were focused on Bina yelling at the kids. Out of the corner of her eye, she saw Captain Moonshadow staring at Adora. She saw wrath in the pirate's eyes, pure rage. It was very interesting.

“Or maybe someone will die ... - she whispered and came closer and extended her hand towards Adora.

"Hi, I'm Lady Cala Grayskull of Caryrustal.".

The return of the queen

Captain Moonshadow knew she should be pleased. The loot looted from the monastery guaranteed not only the reimbursement of the cost of the expedition, but also a huge profit. Gold alone, not even counting its potential artistic value, was worth a real fortune. In addition, there was also a monastery. They didn't even have to fear the wrath of the gods, because this place was desecrated by the Horde Prime, and they buried the dead inhabitants. Nevertheless, she gave tithes to Besmara , goddess of pirates, just in case, which was supposed to guarantee safety from the vengeance of competing deities. And most importantly, they got it somehow by the way, before they got there, to her lost home... Which, if you believe the Star Siblings, was not as terrible a place as they feared ... For a moment she considered imprisoning them in her Gardens of Long Death, but she thought that would be just mean. The morale among her crew rose to an impressive level. The old whining and snorting has gone into oblivion. She was again their beloved and a great captain who would give them glory and wealth. Some even suggested staying here for a year or two and, taking advantage of the chaos and ignorance of the locals, suspend the war with the Empire for a while and start the Great Hunt. With the wealth gained here, they will finally be able to field a real war fleet and become not a thorn in the side of the empire, but a knife stuck in the ribs of the Aeon Throne. She had to seriously consider that possibility, but first she had to exact her revenge. Punish traitors and slay the invaders.

She made a deal with Bina that they would land in a more desolate part of Icarus, where there were few cities and the central authority was not strong enough. No one here will trouble her crew if they don't look for trouble themselves. Her subordinates were disciplined enough that she didn't have to worry about that. She was accompanied by Gozamund, who was the chief engineer aboard the Merciless. He was Nuar, a massive bull-like a humanoid whose race was famous for its love of technology and labyrinths. She had met him back on Jadehell at the labor camp, where he was a technician who repaired the air filters for the guards and other staff, which gave him the best protective gear, kept his lungs in good shape and didn't have to wear an assisted breathing apparatus. Aside from Tonada, who was almost in love with her, he was the most loyal of the crew, who had fought the Star Empire long before he came to camp and had never cared for wealth. Together they wandered the streets of Clytemestra arousing moderate interest. Although passers-by were probably deterred by the sight of the stern eyes visible above the mask. She was looking for… She wasn't sure what. She could rest in her cabin or train, but she came here because she had a strange feeling that there was something valuable here. Something she was looking for, though she didn't know it herself.

The city was very old, which meant nothing to her or any of her crew, and very poor, which made her heart ache. Already from orbit they could see that the area near the city was gray and barren, as if after using a powerful weapon of mass destruction. The food at the stalls was expensive, even considering that it had an unknown currency here. She saw the emaciated faces of children, though no one starved to death in the streets here. The local inhabitants gave the impression of being kind and willing to help their neighbours . That's why she stopped at the bakery and bought as much goods as she was able to carry, and she and Gozamund began to distribute them to the children. It was nothing to her, and these kids would finally be fed for one night. They tried to quickly separate the flat dark breads because a storm was approaching.

“Do you know that this is a drop in the ocean of needs?” said the bullman in Azlant, so that the kids would not understand what they were saying.

"But it's a drop that hollows out a rock," she replied to Nuar, although she had the impression that it was just an empty and meaningless phrase. The children were not afraid of her. It always amazed her. Although she aroused terror in the hearts of enemies, she easily won the sympathy of the people, especially children. "But you're not just about handing out food."

“I've been fighting this fight for twenty years. Not because the Anti killed someone important to me or ravaged my village. I do it because I have to. But what did we do? We haven't even scratched the armor that protects the core of the Empire.” said Gozamund in a tired voice. She smiled under the mask.

“Look around. Horde Prime has oppressed the entire Zone for centuries. He held her in an iron grip so strong that the power of the Aeon Throne was like the touch of a velvet glove. It was a monster that destroyed entire civilizations on a whim. And he was annihilated in one day. By the inhabitants of this whole Etheria, by that She- Ra'a. Etheria... My planet. Did I know you She- Ra? Did I expect rescue from you? she thought as she handed out bread to the children, when suddenly a boy ran up to them and started whispering to the orange-haired girl. After a moment's hesitation, she left. A message passed between the children, and more and more of them ran off happily excited. The last boy practically snatched the loaf from her hand and ran away from her.

“Where are you going?” she asked in an amused tone. The kid stopped and cried out in a voice full of pure delight.

“There's Adora, you know, She-Ra from Etheri.” and they would disappear into the crowd, and she stood paralyzed.

Adora... The one who betrayed her, abandoned her to the void. She took her sword and everything she loved. She was She- Ra ... She should have known that. But it didn't change anything, absolutely nothing.

“Did something happen?” asked Gozamund in a frightened voice. She clenched her fists and grunted.

“Summon Tonada , Gydwa and Kaert . Let them appear. Immediately. And have Meriless summoned.” she said in a voice that sounded like death itself.

She tried hard not to stare at Eti's hand, at the brightly glowing symbols. "This is" she saw only on the hand sticking out from under the sleeve. She tried hard not to stare that way, but she was never very good at hiding what she was doing.

“You're looking for the last opportunity before the wedding?”. The green-haired Saihe growled at her.

“Last opportunity?” she asked, not understanding what was going on.

“To experience an nice time in the arms of a beautiful girl accidentally met far from home”. she explained venomously. She felt herself turn beet red. Saihe must have taken this as confirmation of her words, because she snorted contemptuously, but Eti said without interrupting the conversation with Rosie in sign language.

“Itel is terribly jealous of me, I don't know why, but I see you looking at my hand.” She paused for a moment, and now it was itel who blushed. “That's good, because it's a awesome hand!” Eti turned to her so suddenly that Rosie got scared and put her hand under her nose. “Look how cool it is.”

“Ugh Yes, it's interesting ... Especially the writing ...” she groaned. "Have you heard of a race of First Ones? I know this is going to sound weird, but I can see the writing on your hand and I can read the them. Do you know about them?” she asked carefully. The three girls looked at her surprised.

“It's a startongue. The Language of the Starlings . Eti explained. "I thought only I could see them." And I'm sure that no one can read them - said the masked girl, and the green-haired girl looked at her as if she wanted to say something, but changed her mind.

“Starlings?” she asked confused.

“Lilka, show your drawings!” called Eti a red-haired girl who was at their side in three steps and began to take out sheets of paper until she pulled out a large sheet with a drawing of a smiling star, the rays of which ended with the same metal hands as Eti's.

“You know, Starlings... The First Ones... look a bit different.” she said carefully. Scorpia, around whose neck Tosh snoring deliciously wrapped, and Wrong Hordak approached them.

“How!” Lilka shouted indignantly, and Eti added.

“These drawings are supported by the scientific consensus achieved by many years of research.”

Rosie rolled her eyes.

“Nobody knows what the First Ones looked like. They were said to be machines. We know that they built cities on Abbalon and created the race of Anacites. The Anacites worship them as gods!” Rose said.

She felt sweat running down her back. Please not that.

Scorpia smiled happily and rested her hand on Adora's shoulder.

“Our Adora is the Last of the First Ones.” said the Scorpion princess, and Adora stifled a groan with difficulty. Rosie stared at her with her mouth open, and Lilka looked from her drawing to her a few times and shook her head.

“You're not like them at all.”

Eti turned her head to the side and asked.

“So you're a living oxymoron, with emphasis on a moron ?

Scorpius leaned over her so that their noses were almost touching.

"You remind me so much of Adora's fiancée." she said, but Eti snapped back.

“You invade my personal space, I'll bite you!”

“Jeez, you really are so similar!

Then the vehicle stopped and Eti jumped away from Scorpia and activated the cloaking field. She really does look like Catra , she thought as she walked outside.

She sighed heavily as she saw the crowd gathering around her. It's starting again. It's good that Eti and her friends don't care much about who I am. she thought sadly. She saw the Wrong Hordak suddenly wave to someone, and the others faded. A woman with burgundy hair was walking towards them, her face red with rage. One guard tried to stop her, but she pushed him away.

“What the fuck did I tell you? How long did it take you guys to piss warm urine on my orders?!” she screamed at the top of her throat. Hearing the curses, she and Scorpia blushed.

"It's probably my fault..." Wrong Hordak began, but the woman didn't let him finish.

“A little bit, but mostly Itel. Not only did you put everyone in danger for who the fuck knows what, but you got Mr. Wrongdak and Rosie involved. Have you no shame?!”

“They had nothing to fear from us. “she tried to explain, but then the burgundy haired girl turned to her.

“And you don't fucking meddle in things that don't belong to you!” She roared at her until she backed away from her.

“Do you know who you’re talking to?” one of the guards said to her, but the woman turned to him.

“Do you know what do I care who this blonde is.” she growled, and the guard cringed as she looked at him with eyes full of fury .

"But nothing big happened, no need to shout like that..." Scorpia said in a friendly and conciliatory tone, but then the burgundy-haired woman jumped up to her.

“Do you have children? NO? So don't meddle in other people's upbringing!” she drawled and seemed to overwhelm the mighty Scorpion princess with her personality. It is said that the quarrels between Queen Angela and Glimmer were legendary, and sometimes the whole palace shook from them. She hadn't had a chance to experience them, but they probably looked similar.

Then a woman emerged from the confused crowd.

“Hi, I'm Lady Cala Grayskull of Carurystal” She said in a beautiful sonorous voice extending her hand towards her.

The guards looked at her in surprise. The burgundy haired girl said softly "We'll talk later" and started to watch them. Lady Cala was…extraordinary. She was taller than Perfume and nearly as tall as Scorpia. She moved gracefully, as if every step she took was an invitation to dance. She was beautiful, absolutely perfect... And that hair, how did she make it so fluffy and shiny?

She noticed him staring at her, so she shook the outstretched hand. The woman also squeezed her hand. She was surprisingly strong despite her delicate build.

“Ughh. I'm Adora, you know, She-Ra, Princess of Power and all.” she said, feeling oddly shy around the woman. She had the impression that she was spreading an aura of majesty around her, overwhelming like the glare of the sun, from which the stars faded.

“Oh! We heard about you from Star Siblings. They say you're the greatest hero in the galaxy, the one who defeated Horde Prime alone!” she said with delight in her voice, which made her blush.

“Well, definitely not alone. I wouldn't have done much without the help of my friends. Meet Princesses Scorpia and Perfume “ She pointed to her companions. Scorpia looked smitten, but Lady Plumeria eyed Lady Cala uncertainly.

“Oh, we've heard a lot about you too!” said the thunder princess. Lady Cala laughed sonorously.

"I'm sure Rosie and her friends have told you about me, though Eti probably isn't very nice. Sometimes I have the impression that she is a little jealous, unnecessarily, because she is a great girl!” said the beautiful woman. She noticed Eti, who suddenly appeared behind Lady Cala and made a very insulting gesture, and then disappeared again.

“Yes, great ...” she muttered under her breath and asked. "So you came here to the empire... To Horde Prime's Former Empire because..." she asked, not knowing how to direct the conversation to the topic she was interested in.

“Because I'm looking for Etheria, the planet where the founder of my family - Mara - came from.” Lady Cala smiled softly.

So it's true, she's talking to Mara's descendant now! They weren't exactly alike, but after all, a thousand years or more had passed... So many generations...

“But it turned out that Etheria found me herself... Did you know that you have a Starstone at your place?”

She blinked several times not understanding what the woman was talking about.

“Starstone?” she asked Lady Cala , and the beautiful woman was about to answer them when there was a hard scream

“ADORA!”

Everyone turned to where the voice came from. She saw a tall woman wearing purple robes. She had a mechanical prosthetic arm instead of a right arm, and she wore a mask of some blue crystal over the lower half of her face. For a moment she wondered how she knew her, and then she spread translucent wings reinforced with a metal frame and took off her mask. Then tears came to her eyes.

“Do you remember me!” said Queen Angela in a voice sharper than the Sword of Protection.

“Of course I remember you!” she called. Now tears were streaming down her cheeks. "You're alive… you're really alive," she thought, feeling joy singing in her heart. She never fully accepted that the queen had sacrificed herself for her, had given her life for her. Catra was always haunted by the fact that she had taken her friend's mother away. But now everything will change! No more mourning and remorse! The queen is back! Mikah ... oh Mikah, how happy he will be!

Then several people appeared next to Queen Angela. The first was a small creature with blue fur on its body, wearing a pirate hat fur on its head. He would have been cute if it weren't for the six pirate sabers he was holding in his hands. He stood in front of Angela and glared at her menacingly. To the queen's right stood a great lizard similar to Rogelio , but much more massive. He had one eye and held a huge hammer in his hands, the surface of which was electrified. On the left appeared a large bullman , in whose hands suddenly appeared claws. Behind them stood Saihe in dark glasses, who was holding a blaster in his hand .

“It's would be strange that you don't remember someone you left to die.” Angela growled and coughed, then pulled the mask back over her face.

“But Angela… Queen. - she said. She could said that the queen herself had decided to stay on the other side, but what did it matter? It was because of her, because she failed, because she wasn't strong enough, that all of this happened. She didn't want to defend herself . Yes, she abandoned her… To a fate worse than death. She felt her legs buckle under her. Thunder struck and the first drops of rain began to fall from the sky among which her tears were lost Angela looked at her surprised.

“Angela…so that's what my name used to be.” she said thoughtfully and shook her head. "Never mind… I am Captain Moonshadow, sword for Azlanti, captain of the terrible Meriless. My enemies speak my name in horror. You will too. Let's make this arrangement. You come aboard my ship and tell me where you keep the sword, and no one will be harmed. Hardly anyone.” she said with a threat worthy of the most feared predator. Among the blue storm clouds appeared a great black ship that had apparently just shed its cloaking field. The crowd began to retreat, and the guards closed their ranks uncertainly looking at the woman completely unknown to them.

“I will go with you. she said sobbing.” Perfuma and Scorpia tried to talk to her, but she didn't listen. "I can't give you the sword... It was destroyed... I broke it... I had to."

Desperation flashed in the Captain's eyes, then she shook her head and screamed in uncontrollable fury.

"You're lying, but after some days in the Gardens of the Long Death, you'll tell the whole truth, I assure you!" And she raised her hand. The tattoos that covered her glowed, and a gray-blue flare appeared in her left hand. She took aim at it, unwilling to defend herself, feeling her body go numb. Then Lady Cala stood beside her, sword drawn, and screamed.

“Enough of this Moonshadow. Give up!”

Angela looked at her irritably.

"So you're breaking our agreement, noble lady?" She growled and hurled a energetic projectile from her hand at her. Lady Cala ducked and the shot hit one of the guards, who screamed in pain. The warriors accompanying Moonshadow rushed into the fight, Screams, gunshots and the clash of weapons snapped her out of her stupor. She stood and looked up. She saw the ship take a firing position.

“Surrender, Adora , or this city will burn.” Glimmer's mother threatened. She closed her eyes and took a deep breath. S

“For the honor of Grayskull!“ she screamed, and felt magic flowing through her, pure power. She thought of Catra, her beloved and her friends, Glimmer, Bow or Skorpia and Perfume standing nearby. This allowed her to transform, to become She- Ra . When the flash of rainbow light passed, she opened her eyes and looked at the shocked Angela .

“You come with me. To daughter and husband…” She said in a gentle but firm voice.

“You're lying! They are dead! Fire!” the queen shouted and wanted to shoot at her, but she effortlessly blocked the projectile with her sword, and then Lady Cala attacked.

?I'll take care of her. You stop the ship.” said the woman. Her hair blew in the wind despite the rain, as did She- Ra 's . She nodded to her and jumped towards the black ship, hovering against a dark sky criss-crossed with lightning. Just then, the ship's hull-mounted gun began to load, and she directed her flight to intercept the shot. Then the ship fired, spitting out a huge ball of plasma capable of burning an entire district of the city. She transformed her sword into a shield and took a hit on it. Flames as hot as the sun itself surrounded her, but the shield absorbed all the energy easily, though most beings would evaporate. She smiled, hoping the shooter could see her. Then she aimed her sword at the ship and sent a beam of light at it.

Eti blinked a few times. She was glad she was wearing tinted goggles or the flash of rainbow light would blind her. Then she saw Blonde who became BLONDE. She was almost two and a half meters tall, and her hair blew in the wind as if it were made of light itself. When Stinka stood next to her, she looked pathetic, as if she was trying to imitate an unattainable pattern… But Stinka was always pathetic. And she had a sword, big and sharp, not some stupid needle.

And then the blonde jumped towards the cruiser...

What do they put in these crisps Eti asked herself

“Is she going to fight with a pirate ship?| Alatar asked in surprise.

“Yeah , and we don't have much like so ... Where the fuck is Eti?.” Bina asked, but she wasn't listening. She wanted ran after Stinka ... This mean bitch will do harm to the captain of the Wingy . She liked the Wingy. Maybe not as much as Grimmy, but she was so cool! The mean woman was attacking the pirate with surprising for someone in the rain, avoiding the pirate's shots. At that time, Skittermander rushed at Vegi , and Veska and Nuar Nanocyte were attacking Stinger. Vegi wrapped Skitermander in vines, but then she had to dodge because the drow elf shot her with a pistol. Stinger grabbed the handle of the hammer.

"You know, I'm friends with a lizard like you, but he's not big as you..." said the scorpion woman.

"Because the Veska women are bigger." The other snarled, and then lightning bolts struck from Stinger's pincers, knocking Hammerhead back and hitting the cobblestones. Despite the fact that smoke was rising from her, she tried to get up. The scorpion woman was attacked by the bullman with his nanomachine claws, but Alatar cast a spell that made the bullman forget how to use the weapon. Skittermander slashed the vines and lunged at Vegi, shouting "For Captain Moonshadow", but then Lilka charged at him. Itel gracefully started attacking Veska , who was already on her feet. Bina shot at the drow - elf, only Sparkle Hand stared at the BLONDE as if she was going to jump into the sky after her. Her eyes were strangely cloudy

Then the ship fired and hit BLONDE... who instead of evaporating turned her sword into a shield and blocked the attack. Sparkle Hand curled up, covering his eyes. And then BLONDE changed her shield back to a sword and fired a beam of light at the ship, almost destroying his shields.

"Retreat! We're retreating to the ship!" Captain Moonshadow called, barely defending herself against Stinka's attacks. At that time, Piącha came running and struck right next to Hammer. The Pirates didn't need to repeat the order, they started to withdraw. They didn't pursue them, except for Stinka, who chased after Captain Moonshadow. She decided to check what this bitch was up to and find out what was actually going on here.

At the very beginning of her life, she could run on all four limbs. But then her left arm was maimed and her right arm was lost. She couldn't touch anything with the fingertips of her left hand, and the right hand was too slippery. If it weren't for the falcon boots, she wouldn't be running across the rooftops after a pirate and an aristocrat. She ran through the rain, avoiding being seen. There was a dogged chase under a sky streaked with lightning. With a smile on her face, Stinka dodged the shots with unprecedented grace, carrying out her attacks. The captain's robes were in tatters, and redblood leaked from between the armor plates. Suddenly, the two women reached the building, a four-story building with a flat roof. There was no escape from here. The aristocrat was facing the captain, who was breathing heavily, smiling like a cat at a mouse. She was preparing to deliver the final stab to the heart. Eti, without thinking, put the telescope to her eye and fired, hitting Stinka in the knee. Then Captain Moonshadow shot her straight in the face, then wrapped her wings around herself and disappeared. What happened next, she did not see. She preferred to run away before Stinka noticed her. Even though she was absolutely perfect, awesome and unique, she wouldn't stand a chance against her.

She landed on bent legs. She couldn't chase the ship, not at this level of power, and she didn't want to draw more. It could damage the ship, and for Glimmer's mother's sake, she preferred to avoid it. She looked around, she was alone in the street drowning in the pouring rain. Suddenly she saw something between the buildings, like a shadow watching her. Her heart froze for a moment as she thought of one person who had been dead for five years. But then the shadow disappeared as if it had never been there... Then Lady Cala emerged from the rain. In her arms she carried a child whose body was horribly shattered.

“It was Captain Moonshadow who did it.” the woman said in a pained voice. “Or asyou call her, Queen Angela.”

Nevermore

She grunted as she tried to push another boulder.

“It's no use. None of us will lift this boulder.” She said to her companions, panting heavily. She wiped her forehead.

“Nonsense!” cried Entrapta. " We just need to prop it up somehow or maybe make some explosives to blow it all up!" said the purple-haired girl and opened Alice, and then started throwing more items out of the bot. It's strange how so much stuff fits into such a small machine.

“How do you hide everything there?” she asked her friend.

“There's a space-time micromodulator. Thanks to this, the inside of Alice is ten times larger than the outside.” Entrapta explained without taking her eyes off the gathered tools. "It's like an inverted black hole. Almost harmless.”

“Almost?” Netossa asked, jumping up violently and wincing as she felt the terrible pain in her broken arm. The woman's arm was broken so that the bone was sticking out. Her and Lance, being the most medically trained of them all, set her up with some difficulty and put her in makeshift slates. The new drugs speeded up healing, but even so, there was little Lady of Armoria could do to help them get out of their prison. She thought bitterly.It won't heal until the wedding.

Things were a little better with Lance and George. They had some bruises and scrapes, and George had a slight limp, but they seemed to be more concerned about something else.

“It's a bit of a shame about this sword. He's been in your family for six generations, hasn't he? George asked his husband.

"You said he was ill-balanced anyway. To be honest, I don't really remember how it came into my family's possession.” Lance wondered. Entrapta emerged from the entire encounter unscathed, at least physically. What happened to Frosta was a complete mystery

Half the city was buried under the rubble that fell during the fight with Lonnie. They were trapped in its central part, near the painting of the former She- Ra. They were cut off from the exit and did not know how or if they would get out. To make matters worse, Frosta was trapped in another part of the underground complex and they didn't even know if she was alive. "It's all because of you, Lonnie. Next time we meet, I'll scratch more than just your face." She vowed to herself, looking at her claws covered with the blood of her former companion, although she wasn't even sure if Comrade General was alive. Knowing her luck, she certainly survived. Their relationship was always not the best ... Lonnie was constantly picking on her, treating her with contempt. She was called a cunning cheater and a mean egotist. In the first case, she was absolutely right, she had never been ashamed of her cunning. And when she became Hordak's right hand, she was very mean, she couldn't deny that either. But it was one thing for them to have a private rivalry, which she could accept, and quite another for her friends and all of Etheria to be involved in the conflict. "What about Kyle and Rogelio ?" She knew from Scorpia's stories that the three of them had become very close by the end of the war. A bit weird, but nothing really surprising. After all, they grew up together and shared all the hardships and miseries of life in the Fright Zone. Besides, she had neither the right nor the intention to judge them, not for that at least. But if anything happened to Frosta because of Lonnie ... She wouldn't survive the next time they met.

And then there was Scarlett. She hardly remembered her friend with red hair. The girl was genuinely lazy and was constantly getting minor punishments that she didn't care about. However, she was smart enough to stay away from Shadow Weaver. Considering she was a sorcerer, it was a really good decision… There were grim rumors in the Fright Zone about what happened to Horde citizens who were discovered to have a talent for magic. They were going to be sent on Beast Island… at best. But it wasn't the cadet's newfound abilities that bothered her. She may not have liked sorcery, but she could deal with it. But what Doctor Moors had become and the new, completely unknown weapon at their disposal... and those allies that the scientist from nightmares had mentioned. This was a really serious problem that he had to let all the members of the alliance know about ... but in order to do that, they had to save Frosta first and get out of here.

Melog came to her from a reconnaissance trip. She patted her companion on the head and read the pictures he had sent her. She sighed and turned to the others.

“The situation is as follows. Melog found a passage outside.” Everyone was happy, but she added in a serious tone. “It is very narrow. Only Entrapta and I will be able to squeeze through, but I will with difficulty, and only because I have movable clavicles, the advantage of being a cat girl.” She smiled slightly and looked at the purple-haired woman, but she didn't even look at her.

“Entrapta , what do you think?” she asked her. Entrapta looked at her, and spoke in a calm voice, much calmer so than usual.

"I'm staying here, I'm pretty sure that if I think about it a bit... I have a feeling that the solution is at hand... Maybe we can reverse gravity..." She started looking for something in Alice again. she sighed.

"It's good that you're trying to help. It's always better than sitting on your ass doing nothing. But first of all, we must think about how we will free ourselves. Then we'll somehow reach the Silverwing and call for help, or we'll just fly for it." She calmly explained to her friend. The Former lady of Dryll covered her face with a mask and spoke in a hard voice.

“We're not leaving Frosta. We won't leave anyone else behind. Not this time.”

She pursed her lips and looked down at her toes. Entrapta was left behind in the Fright Zone during the mission to rescue Glimmer. Though the rebels had only left her because they believed the inventor was dead, Entrapta felt betrayed… which she later used diligently to recruit her for the cause of the Horde. The purple-haired woman had suffered a lot in the aftermath of these events, and she didn't want the same to happen to Frosta. The girl was perhaps brave, but also sensitive. It is unknown how he will endure being trapped alone in the dark, if he is still alive. "No, we can't think about that"

“Okay, Melog and I will go to Silverwing and notify someone in Brightmoon or Ice Palace. I'm the fittest of us all, and we can get there in one day if we work hard. You'll have enough supplies here for a few days. she said with a friendly smile and started packing.

“You know, maybe don't push yourself in your condition. We can wait a bit. Or just Entrapta will make up her mind and go alone after all. I'm sure I can do it too, this hand doesn't hurt that much. I may not be that young anymore, but I'm in great shape and I can pull my belly in. I know that Frosta is the most important right now, but can we rethink it?” Netossa said carefully.

“What do you mean by "My Condition". I'm fine…" replied the Grand Marshal, looking at the Lord of Armoria. Netossa sighed heavily.

"Well, in the Fright Zone probably didn't explain such things to you, but a pregnant woman shouldn't overextend herself." she explained to her.

For several heartbeats, she watched Netossa silently, mouth open, until she spoke.

“Pregnant... Why do you think I'm pregnant...”

Netossa looked at her, smiling radiantly.

“Well, you don't have to hide it from us anymore. You know, you have weird cravings, you have morning sickness, you're plotting something with Entrapta , because Adora is a First One and you're a Cat girl, and that can be a challenge.”

Lance and Georg's eyes lit up when they heard this news. They walked over to her and almost hugged her.

“It's amazing! You will be moms!” Lance called.

“And Bow and Glimmer will be uncle and aunt... Again.” said George thoughtfully.

Even Entrapta broke away from her calculations and ran to her.

“Child! It's great! How did you make them.” she exclaimed, and Netossa looked at her in surprise.

Only Melog looked as confused as she was. She took a deep breath and screamed.

“I'm not pregnant!” she said and everyone fell silent.

“So you're ill? Was that your secret? Netossa looked at Entrapta in horror. The inventor looked pleadingly at her, so she knelt down and said.

"I'm not sick and I'm DEFINITELY not pregnant. We only talked about it once or twice. No… it's just that… She closed her eyes and swallowed hard. “That I'm not from here ...” she said and clarified “I'm not from Etheri ...”

She finally said it aloud, though not in the company she had originally intended. But she felt relieved anyway.

Except for Entrapta , who had known all this for some time, the others looked at her with a mixture of shock and disbelief.

“But how ... after all, for a thousand years we were locked in Despondos ... No one could get here.” Netossa finally called, but George said in a pensive voice.

“It's not so sure, if we take into account some stories and legends ... We all know two people who ended up here despite being cut off from the rest of the universe ... One of them was summoned here by Light Hope, and in the case of the other, her involvement is highly probable.” he said, eyeing Entrapta meaningfully , but she just shrugged.

“Hordak... he doesn't remember much from before he came to Etheria, and what he remembers he can't trust. For example, he remembers a battle with warriors in black armor who summoned terrible monsters to help. Some were Imp-like, others monstrous and terrifying. I never encountered Light Hope while she was active, and after the sword was shattered and she deactivated, her core self-destructed so I couldn't examine her.” The purple-haired woman explained thoughtfully

She snorted contemptuously. When ancient artificial intelligence was mentioned

"You have nothing to regret, but it's definitely not that mean bitch that brought me here. I came here in a carton of applesauce from a place called Kesler. I have no idea who sane would send a baby to another planet by putting it in a cardboard box? It wasn't the cardboard box that got me suspicious. I did genetic testing, you know, the usual pre-marital testing. And… did it turn out that I'm not from Etheria. I asked Entrapta to confirm it, and it turned out that the tests were done correctly, so… I asked Scorpia for the medical records of the cadets. I found very little about myself. Only Dr. Moors, the same one we met today in his own canned persona, suspected something, but he was also interested in Adora , so Shadow Weaver sent him to the Drill border, which was an act of great mercy for her. As we've seen, he seems to have done worse to himself than Hordak's deputy could think of. Our "teacher" obviously didn't bother to look at my test results, but maybe that's a good thing. Sometimes I think that I wish she was alive just so I could see her face when she finds out what secret was right under her nose and she didn't see anything because of her arrogance and prejudice.” she laughed bitterly.

“Does… Adora know about this?” Netossa asked, who apparently had not yet recovered from the recent news. She shook her head and explained.

“I haven't had time to tell her anything. At first I wasn't sure about anything myself, and then she flew to Icarus , and I was gathering information. I promised myself that she would be the first to know everything as soon as she got back, but it turned out a bit differently… She smiled bitterly. There was silence for the next few minutes. She wasn't sure what else to add. So cuddle Melog behind the ears, and he was purring softly. Despite the difficult situation in which she found herself, she felt that her heart became lighter. Lance finally said.

“It must be hard for you.”

She thought for a moment and shook her head.

“Actually, no… You know, I didn't have a past outside of the Horde anyway. Was I abandoned by my parents in the Fright Zone, or was someone sent me here for a purpose known only to them, what does it change for me and Adora? We've always been together, and nothing's gonna change that.” she said firmly. It wasn't entirely true, because her origins might prove important in the future if they ever found whoever sent her here, but it was rather unlikely... "But this dream... No, it's just my fears, my fears that created it, nothing more".

She got up and walked over to the painting of the previous She-Ra and added.

"Actually, we're all strangers here." We all live on a planet that has been taken away from its rightful inhabitants. She clapped her hands suddenly and turned to the others with new energy in her voice.

“Enough of this idle talk! We have to save Frosta . We will not abandon anyone. Entrapta, do you still have that plasma heater packed?” She looked at the inventor, on whose face a wide smile appeared again.

“Oh, so we're going to make explosions after all?”

She smiled too and said.

“No, let's break some ice. At the top Melog could see the entrance to those side tunnels Lonnie had come in through, only it was blocked by a block of ice. If we melt it down, maybe we can get around this rubble. If not, we'll find another way. We will try until we succeed. Let's never leave anyone alone again. Nevermore”

She winced as Rogelio dragged stitch away, and regretted it as a spasm of pain ran all over her scarred face. The lizard growled apologetically, but she waved her hand to show him that he did nothing wrong.

"Even with a damaged tentacle, I'd better stitch you up." murmured Doctor Moors, sitting in the corner, welding a damaged limb.

“Not that I don't trust you, doctor ... but I don't fucking trust you.” She groaned, ignoring the pain.

You should, I'm a doctor. said the brain in the top hat, and burst into a surprisingly cheerful voice.

“You're a fucking talking can, not a doctor.” she groaned and let Rogelio treat her to the end . As she did so, she thought about recent events. “It was a failure. Damn failure." She thought as rage boiled in her veins. I should have known Catra would resist the staff's charm. She was chipped by Horde Prime, and after that Shadow Weaver certainly used mind controlling magic on her. I should have foreseen that too Kyle won't hit anything, she thought, looking at her blonde-haired friend. He avoided her gaze and just leaned against the wall and watched as she got under her feet. In his hand was the idiotic ornate sword they had taken from the two elderly men. They couldn't use it very well, but Kyle couldn't use properly anything at all. She gritted her teeth furiously. That sword was their only gain from the quest... In exchange, they lost Scarlet, their only sorcerer... and damn Catra clawed her face. "I forgot how sharp they are." She thought a bit absently. I hope it's not a fever, if it is, we're screwed.

They hid in one of the side corridors, which turned out to be completely intact. She had to admit that the whole disaster was at least partly her fault. She shouldn't have slammed her staff against the walls of the cave with such force. She shouldn't have given Rogelio that sonic weapon, she shouldn't have pissed Catra off with mind control, and most importantly, she shouldn't have gotten involved in this fight at all. Everyone advised her against it, but she didn't listen to anyone. And now Scarlet was missing and possibly dead. It wasn't even that she was their only sorcerer, and a damned valuable spy in Mystacor. She was her comrade-in-arms, her right-hand man, and…damn, her lover. In fact, she didn't even like her much. She was strange, repulsive in her own way, sometimes reminiscent of Shadow Weaver, Entrapta, or even Hordak. But she was their companion, a cadet who had shared the hardships of growing up in the Fright Zone under the watchful eye of a dark sorcerer. He won't leave her here to die.

" Kyle , show me that sword of yours," she ordered as Rogelio finished his treatment and saw herself in the shining surface of the blade. She didn't even flinch when she saw what Catra had done to her face. The three long scars looked horrible and hurt just as bad. There will be scars for sure. She had heard once that Shadow Weaver scars were the price of power. She thought it was nonsense. The scars were the price of defeat, a reminder of failure. She knew that lost limbs could be replaced these days, let alone remove scars. Even Adora, with her She- Ra's power in all her arrogant benevolence, would probably cure her if she would just humble herself and apologize for fighting for justice. Only… she wouldn't remove them. They will be a reminder of her ineptitude and mindless resistance.

“What we do? Kyle asked.” “I know it would be wisest to find a way out and get out of here. But we can't leave her here. Scarlet... I know she and I didn't like each other, but she's one of us. We can't leave her here.”

She closed her eyes and spoke in the most confident voice she could muster now.

“Of course we won't leave her. While Glimmer was being rescued, Entrapta was abandoned in the Peril Zone, and that's where all the trouble started. We are different, better. Nobody will be left behind. Never more”

In the depths of the earth

“Does anyone hear me!” She called to the wall of stones standing immovably before her. No one answered, except for an echo and a loud sigh from that lousy sorcerer. So she formed fists of ice and began to hit the boulders with them, but they didn't even budge. She snarled and created a great ice hammer and swung it furiously, not stopping even as dust started raining down on her head. She finally broke off and stood panting heavily.

"Stop yelling or you'll throw rocks on our heads and they'll crush us this time… maybe that's what you want?" asked the sorcerer in an irritated voice.

"Why would I want something so awful!" She screamed as she ran up to the red-haired woman. Scarlett sighed.

"At best, we'll starve to death. Although I saw some underground animals and mushrooms here, so maybe we'll have something to eat and there are several lakes and moisture drips from the walls, so we'll survive somehow.” she said, and the sorcerer laughed grimly. She remembered the spiderbird and the toothed frog and shuddered.

"But our sources of light will eventually run out and we'll be left alone here, trapped in impenetrable darkness... I told you that I don't know the spell that creates light...? I found them useless.” Scarlet laughed again, but the laugh was devoid of hilarity. She felt a cold sweat bead on her forehead. She hadn't been afraid of the darkness in a long time, but to be trapped in the dark for… forever? It was too terrible to think about. She looked hard at Scarlet and said pouring all the confidence she still had in her heart into her words.

“We'll get out of here! We will find a way out, if not ourselves, then our friends, yours and mine, will come to our aid!”

The sorceress smiled sadly.

“You have great faith in your friends!” she said thoughtfully. She pursed her lips and called out.

“Of course! They will always help me. I do not doubt about it!”

The sorceress snorted softly.

"They don't even know if we're alive, not to mention they probably have to take care of themselves." she said resignedly. “People behave like that.”

She shook her head furiously.

“Not true! We're not like that, and I'm sure your friends won't leave you here either!” she cried out because she didn't want to… and she couldn't believe anything else. Catra was so brave and strong, Netossa was almost always the best Rebel general, Lance and George read almost every book in the world, and Entrapta is the smartest person in the universe! And then there's Melog, a true Magicat. Why wouldn't they save us all... and then we'll drink hot chocolate... with marshmallows!” she explained to the sorcerer, although she was almost sure that they had no marshmallows. The red-haired woman thought for a moment and said smiling strangely sadly.

"Yes, indeed, my friends will certainly not fail to save their friend Scarlet." she said with a strange bitterness in her voice.

“You really talk really weird sometimes.” She muttered under her breath, but the sorcerer heard her and snorted.

"May our friends hurry before we run out of light or something worse finds us here." Scarlett murmured.

"Are you trying to scare me like some kid? I'm Princess Frosta, ruler of the Snow kingdom, even that stupid Horde Ultimate calls me the Dread Ice Bane! I'm not afraid of anything!” She shouted at the woman, who shook her head indulgently.

“If you knew as much of the dark secrets of the universe as I do, you wouldn't be so tough, especially in the ruins of a city built by an ancient race.” She heard the conceited amusement in the sorcerer's voice.

"And how would someone raised by the Horde know anything about such things?" Adora said the cadets didn't even know what a birthday was.” she said, holding her sides and trying to look down at the former member of the Horde, who looked at her with her green eyes.

"Who said I learned all this in the Horde? The universe is old and immeasurable, even Etheria hides dark secrets that the sages of Mystacor never dreamed of... On the other hand, our beautiful planet is a secret built on a secret based on lies mixed with distortion.” Scarlet said philosophically.

"You know, I didn't know Shadow Weaver very well, but I have a feeling she'd sound just like you." She looked sideways at the People's Rebel member, who smiled crookedly.

"I've been hearing it a lot lately, apparently there's something to it."

She winced at the sorcerer's words, then rolled up her sleeve and looked at her watch with the illuminated dial. They'd been here three hours now, and she wondered anxiously when the batteries would run out, when she'd empty her canteen and have to refill it with that stinking cave water, when she'd starve to hunt those terrible birds and toothy frogs...

“No, Catra will definitely not leave me here! She's my friend” she thought, though she wasn't so sure in her heart. Finally, she said some mean words to her, similar to the ones she had said to her at the very end of the war, when she didn't yet know that Cat Girl had joined the rebellion. Then she hit her with an ice fist very hard, and now she was very close to doing it again, having previously allowed Scarlet's magic to paralyze her and thus Lonnie badly injured Netossa's hand. In fact, she was imprisoned here through her own fault for not helping her friends in the fight, and she is the princess of the elements, the strongest of the invincible eight! “No, that's not true. I've never been a Dread Ice Bane. I'm just a little Frosta that no one remembers. Even my friends have probably forgotten about me." She thought bitterly as tears welled up in her eyes. She glared angrily at Scarlet. "It's your fault too! Yours and your stupid magic, she thought, and now she really wanted to punch her in the stupid red head!” Were it not for the fact that they were trapped here together and both sailed on the same ice floe, she would not fail to do it.

"Why don't we look around instead of standing here like these ice pillars?" she asked the sorcerer, who looked at her in surprise.

“That's a pretty good idea. But aren't you afraid that your friends or my friends will break through this wall and not find us?” Scarlet asked with bored curiosity.

"No, you know how good Catra's sense of smell is, you grew up together! And then there's Melog." she said to the sorceress, who looked a bit confused

“Yes, I remember Catry's sense of smell well, very well ...” said the red-haired woman, and hearing these words she shrugged her shoulders.

So together they set off into the impenetrable dark corridors.

Scarlett felt worse and worse. This place… its aura began to slowly overwhelm her. She felt as if invisible tentacles were entwining her soul and mind. Given where she was, it was highly likely. It could have been some sort of defense system created by the Elder Things to disable enemy sorcerers who dared cast spells in their city. Or maybe it was some astral entity that had broken loose when Entrapta was trying to hack the planet's geomantic web and was prowling the ruins of the ancient city. Though it's equally likely that it was fear. She was afraid that she would be imprisoned here for daemons knew how long, but also that she would not be able to return to her true, natural form. She didn't know if Lonnie would be willing to risk her life to save her. Scarlet was the only sorcerer the People's Rebellion had, but was that reason enough for anyone to put themselves at risk for her? After all, even the Scarlet that the cadets knew from the Fright Zone wasn't very popular, and Scarlet the Sorceress wasn't very trustworthy... But if Lonnie or anyone saw her in her true form… she loathed it herself, but it was the only thing she didn't feel as if she was walking in a foreign, uncomfortable skin. Once Lonnie learns her true identity, not only will she lose her position in the People's Rebellion, but she will also cease to be of use to Creeping Chaos, so it will have no reason to keep her promise, and the only person who was important to her will remain dead.

There was, of course, a problem with the Ice Princess. The girl radiated hope and blindly believed that her friends would save her… Perhaps she was right. After all, she was the princess and ruler of one of the greatest kingdoms and had a runestone. It was too valuable to just leave it here. On the other hand, even being a princess didn't protect against abandonment, Entrapta knew best.

But the girl will be a problem if she has to assume her true form. Even if he doesn't throw his fists at her, he can tell someone about her secret. So she seriously considered whether she might have to murder the girl. She may have been a brave warrior and princess of the elements, but with a lot of luck and a bit of trickery, she would be able to take Frosta's life... Only she wasn't sure if she could kill her in cold blood. She wasn't a murderer. She had already taken life, and sometimes, but always from an enemy who wanted to hurt her himself. And this girl had done nothing wrong to her, though she and Lonnie had attacked her and her friends. He was a good kid, honest and likeable, who had done nothing wrong in his short life. She would very much not want her dead, and hoped that Creeping Chaos would grant her this favor… though who in their right mind counted on the mercy of the Outer God?

“You think we'll meet these old thing here.” Frosta finally broke silence.

“Old things?” she asked, not following the girl's reasoning.

“You know, those conical things with wings. mean ones.” said the ice princess and snorted.

“Ah, you're talking about the Elder Things.” she said, understanding what the girl was talking about. "It's possible, though personally I'd be more afraid of the Shogoths."

“Who are Shogi?” Frost asked curiously.

“Shogoths are a servant race created by the Elder Beings to serve them as slaves. Many eyes and mouths, tentacles, an amorphous shape, in a word: horror.”

Frost made a sad face.

“But the many-eyed were so poor. Those Old Things enslaved them… It was kind of like the Prime clones… I know you and Lonnie don't like them, but a lot of them are quite nice. Wrong Hordak, Brother Blade, Mateo who works in Brightmoon's pastry shop. Makes delicious Eclairs. You know, maybe if Lonnie tried them ...” the girl explained, until finally Scarlet interrupted her.

“It's Lonnie who doesn't like clones, although I don't know how sincere this feeling is. My personal relationship with them is quite complicated.” she answered both truthfully and very euphemistically.

“Because you know, the clones also did terrible things because Horde Prime told them to. Maybe it was the same with these Shogis, only they just look a little scary, but maybe we are scary for them too? I can be quite scary, and so can Catra. Not to mention the whole Shadow Weaver thing, that one was terrible.”

She gnashed her white, even teeth, irritated by the direction this discussion was taking. She turned to the Ice Princess and growled sharply.

“You know what? When we meet Shogoth, you tell him that you want to be friends with him, and I'll start running as fast as I can. It will keep me alive and you will be tasty and everyone will be happy, including Shogoth.”

The girl looked at her askance.

“You know, you're different from the other cadets I've met.” she said with surprising thoughtfulness.

“What do you mean”” she asked carefully.

“I mean, I mean I only know Catra, Adora and Scorpia, but even now they don't know about normal things. For example, Catra is very smart, but she didn't know that an engagement is not the same as a wedding. And you seem to know more than most, even the very smart ones. You're like a learned sorcerer from Mystacor, but not as nice as Glimmer’s Papa and Auntie, just as mysterious and a little scary as in the old legends. You're actually a bit like the Shadow Weaver, minus the meanness, the mask, and the Scars.

Be careful girl, your thoughts are going to very dangerous places.

“Believe me, I can be very mean, especially to those who poke their noses into my affairs. she said as coolly as possible, hoping that in this way she would discourage the girl from investigating the truth, but Frosta just shook her head disapprovingly.

Finally, they reached a huge cave, in the middle of which was a large lake. It was so huge that she couldn't see the other shore. There were lots of mushrooms everywhere, and strange things she couldn't name. In the middle of the lake, or at least far from the shore, there was a strange, perfectly round island, reached by a narrow stone bridge. Or rather, a causeway, as if someone had lifted a strip of stones out of the water. However, the most important thing was what was on the island. It was a mining elevator, similar to the Drill ones, but it was made of crystal, like a structure she had once seen.

“This was built by the First Ones!” she exclaimed happily, but then added. "Though I don't know if we should be happy about it. They weren't as great and nice as we once thought. And that what Catra was saying… You probably didn't hear it… But maybe that's the way out then.” She walked towards the footbridge. Scarlet followed her with a slight hesitation. They were tearing through mushrooms and that weird lichen or whatever they were. She had the uneasy feeling that she was being watched. Strange creatures, like round legless mice with bodies almost like those of worms, buried themselves in the ground as she passed them. She really hated this place. As they got quite close to the stone causeway, she heard a strange scratching sound.

“What was that? she asked in a frightened voice. Scarlet turned and said.

"I think we've got company, and it's definitely not the kind we'd like." murmured the sorcerer. When she looked to the side. her companion was looking at, she saw dozens of these horrible bird-spiders running towards them, but these were bigger, much bigger, almost as big as she was. She created a great ice hammer.

"Are you going to fight them here now?" Scarlett asked incredulously.

“Well, I'm going to!” She replied to the sorcerer, trying to sound as brave as possible. There were just so many monsters , and they were really terrible! As soon as the first one approached her, she hit him with an ice hammer that sent him flying to the opposite wall.

“And that's how it's done.” she shouted, but then Scarlet screamed.

“But you sure don't survive in that way!”

She snorted at such cowardly words and crushed the nearest of the monsters to a bloody pulp, but the spiderbirds began to surround her and one of them shot a tongue at her and hit her cheek. She felt sticky wetness running down her face, and when Scarlet tugged on her arm, she didn't resist. They ran towards the dike. Every now and then she threw ice spikes behind her, knocking down groups of nasty things, but they didn't budge. When they reached the causeway, they had to slow down, Scarlet threw some magic missiles at the monsters and killed several of the creatures. While they were on the footbridge, she covered it with ice and formed an ice wall. They were halfway there when something jumped out of the water and jabbed her in the leg.

"Ouch," she screamed. She saw and saw a large penguin-like bird, but with a toothy jaw, which bit into her calf. The sorcerer threw a magic projectile at him and knocked him down. Then she took her hand, and together they ran to the island, though the pain in her leg was excruciating and tears of suffering filled her eyes. She created another wall of ice and froze the water around her so the water creatures couldn't attack her, while Scarlet walked over to the elevator and tried to start it.

"I told that saber-toothed penguins exist, I hope Catra believed me!" she cried, leaning on her only good leg.

"And did Catra or Adora tell you how to start the First Ones machines? Because if not, we're going to have to stick together."

She felt despair, but with a great effort of will she controlled it. She didn't want to die, especially in such a horrible way, but if she had to, at least let Scarlet save herself.

"You go. I…I'll stay here and try to hold back as long as I can." she called to the sorcerer, feeling the monsters pressing against the barrier she had created.

"Can't you just freeze the whole lake?" Scarlet said in an annoyed voice.

“I... I can't do it. I'm not as strong as the other princesses. I could never do wonderful things like them. I've never had the opportunity to develop my full powers because, you know, ice is just ice. Nothing worth noting. I'm just stupid Frosta, the kid on the throne. I'm just a walking failure.” She said and sniffled.

Scarlet stared at her blankly for a few moments, as if seeing her for the first time, and… she began to undress.

“Scarlett?” she asked confused. “What are you going to do? Do you want to fight them underwater? This is not a good idea!” she called to the red-haired woman, who had already stripped naked and arranged her clothes neatly to the side.

"Scarlet was never particularly physically fit, she would never carry you up the scaffolding to the very top. But her friend is a completely different story.” she said in an almost dead voice and arched back. She began to transform. She had grown taller, two meters tall, and wonderfully muscular. She had gray skin and long gray hair. Her hands were clawed, ears were large and pointed her eyes were solid green, and her face... looked like it was made of cracked porcelain. Her face reminded her of only one long-dead person. She was so scared that she almost fell into the water.

“W-who are you.” she asked, feeling that she was losing control over the ice barrier, while this strange person put on a fur coat and extended her hand to her.

"Who I am is not important right now, let's say I'm a failure to for now.” Said the strange being in a strong and deep voice and added. "Give me your hand and I'll carry you upstairs, but you have to trust me." She extended her hand to her. She hesitated for a moment, then offered her hand to this not-so-stranger.

After a few minutes her companion carried her up on the scaffolding. She must have been really strong because she didn't even get tired. They found themselves in a wide and dark corridor whose walls were covered with the symbols of the Primes. Everything here was made of the same crystal as the other First buildings. Entrapta once said that the structures of this ancient race had the ability to repair themselves or something. Anyway, everything here looked brand new. But the corridor ended in a lump of ice on one side, as if the glacier itself had shattered it, and the other led to a room, large and wide, in which was a kind of swimming pool. In the block of ice, she saw a woman trapped in the ice. The desiccated corpse of another woman leaned against the wall of the corridor, looking as if she was staring at her companion trapped in the ice. The person she had known as Scarlet burst into a deep, bitter laugh.

"Looks like we'll be joining them here soon, unless we choose to be eaten..." She said in a hopeless voice.

Pain of Heart and Soul

Chapter Notes

See the end of the chapter for notes

She watched the fight on the roof, her clawed hands clenched angrily. She knew what Calamity was capable of. Her ward could be cruel in a way beyond imagination, the Grayskull family experienced it firsthand. But what was happening now... Calamity was chasing Captain Moonshadow, smiling madly and singing.

“Swallow: Black dagger, torn from the breast of the wind.” sang the blond-haired creature, and carried out subsequent attacks, which the pirate captain barely avoided. She had no idea what had gotten into Moonshadow's mind… or rather Queen Angela, that she was trying to kill Adora. Apparently, she did not remember the existence of She- Ra , although it must be admitted that even she did not realize the full capabilities of her ... daughter. At any rate, in her infinite poetic meanness, Calamity had decided to take the opportunity to murder Glimmer's mother, and all she could do was watch helplessly through the eyes of her shadows.

“Swallow: Black diamond, thrown here by the devil.” shouted her ward , when she once again cut the pirate's clothes, leaving another bleeding wound. They were standing on the roof of a tall building right now, and Moonshadow had nowhere to run.

“For not knowing the nest, for cursing beauty” she sang the last verse and was getting ready to deal the final blow when suddenly an energy weapon blast hit her knee, and the former queen fired a Solarian flare into the face of the aristocrat. And then she wrapped herself in wings and disappear in a flash of light. Calamity roared in impotent fury as she realized she was left alone in the pouring rain...

But unfortunately, she wasn't alone

“Was it magic?” asked the boy who was hiding during the storm in a booth made of corrugated metal that was placed on the roof. Lady Cala turned to him, the flare scorching half of her face, but the wounds were already healing up at lightning speed.

“Yes, it's a powerful and ancient magic, but you know? I'll show you something just as wonderful” Calamity said , intending to do something terrible. She could do nothing, nothing, if only because of her deal with Nyarlathotep . All she could do was witness his death, which was another crime that weighed on her conscience.

Eti came to her friends before the blonde managed to return, or rather the BLONDE. She hoped that Stinka wouldn't come back, after the shots she'd been inflicted with the winged captain , it would be a miracle if this bitch could walk. Although in her experience the gods usually sided with such bitches, there was little she could do about it.

All her friends were alive and well. Lilka was doing the classic and traditional orc victory dance, or so she called it, which was jumping up and down and shouting random things. Alatar was showing something on his datapad and explaining something to the Sting, and Bina was talking about something with the Veggie , gesticulating chaotically as if she was explaining herself. Something similar was done by the Smarty and Steeleyes only with the commander of the guard. Even the itel looked pleased. Fist knelt worriedly at the Sparkle Hand, which seemed to be frightened. The others acted as if they had triumphed, even though they had lost the great captain Wingy. She turned off the cloaking field and walked over to her friends.

“Where have you been?” Bina asked as soon as she saw her.

“Well, in the city, and where else would I be?” she replied in an innocent voice. Their captain looked at her suspiciously, but then waved her hand away. Paying no attention to her at all, she walked over to Sparkle Hand and asked her.

“Are you all right, Sparky?”

The deaf girl shook her head

“Yes, but when the explosion flashed, I lost my sight for a moment and I was very afraid. It's so stupid to be blind and deaf” the girl said and laughed nervously.

Itel snorted contemptuously.

"If you hadn't been standing like that idiot and staring at Adora... That She-Ra... if you hadn't been staring... You'd be fine." Itel said. Fist and Bina gave her a reproachful look, but the elf made little of it.

“Leave her alone Itel.“ she growl surprisingly sharply at the solarian. Alatar said to Sting "It's complicated" thinking she couldn't hear him, but she got up and turned to Dragonkin and said in an offended tone.

“It's nothing complicated. I like Sparkle Hand. Itel likes me and is jealous of me, and Alatar likes Itel, but he got something like a brush from her... “ when she said that, both girls turned red and Dragonkin straightened his tail in embarrassment. She didn't understand what they meant.

“Yes, it's very complicated. Even more than with Rogelio , Kyle and Lonnie, or with Adora and Ca ...” she did not finish because the thunder struck the not so distant temple. “Jeez, when I throw them, they don't seem so loud.”

“Is she always like this... Luminous and Rainbow, so amazing.” Fist said with reverence. For follower of Iomadae, BLONDE must have looked to her like an incarnation of an Inheritor, an avatar of the Goddess walking the earth. It must have been a huge shock for her.

“Oh, when she defeated Horde Prime she had much more power.” Perfuma said. The Wrongdak nodded and said with delight, though not with religious fever as with the mercenary .

"She banished Horde Prime from my brother's body and annihilated him... And changed Velvet Glove in a big tree…”

“"That last one sounds strange..." Bina said carefully.

“She is at her strongest when she is with her beloved, Cat ... “ Perfuma began explaining, but did not finish, because BLONDE and Stinkaemerged from between the streams of rain. They both looked shocked and distraught. Though most likely the aristocrat was only pretending. Then she saw what Odor was holding in his hands ...

“Angela... Queen Angela. She... did something terrible.” BLONDE said in a broken voice.

Calamity learned what fear is. No, not fear, but horror. Horror of what might happen when Nyarlathotep finds out how much she has jeopardized his plans. Though most likely the Great Outer God, Creeping Chaos was fully aware of what she had done. Well, chasing Moonshadow wasn't the best idea. She acted on impulse, after all, she hated Glimmer far less than she hated Catra and Adora… Though making her suffer the loss of her mother again was such a tempting prospect.

In fact, she was afraid of She- Ra . She had no idea she had so much power. And with power aimed directly at beings like her. She felt a piercing pain, also for the first time in her life, piercing her wonderful and perfect body as soon as she got close to She-Ra. If she were a worse creature, like those Icari cubs she carried in her arms, she would scream in agony. But the suffering was more than compensated by the despair of Adora walking beside her, and she had a lot more surprises in store for her, oh yes ...

As she stood in front of everyone and the vile usurper said in a broken voice that "Queen Angela has done something terrible," she stared at the disgusting feline creature that gave her an unseen glare behind her tinted goggles. She knew she had shot her in the leg, and she knew it too, but neither of them could do anything about it, the vile cat out of fear, and she because of the ridiculous deal Shadow Weaver had made with an Outer God.

“What, but... How?” said an twisted woman called Scorpia .

Normally, the way you kill meddling brats, she wanted to yell into that dumb snout, but instead she smiled sadly, as befitted a righteous and concerned aristocrat.

"I fought her on the rooftops, trying to disarm her, but… She grabbed that boy and covered herself with it, then threw him down off the roof and ran away… I wasn't fast enough and couldn't save him." She lowered her eyes and laid the body on the cobblestones. Then suddenly Adora remembered something and walked over to the boy and touched his forehead with her hand

"Once it's worked, maybe it's not too late either." she said, and she shone with a bright and warm light that warms souls, but she felt as if someone had set fire to every cell of her body. It was only with the greatest effort of will that she managed to stop herself from howling in anguish. And then the boy's chest began to move, and his body wasn't so scarred anymore. Everyone, even her, took a deep breath for the sake of it all, but Adora looked exhausted.

“That's amazing even for you.” Scorpia said delightedly. Meanwhile, she experienced a new feeling, another one that day, panic. If the kid says who hurt him... He won't win against She-Ra. Maybe against these two... Although the idiot with the sting was strong and had really great power, so she could be dangerous. However, for all her perfection and unrivaled power resulting from the gifts of the Key and the Gate and the Creeping Chaos, she would not have the slightest chance against the princess of power. She decided that if she was to die fighting She-Ra, she would kill as many as she could first, let Adora's conscience bear it. First, he'll start with the feline freak

However, when the boy opened his eyes and looked at her, she realized that there was nothing to worry about. He did not recognize her, probably lost his memory as a result of the impact or simply death. From what she'd heard, it was common in these situations. He won't remember what happened for a long time, if ever.

“Only the greatest mystics can bring the dead back to life.” whispered Rechiza in astonishment.

“Do these things happen in yor part of the galaxy?” Perfuma asked incredulously, but Lashunti shook her head.

“Very rarely, except in the Eoxian way” Rechiza explained, and when the three women looked at her without understanding, she added. “You know, necromancy, undead things like that.” she explained.

“Lady Rechiza, this kind of thing was not practiced here.” Wrongdak interjected.

"Unless in the Shadow Weaver fairy tales... She was my... teacher... terrible person, but she's gone now." she sighed and said. "Someone take care of him, and we need to talk about what happened here." said Adora, returning to her natural form, worthy only of sheer contempt.

They stayed under the roof. All but Eti, Dilayla , and partly Adora were soaked, but that could wait. Bina had sent all her wards to their wacky armored personnel carrier, though the spoiled solarian protested. Now they could discuss more important matters.

"Did you know the Queen… Did you know who Captain Moonshadow is?" Adora asked with pain painted on her face, which made her almost attractive.

"I don't know what you mean by 'who Captain Moonshadow is' and forgive me, but I don't think we know the context..." Bina explained with her arms crossed over her chest. She clearly didn't want to be here, which was hardly surprising.

"Maybe I'll explain it first, before we get to other things, who Captain Moonshadow is, or what you call her, Queen Angela, and what we have in common with her. Captain Moonshadow was a prisoner of the Azlanti Star Empire, a powerful Empire that is based on the Idea of the supremacy of the human species, like me, Adora, Perfuma, Bina, or Rosie…" she said, stretching a few details a bit. Now the happy moment was approaching." she had to describe everything in such a way as to cause as much pain as possible to the vile usurper. "They sent her, for reasons unknown to us, to the prison planet Jadehell, to a labor camp. It's a scary place, where every plant produces some toxic fumes, and fungi spray deadly spores there." She was pleased to see that the Perfuma was slightly green. "Prisoners work there without protective clothing gathering rare plants, and they don't survive there more than a few months, although at the end they are said to pray to all the gods for death." She added some color to the story, for educational purposes, of course. "Such a place will rob the heart of even the noblest person. I wouldn't wish this fate even on my worst enemy. Moonshadow managed to get out of prison, although it cost her damaged lungs and most likely the loss of her arm. She became a ruthless pirate, imprisoning and torturing her enemies. She is merciless and cruel, instilling fear throughout the galaxy. Mr. Arkan Tar can confirm my words because it was from him that I learned all this." She looked meaningfully at Verthani, who coughed nervously and quietly confirmed her words. "Though she was probably a wicked woman by then anyway, because it takes something really awful, like betrayal by those closest to her, to bring her down to that level of wickedness." She shook her head in mock regret. Joyful choirs played in her heart as she saw the spasm of pain on Adora's face, a little justicefor such a vile thief of destiny. Bina gave her a suspicious look but only shrugged and said.

“I haven't had a bad word to say about her so far. We met on Saltmarsh, it's such a backwater world. She wanted to see Wrongdak there, then offered us protection on the flight here. So far, she has performed well with our agreement. She even saved my kids once. I can't say much about her past. All I know is that she had a husband and a daughter, but she lost them. Well, such experiences will change everyone, and for the worse.”

Wonderfully, though unintentionally, you helped me in my quest for justice, she thought as she saw Adora's face and barely suppressed a joyful smile.

“They are alive. Her daughter is my friend Glimmer, Queen Etheri Brightmoon. And her father is the widower king Mikah ... I mean, not the widower king anymore. Queen Angela... she led the Rebel against the Horde and then there was...a terrible accident that almost killed us...She sacrificed herself for all of us...We thought she was dead and she...is alive, but all that has happened to her is just me wine." She buried her face in her hands and began to cry, Scorpia and Perfume hugged her.

“I… didn't know it was her. I've never seen her before, not even in a photo. She was a bit scary so I never thought it could be Glimmer's mom. If I had known that…" said Wrongdak and almost cried too. By Shub- Nigurath and Glaaki, is being a crybaby contagious? she thought with contempt, but also walked over to the woman and put her hand on her shoulder.

"Ehem, I know it's not the best time, but it's time for us.” Arkantar interjected. Verthani adjusted his glasses and continued. "We're not princesses or anything, but we're connected to a pirate who tried to destroy this town and practically murdered a child. Even with your intercession, we may be in serious trouble, at best they will stop our ship for a few weeks.” When he mentioned it, Bina suddenly turned pale. Very interesting. "Anyway, we'd better get out of here quickly. And to Mr. Wrongdak, I also advise you to join us. They don't like clones here.” he said, and Bina nodded her head.

“Yes, that's a good idea... Let's go!” Bina tugged at the dull clone's shoulder with a hint of panic in her voice.

"But I have to..." Wrongdak said, but Adora looked at everyone with strangely absent eyes.

"I can't stay here either... I was supposed to beware of the shadow of moon and... Catra!" she cried out in fear and transformed into She- Ra again and stuck the blade into the ground. A multicolored light flashed, and she again felt as if someone was burning her alive. When the light disappeared, Adora was no longer here either.

"Oh, that Catra is her fiancée..." Bina laughed and pulled Wrongdak out of the room. The others left as well, leaving Scorpia and Perfume behind .

Itel felt an excruciating pain in her heart as she saw Eti and Rosie talking in sign language. She loved the cat girl, but she couldn't give her what the deaf girl could give her. Joy of life, positive attitude to life, joy and serenity. She pursed her lips tightly and thought. Okay, so be it. I still have a mission. She's the only one that matters. And she walked out of the crush unstoppable.

She had to admit that she had perfectly managed to maneuver Bina into sending her to the vehicle. She looked for one of the local interplanetary newscasters. The building was new, but mostly used Prime's technology . She handed the sender the equivalent of two hundred credits in Vescarian coin.

“Broadcast it on the given frequency every eight hours for ten days in the given direction. Shadow cats welcome. The Treasure is guarded by Skittermander- hearted dragons . But beware of marauding wolves she commanded. The Shadows of Tarak will come.

As soon as Calamity entered the ship, along with the rest of the crew, she ordered her charge to go with her to their room. As soon as the blond woman closed the door, she tried to slap her, but the young woman grabbed her hand in the air, holding it in an iron grip. Calamity wagged her finger and said.

"Be careful my dear, I'm not like one of your wards who you could beat over the head when you weren't in the mood." Her voice was wonderfully clear and gentle.

“Every one of my wards, even Kyle, had more sense than you. In your childish sadism, you have jeopardized the mission.” she snarled , but Calamity just rolled her eyes.

"He's just a dead kid, no big deal, anyway, he's alive thanks to your She- Ra's power. And you shouldn't be following anyone with those your shadows, because, you know, someone might notice.” The girl explained with an indulgent smile.

What Calamity said threw her off balance for a moment, but then she regained it. She- Ra's power must have been immense to defeat Horde Prime , and she knew a great deal about coming back from the dead, after all, and by her own experience. She smiled nastily and spoke in an almost affectionate voice.

"If you've had to kill the kid, and it wasn't necessary because it was enough to intimidate him, at least you could have disposed of the corpse instead of blaming Glimmer’s mother. For her, this is a personal matter and believe me, she will not fail to investigate, and then the truth may come out. Not to mention all your chasing… Fortunately, I'm not the one you have to explain to.” She made a mystical gesture and the whole room was enveloped in darkness. She moved aside so that her ward could see what was in the middle of the room. From the obsidian tabletop rose a dy that slowly formed into the form of Carsai called the King. Calamity fell to her knees, and the figure spoke in a voice that withered the soul.

“We feel so disappointed in you Calamity ...”

Chapter End Notes

I used fragments of Stan Borys Poem The Swallow.

Breaking the Ice

“Alright Entrapta, turn it on!” she called to the inventor, adjusting her makeshift goggles. The stove was tied to a stalactite by a long rope that Lance and George were holding. Entrapta calibrated the device and she operated it. Only Netossa was annoyed because because of her shattered hand, she couldn't help, she just sometimes shouted random orders and generally got mad at everyone. The suspended burner from the converted stove was horribly unwieldy, and she considered asking Entrapta to construct shoes that would allow her to hang from the ceiling. It took them more than three hours to implement the plan, though the most time took them to install the ropes and handles on the ceiling of the cave, to which the ropes that hung it and the converted stove were attached. Entrapta needed no security. After all, she came from Dryll, the largest and most mysterious mountain range in all of Etheria. Though as she watched the purple-haired woman work with absolute concentration, she realized she didn't really know her family's origins. She's never met anyone like her, or even anyone else born in Castle Crypto. Another Etheria secret waiting to be solved, but that's a matter for the future, for now they had more important things on their minds.

Fortunately, they were prepared for a mountain trip, so they took a lot of climbing equipment. Worse with welder uniform, and she could only hope she wasn't getting married wearing dark glasses, though Glimmer said it made her look sexy...

Finally got the machine running and it worked. She melted the ice and saw jets of hot water running down the walls and steam billowing on the ceiling. Gradually, they increased the range of the flames, and great chunks of ice began to break off and thud against the bedrock and walls of the cave.

“Be careful up there!” Netossa yelled as she nearly got crushed by a block of ice bigger than her. However, the work went smoothly, and though Melog watched everything anxiously with his ears flattened, after a quarter of an hour it was all over and they didn't die in the explosion... although Lance and George were lowering the stove back, it was a bit battered.

“Okay, me and Melog are going to look for Frosta.” Seeing their surprised or, in the case of Netossa, indignant looks, she added. "Netossa has a broken arm, Entrapta will be needed to pilot the Silverwing, and Lance and George, well, you're great librarians, but..." She trailed off meaningfully, and George sighed and said sadly.

“Yes you are right. Find Frosta safe and sound, and look for our sword, it's a treasured family heirloom... And watch out for Lonnie!”

“Better let Lonnie watch out for me.” she said, smiling nastily.

First she bandaged her leg as best she could, then groaned as she fell to the floor.

“We're trapped.” she said with despair in her voice.

"Apparently, though probably not for long. The prospect of becoming hunters now seems far less enticing than before”. said the strange creature sitting down next to no.

"Maybe those creatures downstairs will go away." she asked hopefully.

“Maybe, but it doesn't change much. Sooner or later, such or more terrible monsters will catch us.” said this strange creature.

“And our friends?” she asked, feeling resignation wash over her. Not-anymore-Scarlet laughed bitterly.

"I think it would be better for them if they gave up looking for us, or else they'll be found by something terrible."

She felt a cold sweat trickle down her cheeks. Not only will they die, but they will also take their friends with them. It's almost as if she murdered them herself! She got up and looked around. She needed something to occupy her mind. So she limped over to the desiccated corpse, but the no-no-Scarlet stood up immediately and said a warning.

“Be careful, in such a place they can rise from dead!”

At first she wanted to tell her not to talk nonsense, but she remembered the terrible story Catra had told her and walked to body with the utmost care. After a brief inspection, she spotted a small snowflake hairpin, similar to her runestone. She called the person over and showed him the pin, and the other person laughed hoarsely and said.

“It must have been your predecessor, another Ice Princess. Isn't that ironic. That you will die next to her?”

She listened with one ear. She looked from the desiccated corpse to the body trapped in the ice. She wondered what had happened here, who these women were.

“You know, I think they were friends, or even a couple.” she stated after a moment, and this strange person accompanying her shrugged her shoulders.

“Who can know? You certainly know more about friendship and love than I do.”

She frowned listening to this person and said with surprise in her voice.

“Aren't you Lonnie friends?

“Scarlet and Lonnie spend some qualify time together, but that's it. I've never had a friend or anyone close to me, except maybe one, but she died during the occupation.” Said creature.

She immediately felt a surge of sympathy for this unfortunate creature.

“I'm so sorry for your loss...”

The person looked at her and waved her hand

“It's not your fault. What happened is done.”

"Actually, how am I supposed to address you?" Because I think we're going to spend some time together here, and it could be quite embarrassing.

The person stared at her for a while, considering her answer, and finally said.

"I shouldn't be telling you this, but since we're going to die anyway, you can call me Nightgale and I use the pronouns She/ Her ." She offered her clawed hand. She smiled at her and squeezed her hand.

“Nice to meet you Nightgale ... You know, you look quite familiar, as if someone mixed Hordak with Shadow Weaver... Hyyy . Are you their daughter? Does Entrapta know about you? Or Hordak? And how did they do you? It must have been really awful though.” She was talking to the stunned woman.

“I'm not their child. Not in that sense, anyway… Hordak crossed his DNA with Shadow Weaver after banishing Catra to the Crimson Wastes to be his new right- hand… But he banished me when he knew Horde Prime would arrive. He called it a failure, an abomination Entrapta and Shadow Weaver never knew about me, but it didn't matter. I'm living Scarlet's life, and it's a really good life. Better not to think about Nightgale as she never existed.” The sorcerer said in a depressed voice.

She really felt sorry for the poor woman. She couldn't imagine what it was like to hide in someone else's skin all her life. To be lonely, rejected by the whole world and knowing that when others find out the truth, they will hate you. Even her own father disowned her. "I'll find you, Hordak, and I'll punch that stupid head of yours" she thought, flushing with anger, and said to her companion when she had calmed down a bit.

"You know, you're quite pretty, and also very strong and very athletic, and you're a sorcerer, which means you can use your own magic as if you were your own runestone." You have nothing to be ashamed of. Tell Lonnie, Kyle, and that lizard… Rogelio . They will definitely accept you!" She was absolutely sure of what she said. Nightgale smiled sadly.

"If only anything in life were that simple." said the sorcerer gloomily. – In my veins flows the blood of two people most hated by the cadets. Besides, I tricked them all, especially Lonnie. She's not one to forgive easily."

She thought for a moment and said with delight.

"Then you can come to us. You don't have to meet Hordak , but you'll meet your half-sister, she's so sweet, and Entrapta will be a wonderful stepmother... And actually Catra and Adora are your stepsisters too, and all the clones are your uncles. You have a huge family, you're not lonely."

This time Nightgale burst into laughter, genuine and loud, echoing throughout the room.

"Oh Frosta , no one has made me laugh so much in a long time." Nobody since…" She looked sad for a moment, but then she smiled again and said. "I will consider your offer." Now why don't we search this place, because seriously, it's stupid to die here.

So they looked around this place. Nightgale stated that the ancestor of the Ice Princess must have died of blood loss, judging by the wounds she received and judging by the small picture pendant, her name was either Elsa or Anna. They found nothing else interesting, except for a strange pink crystal, which she decided to give to the sorcerer, who did not own any jewelry. In the second room there was this big pool, but the most interesting thing was the crystal hanging from the ceiling, it sparkled with multicolored light. For a moment she wondered why she had the feeling that she had seen him somewhere before. Only after a few moments did she understand what he really was.

"It's the same crystal those nasty Old Things used to enslave the many-eyes!" she exclaimed indignantly.

“Apparently the First ones were also interested in this technology.” Nightgale said anxiously looking at the pool and the walls in it.

"Because the First ones liked to do terrible things and they loved crystal objects… though it looks more like a rainbow icicle. I know much about ice ...” she explained to her new friend.

And then a red light flashed and a woman's, though rather artificial-sounding, voice was heard.

“Attention! Intruder detected! Activation of defense systems. Summon a Cleansing Bioroid to activate combat functions.”

“I did not do anything!” she called, and summoned ice fists.

“Me neither!” cried the sorceress in a voice full of horror.

And then the pool began to fill up. At first she thought it was mud, but then it became a great gooey creature with dozens of eyes and mouths. It also had great tentacles, thicker than the branches of a tree.

“Shogoth.” whispered Nightgale in absolute horror.

“Many-eyes!” She exclaimed happily.

Several eyes looked at her, but most were directed at the crystal or icicle.

“So we're going to die.” said the sorcerer resignedly. But she looked at the crystal and smiled triumphantly.

“Not at all. I have a plan.” she said, and limped to the edge of the pool.

- Hi, I'm Princess Frost. She waved a friendly hand to the multi-eyes . “I wanted to ask you for help, but I will help you too. I'm a friend of She- Ra'a , you know, that huge light woman. You remember her? She was good to you. She set you free. I know those mean cronies enslaved you, as did the Primes, but you know what? I'll set you free, and you'll help me get back to my friends. And then maybe we'll be friends! she said to Wieloeye and, despite Nightgale's protests , she threw ice bullets at the crystal, smashing it into tiny pieces. There was a roar…

“What do you see there, Kyle?” shouted Lonnie, her voice indistinct from her wounds.

“For now, I see darkness, I see darkness.” he replied to his commander and girlfriend at the same time. He heard the angry growl of the General's Companion.

“That's I can see! Would you look around?” The woman yelled, and he hastily obeyed. He squeezed through a narrow corridor full of slimy Mushrooms and clumsy spiders or crabs, he wasn't sure what these creatures were, but they reminded him too much of their new cosmic friends. He volunteered here, only he or an imp could get in here, even Dr. Moors would have problems here, though maybe that's just what he said. He didn't like, and to be honest, he was a little afraid of a brain in a cilinder. He didn't want Imp to put himself at risk, and he felt he should somehow make amends for his failure in their last fight. He never liked to fight, but he was the reason Lonnie got hurt. He didn't take the strange weapon from Mi-Go with him, because he preferred to keep his hands free, and besides, he thought it was quite disgusting, so he only took the sword that they had taken from these two strange men . He liked the weapon very much, it was covered with strange glowing writing that he could somehow read. The inscription read "Sword of Power ". A strange name for a sword, but whatever swords were called, he never had one, never even held one. Hordak supposedly considered fencing weapons worthy of primitive savages or something, and they had no real lessons in swordsmanship. But if Adora could do it and even became a hero of the galaxy after only training with a staff, he had no such ambitions.

He was finally on the other side of the tunnel, came out covered in dirty slime and cobwebs, but at least he wasn't bitten. He stretched his bones contentedly and was about to shout to Lonnie that it was all right when he felt a hand on his shoulder and heard a familiar voice.

“Hey Kyle”

Catra looking at him seriously. Something growled behind him . He glanced in that direction. This strange and half-transparent magical cat was glaring at him.

“Oh, hey Catra.” He said with a friendly smile. He hoped the former cadet didn't resent him for the recent fight and for shooting at her.

“Kyle! Is there someone with you? Lonnie asked, but Catra motioned for him to keep quiet. He wasn't going to call Lonnie anyway, he'd want her to come down here and get stuck, or worse, come here and start fighting Catra, and that would end up really bad.

“No, I just got scared of something. he said, knowing that this explanation would sound plausible.” Catra motioned for him to follow her. After a while they found themselves in a large room of blue stone, covered with these strange star inscriptions proclaiming that this is the local terminal of the Planetary Archives Heart Gift .

“I hate the ruins of the First ones.” said his old friend from the Fright Zone.

These are the inscriptions of the First ones he thought in surprise, but Catra turned to him.

"What are you doing here?"

He threw up his arms.

“I'm helping look for Scarlet. She's our friend after all.” He explained in a slightly saddened tone. Catra nodded and said.

“And I Frosta, but I only found you, but it wasn't difficult at all. Squeezing through that shaft, you groaned and moaned so much that you sounded like you were being born again.” He blushed in embarrassment, but Catra smiled kindly at him and added. “They're both alive. I sensed by the smell that they were here, but they have gone somewhere and now I am looking for them.

He felt an overwhelming relief fill him. He was glad Scarlet was alive, but he didn't want anything bad to happen to Frosta either, though he was afraid of her. He wiped the sweat from his forehead and rested his hand against the wall. Only now did he notice that there was a hand reader or something. A blue light flashed and a woman's voice rang out.

“Administrator detected.” she spoke, and suddenly a hologram materialized in front of them. It showed a girl his age or a little younger with a short ponytail and wearing a formal dress who smiled at them and said.

“Hi, I'm Planetary Archives Heart Gift. May I help you.”

When this strange hologram appeared, although he thought it looked quite nice, Catra suddenly bristled, her tail became fluffy, and a growl escaped from her throat. Magical Cat turned red. Seeing this, he drew his sword, and then a red light flashed and the voice said.

“Attention! Intruder detected! Activation of defense systems. Summon a Cleansing Bioroid to activate combat functions.”

“What happened?” he asked in a scared voice.

"As always, the First One's damn AI is after me. Run away!” Catra called, dragging him behind her. Heart Gift's saddened gaze drove them away.

She's forgotten what it's like to fight together with Kyle ... Doing anything with Kyle together. The blond-haired former cadet keeps tripping, so she had to hold him up all the time, instead of running on all fours limbs or riding Melog, and they would have escaped without a problem. She considered putting Kyle on her companion's back, but he would most likely fall immediately.

“Catra, what exactly are we running from?” her old friend asked as she helped him up again.

“Spiders Kyle. Giant murderous mechanical spiders.” she said sharply, hoping to scare him and make him run faster.

The blond looked around in surprise.

“But there are no spiders here ...” he said...

She was about to tell him to stop asking stupid questions, but then she heard a loud buzzing sound.

“Aren't they giant mosquitoes?” Kyle asked anxiously.

“Mosquitos?” she asked unconsciously, and Melog flattened his ears.

“You know, blood-sucking flies. explained the blonde.

“I know what Kyle's Mosquitoes are!” she snapped at him, wondering how often Lonnie wanted to murder him.

“Good thing they aren’t bees. Lonnie is allergic to bee venom.” Kyle wondered Constantly she thought, but didn't even comment on what her friend had said. They continued running ahead, but the attackers were just coming, they really looked like metal mosquitoes with huge crystal eyes of red color. Their stings were sharp as spears, but some green liquid was dripping from them, so it was probably poisonous. Wonderfully. The first one flew to them, but then she jumped on him and shattered his eyes. But more were coming, hundreds of them. She wondered where I should run to. It would be easiest if she went back to her friends, but then she would expose them to the attack of these monsters. The mosquitoes attacked them constantly, and she and Melog, red with anger, destroyed them one by one, but they kept coming. As she made another dodge, she stumbled and fell painfully to the ground, and the three monsters were about to impale her through when Kyle slashed with his sword, cutting all three in half. She looked at him in disbelief. Only one weapon could do such a thing, but that was only Kyle .

"You have this power…" she said cautiously, but Melog gratefully brushed against him. However, they had lost some precious moments now, and the monsters were closing in on them more and more. It was bad, very bad, and she knew they couldn't count on anyone to save them because they were the rescue team themselves.

Then they heard a great rumble, as if a large amount of something heavy was rolling through the cave. A huge amorphous shape emerged from the darkness. It mainly consists of fodder, eyes and tentacles that captured these terrible mosquitoes. After a while, they were all destroyed... Only now they faced a much more terrifying one.

“It's Shogoth!” said Kyle , who was terrified, but then she heard Frosty's absolutely indignant voice .

“It's not Shogi, it 's Many-eyes!” she cried, and the giant monster lifted the tentacle in which it gently held the Ice Princess.

“How do you like my new friend?” she exclaimed proudly

Part three - Planet of secrets -Sorrowflame

The battle began suddenly.

Taurus was the most industrialized planet ruled by clones still loyal to their dead ruler, not his heirs or rebels. They were alone, so they were an easy target, and most importantly, very valuable, because there was a shipyard there. That's why he chose it as the first target... of a stabilization mission. The enemy didn't have much forces here, just four standard Galactic Horde cruisers. To this you had to add twice as many ships of the destroyer rank and a few smaller ships controlled by simple AI. The main problem was that the enemy ships had a lot of firepower, and the Fearless Armada couldn't afford to loses, not at this stage of the war ... It mean stabilization missions.

The first shot belonged to the battleship Glory of the Fallen, whose accurate shot from her main weapon, a powerful particle beam capable of conducting orbital bombardments, may have decided the outcome of the engagement. He took the shields off the first cruiser, and the plasma cannon and antimatter missiles damaged it badly enough to put it out of combat. Necessary Measures, the Hellknight Cruiser led the attack on the next one and, along with the cruisers Goldsun and Silvermoon , caused it to burst into flames, mainly due to the hellfire torpedoes. At that time, the spacecraft carriers launched fighters that intercepted enemy drones. The combat was fierce, the Horde Fleet lacking coordination but making up for it with firepower. He couldn't afford to prolong the fight unnecessarily, but that's why he prepared a plan. Invincible and the torpedo ships took cover in the shadow of the moon and caught up with the enemy from behind, where he had deployed most of his shield energy to cover the front. They fired a volley of torpedoes and shells. When he saw on the holographic display that the last enemy cruiser was destroyedin a nuclear explosion, he almost smiled, for he had won his first victory, but it was only the beginning and his situation had become much more complicated.

The occupation of the shipyard was a mere formality. The planetary invasion was much more challenging. Taurus had a single mountainous supercontinent , inhabited mainly by relatives of the Nuar and Ghorans , who apparently simultaneously colonized the planet thousands of years ago. There had been an uprising on the planet since the fall of Prime, and the Loyalists now controlled only a relatively small but highly industrialized region, where more than half the population lived. The main rebel advance was held back mainly by the threat of orbital bombardment. Now, however, with the fleet annihilated and the promise of support from the Fearless Armada, they struck furiously at a long-hated enemy, and Lord Admiral Antares was not one to stand between a furious warrior and the object of his hatred. They had better die instead of his soldiers, their lives were more important. The Fearless Armada took over the capital. Dropships came down from orbit, shielded by orbital fire and fighters. The fight was fierce and the opponent, at least as far as the clones were concerned, was highly trained, but they couldn't coordinate their efforts without their Big Brother's supervision, so they just cleared building after building. The first assault was led by soldiers from Veskarium , firmly convinced that it was an honor, he had no intention of dissuading them of their error. He also sent riffraff under Lady Ka to conquer better fortified places that were away from more densely populated areas. Losses among them could always be easily replenished, and the machine guns standing behind them were great for morale.

In the second assault, after taking the bridgehead, he participated alone, Together with his Star Orphans, and was joined by the Lady of Blades, with her HellKnights. He loved being in the heat of battle, only then could he give vent to the emotions dormant in his heart, could ignite the cold flame that burned in his soul. His soldiers loved him for it. But this time everyone fought with double ferocity. The former exiles of Tarak this time did not wage a pointless and endless war with the swarm, nor did they clash with the armies of one warlord for another warlord. This time they were fighting for their future, for their home.

The fighting lasted three days and the help of local insurgent forces made the task much easier. Only the citadel towering on the former holy mountain remained unconquered, but that was a matter of the near future, for now he had to discuss more important matters with his allies. It was evening, though it was still too bright for Lady Sorrowflame and she had to shield herself with a shader field . They were in a park full of small trees and bushes, near a picturesque lake. Apparently, the park was previously privately owned by Horde Prime, and only he was allowed here. For a demented dictator, he had a surprising fondness for idyllic landscapes. It might not have been the safest place, but he always liked taking risks, within reason of course. Lady Ka and Lady Sorrowflame were here , as well as Commander Reese , who was injured in a space battle. There was, of course, Asindesa di Vir, who as always gave the impression that she would rather be somewhere else, probably on the battlefield. Veskarium was represented by a huge Veska named Zare , whose face was scarred from burns. The pact worlds were represented by the silver dragonkin, Tarel , who showed some reluctance towards him, although her masters ordered her to cooperate closely with his armada.

“What losses?” He turned to Lady Ka

“Glory of the Fallen and Goldsun suffered some damage, we also lost two fighters and two support ships. The losses among the land forces are five hundred soldiers and eight hundred of my niceties, butit is no loss, new ones will be recruited soon. All in all it went fucking great.” the woman giggled. Zare looked at her with the utmost contempt and drawled.

“A wise commander is not fooled by early victories caused by the enemy's unpreparedness, for it can easily lead to a fall.”

He nodded appreciatively.

“Indeed, we must not get carried away with a feeling of triumph and consider victory a foregone conclusion.” he said thoughtfully. “That's why I chose this planet. We will not only gain an economic base here, but we also eliminated an enemy who was considered an enemy by all factions present in the region, so theoretically everyone sees us as potential allies, so we have some room for maneuver. The only question is who will we ally with now.”

“The natural ally seems to be this Etheria. Although it is said to be a chaotic and disorderly place, its inhabitants seem to be the most willing to help. And they have She- Ra'a, the demigod who annihilated Horde Prime” Asindesa di Vir said in an uncharacteristically friendly tone.

Veska snorted.

“Let me remind you that it was because of what the inhabitants of this planet did that this expedition was organized. They had tried to destroy Veskarium once before in a cowardly and dishonorable way. Besides, we know that the entire war fleet they have are captured ships of the Horde. Horde Ultimate has brought order to his empire and is trying to reform his army. It's always wise to ally with the strongest player.” she said in a voice that held the typical Veskarian arrogance. Not long ago he would have considered her words, but now everything has changed. The whole thing just got a lot more personal.

"When you ally with the stronger, it's like voluntarily acknowledging their superiority." He looked at Zare , on whom very consciously chosen words had the intended effect. “If I have to choose between a warlord or fanatics, I will choose a warlord, but if I can choose, I will choose a hero.” he said in a hard voice and saw Commander Resee smiling proudly at his commander. "Which doesn't mean we won't make a pact with these Horde Ultimate . But first we must consolidate our position and get rid of our Heavenly Brothers.”

Everyone nodded their heads in recognition of this consensus. However, Tarel asked suspiciously.

“But what about this planet? I take it we won't leave her alone?”

He looked at her with searching eyes, trying to see through her intentions, and spoke in a serious voice.

"The interim government we have set up will take over the responsibility of managing the planet and supporting the war effort.”

The dragonkin fluttered its wings nervously with undisguised indignation.

"I guess the locals should be allowed to choose their own government after so many years of occupation, don't you think?"

He shook his head sadly.

“Unfortunately, after ... a quarter of a century of occupation, and so brutal, the basic state institutions have disappeared here and the locals need time to recreate them. You must also consider that the local rebel groups may have trouble coming to an agreement and a civil war is about to break out here, and these are the most brutal of all.” he explained to his companions, but the dragonkin bared her fangs in a mocking smile.

“You know it best. she pointed out to him, but he answered her without showing any resentment.

"Indeed, I know more about this than any of you, and therefore I would not like anything like that to happen to Taurus. After that, it's about more prosaic matters. We need the industry of this planet and its inhabitants to carry out this operation. We cannot allow local conflicts and vested interests and the cries of defeatists to stand in our way.” he explained, and Zare supported him. Tarel looked at him long and finally asked.

“And what do you think the task we have to do.”

“We have the most important task of all. To win.” Lord Admiral Antares said, almost smiling.

The council continued for half an hour, during which they discussed the most important matters, at least officially, and when everything was discussed they went to their quarters, but the Lord Admiral ordered them, her and Lady Sorrowflame, to stay here. She looked at the statue of Horde Prime standing on the pedestal and smiling crookedly said.

"For a guy who talked so much about his own perfection, he had a fucking asymmetrical face, don't you think, boss?" she asked, barely refraining from touching the mask.

“It is characteristic of fallen tyrants not to see their own mistakes and their hypocrisy.” Antares said in a serious tone. She laughed briefly.

“As has already been said today, you know something about it.” she said in a sarcastic tone.

“There is a difference between a strict but fair leader and an insane tyrant.” said the Lord Admiral sharply.

Just semantic, she thought, but said with a shrug.

“ The truest of the hellknights is eager to reach Etheria. My sixth sense tells me that she wants to meet the beautiful Lady Cala or her bitter teacher as soon as possible. I'd bet on the latter, because they both act like they have sticks in asses.”

“It's interesting and may be useful someday. These types of individuals usually have trouble reconciling their mission and their own feelings.” he said thoughtfully.

"I expected you to drop everything yourself and fly to Etheria after all the news you've received." she said cautiously, and her commander thought for a long time about his answer, until finally he spoke in a tone full of thought, such as she had never heard from him.

“I have time... Now I have time my dear Left Hand. But I'll be going there soon, as soon as things settle down here. I can't be late for the big day. You're coming with me too, I'd rather have you with me.”

She pursed her lips angrily, understanding the ambiguity behind his words, but kept silent and instead took out a briefcase full of documents.

“We still have an issue. Capturing the Citadel. It is heavily defended, and underground there are huge resources that will allow us to defend ourselves for many months, and which will be useful to us. “She said and pulled out another sheet and continued. “We have the following options. Orbital bombardment may be the easiest, but there's a good chance you'll destroy parts of the city with missed hits.” she said, the Lord Admiral grimacing in irritation.

“This would complicate our plans and spoil relations with the locals. This idea should be rejected.”

She nodded and said.

“The siege will take us several months, especially if we want to minimize losses, but it will also be expensive. The assault is the fastest, but we will also suffer the greatest losses during it, perhaps up to five hundred soldiers, although we will then take over the most resources gathered there. Perhaps the best approach is to gradually infiltrate during the siege, although this will require intelligence gathering.”

Her commander grimaced and sighed heavily.

"If necessary…" he continued, but Lady Sorrowflame spoke up for the first time that day

“I will take care of this. she said, and when they both looked at her in surprise.” she continued. "As soon as dusk falls, I will take this fortress for you, my lord. We will demonstrate the power of the old days to this place and, by the way, we will test the Dread Walkers and Colossi of Horror. I owe you for not being able to serve you properly during the uprising. In return, I have only one request from you… Take me with you to this Etheria when you go there.”

The Lord Admiral thought only for a moment, then answered him.

"All right, if you do it during this the night... But you'll be incognito there . "

“It's even better.” Said the red-haired woman and in a smile bared two fangs, as if made of black crystal, too long for a human.

"I tell you, there is no finer man than the Lord Admiral, and he is so incredibly handsome!" Shiren girl exclaimed Ashurk with delight in his voice. The strange Insectoid was dressed in a short skirt and had colorful ribbons attached to her antennae. She was incredibly talkative and raved about absolutely everything, and she was constantly checking her datapad , which she called Cunnyphone. She'd joined them recently and was getting more and more annoying to Tallstar, who was slowly considering knocking her out and leaving her in a diner full of celebrating soldiers, where she would be safe, then telling her she'd been hit by a falling meteor. She was sure she'll believe them.

They were in Angus, the capital of Taurus. They had never been to this planet before, it was too well protected by the fleet. Glimmer assured that it would be the first place they would liberate after the pact creating a galactic rebellion was signed and a joint fleet could be established. However, it need time... Or a Research and Exploration fleet. They'd only been members for a week, and already they were in a victorious battle, and though they were, perhaps that was too much to say. They waited in the transports with the rest of the deep reserve troops, but she was still impressed. Her brother had complained that they weren't allowed to fight, but she was almost content… almost, because several things that were happening around her made her uneasy.

Jewelstar said he was getting paranoid, and Starla said she just couldn't be happy, but she'd saved them all too often with her instincts not to trust him this time.

But she had to admit that there were advantages to serving in the Research and Exploration Fleet. She smiled clenching her fist. Almost immediately after joining the Fleet, she received her new wonderful prosthetics. They were lighter and stronger, and more importantly, they did not jam or hang on the launcher lines erratically. But the most wonderful thing was that she regained full feeling. Again, she could feel the texture of bread, the warmth of a cup of tea, the feel of someone's skin under her fingers... she wished a little that nice mercenary was here, because the inhabitants of the planet did not match her species preferences, but there were many beautiful women in the Research and Exploration Fleet. Maybe she'd help her sister find a boyfriend, but Starla was a romantic and wasn't content with the short-term relationships the mercenaries expected.

As a long-time rebel, she wasn't surprised by how complicated Fleet relations were. There were a lot of groups here who disliked each other but were able to work together to achieve this astonishingly quick victory. There was more species, ethnicity, and culture here than even on Etheria. She had learned the complexity of the social relations that prevailed in the Galaxy, and which this army was a reflection of.

There were conflicts here on many levels. The first was between the mercenaries who had been in Antares' service for many years and those who had been sent here by the governments of the two great powers in the galaxy. The soldiers or mercenaries serving the Lord Admiral were close to each other. Some, the oldest ones, came from Tarak , Lord Admiral's planet, and others were descendants of those who had fled from there. Supposedly there was some kind of war there, and wicked opponents drove out their leader and all the citizens fighting for freedom, though at this point the whole story was getting muddy and unclear. Others joined the Fearless Armada, as they called it, during the thirty years of war it fought, most notably against the Swarm, which was a fearsome enemy said to be the bane of the galaxy. Many were war orphans or those who joined the Armada to defend the galaxy from this terrible threat. But the rest were lured here by dreams of glory and wealth. She had met many mercenaries in her life, but never one who could afford to hire her own private mercenary army, but in the end the universe turned out to be much bigger than she ever imagined…

However, the other participants of this expedition did not appreciate the presence of their new commander, precisely because of his mercenary background. Professional soldiers looked down on those who sold their services for money, though they also despised each other. They came from the two great powers of the galaxy: the Pact Worlds and Veskarium . The former were very diverse in every respect and more friendly and open. Veskarium 's soldiers were mostly Veskas, huge lizards for whom dying in battle was a dream come true. They scared her a bit, she had to admit, especially since their interpretation of Honor was… controversial. Besides these, there were felines, though more animal than Catra, named Pahtra , and Skittermanders, the same species that took care of Wrong Hordak They were kind and helpful, but in such a way that her head hurt from being around them.

But what they all had in common was contempt for those led by Lady Ka. They were supposedly criminals of various kinds, recruited from the prisons or slums of all the planets the Fearless Armada frequented Lady Ka commanded them with an iron fist and apparently sometimes shoot to them. Used them as cannon fodder and sent them into the hardest fight, but supposedly they had the right to keep everything they raked, as long as they give their commander's share.

But they weren't Tallstar's greatest concern . She had the feeling that there was an aura of mystery surrounding them. From what they understood, no one in the galaxy was aware of the existence of Horde Prime , and many thought that the Swarm was on the prowl here in the Ravaged Zone, as the Empire was known. When it turned out that it was "only" a mad Tyrant, almost everyone breathed a sigh of relief. She bitterly stated that if they had come here when Horde Prime was still alive, they would have talked differently, they would have regretted ever knowing his name. Of course, many were shocked to see planets whose inhabitants were slaughtered. Many had tears in their eyes. Many sympathized with them, especially when they found out what happened to their family. Sometimes they were even admired for their long struggle with such a powerful enemy. but no one understood anything. No one quite knew the reason for this expedition, but everyone was convinced that it was about some great threat lurking in the zone.

And then there was the Starstone that the Lord Admiral had been asking them about. Everyone, even the Veskas, spoke of him with almost reverence. It was said to be the most powerful artifact in the galaxy. It was located at the center of the giant Absalom Station and enabled the use of Drift Drive, thanks to which it was possible to travel across the galaxy at lightning speed. Some said that this artifact, in ancient times, allowed mortals to become gods, though she was skeptical of such words, for she had never believed in the existence of gods. But there was something else, apparently there was another similar artifact somewhere around here. She had serious suspicions about where he might be, and that made her uneasy.

Now they were at the top of the observation deck of one of the skyscrapers. It was empty because it was near the citadel, the Horde's last stronghold, and many feared that the clones might retaliate by shelling the city, and that would be their first target, though she doubted they would, as they had previously avoided destroying the city, probably because of Big Brother's old orders. Fear, however, did not prevent the inhabitants of Angus from celebrating the liberation in the streets . Probably moonshiners, who will be able to sell their goods openly for the first time in years, will earn a real fortune. There were bursts of fireworks in the sky, as well as images of magically created illusory mystical creatures straight from legend. She had to admit that the Lord Admiral knew how to celebrate a victory.

"It's a pity we didn't meet any of the Ghoran here. They are so kawai. I would take many pictures with them. Can we look for them? My subscribers on Atrax will be delighted.

She looked at Shiren girl wondering if she was that stupid or just pretending, and her brother replied in a grim voice

“The Flores, as they were called here, aroused the extreme reluctance of Horde Prime , as he suspected them of having a collective consciousness, so he had them slowly exterminated until he found them quite tasty, then ordered the purges to stop, only ordered the local population every year elect a thousand representatives to celebrate the annual conquest banquet.”

“Oh, that's great!” Ashurk exclaimed in delight, but her brother rubbed his forehead and explained with absolute calmness.

“He invited them as a main course...”

Shirren antennae first dropped in horror, then rose in delight.

“Oh, the oppressed people, who I helped liberate! You can't even imagine how many likes I'll get when I post videos with them!” she said in an excited voice . Tallstar felt her eyelid twitch. Even the very positive Starla was…confused.

“You must come from a very unusual place.” she said slowly, but Ashurk ran over to them and started talking, showing her pictures on her Datapad .

“Atrax is a wonderful place! Look!” she said with delight.

Talstar rolled her eyes. Most of the photos showed a gloomy industrial city with virtually no sun. She was unfamiliar with the Shirren, few Insectoids can be found in the Empire. Horde Prime was particularly ferocious about these types of creatures, probably fearing their collective consciousness, but Ashurk rather looked like someone who liked things shiny and colorful… But one of the photos caught her attention.

"Wait..." She said commandingly. Shirenka did as instructed and Tallstar and her siblings saw an image of a cat girl. For a moment she thought it was Catra, but then they realized she was younger, twelve or thirteen, with dark brown hair that was straighter than their friend's, and her eyes were gold with blue flecks. She was lying in a hospital bed, and was glaring at the person taking the picture, as if she wanted to hurt him. But what caught their eye the most was the hand. It was metal, with no moving parts. She had recently seen such a prosthesis.

“What was her name?” she asked carefully.

“Teti or something like that, but it doesn't matter at all, because she's mean. After all, a cat girl is supposed to be sweet and adorable, and this cat pounced on me and threatened to rip my antennae out and poke my brain out through my eyes, and all I wanted was to cuddle and take some cute pics. Shirren gir shouted in a voice full of holy indignation.

"Cat girls don't like to be seen as cute and adorable and VERY value their personal space," said Jewelstar, looking down at the insectoid and Tallstar she tried to recover from the shock. So we missed... who exactly? she thought, not understanding what she had just seen. But before she could analyze everything, Starla called her.

“Look! She pointed to the river below the citadel. As she put the binoculars to her eyes, she saw an attractive woman with fiery red hair, whom she recognized as Lady Sorrowflame . The woman took off her robes and began to transform. Her body was torn apart and grew, then reassembled into something this corner of the universe hadn't seen in thousands of years. A dragon stood there, not as small and humanoid as Alatar. It was a gigantic red-colored monstrosity, capable of swallowing any one of them whole. And so another legend returned to their world, but this time it was one of those legends you dream of in nightmares... There was a roar that chilled hearts and souls, and the dragon spread its wings and took off into the air. As it circled over the city, casting its dark shadow over it, she saw that its belly was covered with armor plates. Even legends have to adapt to a new world. Then he sped towards the citadel. She felt sorry for the clones.

Lady Sorrowflame felt the great terror she spread around her. Where her terrible shadow fell, the cries of joy fell silent, and she felt the horror that embraced the mortals here. They had reason to be afraid of her. She was once known as Ashaq The Annihilator and she was able to destroy a city during time, when she was alive . Now she was one of the oldest and most powerful beings in the galaxy and was able to destroy armies and tear apart space battleships. But the inhabitants of this city could feel safe, at least today. It was not against them that she intended to direct her fury. Horde Prime's spawn will taste the horror of days gone by, for doom was coming , an avatar of death itself was approaching .

However, she was not alone, she was accompanied by the Dread Walkers and the terrible Colossi of Horror. The wonderful creations of Necrotechnics , its most perfect creations. Her monster children. They were all covered in gold and red armor that hid their monstrous nature. Dread Walkers were armed with metal claws capable of cutting even steel armor.

In addition, they were poisoned with a venom that acted similarly to Ghoul poison, which paralyzed victims. They were fast and deadly in combat, and it took great firepower to knock them down. While they battled the swarm hordes, they wreaked havoc on his ranks. Their production was not expensive, although in her case it was quite time-consuming, because it did not allow the process to be automated. Things were different with the Colossi of Horror. It was difficult to obtain bodies of the right size. They were four meters high and their armor was stronger than that of tanks. She carried out many cyber and necrotechnical modifications that increased their physical capabilities to an unprecedented level. They also had self-healing systems, because creating them was so difficult. They were armed with flaming morningstars or crionic axes, and all had shields. Only a few were armed with electric halberds. Each of them also had one eye that shot deadly beams of radiation. Although they were undead monsters, in their beautiful armor they resembled great knights created to fight evil. They were like the entire Fearless Armada. Noble decorations hiding the dark interior. Dread Walker and Colossi of Horror were dropped from the air. When they fell, they curled up into a ball, so they were not injured.

However, she herself was also the work of a necrotechnics genius . Though she didn't remember it due to the Gap, she has undergone many modifications . The implants made her fitter than any dragon. Her scales, especially her belly, have been replaced with pure adamantium carapace . Her claws were also made of this metal. Fangs, in turn, created Voidglass. She was something a hundred times more perfect than that demented buffoon of Horde Prime , though she brought darkness instead of light.

She glided over the city shrouded in shadow, her body surrounded by a personal energy shield. Her dead troops went on the attack. Then she herself began to descend. As soon as the clones detected her, they began firing, but while the Horde's weapons had terrible power, they were inaccurate, so they easily dodged the shots. It flew over the largest cannon and allowed itself to be hit. The beam pierced her shield, but adamantium stopped the beam. Then she opened her jaws and breathed out the black flame of decay, from which she derived her name, Sorrowflame . Necrotic energy penetrated the shield and armor, disintegrating metal and flesh. Then she dug her claws into the walls of the citadel and began tearing them apart, and when it was done she burst inside the building.

It was breaking through the interior of the building, followed by its creations, spreading death and destruction. It devoured enemies whole, absorbing their life energy. She knew it wouldn’t satiate her hunger, nothing could do that, but it didn't matter now, for she was filled with dragon fury. Even the fearless clones fled in panic as the necrotech monsters pursued them. She stood in front of the last of the clones, surrounded by Dread Walkers, reverted to her human form and, standing naked in front of him, came closer.

“My death doesn't matter. Horde Prime will return and…” He spoke in a religious exultation, but Lady Sorrowflame put a finger to his lips.

“Shhh. Everything will be fine. Soon you will serve a new and better lady…for eternity.” and then she sank her black fangs into his neck… and drank his delicious blood

Aftermath

She blinked at the terrible, indescribable monster and Frosta beaming with satisfaction . Absolutely happy Frosta and terrifying monster who stared at her with curiosity in countless eyes.

“Your new friend?” she said completely confused, completely not understanding what she was seeing. Where did Frosta get this monster from, how did she find them, why aren't they chewed?

“Yes, he's my new friend, I don't know his name, but I call him Shogi . It's very nice, if a bit snoty. We found him in the ruins of the First Ones and freed him. Now we're buddies.” Frosta explained cheerfully.

"Yeah," she replied when she realized she was staring at them with her eyes wide open.

However, Kyle smiled and waved vigorously at the monster.

“Hi Shogi , I'm Kyle . Nice to meet you.” said the blond-haired boy in a cheerful voice. She looked at her old friend from the Fright Zone. Kyle was never the bravest of the cadets, but there was no denying his caution and self-preservation. It was almost like the litmus paper they used in the old days to test for hydrochloric acid in the sink water . If he wasn't afraid of something, that meant it wasn't really dangerous. Melog didn't seem scared either, just a bit confused. So she decided to trust her friend's judgment and, relaxing, smiled at Shogoth Shogi and said try to sound as friendly as possible.

“Hello Shogi . I am Catra and this is my companion Melog.” She pointed to the translucent cat. "I guess you saved us from being pierced like a sieve, for which I thank you."

“Blurp!” Shogoth greeted and brushed her hand with a tentacle, showing a surprising delicacy. There was smell of wet mud around him, definitely not the worst smell she had ever known.

“Did you find him here? So is there anyone else here?” Kyle asked hopefully.

Frosta nodded vigorously.

“Yes, your friend is here. She... has something important to tell you.” said the Ice Princess in an excited voice. Then a figure wrapped in fur emerged from the shadows.

“Hello, Kyle . I'm glad Lonnie decided to save me, and I'm glad you took part in it.” she said in a voice that took a moment to recognize as Scarlet's. She tensed up a bit , but the sorcerer didn't seem to have any hostile intentions towards them.

“Oh, how wonderfully glad I am to see you and that you are safe and sound!” Kyle exclaimed with undisguised joy. She thought she saw sadness and disappointment in Frosta's eyes , but before she could ask how they got here, she saw a rainbow flash.

She was immersed in the light, she felt that she was swimming in a river of bright. She knew there was a cold dead void beyond its shores, and if she allowed herself to be swept out by the incredibly fast current, she would be forever trapped in darkness. She had to be strong... She had to be brave... She had to fight with all her strength... For her... For Catra. "Evil is coming. There are shadows all around.” she heard the voices in her head, imperious and insistent. However, she did not pay attention to them, she had to save Catra. Her beloved. Her dearest... There were monsters born of darkness in the void, waiting only to devour anyone who emerged from the river. She also felt the presence of other beings. They weren't hostile to her, but they wanted something from her, something very important. They foretold something to her, a future that was destined for her. It terrified her…they terrified her, but she couldn't afford to be afraid, all would be lost… So, despite the horror that gripped her heart, she plodded on. If I stop... If I look back, I'm lost she thought half-consciously, swimming with a current of light that burned her like fire and was cold like the dark emptiness of space at the same time. She was already reaching the end of this journey, she felt that the exit was at hand. "A shining road. A road meant for you. The Loneliest Road. The road you must follow" she heard inside her soul as she reached the end of her journey. Then she was in the dark...

She took a deep breath, feeling as if she had come out of the depths of the sea. She was in a large cave plunged into darkness. However, her inner glow dispelled the darkness, allowing her to see a terrifying scene. She saw Catra, her beloved, alive and well, though her shirt was dirty and stained with slime, staring at her in understandable surprise. But there was a terrible monster nearby. It was huge and shapeless, with hundreds of eyes and mouths and tentacles, one of which was just reaching towards Catra!

"Leave her alone, you… monster." she called in a loud voice, although she herself was not quite sure what to call this terrible creature and slashed its tentacle. The creature let out a loud gurgling sound and began to back away, and she continued to attack… Until her legs were trapped in ice.

"Adora, don't hurt Shogi ! He's our friend." she heard Frosta shouting at her in a desperate voice. She turned to see the Ice Princess looking at her pleadingly. Beside her, she saw Kyle sheathing some strange sword. Her old friend was wearing some kind of uniform, now an obscenely dirty… She remembered that Lonnie had created this People's Rebellion of hers. Next to him, she saw a red-haired woman dressed in furs, whom she recognized after a moment as Scarlet, her old friend from the Horror Zone, whom she hardly remembered. She felt the touch of a well-known hand on her shoulder and turned to look at Catra's gently smiling face.

“Everything's all right. This creature is friendly despite its… unusual appearance. He saved us, me and Kyle when the First Ones robots were chasing us… They really hate cats.” She laughed amiably. She looked at the monster, which cowered in fear. He looked at her apologetically, the way a pet would look at someone it made angry, though it didn't know what it had done wrong. She felt ashamed of how she had treated them. She lowered her sword and turned to... Shogi .

“I am very sorry that I attacked you, but it was a terrible day and recently I heard that someone was threatening my girlfriend, and when I saw you I thought you wanted to hurt her and ...” She looked at the creature, which clearly "relaxed". In fact , he began to look at them with interest, as if he recognized her.

“Yes, I am her. I'm She-Ra. How do you know me?” she asked, she herself wasn't sure who, while Frosta removed the ice around her legs and said.

“Yes, Shogi know you. Another She-Ra, fought such Old Things long ago and set Shogis free!” There was genuine delight in the Ice Princess's voice.

“We're actually talking about the Elder Things and the Shogots. two ancient races much older than the First Ones.” Scarlet corrected Frosta . Oddly, she sounded a bit like a Shadow Weaver when anyone around her was wrong, though of course she didn't threaten to electrocute anyone. Butwhen her friend got into this habit... Although, on the other hand, they hadn't seen each other for five years, and even before that they hadn't been particularly close. Recalling the dark sorceress, she involuntarily shuddered… she remembered the shadow that seemed to be watching her in Clytemnestra. Surely it's just an illusion created by fighting a warship.

“Uh, Elders Things? Former She-Ra?” she asked confused, also trying to pull herself out of unpleasant thoughts.

“It's a long and rather gloomy story ...” said her fiancée in a serious voice, but then smiled cheekily and asked. "You'd better tell me since I've become such a damsel in distress that her beloved must come to save her from another planet. Actually, how did you do it?” she asked.

“I did something similar when I defeated Horde Prime, but this time it was much more difficult.” she thought, remembering her recent journey through the river of light. She wasn't sure how much of what she experienced then was real, but she had an overwhelming sense of terrible destiny while in that place... "But I had to risk it because I had a dream and then..." She looked at the others, it wasn't time to tell them yet about Angela and what happened to her. “It's also a long and grim story.”

She saw Catra frown when she mentioned the dream, but then she smiled and said.

“It was hard, but Frosta came with her new friends to help and they destroyed these creatures.” She pointed to the shattered body of some metal insect somewhat resembling a mosquito, only the size of a cow. “She's our heroine." she gave the girl a buddy's shake, and Frost jumped with joy, but when she landed, she winced in pain.

“Are you OK?” they asked simultaneously.

“I was bitten by a saber-toothed penguin , but Shogi bandaged me.” She rolled up her trouser leg, showing an elastic bandage made of a substance similar to that Shogoth was made of . "But I wouldn't have survived if it wasn't for my new friend." She pointed to Scarlet, who nodded politely and said.

“We were trapped together, so helping each other was just a matter of common sense.” the former cadet explained.

She smiled at Frosta and walked over to her, then drew her sword.

"The Shogi did well, but as long as I'm She- Ra , I'll use my power and heal you” She said and flooded her friend's leg with healing power. To her surprise, she didn't have to use much of it, apparently Shogi's bandage had worked.

Frosta moved her leg a few times and smiled happily. Then she closed her eyes and with great effort sent back the power. It was then that she felt the exhaustion flooding her previously filled with power body. She staggered, but Catra immediately came to her to steady her.

“Are you okay too?” her fiancée asked.

She smiled weakly at Catry.

“I just teleported from another planet... and before that I was fighting a pirate ship... it was a really long and exhausting day.” She said laying her head on her girlfriend's shoulder.

"I see," Catra said and kissed her tenderly and began to purr loudly as Melog started rubbing against her legs.

Frosta rolled her eyes, Kyle blushed, and Scarlet cleared her throat meaningfully and said.

“We still have a long way to go, especially for me and Kyle, and I prefer that Lonnie doesn't meet us here by chance, because then it will end very badly for many of us.”

She looked questioningly at Catra , who sighed.

“Lonnie and I had a little quarrel here earlier.”

She raised an eyebrow.

“Like Hordak and you ?” she asked with slight amusement, but Catra replied with a sour smile.

"Almost… Scarlet's right, the sooner we leave this place the better for all of us." she said with a hint of sadness in her voice.

“Where could they be! It's been over two hours!” she growled. She'd been in the damn cave all day, trapped and powerless. During all those years of war, she hadn't felt as powerless as she did now... Maybe she'd overdone it. When chipped Spinny was much worse, then she thought she had lost her wife forever and there was nothing she could do about it... But now she was completely useless. She felt like she was more of a hindrance than a help because of her broken arm. Lance and George were already more useful, and they were just bloody librarians! So she walked back and forth cursing what Etheria was standing on. She wondered if she had already made her way through the cave floor. “You know, this complex is huge. It probably stretches all the way through the mountain range.” Lance said looking at the stalagmite.

“Underneath all of Etheria, actually .” Entrapta interjected. She was building some device whose purpose only she knew.

“How is it all Etheria?” she asked the inventor with a little fright.

“You know, our planet is not like others. We have no sun, only magical moons, and the interior is a larger maze of tunnels and caves than Dryll. Maybe someday I'll build a special vehicle and we'll organize an expedition to the center of Etheria! We will go there together, there will also be Adora, Glimmer and of course Hordak.” Entrapta said in an increasingly dreamy voice. She sighed heavily. Perhaps she should explain to her friend that locking Hordak, Catra and Glimmer in one place could end tragically, not to mention the odds of Hordak being allowed to leave Beast Island, but she thought it would be cruel ... Or maybe that's what a true friend should do ... However, she failed to finish her thoughts, because the stones in the heap trembled and one of them was pulled inside creating a passage, and Frost stood in it, who happily waved to them.

"Hi, how are you”" she called as if she had come back from an afternoon stroll

They looked at her speechless with surprise and relief, but their amazement increased incomparably when Catra, Melog and… Adora stood behind the Ice Princess. She had no idea where she came from. She was supposed to be on Icarus, or whatever that planet was called?

"You didn't expect me, but she had to come here because I felt that something was threatening Catra, but when I arrived here, it turned out that the girls are doing great without me, with the help of their new friends." They moved away and made room for others. The redhead sorceress stood in the passageway and a skinny blonde. At the sight of them, she tensed, instinctively preparing for a fight, until her broken arm ached, but when she saw a tentacle with many eyes staring at them timidly, she wanted to summon an energy net, but then Catra was at her side in two leaps

"Relax. Now it's friends who helped us survive in those caves. This monster is Shogi Shogoth . He's much nicer than he looks."

She blinked a few times, looking from the creature to Catra and back again, and asked slowly.

"You have a fascinating story to tell."

"you don't even know how much weird" said the feline woman.

Everyone, including this strange creature, went downstairs, and then Catra and Frosta, with a little help from Scarlet and Kyle, what were the names of the People's Rebellion members, explained briefly what had happened.

"How did you came here? That's hundreds of light years away!" Entrapta asked, examining Adora with some sort of radiation sensor. "No, it doesn't look like you're going to die anytime soon or grow a second head. The latter would be really fascinating, don't you think?"

Adora was probably so exhausted that she didn't even pay much attention to the words of the purple-haired woman and said in a tired voice.

"Yeah, that would be interesting," she yawned, "I have no idea how it happened, I just felt like I could do it. You know, magi did it and so on."

Then, with the help of this strange, if indeed kind, creature, they were able to clear a path outside. It was light, it was just dawn, so they had to stay in the dark all night. Terrible. Now she felt an overwhelming exhaustion creep over her. The Pain in her makeshift bandage hand was unbearable, but then Frosta offered to let her new friend bandage her hand. With rather serious hesitation, she allowed him to do so, and indeed, thanks to the strange bandage, the pain eased. It was then that they had to separate. Catra walked over to Frosty and addressed her seriously,

"You know, it's going to be a bit difficult for us to fit Shogi in Silverwing"

Shogoth heard her and suddenly he started bending and squeezing and turned into a chest with legs...

"Oh, and you could turn into a Goat!?" Frost exclaimed delightedly.

Shogi began to transform again and turned into a goat. The size of a cow and with a single eye on his forehead, but actually he looked just like a normal goat.

"You're so cute!" she called, and Shogi chirped…he needs some work on that.

Then Kyle walked over to Lance and George, sword in hand.

"I guess it belongs to you. It's a really great sword, it saved me and Catra's life It's really very sharp." He stretched out his hands, handing them the sword.

The two men looked at each other and smiled at each other, then handed Kyle the blade and Lance spoke.

“Take it, it will serve you better-“

"Neither of our sons are interested in fencing anyway," added George.

Kyle turned red and tears flowed from his eyes.

- It's so nice. No one has ever given me anything so precious. At least one thing we will take away from this trip.”

"And why exactly did you come here?" she asked.

The boy sighed and started talking.

"Because we came here for the transponder, but the broadcast tower was destroyed and we found out about this city so Lonnie thought there might be some kind of weapon in here, she just saw Catra and she kind of lost her temper, and I'm so sorry about that." Kyle exuded sadness , and even Scarlet seemed embarrassed.

“Transponder! It can be done!” Entrapta exclaimed cheerfully and began to search Alice. After a while, she took something strange out of it. "Please take it, I have more than I need anyway." Said the former Lady of Dryl. She wasn't sure if it was a wise idea, after all, Lonnie recently wanted to kill them, but seeing the joy in Kyle's eyes, she decided to give peace a chance.

He and Scarlet walked along the ridge. It was cold and he was exhausted, but he did something to make Lonnie happy. Though he wasn't sure if it was a good deed. Their girlfriend has been focusing more and more on her… No, their Rebellion lately, and she doesn't care about anything except her fight. He was afraid it would end badly for all of them. Her new allies… They were terrifying, and now, thanks to this transponder or whatever that thing was, there would be even more of them. No, he didn't like it at all. He looked at Scarlet, who was walking briskly ahead of him. Even though she'd been lost in those stinking caves for much longer than he had, she still didn't look tired. Even Adora seemed more exhausted, while the sorcerer was bursting with energy. How is she k

"You're thinking about throwing that contraption to the heck." said Scarlet with a Sour smile on her face.

“How do you know that ... “he asked scared, but his companion waved her hand.

“Because I considered it myself, but I decided it was pointless. Mi-Go, if they wanted to, could build such a transponder themselves... If they didn't already... No, they wanted to see if the Comrade General was up to the task they assigned to her... This time Lonnie didn't provide them with what they really needed. They desired.” explained the sorceress.

“And what did they want from her?” he asked, but his companion didn't answer.

They came to a small depression in the rock, and Scarlet told them to stop.

“Listen Kyle ... Now I'm going to do something I was very afraid of. You will know my biggest secret, so please keep an open mind.” she said and started undressing. It turned out that under the fur coat she had only underwear ... which she also began to get rid of. He started screaming all red.

“Wait! I know you and Lonnie sleep together, and I don't mind. It's not like you have to sleep with me now. Anyway, I'm tired and it's cold!”

However, then Scarlet's body buckled and began to change. She became a tall, tall creature with emerald eyes, pale skin patterned like broken porcelain, and hands ending in sharp claws. He drew his sword and pointed it at the creature.

- Stay away. What have you done with Scarlet! he shouted. For a moment, he thought some horrible creature had eaten Scarlet and taken her form, but then he understood what the creature was, and then he felt real fear.

" Kyle, it's still me..." the creature said to him in a soft voice, and there was pain in her eyes, but he was too scared to think about it.

“I… I can fight. I have the power ...” he said and suddenly the light around him flashed. Power surged through him. He began to transform. He grew taller and stronger, his cape billowing behind his back, and his hair grew even more. He knew what had happened to him, though he had no idea why.

“No no no!” he shouted in a deep, unfamiliar voice.

“Kyle?” asked the being who had been Scarlet not long ago, staring at him in disbelief, as amazed as he was.

“Yes, it's me Kyle ... I want to be Kyle again. Only Kyle!” he shouted and dropped his sword, then returned to his former self. Scarlet, or the creature claiming to be her, picked up the weapon and studied it with interest.

“Weird, as far as I know, there should be some Writings here.” she said in a thoughtful voice

“They are, can't you see them? There it writes that it is called a sword of power and so on.” he explained, still bordering on panic.

“And what do these inscriptions look like?” the creature asked cautiously.

"Yeah, like someone's connected the stars, but I can read them normally." he explained, and then the creature looked at him, as he had looked at her before. As if he was a completely alien and dangerous being. You was a terrible feeling.

“Well, yes, you are Adora's age, in fact you are quite similar, you have the same type of beauty. You're just so mediocre that no one noticed.” said the being in a voice so different from that of his old friend. He was terrified of the truth hidden in the words of his… companion? It was all too scary to think about!

“Shadow Weaver, of course, suspected nothing. I wonder what else she didn't see in her arrogance? I need to talk to Dr. Moors, considering what he said to Catra, he must know a lot of secrets that the cadets keep, but I'm thinking we'll talk to Lonnie first, I'm sure she'll be thrilled to know your secret, don't you think?” The creature smiled, showing sharp teeth.

Overwhelmed by indescribable Terror, he shook his head vigorously and spoke imploringly.

“Please... don't do this. When Adora found that sword and infuriated Catra about it, you don't know what was going on... Or you do. If Lonnie finds out, she won't forgive me, and Rogelio will probably get hit right away . I love them both. Please, I don't want to lose them.

The person he had known before as Scarlet came up to him and, kneeling down beside him, said.

“All right, let's make a deal now. First, you won't tell Lonna who I am, and two, you'll let me know the secrets of this sword and yours. I'll keep your secret to myself in return, what's your deal? Not that you have a choice.”

He nodded his head, tears streaming down his face.

It was dusk when they stopped and lit a fire. Even Frosta, despite all her inexhaustible energy, was dozing off, almost scorching the marshmallows Kyle had given her . Netossa pretended not to be asleep at all, although her head dropped every now and then. Her hand was much better now. Lance and George just went to sleep and snored so loud you could probably hear them for miles around. Melog and Shogi played like little pets until they fell asleep. Many forgot that her companion was not a cat at all, but a creature as amorphous and shapeshifting as Frosta's new friend . He was left alone now and she laid her head on Adora's shoulder. She massaged her thigh and he purred loudly. She kissed her neck. She could smell the captivating scent of her fiancée. She felt such overwhelming desire that she wanted to drag her to the tent and make passionate love to her all night and then all morning ... But first she had to do something ... Yes, now she will tell her. He will reveal the truth about her origins. She looked into the eyes of her beloved and then she understood that something had happened. Adora stared at the fire, deep in thought. She became withdrawn again, as she often did when she was in trouble. Something very bad must have happened there on Icarus.

“Adora, you know, you can tell me anything.” she asked Adora, who took a deep breath and began to tell her in a broken voice.

“I wanted Glimmer to be the first to know about it, because it concerns her the most, but i need to tell someone about it. When I was on Icarus , I had a very bad dream first, and then I was warned about the Slave of Ice and… Shadow of the Moon. I murdered the Clock after that and this one Ivory Claw accused me and I had to spend some time alone... Then I met some nice kids and we went to the capital and there was Lady Cala Grayskull and... Never mind because after that Angela... Queen Angela lives.

Her heart stopped for a moment, then tears of joy filled her eyes. Queen Angela, mother Glimmer is alive. Her greatest sin was opening the portal, and if it wasn't for the queen's sacrifice, everyone would be lost... It always weighed on her conscience, but if she lived, it was wonderful...

“Oh, that's amazing. Tell!” she shouted happily, but Adora was not happy, she seemed to be terrified, even broken...

“She tried to kill us, she wanted to burn the city down, and she murdered an innocent child. She is a monster. she became a monster because of me.

On the way back, she told Kyle the same story she had told Frosta, albeit in a more dry form. At last they reached the entrance to the side tunnels. They had notified Lonnie via Comms earlier, so Rogelio was waiting for them and greeted Kyle affectionately, then led them both to Lonnie. Comrade General did not look very well. The wound on her face looked nasty, and she wasn't sure even her magic would be enough to heal it. But when she saw them, Lonnie smiled with relief. Seeing this, she felt bitterness in her heart. She knew all too well how Comrade General would react to seeing her true self. Good-natured Kyle drew his sword at the sight of her, and what Lonnie, who was already suspicious and full of anger, would do was predictable. For a moment, she seriously considered Frosta's proposal, there was really little to keep her in the People's Rebellion, so she would have nothing to regret. She also suspected that knowing the princesses would protect her from the revenge of the cults. But then what? Following a straight and clear path, she would not gain the power she wanted ... which she needed. And, of course, there was the promise that was made to her... She's ready to do almost anything for Scarlet.

They told Lonnie the story they had established between themselves. Kyle didn't even have to lie, which was good because he was a tragic liar. She just missed a few details. There was only one problem she had to solve. At first she considered justifying her lack of clothes by saying that she and Ice Princess had spent some time "getting to know each other" but then they had to run away, but she thought it sounded silly and might be mean to her new... friend, she just said she had to change shape, a good lie should be as close to the truth as possible after all. Lonnie didn't go into detail anyway, maybe the wound was bothering her too much, or maybe she was thinking about something else. Comrade General, as soon as she found out about She- Ra's return and Frosty's new pet, clenched her fists angrily, but said nothing. Then Kyle showed her the transponder she had obtained , and she showed the crystal that Frost had inadvertently given her.

"They say Entrapta was able to extract data from it, so maybe we can."

Lonnie tossed the crystal in her hand and said in an oddly thoughtful voice.

“Entrapta has a truly exceptional mind” and told them to follow her. They walked for a quarter of an hour through a narrow tunnel leading to a ledge.

“We came across this when we were looking for you.” she said and pointed to the glacier stretching out in front of them. Only after a moment did she understand what was there. It was a ship, a gigantic, mile-long First Ones warship, only a tiny fragment of which protruded from the ice.

“How many lives is worth such a ship? asked Lonnie with barely concealed despair.

He barely managed to avoid a bump on his head as they raced to the ship as if an enemy were chasing them. He tried discreetly to ask Bina to turn back, because he had something important to say, preferably to show Adora, but the captain paid him no attention. She was terrified, though he didn't quite understand why. After all, what happened wasn't their fault. Whatever Captain Moonshadow did…Queen Angela…Captain Queen Angela Moonshadow did, there was definitely an explanation for that… It must have been a mistake. Some terrible but explainable mistake. Only if Lady Cala not hadn’t said it was true... She wouldn't lie to them, and she couldn't be wrong.

He wished he had said everything when he had the chance. He was just waiting for the right, perfect moment, and it turned out that he had waited too long... But that wasn't the only thing. Eti was very... Specific... Secretive and distrustful. For a brief moment he managed to get close to her, and then she discovered his secret, and he became Wormdak again... He wanted her to show them who she was, and then... He just realized that he had no idea what would happen then. He thought that Adora would be happy if she knew Eti's identity, after all, she already liked her... But he had no idea who this girl was. She was like him, artificially created, just like Bina... But why would this Jantar create someone like Catra? And how, if he counted correctly, although measuring time was never his strong point, Eti was created about six years ago... That is, when Etheria was still hidden. He had absolutely no idea how to understand it.

“We're here, and we haven't even run over anyone”. the captain called when they arrived and she laughed nervously.

“It's a disgraceful failure.” grumbled Crushey in an offended voice. They were greeted by a drone guided by Mr. Ilemshaw.

They began to hurriedly unload onto the ship, and the transporter came aboard, but then Eti gave a loud cry.

“Oh no, we have to go back. We left a packet of onion crisps there!”

“What the fuck?” Bina yelled furiously at her ward.

“Excuse me, but you always warn us against wasting food. Lilka wanted to give them to Vegie , because she is vegan and didn't want to eat bacon crisps, but she didn't want to eat them either and we lost them, by the way.” Eti said, but Bina didn't let her finish and screamed at her.

‘STOP PISS ME OF.” and then she took a deep breath and continued in a calmer voice. "You've done enough already. First of all, you bunch of lunatics, you've got yourself caught up in a battle between a deranged pirate captain and... who knows who this She-Ra girl is.”

The feline girl tilted her head and replied the captain with complete calmness in that strange, aristocratic accent she got when she was a bit… flustered….

“Excuse me, but I must point out that the course of events was completely different. It was we, during a completely routine and security patrol, who made friends with this She- Ra and the two princesses, which would greatly help us in our mission, and it was you, my dear Bina, who yelled at them, exposing us to their unbridled revenge.”

Bina looked at her coldly and spoke, her voice both calm and hard.

“Never address me as "my dear", and secondly, Eterna , go to your cabin and wait there until you calm down. The rest is to prepare the ship for departure.”

"And where are we actually going..." Arkan-tar asked. "Because now it's not so obvious." he explained, smiling slyly.

Bina thought for a moment before answering.

“To Etheria, exactly as planned. This is probably the safest place for us right now.” She looked after Eti entering the ship, behind who Toshi flew. “She's right, we have high-ranking friends there now. Maybe I was a bit too harsh on her. And you, my dear, are you coming inside with me, because we have a lot to talk about.” she pointed at him.

"I guess I'll go with you too," said Dilayla, and then he had the impression that Rechiza and Arkan-tar gave her meaningful looks.

“Well, as the captain prefers. he said cautiously, feeling a bit guilty.

"Doctor Quin said she has some important information for all of you related to her research.” said Mr. Iemshaw via one of his drones.

"We'll deal with that in orbit, one problem at a time." Bina said, rubbing her forehead with her hands

Dilayla felt… no, not guilty, that was far too mild a word… She felt like a despicable traitor. The one who betrayed all the values that guided in life. Her faith...was never very strong, but it was part of her. She was the anchor that kept her from drifting into the sea of cynicism and vice that other mercenaries wallowed in. And now she was crossing its fetid waters alone, and she definitely wasn't feeling good about it. She had betrayed the goddess, the Inheritor, or at least someone who was her local incarnation. For a brief moment, she was ready to tell them the truth, to warn them about the Lord Admiral and the darkness he brought with him, but she hesitated, afraid that the others would judge her. That they will see a traitor in her.

Arkan-Tar approached her, and Rechiza stood behind him, piercing her with a glance.

"You're not going to tell our captain the truth, are you?" he whispered to her. None of the crew members were paying attention to them now, so apparently the scholar thought this was the perfect time to talk about important matters.

“I don't know, if I was a better person, I would say.” she snapped back at Verthani, who only smiled indulgently.

“And what would you achieve by doing so? Bina would kick us out here, including our lovely Rosie, and then what? Will we go to Etheria on our own or will we forget about our, I remind you, extremely important and very profitable mission, and then what?” he said in an irritatingly polite tone.

“I don't care about this mission.” She barely kept from screaming.

"And the Lord Admiral cares a lot, better not to make an enemy of him." There was a warning note in the scholar's voice.

"It's better we get punished than those innocent kids." she drawled, clenching her metal fists.

"It's doubtful that someone like Antares would want anything from this pack. He's a great commander, someone who thinks on a global scale. Anyway, all you can do is put them in real danger.”

She frowned and asked.

“What do you mean?

Arkan-tar smiled broadly and said.

"If you warn Bina, she'll do something stupid like want to leave the Zone, she'll only put herself in danger from the Lord Admiral, if there is any, which I sincerely doubt. The captain was right. Etheria is now the safest place in the region. Its inhabitants defeated Horde Prime, compared to which our principal was like a girl with a knife. He'd probably never even think of going to Etheria, he'd be too busy… fighting for peace and freedom.”

Verthani's words sounded reasonable, and so comfortable.

“All right, I'll do as you say. But remember, if the situation changes, I will not be silent. she said in a firm tone, hoping to convince herself

When she saw Calamity kneeling before Carsai the King and trembling with fear, she remembered another but similar scene when she threw Catra at Hordak's feet, hoping that he would use his vacuum machine on the defenseless girl, as he had done on her many times. The similarity of the two events made her uneasy, afraid of returning to her old ways, to her old self. Perhaps the context of the whole scene was slightly different, but everything was similar enough that she felt an uncontrollable nausea of self-loathing. The outcome of these events also turned out to be quite different.

“I'm begging for forgiveness. Oh creeping Chaos, I…” Calamity said , but stopped when Nyarlathotep's avatar ordered her to be silent.

“Don't beg, it's unworthy of either a mortal or a -divine monster like you, our dear Calamity . We don't blame you for what you did, but for your base motives. You were like a little child who wanted to break the window of a person she didn't like or couldn't stop herself from eating candy. And all this at such an early stage of your mission, and yet much more difficult trials await you.”

“It will never happen again.” the aristocrat was saying, but the great Outer God interrupted her.

“Of course it will happen again if you ever get the chance. It is possible to change the nature of a mortal, although sometimes it requires drastic methods, but not a monster like you, our dear Calamity. That's one of the many reasons we assigned you someone like our wise and righteous Shadow Weaver.” Nyarlathotep said. She didn't have to look at her charge to know that there was pure hatred in those beautiful blue eyes of hers. She didn't care much and knelt before the Creeping Chaos.

"Thank you for appreciating my contemptible self. However, although in your infinite kindness you have bestowed upon me many favors, I would like to ask you for one more favour." she lowered her eyes, and a smile appeared on the face of the ancient being.

"Ask about anthing, our clemency is limitless, as is the severity of the punishments we impose."

She took a deep breath and said the words she had been preparing for some time.

"Recently I learned the true nature of Lord Admiral Antares, of which in your immeasurable wisdom you are probably aware. We can use it for our Cause. There are still a few people on Etheria who will listen to me, and whose love for their loved ones and common sense may outweigh their hatred of me. Please allow me to pursue my own plan as long as it does not interfere with your other plots."

The Great Outer God tilted his head to the side as if he were amused.

- We will agree to your idea out of pure curiosity. Know that we always plot many schemes. Many plans are guided not only by foresight, but also by love for the infinite ingenuity of mortals and their determination. I'll give you one more gift... There's a conversation going on in the cockpit right now that will warm your heart. And you Calamity remember, our patience has limits. " As they said this, the Nyarlathotep melted away as if they had never been here. She cast another spell, leaning over the obsidian countertop, and Calamity stood beside her curiously.

When they boarded the ship, Ireanis was sleeping in her hammock, snoring so loud she seemed to be sawing a tree, and Miss Daisy took Lady Cala to her room, to which Itel replied with a crooked smile. She and Bina went to the cockpit, where she closed the door and spoke sharply to him.

"When were you going to tell us you were from Etheria?"

He frowned.

“But I'm not from Etheri!” he said. Meanwhile, Dilayla leaned back against the wall, crossing her arms over her chest.

“Don't piss me off anymore. I'm tired of Eti nitpick the words.” Bina growled at him.

He sighed and said looking at his feet.

"When your friends freed me, I didn't know you were going to Etheria, and then when I found out, I thought he'd wait until you knew the truth for yourself. My brother asked me not to tell anyone about Etheria, She- Ra and her secrets. This planet has suffered a lot and my brother was very worried that some other dark forces might want to get the power that is there... I... I thought it wouldn't change anything, you'd see for yourself how wonderful this place is... " he explained and smiled at the Captain, but she gritted her teeth in annoyance.

"It wouldn't change anything you say… Except we wouldn't worry about flying into the damn heart of the Abyss, where the Lady of Chaos rules and a fate worse than death awaits. You know, I'm immune to propaganda crap, but itel and the rest of my kids were terrified, okay, Eti isn't afraid of anything and not because she's brave. You cannot imagine how many fears, worries and sorrows you caused us with your silence.”

Now he looked sad. He understood that others might not understand what a good place Etheria was. The lies, hideous and vile, that the Horde Ultimate spread might not have sounded as false to others as they did to him. He was about to apologize to her, but then Dilayla cut in.

"I knew everything too... I mean, not everything, but that he was on Etheria, and it's not such a bad place at all.” She closed her eyes and continued. “They destroyed Horde Prime, the one who took my family. If they feel they have reason to hide the existence of their planet from the rest of the universe, I will respect that. To be honest, i'm actually going to give them a thumbs up. I've served too many sons of bitches in my life not to believe that every good deed will sooner or later be punished..” She looked sideways, her eyes the same as his brother's when he broods over the past. Bina massaged her forehead between her eyes and said.

“Well, what has been done cannot be undone. Just tell me with your hand on your heart, you didn't know who Captain Moonshadow was.”

He shook his head sadly.

“I had no idea. I've never met her. She left before... Before I was given my freedom. She... She was very loved on her planet... I don't understand why she wanted to kill Adora ...” He felt so down and felt tears come to his eyes. It was all so…. Sad “Sentient beings change, that's one of the things that distinguishes them from objects. What can change its nature? Sometimes all it takes is just the right amount of despair, suffering and hopelessness.” Bina said in a thoughtful tone.

"Maybe it's something we're not seeing. We don't know what else was done to her... What did the Azlanti did to her... Besides enslavement. Sometimes that alone is enough to break someone and make them a stranger. I've seen it more than once in my mercenary life.” Dilayla added, approached him, and then placed her metal hand on his shoulder, smiling reassuringly. "But there's always a chance to save someone… I believe your friends can handle it. But I guess we need to discuss another matter... Who is Catra? Why did you think they are similar to Et? What connects them?” said the mercenary looking at the two interlocutors. He sighed, frowning, and said.

“I've never been very good at distinguishing faces. We were created in such a way that only one face mattered to us... That's why I was wrong. Eti… She is very similar to Catra, although they are not identical. Catra... I met her at the same time I was liberated... Her friends, Adora, Glimmer, Bow and of course Entrapta came to Velvet Glove to save her... To tear her out of His hands. Horde Prime's Hands .” he swallowed loudly and continued. “Catra and Adora grew up together in the place where my older brother Hordak ruled. He wanted to conquer Etheria in the name of Horde Prime and trained orphans like them to be soldiers. It was very difficult for them, especially Catra. The training was hard and brutal. They were very wronged. There was a sorceress there... She wore a mask because her face was covered with scars. She raised them, conditioned them, but she was very bad to Catra...” From the corner of his eye, he saw Dilayla suddenly turn pale. “When Adora found the sword and became She-Ra ... They separated. Catra fought ruthlessly for power in the Horde until she became my brother's second in command. She waged war, regardless of the cost, until almost everything was lost...” He smiled serenely and looked at the women. “But everything is fine now. Adora and Catra are going to get married! It's so wonderful!

Bina smiled crookedly.

“Yeah, truly wonderful.” she laughed, but it was a laugh completely devoid of joy. “Now you probably want to know what's going on with Eti... Okay, so I'll tell you part of the truth, because you haven't earned the whole truth yet... It's too dangerous both for you and for us. This Catra of yours... She's like an older sister to our Eti. Twenty-five years ago our Father received an assignment. He was supposed to create a human- Pahtra hybrid , a very specific hybrid... With very clearly defined features... He managed to create one child quite quickly, but... it did not meet the demands. Perhaps it was because the child was a baby, or perhaps it was something else... Jantar treated it as a personal insult. He could have easily made a lot of money by giving such an extraordinary child to a family that would love her, but since our father was a bastard, he sold her cheaply... to some dark and cursed laboratory. There it ended up in the hands of bloody Dr. Sidonius . The same one who built that observatory... He was supposed to send some extremely valuable cargo to a planet hidden in another dimension ... that is, your Etheria... I don't know what the cargo was supposed to be, but it was obviously more valuable than the baby, because he sent it to test it. device... But there was a terrible accident and Sidonius' Elven wife died. It was this Old Leech who copied the Jantar's serum, and that's how we learned the truth about Eti's sister. No one except Sidonius believed that the child had survived the experiment, but from what you said, this girl did..." Then Bina laughed in such a bitter and sad way that he felt her pain. "Only for some damn monster to make her suffer the same fate! Do you understand how fucking unfair this is? Eti had no childhood, just the way she was created, the amount of terrible knowledge that was poured into her mind and the cruel training that she was subjected to... Just so that she could finally live up to our Father expectations, satisfy his perfectionist ego. " She wiped tears from her eyes. "You know, I hoped in my heart that girl survived, that she was found by a nice, loving family, that she grew up to be a joyful and happy young woman who didn't experience what we did, but... But there is no escape from destiny. Our fate is determined by the blood in our veins... your story only confirms this."

He and Dilayla looked at each other, not quite understanding what the captain meant, but then smiled serenely and said.

"But. This is all in the past. Now they can be together, like sisters…" Bina interrupted him by putting her hand on his shoulder. Instinctively, he tensed, because he wasn't used to being touched yet.

"It's not that simple, because you see... Jantar was much more cunning than your brother. He hedged, each of us, upon seeing another who has been separated from our family, must kill her. This is how we were conditioned by our insane father. We...

overcame it with great effort, but Eti... You know how she is every day, and if Jantar had drilled into her head a stronger conditioning than we had, which is very possible considering how much our father hated his first imperfect creation, then when accidentally stumble upon each other... I'm not sure if this should be allowed."

Then Dilayla spread her arms wide and gesticulating strongly, she said in a raised voice.

"Then why the fuck are you going there? You can go anywhere in the galaxy, there is no need to go there.

Bina shook her head and sighed.

}I often ask myself that. Maybe part of me wants them to meet, maybe I want to find something like a new home for my kids, or maybe I believe a bit in Itel's crazy mission and hope to win the war with the swarm? Don't ask about the latter. I can't tell you about that either, but maybe it's just a pipe dream and we'll never heal Captain Blazebringer . Maybe this will be better for the galaxy..."

She arrived just in time to listen to Bina's story . Her suspicions about the connection between Eti and Catra were true, although it raised further questions. Who was this mysterious client of Jantar and what connected him with Etheria, Catra, all of this So who this Doctor Sidonius was was a mystery, the only certainty was that he was a son of a bitch like few others in the galaxy... Though probably not as much as she was, but did such comparisons make any sense? Yes, I was a monster who almost ruined her life, destroyed her, broke her, twisted her into my own image. She will always bear the scars I caused her that even She-Ra's power cannot heal, though perhaps love will make her forget the pain I caused her. I could have been good to her, or at least better, it wouldn't have cost me anything. But I was just an angry, power-drunk, moonshine-drunk bitch who in her conceit believed she held the key to power, but then thewalls of the cell closed around me. I built the palace of my power on a foundation of sand and salt, on foundation of betrayal andpride... and children's tears. She thought, feeling a burning hatred towards herself. Indeed, Crawling Chaos was right, it warmed her dark, rotten heart. However, she learned one of Nyarlathotep's secrets, another piece of this intricate puzzle fell into place.

"You were the doctor's precious cargo…" she said in a low voice.

“Yes, it was me ...” admitted her ward, and for the first time after all the years she spent in her company, she heard pain and sadness in her voice, or something that resembled them very much.

“So that's why you hate it so much.” she asked finally learning another fragment of the dark story that was Calamity .

“I hate her like nothing in the world. – said the blonde woman. “You can't imagine what it's like to know that you came into being and live only to fulfill a destiny that has been taken away from you, making your existence meaningless and pointless.”

She smiled sadly at Lady Cali, feeling a little sympathy for her.

“I abandoned the destiny that was chosen for me.” she confessed to her ward, who smiled at her gently.

“And as a reward, you ended up here with me and we'll have to endure our company for a while...”

Dr. Quin straightened her clothes and looked at the crowd. Rechiza and Arkan-tar were here, the thinking part of their expedition. They were joined by Dilayla and Bina, blue-collar workers who most likely won't be able to get anything from her lecture, but at least they will be able to listen to someone intelligent speaking. There was also Palidus Valgu , the first specimen of his race they had encountered, though she had to admit sadly that while he was quite smart, he had been a huge disappointment. But now his presence could prove useful. Ilemshaw was also listening to them, who was an interesting creature in itself that would also be worth studying in the future. The aristocrat and the sorceresses weren't here, and neither were the kids who flew this ship. She didn't regret the latter, they would just disturb the adults, but unfortunately they took Rossie with them. She must have gotten used to the lack of any help from the lazy intern.

“So, my dears, we are gathered here to summarize the knowledge we have acquired about the Ravaged Zone, or if you prefer, Horde Prime's Empire.” she cleared her throat and turned on the holographic display. “Horde Prime's Empire was created between two and four thousand years ago, it is difficult to say exactly when, because this region of the galaxy was also affected by the Gap although to a much lesser extent. This in itself bodes well for future research, although history and xenoarchaeology are not my main areas of interest. From the very beginning it was centered around a huge flagship, the latest incarnation of which was known as the Velvet Glove, and the navy surrounding it. This arrangement is extremely important. To an untrained eye, devoid of knowledge in the field of xenobiology and entomology, the initial actions of the Horde resemble the functioning of locusts moving from place to place and devouring all the resources they encounter, but in fact this is only an appearance. The organism that most closely resembles the Horde in nature are some varieties of nomadic ants, although, like any comparison of organisms occurring at different stages of development, this is too much of a simplification. It is significant that the galactic Horde avoided planets devoid of intelligent life or inhabited by civilizations with a low degree of technological advancement. Initially, they were classified as objects of low or negligible threat, but at some point the phrase To primitive to receive Prime's light and other similar phrases in this convection began to be used. Horde Prime himself is also quite interesting. Initially, his name appeared only in internal communications. Even then he was treated with humble respect, but then he was not worshiped as a god, like we saw in modern times. In fact, it's a bit like Horde Prime is hiding among his clones, as if he's too carefull to reveal his true nature. Horde Prime's emergence as the ruler of the known universe coincided with a change in the nature of the empire. Initially, each civilization encountered was conquered and its resources exploited for a short time until the limits of productivity were reached and the entire population that survived the period of occupation was eliminated. But then the pattern changed. An almost normal conquest began to be carried out, somewhat reminiscent of the way the country was managed by the hobgoblins from the lost Golarion, with the total subordination of the entire economy to the military effort, at least at first glance, because in fact, the management of the empire was not only far from rational, but bore all the hallmarks of madness. Sometimes specific tracts of conquered lands were destroyed or spared, it seems only for aesthetic reasons. The occupation was never complete due to limited resources, and sometimes entire areas were left to their own devices, adding to the erratic chaotic nature of the empire. However, every planet, no matter how obedient or strategically important, was left devastated at the end. Plasma and vacuum bombs were used for this purpose, but not nuclear warheads, as if to leave them for future colonization, which never occurred. In general, Horde Prime's actions bear the hallmarks of internal compulsion, as if he was con...” she said, but Arkan-Tar interrupted her.

“An compulsion that has cost the lives of billions... tens or hundreds of billions of lives. Well, what for some is sadistic madness, for others an interesting eccentricity. But how does that relate to the fact that he had three on one side of his face?” the scientist asked and she rubbed her cybernetic eye. Meanwhile, Bina and Dilayla sat deep in thought, probably not following her intelligent argument, and Rechiza smiled sarcastically, probably to hide her intellectual shortcomings. Only Horde Prime's clone took note of everything she said.

“Well, it seems that each of his subsequent incarnations, because from what I understand he has died many times over all these millennia, has been more and more degenerate, like a program accumulating more and more bugs and glitches. This is apparently a feature quite typical of all extremally long-lived beings.”

Rechiza let out a short, wry laugh.

“It would be best for all of us if you were wrong.”

The witchwarper clearly did not meet the intellectual challenge of her lecture.

Rosie, learning from her recent mistake, knocked on the door before entering Eti's cabin. She and Itel decided to visit the cat girl, after all, Bina had not forbidden it. They heard the rustle of sheets and Eti called from inside.

“You can come in if you want.”

They did as she asked and the intern was glad she knocked because the cat girl greeted them wrapped only in a blanket. Her golden eyes with blue flecks gleamed from under the covers, just like Toshi's grey-blue eyes “Hello, Eti. Itel and I came here to see how you are feeling and everything.? she said, smiling happily. Itel smiled too, although she looked distressed.

“Because Bina treated you too harshly. After all, this whole expedition was my idea... The one on Icarus too, she should be mad at me.” ad the solarian

The cat girl shrugged.

"I feel... I'm not sure how I feel..." she said and Itel seemed concerned by her words. “I'm not mad at Bina . Sometimes I can be... tiring. I was just hoping that I would come up with some excuse and we would go back to the princesses, so I was talking about whatever was on my mind, hoping that I would come up with something sensible, but you know how I am, once I start talking, I can't stop. I just hoped that the Blondie... Adora would maybe come back and tell me what was written on my hand, because she is one of the Starlings, that is, the First Ones, and she sees the signs on my hand, so I thought she could read them." She explained, looking ahead with sad eyes.

Itel thought about something for a moment and then said.

"You know, there in the monastery I found out that Rechiza could read... The Language of the First Ones. I didn't tell you because I didn't believe her, but you can ask Lilka or Miss Daisy if it was true."

Then Eti burst out laughing. She didn't hear what it sounded like, but judging by Itel's reaction, it must have been a very unpleasant laugh.

"It's good that you say that, because when that She-Ra vanished, something very funny happened to my hand. "said the cat girl and stretched her hand sharply in front of her. Rosie jumped back in fear and then she and Itel looked at the feline's arm. The elf immediately hissed in fear, but it took her a good while to understand what had changed. Eti's metal arm had grown and now reached past her elbow.

- It's nothing to worry about. It's happened twice before... The problem will be if it reaches the heart or the brain... or maybe not?" Eti wondered "Don't say such things! Eti, please!" She screamed in true horror this time. The feline girl hid her hand under the covers and looked at them.

"But I don't want to die, if that's what you're worried about. I'm just... different." she said and for the first time she saw sadness on her face. "You see, my soul… my heart is torn in two. When I'm balanced, I don't feel much. I take medications to maintain this condition... But sometimes even they don't help, and then... Then rainy or stormy days come. When there are rainy days, I see the world as it is... I see how dark and sad a place it is. That there is no good and no hope, that everything tends to darkness. You don't see it because you look away, close your eyes, cover your ears, hoping that the monster will go away. But I can't look away, I look into his eyes. I lie in my cabin all day long, surrounded by the dark truth... But it gets worse, at least for others, when the stormy days come. Then… oh then I am strong. I see the beauty of the world and the pathetic weakness of my enemies. I understand that I am absolutely perfect, awesome and unique. Then I am unstoppable, invincible and I am ready for any madness, any meanness to achieve my goal. Because I know that I am the storm that is raging in my heart... The cold fire that burns inside me" a single tear rolled down her face. "You know, Rosie, there was once another person like me. Only… She was created a child. She could develop normally and explore the world on her own. She didn't have what I had crammed into her head. What it is like to hurt and kill is not shown. For many years I believed she was dead, which made me sad and happy at the same time. But now I know she's alive, don't ask me how, I just know. You see, sometimes I hate her so much. For being able to be whoever she wanted. That he doesn't have the same taint as me. That she can be happy..."

Conspiracies

The wound on Lonnie's face has become infected, making Comrade General delirious and staggered. She kept babbling about the warship they had found hidden in the glacier. She had to admit that the ship was stunning, but for now it was only an archaeological curiosity, completely meaningless. Even if they miraculously managed to get it out from under the ice, they didn't have enough people in the entire People's Rebellion to assemble a crew, not to mention the fact that no one would probably know how to fly it. The other problem was that they had no idea what they would do with a warship like that. Would they fly it to conquer the stars, or would Lonnie intimidate all of Etheria with the threat of an orbital bombardment. She had no idea, but their commander's new obsession could get them into trouble.

It didn't change the fact that Lonnie's health was getting worse, and neither her magic nor Dr. Moors' skills could help her. The antibiotics were too weak, so the brain in cylinder hat concluded that she was probably infected with some fungus that grew so abundantly in the ruins of the city. She remembered the rodents, so overgrown with lichen that their original bodies could not be seen, or the crab spiders, their shells torn apart by fruiting bodies of fungi, and decided that the risk was too great.. So she spoke to the rest of their group, and they agreed that Lonnie needed to go to Dryll as soon as possible. There she would be given much better medical care than what they were able to give out in the open. The duty of taking care for the Comrade General fell to her as a sorcereress with powerful magic, only it was not so simple. She could not use the commonly used Etherian magic, because she did not have enough power or equipment. So she had to perform the appropriate ritual, but it won't be that easy. Firstly, it will cost them valuable time, which they did not have much in store. Besides, her knowledge, compared to that of the sages of the destroyed Umbracor or Arkancor , or even her ... mother, the cursed sorcerer, was still small. However, she knew a few tricks. At first, she considered summoning Byakhe , a lizard-horse capable of even interstellar travel, but Lonnie, whose riding skills were close to zero even at full strength, would not be able to hold on to the ancient monster's back, so she had to find another solution. So she decided to summon a Star Chariot, although it was more difficult. So he and Rogelio caught two rabbits and, to Kyle's horror, killed them and drained their blood into a bowl, they needed payment after all. Then she began an incantation that lasted over an hour, and suddenly a white sparkling vehicle, drawn by two mounts, resembling a combination of moths and horses, descended from the blue sky. The charioteer was a tall being in a bright, tattered robe that seemed to consist of many interconnected strips of light. She told her companions not to look under the creature's hood for any reason. She added her own blood to the rabbits' blood and gave it to those ghostly steeds of gulping, then boarded the ship, leaving Kyle , Rogelio Imp and Doctor Moors . The four of them were to return the way they had come. Most likely, they won't be stopped by anyone, and even if they did, the current relationship between the Rebellion and the Princess Alliance was good enough not to worry about it. Under other circumstances, Kyle and Rogelio would have jumped at the opportunity to be together and perhaps even extend the trip, but with recent events and Dr. Moors' presence, is unlikely to be in the right mood. So she got into the chariot and set off. The ride was surprisingly pleasant. They flew high in the sky without feeling any tremors, cold dreaming of momentum. And this comfort made her pay attention. She had heard of travelers who fell asleep during this flight, returning after a thousand or more years. So she held an exhausted Lonnie in her arms, fighting as hard as she could to stay awake.

After two hours, they landed in the courtyard of Castle Crypto , much to the surprise of its defenders. As soon as he got out, the vehicle disappeared in a beam of light. She handed the Comrade General over to the other members of the Rebellion and issued orders on how they should take care of her. She was surprised to discover that no one questioned her competence, as if everyone took it for granted that in the event of the Comrade General indisposition, she would take over her duties, as if she were becoming the second-in-command. In fact, she should be happy about it… But she felt rather scared, because it unsettlingly reminded her of her cursed heritage.

Nothing had changed in the castle since they had left it maybe two weeks ago, which was a bit… disappointing. In life so much happened to the members of their expedition. Lonnie had found a ship for which she was going to commit a terrible deed, though first she would have to capture the Former Lady of Dryll ... But also to convince the other members of the People's Rebellion to her plan, which would not be so easy, even she wasn't sure if she wanted to support her …Unless Creeping Chaos wills it.

But of course, it was this journey that had the biggest impact on Kyle's life. The clumsiest member, first of the entire Horde, and now of the People's Rebellion, turned out to be hiding a huge secret. She wondered if the boy was deliberately hiding the truth about himself, playing the weakling all his life, but that was probably too complicated. But that meant that the Rebellion had its She- Ra.a … Its He-Ra… The name would still need to be thought of. Anyway, they had their prince of power… Which they couldn't use… at least for now. Not only because of her promise, she couldn't risk Lonnie finding out the truth about her, but also because of the Comrade General current attitude towards all things princesses. So keeping this knowledge to themselves would be beneficial to the Great Outer God's Plans by all means... The mere fact that Kyle's veins most likely had the blood of the First Ones opened up great opportunities for them. And the sword... In the name of Nyarlathotep he will possess all its secrets.

Some changes had taken place in her as well, with which she was not entirely happy. Until now, she had had to hide her true nature from almost everyone except for a few of Creeping Chaos' highest-ranking minions, at least those who live on Etheri. Now two people found out about her true nature. One accepted her... Well, perhaps she was too harsh on Kyle . After all, she reminded him of two people he had feared so much all his life, no wonder she scared him so much. Well, they had a hook for each other, though the blond boy didn't realize that he could hurt Nightgale a lot more than she could hurt him. Yet somehow, the way Frosta looked at her, that she saw him as more than a monster… than an aberration. It made her believe that there was a future for her other than serving the Great Outer God. But she knew what an illusory hope of happiness could be, and that all too often it ended in suffering. Nightgale had learned this bitter truth all too well... However... one, though she knew it was ridiculous, allowed herself to hope for a happy ending... or at least a moment of happiness...

Even this brief transformation in the depths of the earth allowed her to rest from Scarlet's body, so she didn't have to return to her true form now. Still, she took a hot bath, one of the luxuries former cadets had learned in Castle Crypto . She then issued several orders and began preparing a statement addressed to all members of the Rebel . about what had happened during the trip, but then Grizzlor unceremoniously walked to her room and growled in a harsh voice.

'We have guests." He stared at her with his white eyes. She had heard that in the olden days his kind were called Bugbear, and true to their name they were feared by other species. They were ruthless killers, hunting others like prey. Of course, their Etherian kin was much milder, and the former captain was well-liked among the former cadets.

"Who? she asked, looking at him with superiority. They were quite behind each other. Shadow Weaver had stepped on his toes several times, and now he was projecting his dislike of Hordak's deputy to all sorcerers. It would be funny if he knew her true nature, he would probably spit with anger.

"Some guy from the Snow Kingdom, a woman in a wheelchair, and some strange woman with a veil who talks like a shadow bitch."

She frowned. She had no idea who the man was, but she guessed the identities of the other two. The woman was most likely Halo, a well-known supporter of the People's Rebel postulates , but the woman with her face covered ... "No, it's not time for her yet. It has to be, someone else… ah yes," she understood and smiled nastily.

"Okay, let them come ..." she said, feeling the flame of triumph in her heart. "But in an hour, I still have work to do... I have to get ready to meet our dear guests."

They stood on the balcony with a view of the Dryl mountains and the storm raging around the castle since time immemorial. This place was away from most of the rooms, only one corridor led here, closed with a thick, armored door. The entire castle had many safeguards against magical and not only magical, spying. She wondered Entrapta she knew much about it. She was a trusting person, she probably didn't fully understand the idea of spying, so all these safeguards must have been the work of her ancestors. It would be worth finding out who they were, but it was a mystery that would be solved in the future, and now she had a much more important task ahead of her. And also much more in line with the skills "inherited" from her mother.

She looked at the three gathered. A man with a goat beard with a proud face. A Saihe woman dressed in black with a veil on her face and dark blue eyes, looking at the others with superiority and Halo, because she could recognize her from old photos, looked as if everyone gathered disgusted her. Nightgale was wearing sorcerer's robes with the symbol of the People's Rebellion , loose and a bit too big. It was very practical considering her plans.

"Welcome to Castle Crypto , the capital of the People's Rebel." she said formally. The man and Halo scowled, not hiding their distaste for the fact that one of the princesses' oldest abodes, the unconquered Castle Crypto, had been taken over by a bunch of Horde kids.

"I am the Chancellor of the Kingdom of Snow, but you are not Lonnie as I believe." the man said with superiority in his voice.

"I didn't know Shadow Weaver allowed any sorcerer to stay in the Fright Zone, I expected she hated competition." Halo said curiously, in a slightly nicer tone than the Chancellor. She smiled confidently on her face.

"Five years is plenty of time to learn sorcery. Under the shadowlady, Glimmer learned the art in just a few months." Saihe in the veil snorted hearing the title given by Shadow Weaver. "I am Scarlet, the People's Rebellion's Supreme Sorceress and Lonnie's second-in-command." Comrade General feels indisposed due to an injury she sustained during a secret mission. She gave me all powers of attorney to represent her. She decided to confront Lonnie with a Fait accompli.

"If you say so…" Saiche said "I am Midnight Mask Black Blade of the royal Yago clan and together with Star Sister Halo and the Chancellor of the Kingdom of Snow, we came here to make you an offer..." she looked at her expectantly. Nightgale answered her with a raised eyebrow.

"Talk. The People's Rebellion is open to your suggestions." she said gently. Her guests looked at each other, wondering which of them should speak. Finally, Halo snorted with contempt and slammed her good hand loudly on the table, placing some small object on it that looked like a crystal device of the First Ones, and the Chancellor looked at her and placed a crystal key next to it.

"Once upon a time, the Ladies of Armoria had access to the Armory. Hello began to speak. It was a place beyond time and space where a lot of weapons and other technological marvels were said to be stored. Such as Netossa's bracelet. The grandmother of the present-day ruler of Armoria gave the device that summoned armory to me, and the key to Frosta's mother. After King Umbragen seized her kingdom on behalf of the Horde, she feared that they might fall into the hands of Hordak and the Shadow Weaver." She smiled predatorily with the efficient half of her face. "We'd like to give them to you… under certain conditions."

“Which ones? she asked suspiciously.” All three of them did not arouse any sympathy in her.

“First of all, we want you to enforce your demands. Above all, we want power to be handed over to the people of Etheri.” said the Chancellor with exultation.

"And demand that Hordak, Entrapta, and of course Shadowweaver be punished if we find out where he is hiding." added Hello.

“You mean Light Spinner, she won't escape the Disgrace she brought on her family by using the alias.”

She frowned. Do they know anything about Creepng Chaos's plans?

"It's obvious, that's why we started our fight, although I'm not sure if the Starsisters aren't princesses by any chance." she asked, trying to sound as indifferent as possible. Halo burst out laughing in response.

'It's our business, we're a bit different from other rulers of Etheria.”

She nodded and looked at Midnight Mask questioningly.

“What do you want from us?

Dark blue flames burned in the eyes of the one who used the name of the Black Blade.

“First, we demand that an apology be made to us for the offense of accepting our sister Light Spinner, and that all those responsible, or their relatives and descendants, be handed over to us for a terrible but by all means just punishment Furthermore, we demand that we be given dominion over Mystacor, for it is blasphemy that the so-called sorcerers to practice the ancient arts without the necessary spiritual guidance. guidance. In return, we offer all the might of the Isles of Sorrow.” shouted the Assassin. Hearing her words, she froze. This woman asked for a lot. Not only did she want to take control of Mystacor , Etheria's only true sorcery school that had prided itself on its independence for centuries, but she also wanted to impose her values on it, so alien to most Etheria. She didn't know much about the culture of the Isles of Sorrow, but like the Scorpions in the days of old, their Shadow Warriors and Dark Shades were one of the planet's few military forces, and they would be a valuable ally in the cause Lonnie was fighting for... Only if they were willing to sacrifice so much for victory. “It is much less than sacrificing one innocent woman. Or much more, depending on how you look at it.

“Your proposal, the Black Blade, is noteworthy, but unfortunately also highly controversial. I may not be entirely objective because of my profession, but agreeing to your conditions could alienate many people who have been sympathetic to our cause to our cause. We have to think everything through very carefully before we make the right decision. She replied, trying to sound as polite as possible.

“But quickly, we will not agree to be led by the nose.” Midnight Mask barked back . Well, to be fair, Shadow Weaver didn't pick up interpersonal skills from home… She sighed and turned to the Chancellor as she had one more question on her mind.

“This key belonged to Frosta's mother so it belongs to her now. By chance, I recently met the Ice Princess, and I have a feeling she didn't agree to give her property to us.” she said in a voice as cold as the glaciers she had so recently visited. A very nasty smile appeared on the chancellor's face.

"Well, Frosta's consent or lack of it no longer matters to the Kingdom of Snow.

She felt sorry for her young friend.

After the talks, she showed her guests around Castle Crypto , or at least the part of it that they managed to explore. They saw former cadets training and their military resources. The Rebel members gave the guests a disapproving look, while the guests especially Midnight Mask, looked at them with contemptuous superiority. Only Halo gave them a few warm smiles. However, the clone that was pushing Sister Star's cart was not too kind to the half-paralyzed woman. As Grizzlor surprisingly eagerly began showing the Chancellor and Midnight around, Halo paused for a moment.

“Have you met Frosta ? What with her.” asked the woman in the wheelchair. She thought for a long moment before answering.

“She was very happy the last time I saw her. Although she was injured, but Adora healed her with the power of She-Ra.” she said finally, deciding to be as honest as possible.

“So She-Ra is back? How? Halo asked, absolutely amazed.

“It seems that he can teleport between planets. Needless to say, this is a very useful skill.”

Halo waved her hand absently and returned to the subject of the Ice Princess.

“Frosta... We've always taken care of her... You probably think I'm a mean bitch for supporting someone like the chancellor, but understand that Etheria needs changes... That... - she didn't finish because she was interrupted.

I don't think anything, and I don't need to understand anything. That's what she put between you and your conscience. Such is the lot of politics , said Scarlet, and left the woman alone with her mute servant and conscience.

The Chancellor then left them by boarding the Skimmer, and then invited Midnight Mask and Halo to her studio. Then she smiled at them and untied her robes.

“Are you craving orgies? I've always known that foreigners are perverted, but I never thought it was so much.” Saihe growled and drew her weapon, though Halo looked at her curiously.

“I just think that we need to talk honestly and seriously, and for this purpose we need to stand... face to face.” she said and transformed, taking her true form. Both women's faces showed horror and disgust, they were slowly starting to get used to it, although in their case such a reaction was fully justified.

“What are you...” asked the Black Blade, getting ready to attack, but with a smile she turned to the Assassins.

“Oh, auntie, I expected that our first meeting would begin with much warmer words.”

Halo tried to get up from the stroller, almost falling over and pursing her lips angrily, she drawled.

“So the dark whore has her spawn after all.”

She shook her head in amusement.

“Not exactly ... There was advanced technology and things like that, but it's not that important at the moment. I would ask you to show the symbols of the gods that you wear around your neck. Then you will meet the master to whom I have sworn allegiance.”

They looked at it, then at each other and took out an amulet in the form of a pendant. One depicted a skull with coins in its sockets, and the other also a skull, but this time wrapped in chains. They were the symbols of Charon, the Horseman of Death and leader of the Daemons, and Zon-Kuthon, lord of suffering and envy.

"Well, I guess now it's time for you." Black blade growled.

Nightgale grinned widely and snapped her fingers. Then the shadow of the light-eater, one of Nyarlathotep's Avatars, materialized in the pre-prepared circle .

“My master, Great Outer God, Creeping Chaos, Nyarlathotep cares only to save the universe. she said, looking the women straight in the eyes, fully aware that in the future one of them would betray her.

Black clouds are gathering.

Shimah walked through the corridors of Divinis, the new capital of the Prime Empire , or rather the Horde’s Ultimate Empire, his only rightful successor. Her beloved. She was bringing him important news, urgent news.

The city wasn't large, at least by the standards of the Pact Worlds, but it had grown nonetheless since Horde Ultimate's coronation as Emperor of the Known Worlds and heir to Horde Prime, and now housed three hundred thousand inhabitants. The planet it was on was Andromede, a place on the fringe of the empire, inhabited by bald dwarves and some strange variety of Ysoki similar to beavers or moles. Both races did not put up any serious resistance to the Horde, quickly recognizing the superiority of the Empire and becoming part of it. The entire system was full of precious raw materials extracted from the bowels of the planet, but also from nearby planetoids. Before the arrival of the Horde, there was already a totalitarian dictatorship here and the locals were used to heavy-handed rule, and in fact, Prime's rule was, in its own way, an improvement in the situation for the locals, because the insane ruler of the "Known Universe" was not interested in personally supervising each conquered planet. Just before Prime's Horde fell, it was converted to become a launching point for subsequent conquests, so when he died, there were plenty of troops and supplies stationed here, and an industrial base to replenish losses. That's why she decided that this place was perfect for the capital of empire of her beloved.

She passed many clone guards clad in golden armor and armed with heavy blades, whom they called the Firstborns. They were among the best trained warriors of their country and enjoyed many privileges. They received the best food, Great Names and Noble Titles. The palace guards were favorable to her because she was the one who came up with the idea to create their formation. The other clones had much more ambivalent feelings for her.

They took over the palace from the former Grand Magister, a dictator who had ruled the entire system and even several colonies with an iron fist for a hundred years, until the Horde arrived and he was killed by his own supporters after first loses. It was beautiful, full of brass decorations and intricately made bas-reliefs depicting scenes from mythology and ancient stories. Many had to be restored because they depicted scenes that Horde Prime deemed blasphemous and ordered destroyed. He also ordered his images to be placed here. They managed to remove many of them under the pretext that it was not fitting for his divine face to be sullied by the sight of simple, everyday matters, but they had to leave a few of them. The power required costs, including those of an aesthetic nature. Overall, though, she liked the palace, even if, as someone who had grown up among the labyrinthine corridors of the Apostate, the place definitely lacked a bit of its dark, sophisticated charm. But she didn't leave her home and break all ties with him just to miss him in such a distant corner of the galaxy.

Finally, she stood in front of the bronze doors leading to the Throne Room. Chamberlain Grundar, a tall and athletic dwarf and her protégé, addressed her in a formal tone.

"The Great Horde Ultimate is currently receiving a delegation from the moons of Mios."

"I have important news intended only for the ears of the Great Horde Ultimate. – She said imperiously and the dwarf, without asking any further questions, ordered the gates to be opened. He was a really good servant.

Waiting for them inside were several Ysoki wearing as much clothing as the miners could afford. Apart from them, there was also Seneschal Shrik, Ysoki and the third person in their empire, whom they met right after they reached this planet, when he almost single-handedly maintained some semblance of order on this planet when Chaos reigned throughout the empire after the death of Horde Prime. He was an extremely talented, if very neurotic, workaholic and, most importantly, he was absolutely devoted to them. On this planet, as in many places in the galaxy, the Ysoki were second-class citizens and often had to fight for their position among other races. Here, thanks to Horde Prime, who usually oppressed everyone equally, their situation improved slightly.

Horde Ultimate sat on a bronze throne decorated with rubies, wearing light, bronze-like armor with a beautiful crown shaped like the Horde's symbol. As soon as she entered, he turned to her, because he immediately noticed that something very important had happened.

"Do you bring any important news Shimach , the Voice of the Horde, the one who speaks in His name?" he turned to her with full seriousness.

“I have received news that you should listen to, my lord.” she said, bowing slightly.

Horde Ultimate gestured for everyone to leave, but she said.

“Let Shrik stay, for the news I bring concerns the entire empire.” she said with a bit of religious exultation that perfectly suited the current situation.

Ysoki remained watching them uncertainly and a little scared. Once the three of them were together, her beloved, Horde Ultimate, got up from his throne and walked over to her.

“What happened, tell me!” he ordered. Anxiety appeared on his face, which was marred by countless scars. There were reasons for him, they had known each other long enough for him to recognize when she felt genuine fear. An emerald flame burned in his grieen eyes.

“Taurus has been conquered.” she said and waited for the others to digest her words.

“So did She-Ra finally decide to do something, or did my brothers get brave and decide to strike?”

She shook her head and said.

“It's none of them. It's someone from the outside.” she said and Horde Ultimate turned his back to her and clenched his fists filled with anger. Still, after all these years, after the countless cruelties he had suffered at the hands of his Big Brother, the fact that he had turned out to be a vile liar still hurt him.

“I warned you that it would happen someday, although I hoped we would have a little more time.” she said in an apologetic voice, but he waved his hand to show that he had no grudge against her and asked.

“Who they are?” he asked, taking a deep breath.

“According to my informants, they present themselves as the Research and Exploration Fleet, but let's not be fooled by the name, because they have warships and an army. It took them three days to pacify Taurus and it appears that they did not suffer many losses during the invasion.” she said. Horde Ultimate turned to her and said.

“Do you know who they serve?”

She thought about the answer, because it was actually not easy to give it.

“From what they say in their communicates, they have the support of the greatest powers of the galaxy, I guess it's definitely the Pact Worlds, perhaps the Veskarium. Fleet is commanded by Lord Admiral Antares.

“Who is this person?” Shrik asked with fear in his voice. She frowned and said slowly, trying to remember as much as possible from her old life.

“The Lord Admiral Antares is a mercenary, someone who fights for money, but not just any gun for hire. It has its own war fleet. He fought Swarm, an enemy that makes even your brother seem like a local warlord. We've never met, but I know a little about him because of my former profession and I've heard a lot about him... He has a good reputation, he's considered a hero, but apparently he hides many dark secrets. He is an extremely dangerous opponent that we should not underestimate."

Ysoki shivered and began nervously nibbling the tip of his tail.

"So… what do we do now?" he asked in a rightly scared voice, after all, he tied his future with them, and although Horde Ultimate was better than his insane brother, he still had a lot of blood on his hands.

"We will attack him with all our strength and crush him before he can prepare." growled her dearest, and she smiled tenderly at him, sometimes he was so... simple.

"For political reasons it would not be wise. If he represents the Pact Worlds and Veskarium , an attack on him could lead to war with them, and we are not in the least ready for it. Moreover, perhaps thanks to him we will form an alliance with Veskarium, which will help us win the war and protect us from the more sinister forces lurking in the galaxy."

"More sinister forces?" asked the Seneschal, almost biting his tail.

"For example, the Azlanti Star Empire." she said with absolute seriousness.

Seleste smiled at her servant, who was Vlaka a highly social wolf-like humanoid from the slowly freezing planet Lajok. They where once a thug who attacked defenseless non-humans until the Star Empire captured him and subjected him to re-education, the only trace of which was a small scar on his forehead... They became a good servant, and the congenital deafness was another of their many advantages. She will need all the help she can get on this momentous mission given to her by the Star Twins. She will bring the Law of Humanity to this godforsaken corner of the Galaxy!

Unlike many citizens of the Empire, she did not consider the Non-humans to be inferior, just different, biologically adapted to different tasks, and Humanity was to make sure that everyone found the best place for themselves, so that they would be happy. The Empire thus achieved a perfect harmony that was the envy of the Empire by lesser and more primitive civilizations, either mired in the Chaos of Diversity and Equality, or ruled by definitionally nefarious non-human rulers. Although the Star Empire was powerful, even it was unable to fight against so many treacherous opponents, and the galaxy was still plunged in darkness and ignorance. Fortunately, once her mission succeeds, and she didn't even consider any other outcome, everything will change and there will be peace and prosperity in the galaxy.

They reached the outskirts of the Ravaged Zone and began reconnaissance. What the Expeditionary Fleet under her command found was terrifying in the hearts of righteous humans. An entire region of the Galaxy was devastated by a nefarious Non-Human tyrant who was destroying planets inhabited not only by harmless Non-Human creatures, but even local factions of the human species. Was there a greater meanness? The quintessence of his madness was recognizing himself as a perfect being. For such a blasphemous statement alone, he deserved the Empire to send a crusade against him, not to mention the other crimes he committed against both Humans and their minor brothers. This place was the best proof that the Imperial Way was right and that all alternatives lead to darkness.

She sighed and put down her cup of tea, absolutely perfect as always, and looked at the star chart. The non-human tyrant who used the name of Horde Prime was finally annihilated, which was easy to predict, after all, alien empires always fell sooner or later without the enlightened guidance of the human species, or fell into decadence, because the non-humans surrendered much more easily to their primitive impulses than her species. However, why he fell was much more interesting. From what could be inferred from the first actual message coming from the Zone, he was killed by the Lady of Chaos and her terrible entourage, but it was delivered by a Drow women, a member of one of the most untrustworthy non-human species. Was there any point in considering the words of this type of creature? And besides, she had her own, much more reliable source of information on this subject. She looked at the trunk where she kept her greatest treasure, "The Song of Eternity" by Sereni, Mara's Friend . This document, along with several others, was one of the main reasons for organizing this expedition. Although not the only one. She looked at her face reflected in the porcelain saucer, the sight of it will fill the hearts of the inhabitants of the place to which they were heading with joy. N*ot the most important reason indeed*. She thought at the sight and smiled.

"I think it's time to make a speech." she said to the soldier who was her personal guard. She went to the Communications Room of "Sovereign Vindicator " class dreadnought called " Destiny " and began to speak to all participants of the expedition, both human and non-human brethren.

"We came here together, regardless of our biological origins, to bring the light of our great Empire to this dark place. For millennia it has lived in the shadow of Tyranny, whose deeds were so terrible that the crimes of Veskarium and the Pact Worlds pale in comparison ! Although he was defeated, his evil did not go away with him and it is our moral duty to eradicate it by all available means! However, it is not only the inner desire to bring justice that has led us to Ravaged Zone. There is a unique planet here called Etheria. It is a planet imbued with magic like no other place in the Galaxy, where the Second Star Stone is found. This is one of the most powerful artifacts in the Galaxy, which once raised four people to godhood, including Aroden , the Last Azlanti, not without reason called the god of humanity. Until recently we believed that there is only one, which is kept, against all laws established by humans and gods, on the Absalom station and used to power it. However, there is another one on Etheria as if the gods themselves, in their infinite graciousness, had given us another one to use for the good and glory of the Human species. But there is something else, for thousands of years ago there was the heart of the great Empire of the First Ones. Contrary to the disgusting political correctness and false propaganda of the Pact Worlds, they were not machines, but faction of humanity who had achieved such an incredible level of technology that the deeds of our great empire pale in comparison. They greatest heroine was She-Ra, an incarnate goddess who fought tirelessly to fulfill the destiny of the Human species. Although the previous She-Ra sacrificed herself to give her people a chance against countless nefarious inhuman enemies, she has now been reborn. Elementary logic indicates that she is none other than the Lady of Chaos indicated by that non-human woman in this false propaganda message. It was she who defeated Horde Prime, and I am absolutely certain that once we reach her, remind her of her glorious heritage, show her the glory of our Great Empire, she will support our cause and share with us all her might, and we will bring about Pax Azlantica first in this galaxy, then in the entire universe!" she shouted, her voice filled with triumph

Kane felt a general disdain for vampires. Not because they were dead, blood-sucking parasites, although of course they were. He had no such prejudices. The problem was that only a true fool willingly became one. When you turned into a vampire, you were inactive for a large part of the day. While a human could work at night, doing anything at the day, was a problem for many vampires. Moreover, they depended on the blood of intelligent beings. Before the invention of synthetic substitutes, the hunt itself often took many hours. And their potential victims were not only able to defend themselves, but also actively searched for night predators. All this in exchange for some, rather interesting, he had to admit, powers and the illusory promise of immortality. The bitter truth was that in most cases Vampires did not exist for more than two or three years, being at this time only pathetic minions of their more powerful creators. In his unimaginably long life, he had the opportunitie to become one of these beings, but he always refused. Although perhaps because of his long life, his perspective was slightly distorted...

But Doctor Sidonius was the exception to this rule. He became undead against his will due to an accident on Lost Golarion. It was a long time ago, and he used his extraordinarily long life to expand his knowledge. A goal that was definitely more noble than sitting in a ruined castle and pretending to be a dark lord until someone finally found that would be great to slay fucking bloodsucker and becoming a hero. Of course, he had another thing in common with the doctor... longevity... Just like with his other companion, Prince Zed .

He had no memory of Automaton's arrival on Carurystal.. There was nothing strange about it. Though he was not affected by the Gap as severely as most mortals, his memories of the past millennia were cloudy, pitted, and mixed. Only unlike Doctor Sidonius, he was happy with this state of affairs. However, he knew that Prince Zed was connected to all the events that caused him to leave Carurystal, his eternal sanctum The Doctor didn't pretend to be trustworthy, but Prince Zed was always nice, polite and jovial. He hated such people with all his heart.

The three of them sat at a round table made of a substance of pearl like structure. There was a permanent coffee pot, intended only for him, no one else drank here... at least not normal substances...

“We managed to intercept the signal sent to the Lord Admiral by my Agent.” said the old Vampire, showing his long fangs in a triumphant smile.

"But doesn't that mean his loyalty may now lie with someone else?" Prince Zed asked.

Good point

“To put it bluntly, he sold himself to someone stronger.” he said in a hard voice, clenching his fists. The doctor shrugged.

“Does it matter? For this type of person, talking about loyalty is pointless. He will probably just try to get as much as possible for himself. He will play both or more sides, but we will benefit most from the information he provides.” explained the scientist, looking at his nails.

“What about your old friend Antares ?” he growled.

“As far as I know the Lord Admiral, he won't be interested in ancient mysteries and archaeological curiosities. Whatever weapons were on Etheria are now inactive, and there is nothing left on this planet of interest to him. We just need to keep our heads down and do our job and everything will go our way.” he said, but Kane had the impression that the Vampire had assured them far too quickly of the Lord Admiral's lack of interest in Etheria. For the time being, he allowed Sidonius to keep certain facts secret… For now.

“The Lord Admiral's possible plans are not our main concern now. For now, we need to decide what we will do after arriving on Etheria.” said Prince Zed, making a gesture as if he was grabbing his mustache. The doctor smiled, showing his fangs.

“We will lie low and observe the development of the situation, waiting for the right moment to step into action and take the initiative. This is what I've always been best at.”

He smiled at the ancient scholar and looked at him with his cold blue eyes

“Then I'll kill things, I'm pretty good at that too.”

Lady Ka and the Lord Admiral walked through the corridors of the heavy cruiser Invincible .

“Everything is ready to departure or continue the war. So far, no news of our victory has reached us or no one has taken appropriate action. Unfortunately, my intelligence network in this area is minimal at the moment, but we are working hard to create It won't be that difficult, because all settlements established outside the planets now exist practically on their own. There is such Chaos and Lawlessness in the Deep Space that the first person with enough power and wealth will gain obedience there.” she said, nervously flipping through the sheets of paper.

“Well, you know it best. I suspect that most of the local warlords, including She- Ra, are too focused on their own affairs to ever consider what lies beyond the empire. Their ignorance plays to our advantage. However, we need to gain allies. We need to organize a delegation to this halfling planet Bellum. The locals have a lot of troops and are willing to fight. Take care of it.”

She nodded, made a mental note of the instruction, and continued.

“The interim government will start working soon. At the first sitting of Parliament, a bill proclaiming you Lord Protector will be voted on, completely spontaneously and independently. Hooray! Then all that's left is to organize a parade and we can fly to Etheria. Only that Shiren girl from social media, Ashurk, wants to come with us. On the one hand, she's terribly annoying, but on the other hand, additional positive PR would be useful. At most, if we can't get enough of her, some terrible accident will happen to her. I'm really good at making up terrible accidents.” she explained, and the Lor Admiral nodded to her. They walked in silence for a while until they finally reached the lock. There were about ten clones standing behind the glass doors.

“These boys made a lot of trouble. They attacked the guards and even killed two. Lady Ka said, standing at the lever. The Lord Admiral looked at the face of his pocket watch and asked in a slightly bored voice.

“So you're not going to stop fighting.”

One of the clones looked at him defiantly and said in a voice full of exaltation.

“You Fools! Our death and life don't matter! Horde Prime is testing us and is waiting to return and punish those whose faith was weak.

The Lord Admiral grimaced in disgust.

“If you say so” he said and started to leave On the way, he gave Lady Ka a significant look. She waited until his footsteps quieted down and said.

"Orders not given, crimes not done."

And she pulled the lever.

Asindesa di Vir looked thoughtfully at her blade, reading the inscription on it over and over again. “End of Eternity – Blade of Vengeance.” Here, in Horde Prime's former Empire, this name rang a special bell. She led an assault on fortified enemy positions to bring... freedom to those who had been enslaved for half a century by the most insane tyrant in the galaxy. She fought to avenge the billions of beings he had wiped out. To avenge her planet and her family, even though she barely remembered it... However, she had no one to take revenge on. Horde Prime was dead, and his clones were just hapless beings who refused to accept the truth of their Big Brother's fate. The Order's mission on this expedition has effectively come to an end. There was no existential threat, so hellknights were not needed. She could think of something else now. During his meeting with his Star Siblings, the Lord Admiral seemed to show a surprising interest in Etheria's affairs. It was an excuse for her. She also intended to go to that place. To keep an eye on Lord Antares, of course

“The ship is ready. Are you sure you want to go there?” Camila asked

She responded with a warm smile.

“Yes, this time I will take care of my own future, my own happiness.”

Welcome to Etheria

“Well, let's get out of Dryft . Three. Two. One.” Bina counted down, and Rosie gripped the arms of the chair tightly. She was excited. They were all excited. Even Eti was wagging her tail nervously. Finally, the entire ship shuddered slightly and an image of the planet appeared on the main cockpit monitor.

“There's no sun, just like the maps said. You know, the darkness between the stars and that sort of thing.” Doctor Quin muttered. Rosie looked at Etheria's image. She looked quite normal. It had one green-blue continent, and a lot of moons.

“Seems quite alright to me. It certainly looks like a much nicer place than Akiton”

Ysoka gave her an offended look.

“What do you have against Akiton ! It's a very nice planet!

Alatar snorted.

“Akiton looks like a litter box that no one has cleaned, and it's even worse up close.”

Eti looked at Alatar suspiciously, but she caught on to the joke and began to speak in a serious voice.

“Sages say that when devils come across an extremely sinful soul, they bring it before Asmodeus himself, the prince of darkness , to judge it. She usually sends them to one of the circles of hell to receive a special, individual punishment. However, sometimes he encounters so of a hardened sinner, that there is no place for them in hell nor in Abbys or even in Abbadon. Then he makes a decision that even his dark heart is to afraid to make and sends her to a place that is terrifying even among the lords of hell... AKITON.”

Wrongdak blinked twice in surprise.

“Is this such a scary place?” he asked with surprise.

Itel grimaced.

“Not really, it's just that in this place there are metropolises full of gangsters and endless stretches of desert ruled by bandits. And all this is watered with the bitter sauce of decay and hopelessness.” she said with a very sour smile on her face. Since yesterday's conversation with Eti, the solarian was clearly depressed. Her... Their feline friend, on the other hand, seemed happier and somehow calmer. However, she had the impression that the elf was also worried about this, although she didn't quite know why.

“But their kebab is great.” Lilka interjected. Eti nodded and said.

“Its’s tastes great, although it's made of rats ... but still tastes great.”

Everyone nodded at her.

“Is there Kebab on Etheria?” Lilka asked with great interest, and the clone looked at them in surprise.

“I'm not sure, I usually ate at my friend Entrapta's , and she only prepared things in small portions, and you can't prepare kebabs that way... But I ate delicious dumplings. They were made from what was found on Darla... It's a First One ship.” he explained and smiled at his memories.

“Wait, these aren't starlings? Didn't they become extinct several thousand years ago? Have you accidentally eaten archaeological treasures?” Alatar asked suspiciously. Wrongdak shrugged.

“Maybe so, but it was the most delicious thing I've ever eaten and the first thing I ate after amino acids. Then I spent the whole day in the toilet. I thought it was Horde Prime punishing me for my transgression... Glimmer and I prepared them together... Queen Glimmer”

“I guess we can't count on the queen cooking for us, right?” Rosie asked curiously. She's already met a few princesses, that's quite a lot... But not a queen... Although she think Adora called Captain Moonshadow Queen...

“Okay, kids, no more chatting. It's time to contact someone from the spaceport, space traffic control or at least some guard, because they're about to shoot us down because they have enough firepower to blow up cruiser.” Bina said and pointed to the projected image, which showed spaceships. They looked like things built by the Horde... Only they were so colorful. They looked quite nice, but also dangerous. And there was a big tree floating around the planet, like the thirteenth moon, only tiny. Looking at this sight, Eti turned her head to the side and said.

“Who commands them? These ships are arranged in no order, this is not what a defensive formation looks like... Is there anyone out there who knows how to command a space fleet? And what is this tree about? This all makes absolutely no sense.”

“Then tell them yourself, they'll probably hire you. – Bina said and muttered a curse word that the glasses didn't show. - Do not even think about it! Okay, now be quiet because I'm entering the communication channel.” the captain cleared her throat and continued. “This is Captain Bina from the ship.” she sighed heavily. “Deadly Sword of Burning Fury. We ask for permission to arrive on Etheria and designate a suitable place in the spaceport, or if this is not possible, indicate a suitable place for landing.”

After a while, someone from the staff spoke up.

“Hello. This is Stefani, cybernetic assistant to Chief Space Traffic Controller Entrapta . Unfortunately, she is currently on an extremely important scientific mission and is unavailable at this time, but I will be happy to take care of you. I am sending you a list of available landing sites. If you need any more help, please ask. I will be very happy to help you. And I invite everyone to the Victory Day celebrations organized on the occasion of the fifth anniversary of the victory over Horde Prime and the double wedding of Queen Glimmer and She-Ra, the heroine of the galaxy.” the voice fell silent

“Yeah... that's nice... we need to discuss where we will land, but as soon as we make a decision, we will let you know...” Bina said and smiled at Wrongdak friendly. “Your friend's assistant has a pretty sexy voice.”

Arkan-tar smiled as he looked at the map of Etheria, although he felt no joy at all. He was just putting on a good face for a bad game... No, he had done that before. Not it was more of a game whose rules he didn't understand, but he tried very hard to pretend that he knew what was going on. Even though he was a good trickster, constantly pretending to be smarter than he was, was beyond him.

It was strange, but the fact that Etheria wasn't such a terrible place didn't calm him down at all. He could find himself in unpleasant places, much worse than Saltmarsh, although not as bad as the Lady of Chaos's domain was supposed to be. It wasn't even about the fact that he looked like a fool who fell for cheap propaganda, even though his ego was hurt. He just felt like he was on the wrong side. He had often broken the law and stolen cultural goods from other civilizations and cheated his partners, but now he realized that he was involved in matters much bigger than acquiring treasures. He worked for an ancient vampire and supported a ruthless, cruel dictator in his terrible plans. When the locals find out what he did, they will be, to put it bluntly, screwed. They will have as an enemy someone who could fight personally with a warship and win easily. And then there were all her friends who were just as powerful... Not to mention the fact that they had brought in Captain Moonshadow, who in some completely inexplicable way turned out to be a queen from Etheria, and she had a beef with the damn demigoddess about it. Like Rechiza, when he saw this, he just stood there and prayed very hard to all the devils and demons that they would not accuse them of complicity. They didn't, which was so contrary to everything he had learned about how governments and rulers worked that he felt his neck several times to make sure that She-Ra wasn't beheading him when he blinked. Well, at least he wasn't Azlanti. He wouldn't want to be in one of their shoes when they meet Adora or the Queen.

He himself wondered why he was still on this mission. There was, of course, money that Doctor Sidonius paid him, very much money, with which he would probably have lived the rest of his days in comfort and prosperity, but for this to happen, they both had to survive this expedition, what wasn’t obvious. Undead and demigoddesses of light weren't a very good combination... or maybe too good, depending on side you look at it... The weapon, from what he could gather, had been destroyed. At least that's what they said at Clytemnestra, they'll have to find out more on the spot anyway to be sure. Even if it was, they would have to make sure it couldn’t be rebuilt, or if the planet didn't hold any more dark secrets, which Doctor Sidonius had said was certain...

But what really drew him to this planet was Lady Cala's story, the prospect of them finding Eternia, the true capital of the First Ones, was a temptation he couldn't resist. He wanted to be rich, who wouldn't? But wealth could be acquired in many ways. He knew deep in his heart that he was looking for something else. The immortal fame that would come with discovering the home planet of one of the most mysterious and highly developed civilizations that lived in the galaxy. He did meet Adora who, in her natural form, did not make a great impression, to put it mildly. But she was raised on an underdeveloped and provincial planet that had been cut off from the rest of the galaxy for millennia, having little in common with her highly developed relatives... Of course, it was more than likely that Eternia was no longer inhabited and the girl had come from some another, unknown place... But it was even better this way... All the treasures and secrets of the First Ones would then be at his fingertips, only for him.

They were standing in the navigation room. Miss Daisy, Lady Cala, Rechiza, Dilayla, Wrongdak, Doctor Quin , and of course Bina, who had not broken her connection with Susan, were observing Etheri'as map. He wondered more and more what the captain and her young crew had in mind in flying here. What were they looking for here, and who was this mysterious friend the kids were talking about, and most importantly, why didn't Doctor Sidonius fill him in on it? Did he consider him an untrustworthy person?... Okay, he was completely right in this case, but why did he prefer to entrust such an important mission to a clone woman who was a gang member and a bunch of unstable kids, rather than someone with a certain reputation, maybe not the most clean one, but at least he knew what to expect from him.

"Okay, so yes. The landing zones that can accept us are: Brightmoon, Sea Gate, Winter City, Joy Zone, Crimson Waste, Stormvale, United Kingdom Court, Beast Island, Sorcerer's Hollow , and Rainfall. Unfortunately, they don't have a spaceport here , but I understand they want to build one in this tree." Bina paused, but Wrongdak began to explain.

"It was Velvet Glove , flagship of Horde Prime. That's where I was born - when he saw everyone looking at him in surprise, he added. "He used to look completely different."

Bina nodded and Rechiza asked smiling sarcastically.

"Since Mr. Wrongdak has been on Etheri for so long and has become acquainted with so many distinguished people, perhaps he will tell us a little about this planet and help us choose a place where we will stay?"

The Clone almost blushed, apparently not catching the sarcasm in Lashunti voice. He leaned over the map and, pointing to subsequent places, began to tell the story.

"Brightmpoon is the capital of the kingdom of Etheri. Here live Queen Glimmer, Bow, Adora and... " he exchanged glances with Bina. "…and the rest. "On Beast Island Entrapta live with my brother. She used to live in Castle Crypto in Dryll, near Storm Valley..."

At this point, Stefani interjected.

“Dryll has not been part of the Etheri Kingdom for some time now and if you land there, we will not be able to ensure your safety.”

“Good to know Stefani, you can continue Wrongdak.” Bina said, and the white-skinned alien continued talking.

“The Joy Zone used to be the Fright Zone and my brother ruled it, but now Scorpia rules there... You met her and her wife Perfuma. The Sorcerer's Valley is near Mystacor , a school for Sorcerers, that is, mystics. Aunt Casta, the one who made me this sweater, lives there.” He pointed to his strange clothes. “The Sea Gate is ruled by Mermista , Winter City is near the Ice Palace belonging to Princess Frosta... That's all I know. I didn't get to know this planet well because I hadn’t lived here too long and i was rather busy getting to know myself.” Wrongdak seemed a bit embarrassed, but Bina smiled warmly at him and asked, pointing to the great desert near the Joy Zone

“There are The Crimson Wastes. It's not a pleasant place, it's full of violence and lawlessness, although Huntara may have brought some order there recently In the Valley of the Lost, until recently, you could buy anything and no one asked for anything.” the clone explained with slight concern. Bina bared her teeth in a radiant smile.

“Sounds like Akiton!”

Wrongdak frowned in confusion.

“But I think you said today that that planet is a terrible place.”

The Captain waved her hand.

“Yeah, it's terrible, no doubt about it, but you know, it's terrible in the way we know and have become accustomed to. Better the familiar Abyss than the alien Nirvana.”

“However, I would like to mention that it is a very dangerous place, and its inhabitants are definitely not nice and law-abiding people.” Stefani said in a concerned voice. “Brightmoon would probably suit you much better!”

Bina smiled slyly and said.

“Honey, don't teach charlatan to cheat suckers, a few thugs won't be able to handle us , and now we, but we have private matters to discuss. Bye.” she said and disconnected the call, then turned to the others.

“Well, my dears, the situation is as Mr. Wrongdak described to you. I suggest that we land in the Scarlet Wastes, because it's a neutral place where no one cares about anyone else's hands, and money can buy anything, and money is what we have. I also suspect that all the treasure hunters and adventurers like that are there.”

Then Arkan-tar bowed low and spoke in a polite, somewhat formal tone.

“I think it's time for our two expeditions to separate. I'm looking for things that are similar, but slightly different.” he was explaining, but Lady Cala interrupted him.

“Perhaps it's worth not cutting off contact completely. As Arkan-tar said, our goals are quite similar and in my opinion we should exchange information and help each other. I understand you are looking for one specific item, while our interests are much more scientific in nature... although I won't be a prude and say that we would also be happy with treasures. Maybe we will meet during the celebration of this victory day. Your young pupils will certainly want to have fun during such a joyful event, and we will be able to exchange information without arousing suspicion. Who knows, maybe we will be able to win Adora, the Queen and the other princesses to our cause, or at least convince them to help us.”

Bina exchanged glances with Wrongdak . He saw concern in the captain's eyes, and a request in the clone's eyes... Very interesting

“I'm not sure if this is really a good idea, my kids are terrible wildings after all.”

Lady Cala, however, responded with a warm, friendly smile.

“Oh, you should believe in them more. They are good and resourceful kids, I'm sure they will cope. They have already managed to make friends with Adora and other princesses.”

Miss Daisy looked at her sternly, that was also interesting, but on the other hand, could this drunkard be hiding a secret worth knowing?

Bina sighed and said.

“I'll think about it. But I'm taking Rosie with me. No offense, but apart from Dilala and Miss Daisy, you don't really care about her, and my kids are friends with her”

Dr. Quin snorted disdainfully.

“Everyone would care much more if the girl wasn't so lazy and did what we all pay her to do.”

He threw up his arms. The girl was nice and could fight, which was very surprising, but she wasn't really needed.

“If she agrees, I don't see a problem.” replied the captain. Then Miss Daisy came to the map and said.

“Since we're all splitting up, I'd like to ask to be taken to several places. First, maybe we'll take Wrongdak to Beast Island to meet his brother, and then we'll visit Mystacor, I used to be a magic teacher and I'm curious what magical education is like here. Then I'll check out Brightmoon and see what the situation is there. Maybe I'll meet someone from society.”

Trunks of Etheria written by the hand of Miss Daisy, who was personally acquainted with each of them. He thought, smiling ironically.

Bina nodded.

“Okay, just take my kids to Brightmoon, let them see a bit of normal life...”

Dilayla turned pale when she heard these words. Strange, she's had a problem with Lady Cala so far . But he'll talk to her about it later... if he decides it's worth doing. if he decides it's worth taking care of?

“Miss Daisy, you may be an outstanding Sorcerer, but I'm not sure if you should go alone to a strange place... Completely unknown and alien. – the mercenary suddenly said , with very badly feigned concern in her voice, and the gloomy mystic replied with a cunning smile.

“Of course, you're right, my dear, that's why I decided to take Ireanis with me.”

Bina and Dilayla blinked in confusion.

“You know, traveling with Ireanis is almost the same as traveling alone, or even worse, it's like traveling with a child of Chaos. “ Bina said carefully.

“As I said, you should have more faith in your Wards...”said Miss Daisy.

“Did someone sleep with someone here and I didn't notice anything?” He thought, but then Dr. Quin tapped some keys and overlaid some data on the map.

“This planet is scientifically amazing, in my opinion someone should evict all the inhabitants from here and start full- scale scientific research... “ Ysoka coughed and, seeing people looking at her, she added. “Yes, the planet is as full of holes as cheese...

No speciesist associations, please. It almost looks like the whole thing is a huge ultra-advanced structure. Unfortunately, our scanners cannot obtain much data because of this. However, I found some places where the structure of the planet was disturbed.” she pointed to several colorful dots. Lady Cala leaned forward and said.

“Two of these points are near the Crimson Wasteland. One is at the junction of the Wasteland, Brightmoon and the Zone of Joy, the other is near a place called the Singing Jungle... I think we'll visit the Jungle first, then we'll look at places closer to the capital. Are you comfortable with this arrangement?” asked the aristocrat, looking at them carefully. He threw up his arms.

“That's fine with me. I don't know what the rest think. ”He looked at Rechiza significantly. The Warper had been strangely moody since the events at Clytemnestra.

“Yes, it all sounds... Reasonable, you should always follow the voice of reason...” said Lashunti, strangely unfamiliar voice.

An hour later they entered the atmosphere. It happened without any problems. Landing was much more difficult because the landing pad was just smooth rock. Fortunately, the piloting skills of Alatar, Bina and Mr. Ilemshaw were so high that nothing happened, not even shaking them badly. Or maybe she didn't feel it clearly. She was too distracted and at the same time absolutely focused on the task ahead of her. She tried not to let on that she was aware of Miss Daisy's identity, that she was much more than just the annoying aristocrat's tutor. Everything now fell into place logically. Her participation in this mission, magical power completely incompatible with the position she held... Her weird attitude towards Eti, this strange protectiveness in someone with such a decisive and strict character. She had to do something about it... But she couldn't count on her companions' help. Arkantar probably just shrugged and said he couldn't do anything. This individual didn't even mind that he worked for a war criminal who used nuclear weapons against his own planet. And Lady Cala, this woman must have known the truth about Miss Daisy, After all, she entrusted her with the management of the estate... This whole expedition must have been the idea of the dark mystic, although it did not absolve the Aristocrat. Whoever cooperated with the monster became part of it himself. That's why she had to do what was needed even more. Not only to save Bina and the kids, but also to save herself.

When they landed, she was already clad in power armor while they were on the ground. Everyone went outside to get some fresh air. Two local people were taking care of the landing site. Four- Armed Lizard and Satyr Woman. As soon as they left, the horned one turned to them with a cunning smile.

“We're only here to pay for guarding the ship... To make sure nothing happens to it.”

Dilayla didn't want to argue. She simply took the red stone and crushed it in her armored hand. They both turned pale at the sight and politely swept the sand away. Miss Daisy had walked quite a distance and seemed surprised amazingly relaxed. She smiled to herself, it was a significant relief. She moved towards the woman with a grim smile. She wasn't sure if the others would understand, especially Rosie, but she couldn't help it... Maybe when she was older...

She wasn't able to sneak in her armor, so she just walked towards it, trying to make her steps sound neutral. She had to get as close as possible to strike a blow before the other could cast her spell. But before she was far enough away, Miss Daisy said.

“Even if you succeeded, the only thing you would achieve would be to make Lady Cala happy.”

She stopped in surprise and the gloomy Elf turned to her with a smile on her face

“You've been lying to everyone from the beginning. You're from here...” she said angrily, but without shouting, so as not to attract the attention of the rest, and the sorceress nodded.

“My name was Shadow Weaver, and before that I was called Light Spinner. I was a war criminal. I hurt and betrayed everyone I knew. I finally did the only good thing in my life and sacrificed myself for my daughters, Adora and Catra. But I did not receive the grace of death and now I am here.”

She blinked a few times, but then shook her head.

“So that's why you're so fascinated by Eti... This girl also resembles the daughter whom, according to Wrongdak, you hurt so much. What are you looking for in her? Redemption for what a mean and lousy bitch you were? – she said in a venomous tone. However, the gloomy elf only smiled bitterly.

“I know it's ridiculous. I know perfectly well, but... I couldn't resist. Don't you know what it's like to believe that you have lost everything, leaving behind only memories full of pain and anger, and then to be given a second chance to do everything again, this time better, without making the same mistakes?”

Dilayla laughed darkly.

“So why did you come to this place? As far as I know, everyone here hates you, you have no friends or allies here. You could go anywhere in the Galaxy, do absolutely anything you wanted. With your talent and skills... You were free, and instead you came to the only place that doesn't want you. Why!?

This time it was Miss Daisy who laughed. She heard a lot of pain and sadness in that laughter.

“No, I'm not free.” she approached her. “I cannot tell you the details, but know that the game is about something much bigger than you, me or even the dammed Lord Admiral. We are all mere pawns in a game that began thousands of years ago, but unfortunately its end will unfold before our eyes.” She stood in front of Dilayla so that he could kiss her. “You can kill me. Even though I am much more powerful here on Etheria than I was recently, I will let you try to kill me. But know that if I die, no one will stop Lady Cali from... doing what she wants. And what she wants most is to bathe in blood.”

Dilayla stared into the dark mystic's emerald green eyes for a moment, until she lowered her gaze and moved out of the dark sorceress's way.

“Okay, now I have to talk to Ireanis like a drunkard to a drunkard.” Miss Daisy or Shadow Weaver said and moved towards Papa. She watched her go for a moment until she suddenly saw Rosie running towards her. The deaf girl hugged her as tightly as her armor would allow and then spoke in Sign Language.

“Bina said I would go with them if I wanted to. I... I like Eti... and the others. But we are friends and... be careful.”

She gently stroked the girl's head and said.

“Don't worry. A tough girl like me won't be hurt by anything.”

She woke up... or rather was woken up by a splash of cold water in her face. She jumped to her feet abruptly, summoning some kind of spell. She wasn't exactly sure what it was, but it was TERRIBLE. Through her she saw Miss... Dandy... Danny ... Daisy! She liked her. She drank with her and didn't judge, at least not like others did. She was a good friend. But then she saw something that chilled her heart.

“Nooo!” she exclaimed and ran to the empty bottles standing by the sink in her cabin. – You did the best thing! – she screamed as she felt tears flowing down her face.

“Something what someone should have done a long time ago. Bina is a good woman, but she did wrong to let you get drunk like a fish day after day.”

“But... What will I do now?” The Sorceress from Mwangi said in a dead voice. Miss Daisy put her hand on her shoulder and smiled warmly and said.

“I won't cheat on you. Will be hard. But we will be in this together. We must have clear and agile minds to face what lies ahead. But we can do it.”

She looked at the mystic with sadness.

“I can barely face the morning. I'm just a pathetic drunkard.”

Miss Daisy nodded and said.

“But you were a much better person… Better than I ever was. And I will help you become that person again.”

Blood on the crimson sand

“I don't like these birds,” said Eti, looking at the sky.

“You never like birds. It's probably some form of paranoia, you know?” Itel answered her.

Eti looked towards her, stroking Toshi's head, whom they had taken with them again, and said in a slightly more energetic voice than usual.

“You know, you shouldn't accuse me of being paranoid.” there was a note of excitement with a pinch of irritation in her tone. She didn't like it. She sensed that something dread was approaching, that the darkness in Eti's soul was awakening. It was always a sign of something bad and terrible… She wasn't sure what had triggered it, but now they had to be very careful not to leave the girl alone. Did Bina notice this… and should she have noticed? Then he would lock them in the ship and tell her to keep an eye on Eti... Maybe she should do it as a good friend... But she had a mission and Eti was essential to its success... She looked at Rosie, who was looking doubtfully at the birds flying above their heads. "Besides, Eti now has a new friend... Not everything has to be on my shoulders" she thought bitterly. She knew she was being unfair to this deaf girl, but she couldn't help it... But she fought with herself, she tried damn hard to be objective.

“Eti, we're not talking about me now, we're talking about your damn obsession with birds. They didn't do anything to you. It was the same on Saltmarsh and everywhere...” she said slowly, trying to sound calm, but then Eti interrupted her.

“This is an obvious and terrible lie. Not everywhere birds seem suspicious to me. For example, there in the monastery no one looked suspicious…”

“Because there weren't any birds there...” he tried not to lose his temper, but then the cat girl stopped her from finishing again.

“I don't see any connection between the fact that there were no birds there and the fact that I didn't suspect them of anything. Non-existent birds are just as suspicious, maybe even more so. You know, once again you're showing off your complete lack of logical thinking. Besides, I didn't suspect any on Icarus, and maybe I should have... Then he wouldn't have caused this scandal with Captain Wingy ... And yes, I liked her, and yet she was a bit bird-like.

“You should suspect her, we all should...” she said with resignation. She rubbed her forehead, she was tired, and they had just left the ship. Did they make Bina feel this way?

Their captain was talking to the strange couple guarding the landing pad. Dilayla and the others had already packed and decided to use the local communicator to call for some form of transport. After learning that the armored mercenary was leaving them, lizard and the goat women became more cunny and now Bina had to show them their place. Itel ordered the others to approach the arguing trio.

“What? So I have to pay you to wash the ship, otherwise I will be fined for disfiguring the landscape?” The burgundy-haired woman said, smiling skeptically

“What can you do, it's the law. Fifty Etherian swords are due.”

“How much?” Bina exclaimed indignantly. The goat woman spread her arms and said in an almost apologetic tone.

“You know, it's desert here, there's no water, costs are rising.”

“Yeah, maybe you can show me the appropriate regulation, law or decree, or something else that the queens do there. Please i want to see it.” Bina said, and all cheerfulness disappeared from her face. Perhaps the horned women would have continued to argue, but then there was a loud " Zap ", then " Skree ", and one of the birds fell onto the scarlet sands, shrouded in clouds of smoke. Everyone's eyes turned towards Eti. The cat girl was still dressed in her Akytonian nomadic garb, quite fitting for the place, but there was still something menacing about her posture. She rested her head on her shoulder and began to speak in a surprisingly sweet and cheerful voice. In a voice that didn't quite match her words.

"You know what? Maybe we'll pay you with chicken soup. And tomorrow there will be goat stew and lizard soup." she approached them and revealed her beautiful face, which she could stare at for hours, if only she was allowed to… And she continued her statement. "Although the goat stew requires some turnips and shallots, and the lizard stew would need some chili, but I'm sure it can be sorted out." she didn't stop moving closer to them as she spoke until she was close enough to the pair of smartasses that she could look them straight in the eye. They seemed terrified, though she had the impression that it wasn't the cat girl's words but the sight of her face that frightened them more. It was disturbing…

"And you know what, there are definitely some loopholes in the law, right?" the horned one said in a fearful voice, and her lizard companion quickly nodded.

And then something unexpected happened. Eti smiled. This sight would be wonderful if it weren't so terrible. Eti placed a metal hand on the horned woman's shoulder

"And you know what? I am absolutely certain that there is a law of hospitality that requires the first inhabitants of this planet we meet to wash our ship , with dire penalties for failure to comply, but you are law-abiding citizens and you will wash our ship out of the pure goodness of your hearts."

Now the two of them had a look of pure horror on their faces. They nodded in silence.

“See Bina? This is how you should negotiate!” Eti exclaimed happily, wagging the tip of her tail.

Bina looked at them seriously.

“March to Crushey.” she said in an emotionless voice.

“I'd like to meet the guy who designed it. He had to have a smart head on his shoulders, don't you think?” said Eti, pointing to the anti-gravity vehicle in which Lady Cala and her group were flying away. Bina saw a poorly repainted Horde symbol, red this time, although the vehicle was very crude compared to the creations of the galactic Horde. She looked at the Crusher, which, painted absurdly by her kids and covered with scars from the War, didn't look like a fancy machine itself, but it had served them well over the years, so she hoped this construction would not disappoint Lady Cala and her companions.

It turned out that this pair of sly guys ran some kind of stall or shop and sold desert clothes, suspicious-looking food, water and maps. She took the map and extra water and even paid for them, although after Eti intimidated them, she could have taken everything she wanted and they would probably have given her all their property. The cat girl could be disturbingly scary, though something told her that she hadn't succeeded this time just because of her talent.

“Okay gang, listen to me because I'm too lazy to repeat myself.” she said, standing next to the armored carrier. “Since our ship is leaving to carry Wrongdak and Miss Daisy, I'm taking you with me… That doesn't mean I wouldn't take you anyway, because let's be honest, you wouldn't listen to me anyway, right?” She asked rhetorically and pointed at Crusher. “We're going to the Valley of the Lost, the largest settlement in the Crimson Wastes. We'll split up there. Itel with Eti and Rosie will look for a place called Bone Haven, it's some kind of bar or inn or something, and Itel with Rosie will ask the locals there, and our shooter will insure her from afar. Meanwhile, I'll take a look around the town and see what I can find out. Only Itel, remember that no one can be harmed. Keep an eye on them, okay?" she asked the Elf, and instead of arguing, she obediently nodded, which confirmed her suspicions that things weren't going well with the cat girl. She wondered if she should lock Eti in the armored carrier, but she couldn't be trapped without using drastic methods, and that would only make the situation worse. She preferred to put the girl in a chosen place where she wouldn't have the opportunity to do anything stupid and count on Itel and Rosie to keep an eye on her... or four at once.

They got into Crusher and set off.

"Crimson Wastes, fear my roar!" exclaimed Crusher and laughed sinisterly.

"Crush, maybe this i we could start our visit to an new planet without intimidating everyone around us." she asked in a resigned voice.

"But Eti could! Why was she allowed and not me? Is it because she has a tail." asked the transporter.

"Yes, it's because she has a tail." she explained. Why do my kids have to be so murderous? she asked herself. Rosie sat down next to her and stared at her for a moment, until she finally asked in a hushed voice, or rather with hushed gloves.

"What's going on with Eti and her birds?"

She sighed heavily and replied to the white-haired girl.

"I should tell you to ask Eti, but you'd probably find out it's because of a terrible avian conspiracy that permeates all social classes and spreads throughout the galaxy. I will tell you everything, although it is not a happy story. You see, here on Atrax, most of us live in a large chasm because of the winds that can strip flesh from bones. There were no native birds on the planet, but some genius brought crows and seagulls there, and they multiplied terribly in the chasm. Even among the criminals, there was a saying that "partying with the birds" means lying somewhere dead and being gnawed by birds. Our father lived in a great black tower, on top of which great black crows nested. When one of his works did not meet his expectations, he broke its neck and threw it to the birds. Eti… She told you that our father created her, right?" she looked at Rosie, who slowly nodded and then continued. – You see, she was very valuable. It took a lot of resources to create it. She was always very disobedient, it was the intended effect... He came up with an idea, cruel and terrible. "Let me tell you," she looked at the girl.

Rosie stared at her and after a moment she cautiously nodded.

As soon as she was thrown onto the stone top of the tower, she heard cawing. She turned onto her back and saw black birds all around, staring at her with hungry eyes.

"I don't feed them normal meat. I don't want to them feel full. They usually get clones that died during creation, but also those from my creations that did not live up to expectations and are disobedient." came the bass, metallic voice of Jantar, who aroused fear in his children, but also fury in her. "As you can see, they are hungry. Think about your actions as you wait here to be forgiven. – Then the heavy steps of the Creator's metal limbs rang out.

She looked around in panic. She was left alone. The birds stared at her with hungry eyes. She tried to free herself and cut the bonds with her claws, they were so sharp. She could cut metal with them, she could tear those birds apart with no problem. But the bonds were tight and she was unable to break free.

"You can't do that! I will kill you! Hisss! I will kill you!" She screamed and hissed at the black figures surrounding her.

The next day she was found crouched in the middle of the tower. She was clenching her teeth on the crow's carcass. As soon as one of Jantar's employees approached her, she opened her eyes and hissed.

“Don't come closer! I'll kill you! Hisss”

“The punishment made her even more disobedient... More Eti...” she finished the story and looked at Rosie, who was staring at her dumbfounded.

- It's... It's terrible! – she finally said in sign language. – How could your father do such terrible things?

She smiled at the not-quite-intern anymore.

“Be glad you didn't meet one of my sisters. Fortunately, that crazy bitch been dead for years.”

The Valley of the Lost was half the size of the capital of Saltmarsh, but it felt like a much livelier, if more dangerous, place. The buildings were cramped and one could get the impression that the city had recently expanded... Many buildings on the outskirts were quite new, built of prefabricated elements, corrugated iron, and even animal fur, skins and bones. There were various vehicles everywhere, most of them either converted Horde machines, both galactic and local, or homemade works. According to Eti, it all looked like Akiton , and yet completely different. As if someone had pumped all the despair and sense of the approaching doom out of Akiton and infused it with hope and steely determination. She didn't like it at all.

“Okay, we won't go any further... Otherwise we would have to run over other vehicles.” said Bina as she unbuckled her seat belt.

“I don't see a problem with it.” said Crushey in an encouraging voice.

“But their owners will see it.” she said and went outside. Eti privately believed that a large part of these machines deserved to be run over by Crushey, in fact it should have been an honor for them, but she did not want to argue with Bina . She had some plans... She wanted to find out something. She couldn't draw attention to herself of their captain, otherwise he would tell them to stay in Crushey, and then he wouldn't know the Truth.

When they were outside, Bina threw them a map and said.

“Okay, for your young legs, the Bone Haven should be about an hour of walk from here. Don't bother anyone, Eti, it's best not to show up at all. And watch over both of them... for the sake of the dark and righteous gods, do not forget to hydrate yourselves.”

Itel was a good mommy's girl again, and Sparkle Hand looked at her sympathetically. Bina must have told her some sob story and now she saw her as some pathetic, contemptible creature.

“It's quite a cold desert, even the sun doesn't shine.” she said, trying to refrain from commenting on "Don't show up."

“It's probably because of the lack of sun. I think Vampires will like this planet...” Alatar said,

“But these moons make it feel weird to be a werewolf here.” added Lilka.

“It was a fascinating exchange... hit the road.” he shouted and, turning on the cloaking field, they moved deeper into the Red Sands.

“If it weren't for the neon sign, this place would look ominous.” Rosie said as she handed the binoculars back to Itel.

“I would also noticed some laundry. The sight of someone's pants takes away a lot of the scariness. But you're right, it looks definitely more serious than Red Water.” added the Elf. She had the impression that her green-haired friend had been acting decidedly more polite towards her lately. She turned to Eti, who was scratching the sand with the tip of her shoe. It was probably because of the cat girl that the solarian was nicer to her. Eti had been strangely excited since they landed on Etheria. She understood it a little, because there was something charmed about the atmosphere of this planet. As if a great power penetrated her body with every breath... But it seemed to affect Eti differently, although according to the scout, sometimes she simply felt different...

“I already understand!” Eti called out unexpectedly and Itel also turned towards her.

“What do you understand?” Itel frowned.

“Why did we come here! I saw your cunning plan.” Eti shouted happily.

“What plan?” Itel seemed irritated.

“It's about the sand. You see, Akiton definitely needs more red sand, because it's called Red, after all. its definitely missing there.”

“What are you talking about! – exclaimed the elf, irritated.

“ Excuse me Itel, but I can't think of any other reason why we would leave the fucking desert of Akiton only to first end up in fucking Saltmarsh and then end up in the fucking Crimson Wastes or whatever that stupid place is called.” Eti spread her arms and gesticulated violently, and judging by the expression on her face, she probably raised her voice.

“Calm down! You were supposed to behave!” he elf drawled, and Rosie felt more and more confused. She wasn't used to seeing people arguing, especially her friends.

“I am behaving. Anyhow, but I behave.” she said and pulled her hood over her head and ran towards the Bone Haven.

“Damn. – Iteli said and together they followed the feline girl. Eti didn't slow down until she was inside the ominous structure, and they were with her.

The interior was… what you would expect. It was surprisingly spacious and the air was quite fresh. It was full of menacing-looking people who glared at them as soon as they entered. They belonged to many species, usually covered with scales or fur. They were also armed and definitely didn't seem like very nice people. Still, she waved at them with a friendly smile. Eti looked around and dramatically grabbed her head.

“Well, now we found something that wasn't on Akiton . A den full of thugs!” the scout exclaimed.

“What the hell do you want, Eti? What's wrong with this place being similar to Akiton ? Besides, you quite liked Akiton." the Solarian said , gesturing wildly.

“But it's a fake Akiton ! They don't even have decent weapons here.” She walked up to a creature that looked like a Vesk, only slightly more slender… or maybe just a slender Vesk… and pulled out what looked like an electric baton from his belt. “See how pity this thing is?”

“Hey, leave it!” he exclaimed, standing up. He towered over both girls and was now glaring at them, but Eti put the baton to his chest and turned it on. Discharges spread throughout the reptile's body. He let out a strangled scream that made Rosie jump in fear and he fell to the floor.

“Because it's a more civilized place than Akiton . Where the cat eats the dog. – Itel said and grabbed the baton from Eti's hands.

“Is that a allusion?” the feline asked, and at that time the lizard started to get up and said. “I'll show you as soon as I get up.”

“Don't look for subtext everywhere. And apart from that, it's a really good weapon.” she put the baton at the lizard and electrocuted it again. “You know, I have the impression that you've been feeling bad lately and you want to spoil mood for everyone around you! – exclaimed the Elf, giving the baton back to Eti.

“I don't feel bad Itel. I had a bad life.” said the cat girl.

“You'll have a bad day, you'll have it as soon as I get up.” Said the lizard and then both girls looked at him and screamed at the same time.

:SILENCE!” Eti electrocuted him again. Then the friends looked at each other for a moment, until Eti finally looked down and said.

“Okay, I'll go sit quietly at the bar and you ask the locals.”

“Just don't buy any alcohol or anything like that, okay?” Itel said and Eti nodded and both girls left and Rossie went to the lizard and helped him up and then she said.

“Are you OK?”

The wiry Vesk shook his head.

“No, during the war I was hit much worse sometimes. Just drink some decent moonshine from the tech department and I'll be good as new.” he said and ordered a drink from a horned waitress.

“It's funny, Miss Daisy, my friend, also likes moonshine from the tech department, but she... we're all not from Etheri, except maybe Emili.”

The lizard took a sip of the foul-smelling liquid and said.

“Then she has no idea. Thanks to the moonshiner in the tech department, the entire Fright Zone was able to function. Hordak might have banned alcohol, but even Shadow Weaver had enough sense in her head to know that without it everything would fall apart. Therefore, it did not enforce this ban.

She felt a sudden twinge of anxiety.

“Who is Shadow Weaver?” she asked, full of bad feelings.

“Or rather, who she was. At least everyone believes she's gone. This was Hordak's right-hand woman, second-in-command. She was a powerful sorceress, the ruler of shadows. She once apparently botched a spell and turned into a monster with a scarred face, so she had to wear a mask. I have never seen a more horrible person. Well, maybe except for Horde Prime, but he was in a separate category.”

She felt the hairs on the back of her neck stand on end. Miss Daisy was nice and good to them. She saved them there in the monastery and also took care of Lady Cala , who was so wonderful... and apparently her ancestors came from Etheri... No, it's just a coincidence. It's just that many mystics who used dark magic had scars because it was an occupational disease... and they liked strong moonshine. To get rid of such terrible thoughts, she asked the lizard.

“You see, we are looking for such... a treasure... Very valuable. Made by the, uh... First Ones.”

The lizard looked at her, then burst out laughing.

“All of Etheria is one great treasure. And to find something smaller, all you have to do is start digging. You can be sure that you will get something. Although now Etheri's greatest treasure is She-Ra...”

She nodded, smiling broadly.

“Yes, we know her... I mean Adora. She is very nice and likes crunchy food. We met her on Icarus...”

The wiry Vesk looked at her for a long moment, then said.

“It doesn't look like you're lying... Well... If you're looking for something really valuable, go to Beast Island. Apparently it was a Junkyard or something, and Entrapta is there with old bad Hordak. She also liked to collect old First Ones scrap and was said to have received a lot of First Ones treasures. You can also try to go to Dryll, to Castle Crypto, Entrapta's former castle, but Lonnie took it for her People's Rebellion and I don't know if she will want to talk to you. There's also Brightmoon , and if it's true that you met Adora , maybe you'd better go there. But you better watch out for the Grand Marshal. If your friends behave like that there, it may end badly. The one in the coat reminds me a lot of... What the fuck is that?" the lizard stood up abruptly and looked towards the bar where Eti was sitting. She took off her mask and hood. She held her braid and touched the tip of it to the palm of her hand, flexing nervously. The voices slowly quieted down and more and more glances were directed towards the feline girl. Rosie knew something was happening right before her eyes, although she wasn't sure what. Itel was sitting against the wall and seeing how the bar patrons were behaving... And Eti, she summoned a blade. They approached her, and the scout then turned to Rosie.

"You know, I remembered that time on Icarus you asked me why I always hide my face and now I thought that maybe I would reveal myself here, because no one would recognize me... After all, this planet was cut off from the rest of the Galaxy for a thousand years, so no one would recognize me. And look how much no one pays attention to me. Absolutely no one." the cat girl snorted and ran her fingers across the counter. She touched her fingers to the scar on it. It looked like claw marks, similar to those on Emily's...

"You know what, Eti, maybe we'll go away... you'll cool down..." Itel started, but Eti interrupted her

"Shhh" and turned towards the snake person, who was cowering under her gaze. She smiled, which was a very disturbing sight, and moved closer to them.

"Hey, creep. Do you like me so much that you look at me... or do I remind you of someone?" she asked, wrapping her metal arm tightly around him. The two gnoles stood up and looked at her menacingly.

“We don't know who you are, but we remember when Catra came here and started ruling. And then she gave us back to the Horde. We don't want you here.”Hor “Catra…” Eti said, almost tenderly. “Thanks boys and girls and other persons.” she pulled a grenade from her belt and threw it. Itel pulled Rossie to the ground. Everything was covered with smoke and the elf dragged her to the exit. There were screams and shouts everywhere. Someone tried to stop her, but she broke his jaw with a punch. They ran outside, followed by Eti dragging the snake person. The cat girl shot blindly from her hip several times and the building began to burn. They ran like that for a few minutes until they found themselves behind a dune. Then Eti stopped and knelt by the snake person, then pulled out the knife attached to her forearm and held it to the captive's throat.

“Who is Catra!” she growled, and the snake person squealed in fear.

“Well, Grand Marshal Catra... She- Ra's fiancée and Hordak's former seccond in command ... She also ruled the Wastes for a while... She's just like you...”

Eti growled and hit her captive with her metal hand fir, then a second time. Drops of blood fell onto the sand, barely visible against its crimson. When Eti was about to deliver a third blow, much stronger than the previous ones, she grabbed her hand. The cat girl turned towards her, a look of pure fury on her face. For a moment, Rosie was afraid that Eti would lunge at her, but suddenly all the fury escaped the feline scout, as if someone had popped a balloon, and she looked down, as if she were ashamed of what she had done... or was about to do... Then she untied the snake-like captive, who immediately ran away and she said in a surprisingly calm, even shy voice.

“I think I did something very stupid... We'd better go back to the ship and tell the others.” she put a dust mask on her face, put a hood over her head and moved forward. She and Itel watched her for a moment until the Elf spoke.

“You know, it's good that you're with us.”

She looked at it surprised.

“I thought I was irritating you.” she said in sign language, and Itel smiled bitterly.

“Because you're irritating. But you're doing a good job on Eti... I wouldn't have stopped her, and she would have suffered later.” she said and followed the shooter, leaving Rosie alone in the scarlet sands.

Enemies we know

Chapter Summary

> And I admit my mistake. I forgot that Scorpia understood what Emily was saying... So Emily forgot about Shadow Weaver.

As soon as they landed and left the ship, she heard a sound. It was painfully irritating, seeping into her bones, into the core of her dark, twisted soul. She shuddered, she had already forgotten how much this place scared her. She had only been here once with Hordak and barely escaped with their lives. That's why over the years they have sent countless unfortunates here under the guise of a research mission... it was a way to circumvent Hordak's conditioning against issuing death sentences. They all died terrible deaths, much worse than she could have imagined. Only Mikah survived, by a miraculous and terrible twist of fate, having lost the love of his life. It was another crime that weighed heavily on her conscience. But not only hers, as she could see. A narrow strip of coastline has been cleared of this strange metal flora. From what she had heard, something similar was covering the First Ones cities on Abbalon ... It explained so much and at the same time led to more questions. In front of them stood a clumsy castle, as if made of scrap metal and random devices. According to Wrongdak, it was Entrapta's new castle . It was called Castle Junk , and she had to admit that it was an extremely apt name. Hordak's kinder brother dropped his ears as soon as they reached the shore. But as soon as he saw the building on the island, he smiled broadly.

“My brother and Entrapta live there.” he said with delight in his voice.

“We'll be happy to meet him. Go ahead and announce us, and we'll take a look around the island at that time.” she said in a gentle voice.

“Be careful.” said Mr. Ilemshaw in a metallic voice through one of his drones. “I cannot scan the interior, but I detect various disturbances coming from inside and a signal that is probably the product of extremely advanced technology. Additionally, I sense the presence of many forms of life, both organic and non-organic. And considering the name of this place, they are probably very dangerous.”

“It's a bit like someone combined Castroval with Abbalon . Wow, a two-in-one trip.” Ireanis exclaimed, looking around curiously. She smiled happily like a child at a festival. The instinct of self-preservation was not her strong suit...

Said the woman who sold her soul to the eldritch evil and is now going to make arrangements with the person who has already sentenced her to death once.

“Don't worry, Mr. Ilemshaw, we are really resourceful women.” she said, smiling cheerfully, although honestly she preferred not to stay here long. Although she was stronger now than then, and her body was much healthier, but from what she overheard when Adora and the others talked about this place, she had never experienced the worst, and the confirmation of their story was the vibrating sound that caused she felt as if someone was drilling a hole in her soul. Plus she wanted to drink. However, she couldn't afford to be so weak before meeting Hordak

They moved away from the landing zone, and Wrongdak moved forward, eager to meet his brother. Emily stayed back and watched her triumphantly with one eye, clearly believing that her creator would defeat her. Unfortunately, little one, you are late. Now I'm the one dealing the cards. Then the bot or Droid as they call them in the galaxy left and they were left alone.

“So again... You were born into this world and worked for this guy we're going to visit now, right?” Ireanis asked. She nodded. Earlier on the ship, she had revealed some of the truth about herself to the elf, without revealing who she served or saying much about what she had done when she was second-in-command. It was a bit of a risk, but she figured she could either let her in on some of the truth or get rid of it. In the past, she sometimes organized tragic accidents among her competitors, but in this case it would be too suspicious, and after all... She was trying to be someone better... Perhaps the Elf's help would come in handy, she tried very hard to convince her to do so.

Strangely, Ireanis took her news surprisingly well. She wondered if the sorcerer understood what she was saying. Due to alcohol abuse, Ireanis was not one of the brightest stars in the sky, euphemistically speaking.

“To put it very simply, you're right. – confirmed the sorceress's question. She only said "Aha" and did not pursue the topic further.

“It really doesn't surprise you that you're traveling with a woman who comes from a planet that has been cut off from the rest of the galaxy for thousands of years and happens to be same place where we're going”

Ireanis shrugged.

“Stuff like this happens all the time. For example, I cast a spell incorrectly and from the Mwangi jungle I was transported to the future and to a planet attacked by big bugs.”

She looked at the elf, trying to see through her, but all she saw was a broad, cheerful smile.

“Are you serious, you really believe in this nonsense.” she said, incredulously.

“I believe because it's true, even if I imagined it all. You know, some peoplw say life is a dream.” Ireanis explained in a cheerful tone. She looked at her and laughed darkly.

“Maybe you're right... Although sometimes it can be a nightmare.”

“Child! Could you please stop behaving in such a ridiculous and insubordinate way!” he said in a commanding tone, but the Child pushed his hands and head away with they prehensile hair. They were belligerent after him and independently after Entrapta . A perfect combination of genes. He loved them as much as he never thought it is possible... But now he had to wear them after they got covered in oil He sighed and said in a pleading tone, "Dad is asking, let him change your clothes!"

The Child calmed down a bit, so he was able to get dressed, although he was still out of breath. Then he gave him an old broken clock that was supposedly a gift from the ruler of Eridani or something, but of course Catra broke it. They have so many of them. The child liked to tinker with them and last year she made a catcher with which she could remove the balls when they fell behind the furniture. He couldn't say from whom it inherited such practical sense He sighed and sat down in the chair, then sighed heavily. Being a parent could be extremely exhausting...

As he sat and rested, watching the child work intently on the remains of the clock, he felt an overwhelming longing for Entrapta again . At the same time, he was glad that she could be among her friends for a while, even if it meant being with Catra. He exiled himself to the place where he had sent so many, but he didn't expect that Entrapta would go with him ... that they would get married and have a baby together... He was happy, and that made him feel terrible. He knew that this exile was much harder for his wife than for him...

Recently, a ship landed on the landing pad. That was another reason he wished Entrapta was here. She always took better care of guests. He could only hope that the visitors would fly away at the sight of a castle or an island. But then a voice came from the speaker.

“Brother! I came back!

It was Wrong Hordak, his younger brother with an absurd name. He left them a few years ago, wanting to explore the galaxy and collect data for Entrapta ... Since then, there has been no news from him, apart from the fact that he apparently flew away with some furry creatures, he suspected that something terrible had happened to him, although he did not share his fears with Entrapta . He himself encouraged him to go on this expedition. He wanted some privacy with his partner, and his younger brother could be very intense. Now he understood that he had been driven by childish selfishness and that if anything bad had happened to Wrong Hordak, he was responsible for this. But now he's back, so everything will be fine.

“Come in, brother.” he smiled, feeling a surge of relief. “I am glad you came back.” he said and gave the command to open the outer door. - You're about to meet Uncle Wrong ... Hordak - he said to the Child, realizing that he would have to explain a lot to him when he got older.

He waited for his brother for a few minutes, obviously he had to find his way in the castle, which had grown during his absence. He was waiting for him in the living room, the place where Entrapta kept the things she worked on when she received guests... When he saw Wrong Hordaka, his eyes widened. He was... colorful, weird and absurd. He even dyed his hair rainbow. He walked up to him and hugged him tightly.

“I'm so happy to see you after all these years. I have so much to tell you.” he exclaimed. At first he stiffened, but then he responded with an equally strong hug

“I'm glad to see you too. I need to introduce someone.” he smiled and moved away from him and pointed to the Child. “This is the Child, brother. Child this is my brother Wrong …”

“Wrongdak” his brother interrupted “Now everyone calls me that.” And he kneel down next to the child, looking at him with fascination. The child was also watching him with his eyes open. Emily stood next to her, looking at the baby.

“Hello... I think I'm your uncle.” said his brother gently, and then the Child yelled “Wrongdak. Uncle Wrongdak!” and they climbed onto his back and wrapped they hair around his neck. Wrongdak laughed, but Emily started talking to him. However, he didn't have time to understand what exactly she wanted to tell him, but then his brother spoke.

“I also need to introduce someone to you. I have come here with many extraordinary people, but most of them are not with me now... But I have brought two great Sorceresses. Misses Daisy and Ireanis Toromech Called the Silver Flame.

He sighed. He was in no mood for guests, even less for sorcerers. But if he had to…

“Good Morning, Lord Hordak.” came a mocking voice. He knew him very well. For decades, he had accompanied him in his war against the people of Etheri... His brother... Wrongdak frowned, obviously seeing what emotions he was feeling now.

“Take the Child.” he said sharply.

“But brother... What happened?” the younger clone asked, but was interrupted by a loud scream

“Do it!”

Wrongdak cringed, but obediently grabbed the little one who was about to run to the new arrivals and dragged them away.

“Do as your Brother wants, Mr. Wrongdak” Shadow Weaver said in that falsely polite voice she liked to use when she wanted something.

He turned around, standing between the child and his brother, and the dark sorceress. When he looked at her, he blinked in surprise. Shadow Weaver wore no mask, and her face was unscarred. He had seen her without her mask several times and it was never a pleasant sight. Now she looked completely normal for... Saihe. That was the name of her species, if he wasn't mistaken. She had green eyes and dark green hair and gray skin. She looked quite nice, he noted anxiously. Next to her stood a black woman of the same species. She had long silver hair and a green strapless robe. She smiled happily at him and waved her hand. Wrongdak took the Child in his arms and left with Emily.

“You too, my dear, could you leave us?” Shadow Weaver turned to the other woman, who inhaled sharply.

“Ah yes, after all these years you want to spend some time alone.” She said in a conspiratorial tone.

His former right hand looked at the silver-haired woman in surprise.

“What are you insinuating, Ireanis?” she exclaimed indignantly.

“You know, you were a couple for so many years and then you were separated... Now you'll probably want to make up for time.” Ireanis replied and winked knowingly.

“WE ARE NOT A COUPLE!” they shouted at the same time and Saihe said.

“Okay, of course... and she went out in the opposite direction as his brother, whistling cheerfully. When they were alone, he smiled. He was a trained warrior, his body was functional again, and he was wearing powerful power armor. It wasn't a combat model, but it should be enough. In one bound he was right next to her and slammed his metal hand against the wall.

“Shadow Weaver... I should have known that someone like you couldn't act like any proper being and stay dead.”

The dark sorceress smiled. She didn't look scared.

“The bone sages of Eox would find your words offensive and politically incorrect.”

“What? What are you talking about?” he asked, confused, and his former right hand sighed heavily.

“Exactly, Lord Hordak. For years you considered the people of Etheri ignorant, without even understanding the extent of your own ignorance.”

He growled, feeling that he was losing ground under his feet.

“Give me one reason to spare you. No one would blame me if I killed you.”

“But you didn't.” she looked at him contemptuously. “And that's a good thing, because you would be harming your family”

“You dare threaten my loved ones in my house!” he shouted at her, but she didn't even move. She used to be afraid of him, even when she was at the height of her power. Now she looked tired… even resigned.

“I'm not threatening you, I'm just warning you, and believe me, it's not me you should be afraid of.”

The tone of her voice made him step back.

“What do you want from me?” he asked in a slightly calmer tone, but he was still ready to kill her at the slightest provocation.

“I thought you were one of the few people on Etheria who would listen to me, and as you can see, I was not wrong.” the smile disappeared from her face. “Your Brother's actions and especially his fall did not go unnoticed. The greatest powers of the galaxy sent a fleet here to explore the Ravaged Zone, as Horde Prime's empire is called, and especially a certain planet that had recently appeared in the Galaxy. It is commanded by Lord Admiral Antares , a mercenary of galactic fame, widely regarded as a hero, but whose heart is as black as your brother's.

He snorted contemptuously.

“No one on Etheria will be afraid of someone who is willing to sell himself for a few coins.”

Shadow Weaver laughed, clearly amused.

“When I ruled the Horde on your behalf, I often used those who fought for money. From what I know, Catra did the same.” she thought for a moment.

“She's so similar to you.” he said, and his former right-hand man glared at him.

“Skip these personal attacks. Lord Admiral Antares is not just any thug who will stab anyone you point at him. He was once the ruler of the planet Tarak , before he was expelled from there. He then faced the Swarm for thirty years and survived.” she said with absolute seriousness, and the way she spoke about the Lord Admiral made him feel like he was losing his self-confidence

“Who is the Swarm?” he asked, confused.

“Or rather, what the Swarm is. It is a Hunger that cannot be satiated. Thousands of thousands of maws ready to devour everything that stands in its path. This is the greatest plague of the Galaxy, an enemy that makes the power of the Galactic Horde pale in comparison. And this man had been fighting him for decades, not only ensuring his survival, but winning victories while we were stuck in our ridiculous war on Etheria.”

It pained him to call his attempt to conquer Etheri ridiculous, but he couldn't deny its validity, which caused him even more pain.

“If he is such a great commander and a great Hero, why are you so afraid of him? Someone like that will be useful to the Queen when she fights against my silly brothers.”

Then Shadow Weaver laughed, but not in the triumphant or mocking way he had heard from her so often, that had always irritated him so much, but in a way that was completely devoid of joy, but full of pure desperation. She pressed something on the back of her neck and her face blurred, and then he saw her as he remembered... But she had changed. There was no anger or pain in her face that always pushed her to the worst horrors. What happened to her over the years?

"Lord Admiral Antares is a monster that I helped bring here through my ignorance." she said quietly. "He waged a brutal civil war on his home world and dropped nuclear warheads on his own planet as he left it." she looked into his eyes and he saw a tear roll down her cheek. Then he felt real fear.

"What can I do? I have no power on Etheria I was lucky to be allowed to exile here. Many want my head, both those who fought for me and those I wronged. For not reporting that you were back, I could have lost what little freedom I had left." he said completely honestly. He felt the most powerless and useless he had felt in five years... since he had met Entrapta .

Shadow Weaver did something she had never done in twenty-five years of knowing her, she put her hand on his shoulder and said.

"You have experience. You wagged war for Thirty Years, and there is no more experienced commander on the planet. However, you have something, determination, something to fight for. I saw Adora, Glimmer and the others fight with nothing else, and I know that was often enough for them. You have a family you need to protect. But also something else. We were both given a second chance to make up for our mistakes, to atone for the wrong we had done. Prove to everyone that you have changed, that you have become a better person. – she moved away from him, but without taking her eyes off him, he considered her words and slowly nodded.

"Agreement. I will help you, but if you cheat on me... " he threatened her, but she just smiled sadly.

“If I fail, beings old and powerful beyond imagination will claim my vile soul and give me a punishment that will make whatever Horde Prime did to you feel like a friendly nudge. Or maybe they will let me live, knowing what a pathetic and contemptible creature I am. I'll try to contact you... It would be nice if you managed to get to the Victory Day party.”

“I'll try, but I don't promise anything.” he said carefully, and the dark Sorceress went to the exit, but took a step forward. He wanted to confess... To confess the terrible sin he had committed five years ago, which no one knew about except him and that poor unfortunate creature, if it survived, but he had no courage. Instead he stated.

“You've changed, Shadow Weaver.”

She stopped and replied.

“Death changes mortals...” she turned and asked again. “How is Catra? Are she and Adora happy?”

He smiled sourly.

“Our relationship is not very good... But she seems happy, but she doesn't remember you very fondly.”

She nodded slowly.

“I don't deserve anything else.”

After Shadow Weaver left, he moved into the next room. The Child was drawing something on Emily, and his little brother was struggling to keep from bursting into tears. He stopped as soon as he saw him, he just started crying

“I am really sorry. I didn't know it was her, I never talked to her. Emily guessed, but she didn't know what to do, she was afraid that if the truth came out, she would do something to me and other crew members... And then she forgot. She was so nice to everyone, especially Rosie and Eti. Eti is...” his voice broke down. He sighed, he came here with the intention of yelling at his brother for endangering his family, but he realized it was pointless. Instead, he helped him up and gave him a big hug.

“She can be extremely nice when she knows she can get something out of it. She cheated in front of you.” he sighed heavily, because he was about to ask Wrongdak for something that could turn out to be very painful for him. He moved away from his brother and spoke seriously.

“You have to do something for me. For me and Entrapta” he sighed again, because he was aware that she was asking a lot from him. – Return to the ship and keep an eye on Shadow Weaver.

Wrongdak blinked several times as if he didn't understand what he was saying, he wasn't sure what exactly he wanted from him.

"But… we have to inform the others, warn them about her…" his brother protested, and he sighed heavily in response.

“It's not that simple. What she told me... we need her... at least for now. I know her well... Better than anyone else on Etheria... And I know what to expect from her. If what she says is true, then... we have bigger problems than a lying sorceress.” he said, feeling chills spreading through his body. “I don't know how she managed to fool everyone so well... But she's known Catra and Adora forever. She exploited the weakness she had instilled in them, much like Horde Prime did to us. “Beware. She once had great power, and now... But her most dangerous weapon is her mind, warped and twisted. You can't trust a word that comes out of her mouth.”

“If she is so dangerous, we need to inform others even more.” Wrongdak exclaimed, and his words sounded reasonable, but… he knew that she was definitely telling the truth about this Lord Admiral.

“Sometimes, brother, the enemies we know are better.”

Legend of the Crimson Wastes

Bina really liked this place. They saw thugs and tricksters armed to the teeth everywhere. She saw also all kinds of goods on the stalls, and absolutely no one thought about their legality and origin. Most of it was junk, but she spotted some interesting things here... For example, these batons, supposedly from the Horde, designed by Hordak himself ... Isn't it Wrongdak 's brother or something... Damn, looking at the white-skinned alien, she didn't expect that other clones were so smart... But it was the same in her family. Some of her sisters, especially the M-nations, were devilishly intelligent, and others, like a certain Ka who, luckily, actually partied with the birds, were completely fucked up.

However, they didn't find much that resembled the Technology of the First Ones. Although, truth be told, she wasn't sure what exactly they should be looking for. Perhaps they shouldn't split up with Arkan-Tar and the rest of Cala's team just yet. But it was too late for that now. Still, they found some interesting items. They were usually cracked crystals covered with inscriptions resembling star constellations. Even if they had no practical use, they could sell them to any collector on Absalom for a handsome sum. And they weren't even expensive... Well, maybe they would have been if they paid for them in coins, but luckily they had a lot of old electronics, which were very valuable on such an underdeveloped planet. The problem was Alatar…

"NO! This may come in handy!" Dragonkin shouted, snatching some gadget from her hands.

"You don't use it anyway... You know what you collect, it's like..." she said, but he interrupted her indignantly.

"Say it! Do you mean like a DRAGON!"

“LIKE A NERD. DAMN NERD!” she shouted at him, and the seller, a cat-person more gaunt and smaller than the usual Pahtra, laughed.

“You will find dragons in fairy tales, nowhere else.” he said, clearly amused.

“Really…?” she looked at Alatar, who was watching at her pleadingly. “I've seen several dragons in my life, by my own eyes, and I have the impression that you wouldn't recognize him even if he stood right in front of your eyes.” she said, and the seller snorted.

“I saw some in drawings, they were huge and had a big mouth full of sharp teeth. Apparently they devoured everything that stood in their way.” he said, looking a little more closely at the young technomancer, who did not notice it and responded with sincere indignation.

“This is a disgusting specist stereotype!”

“You know, Alatar, you can eat a lot too.” said Lilka, stroking Toshi, who was sucking the battery. He has to remind her not to overfeed the fox because then he starts kicking with electricity when someone touches him.

Dragonkin was about to start arguing, but she interrupted him.

“Back to business.” she pointed to a large fragment of a mosaic depicting two women, one damn tall and a child between them. “It's nice, but I'm looking for something... bigger and more usable, if you know what I mean.” she said, and the skinny cat frowned.

“Hmm, I would ask Grox. She had a lot of interesting equipment, she even had a mechanical hand, although not such wonders as this one.” he pointed at Alatar. “He she only moved out after Huntara banished her after she sided with the Horde. Now he's at Tung's Lashor and his Aspis gang.” the cat scratched behind the ear. “There is also Goldeneyes , but he is quite strange... He is more of a collector and researcher than a typical trader, but he is honest, and he doesn't get along with Aspies”

“Aspies?” she said and exchanged knowing glances with Alatar and Lilka. “So this plague got even here?”

“Yes, the Tung Lashor gang, supposedly the most powerful gang in the Wastes, or the second most powerful gang in the Wastes... or the second most powerful. Depends on who you ask. Tung once lost power to Catra, but after the invasion many came back to him for protection, especially when Huntara was chipped. Now Tung Lashor claims to be allied with the People's Rebellion, but Lonnie has not confirmed this.”

"Catra you say..." she said, smiling nervously. She chose this place to start exploring this planet because she expected that not many people here knew Adora's fiancée and she probably miscalculated. She looked towards where she left Crusher parked. Maybe she should turn back to the transporter and go get Eti. The girl was nervous when people stared at her, and if they were so alike, the locals they won't be able to take their eyes off her

. On the other hand, Eti did not like to reveal her face in public, she did not do it even in front of Adora, whom she immediately liked. Maybe he won't do it here either. Besides, there were her orders, there was a slight chance that she wouldn't ignore them this time.

“Kitira sounds a bit like a name for someone with cat ears like Eti.” said Lilka.

“The last time Wrongdak addressed her like that, she pissed him off so much that he immediately bent in half.”

“Eti?” asked the cat.

“Our friend. He looks like a you Mr Cat, but has a girl face and a metal hand made by Adora's kin. And such nice eyes, a gold with blue dots...

“Yeah? “the feline asked in a concerned voice. He hasn't met Eti yet, but he's already scared.

“So why don't you tell us where this Goldeneyes lives and we'll stop bothering you?” she asked, trying to sound as neutral as possible. She wanted to change the subject with Eti and start talking about the reason why they came to this planet.

The cat rubbed his chin and replied.

“He lives at the end of the valley, you have to take the side road near the yellow stones, but be careful. You can get visions from the fumes there. It happens that you can come across various suspicious individuals looking for a high...”

“Sound familiar. Thanks for news” she said and set off with Lilka and Alatar, not seeing the seller enter the booth where he lived and turn on the walkie-talkie .

“Hey Tung. I have a tip... there are some interesting people from other worl...”

Huntara stretched, feeling all her bones touch. She wondered if she was getting too old for all this. She was forty-five years old. It was an advanced age for her people, the sentinels. Okay, she was exaggerating, but she would be expected to attend council of elders and such. She wasn't sure what they actually did as adults. She was ten years old when Hordak arrived and her clan sided with the Scorpion King against their rightful ruler, and they paid a terrible price for this. She was the last member of her clan. She wondered if she should adopt in a kid or make it in a modern way with some nice girl to pass on the traditions of her people... but she remembered very little of them by herself. She also didn't learn many secrets reserved for older warriors and bone gnawers. And most importantly, she had neither a suitable partner nor time to take care of the kid. She covered the two Saihe girls with a blanket, with whom she spent the night. They were sweet and charming, but it was just a one night relationship, nothing that would provide a peaceful home.

She went outside and looked at the sky. During the day, you couldn't see how much the world had changed since Etheria got out of Despondos, although the sky was a slightly different color and sometimes, with the right arrangement of moons, you could see the stars, but at night... The entire sky was dotted with them. For some it was a beautiful sight, for others it was terrifying... The inhabitants of the Crimson Wastes were pragmatic and, depending on their needs, an additional source of light at night could be either a help or a hindrance.

But this was an insignificant change compared to those taking place on the surface of Etheria. The planet suddenly became much smaller. Horde skimmers suddenly became widely available and continued to be manufactured in the Joy Zone, or rather the entire Scorpion country as it was sometimes called. There were other machines, much more advanced. Damn, there were spaceships on Etheria now, when not long ago there was a fight over one thousand-year-old wreck. Now, if someone really wanted to, they could go to another planet. Residents of other worlds also came to Etheria. Here in the Crimson Waste you could mostly find Icarians who mainly sold portable communicators and mechanical prosthetics, but she also knew one who had opened a bar here selling their food, which in her opinion was not very tasty. There were also residents of Bellum wearing gas masks, although they claimed that they came here for holidays. Listening to the stories about their home planet, she could believe it.

But there was something else. It was a sense of impending change, something completely new and unknown that could come to Etheria at literally any moment. Many associated it with the celebration of Victory Day, the Formation of the Galactic Alliance, the invasion of Horde Prime's Successors, or even the return of the First Ones. She didn't care, she just felt tired. There was a limit to the amount of change someone could endure in their life, and she had experienced a lot of them in her life. Hordak's arrival and formation of the Horde, desertion and life in the Crimson Wastes, joining the alliance, occupation and finally victory. This was too much for an ordinary warrior, and if there was something else waiting for her…

She was eating lizard skewers when she saw a small reptile with red scales, Ishki as the species was called, making its way towards her. They lived in the wastelands in small numbers, always keeping themselves apart from others. This particular one, however, was quite well known in the Valley. His name was Ruki, he worked as a messenger for many traders and other similar people. He was as friendly as he was agile and could not complain about the lack of customers. Recently he even somehow improved his legs so that he could run much faster... Those prosthetic guys from Icarus were really good.

“Boss, Goldeneyes asks you to come to him. He has important news for you regarding what you told him to look for.”

She sighed. Not a moment of peace. She was really getting too old for this.

One of the advantages of traveling with a self-propelled ax like Lilka and, let's be honest, a huge dragonkin, was that absolutely everyone stayed out of their way and didn't bother them even when Toshi was stealing their Batteries. The city reminded her of Atrax, only less depressing and not as dark. Maybe she'll really settle down here if everything goes well. Several men and women where checking her out, and one quite well-built deer-man even winked at her. Well, maybe later she would try to found him and they could spend a few... or more than a few nice moments together...

“They have kebab here!” exclaimed Lilka, beaming with joy. She smiled and bought both of them a meat and a cactus roll. Alatar got a triple portion. It was so spicy that Eti would probably joke that it would soon start breathing fire from both sides.

Finally they reached a place where there was a side path from which the smell of sulfur was coming. It was a bit tighter in here and she told her kids to activate the environmental protection so they wouldn't get poisoned by the fumes coming from inside the earth. They put also a special mask on Toshi, which they bought for him for such moments, although the electric fox wasn't particularly happy. There were few inhabitants here and most of them looked suspicious, or at least tried to look suspicious, but no one bothered them... Until they encountered two short Bugbears lying unconscious near a black pit. One stood up and said to Lilka.

“Get out of here! My brother and I are resting.” His voice was hoarse. He spat yellow sticky phlegm onto Lilka's one of her authentic orcish pink shoes. It was worse than saying to Eti "Pspspsps" The red-haired girl roared and hit him in the stomach with the handle of the axe, and when he bent in half, she hit him on the head with two fists , and when he fell, she kicked him again. His brother tried to get up, but Alatar hit him with the butt of his Rifle.

“Do you see, dear children? Drugs are bad.” he said without even slowing down.

“And violence is always the best solution.: added Lilka. When Alatar walked over one of the scarecrows , it groaned loudly.

“It uually sounds different Lilka, but in this case it fits perfectly.”

They walked for some time through this tangled maze of tunnels, turning back several times, until they finally reached a not very deep hole, at the bottom of which was a large building that looked like a workshop next to something resembling a Geothermal Power Plant. It looked quite professional. Now she could tell the kids to take off the environmental protection, although they left the mask on Toshi so he wouldn't steal the batteries. They went downstairs and she whistled a tune she had known since she was born. It was irritating and disturbing, getting on the nerves of everyone who heard it, but their father Jantar adored it. All his creations knew that song, even Eti... Did she know her too?

Downstairs, a huge scorpion man, the same species as Scorpia, was waiting by the door. She was glad that Lilka had met the other woman earlier, so they had now avoided the traditional Lilka's rage. Instead, Lilka waved at him and smiled happily at him.

"Hello, are you a friend of Mrs. Scorpia?" she asked with innocent curiosity. The scorpion looked at her darkly.

"I wouldn't say so." he replied coldly.

"Can Mr. Goldeneyes have us?" she asked, trying to change the subject. Her kids liked Scorpia , and it wasn't easy to win their sympathy, but she knew that life wasn't that simple. However, before the Scorpion man could respond, a tall figure jumped down from above, the sight of which made Lilka smile happily.

She felt a twinge of worry as she saw the Strag brothers lying there, moaning. This didn't surprise her too much. It wasn't the first time they had been beaten because they were trying to pick a fight with someone stronger than themselves. Only when tolder started talking about pink shoes, she frowned but shrugged. After all, the brothers spent far too much time inhaling underground fumes. She herself wrapped her face with a rag to avoid being poisoned yourself. She only took it off when she reached the Goldeneyes headquarters. He was one of the older inhabitants of the valley. She met him long before she became "Princess of the Crimson Wastes" shortly after she defected from the Horde. They became friends and she gave him protection... Unfortunately, their friendship brought Tung Lashor's wrath upon him … During the occupation, he hid, even when she was chipped. He returned a few years later, although he was still more secretive than before. He often asked her about Adora, She- Ra and, quite oddly, Catra, but he asked her not to tell them about him, and she respected that decision, she owed it to him , even though she knew that sooner or later his existence would come to light. to the ears of the princesses, because it was no secret. But it was his choice and she had nothing to do with it.

She arrived at his abode, which resembled a combination of workshop, home, shop, and sanctuary. However, she saw that Goldeneyes had guests, so she had to hurry, because once he received someone, he could chat with them for several hours. So she stood at the edge of his pit, took a deep breath, and jumped down, landing on her bent legs. She smiled to herself. She might not be young anymore, but she was still tough. As soon as she looked up, she heard a joyful cry. She saw a red-haired girl with red braids, wearing a poncho that concealed armor. She had some strange tattoos around her neck and a large ax in her hands. She smiled broadly at her and ran up, then started talking to her in a language completely unknown to her, while swinging her ax and dancing. Worst of all, she expected her to understand her. She just hoped that someone would soon explain to her what was going on here. Then she heard another person present, a burgundy-haired woman, quite attractive... who began to speak to her in the same language, or at least a very similar one. She felt panic attacking her. Why did they expect him to understand what they were saying to her.

“She doesn't seem to understand Orcish.” said the third person, a silver-scaled lizard with many implants. He brought to mind the sky firelord of old legends.

“What is an orcish?” she asked, a bit confused

“Orc! You are an orc! I'm an orc! We're both orcs... How can you not know that?” the red-haired woman asked excitedly. She understood less and less about all this.

“It's your species... although I don't think you care about it that much here on Etheria. My name is Bina and this is Alatar and Lilka

Wagardotir. They are both my wards. And then there is Toshi , the silver fox. – said Bina, and a blue fox wearing a gas mask flew out of the redhead's poncho. He flew up to her and started sniffing her, huffed as if in disappointment and went back under the girl's clothes. – I think we're all going to this Goldeneyes , and I guess we'll have to sort this out somehow. – Bina continued

"I'll just ask the boss." said Scorpion, who was her old friend. His name was Snap. Together they left the Horde and lived in the Wastes. He could have returned to his country, but he chose to stay here. He had not forgotten the Usurper King's crimes, and Scorpia was still his granddaughter. The lizard began to stare at the screen on his shoulder. Lilka looked at her with a mixture of pride and compassion, no one had ever looked at her like that before. And Bina started whistling some song, unpleasant and irritating. They seemed as nice as they were disturbing. To break the silence, she decided to introduce herself.

"I am Huntara ... Some call me the Princess of the Scarlet Wastes."

They waved and said hello to her, and then Alatar stated with delight.

"So you are the fourth princess we meet... the fifth if we count Lady Cala." He said and Lilka then added.

"And how do we count Eti, because..." she started, but Bina glared at her and said.

- On Icarus, my kids met Adora , Perfuma and Scorpia and became friends with them. First, of course, Lilka attacked Scorpia because she thought she was a component of the swarm, and then there was this funny story about a certain pirate... But this is probably becoming the norm for us.

"Damn, maybe I should really go on those diplomatic missions sometimes, because some really interesting things are happening there." She thought and was about to ask for details when the door opened and Snap said they could enter.

The Goldeneyes household was lit only by glowing mushrooms that the host had cultivated, first collecting them in the caves that were plentiful in the Wasteland. Everything was cluttered with his finds and things he had built. There were a number of minor First Ones artifacts here, and some relics from Etheria's history after planet was closed in Despondos . However, they were not intended to be sold, at least not for money. Their owner made his living mainly by selling transmitters, scanners and batteries that he made himself. With the money obtained in this way, he funded expeditions into the wilderness, in which he usually participated.

Many found the sight of Goldeneyes disturbing or even terrifying. It had a roughly humanoid body. His slightly androgynous face had four faceted, golden eyes, which were quite common among animals living on this planet, although she hadn't seen any other intelligent creature that had them. However, a tangle of limbs emerged from his arms and lower torso, making him look like something out of a nightmare. Some of the arms ended with grippers, others with saws or welders... Most of the guests trembled with fear when they saw him for the first time, even she wanted to beat him to death with a club when they first meet, but these three seemed completely unmoved by the host's presence. And it’s not surprise her. Bina looked around the workshop with interest. Lilka devoured cookies that no one else wanted to touch, and Alatar looked at Goldeneyes' limbs .

“I think I have this year's Ovitech catalog somewhere, I saw something similar there, although it probably cost about ten thousand credits, if not more.” said the lizard. Godeneyes looked at him and said in a slow drawl.

“Indeed, I might consider it, although as far as I know, I don't have any loans.” the host looked at the lizard with a bit of curiosity, but then she interrupted him.

“Thank you for your hospitality, but tell me, what do you want from me?” she asked in a tired voice, sensing that this would not end with an ordinary conversation.

"I know where Mara's tomb is," the host said, and Bina looked at him in surprise.

“I heard about her...” she said, and Alatar nodded.

“Yes, this was the previous She-Ra, and the ancestor of Lady Cala’s.” The lizard explained.

“Who is Lady Cala?” she asked, not understanding what they meant.

“Lady Cala Grayskull of Carurystal. An aristocrat who came here with us, along with her companions. She says she's a descendant of this Mara and I have no reason not to believe her. She would probably like to see the place where the founder of her family was buried. Only she's not with us for now...” Bina said in a thoughtful voice, and Goldeneyes looked at her, smiling mysteriously.

“Yes. I sensed well that several beings arrived on Etheria today, who had ties to its past and future.” He took one of those modern satellite maps out of the closet and marked the coordinates on it. With one strong movement, he tore them into several pieces and gave half of them to her and the other to Bina . “Take it and find it together... But remember that many secrets hide pain and sadness.”

“Yes, I know something about it.” Bina said in a thoughtful voice.

She was about to ask the host what he meant, but then a breathless Ruki ran into his place.

“Boss, someone set fire to the Bone Refuge. They say it's Catra, and not Catra simultaneously and she made such a mess that it took a month to clean up.”

Then Bina hid her face in her hands and said.

“I will murder Eti.”

“Well, you probably don't feel comfortable around me. “ she said to Wrongdak, but the clone responded angrily.

“You're bad... Very bad. You hurt Adora, Catra and others.” and pursed his lips. She had never seen him truly angry during these weeks, although she had become accustomed to Hordak's fits of rage. Apparently Shadow Weaver deserved it…

“Yes, I have hurt a lot of people and for base reasons... usually. Know that I did not come back here of my own free will and with no bad intentions.” she explained to Wrongdak in a calm voice, which she usually used to address Adora when she wanted to force her to behave appropriately. To Adora, but not Catra... Usually not to Catra.

Wrongdak lowered his head dejectedly and said in a voice devoid of all hope.

“It's my fault. If I had looked at you more carefully... If I had talked to Emily...” a tear rolled down his cheek.

She smiled darkly.

“I suggested to Emily that if she told you the truth, the consequences would be dire. But even if you warned the expedition members about my true nature, do you think they would believe you? That the teacher of such a wonderful young lady like Lady Cala, coming from the peaceful but provincial Carurystal, could be a monster who waged a bloody war for thirty years on a planet that no one had heard of for thousands of years? No, my dear, no one would believe you, at most they would treat you as someone insane who should be locked in a cabin for his own safety.” she explained to him in a calm, slightly tired voice.

“When Lady Cala learns the truth” he said, trying to sound menacing, but she burst out laughing in a sinister but desperate way.

“Lady Cala knows truths that even my black heart refuses to know.” she said, seeing his confused face, she added. “Young lady is not who she seems. I can't tell you much about the true nature of my... ward, but don't let her know that you know who I am. I couldn't protect you from her wrath, and it would destroy my fragile alliance with Hordak . Besides, unlike your brother, I like you. And don't worry, I know he told you to spy on me. He was always so predictable. Contrary to appearances, this is a good feature of a ruler. Not necessarily of the general.”

When Hordak's younger brother returned to the ship with them, along with his Droid, she knew immediately that he had learned the truth. He looked at her with that judgmental anger that she had seen many times during her short stay in Brightmoon , especially from Adora, and would most likely see again during this mission. Like most things that happened to her in life, she earned it through her actions.

They now stood near the landing site of the flying rocks that took travelers to Mystacor. Around it was the Sorcerer's Valley, where there were several towns that supplied the largest magical college on the planet, or rather the only one. From what she had heard, during the war they were either protected by some of Mystacor's magic or were abandoned. But now they were teeming with life, as was all of Etheria. She was surprised to find that she enjoyed it, even though she spent her entire life trying to put the entire planet in chains.

Eventually they stepped onto a shipping stone that had some students with it. One of them was a lizard... Vesk, who was raised in the Horde judging by his accent, but they only noticed Wrongdak... Although Ireanis waved cheerfully at them. During the flight, she thought about her conversation with Hordak. It went much better than she hopes. She expected she would have to incapacitate him before they could talk. He had changed more than she thought. And that child. The sight of Hordak caring for his offspring almost made her stunned. She had seen many strange things over the years, but this topped almost everything. The baby was a hybrid of two species... just like Eti and... Catra. Did Entrapta guess the nature of her friend? After all, she herself brought a very similar creature to life. It was only after her own death that she began to think of herself as a mother, even if a very bad one. However, when she saw Entrapta's offspring, she remembered Asindesa's question about whether she could have children. The idea was absolutely ridiculous and absurd, but she would never have even thought about it before.

Hordak agreed to make an agreement with her. However, she managed to convince him mainly because she was honest with him. She exposed herself to him much more than she wanted to, but it clearly turned out to be a good tactic. Unfortunately, he was right. Of all her potential allies, he risked the most, but also had the least to offer her. That's why she came here, hoping to attract someone much more influential. But this will be more difficult.

Mystacor had changed since she abandoned it in such dramatic circumstances. Even then, the corridors were empty because of the war. But now the college was filled with students of all ages and from all corners of Etheria. Almost all corners, because of course no one came from the Sorrow Islands. She was still the only person from her bleak homeland to study in Mystacor in hundreds of years. She also saw that technological progress had reached even here. There were several computer terminals here now, and small Horde cleaning bots were cleaning the floors. They even came across a hot chocolate machine, and from the looks of it, it was built here on Etheria, most likely by Horde technicians, using parts from the Fright Zone. She saw several people here who looked like Hordak's former subjects, but no one recognized her. Well, no one had seen Light Spinner's face for thirty years, though there were still some who remembered her, and most of them probably lived here in Mystacor. Therefore, she changed the color of the hair and eyes displayed by the holographic mask. Still, she felt strange walking through these corridors absolutely unrecognized by anyone. Others saw only what they expected to see, and no one expected that while rushing to class they would pass the cursed and hated witch. There was something so wicked about it that she wanted to unleash all her dark power and scream, Look, I'm here. The one who has been trying to kill or enslave you all for decades! Do something! Stop me!

On the other hand, there were other reasons why no one was paying attention to her. Wrongdak was the only clone that resided in Mystacor, apparently Horde Prime made sure that none of his clones had even an ounce of magical powers. Hordak's brother looked so depressed that several students stopped to pat him on the back or even hug him. Every time this happened, Emily shot her accusatory glances. Well, maybe she was right.

However, Ireanis attracted the most attention. The elf sorceress was delighted with her stay at the magical college. She waved to all the students she passed, smiling broadly at them. She bowed politely to her teachers as she would to her colleagues, regardless of their confused looks.

“It's wonderful to be back at a university full of knowledge-hungry minds. I'm thirsty too. Do you think you can get something stronger here?” the sorceress asked her.

“We decided to quit drinking.” she said. It was technically impossible to buy alcohol in Mystakor, but students bought apple wine or strong cider in nearby villages. Lecturers and other university staff typically drank either wine made from fruit grown in gardens or herbal tinctures made by alchemists. Towards the end of her career as a teacher, she spent many lonely nights drinking and thinking about dark and grim things. "Wasn't this the beginning of all evil?"

“I know , I know, but it still dries me out.” replied the sorceress.

Finally, they reached the gallery where the statues of the most important sorcerers stood. She cringed, knowing what she was about to see. She looked down at her feet, trying not to look away.

“Oh Shady , I think it's you.” Ireanis exclaimed.

“I told you to address me like this.” She turned around and saw the statue. Her statue. It looked almost as it did when it was first placed. She was then appointed to the council as a reward for her research on entities from other dimensions. But it was cracked and blackened. She had no idea who had damaged it like that. There was one burnt candle lying under my feet.

“What does it mean? Where did this candle come from?” she asked clone, who shook his head.

“I didn't live in Mystacor. I have only visited this place three times, counting this visit…”

She thought for a moment and shrugged.

“Let's go from here. We must find the Head Sorceress.” she said in a gloomy tone.

She was cleaning old furniture in the Purple Moon Warehouse, where they kept old magical items whose uses were unknown but were potentially dangerous. This was not a suitable job for the Head Sorceress, she could have delegated other lower-ranking sorcerers or even senior students here. But she needed to calm down before her niece's wedding. Ever since the clash in the hidden chamber and the vision that had come to her when she looked at that artifact, she had felt constant anxiety. She had the impression that some evil was hiding in the previously safe corridors of her home. She couldn't forget what she had seen then, the dead monster that had risen and almost killed her and Catra and Nightgale. Catra… I guess she was too harsh on Glimmer's feline friend. The Grand Marshal saved her from having her blood sucked by the Non-Dead monster. Even though she had shocked her with an electric baton, her back still hurt, but she was also mean to the cat girl, so she didn't blame her.

She needed to calm down, because it was her responsibility to organize the wedding, and it was only a few days away. She had to pull herself together. Good thing she had Nightgale to help her . Although the girl disappeared for a few days due to, as she said, personal matters, but when she returned, she started working with renewed energy, as if she were planning her wedding herself. She was so hardworking. Maybe she should take her to the wedding and sit her in a place of honor next to the Queen. She smiled. Yes, that's a great plan, I'm sure she'll do that... Maybe she'll make Catra a tail warmer too, Scorpia liked to tell the story that the Grand Marshal, while they were in the Northern Rim, froze her tail and rubbed it so hard that it became electrified and attracted all the dust, which aroused Entrapta's fascination so much that she spent the whole day she stopped her research.. She smiled to herself, this story definitely improved her mood.

She had to admit that cleaning the warehouse was a much more labor-intensive task. No one has been here for a long time, probably even since that accident when... Shadow Weaver performed her ritual. After that, no one found any suspicious artifacts, apart from the sword of course, but that was a completely different story. Many of the items here came from the dark sorceress's private collection, and she had the distinct impression that many of them were only brought here because they were found in her apartment, as she had never seen anything that seemed dangerous, like the items locked in the Vault of Abbadus , as the dark moon associated with destructive magic was called.

For example, this mirror. It did emanate a magical aura, associated with transmitting messages over great distances, but it was nothing sinister. But it was very nice. Maybe he'll give it to Glimmer as a wedding gift... She'll definitely be delighted to discover its secrets.

It was just getting dark, and she was about to go for a portable lamp, but then she saw that the mirror did not reflect what was in the storeroom, but as if it was a room, quite tastefully decorated, with a large number of books, as if it belonged to a distinguished and educated person. Maybe it would be good to examine the mirror first, because Glimmer would start changing her clothes in front of someone and it would be embarrassing. She was just leaning over the mirror to take a closer look at what it showed when she heard a familiar voice.

“I do not advise exploring the secrets of this mirror, because they may lead you to a path from which there is no return.”

She rolled her eyes. “Of course Shadow Weaver had to come here and ruin my mood. If he ever wants to show up at the wedding, it will be a complete disaster...

She blinked her eyes. She just heard Shadow Weaver's voice... Behind her. She turned around abruptly. Four figures stood before her. Wrong Hordak She recognized immediately, as well as Emily, who was standing next to her and chattering incomprehensibly. Hordak's nice brother was charmingly colorful, but seemed depressed. Next was a black woman, Saihe, with silver hair, whom she didn't know. She looked around the warehouse in fascination and touched every item. She didn't recognize the last person right away. Probably because of the lack of a veil on her face. Only after a moment did she manage to match her facial features to the statue standing in the hall, and she summoned a defense spell.

“They said you are dead!” she shouted, considering how she should fight the dark sorceress.

“Because I was, but now I'm standing here in front of you.” Shadow Weaver said. Cold sweat beaded her back.

“You're Non-dead!” she shouted and cast a fire spell, but the dark sorceress dispelled the spell effortlessly.

“They proper name is undead, but no, I am not one of them. However, it's interesting that you encountered these types of creatures. Until recently, I believed that, like dragons and devils, they were only characters from legends. Well, it wasn't the first time I was wrong.” Shadow Weaver said and started walking towards her. Silver-haired Saihe looked at them and said with concern in her voice.

“Listen, girls, I know you broke up in turbulent circumstances, but it's all over now. Now you are meeting again and this is a chance for you to be together again.”

“Ireanis…” Shadow Weaver drawled, placing her hand to her temple, she felt as if her face was blurring.

“Yes, I know, only now, after this separation, did you realize that you had actually loved each other all along, even though during that time you were enemies and were constantly trying to kill each other!” the sorceress embraced them tightly and pulled them to herself. “Now you can kiss each other!”

“What did you tell her?” she growled, barely able to contain her outburst of fury and moved away from both women. It was mean and deceitful even for her. Unless Shadow Weaver really saw their relationship that way…

“I'm sorry about my companion, but she's a special person. Ireanis, Castaspella and I are not a couple, nor have we ever been... In fact, as far as I know, Castaspella is not the slightest bit interested in these matters. Now, why don't you look for some students you can... educate,” said the dark sorceress.

Sorry? Did she just say sorry? Shadow Weaver, that personification of pride and arrogance, uttered the word "sorry she thought in disbelief. Even if it was just a figure of speech, the word "sorry" coming from the mouth of someone so despicable could be unnerving. Either she was up to something particularly nefarious, or… she reached under her robes where she kept a stake, just in case… If it was a dead person or a shapeshifter like Double Trouble they will remember her.

“Oh yes, because you know, I used to be a lecturer at the University of Magaambya in Natambu , you've heard about it, right?” silver-haired Saihe shouted.

“This is Etheria. Here, until recently, we had a very vague idea of the existence of other planets, not to mention the lost Golarion which, as the name suggests, was lost at an unspecified point in the history of the Galaxy, and now please let us talk calmly for a moment. And take Mr. Wrongdak and Emily with you, because I suspect they'll jump at the chance to take a break from my company.” said the Dark “orceress in a tone as if she was trying hard not to burst into fury.

Wrongdak looked down and said in a voice full of despair.

“Please... don't do anything to Auntie Casta”

Shadow Weaver smiled bitterly.

“This is not my intention, quite the contrary. I hope that the Head Sorceress of Mystacor, and indeed of all Etheria, will be willing to listen to what the old and mean witch has to say.

The clone nodded but looked at her as if he didn't believe her and left.

“What did you do to him?” she said angrily to Shadow Weaver. The woman sighed and said in a voice full of wry amusement.

“I recently came to the conclusion that for many people the mere fact of being near me is painful.”

Shadow Weaver being ironic towards herself? What is going on here? she thought with growing concern. But then she shook her head and asked in the most confident voice she could muster.

“What was happened to you, where were you and what were you doing? And what do you want from me... from all of us?”

Shadow Weaver smiled at the corner of her mouth.

“In sequence. I died, then I came to Aucturn, and then to Carurystal. There I took care of a creature that terrifies even me. I can tell you that much.” The dark sorceress paused, and she had the impression that she was asking a wrong question. “What am I going to do, well the answer to this question is much more complicated.” she became lost in thought, then went to the mirror and looked at it carefully for a moment, and then suddenly, with an angry movement, she covered it with a cover. “It all started a long time ago, before Adora found the sword… Before Hordak activated the portal and helped transport her to Etheria. Before... I made a rite and summoned a being whose power... Before Hordak was abandoned on Etheria... Before this hundred-fold cursed sword was forged. I have to go back to the very beginning of this grim story. I have to find Eternia”

She blinked twice.

“But Horde Prime destroyed them all. He said so himself.” she exclaimed, as if explaining the obvious to one of her students.

“He said a lot of things, and most of them weren’t true. Adora herself is the best proof of this... I won't refer to my source, because... you wouldn't consider it trustworthy, and you certainly wouldn't want to stand in front of them... But think about it. Etheria was just a research facility that was only later decided to be turned into a weapon, and yet they managed to hide it in the Despondos , do you think they wouldn't use this technology to protect their own capital? Hordak was right about one thing, Etheria is a provincial planet. The galaxy is full of wonders beyond imagination, as I can attest, though I have only seen a tiny fraction of them. But they all pale in comparison to the achievements of the First Ones. We don't really know much about their demise beyond the fact that they suddenly disappeared from galactic history, although even that we can't tell much about it because of the Gap...

“What?” she asked, feeling like she was losing the plot. “Listen, I understand that you are very interested in the First Ones and their achievements, you almost ruined the lives of Adora and most of the inhabitants of Etheria because of that, but could you leave it and all of us alone?" she asked, refraining from screaming. She had already forgotten how irritating conversations with this woman could be.

Shadow Weaver closed her eyes and reached for the back of her neck. Her face blurred and now she could see her true face. She knew from Catra's stories that the dark sorceress looked terrible without the Mask, but when she saw it... She put her mouth behind her hand and took a deep breath. She didn't think any spell could change someone so much. She could show her face as a warning to students about what the use of dark magic can lead to... Though after a moment she realized that she had expected a much more terrible sight. Shadow Weaver, as far as she could tell, since she had no interest in such matters despite the scars and fangs and eyes like those of mythical demons, looked quite attractive. She saw victims of war, especially occupation, who suffered a much worse fate...

"She should do it right away, after all, it is only fair to have such a conversation face to face... You see, without diminishing the evil I have committed, all the tragedies that have befallen Etheria are the work of the First Ones. Light Hope, it's a good thing we never met, brought Hordak here, and many years later Adora, just to destroy all her enemies, i.e. most of the intelligent life in the galaxy. What was noticed... But we'll talk about it later... The heart was destroyed, but our planet hides many secrets, one I already knew... Far away from here in the Golarion system there is a gigantic space station inhabited by millions of beings: Absalom. It is the heart of the Galaxy both economically and politically, but also in a very literal sense. It houses the most powerful artifact we know of, the Starstone. It allows ships using Drift Drive , the most efficient form of interstellar travel, to navigate, but not only that... It is said that in ancient times it allowed mortals such as the Iomadae to sled themselves as gods."

She snorted.

“Do you mean the things that the inhabitants of Eridani talk about...” she asked skeptically, but Shadow Weaver shook her head and sighed.

-“Oh yeah, I forgot it was Etheria. For now, let's just say that it gives great power, power beyond all imagination. As I flew here through the middle of space, I discovered that there was a second similar artifact on Etheria...”

She inhaled sharply as she realized what the dark sorceress was getting at.

“This is where She-Ra draws her power from.” she said with a mixture of surprise and delight Shadow Weaver nodded.

“Yes, and now think whether the First Ones will allow something so powerful, which has been in their possession for so many millennia, even if only theoretically, to be taken away from them... Such power... I know well how much can be done to gain greater power. I don't know what they are planning, what steps they have taken, but if what I heard is true, they intend to use their other weapon against us, perhaps the most powerful one... But this is not the only threat that awaits us, but I will tell you about it next time. our next meeting, during the Victory Day celebrations.”

She listened to Shadow Weaver carefully. This woman had been a lecturer at her university for many years before she became the monster that destroyed the lives of so many innocents and knew how to tell a story and be persuasive. If what she said was true… She didn't know if she should believe her, not after she manipulated Glimmer into activating the Heart, but could she afford to ignore her?

“What do you want from me? I'm not as powerful as Mikach, I'm not a princess and a warrior like Glimmer. I spent most of the war hiding in Mystacor and pretending it all didn't concern me since Mikah was dead.”

The dark sorceress smiled sadly.

“You are Castaspella, the chief sorceress of the only and last school of magic in Etheri and one of the largest in the galaxy. You have power, maybe not as much as mine or your brother's, but you shouldn't underestimate yourself. Besides, people like you and will listen to you... But don't tell anyone for now, if it seems that she's back, my hands will be tied and I'll lose control over the course of events, and there are still a few things I need to do before she comes back. Victory Day.” Shadow Weaver explained in her calm voice, like a parent telling a child to go to school... 'Is that how you talked to Adora all these years ? Now I have to be your pawn in this mad Game?” she thought. On the other hand, it all made sense. Since her release, Mikah has served loyally to the Rebellion, even sacrificing her life for Adora and Catra, or at least that's what everyone thought... No doubt she's changed, or maybe she's just learned to lie better... She had to make sure, so she decided to ask Shadow Weaver one more time. one question.

“During the occupation, Mikah didn't bring it up because the most important thing was to save Glimmer, and then... well, he was chipped . But when peace came, he told us everything. About you sending him to Beast Island. I won't ask if it's true, because no one who even knew you both would doubt it, but... Mikach never said why you did it. But since you are here and asking me for help... I will demand an answer... she looked at the wicked woman with hard eyes, as if she wanted to challenge her, although she knew that in the event of a fight, her chances would be slim.

The dark sorceress considered her answer for a moment, then sighed heavily and said.

“The truth is that I was very drunk at the time. Winning that battle cost me a lot. But this is not an excuse, just a statement of fact. Besides, I came to Mikah when he was locked in a cell and made him an offer... I offered him to serve me in exchange for his life... of course he refused and... he called me a monster, a twisted bogeyman and that his teacher died many years ago.

Well, then I said that then there was no one in the entire Fright Zone who could save him from a fate worse than death. Even though we were both wrong then."

She frowned and asked.

"What do you mean?"

"Mikah saved himself when he got to his place of exile, and Shadow Weaver always lived in Light Spinner's heart" Shadow Weaver said and looked at her inquisitively with those terrible yellow eyes. She squeezed her eyes and mouth shut. If you tried to lie and cheat… then everything would be easier. Did you have to be so honest?

"All right, I'll help you. Just don't make me regret it later." she said, and the Dark Sorceress started to leave, but suddenly she stopped and asked with a shyness she would never have expected from her.

"Who burns a candle under my statue and why is it so damaged?"

She looked at her seriously

"It's Catra. Every year on the day Shadow Weaver dies... on the day you die, she burns one candle for every good deed you did for her and Adora. And the statue was destroyed by Mikah right after he finished his studies. This resulted in a minor scandal, but much less than he had expected." she explained to the woman, who was probably more gloomy than usual now. She shuddered as if these words brought back many unpleasant memories, turned on the mask and left.

As soon as Nightgale saw her mother, she stopped dead in her tracks, but Shadow Weaver obviously didn't recognize her. Why should it be any different? She didn't even know she existed. She couldn't even guess what Hordak had done. Still, she felt pain. For a moment she felt like introducing herself to her and showing her her true face. But now was definitely not the right time for it. Here in Mystacor it could be very dangerous. She wouldn't die, she was almost sure of that, but it would mean ruining all her plans. It was much easier for her to recognize Hordak's right hand. She felt its power, great and terrible, and more than once she looked at the statue of the Light Spinner. She tried to find a similarity in her features, and she succeeded. Still, she was amazed that absolutely no one in all of Mystacor was aware of who had showed up at their college. As they say, the darkest is in the light of day...

She knew that Shadow Weaver was alive, the Voice from the Shadow had told her about it, and that he would come to Etheria with a wonderful companion... It was definitely not her father's strangely dressed clone , nor a Horde Droid. She wondered if it was the silver-haired Saihe , because she sensed great power from her, but she was looking around like a child in a candy store, so she had doubts. Shadow Weaver then asked where the Head Sorceress was and told her that she was cleaning out one of the warehouses. Ignoring her, the four of them left and she secretly followed them. She almost ran into them when the sorcerers sent the others away to talk about something important without any additional witnesses. She wasn't able to overhear them, although considering that she didn't hear screams or the sounds of magical explosions, the conversation was conducted in an unexpectedly calm atmosphere. Then Shadow Weaver left, dejected, and soon after, Castaspella left the warehouse, angry and as gloomy as the dark sorceress. She waited until her apparent boss left, then went to the warehouse to find out what the sorcerers were talking about. At first she didn't see anything, but then she saw a light blue light coming from under the cover of the large mirror. As a servant of the Creeping Chaos, she knew it was idiotic to approach glowing magical objects, but she approached it anyway and ripped off the cover. She saw a room, quite cozy... and a person sitting in a chair. At first she mistook them for a Saihe , but although similar, they were significantly different from her mother's species. First of all, horns sprouted from their head, making her look like a legendary tiefling. They also had four fingers on her hands. But what was most remarkable was her skin. Blue, sparkling as if stars were reflecting in it. With her magical vision, she saw that the bright spots covering her were connected by lines, forming inscriptions in the language of the First Ones, which, unfortunately, she was unable to read. After a while, the figure noticed her, got up and approached her, looking at her with curiosity, as if she were a small, interesting animal, that entered his house. She flinched, but now it was too late, she had to know the identity of this creature. She hesitated, and then and then she asked, drawing illusory letters in the air.

“They call me... Defect. Who are you?” she asked, using the first name she received from her father. She preferred not to reveal her real name. The person tilted they head to the side and began to write himself in illusory letters just like her.

“I am Aaravos . He, Him , if that interests you... “he explained and bowed courtly.

“Who are you... I've never heard of anyone like you...” she asked, unable to contain her curiosity.

“You didn’t heard of us because there are only a few of us left.” he explained to her with theatrical sadness on his face.

“Elf? It's an ancient name for Saihe ... But you are not like them.” she said, baffled.

“We were changed a long time ago... I once talked to a Saihe woman. But that was a long time ago. No one has visited me for a long time... No one from your world, anyway.” he explained to her without taking his eyes off her

“Our world? Or our planet?” she asked, smiling with a bit of superiority. But Aaravos just raised an eyebrow.

“So you remembered that you are part of the universe. What about the Heart of Etheria? Ahh, I see from your reaction that you know what I am talking about.”

She cursed inwardly, but since she had already betrayed herself, there was no other option and she had to tell the truth, although she was afraid that nothing good would come of it.

“Yes, it was destroyed five years ago. By She-Ra …”

Aaravos nodded thoughtfully. And then he said more to himself than to her.

“That clears up many things. That's why the boy was able to cast spells despite the protection... That means we don't have much time..”- he looked at her again. “What about Light Spinner , that woman I was talking to earlier. Was the ritual successful?”

“This is a very controversial issue. The being came … but changed her…”

Aaravos smiled in amusement.

-“So it worked...” he tilted his head to the side and quickly cast the spell. She felt her illusion dissipate. The Star Elf smiled.

“Impressive... An illusion that does not create a false image, but influences the observer's mind. I didn't know you had discovered this technique... You, too, are an extraordinary creature, proof that the ritual worked better than I expected... You were artificially created, just like me... But I sense that we have something else in common. – he reached under his robes and pulled out an upside-down Ankh. Symbol of Creeping Chaos.

That woman, Nightgale, didn't inspire her confidence. At first glance, she saw that a strange aura was emanating from her. She was definitely using illusions to hide her face, although she guessed that many war victims used this magic because of their scars. But there was something else about her, she felt like she was looking into a mirror. But it was absurd. She considered telling Castaspelia about it , but I guess the Head Sorceress of Mystacor had checked her second-in-command, right?

She found Wrongdak in the garden, talking to someone who looked like a Gnome. She was surprised to see that she wore the Serenae symbol around her neck. When they saw her, she nodded and hurried away, and the clone looked at her with fear in her eyes, but she smiled back at him and said.

“Everything worked out fine. Castaspella agreed to help us.”

Hordak's younger brother blinked several times, as if he didn't believe what he was hearing.

“You… enchanted her?” he asked and she let out a short laugh.

“Oh, I was just being honest, absolutely honest, because, believe it or not, my intentions towards your friends are good.” she said gently. He seemed skeptical, but she didn't care. It's important that he doesn't spill anything to anyone.

“Where's Ireanis?” she asked and then she heard a loud scream and a clatter coming from the side corridor, from which Ireanis ran out after a moment, accompanied by Emily.

“Shhh Daisy! I had funny adventure. By complete accident, I came across a group of students and I decided to show them something, so I went to a side room and summoned a minor demon, just for fun, I think I made a mistake and summoned Vrock instead of Quasit , but luckily we defeated him together. And I became a hero, because I don't think anyone realized it was my doing, but... just in case. We should run away?” the elven sorceress was saying, and Emily was chattering away from the side. She sighed and said.

“I'm slowly starting to think, my dear Ireanis, that you are my reflection, but in a distorting mirror.”

The silver-haired woman grimaced painfully.

“No, at least you're not a coward.” she said, and suddenly feeling sad, she walked down the bright corridors of Mystacor.

"But we won!"

She kissed her beloved on the cheek, and she snored sweetly and tried to hug her, although it wasn't easy sitting in the Silverwing seat, so she moved closer to her. She could smell her scent mixed with her own, she didn't know a more beautiful scent, it was something that people with a weaker sense of smell couldn't understand. Despite the grim news, they made love that night. Adora was so eager for her touch and kisses that, despite her exhaustion, as soon as they rested after the first time, she initiated a second, and then a third... And then, in the moment of greatest elation, they toppled the tent. Then they lay naked and cuddled together for a good two-quarters of an hour, giggling like idiotic teenagers and listening to hear if the other members of the expedition had heard anything. When they figured everyone was asleep, they quietly put on their tent and put it back together again. They were sure they didn't wake up anyone until the morning... Then, when they sat down for breakfast together, Lance and George tried very hard not to look at them and talk about the weather, but Netossa was watching them, grinning. But it was Entrapta who spoke first.

“Did you feel the tremors at night? It was so strange. I had no idea that this region was seismically active.”

She choked on her tea with butter and Adora had to pat her on the back. But that wasn't the end, because then Frosta spoke.

“The legends of the Kingdom of Snow tell of two stone giants who, on the darkest night, “wrestle” so much that the earth shakes.” she said with an absolutely innocent face. Well, sometimes they forgot that Frosta was almost the same age as them when Adora found the sword. Melog also began to rub himself against her girlfriend, because he wanted to add his scent to that of his companion. She felt herself blushing, and Adora was beet red.

“You guys are horrible. Really horrible.” she said with her face hidden behind the cup. When everyone laughed, she snorted, but she wasn't offended. Then her beloved embraced her in front of everyone and kissed her, and then they laughed too.

The way back was more difficult than towards the City. Everyone, including Adora , was exhausted and Netossa's Hand was still sore. In addition, her fiancée did not take any equipment with her for a high-mountain expedition in such cold. She didn't even have warm clothes, she left a backpack with food on Icarus , which she took with her when she went on a trip to the wilderness of that planet, although she didn't say why she went there. They did not tell others about the dark news her fiancée had brought with her. Glimmer should hear this before everyone else. No one noticed their mood, except Georgie, who slowed down and asked Adora ...

- Did something happen... Where you came from. You know you can tell us anything.

Her fiancée grimaced painfully, adjusted the blanket she had wrapped herself in during the hike and said.

- Yes, but Glimmer should hear about it first because... it concerns her first and foremost.

- I know you want to help, but there's nothing that can be done in this case... Only Glimmer and Mikach can decide what to do next. – she added, smiling sadly at Bow's father and hugging her girlfriend.

She herself had no idea what they could do yet. She was glad that Glimmer's mother was alive... But she was terrified of what had happened to her. She had no idea what had happened to her over the years, but it certainly hadn't been good. She barely knew her at all, but she knew she wouldn't become a pirate, under any circumstances. She knew all too well what suffering and injustice could do to someone. What a dark path such cruelties can lead. She got off it herself with great difficulty, but many people, including Adora and Glimmer, still bore the scars of what she had done... Wherever Angela ended up, it must have been a terrible place.

That's why she was going to postpone telling her the truth about herself, about what she had learned about herself. It wasn't that important, after all, she was still Catra, a child of the Fright Zone and a resident, where she was from made absolutely no difference. Her companions looked at her questioningly, but she answered them in the negative, shaking her head. Eventually, Netossa talked her out of it as Adora followed suit.

"And did you tell her?" she asked in a much too loud whisper. She looked around and replied in a similar tone.

"Now is not a good time to make such a confession. Something happened there on Icarus ... I can't say anything yet, but things got terribly complicated." she sighed and added. – It's nothing that threatens all of Etheri or your family. No new evil has emerged from the shadows, we are past that. – She smiled sadly, and the ruler of Armoria sighed.

"It was a difficult week. I didn't think we would have so many adventures, damn, there were more of them than during the months of the war. And to think that the only thing that worried me at the beginning was whether you are pregnant." said the former general, and then she heard Adora scream.

“It's starting again.” She thought, hiding her face in her hands.

“I'm not pregnant, none of us are, although I can't vouch for Shogi , I'm also afraid that there is another Alice inside Alice , with another Alice inside. I wouldn't have come up with this idea without discussing all this with you.” she felt herself blushing. Adora walked up to her and kissed her.

“Don't worry, honey, I understand everything. I know you would definitely make the right decision, darling.”

She felt tears welling up in her eyes.

"Because I just ate a piece of weird food and what Glimmer has been eating lately and… there were a few other things…" she sniffed and Melog began to rub against her comfortingly, all blue.

:Wait, Glimmer ear... a weird food? – Netossa asked, her eyes wide. “Oh,” she covered her mouth with her hands. She didn't understand what she meant, but it didn't matter to her now. All that mattered now was Adora's closeness and warmth. She couldn't imagine losing her, having someone take her away from her. She was willing to burn the entire world to prevent this, and she wouldn't regret it.

The final stage of the road to Silverwing passed in a much more pleasant atmosphere. Frosta radiated joy, even though at the end of the journey she fell asleep on Shogi's back . It was her first great adventure and she had the right to feel proud, after all, she was the one who practically saved them, or at least she helped a lot. She will definitely constantly tell them all, especially Glimmer, about this trip and well, she deserves it. The others seemed happy too. Lance and George talked about their new discoveries the whole way, happy and excited as if they had become a good twenty years younger. Netossa smiled full of joyful triumph, but at the same time it was clear that she wanted to return to her peaceful family life. Even Entrapta, for whom desolate places without researchable technology were certainly not very interesting, made some discoveries here and watched Shogi with fascination, because of which Melog became jealous. They were also in this mood, despite the bad news Adora brought.

When they reached the vehicles, Frosta, who was nodding off, decided to continue riding on top of Shogi , who wrapped his tentacle-like straps around her. So they had one additional vehicle, but Adora decided that she wanted me to go with her in one vehicle, so Netossa went alone and Entrapta went with Bow's dads . During Lunch, while they were eating smoked meat pancakes, Adora took her aside and began to tell her about the events on Icarus.

“At first I had a dream. A stupid nightmare, or so I thought, but now I don't know.” said her fiancée in an uncertain voice. When she heard this, she flattened her ears because she remembered that dream with a dark city and a girl with two-colored eyes. Adora swallowed and continued.

“And when I woke up, I killed the clock again... But then I had a public speech and there was this Ivory Claw. She... and she accused me of everything we went through being planned, that we had been working with Horde Prime from the very beginning. And then... I ran away and decided to go on a solo trip to think everything over. I rested for some time and then these kids found me... Itel, Rosie and Eti. They were nice and funny but... they came from outside the empire, they never knew Horde Prime ...”

“That's... wonderful... It's good to hear that someone out there was able to have a normal, happy childhood.” she said, although she felt a twinge of uncertainty. Glimmer was very afraid of what might lurk beyond the borders of the empire. The first people Adora met seemed nice, but she remembered what happened with Glimmer's mom.

Adora hesitated and said in a serious voice

“Rosie was very happy and joyful, but the others... They lost their world... Kesler... the Swarm destroyed it. I don't know exactly what it is, but it's terrifying and powerful.

She felt the hairs on the back of her neck stand up. She heard both of these names in her dream... It couldn't just be a coincidence. Maybe she "heard" everything when she was chipped. Even if they hadn't heard of Horde Prime , he might have heard of their world.

“And then they took me to the rest of their friends who came across Scorpia and Perfuma and oh ...” Adora made a face as if she had just remembered something. ” Entrapta, I have something to tell you.” she said to the inventor, who tried to cut a piece of Shogi's fur , but he escaped with hair that was as prehensile as hers.

“Yes?” asked the purple-haired woman who was next to her in two bounds.

“I'm sorry I didn't tell you earlier, but when I was on Icarus, I met Wrong Hordak and Emily. They both are fine! – said her fiancée, smiling cheerfully for the first time since yesterday's conversation. Entrapta jumped happily and wrapped her arms and hair around Adora .

“Oh, that's wonderful! How is he? Does Emily remember to apply rust remover regularly? Did they make new friends?!” she said in an excited voice. Adora nodded.

“Yes, very many, a bit unusual ones, and I think they are flying here to Etheria, they will be at the Victory Day celebrations.” now Adora became serious again “I met someone else there. Lady Cala Grayskull . She comes from a planet called Carurystal and claims that her ancestor was Mara. She was... amazing, but then...” she gave her a significant look, but fortunately Entrapta was interested in something else and did some calculations for a moment, until she finally spoke.

“Assuming that at least a thousand years have passed, there could have been as many as forty generations, so although we do not know the potential lifespan of the First Ones or their descendants, at least theoretically, Lady Cala has... a very small fraction of Mara's blood.” the purple-haired woman explained .

“Yeah, she said something like that, without all the scientific terms. She also travels with Wrong Hordak, and she'll probably be coming to Etheria soon, so you'll probably all meet her.” Adora said, scratching her head and smiling with an effort. Entrapta looked up from her Datapad and tilted her head.

“Did something happen? You are usually much more energetic and smile much more. Catra also looks exhausted and very stressed despite the... relaxing activity tonight...” she looked at them and they both started to blush. But they must have looked very exhausted. If even Entrapta noticed that something was wrong, it means that everyone would see it.

“You know, this is quite a personal topic to talk about...” she said, flattening her ears.

“Why? This usually works great. I checked on Hordak. You know how he always gets stressed when something goes wrong. But after sex he is always nice and relaxed.” Entrapta xplained

They both stiffened with very stupid expressions.

“I don't want to live with such knowledge in my head!” Adora moaned.

“These images will probably never disappear... “ she said in a dead voice.

“Hmmm, I once constructed a memory recovery device. She helped Hordak a lot, but to erase the memory... Hmmm.” the inventor moved aside, engaged in another topic. They looked at each other and laughed happily, but after a while she added.

“I think I lost a bet.”

“What bet?” Adora asked.

“You see, I made a bet with Glimmer and Bow about Entrapta and Hordak doing it and...” she hid her face in her hands. – I think I'll have to sing at our wedding.

They laughed again.

Netossa had to admit that the dressing created by Shogi had worked wonders, but her hand still hurt after prolonged exercise, so she decided to hand over the ruders to Entrapta and went to see what the others were up to. Catra gently stroked Adora's head, who was sleeping and snoring loudly. Lance and George showed each other photos taken of the remnants of the Elder Things, glowing with youthful energy. Oh, she guessed it's going to happen so much things between the shelves of their library. Frosta was sitting in her chair with a concentrated expression, tinkering with something, and her new friend was now holding almost dog head in her lap. Melog, in turn, had his head under his mistress's arm. Suddenly, the ruler of the Kingdom of Snow screamed loudly.

"Ready!" she unfastened the seatbelts and then ran to Adora and Catra. The blonde-haired warrior looked around with panicked eyes until her girlfriend calmed her down. Frosta smiled broadly and spoke

"It was supposed to be a gift from me for your wedding, but since we had an adventure together, I can give it to you now." and she handed Adora a bone necklace decorated with various symbols important to the culture of the inhabitants of her kingdom, and she handed Catra a flute made of black wood. – "I did it all myself. It took me some time, but everything worked out."

"Is beautiful." said Adora, immediately putting on the gift. Catra looked at the flute with a smile and then took the mouthpiece into her mouth. And she started playing. She didn't expect that they taught such things in the Horde, although no one would expect dancing lessons either, and Catra and Adora put on quite a show at that ball... Well, no one knew what the dark sorceress could have thought of. Only this melody was strange, shrill and irritating. It hurt not only the ears, but also the heart and even the soul itself. There was something so alien about her. Was this music taught in the Horde? Was Shadow Weaver happy when listen this melody? With dark bitch everything is possible. Only Adora was also staring at her fiancée, amazed, or even shocked. And Catra didn't stop playing. It was as if she had fallen into a trance. Everyone looked at her with growing disbelief, even Entrapta looked out from the cockpit. Melog also looked confused and flattened his ears. Finally, Adora gave her a sharp nudge. Catra looked around in confusion, as if she had just woken up.

“Honey, you're fine?” Adora said with concern in her voice, hugging her girlfriend. Catra looked at the flute, flinched as if she were afraid of it, and let it fall from her hands.

“Yes... everything, I just remembered something.” she smiled with an effort.

“You know, if it's not the right gift, I'll think of something else.” Frosta said with guilt in her voice, but Catra and Adora hugged her.

“It’s great, I just had a dream recently in which I heard this melody...” said the cat-like girl, trying to be cheerful.

She loved adventures, but in her opinion, the best part of them was the moment when you came home to rest and then reminisce with friends. During this trip, she met two new people. True, it will be difficult to talk to Shogi, at least for now, and Nightgale will now live with Lonnie, but they will meet again someday. Maybe Nightgale will even convince Lonnie to make peace with Adora, Catra and Glimmer and they will all celebrate Victory Day together. Yes, she had to prepare for the celebrations, because she would be the main bodyguard. He needs to rest and train... Although it is not known who could attack them now. They'll definitely get along with Lonnie soon, and Horde Ultimate and the Brothers are too afraid of all of them.

She was looking forward to the celebrations. There will be music, good food, lots of sweets and guests from Other Worlds... Maybe she will meet Empress Eridani and finally find out what it is about being emperor that the Chancellor keeps encouraging her to accept this title. When they landed at the airport, she was the first to leave. It wasn't the biggest port on Etheria, there was only one ship here now, a strange one, I think it was from the Aquarius. She was the first to exit Netossa's vehicle and rode on her new mount friend towards her palace. She waved to the people she passed, most of whom looked at her in surprise and didn't wave back. Well, they were probably surprised to see Shogi, whose eyes wandered around his body to better see the people he passed. Well, She was sure they'll get used to him soon, he was such a sweetheart after all. She wanted to be the first in the castle to bring her friends the key to the armory. After all, that was the main reason for this trip, and I'm sure everyone would be happy, and then Glimmer would praise her. The ride didn't take long, Shogi was very fast after all, she couldn't wait to race against Swiftwind.

She reached the icy walls of her palace and dismounted from her steed and walked towards her abode as the guards stared at her with terribly stupid expressions. She walked proudly, but then the guards suddenly blocked her path with blades. She stopped in surprise and tried to move on, but the guards were persistent.

“What do you do?” she asked, confused. “Let me in!” she exclaimed, feeling growing anxiety. After all, she just wanted to enter her castle. The guards looked at each other as if wondering which of them should tell her something. Finally, the captain of the guard she knew as the Blue Walrus came. He looked at her apologetically, then said.

“We received orders that we are not allowed to let Frosta into the national ice palace. You were deprived of power by the will of the tribal council and the chancellor. Please wait here for the Chancellor to tell you the resolutions of the Republic of Snow government... I'm sorry, but there's not much I can do except bring you something warm to drink. Some sweets or snack...” she had the impression that he wanted to tell her something else between the words, but she couldn't catch what.

“Some sweets or a snack?” she said quietly in an dull voice. This did not make sense! How could they deprive her of power... Not let her into her castle... it makes no sense! “I want to talk to the chancellor! Let me explain it all. If this is a joke, it's completely unfunny.”

The guards looked ashamed… That was what scared her the most. They didn't even have the courage to look her in the eye. Blue Walrus sighed and went to the palace. She paced back and forth nervously, glaring at the guards, who looked scared. That's good... Then she heard Adora's cheerful voice behind her

“Are we waiting for something?”

She felt her heart stop in her chest. She forgot about her friends. She turned to them, they had just come on foot. She forced a carefree smile and said cheerfully.

“No, nothing happened, just minor problems with the sewage system!”

Adora frowned and nodded slowly, but Catra and Netossa exchanged worried glances. Melog nudged her comfortingly with his muzzle, and Shogi rubbed against her side. Finally, the palace gates opened and the chancellor stood there. He was dressed in a beautiful and expensive fur coat from some creature not found on Etheria . “When did he buy them?” she wondered. Immediately after that, she saw something that made her blush with anger. Around his neck he wore a medallion made of bluestone. It was an ancient symbol of power worn by the princesses of the kingdom of Snow since... forever! By what right did he appropriate it…

“What... What does that mean!” she shouted furiously and felt that everything around her was covered with frost.

The Chancellor smiled triumphantly as he stood at the gate of the outer wall and said.

“Miss Frosta! You. my dear, by the will of the people of the Republic of Snow, were deprived of your title and the privileges associated with it. All your property passes into the hands of the people. Please surrender voluntarily and you will be taken to a designated house where you will remain under house arrest until a decision is made about the fate of you and your runestone.

“But why? What have I done?” She asked, holding back tears with difficulty. “Chancellor, you are my friend...”

The Chancellor raised his head proudly and said, almost shouting at her.

“First of all, from now on, Comrade Chancellor and I have never been your friend, only a subordinate. Now to answer your question. You did a lot and at the same time absolutely nothing. You embroiled our country in a war and, driven by personal sympathies, concluded an alliance against the interests of your subjects. And you stand by him, even though the so-called Queen Glimmer has brought the Galactic Horde here, and now she is playing the great leader of the universe, forgetting about her own planet. And your last whim has overflowed the cup of bitterness.”

“What whim? You… You liar and cheater!” she shouted. She felt tears streaming down her face.

“You gave away the treasures of your country to foreign people connected with the queen.” he pointed at the confused Lance and George. “You took two people there with you who were the leaders of the Horde.” he pointed at Catra and Entrapta , who was wagging her tail furiously and looking at them with surprise. Without consulting anyone. In the name of childish desires, you abandoned your responsibilities. We need an ice queen with a heart as cold as winter itself, not a spoiled brat seeking the approval of the kingdom's enemies! You are not fit to be a ruler. You let us all down”

Then she screamed.

She had to admit that making love with Catra had helped her de-stress a bit, and now she had almost forgotten about the events on Icarus . It can wait, she wanted to spend this moment with her beloved one. They were together, that's when they were the strongest, unstoppable. They can handle anything and help Glimmer get through even the worst hardships.

Then Catra started playing. She didn't know that her fiancée was so musical, but she was happy that she had found a new talent, even if the melody she played was so eerie. Catra, however, seemed scared afterwards, but she didn't want to say why, she only said that she would explain everything soon. She agreed to give her time, but not too much, she had learned from Bow not to let others keep their worries in their own hearts, because it only makes everything worse...

And then they were witnesses... She didn't know what the princess' dismissal was called, perhaps deprincessship ? She had no idea that something like this was even possible. She could only feel her anger rising at how cruelly this man had treated the ice princess, but her anger was nothing compared to Catra's fury, which she growled.

“The fucking Shadow Weaver family.”

Netossa nodded and added.

“As soon as I find her, I'll beat her like that...”

She didn't understand what she was talking about, but when she heard Catra swearing, she looked at her with surprise, but then she pursed her lips and was about to defend her young friend when she screamed. Suddenly the air became icy cold, and a blue-white glow began to radiate from Frosta. The tundra around them froze, frost appeared on all of their cheeks. Breathing became downright painful. In addition, Shogi took on his true form, the monstrous Shogoth.

“I'll calm down Frosta , you stop Shogi as She-Ra, otherwise he'll eat that bastard. Entrapta, call for some help, Netossa, make a net and you “ she turned to Bow's fathers “Just stay away from all this.”

She nodded to her fiancée. And she screamed...

“For the Honor of the Grayskull.” and she felt power flowing through her. Multi-colored light flashed and she became She- Ra'a, towering over everyone in her height. She transformed at the right moment because that idiot chancellor only intended to make the situation worse because he said it with contempt.

“And you just proved to everyone that you are not fit to be ruler. You can't even control your own power! And you brought us a monster here.”

Frosta screamed again, and Shogoth lunged at the Chancellor. She stood in front of him, shielding the annoying man, while Melog pushed him to the ground and growled menacingly. Instead of a sword, she now had a wide shield.

“Shogi, look at me. I know you're mad because this guy hurt your friend, but it's really not worth eating him. You'll only complicate everything, and you'll probably get indigestion and all.” she explained and then the monster calmed down a bit.

Meanwhile, Catra sat down next to Frost and said.

“Frosta, Frosta… the Terrible Ice Bane!”

The ice princess turned to the cat girl and said.

“How can he do that! We fought Horde Prime, Hordak , and even you…. We risked our lives for them. For all of Etheria. After all, we won... We won in the end. Why does he want to arrest me! We were the good guys, right?” her glow dimmed and the youngest of their alliance began to sob. Catra knelt down next to her and hugged her.

“Everything will be fine... We'll manage somehow... Glimmer will definitely think of something. We will take you to her…

“NO! I can't face her now. I failed her. I failed you all...”

The Chancellor stood up when Melog release him.

“You will all be arrested...” the man began, but Catra looked at him with her cat-like, two-colored eyes as menacingly as she hadn't done since the war.

“Listen to me, you son of a bitch... I don't know much about Etherian law, but I'm pretty sure you can't arrest someone without a reason. And if you want to arrest us, you have stand against the most warrior of princesses, a long-time Rebel general, a brilliant weapons specialist, two ancient beasts, a slayer of Horde Prime, and me, a Shadow Weaver ward and, believe me, i'm the scariest one out of all of them.

It's probably only now that the Chancellor realized what he had gotten himself into. He turned pale and swallowed loudly, looking nervously from side to side.

“Okay, you can leave, but don't you dare come back here again.” he threatened, but his voice was breaking.

“But we dare to come back. You can be sure of that.” Catra said, smiling evilly.

Cooperation

Bina felt her head starting to hurt. What in the name of devils and demons tempted her to send Eti with Itel and Rosie to this tavern. Itel's hotheadedness, Rosie's kindness, and Eti's unhingedness were the perfect combination for disaster. Itel was looking for the most dangerous place possible for them to go to, Rosie was so nice and friendly that everyone let their guard down, and then Eti did something insane and everything went up in flames. Together they were the triad of doom. And because of the romantic tension between them, it facilitated the escalation of chaos... And she, as their guardian, should have anticipated all this. They may have all been of age, but they couldn't be called sensible. So if they did something crazy, it was her fault that they did it. Although luckily Lika and Alatar were not there, otherwise the disaster would have been complete.

As soon as this Ikeshi brought the news that someone had started a brawl in the local bar, she broke into a run and immediately turned back when she realized that she didn't know exactly where to go. So she let Huntara lead them. The orc warrior seemed shocked by what she learned. However, Bina was sure that the time for a real shock would come when she got there and met Eti. She had to admit that this woman was in pretty good shape. She had a hard time keeping up with her, let alone Alatar, who was panting so hard it seemed like he was going to spit out his lungs. Only Lilka kept up with Huntara, she obviously couldn't let look weak in eyes of another orc, even if that orc didn't know she was an orc. Once they were in place, she doubled over and gasped, and Alatar fell to the ground, gasping. Huntara and Lilka, they didn't even break a sweat... It's so unfair... He needs to start training more.

They stood on a scarlet rock and looked at the smoking building. It was made of stone, leather and bone. It looked quite menacing, if not for the neon sign depicting a colorful flower and hang laundry drying on a line. A large number of Bone Shelter patrons gathered near the skull that served as the entrance and attempted to extinguish the fire, with only moderate success.

“You know, it could have been worse. – she said to Huntara , who stood with her mouth open in disbelief, staring at the smoking building. Then the orca turned to her and spoke in an angry voice.

“How worse? Gang wars broke out in the wastelands for things like this?”

She grinned.

“It's still standing, and considering that Itel is a Solarian and Eti likes explosions, I would expect smoking ruins here.”

Lilka nodded with absolute seriousness.

“It's only because we weren't there. We're really good at breaking things. I swing my axe, and Alatar breathes fire.”

Dragonkin lowered his wings in shame.

“Lilka, you are spreading offensive stereotypes!

The redhead tilted her head to the side.

“You spread them yourself when you breathe fire... But they are very nice flames! Then everything burns so beautifully!”

Huntara , whoever she was and whatever she had been through, wasn't eager to meet her kids, so she just stared at them as if she wasn't sure if they were joking. She walked up to the tall warrior and patted her on the back.

“Welcome to my world.” she said in a friendly voice and moved towards the concourse.

She had nothing against Catra. She respected her for her courage, bravery and persistence. She just didn't want the girl to show up here unnecessarily. She stuck a stick into an anthill here and then left. She told this directly to the Grand Marshal and she agreed with her and respected this request. And now she was standing in front of a crowd of her gang members who were demanding an explanation.

“Is Catra back to regain power?” said the hyenaperson

“Will Brightmoon take away our freedom!” exclaimed the emaciated scorpion.

“These were new tables.” said Doris, the bartender and her ex, despairingly .

“Silence!” she shouted and the crowd calmed down a bit and she started talking. “I'll take care of everything, you have my word on that, but first, be quiet instead of babbling one by one, or I'll beat the crap out of you. Has anyone died?”

“Rash and Rush have hearing problems, Gorgo had a broken jaw.” explained the gloomy lizard technician. “And Sculy …” He pointed to the snake-woman hugging her knees and swaying mechanically. “She got hit by that girl. Good thing she didn't kill her!”

“Eti usually doesn't seriously hurt anyone, Itel is the hot-headed and dangerous one.” Bina explained, smiling nervously.

“Usually?” she snapped at the burgundy-haired woman, who just shrugged. Meanwhile, Lilka approached Sculy, who kept saying "There are two now", and showed her the picture on the datapad. She was too far away to see it clearly, but it seemed to her that it was a catgirl with a disturbing resemblance to Catra, staring menacingly ahead and giving someone an insulting gesture with her metal hand. When Sculy saw the photo, she screamed and started crawling on all fours as far as she could. The red-haired girl smiled happily and called to Bina.

“Yes, it was definitely Eti!”

“I didn't guess that at all.” Bina muttered sarcastically and turned to everyone gathered.

“Hey. Recently, one of my wards started a brawl here. As we all know, they happen regularly in places like this because we bad to the bones. I know that because I've spent almost my entire life in places like this, as have my kids. I know my warsds and I know that they don't start fights for any reason. Had someone stared or, gods forbid, touched her?” she asked, looking at the gathered people smiling conciliatingly. They looked at each other in surprise and several nodded. “Well, you see.” she continued. “None of us likes it when someone stares at us and then everyone wants to punch that person, and if someone fucked you up, it means you deserved the fuck and there's no point in making a big deal out of it, just solve the problem by yourself... And so I'm just saying that this girl with white hair recently fought with the living dead, the green-haired, pointed-eared girl survived the destruction of her own planet, and this cat-like girl was trained from birth to be a murderer, so you can say that you're lucky that nothing serious happened to you. And apart from her appearance, she has nothing in common with Catra. She's just a wronged girl, who has problems with aggression, raised in barracks by a megalomaniac and his right-hand woman…” Bina explained. Everyone stared at her with very gloomy eyes. She sighed and whispered to the woman with burgundy hair.

“You just described Catra from a few years ago...”

“I guessed...” Bina said with a smile plastered on her lips. Scorpion stepped forward and said.

“I remember the last time Catra was here. A week later she tried to fuck up the planet because she was pissed off”

Then Lilka looked thoughtful and said.

“Eti could probably do the same if she was in storm days or really bored...

“You're not helping.” Bina said through gritted teeth, and then added. “I promise to compensate you for the damage...” she looked at the snakewoman, who was staring blankly ahead.” To pay for psychotherapy and, most importantly, to share with you the treasures that we will find in the tomb of the famous Mara, the previous She- Ra , because I recently came into possession of maps leading to it.” she waved the sheets of paper that Goldeneyes gave them, “And if you don't trust me, the terrible and invincible Huntara here has pledged to personally ensure that I fulfill her part of the contract.

She clenched her jaw tightly, trying not to show anger or surprise. She was going to find the tomb anyway, but alone, or with trusted friends, and she wanted to give what she found there to Adora and Glimmer, not to the regulars of the Bone Haven, who were a bunch of greedy bastards. Only if she said something now, another brawl would break out and she would look like an idiot or a fraud, she could already see the burning greed in their eyes. Will deal with them again...

“Lady Huntara is an Orc, and orcs never ever break their word, always act honorably, and always wash behind their ears. “Lilka began to tell in a cheerful voice, focusing everyone's attention on her. “I'm an Orca, so I know best what we are like.”

And there was silence as everyone tried to fit what they had just heard into the Huntara they knew, which was probably beyond their abilities. Hers too. She took a deep breath and spoke in a tone that brooked no objections.

“It's as this woman said, we will find Mara's Tomb and obtain its riches, although of course I will keep most of the treasures, for I am the ruler of the Scarlet Wastes and if anyone doesn't agree with it, draw out their weapons and fight with me.” she looked at everyone menacingly, and when she noticed that Lilka was looking at them with admiration, she growled at her.

“And you have to explain to me what's going on with these orcs!”

The red-haired girl smiled broadly, her eyes shining with pure delight. However, Bina made a face that suggested that she had gotten herself into something very smelly.

“Let's go. I guess now we have to find your people and make sure they don't do any more damage. Only if you don't keep up, I'll leave you behind.” She said, but Bina grinned and said

“Hey, we have transport, and the girls have transmitters, and even Itel isn't crazy enough to throw them away. Oh, look there!” The burgundy-haired woman pointed to a vehicle driving towards them, surrounded by a cloud of red stripes. When it came close, she saw that it was a military transport with eskers and teeth painted on it.

“Huntara , meet Crusher. Crusher, this is Huntara.” Bina said. The door opened and she was horrified to see that the interior was empty.

“Huntara is an orc, like Wagar. She just doesn't know it yet.” Lilka explained, and then a voice came from inside the vehicle.

“Listen Hunti , it's good that you're here. Countless enemies await us here. Bugs, birds, small cars, But together we will face them, we are invincible!”

She really was too old for all this.

Tung Lashor bared his fangs in a smile when he heard the news his subordinates brought him. First he learned that new guests had arrived in the Scarlet Waste, his wasteland. Of course, his friends didn't know the real reasons for his interest in that group. They probably thought he wanted to rob them and took the technologically advanced equipment they brought with them. Maybe that's what he'll do! But he must question them first. He looked at his whip, metal and segmented, a real gem that he had bought from recently Icarus during his secret trip there. He was completely broke and had to take out a loan on the account of Lonnie and her People's Rebellion. After all, they were friends and allies, so he would definitely understand and pay as soon as he found out about everything. Unfortunately, he didn't discover anything there, but it didn't change anything, he had been loyal for twenty-five years and had been carrying out the mission entrusted to him by the management with great trust.

And then he heard that Catra, or someone very much like her, had set the Bone Haven on fire. At first he felt… mental discomfort. He wasn't at all afraid of the Grand Marshal, but he just really didn't want to be in the same place as her, and it had absolutely nothing to do with the fact that she had defeated him during the duel. Besides, she cheated then anyway and this time the outcome of the fight would be completely different. But then he realized that it must have been Lonnie who had hired a shape-shifting creature like Double Trouble to provoke a conflict between the alliance and the Wasteland, it was a brilliant plan! He knew that Lonnie saw him as her most valuable ally and decided to support him.

Now standing before him was one of his officers, a petite Lizardman called Krask , who gave him a soldier's salute, earning a chuckle from the rest of the gang.

“Huntara is heading here with the remaining crew members of that ship. From what I understand, they are looking for Mara's tomb , as a reminder, the previous She-Ra,' she said in an official tone, as if she were a soldier reporting to her superiors.

“I know who Maru was.” he said, although it was the first time he heard this name, he would have remembered it otherwise. “We will set a trap for Huntara and trap her, and then the wasteland will be ours!” he shouted and all his gang members responded with the same shouts. “Almost like I was a member of Thunder Reptiles !”

Eti was feeling bad. She knew she had caused trouble for everyone, especially Bina. She complicated everything because of the anger in her heart. Ever since Icarus, what Moonshadow had done, and the sight of tears in the eyes of that kind Blondie, a Cold Fire had flared up in her soul. She didn't feel much except excitement, power, and anger. Those were stormy days that ended with a terrible outburst of anger in that inn or pub. At first she didn't want to react like that, she just wanted to have fun without Bina's supervision ... But everyone was staring at her and, worst of all, they saw the other one. HER! SHE WAS THERE…she couldn't explain the rage she felt. Then a cold flame erupted and consumed her self. If it weren't for Rosie, she didn't know how it would have ended. However, a cold flame still glowed in her soul . She wasn't sure if this was really the end of the stormy days or if she was just in the eye of the storm.

Rosie… She really liked Rosie. She was so different from everyone she had ever known. She had so much joy in her heart like no one else she had ever met. She may have been deaf... But she saw the world completely differently than all of them. Maybe the rest were just blind and she saw the world as it was? She looked beyond the outer dirt and meanness and saw the inner beauty. And she hurt her, made fear appear in those beautiful blue eyes. It was thanks to her that she understood how wrong she had done. She felt embarrassed, and that happened very rarely. Usually, though, it had to do with Rosie. Why did she care what she thought of her?

“There is something written here.” Rosie said, pointing to a wooden sign embedded in the gravel floor. When they approached she read it. “Land ruled by the Aspis Gang. Everything here belongs to Tung Lashora . Any servant of Huntara or the princesses who comes here will only find a Skull.”

“This reads as death” Itel corrected her with barely concealed impatience.

“But it just says skull. In letters.”

They looked at each other and shrugged.

The Aspis Consortium was the largest, oldest, and most importantly, most ruthless corporation in the known galaxy. They stopped at nothing, from corruption and blackmail, through murder and smuggling, to trafficking in weapons of mass destruction and genocide. But that could just be a coincidence. After all, this planet had been out of the galaxy for centuries or something.

“So what do we do next?” Rosie asked Itel with an uncertain face.

“We can't go back to the Valley, because the guys we pissed off will definitely be there. Perhaps we should warn Bina , then call the ship back and go somewhere else.” Surprisingly, the Elf wasn’t mad at her this time. It was strange and a little disturbing. She understood that it had to do with why she was angry. She couldn't quite name it, but when everyone started looking at her as if she was THAT ONE, she felt furious. Normally, if it weren't for the cold fire, she would somehow control it, but the... She wanted them to stop seeing her as that person, but she also didn't want them to look at her and see who she was. She would love to make everyone blind and gouge out their eyes. Itel would allow it, but not Rosie and Bina... Even though all three of them cared about her.

She looked at the sign and turned to her friends.

“I have a much better idea!” she shouted loudly, and both girls looked at her in surprise.

“What's the idea?” Itel asked skeptically.

“It's simple, my dear itel . I'm pretty sure those guys in that bar are from Huntara and the guys here are her enemies. So I came up with the idea that we would join a gang, and they would welcome us with open arms as a thank you for the brawl we all did together.”

Rosie grimaced.

“You know, I don't think joining a gang is a really good idea, especially one that writes ideograms in letters.” She said, but itel looked like she was considering her words, so she added to convince her.

“These guys definitely know the wasteland, so if there are any ruins somewhere, they'll definitely know where they are.”

That was enough. The elf nodded and said.

“Okay Eti, just please don't do anything stupid. And we will do it discreetly...”

“Just like we always do.” she said and turned on the masking field.

He looked around with binoculars pressed to his eyes and looked for the transport in which the Huntara was supposed to be traveling . He was crouching on a tall red rock. He intended to use the effect dramatically by standing up here, pointing his whip at the vehicle and ordering his gang members below to attack. In his opinion, command was all about drama. The Horde never understood this and that's why they lost. He put down the binoculars and smiled at his own thoughts, admiring his own genius. Then he saw a piece of paper with the word CV in front of his eyes.

“I'm applying to join your gang. This is my CV.” he heard a slightly dull voice coming from the side. At first he started looking through the document, because in the old days his job consisted mainly of reading CVs, but that was in a previous life. He hadn't seen one in twenty-five years. And then he looked to the side and screamed because he saw HER. It was true after all! She was here. And she stood by him. She wore some strange armor and had a rifle on her back, with a scope... sniper one ... and behind her were two girls and. A dark-skinned and green-haired elf hid her face in her hands, and the other, a white-haired one wearing strange glasses, waved at him and smiled serenely.

“Go away! Leave me alone.” he said, retreating in fear, but she did not stop walking towards him. He finally fell over and she climbed up onto his chest with her heavy boots. She was even meaner than last time. She tilted her head and said in a slightly offended voice.

“You know, you could at least read my CV. I irretrievably lost five whole minutes of my life writing them.”

“Why don't you leave me alone?” he said, feeling his voice break.

“Hey, well... Listen, you're Tromlin ! The Azlanti have enslaved your species, and I've been shooting at them quite a bit lately, and Itel has been hitting them pretty hard with her moon sword as well!” she exclaimed, wagging her tail violently. He blinked. Since he got here, no one has called him Tromlin . And she knew about the damn Azlanti. He looked at the girl more closely. He wasn't very familiar with mammalian faces, but she almost certainly looked a bit different. It's because of these eyes. That one had two different colored eyes, and this one's eyes were gold with blue spots. And also this prosthetic hand, strangely made of a single piece of metal. This wasn't Catra... And that meant an opportunity. The company always taught them to be ready to take advantage of every opportunity possible. He slipped out from under the girl's shoes and stood proudly in front of her.

“I'm Tung Lashor. Boss of the Aspis gang. The most feared gang in the Crimson Wastes. Whip!” he said and cracked his whip.

“What he did? I guess my glasses can't describe it.” said the white-haired girl, waving her hands and a voice coming out of her gloves.

“I think he says Whip when he cracks the whip.” the green-haired girl said in disbelief.

- But that's very stupid.” said the white-haired girl.

-“It's like saying blade when I attack with a blade.” added the Elf.

“I can't even make sound of my blows at all.” concluded the white-haired woman.

“Nah” the cat girl interjected. “This could be fun!” she quickly drew her rifle and shot, saying loudly " rifle", at the feet of one of his subordinates, a small and emaciated lizard, who screamed and rolled down the slope.

“Hmmm, this is quite strange. I'd have to shoot again to find out.” the cat girl said in a pensive voice and started aiming again at his gangsters, who started to hide behind the rocks. This was too much.

“Stop pointing guns at my subordinates and tell me what you want from me?” he shouted

The cat girl tilted her head to the side, frowned, and said.

“I said we wanted to join your gang, didn't you hear? Maybe you have hearing problems? It's no shame, my friend can't hear at all, and the punching is so powerful that it breaks jaws and skulls.”

she pointed to the white-haired girl who smiled at him.

“You are my problem! – he roared, and at that moment a laser beam hit the rock. He turned around and saw a large and menacingly painted armored personnel carrier with a cannon operated by a red-haired girl. Before him stood Huntara, a burgundy-haired woman and a true Dragonkin, albeit with multiple cybernetic prosthetics.

“Hey Bina... Whatever you heard, it can all be explained rationally... I don't see any logical reasons for you to be mad at us.” said the cat girl.

She didn't like the way the vehicle was shaking, making noise and... talking. This last one was the worst. He kept talking about small cars, big bugs and how he didn't like the sun here. So she decided to talk to Lilka. The girl beamed and started her tirade.

“So you're an orc. You must know that it is a huge responsibility. Orcs are noble, courage and brave. And they brush their teeth every day. The latter is the most important. And we orcs travel in the Hordes... “When she frowned, the girl added hastily. “But these are good Hordes, fighting for goodness and justice, not like the nasty Horde of Primus. And when they are victorious, they drink the blood of defeated enemies or hot chocolate. We really like hot chocolate, I have it here.” she handed her a thermos of hot chocolate. Quite tasty. Maybe it wasn't such a bad idea to talk to this girl...

Half an hour later, she felt a growing pain in her head and was glad when they stopped near Aspis' gang territory. They went outside and Bina looked at the datapad .

“So our beloved Eti went there... This could end badly...”

“Tung Lashor rules there, he's a fool and a buffoon, but if your protégé is careful, nothing will happen to her.” she tried to calm down the burgundy-haired woman, but she looked at her and laughed mirthlessly.

“I'm worried about this guy.” she said thoughtfully.

“Wait a minute, I know that name from somewhere.” Alatar said and started looking through his Datapad . It was going to be weird.

They followed the plan... which they improvised when they saw that Tong Lashor, who had been lurking in one of his ambushes, had never understood how they works, was now talking to three girls. Lilka fired a welcome shot from her cannon, and they and the silver-scaled lizard emerged. And then one of Bina's students greeted her... When she saw her, this Eti, she felt that she was making a very strange face. Even from this distance she could see that she was very similar to Catra... But where did she come from, who was she... and why did she go to that idiot? She sighed and said to Tong Lashor .

“You disgusting reptile, scaly creature, lizard spawn.” she was saying, but then Alatar interrupted her.

“I'm sorry, Mrs. Huntara, but you use very speciesist and offensive terms in your speech to Mr. Lashor. And besides, he's a Tromlin, a member of a race enslaved by the Star Empire, so it's even more offensive.”

And now absolutely everyone turned their eyes towards him.

“You know about Tromlins? And everything?” Tung Lashor asked unexpectedly friendly. His gang members seemed a bit…confused.

“You can also accept Alatar into the Gang, I can handle it somehow.” the cat-like girl muttered, but the Aspis chief didn't seem to pay any attention to her. Alatar nodded.

“Yes, I watched a podcast about your species. Azlanti treated you very cruelly... But I have another question, because is your name related to Tung Lashor from Thunder Reptiles ? That Sidekick Clow Slashor, the leader of the entire team?”

Tung Lashor was outraged.

“He wasn't any Sideck ! He was the most important member of the team and the greatest character in the history of television!” he said with elation, and Bina standing next to her was clearly trying not to laugh

What are they talking about?

“Are you a stupid nerd? Nobody warned me about this! I'm leaving this gang. Rosie, Itel, let's go.” Eti said and slowly started walking towards them, and her companions joined her.

“Well, he's one of the most liked characters.” Alatar replied. “In the new series, they made him Tromlin instead of a lizardman and the adoptive son of Meow -Ru, the villain of the entire franchise. They did it because they wanted to increase diversity of the show. I have it downloaded here on my datapad , but only one season because no more were made. This series was not very popular.”

“Show!” called Tung and, making an acrobatic jump, he moved towards them. His gang members looked embarrassed. She, too, I guess. As the lizard walked towards them, Bina looked at his gang's symbol. She looked surprised, but then a faint, sly smile appeared on her face. Alatar was about to hand over the datapad , but then Bina spoke in a very formal voice.

“It's good that you make sure that the employees you recruit wear the company logo, the management will be happy with it, even if it is not fully consistent with the company dress code”. It is known that the company's policy promotes adaptation to local conditions.

What?

Tung Lashor stiffened, stood up proudly, puffed out his chest, and said.

“Are you from Aspis Consortium?” he asked, shocked and delighted at the same time. She gave a questioning look to the burgundy-haired woman, but she waved her hand, signaling that she would explain everything later.

“Yes, but not officially. The company is interested in entering into Etheria We've been watching you for some time, and I must tell you secretly that some of the board is impressed with your achievements.” she lowered her voice and said in a conspiratorial tone. – Some even say something about the head of the planetary branch.”

In Tung's Lashor’s eyes tears welled up. Tears of pure joy.

“I always knew that the company remembered me. I never doubted it. I have always been loyal to the Consortium.” he said, his voice breaking. Three girls approached Alatar and started talking to him in whispers, although the white-haired girl spoke in sign language and Lilka was eating a sandwich.

“Yes, we have been wondering for a long time what happened to you. You know well that every employee is important to us.” Bina said in a gentle voice, and he nodded with an expression similar to the one she saw on the clones when they talked about Horde Prime. She felt cold sweat on the back of her neck.

“However, not everyone in the company is favorable to you. Your old rivals within the company are still working against you.” the woman continued, and the lizard gritted its teeth in anger.

“Mondo , you treacherous Skittermader’s piece of carrion. Even after all these years, he still has to give me a hard time.”

“Yes, even the most beautiful tree will have worm-infested fruit. Therefore, everyone came to the conclusion that you need to prove your suitability to the company by completing several tasks assigned by the management.” Bina explained, genuine concern evident in her voice.

“I'll do anything for Consortium . Absolutely everything.” Tung said Lashor, in whose eyes she saw pure devotion. What was wrong with this guy. She had always known him, ever since she came to this wasteland, and even though she thought he was an idiot, he was their idiot.

“Nothing big for now, we are looking for the tomb of a certain Mara, the previous She- Ra, in order to open a theme park related to her, in which the treasures obtained from this tomb will be helpful. For this purpose, I hired a subcontractor, Huntara, who is here, but you will be a key element of our team and thanks to you we will find the tomb. Remember, the whole company is counting on you, won't you let us down?” Bina asked, looking expectantly at Tung Lashor , who saluted the strange burgundy-haired woman and gave her a look of superiority. She wasn't sure whether she should be offended by being called a subcontractor

“Yes, Bina! When can we start?” said the lizard with absolute enthusiasm. Membership jveku .

The gang's mebers looked at each other and whispered, but they seemed to like their leader's new face. This was all getting weirder and weirder.

“Wait, I'll just send my interns back to the ship to Brightmoon” when she said this, both the kids and the white-haired girl gave her offended glances.

The world was becoming far too complicated for someone her age.

Bina watched as the Deadly Sword of Burning Fury landed and the side entrance opened and Miss Daisy and Ireanis stood there. The women were just leaving Mystacor when she called them. Her lovely barbarian band rushed in, greeting the dark sorceress, though Rosie frowned at the dark sorceress, but then shook her head and went inside. Then she herself approached the gloomy woman.

“Listen, Daisy, something came up and I have to stay here and send the kids with you.” she said to her, and Miss Daisy looked at her as if scared.

“I'm not sure if this is a good idea.” Said the gloomy elf uncertainly, but she patted her on the shoulder.

“Don't worry. I believe you will manage. Just don't drink too much.” she said, and the dark sorceress laughed sadly.

“Together with Ireanis, we decided to break the addiction and quit drinking.” Miss Daisy said quietly. She looked at both women. The grim sorceress was holding herself up quite well, but Ireanis's hands were shaking. The silver-haired girl was also smiling stupidly, as if she was hiding some stupid secret. She looked at the two women, patted Miss Daisy on the shoulder again, and said goodbye to the kids. As she left, she smiled, thinking about the two sorceresses. Everyone deserves love, right?

The sorceress and her apprentice

During the flight, they landed in a clearing located between Brightmoon and the Wastelands. It was already late and they needed to rest, and it had been a difficult day... Day, She guess, because there was no sun here. Anyway, she slept soundly and deeply. She was exhausted, but she still liked be here on Etheria. Even there, in the Wasteland, it was cool. It felt like the climax of a movie or book, when the characters reached the goal of their journey and suddenly it turned out that all the difficulties they had encountered so far were nothing compared to those that awaited them. So far she has been fighting robots, undead and Azlanti.. She met bandits, pirates and princesses. And she found great friends. And Eti.

The morning was strange. Most of the crew and the rest of the people she was used to traveling with were not on the ship, nor were Dilayla, Bina, Lady Cala, or even Dr. Quin. Apart from Mr. Ilemshaw, who had not moved from the ship for obvious reasons, only Wrongdak, Ireanis and Miss Daisy were here. The sad elf looked thoughtful, but at least she wasn't drinking alcohol today, only green tea, just like the silver-haired sorceress. It was probably a good thing, because she was worried about her, but... Then she remembered what the lizard had told her, about a dark sorceress called Shadow Weaver. Only she was from Etheria, and Miss Daisy came from Carurystal. And she came from... She wasn't sure where, but it couldn't be from Etheria... That had been hidden from the world for thousands of years and... And then there was Lady Cala. She was wonderful and brave... They both saved her and Eti. Eti even twice… It couldn't be that terrible woman, could it?

During breakfast she watched her, but tried not to be intrusive, which I guess she didn't quite succeed, because Miss Daisy smiled at her and asked.

“Has something happened, my dear?”

She shook her head hard. It definitely couldn't be her. Such evil people couldn't be nice and smile so warmly... Right?

Wrongdak looked sad, even dejected, so as soon as she ate, she walked up to him and hugged him tightly. Then she pulled away from him and asked.

“Is everything okay with your brother? And at your friend?”

He smiled weakly and replied.

“Yes, everything is fine. They're fine.” he suddenly beamed. “Oh they have a baby, they made them… Together!”

Alatar looked at them and said.

“This is how it's done. Nearly Always” and when Eti looked at him scowling, he added. “I mean, in most cases, and it's not that it's bad when it's different.”

“Don't explain yourself like that anymore, drakey. We all know you're guilty.” said Eti and started eating the kabanos.

Rosie hugged Wrongdak again. He didn't want to tell them what happened, maybe his brother was sick or he had a argument with his friend and now they had quiet days. For all she knew, it could be very stressful, especially when you were friends with both parties. She thought for a moment and looked for Emily. The droid seemed to be as depressed and sullen as the clone. She smiled at her, knelt down next to her and began to speak.

“You know, Emily, you have a lot of new responsibilities waiting for you now.” the three-legged robot turned towards her, staring at her with surprise, so she explained. “Your parents now have another child, so you're kind of an older sister now. You must behave well because you will be a role model for them”

Emily began to look around, surprised, questioningly at everyone. She seemed slightly scared.

"Don't be afraid, Uncle Wrongdak will help you." she said and the clone laughed.

Itel read the maps while the deaf girl talked to the Clone, then went to the navigation room to compare with the data provided by the scanners. Then she looked for Miss Daisy, who, surprisingly, instead of drinking with Ireanis, decided to weigh potions in the workshop. Yesterday's events were... Predictable. Eti was unstable… she knew it from the time she knew her. They were staring at her unnecessarily. No one who knew her do that. But there was something else there. They thought Eti was someone else. She guessed who it was. She had heard references to her more than once during Bina's conversations with Doctor Sidonius. Eti had heard about her too... Itel had never considered the existence of that person... Especially that they would come across her on this planet. She had no idea what to make of it. She knew Eti… She loved Eti, even if she didn't love her back. But who could she be? She saw the fear her friend instilled in the two on the landing pad and in that idiot Tung Lashor. She aroused anger among the guests of that inn, and to Wrongdak she was a friend... It would be difficult for anyone else to understand that one person could combine such opposing traits, but if someone grew up with Eti, they understood it all too well. They had a lot in common, and some crazy twist of fate brought her here. In the place where she went to fulfill her mission. They were supposed to find an artifact for the captain to gain access to Arsenal of the End of Time... But she wasn't sure if she still wanted to work for that person. There was a Starstone here. On Etheria, they had one of the most powerful and... she guess they didn't even know about it, or didn't understand what power was at their fingertips? They could gain importance equal to Absalom Station, being the second center of the galaxy. What other secrets did Etheria hide? They've already met one. They had She-Ra. She saw what she could do. She fought a warship and survived fire from a plasma cannon, a weapon that should have vaporized an entire city block... And yet she supposedly defeated Horde Prime, the one who was destroying civilizations... Like a Swarm... And she was walking around the fields and meadows like some bored girl from cities. She mourned one child killed by a mad pirate or queen, not fully understanding who Moonshadow really was, while the swarm murdered thousands of children, if not millions, every day. She wanted to tell her that others suffered much more. There are other places in the galaxy where she should use her power instead of signing autographs like some stupid celebrity... No, I don't need her help. The doctor said that there were many artifacts here, perhaps hiding equally great power, and she needed power to achieve her goal, to fulfill her last dream...

Only in this place there was a secret, a small nuance in everything she had experienced. She-Ra, Etheria, the other one... so similar to Eti. There was something in common between them and she had the impression that it all had to do with Eti and her hand... She knows that the Lord Admiral is far from here, and nothing draws him to the "cursed" zone. They had time... But did others have it? The Swarm was still there, they couldn't waste any time.

In the workshop, she stared for a moment at the grim sorceress, who seemed to be more gloomy and lost in thought, wondering whether it was worth starting a conversation with her at all. Apparently she was in Mystacor, from what she understood, it was some kind of magic school or something like that. She always told them that she had once been a respected teacher and might just have found a job there, and now she was worried about how she would tell Lady Cala that she was leaving her. Maybe she was even planning to look for an apartment or study the local curriculum, but Bina interrupted her and told her to look after them. Well, truth be told, Itel didn't care. She didn't like the witch, and Lady Cala was completely indifferent to her. After all, she was a wealthy aristocrat, the world always took care of people like her, while their gang had to take care of themselves. This time, however, she needed the help of the dark sorceress, so she smiled at her and said.

“You know, I was looking through the scans we made on his planet orbit. We have marked several places where there may be important remains of the Star People... The First ones, I mean, and we happen to be close to one of them. I thought we could go there since we're nearby anyway. It's only an hour or an hour and a half away.”

The sorceress looked at her with her emerald green eyes, which held the shadow of something dark. She said slowly, piercing her with her eyes.

“Bina, your guardian and captain, entrusted you to me to watch over you and make sure you don't get into trouble, which, I must mention, happens to you very often. I'm not going to disappoint her, so the answer to your question is No.”

She pursed her lips tightly. This woman dared to forbid them something! The stupid old hag, used to drinking tea from china cups with other useless women, didn't know even a tenth of what they knew about life during their idiotic afternoon teas.

“I didn't ask for your opinion, I'm just informing you about our plans. We are not well-mannered ladies or lords like Lady Cala, who will obediently follow orders because it is the right thing to do. You don't know what we've been through and what we're ready for!” she packed the maps and got up, intending to announce her decision. However, Miss Daisy stood in the aisle. The shadows around her deepened, it felt as if the dark sorceress had filled the entire room.

“I know a lot about young people like you. More than I wanted to know and much more than any decent person should . You want to forget about your pain and suffering, so you take on new and risky ventures. You are angry at the world for what has been done to you and you want to make everyone around you feel the same. But the road you are following leads to destruction...” she said in a sonorous, even thunderous voice.

“You're about to tell us that you were just like us and you know what it's like and that you just don't want us to make the same mistakes.” she asked, smiling mockingly. Miss Daisy laughed bitterly.

“I suffered a lot in my life, but no, I wasn't like you. I created people like you and I don't want to see that again. No one who hasn't experienced what you have experienced will understand how you feel, but don't continue your journey into this darkness. On this planet, you and your friends will finally be able to find happiness, even Eti.”

When she heard her friend's name, she growled and tried to push the woman away.

“If you don't want to help, at least don't bother, just go drink with Ireanis and let us do our thing.”

She felt shadows touch her face. They were cold and sticky, disgusting.

“The old me would have you writhing at my feet begging for mercy.” the entire room was enveloped in darkness, and she felt a twinge of fear, but she only smiled in response and summoned the moonblade. “But I've changed. Since I cannot stop you without resorting to violence, I have no choice but to accompany you on this journey. But know that whatever happens here, it will all be my fault as well as yours.” she stepped aside and let her leave so she could tell her friends.

Rosie looked around with a smile on her face. They were at the edge of a large forest, full of blue trees, their trunks covered with pink gems, and their leaves were various colors, although usually green or blue. Beyond was a plain covered with golden blades of grass and bushes with red leaves. She hadn't felt this so much in the CrimsonWastes, but now she saw that all the colors were more vibrant here, almost pastel. She had the impression that the air here was filled with power, it made her want to dance. She looked at her friends, who were looking around in confusion. Behind them stood Miss Daisy and Ireanis, who was carrying a backpack so large that it looked like she was going on a multi-day camping trip, not a couple of hours trip... Although they were probably supposed to explore some ruins, and if it was the same here as in that monastery, then it could have been very dangerous there... Good thing she took some ointment for the bites. Wrongdak was left to guard the ship with Emily, although she wasn't sure whether Mr. Ilemshaw alone would be enough to watch over it.

"Where are we now, anyway?" Eti asked, raising and lowering her goggles several times. She was wearing the mask and goggles again, after the events in the bone lair everyone had unanimously decided it would be better for her to hide who she was, and she didn't protest.

"Wait, I'll check on the tourist map." Alatar said, taking out a piece of paper.

"So you bought tourist maps there? What else? That scorpion too?" Eti asked, watching Lilka throw a stuffed scorpion to Toshi.

"No, Scorpia gave him to me. I hope we meet her soon. She was very nice." the redhead explained.

"But we bought a kebab for that while you were setting fire to the inns. It was good...Spicy." he looked pointedly at the cat-like girl, and then added. - Now we are on the border of the Whispering Forest and the Land of Scorpions, I think Centimeni. Our target is in the Valley of Shattered Armor.

When Dragonkin said this, Miss Daisy made a strange, sad face. She felt a surge of suspicion, so to ward him off, she asked.

"Is it still far?"

Alatar shook his head, then looked up from the map.

“No, quite close. Behind this hill with two monuments. Just get past that guy in the robe and we'll be there.” he pointed to a hill visible in the distance, on the top of which there were two obelisks. One was older and half the height of the other, newer one. A man in robes stood between them. He had long hair and a beard, and he held a staff in his hands. She felt Eti pat her on the back with a metal hand.

“Don't worry, he'll definitely like us.”

Everyone always thought that visiting this place would be painful, even traumatic, for him. Perhaps it should be. Here he was finally defeated and captured. Here his former happy life came to an end. But truth be told, he felt much worse in Mystacor, and sometimes even in Brightmoon. He had only one terrible connection with this place, which he didn't remember very well. Besides, compared to the eleven years of existence on the nightmarish Beast Island, these few hours of fighting, when the fate of their world was in the balance, seemed like nothing more than a bad dream. He remembered the hope that burned in his heart. Everyone was so sure of victory then, so radiant with glory... So young. Meanwhile, in Brightmoon, only bitter memories and a cold bed awaited him. Seeing the love in the eyes of Bow and Glimmer, Adora and Catra, and even Scorpia and Perfume, he was reminded of how much he had lost.

He looked at the obelisks, feeling a gentle warm wind blow across his face. The first of them was built here shortly after the battle, with the risk of falling into a trap, because these areas were under the control of the Horde. It had the names of all the Rebel members who died then, including him. He didn't ask for it to be removed, because he had essentially died to the world, and sometimes he felt as if he had never really come back to life. Not fully. The second obelisk was erected shortly after the war. It contains the names of both rebellion members and fallen Horde soldiers. After all, they too were victims. The Horde's losses were well documented thanks to Shadow Weaver's almost obsessive thoroughness. To anyone else it would be strange that someone so ruthless would record the death of each of his soldiers, but he knew the dark sorceress well from when she was his teacher and knew that a love of order was simply part of her nature. The casualty list on both sides was almost equal. There he saw the names of both Scorpia's mothers who fought for Hordak and her aunt, the rightful ruler of the Scorpions. Perfuma's predecessor was there, Prince Peekablue's husband, Mermista's grandfather... So many... But fortunately, it was all over. The Horde was gone, Shadow Weaver was dead. They could go on living.

Suddenly, his hearing, sensitive from all those years spent on Beast Island, picked up the sound of footsteps. He immediately tightened his grip on his staff and took a fighting stance, ready to fight for his life, but then he heard loud singing.

“In the Whispering Forest, are whispered, things, there is no life and fun, you won't come back from here alive.” the voice was low, a bit dull. He was soon joined by several others and sang in chorus.

“Okay Eti, what's next? I don't think we can end with one line.” the second voice had good diction, but the pronunciation was somewhat similar to that of lizards or other creatures with a lot of fangs. He relaxed, whoever the strangers were, they certainly weren't dangerous

“Well, it will go like this. Anyone who wanders here will soon be hide somewhere. Because there is no smarter than a forester named chester who wanted made your life harder... Okay, I don't know what to sing next” said the first voice again. “ Hey, Grandpa, maybe you have an idea for a sequel.

He turned around with a cheerful smile, which immediately froze on his face when he saw the group coming towards him. The one who sang was a person wearing a mask over his face and goggles, dressed with coat with a hood and a metal hand. There was also a silver-scaled winged lizard with many strange prosthetics like those sold by the people of Icarus, a red-haired girl with an ax on her shoulder, a green-haired saihe with tattoos of burning roses, and a white-haired girl wearing strange glasses. There was also some fluffy blue creature flying happily around. They gave the impression that they were not afraid to face the most terrible monsters that inhabited Etheria and maybe they could even beat them to the punch. Maybe they weren't so harmless after all.

“Hi... A very strange and somewhat disturbing and, as I hear, quite a joyful group of young people.”

The masked person stretched his tail and said.

“He called us disturbing. This is how you should show respect to the people you meet. An honorable and very kind individual with one foot in the grave, just waiting to his last breath in this miserable vale of tears. If you were... “ she didn't finish because the green-haired woman interrupted her.

“My name is Itel, and the one talking nonsense is Eti. The rest are Lilka Wagardotir, Alatar and Rosie Pearl...” she pointed to her companions one by one. “There are Miss Daisy and Ireanis hanging around somewhere, powerful sorceresses… This flying blue animal is Toshi, our companion. – She pointed to the furry creature that was now trying to bite his sorcerer's staff. “What we do here is entirely our business. We should probably ask what someone like you is doing here, an old man in a wasteland abandoned by devils and demons.”

He smiled because he liked this strange package. He liked such fighting young people, they reminded him of his daughter, Catra and the rest.

“I'm remembering old times. You are almost to the Valley of Shattered Armor. Here, many years ago, the rebellion suffered its greatest defeat. Apart from the loss of the queen..." he said and shook his head to clear away the sudden surge of sadness. “But you're not from here, are you?

The masked girl nodded.”

“You could say so... Or maybe not... It depends on who is asking.

He smiled broadly at her.

“I'm Mikach.” he said and when he saw no reaction, he added. “So you're not from here after all.”

The white-haired woman smiled at him and asked in sign language, and some device translated what she said.

“We're looking for various old things here for research. Because we are interns working for Kemanis University. I can show you the certificate.” she took out a piece of paper that looked correct, although he couldn't confirm its authenticity because he had never heard of it. However, he saw that Saihe looked at the girl called Rossie in surprise. Well, if they wanted to trick him, he would play that game with them. Masked... Eti stepped forward and said in an official tone.

“So, Grandpa, have you seen any ruins here?”

He smiled, shooed Toshi away from his staff so it wouldn't accidentally explode in his teeth, and motioned for them to follow him. The journey took less than fifteen minutes. He also heard, thanks to his sensitive hearing, that two more people were following them. One of them was clumsy and walked as if she was about to fall over, but the other ones were much more attentive. They sounded strangely familiar. Finally they stood over the rocky edge and the expanse of the valley came into view. It was wide and deep. This was the easiest place for the Horde to encircle the Rebel forces, so they decided to set a trap for Hordak's troops here, but instead they fell into a trap set by the Shadow Weaver. She unleashed a terrible spell called the Storm of Bane, which murdered both Rebels and Horde soldiers. She then got rid of many of her rivals, thanks to which she became Hordak's undisputed right-hand man. The effects of the spell were still clearly visible. Everywhere the eye could see, the land of the valley was scorched with fire and acid. Tank wrecks stood between melted boulders. There used to be soldiers' remains here, but they buried them all after the war. Rosie watched it all with her mouth open, but the others seemed unfazed. They probably came from a planet conquered by Horde Prime, where worse things happened.

“Look not bad, how are the readings going, Alatar.

“It's almost directly below us.” said the lizard and spread its wings and then jumped down.

“Be cautious.” said itel and turned on the engines next to her shoes and flew downstairs.

“Bye, Grandpa.” said Lilka, who lowered herself down the rope attached to the hook. Rosie waved at him and jumped down, falling gently, while Eti ran down the vertical wall.

“But there are stairs there...” he said quietly to himself.

And then he heard a voice he hadn't heard in five years and thought he would never hear again. He felt fury rising in his chest. Without even listening to the words she spoke to him, he turned around and cast a devastating battle spell while raising his magical shield. Shadow Weaver stood there, clad in black, maskless. She deflected the spell, though she recoiled under the pressure of the force. She turned to him again

“Listen to me! Angela….”

“HOW DARE YOU SAY HER NAME!” He roared and hit her with another devastating spell. She blocked them again, but the spell was so strong that her knees buckled beneath her. He was about to cast another spell on her, which this time would wipe out the wicked sorceress from the face of Etheria once and for all. Then she heard a voice casting a spell, and there was a loud bang behind him, and then a stone hand grabbed him tightly, and another hand that grew from his side began to pat his head.

Shadow Weaver looked to the side in surprise. A black Saihe woman with Silver hair stood there, jumping and clapping happily.

“I threw my catching hand and I didn't even faint! I love this planet.”

“I'm impressed Ireanis... Only this other hand...” said the dark sorceress.

“And that's just a side effect.” said Ireanis.

“Finish what you started... It will be an extremely stupid silly death.” he said and laughed bitterly, but he felt tears welling up in his eyes. He won't see his daughter's wedding, they will search for his body, but Shadow Weaver will probably make sure that Glimmer will never know his fate. But instead of killing him, the dark sorceress sighed and spoke slowly.

“Focus and listen to me, instead of letting your anger distract you... Damn, I'm again talking like always.” she rubbed her scarred face. “What I'm trying to tell you is that your wife, Queen Angela, is alive.”

For a moment, he felt inexpressible joy rising in his heart, but he immediately extinguished it.

“You lie as always.” he said firmly. Shadow Weaver closed her yellow eyes.

“I know you have no reason to believe me, but Ireanis saw her too.” she looked at the other woman, who looked surprised and protested.

“But I don't know any Angela”

“Describe Captain Moonshadow.” the dark sorceress asked her companion, who furrowed her silver eyebrows.

“Well, she's tall, she wears a mask, she has wings, only cybernetically aided, and her eyes are this strange, pinkish-purple color... But what does that matter... Oh! This was your girl, whose heart you had been fighting for years, and she couldn't stand it, so she faked her own...” She didn't finish because Shadow Weaver screamed at her.

“IREANIS! What the fuck are you talking about? I've never been in love with anyone from Etheria. Stop making such ridiculous theories!”

“Okay, okay.” said the silver-haired woman, and the dark sorceress turned to him.

“Ireanis and I have quit drinking since yesterday... could you, my dear, free Mikach?

He felt the stone hands disappear and he stood looking at his former teacher, completely unsure of what he should do now. The essence he had acquired during such a long stay in one of the most terrible places on Etheria told him that he should attack, regardless of what Shadow Weaver said, if he attacked immediately, he would have a chance to kill her before she could react. But if there was even the slightest chance that Angela was alive...

“But how...” he asked after a while. The Dark Sorcerer shook her head and looked at him with a sadness in her eyes that almost seemed sincere.

“I don't know much. She changed a lot. His name is now Captain Moonshadow, and he is the captain of a pirate ship. It strikes terror in the hearts of star travelers.”

He shook his head in disbelief.

“It is impossible. Not my Angela!” he said, feeling his anger returning.

“Suffering can change anyone. Shadow Weaver replied.” I found out that she was a prisoner of the Azlanti Star Empire, it's a terrible fate…” he heard sadness and pain in her voice again. From a woman who did not hesitate to torment children and murder allies... Another lie. Another manipulation.

“Star Empire? What are you talking about?!” He asked agitatedly.

“You can ask those kids over there, they don't know my identity, but we've been traveling together for a while. They know Captain Moonshadow and if you ask them, they'll tell you all about it.”

Then they heard an explosion and an explosion shook the earth.

“We're talking about a dragon...” Ireanis said, and Shadow Weaver was enveloped in shadows and disappeared.

Heart Gift

Of all the people she planned to visit, it was meeting Mikah that she feared the most. That's why she left it until the end. She suspected she would delay it off as long as possible if she could. However, by a strange twist of fate, she found him in the place of her greatest triumph. And, in a some sense, also greatest failure. The spell she cast here was powerful, even for the inhabitants of the galaxy, although in fact it was very simple, even primitive. Now, with the knowledge she had gained over the five years of learning about the achievements of the Mystics the Galaxy, she would have made them much more effective, or more destructive, and she had not study modern war magic. The cost of casting this spell was great. Her soul was riddled with holes. Power had been leaking from her constantly since the ritual, but now she had to recharge herself with Black Opal every few hours, dooming herself to constantly be near the runestone, as hostage to her own power. But then she also lost what was left of her soul when she banished Mikah to Beast Island. Apart from Adora and Catra, and maybe Scorpia, he was the person she hurt the most, at least out of the ones she knew personally. And now, yes, unexpectedly, she had to face her sin.

She survived, although for a moment she considered letting her former student take out his anger on her, but it wouldn't change anything, or anything would be for the worse. She hasn't won yet, but she hasn't lost either. However, she had to retreat because her second mission, which Bina placed on her shoulders, was calling her. She entered the dark, cold space between the stars and found herself below, shrouded in dust.

“What's the hell you've done?” she shouted and coughed, choking. Bin's wards, and now her wards, peered out from behind the rock and, with the exception of Rosie and, oddly enough, Eti, stared at her with a mixture of amazement and horror. Oh yeah, she forgot to turn on the holographic mask. She reached for the back of her neck while repeating the question. Rosie answered her

“Sorry, they have earplugs in their ears, I didn't need them, because you know. We... we probably blew up a passage or something.” the deaf girl blushed, and at the same time the others started taking off their earplugs. Itel, of course, crossed her arms over her chest, giving her a defiant look.

“Where did you get the explosives and where did you learn to use them?” she said, but immediately realized that it was completely rhetorical. Eti, however, took a sheet of paper from her coat and handed it to her, and then said.

“We had loads on the ship, but we used them all here.” she said, not even hiding the fact that she was lying. “And here are my permissions.”

She looked at the paper. It was handwritten: "Absolutely Perfect, Awesome and Unique Eti is great at blowing things up and should do it every chance she gets." She didn't even know how to comment on it.

Ireanis appeared nearby using dimension gates, a spell quite popular in the galaxy, and Mikah landed here using a spell that slowed down his fall. He looked at her with surprise. She realized that for the first time in decades, he saw his teacher's face untainted by dark magic. She smiled slightly and touched the face, which shimmered. Then her former student turned to her charges and paled as he realized they were with her. He gave her a look of disbelief. She shrugged. There are still a few surprises waiting for him.

Eti approached him and asked.

“Do these tanks belong to someone, or are they just sitting here?” she asked her former king-consort, who frowned.

“They used to belong to the Horde, but were abandoned there many years during a great battle.” he explained, and Eti clapped happily.

“So if we get it, no one will blame us. Awesome!” she exclaimed.

Mikach blinked several times and asked.

“Why do you need a tank?

Eti tilted his head to the side and said.

“To drive it and be even scarier than I am, that's absolutely obvious.”

He stared at the girl for a moment, wondering what she meant. He wasn't ready to meet these kids. no one on Etheria wasn't.

“The probability of being attacked by a cat girl in a tank is small, but never zero. “ Dragonkin muttered, and then looked at the rubble. “There was only a false wall there, it was probably movable. Someone must have been search here. I don't know if we'll find anything valuable here, this place was probably robbed of everything valuable a long time ago.” he said sadly. Eti snorted

“You just don't feel like kicking and you're looking for an excuse, drakey.” she said, and Itel added.

“It wouldn't hurt to check... Does grandpa know anything about this place, or will he be as useless as our fairy ladies?”

Mikach almost choked, not out of outrage. Even when she was a teacher in Mystacor no one would dare call her useless, and said.

“It was the border of scorpion country. It would be difficult to know the truth now...”

“Maybe when Mrs. Scorpia comes back with Mrs. Perfuma, we will ask them?” Lilka asked.

“Do you know Princess Scorpia and Perfuma?” Mikach asked, surprised.

Yeah, we met Sting and Vegie on Icarus . There was also a Blondie who grows and turns into a BLONDE, but Captain Wingy attacked her and wanted to kill her along with half the town. I don't know what happened to her, but it's a real shame because they were both so cool.” Eti explained to him. It took him a long time to decipher the words “Captain Wingy?” asked the former king-consort. His face showed both hope and fear. Rosie nodded and said.

“That's how Eti calls Captain Moonshadow. She's the kind of pirate who's been with us since we left Saltmarsh, that dusty planet, whatever. She's a bit scary and if you serve the Azlanti she'll kill you cruelly, but she's not that bad. She helped us in this monastery and was quite nice to us. She said I reminded her of her daughter, whom she lost a long time ago and she had a husband, but she also lost him.”

Pain appeared in Mikah's eyes. Barely holding back his tears, he asked.

“And… how that Moonshadow looked like.” when he saw Itel's suspicious look, he added.” I've never seen a space pirate and I'm curious what she looks like.” he explained, smiling weakly. Rosie nodded in understanding, though the others seemed unconvinced , and began to explain to him.

“She is very tall and has pink-purple hair and these strange translucent wings, but they were probably damaged and now she has to cybernetically support them. She also lost her right arm and has a cybernetic limb instead. And he wears a mask made of this crystal, although I'm not sure if he's hiding some terrible scars under it or if he just thinks it looks cool. And she's a Solarian like Itel, only she summons a flare instead of a blade.” she explained, and Itel bit her lip in irritation. Mikah looked shocked and terrified, which didn't go unnoticed by the green-haired Elf, who began to look at him with even greater distrust.

“And what happened to her? Why did she fight Adora?” Rosie asked, clearly confused.

“I'm not sure, Adora called her Angela and Queen, but I don't know why. Moonshadow got mad at her and they started fighting... She wanted to take her to the ship to the Gardens of the Long Death because she claimed that Adora had taken her sword, but she claimed that it was broken. Adora isn't one to lie like that, but she wanted to imprison her anyway... These gardens... I don't know what they are, but they're scary. There he locks up the captured Azlanti officers and this terrifies them.”

Mikah stepped back and wiped his forehead. He tried to sort out what he had learned, but it wasn't easy... She knew something about it herself. Well, his peaceful days on Etheria are over. Though considering he was here and not in Brightmoon , the old demons were still chasing him... Even the ones he thought had abandoned him forever.

“Are you okay?’ Rosie asked with concern in her voice and approached Mikah . Eti stood next to him and looked at him.

"I'm fine..." the former king-consort shook his head. And he smiled friendly, trying to hide how much their story shocked him.” Your story just seemed so scary and all. These pirates and Azlanti... You don't see such things here.” he explained , and Rosie nodded understandingly, but Itel quietly snorted with contempt and then turned to everyone.

“Maybe instead of talking about bullshit, we should start digging up these ruins? And you, Grandpasince you've already listened to an interesting story, maybe you'll do some hermit things and go away.”

“No... I'll help you... I know a little about the remains of the First Ones.” her former student replied and she added.

“Ireanis and I will also help.”

Itel clenched her jaw angrily, but she didn't say anything and just got to work.

She was ashamed to admit that her physical condition left much to be desired. Due to the fact that she was an elf , or Saihe as they called they here , she was biologically at least ten years younger than Mikah, but he worked at least twice as efficiently. What a blow to her perfectionist soul . Even Ireanis was more useful because she used magic to lift stones. She also looked at Mikah with interest, but it didn't refer to their earlier conversation. As she stood aside to stretch her back a bit, Itel came up to her and spoke sharply in a low voice.

“Watch out for this guy, you're supposed to keep an eye on him. I don't like him even more than you do. I suspect it's some Azlanti corsair who's been hiding out for the last five years.”

She blinked twice at the girl's theory.

“And on what basis did you draw this conclusion?” she asked, hiding her amusement. The Solarian rolled her eyes as if she had to explain something obvious and began to explain.

“Did you see how scared he looked when that deaf girl talked about Captain Moonshadow? He's afraid of her! And besides, he doesn't talk like a forest grandfather. You are an elf and you certainly won't side with such a speciesist

“I'll keep an eye on him, but this 'Deaf Girl's” name is Rosie.” she said, staring at the Elf, who clenched her fists angrily

“What do you mean?” she growled

“Rejection is painful, I have seen with my own eyes what things those affected by it can do.”

Itel looked at her feet and asked.

“Will it ever stop hurting?”

“ I'm not an expert in this type of matters, but I can tell you one thing. The pain will ease as you allow this wound to heal.”

Itel smiled sourly

W”as this the advice you gave to Lady Cala?

“Lady Cala is not someone who needs advice on this type of thing.”

The elf waved her hand and went back to work.

At the end of the work, when the passage to the interior of the ruins was almost visible, she and Mikah took a break, taking advantage of the opportunity that her charges were busy discussing what they should do. they moved aside so that they would not be heard.

“What does it mean? What happened to Angela ? Why did she want to kill Adora ? Is this your doing?” asked her former student, barely containing his outburst of fury

She sighed. It shouldn't surprise her that no one trusts her and that everyone blames her for their misfortunes. She tried very hard to make it happen. Still, against her better judgment, it hurt her. Now I know how you felt, Catra, when everyone, except Adora of course, blamed you.

“I already told you that I don't know much, and don't attribute other people's faults to me, I have more than enough of my own sins.” she said slowly and Mikah looked at her judgmentally and said.

“Indeed, more than enough.”

She ignored the insult and continued explaining.

“It seems to me that she has lost most of her memory, and what is left is distorted in some way. Anyway, she didn't recognize me or Eti...”

“Why would she recognize her?” Mikach interrupted her. – She's not from Etheri, how could she know her?

She smiled and said.

“You'll understand as soon as you see her. Just don't stare at her. Then he gets angry.”

“What do you mean by Gets angry?” he asked, looking at her suspiciously.

“She burned down the Bone Haven yesterday because some customers were staring at her. She can be unpredictable, but she's a good, hurt girl.” she explained to her former student, who smiled crookedly and said in an accusatory tone...

“Yes, just like Catra.”

It was downright painful to be around this vile woman and pretend they didn't know each other, smiling and being gently and polite. Only with the greatest effort of will did he manage to control his fury. He only did it for Angela's sake. If there was even the slightest chance that he could get her back, that they would be together again, he was willing to make almost any sacrifice.

It didn't help that she was now back to the face she had when she was still a Light Spinner. The sight of his former teacher, who was closer to him than his birth mother, whom he lost in childhood, unnerved him. He wasn't sure if it was out of vanity or shame that she chose to hide her true nature, but it made him despise her even more. She seemed more composed and nicer than he remembered her, but he knew very well that she could be very polite, even charming, when it was in her best interest. Glimmer learned this very well, too.

He couldn't understand what kind of madman had allowed her to take care of kids again. Oddly enough, these young people didn't seem intimidated by the dark sorceress. In fact, with the exception of that deaf girl, Rosie, they didn't hold her in high esteem, and this Saihe named Itel treated her with downright contempt. This didn't match the image of Shadow Weaver that Catra, Adora, and Scorpia painted before him. And the one he remembered: "It 's all a game, a pretense intended to deceive others. Manipulate them into doing what she wanted them to do. I won't be fooled again."

Finally, they managed to clear the passage and saw a wide corridor made of blue crystal. A shiver ran through him.

“I don't know if you should explore these ruins. The other were very dangerous and had dark motives.” he warned his young companions.

“Wow, they were almost like me. Almost, because there is no creature more dangerous than me, although on this planet they don't know it yet. But its only matter of time.” Eti said, but Rosie frowned and asked.

“But we met Adora . She was very nice.” she looked at him expectantly. He sighed and explained.

“Adora was raised in the Fright Zone and knows nothing about her people, we all know very little about the First Ones, apart from the fact that their technology was extremely advanced... There were only three people who might have known anything more about them, but two of them they are dead, and the last one is quite difficult to communicate with. And that's good, maybe it's better if everything they left behind is forgotten.”

Rosie thought for a moment and said.

“The First ones department on Kemanis University and the entire Anacite species would disagree with you.”

He blinked in surprise and asked

“So you know about the First Ones?”

The girl nodded and wanted to say something, but Itel interrupted her.

“Don't waste your time on pointless chats. Let's go!”

The corridor was wide, but quite low, so Shadow Weaver and Alatar had to hunch over. They could only walk comfortably in pairs. Eti and Rosie led the way, followed by Itel and Lilka, then Ireanis and Alatar, and he had to go last with Shadow Weaver. He had the impression that he, Itel, and Alatar were equally dissatisfied with their couple. It was dim here, as the walls emanated with a faint glow. They were covered with numerous inscriptions in the language of the First Ones, which the red-haired girl meticulously wrote down. It was amazingly clean here. He heard from Adora that her people's structures were capable of self-cleaning and self-repairing . It must have been similar here, which meant that the building was functioning. This means that the defense systems were most likely also active. They had to be careful.

Walking side by side next to Shadow Weaver was not a pleasant experience. He tried to ignore her, but it was hard, even if she didn't speak to him or look his way. He sensed its dark power even without using his magical senses. He could actually feel the bittersweet taste of darkness on his tongue, flowing from the dark sorceress's soul. Perhaps it was just the power of suggestion... Or maybe it was because he was forced to use dark magic while he was chipped . He had almost forgotten about it, but he was aware that the taint of the dark art could never be eradicated, even if one was forced to use it. This was the epitome of Horde Prime's perfidy . Now perhaps there was simply an affinity between them, as perhaps among all who had been tainted by a dark power. The thought of having anything to do with someone so vile made him feel sick.

“In front of us is a large room with a closed door.” Eti exclaimed.

Sure enough, they finally found themselves in a huge chamber with a tall, pulsating pillar in the center. There were many more inscriptions, they covered the entire walls with a dense web. There was also a stained glass window, like all the art of the First Ones, beautiful in its simplicity. It depicted two women. One of them was a warrior whom he recognized as She-Ra, probably Mara, and the other was a tall woman in robes. He guessed who she was. Light Hope. They touched each other with their fingertips , from which light flowed, which twisted in a spiral and finally merged, transforming into another figure, a petite girl emanating her own glow.

“This one is probably a BLONDE, but different one and the other one is probably her girlfriend. And the third one is probably their child or something.” Eti said, and Rosie added, smiling with delight.

“I think they look very romantic, don't you think?”

Itel scowled at her and said.

“We didn't come here to see beautiful views. Grandpa, do you know what this is about?”

He thought for a moment about what answer he should give them and finally said it.

“You're right Eti, this is the previous She-Ra. Her name was Mara and she was a great heroine. The other one is Light Hope. She was the artificial intelligence who oversaw the planetary facility.”

Rosie tilted her head to the side and stated.

“If they loved each other, it's offensive to call her artificial intelligence. It should be called digital consciousness... I wonder how they did it, you know, child? I've read about similar couples and...” she didn't finish because itel silenced her with a wave of her hand.

“Where can I find this Light Hope ? I have to talk to her!” Saihe will shout . He shook his head sadly

“Unfortunately... or fortunately, this is no longer possible.”

The elf wanted to lash out him, but Eti said yes.

“Maybe there's something cool inside. Lilka, Alatar, take out the… archaeological tools and I will listen to what is on the other side.” she was near them in one bound and took out her stethoscope. During this time, Alatar will take out a pickaxe from his backpack and Lilka will take out a blowtorch.

“What are you going to do about it?” he shouted, but Eti signaled him to be quiet and uncovered her face. He inhaled sharply, but refrained from exclaiming astonishment. The girl who was kneeling by the door looked like Catra... No... They were different from each other. She had sharper facial features and straight, dark red hair, and her eyes were gold with many blue spots. They were like... sisters.

He looked away, remembering Shadow Weaver's warning. Now he understood the dark sorceress's comment about Angela not recognizing Eti. His wife had never faced Catra, but she knew what she looked like. Neither Eti nor Shadow Weaver made her remember anything. She only recognized Adora ... Why?

And then Rosie touched the pillar and bright lights flashed.

Rosie was glad that they were able to find new friends even in such a remote place, especially after the unfortunate events in the desert. Mikah was like one of those great sages of the forest who seek out heroes before a great mission and share enigmatic advice with him. Only Mikch wasn't enough... crazy and inscrutable. In fact, he seemed like some mystical fallen order knight hiding in exile. Only the people of Etheria didn't look like they would banish others, maybe this Tung Lashor looked like one, but he wasn't from Etheria, and he was a fool.

Itel didn't trust Mikah , but she didn't trust anyone. But he looked wise, and as she looked at him, she hoped he might be able to explain to her what was happening to her. Rosie had felt a bit like she had been in a dream since she entered those dungeons. As she looked at the writings on the walls, they seemed familiar. As if she had seen them before but had no idea what they meant. They were different from the ones she remembered, as if they were two different, yet related languages. She had the impression that their meaning was inaccessible to her, as if the very attempt to understand them was beyond her reach, something forbidden by nature itself.

And then there was the buzzing. She could sense loud sounds because they made the air vibrate, but there was something else. It existed in her head. It was almost like music, or at least as she imagined it. It was surprisingly pleasant, and it gladdened her heart. But somehow it lulled her to sleep, made her feel almost drugged. This place also seemed familiar, as if she had read and seen about them in books or other sources before. She felt as if she had arrived at her grandparents' house, which her parents had told her about.

And then she stood at the pillar. As she approached the pillar, the buzzing became stronger, Itel was curious about this Light Hope , because she seemed to want to learn more about Etheri from her, but she was more interested in the third figure. She was curious who she was, even Mikah didn't seem to recognize her. Driven by a sudden impulse, she touched a fragment of a painting depicting a child. And then the lights flashed.

“What have you did, you stupid! - Itel jumped at her with fury on her face.

“I don't know... I just touched this pillar... I didn't want to do anything.” she said to the elf, asking her for forgiveness with her eyes, but she looked as if she wanted to scream or maybe even hit her, but Eti silenced her with her eyes. And then a blue, translucent figure appeared among them. She looked like a girl about her age, with short hair tied in a bun. She wore formal, if rather old-fashioned, attire, looking like a combination of a scientist's uniform and priest's robes. She smiled at them in a friendly manner, with shy curiosity.

“Hello, how can I serve?” she asked.

“GHOST!” Ireanis shouted. “Away, you impure force!” she cast a spell that looked like shimmering silver dust. The translucent person laughed and said.

“Ghosts don’t exist and even if there were, they wouldn't be me. I am Heart Gift, a Planetary Archive, I use the pronouns she, her. I am... I AM.” she said, looking at her hand in amazement. Suddenly she started disappearing and reappearing in different places, shouting joyfully, "I am!" She finally appeared in the center of the room in a summer dress with longer flowing hair.

“I am! Isn't it wonderful!” She whirled happily. Rosie smiled at her friendly and said.

“Hello Heart Gift . It's good that you enjoy your existence. I'm Rosie Pearl and these are my friends. – she pointed to the others who introduced themselves, except for Itel, who crossed her arms over her chest, looking at their guest, or rather host, with a fierce expression. Miss Daisy and Mikah eyed Heart Gift as if she were a dangerous beast, but quietly introduced themselves to her.

“Hello. You are in one of my many terminals. My duty was to archive the data collected by Light Hope and Mara. Actually, we talked a lot. They told me about many things. They adventures and research….”

Rosie looked at the image on the pillar and beamed.

“You are that child. Mara and Light Hope are your moms!” she said happily, and Heart Gift teleported to her.

“My moms?” she asked in surprise, thought and then clapped happily. “Yes! They are my mothers.” Miniature fireworks began to go off around Heart Gift . “It's so wonderful! I never thought of them that way, but it must be true. Do you think they know about it? Oh, of course they know that, I'm so silly sometimes. They simply didn't tell me about it because they waited for me to figure it out on my own. Until I'm mature enough to understand it! I need to tell them about this." She looked around and teleported around the room again, this time calling out " Light Hope!" She finally stopped and frowned. “She can't hear me... She probably went to sleep... I used to sleep for a long time, but I just woke up recently. I haven't seen Mara for a long time either... She must be on some distant journey... But she'll be back soon. And then the three of us will celebrate Mother's and Children's Day together. This will be so wonderful!” Heart Gift turned into three rainbow streaks of light. Dancing in a spiral. No one shared her joy. Everyone watched her with sadness and confusion. She could see pain in Mikah's eyes. At first she didn't understand what they were worrying about, until she remembered that Bina was looking for Mara's Tomb, and the old man was talking about Light Hope in the past tense, as if she... Oh no... Now tears came to Rosie's eyes. She was glad that her eyes weren't visible through her glasses, but even so, when Heart Gift turned away from her, she discreetly rubbed her eyes. She felt so much sadness, but she didn't have the courage to tell Heart Gift the truth. She felt ashamed about it. The digital consciousness stopped and looked at her, then clutched her face as if she had just remembered something.

“Oh my matrix, I think I completely forgot about you. What a host I am!” she laughed shyly and asked. “How can I help you? Do you have any questions for me? I'm sure I can answer them. I have access to all the knowledge stored in my archive, which means I practically know what my Mother knew... Light Hope.”

“What is Etheria's greatest treasure?” Itel asked suddenly, although Miss Daisy glared at her. Heart Gift appeared right in front of the Elf and said.

“It's the Heart of Etheria, of course. One of the greatest projects carried out by the First Ones, right next to the Will of Unity, Blood of Xadia and Shroud Projects.” she explained. “Although I have only sketchy information about the others.

“So tell me about it, Heart...” Itel asked, not paying attention to Mikah, who was telling her to be silent.

“Oh, I can tell you about it…” she started rubbing the dirt under her embarrassment. “I'd just have to ask for permission my mom Light Hope. I'll look for her and...”

“There is no need.” Miss Daisy said, ignoring the angry look the Solarian woman gave her. “We have to go back now. It was very nice to meet you, Heart Gift. “The woman smiled at the digital consciousness. Heart Gift looked at them with sudden fear.”

“But... Will you visit me again? I've been lonely for a very long time and I don't want that to happen again... Please.”

Miss Daisy looked at Heart Gift as if she was wondering about something, and then asked.

“Could you show us a map of your terminals?”

Heart Gift nodded and waved her hand, and a map of Etheri appeared with terminals marked on it. When Alatar touched it, it turned out to be fully interactive and Dragonkin could see all the points. At this time, Heart Gift appeared in front of Eti.

“You know, I think I saw someone like you recently.”

“You must have Imagined it. There is no one like me.”

She learned some new things, and they weren't exactly uplifting things. She didn't know Light Hope, and that was good, because everything would have ended much worse for everyone, literally everyone. Now it turned out that she and Mara had a child, that AI the Heart Gift, there was no doubt about it... Only Etheria was transformed to the core into one great experiment, a device on a planetary scale. It is unknown what other secrets of her home world the Light Hope child had access to. She seemed to be more spontaneous than her mother, more emotional, at least as far as she could tell from the few words Adora had said that she had managed to overhear. What powers could this creature have? Even if she didn't have access to all of Light Hope's capabilities, as a planetary archive it had access to knowledge that in the hands of someone nefarious could lead to disaster, and her true ward was most likely the nefarious person on the planet.

Xadia was also mentioned. She first heard it from the mouth of Aaravos , a mysterious sorcerer she met in the mirror, the same one Castaspella found. She had already sensed the darkness emanating from him, and that was why she didn't trust him. She refused to perform a ritual that would keep them in constant contact, but that didn't stop her from listening to him and becoming interested in the ritual that turned her into the creature that ruined the lives of so many. Now she wondered if her own darkness had surpassed that of this creature. Once, after she had settled on Carurystal, she tried to find out what species the creature belonged to, but it was completely unknown in the Galaxy. Aaravos seemed to be connected to the First Ones, and she was now almost certain that he was a servant of the Creeping Chaos

Once they were outside, her charges, it was disturbing how quickly she started calling them that in her mind, they started climbing the mountain, though Itel was still furious with her, she stopped to talk to Mikah again. As soon as the young crew members were far enough away, her former apprentice growled at her.

"You missed tormenting Catra so much that you had to find another victim?!"

I wonder what you would say if you saw Lady Cala? she thought and said.

"I never hurt Eti, I even saved her life twice, although I know she suffered a lot. However, I am not responsible for this..."

“Who is she anyway?! Why is she so like her?” exclaimed the former king-consort. He was still furious, he probably didn't believe her. He had the right to do so.

“I know it was created almost six years ago by a man named Jantar on a Planet called Atrax. He also created Catra twenty-three years ago. There's much more I can't tell you. “she explained, looking her former student straight in the eyes. Mikah looked surprised, but not as surprised as she might have expected.

“Catra seems to be starting to get suspicious. Lately she keeps checking old cadet documents…. Did you know about it? he looked at her sharply. She shook her head.

“I never suspected anything. I have always been too overconfident to question my own judgments…”

He nodded and said.

“You've always been arrogant, even as a Light Spinner ... What exactly do you want from me, apart from telling me about the tragedy that happened to my wife and insulting all those you hurt just by being alive?” Mikah's voice was as sharp as Veska's executioner's axe

“First of all, I want to meet with you and some of my other allies during the Victory Day celebrations to discuss some pressing issues.” she sighed and continued. “The galaxy is vast and full of threats that are reaching out to Etheria in their clutches. One of them is the Azlanti Star Empire. The same one that hurt Angela so much that she became Captain Moonshadow. It is a powerful empire that believes in the supremacy of the human species, your species. Everyone else, called Inhumans, are second-class citizens at best, only if they put up resistance, of course. If the Azlanti came here, Scorpia, Catra, all my people, would be deprived of most of their rights, and your daughter, as a hideous half-breed, will be lucky to spare alive. And Azlanti is nearby. That's why I'm asking you to talk discreetly with my other allies and keep the knowledge that I live for youself, at least for a few days”- she explained, trying to sound as sincere as possible.

Mikah thought for a moment, then laughed with heartbreaking bitterness.

“You know, everything that happened to my wife should happen to you. Angela… someone like you can't understand what a wonderful person she was. She personified nobility, integrity and goodness. Do you know that before she sacrificed herself, she told Adora that she was a coward? But the biggest coward has always been you. You did everything just to survive. Sacrifice everyone and everything.” as he spoke, contempt burned in his eyes. She did not protest against the former student's accusations, because he was right. “I will do what you ask me, but only because today I also turned out to be a coward, because I did not have the courage to say Hear Gift about her mothers death.”

Tomb

“My name is Tung Lashor, I am not afraid of you, Meow-ru . No more. Whip!” came from the side of the Datapad that Tung Lasshor was holding and showing his subordinates a cartoon featuring the character he was based on. In her opinion, the series was quite stupid and belated propaganda, which was published after the end of the Cold War between Veskarium and the Pact Worlds. The main villains were vampiric Pahtra who laughed while making "Meow meow meow meow" and the dim-witted Veskarian general Gerok , who, for some inexplicable reason, commanded mostly the Skittermaders. There were, of course, nice, if terribly inept, Pahtra villagers even among the Thunder Reptiles was one Vesk, a technomancer named Egrux. Apparently the original version takes place on the lost Golarion and instead of Skittermanders there were Goblins, but she hasn't seen a single part of the Original Series. However, the new series was liked by all Aspis gang members, who cheered when Tung Lashor appeared on the screen and hissed when they saw Meow-ru . Surprisingly, the fact that he based himself on a character from the series only made his subordinates respect him even more. It was as cute as it was stupid. Huntara, sitting next to her, looked at her old enemy with emptiness in her eyes. Some truths are better left unknowing...

They were driving Crusher into the desert with Tung Lashor and his most devoted subordinates. What disturbed her companion more than her former rival's presence was that he had begun to treat her with the typical for office workers passive aggression, instead of the hostility she was accustomed to. Well, the wide universe had its dark and annoying sides.

The tomb was located among rocky hills. They were thickly covered with thorn bushes with thorns as sharp as steel razors. At first they tried to make their way on board the Crusher, but she decided there was too much risk of puncturing the tires, so they continued to make their way on foot. They did this surprisingly well, but the bigger problem was the iron-beaked, three-eyed birds and the three-headed snakes that fed on them. The latter reportedly grew up to ten meters in length. When they had around two meters, they left the dense bush and hunted almost everything. Fortunately, they were not poisonous and only bit one of Tung's subordinates. It was fortunate that her wards weren't here, or the Etherians would have learned a new word, "uncontrolled bushfires."

When they reached the site where the tomb was supposed to be, they set up camp. Then Tung arranged to watch the series together with his companions, and she and Huntara drank Ashrak , a green, slightly sour drink made from the leaves of a bacterivorous shrub growing in the caves of Atrax . It was refreshing and stimulating at the same time. She was going to sell it on Victory Day. She'll make some money out of it, and above all, they'll have a great cover. She bought it on Saltmarsh for this very purpose, although she did not expect that she would sell it on Etheria, but who could have guessed that it would not be a place cursed by devils and demons, a place of evil. She even had to admit that you liked the planet, even the damn wasteland. Maybe if the locals like this drink, then maybe they will settle here with their kids and open Ashrak drinking houses? It won't be difficult to bring it here since she already knows how to get here. She will then be a pioneer, the first businesswoman from outside the empire who will open her own business here.

In the evening, she invited Huntara into her sleeping bag. She wasn't exactly her type, but she had to admit she was experienced. They spent some nice moments together, more than a few. Tung's Lashor’s subordinates didn't notice anything. She suspected they wouldn't even notice that someone was trying to steal them. They got up early before everyone else, it turned out that the leader of the Aspis liked to sleep in. Well, you can see that his corporate culture has disappeared in this aspect. They took their time and prepared breakfast, very relaxed.

“These kids... they're not yours.” Huntara asked and grimaced, understanding what she said and explained. “I know you're not their mother, because neither their age nor their... species match. Only... they look like you were choosing them one from… different realms, like a chef who buys different pieces of meat to make a pie... Damn, that sounded bad. I mean, they're so different. From themselves and from you.”

She smiled and started telling the story to the woman sitting next to her.

“Alatar comes from a middle-income family from the suburbs. Lilka was born on a farm, and Itel grew up in a small settlement in the forest...”

“And this cat-like... Eti.” asked the Princess of the Crimson Wastes. She smiled sadly and after some thought, she said.

“Eti... she is a mystery in itself. She was very hurt. I guess your Catra too.” She asked and looked questioningly at the warrior. Huntara frowned.

“All of us in the Horde lived in one big barracks with a factory added to it. But if it was hard for us, for Catra it was... She, just like Adora and the rest, was a Cadet. An orphan who was supposed to become the perfect Horde soldier. She was trained for military service from childhood. They were treated brutally there, they didn't know many normal things like holidays, family and stuff like that. They were only taught fighting and loyalty, and everything was managed by this dark bitch.

“Ah, that sounds so familiar...” Bina said in a thoughtful voice. “Eti and I... we were all brought up similarly. You see, we, thousand sisters, are clones of our father, kind of like Horde Prime's clones. I was created eleven years ago.”

“What?” Huntara asked with horror. Hearing what she rolled her eyes.

“Don't worry, I'm a thirty-year-old woman, mentally and physically, although with my kids I feel like I'm sixty. Tell me about this dark bitch, how you described her so nicely.” she took another sip of Ashrak, but it was good in the morning. Huntara shrugged uncertainly and said.

“Her name was Shadow Weaver. I didn't know her well. She was a powerful sorceress, the mistress of shadows. She commanded the entire Horde as Hordak's right-hand woman. She was mean to everyone, but to Catra... I don't know much about it. I don't know this girl that well, just like that hag. She always held Catra close as if she was her right hand, her acolyte. But she was treat like the dirt, tormented and humiliated. Catra overthrew her, and Shadow Weaver sought refuge in Brightmoon. The last time I saw her was at Glimmer's coronation. Her damn mask was cracked, but she was still ashamed to show her ugly face. Dark spells apparently twisted her like that. She used to be a teacher in Mystacor, but she messed up some terrible magic. She used to be a Saihe like your Itel, but then she became a monster, with a scarred mouth, fangs and claws. She was still damn pretty powerful. In the Fright Zone she was always surrounded by darkness, but in Brightmoon she acted like a fucking lady. Fuck, it's a good thing that bitch died . - Huntara said and spat Ashrak - green saliva.

“Yeah. It is good” she said quietly, feeling shivers of anxiety. The description reminded me of Miss Daisy, only she wasn't corrupted by dark magic and, above all, she was alive. But for the rest of the meal, she couldn't shake the ominous feeling. When Tung Lashor finally began to slowly wake up, Huntara asked in a low voice.

“What's going on with this Aspis? What is this?”

Bina sighed, it wasn't easy to explain to someone from a planet like this, but she had to try.

“it's like a Trade Houseor a guild, only larger, with its influence covering the entire galaxy. They trade in everything, absolutely everything, even weapons of mass destruction and sentient beings, if it is profitable for them and is at least theoretically legal.” Seeing Huntara's shocked look, she added, smiling sadly. “The galaxy has its dark sides. And Aspis is one of the darkest. They are willing to do anything for profit if they can get away with it, even murdering an entire colony or selling out its inhabitants. Employees are constantly indoctrinated and often groomed from childhood. They only buy the company's products and only marry their co-workers. And when they want to change jobs, they are burdened with such debts that they will not get out of them for three generations, unless they return on their knees, then they will be accepted, but they will have to start everything from the lowest rung. Tung Lashor’s was probably someone like that was probably something like that, and apart from the indoctrination, he had always been a fool. Well, these people either die first or become leaders. This probably doesn't reflect well on society. There is also this Azlanti thread, but more about these bastards another time...”

Huntra may have been the toughest warrior on Etheri, but even she wasn't ready to face the horrors of galactization.

“Do you…”

She waved her hand.

“Come on. I served a deranged, tyrannical father, who was no better than Horde Prime, but I'd rather die than work for those scum... I have principles.”

Tough warrior spat and said

“I hope they never reach Etheria.” Said the Princess of the Crimson Wastes, but she smiled half-heartedly. She showed the portable stove, a tube of sharp paste, her weapon and even her shoes.

“Too late. It was all produced by Aspis Consortium. They are already here.”

Huntara looked at her with horror.

She read the pieces maps and looked around the shallow basin. In its center there was a rainbow-colored steaming pool from which a surprisingly pleasant scent emanated. She knew enough of the Wasteland to know it was a bad omen, so she wrapped a rag around her face, as did most of the Tung Lashor gang. And Bina put on a helmet to protect her from all poisons and miasmas. They did the right thing, because when it turned out that one of the gang members, a hyenoman called Bob with a mane of dyed green hair, did not wear any protection and fell to the ground and started rolling, howling in terror. He shouted about a winged warrior with a fiery sword. It sounded strange, a bit sily, but Bina and Tung looked at each other worriedly.

"Okay, so what do we do?" she asked, looking at the others. Bina saluted and said.

"Fortunately, I have a certain magical item... Alatar told me to buy it because i was afraid of fiery and hot things. For example, Eti grenades, solarian explosions, flaming axes, Alatar's fire breath, and endless flaming mistakes of Ireanis. It will come in handy here too."

She sprayed herself with a red substance and jumped into the water. Only Tung wasn't surprised by what she did. They waited for several long moments until the ground around them shook and an island, Bina in armor, began to emerge from the lake and waved at them.

"There was a lever there, you just had to move it." said the interplanetary traveler in a satisfied voice. There was a narrow stone bridge running from the islet to the shore, and in the middle there was a not very high stone building. Perhaps it was a tomb, although rather small. She had heard that the scorpion lords built huge burial mounds out of earth, and on the Sorrow Islands, each clan had its own necropolis where all its worthy members were buried. She had no idea who the people who buried Mara were, but they obviously had plenty of time and resources to build such a tomb. The woman there was supposedly a hero who sacrificed herself to save them all or something like that. Maybe they wanted to show gratitude for her sacrifice, or were they her friends who wanted to honor her memory in this way? The kablotka, a representative of this strange people who worship dragons or something, went ahead and checked whether there were any traps along the way, and Tung and Bina did it again. Then they started looking at the door. They did this for a good quarter of an hour until she was sweating all over from standing by the boiling lake, so she simply pushed them away, irritated and open doors. Then Tung and Bina looked at her like she was crazy.

“Traps, curses...” said the Aspis leader.

“Undead, imprisoned devils...” added Bina.

“What devils?” she asked, not knowing what they were talking about.

“Manager, they don't know much about this type of thing. I've only seen one imp so far, and he was a fake one.” the head of the Aspis explained to the travelers.

“Is everyone in the galaxy this paranoid? It's just a damn tomb”

They looked at her in a way that made her feel young. Like a rookie on his first expedition.

“You know, if this Mara was someone like Adora, we shouldn't have encountered the undead, but you never know.” said Bina. It was tight, but it was a tomb after all, not a place you should wander through. She was the only one who needed night vision, the others needed only a minimal light source. There was a lot of dust and some lichen, but apart from that they didn't even see any spiders.

“Stop!” she and Tung Lashor shouted at the same time, when they reached a large round room with a painting on the floor, it depicted a warrior in armor with wings growing from his back and a flaming sword in his hand.

“What is going?” Huntara asked, almost bumping into her.

“Such things are usually seen in temples. They're damn suspicious in the tomb.” Bina said, thinking about how to get past them.

“Have you plundered many tombs?” the Wasteland warrior asked in a suspicious voice. She waved her hand and said.

“This is the first one, but I read a lot about it before I came here. If we stood on it, it would probably summon this guy. Looks like an Archon.”

Tung Lashor nodded seriously and said.

“Stained glass golems are the worst. The First Ones loved stained glass.”

Huntara began to look at them as if they were crazy. Well, the galaxy gets a lot crazier.

They crossed the room, walking sideways against the wall. There was a very narrow path specially created for this purpose. The four of them crossed it, she Huntara , Kobold and Tung Lashor , to reduce the likelihood of someone tripping. They walked very carefully so that no one even touched floor. Finally they got to the other side and found themselves in another corridor. This one wasn't long and they found themselves in a large chamber. She was different from the others. It was all covered with the markings of the First Ones, just like the ones Eti saw on her hand. The first thing that caught the eye was a crystal urn standing on a small platform. Above her, of course, was a stained glass window depicting a warrior, just like Adora was turning into...

“Aha! Stained glass golems after all.” she muttered, and the Aspis chief swallowed loudly. “Okay, I have a camera on a telescopic stick. Let's see what's there.” She said and started to pull out the device. They moved a little closer and then she began to spread her cane. Soon they had to keep it from touching the ground or walls, as this might activate some protection. They managed to move them close enough to get a good look at the urn. It was covered with the same inscriptions in this strange language and a painting depicting a female warrior, probably the previous She-Ra, and another one with a woman in something between a scientist's uniform and priest's robes, and another one, much taller and more dignified, but also a bit unreal. Below was a child, probably a few years old, but wrapped in blankets like a cocoon or something like that. Only there was an inscription in a language she knew, Elvish to be precise .

“Here lies Mara tl'a Teodosis . She was a great heroine who gave her life for each of us, may her sacrifice not be forgotten. May her beloved Light Hope find a path to freedom, and let their child Heart Gift awaken and discover the world beyond Etheria” she read it aloud and asked. “Heart Gift was probably Lady Cala's ancestor who flew to Carurystal, but who the hell was Light Hope?”

Huntara looked at her seriously and said.

“Light Hope was an AI that managed all Etheria, but Heart Gift cannot be an ancestor of someone from another planet, because Mara hid Etheria in Despondos, when she died, no one could leave her.”

Bina shrugged. Women can have many children, with very different partners, and Lady Cala never swore that she was related to Mara, always saying that it was just a guess. Anyway, it didn't matter to her.

“Okay, now we have to think about how to get there and...” she didn't finish because she heard the communicator buzzing, she smiled apologetically at the others and said.

“I just need to talk to my interns.” she said and went to the end of the corridor and answered it there.

“Hi, how are you?” she asked cheerfully, although she was tired.

“Hey Bina. We're flying to Brightmoon right now” she heard Eti's voice, but it was very distorted by interference. “And you know, you can find stray tanks here. They're usually lying around and whoever wants them can take them, and you know, I thought we could get one.

Her first instinct was to protest, but then she realized that since they had the crazy Crushey, the tank wouldn't be any worse, maybe they would just replace the turret on their transporter,

-“Let's think... Will you give com’s to Lilka? “ she asked, knowing that if her students had done something wrong, she would tell without being asked.

“Hey Bina... It's really not our fault.” the red-haired girl confirmed her suspicions. She sighed heavily and just said.

“Explain.”

Lilka took a deep breath and began to explain.

“Mikah was there and we found this Heart Gift, and her mom and mom are dead, and those scars on Miss Daisy's face weren't our fault. Neither do fangs and claws.”

She felt her heart stop and a cold sweat broke out on her back. “It can't be her. Just not her," she thought with horror.

“Lilka, listen to me. Miss Daisy...” she was saying, but the girl interrupted her.

“I can't hear... Alatar says... mountains... Miss Daisy... everything's fine.” and lost the signal. She felt panic rising. Is that why she was so interested in Eti... Because she reminded her of Catra she thought. Whatever she was going to find in this tomb, it no longer mattered at all. She had to save the children, her children. By the gods and devils, she pushed them into the monster's claws. For five years, she and Eti had been hiding from the Lord Admiral. She didn't remeber that there were other monsters in the world. With a nicer voice, using sweeter words, cunning and always polite. Lady Cala must have been involved in all this too. There was no time to think about the fake aristocrat, she had to get out of here quickly and get to Brightmoon, maybe warn the queen, that Catra, or whoever handles security matters in this country. She started running towards the exit and only when she reached almost the other end of the circular room did she realize that she had forgotten about the painting - a trap. She heard a booming "Stand still " and a fiery blade descended on her.

She turned and saw a tall, majestic figure in plate armor. She had wings on her back and a flaming sword in her hand. It emanated a bright light, surprisingly bright and warm. It wasn't blinding at all. He shouted "Stop" and took a powerful swing and slashed Bina , who barely dodged. Behind her, she heard glass breaking.

“Stained Glass Golem.” Tung Lashor groaned despaired, but he struck with his whip. At this time, she attacked the creature with her staff, but all she heard was a loud thud as it hit the armor, and then the creature launched a violent counterattack. Taking advantage of the fact that his back was turned to her, Bina shot him several times, but without much effect. Meanwhile, the Aspis chief and Kablodka were fighting the golem. The fight didn't go well for either of them. Finally, a powerful blow knocked the burgundy-haired woman down.

“Listen, I'm not a servant of evil, and neither are you.”

“You came here to plunder the tomb of Mara, the great heroine. You must die.” He started to make a great swing to kill the traveler, but then she cried out.

“I don't want to rob anything. I came here to give my children peace. Now I have to save them because they are in terrible danger. Look into my heart if you don't believe me.”

The creature looked at the woman for several long moments, its glow becoming more and more intense. She finally said.

“You can leave, but you better hurry.”

And it melted into the floor, becoming a painting again. At this time, there was a sound of breaking glass and the leader of the Aspis called out.

“My name is Tung Lashor, slayer of stained glass golems.”

Meanwhile, she ran to the injured Bina lying on the floor, who whispered.

“Shadow Weaver, I brought Shadow Weaver here.” and she lost consciousness.

The Fall of Kesler – The Homes We Lost

“Hey brother...” Alatar heard the voice of his sister Lasha in his ear, who was sitting on the seat behind him, but thanks to her long dragonkin neck she could look over his shoulder. “You're still playing this sexist speciesist game game about a dwarven miner slaying a dragon to save a princess? She insults your own kind.”

He clenched his jaw in irritation. His sister was a year younger than him, but her favorite pastime was teasing him. He would understand if she was an older brother, but having a younger sister making fun of him and calling him stupid Nerd was unbearable. And not long ago she became a damn defender of the oppressed, especially the Dragonkins. But when uncle Karharot married an elf, she stopped speaking to him along with half of the family.

“It's just a game, a very good game. I don't know why you're looking for additional content there.” he explained, trying not to show irritation. If he had shouted at her, she would have run to her parents and complained... Only her parents weren't here, they were in the capital to stop the ship for them. Their aunt was supposed to send it to them so as not to be thrown together with the rest of the evacuees. Personally, he thought the whole evacuation was bullshit, he watched a lot of videos on the infornet and most of them said that the chances of a real swarm attack were minimal, and their planetary defense was strong enough to repel even a strong invasion, and then there was Atrax with his mighty fleet and immeasurable wealth. They even reportedly hired Lord Admiral Antares and his Fearless Armada. After all, their neighbor won't let the swarm consume their main food source. He had also seen some interesting, if slightly speciesist , videos from a couple of Shirens who claimed that there was no evidence that the swarm had ever attacked any planet unprovoked by the inherent aggression of the unchitinoids . They were a bit strange, but their arguments made sense.

And the worst thing was that he didn't even come back with his school friends, only with his mean sister, because their parents insisted on sending them to a culture camp for Dragonkin. His sister found a few friends there and even a boyfriend, a large, athletic Dragonkin with black scales. Of course, she was so nice that she tried to find him a girlfriend among her stupid friends, and when he wasn't interested in any of them, she happily wanted to set him up with her boyfriend's brother... Too bad. Although, of course, she didn't know the truth.

“You know, this game is also offensive to dwarves. All collectibles are beer or mead, you fight by throwing axes, and you also get lives for collecting coins.” Lasha said, baring her fangs. He scowled at her.

“Dwarves like beer, mead and axes. It's an element of their culture. And it's not just dwarves who like gold.” he explained to his sister as if he were explaining to someone not a year but ten years younger.

“This perpetuates offensive stereotypes about greedy and perpetually drunk dwarves. This is very offensive. And let's not forget about trampling the kobolds. This is a game for speciesists.” his sister giggled.

“You're mean, just leave me alone.” he turned around and crouched down so that his sister couldn't see what he was doing. “Go coo with your fiancé.”

Lasha snorted and left, although he knew he had to be very careful because she was terribly nosy, he had to be on his guard.

For the hundredth time that day he tried to enter the Book of Faces. Of course, he failed. It was irritating at first, they hadn't been able to connect to the internet during their entire stay at camp, so he thought he'd be able to connect while driving to the spaceport, but so far he hadn't achieved anything. He really wanted to talk to his friends. Shiren Kitikie, Kobold Zuruk and Lashunti Grome. They were a close-knit group that played RPGs and computer games together and created the largest Rainbow Scales fan club on the planet, although he didn't boast about it. Being a fan of a cartoon about princesses transforming into a giant five-headed dragon named Tiamat wasn't something to be proud of. If his sister found out about it, she probably wouldn't let him live. After all she recently talked about a law banning magic and technology than can change someone species, because this is the essence of speciesism, at least for people like her. Not to mention that the rainbow five-headed dragon might offend her personally.

There was, of course, another reason why he was so eager to enter the Book of Faces. Silien. She had only joined their class a year ago, but half the school had a crush on her, or almost all the humanoids…. And he. She was a beautiful elf with silver hair that flowed in the wind, shining like moonlight reflected in raindrops. She was wonderful, phenomenal, like a fey from the first world. She was nice to everyone, even losers like them. Even though she was so beautiful, many people teased her for her unusual origins. His sister made fun of her behind her back, the old Veska of sport pushed her harder than anyone else, but the nastiest were Shiren's Pri triplets. They bullied half the school, and they were the children of the manager of a local supermarket belonging to Aspis and an activist of the Public Health Party, so they were practically unpunishable. A month ago, they surrounded Silien and wanted to smear engine oil on her head, but he was nearby and defended her. He threatened them that he would breathe fire on them, and then they got scared and left them alone. Silien then hugged him and told him that he had acted like a real hero. He had never felt so happy... Of course, then he ended up in the principal's office because the triplets lied that it was he and the elf who attacked them for speciesistic reasons, shouting anti-insectoid slogans. Complete nonsense, because his best friend was Shiren , he even invited him to all holidays, but the director believed the triplets because his wife worked in the Aspis store and he was afraid that she would lose her job. At home, of course, his parents made a fuss about him, because as a Dragonkin he should behave responsibly. By scaring others with his fiery breath, he harmed the image of the entire species. He ruined the reputation of all the other Dragonkins! At first, they wanted to enroll him in therapy for aggression and antisocial behavior, but his sister came up with this camp so that they could go there together. The camp wasn't that bad, although of course he was terribly bored there. However, before leaving, Silien added him as a friend on Book of Faces and even talked to him, so he decided it was worth it. Of course, he wasn't going to tell the beautiful elf how he felt, and the very thought that Lasha would find out who he fell in love with made his tail stiffen with horror... If his parents found out that he liked Elf girl... He remembered the story of his uncle Karharoth . Of his closest relatives, only Aunt Xinamey and her wife Taler spoke to him, but dad and mom pretended he didn't exist.

His sister was clearly getting bored, so she was about to start teasing him again. He looked out the window and saw that they had stopped in, there were traffic jams. He decided to go out and play since he couldn't talk to his friends. It must have slipped past his private Cerberus. As soon as he stood up, Lasha raised her head and asked, baring her fangs.

“And you, little brother, where are you going?”

He took a deep breath to calm himself down and said

“And I'm going to get some fresh air” he replied, not hiding his irritation.

“Oh, that's good, little brother. Very good. I just hope you play your stupid speciesistjc games.” Lasha said in an innocent voice.

“I will do whatever I like! I'm the older one and I'm supposed to take care of you. That's what my parents said.”

His sister looked at him skeptically.

“If you want, play.” she said with false sweetness. “But if you don't make it in time because you'll play, you'll have to run after the bus... Although it might be good for you.”

He straightened up, angry.

“What are you insinuating!” he growled, and his sister smiled like a snake at a chick.

“You know, I guess that would be the only way to get you to run, which would be good for your fitness. Although if the swarm attacks, it won't be of much use, because the fat guys die first because they stay behind. But you know, then you'll finally become a hero, because when the bugs eat you, they'll get so fed up that they'll fly away, leaving us alone. Hooray.” she giggled.

He looked at Lasha, breathing heavily. He wanted to hit her or yell at her, but he just huffed hard and started to leave.

“I'm sorry, Mati. There will be no Captain Rocket today, maybe I'll play something of ours for you? Maybe Shi and Shu?” Lilka said to her brother while looking through their not very large collection of films. Now it was noon, the time when Mati watched cartoons while dad cooked dinner and mom worked on the farm or vice versa. When her older brother Kay went into the army because the bugs were around the planet, it was up to her to take care of her little brother. She was almost an adult, twelve years old, and could help her parents with almost everything. And now that the school was closed anyway, she had nothing to do. Only there was no television, so she had to come up with some way to take care of him and relieve the burden on her parents. So she found her favorite cartoon, about two friends: Goblin and Shiren, who went back in time to the lost Golarion and experienced strange adventures there. It was a wiser story than Captain Rocket, but Mati really liked Captain Rocket, even though it wasn't for kids his age. She looked at her little brother. He was three years old and his parents adopted him two years ago. She was very happy that she found out that she was going to have a new little brother and she loved taking care of him, although when she had school she couldn't devote much time to him, but now, when there were something like holidays, she could be his beloved sister all the time.

Mati grimaced when it turned out that it was not his favorite fairy tale, but when Brong the Strong appeared on the screen he started laughing. It was strange, when she was little, she was very afraid of Brong when he roared and threatened Shu that he would make shrimp soup out of her. Then it turned out that he had a good heart and made friends with girls, but she still had nightmares, although she didn't tell her parents about it because they would forbid her from watching her favorite cartoon.

While her little brother was busy watching the series, she went to the kitchen to help her dad. He told her to peel patatos to make colorful fries. My parents didn't make them often because they were fatty and difficult to digest, but they, She, Mati and Kay, loved them. Dad looked very worried, but he tried hard to hide it. She probably guessed what was making him sad.

"Dad, you don't have to worry. Kay and the other soldiers will be fine. They're just stupid bugs." She said to her dad and he hugged her.

"You are wonderful, daughter. Now go help mommy and tell her dinner will be soon. You can't reheat raimbow fries."

She nodded and went outside. She passed the farm buildings and looked around at her family's fields. It would be harvest time soon and there would be a lot of work ahead of them, especially since with everything going on with the Swarm, few farm workers were willing to work. Her parents were very worried about this. They even considered buying agricultural robots, but dad said that in Kesler the robots were very expensive and they would have to take out a loan, and now no one wanted to give it to them. But it wasn't a problem, she would help them, there was nothing to worry about.

She went to the orchard where the pearaples grew and picked one. They were practically ripe. As soon as the harvest begins, they will make a tart and eat it every day for a month. She ate one more fruit and started looking for her mother. Then she heard a dull bang. She looked at the sky, cloudless and blue. Then she saw lots of flashes on it. They were colorful and bright. Quite nice, but she had the impression that it was something bad...

The birds came. There were thousands of them, whole swarms. She saw every species she knew and plenty she couldn't recognize. There were even Skrats who were now raising chicks, they even took care of one nest with their dad. Now they were all flying west as if something was chasing them.

“Hey, come back for the chicks! During the day I can take care of them, but when it gets dark I have to be at home and now I help my parents take care of my little brother!” she called to the birds, hoping that the pair would hear her. For several minutes she watched the birds fly away, feeling increasingly anxious. Finally they disappeared over the horizon, and then there was silence. Absolute and deafening. Then she felt herself break into a cold sweat of horror.

“It all makes no sense! “ Itel exclaimed and kicked the pine cone angrily. She hated her family, her village and her parents. And the fact that she had six mothers and five fathers and thirteen brothers and sisters meant that she had a lot of people to hate. Only now they closed the school and she had to live in this village all the time. Normally, she only came back here on weekends, and the rest of the week she spent studying at the boarding school, studying with normal kids. Only during holidays and celebrations, or at times like this, did she return home, where, of course, she immediately had to deal with skinning fish, chopping wood, or picking forest fruits, as if they didn't care at all about the education she was getting. She felt like she was in a damn open-air museum. Her family came to the great forests of Kesler to "Recreate the traditional lifestyle of the Wood Elves". Did they want to play full-time reenactors? Okay, but why did they involve their descendants in this, depriving them of a chance for a normal future? They taught her how to track, fish, repair shoes, everything she needed to survive in the forest. Only normal residents of Kesler could go to the store and buy these things, spending the rest of their time on worthwhile activities. But not they. They couldn't afford anything because, well, they lived in the forest and played self-sufficiency. And she had to be that poor girl from the forest in the whole school, who had to earn extra money after school to buy things that everyone's parents bought for their children. She was worse than the kids from the slums, because they were city kids. Goodfellas.

And she should be happy anyway, because she was allowed to go to the city. All the households contributed to the education of her and her sister of name, i.e. one to whom she was not related by blod, but lived in the same household, to become a doctor and a veterinarian. Even her future was taken away from her. But she had no intention of complying with their plans. She won't become a doctor. She dreamed of a dance school, but she knew that learning was expensive, so she decided to join the army or become a mercenary. These were the only professions performed by "civilized" people in which the skills she had been taught at home would be useful. And the fact that her family were pacifists, although not radical, because they taught her to fight in self-defense, only confirmed her belief that she had made the right choice. But of course that idiot sister of hers spilled the beans... She shouldn't have confided her plans to that treacherous bitch. When she found out about it, she beat the idiot.

The worst thing was that they didn't even punish her, they just looked at her, not even judgmentally, but with sadness, as if they felt sorry for her. So today at noon she went to her blood father Thisolin, her true father. Why couldn't she have a normal family like her friend Viz , the elf, the most handsome in class, whom she had a crush on. He had two fathers, lawyers, a normal family, instead of a damn commune.

She had recently concluded that Thisolin was the only sane person in the entire settlement. And the only one she talked to of her own free will. He wasn't born here, he just arrived twenty years ago, which explained why he wasn't fooled by the idiotic customs here. He used to be a soldier and was now the village's chief gunsmith. He lived on the outskirts, supposedly because he dealt in hazardous materials, but she suspected it was because he didn't get along with the rest of the settlement. He was a soldier, someone who did useful things. He defended others instead of hiding in the forest like a coward.

His house and workshop were built of real brick and stood near the river, in case a fire broke out... Were they really so stupid as to believe that someone like that would allow a fire to start in his own workshop? She always liked staying in this house, it was a substitute for normal life for her, without being stuck in a wooden hut. However, Thisolin was not inside, so she approached the small dock. She expected to find him grooming the fish, but it turned out he was listening to the radio. Here was the best coverage. When he saw her, he turned off the radio and looked at her with the same concern as the others. She looked down, feeling irrationally guilty. He shouldn't behave like the rest. They stood in silence for a moment, staring at each other, until she asked.

“Are you listening to the news about the war against the Swarm?

“Yes and no.” he said, making her purse her lips in irritation. At school, everyone made fun of elves because they wouldn't give a normal answer even when asked how much is two times two. Seeing her reaction, he explained.

TA Swarm is not an enemy you can wage war against, just like you can't wage war against a locust plague or a zombie invasion. Although a better comparison would be a hurricane or even a supernova explosion. You can try to limit the damage, but there is no adversary, no leader to oppose, with whom to negotiate peace.”

She frowned

“But you never fought the Swarm, in your times we hardly even knew about it.”

Thisolin smiled at her sadly,

“We are not as ignorant as you want us to be, Itel. We are not deaf to the news coming from the great world. We even made some preparations.” he said. She felt anxious. She wanted to ask him what he meant, but then falling stars appeared in the sky. Although not entirely. They were brighter and fell much slower… and much closer.

“Itel, get into the boat and go with the current. I run to inform the others.” said Thisolin . It was the first time she had seen him absolutely terrified.

“But... what's going on.” she asked

“Do what I say!” he shouted at her. For the first time, someone from the settlement raised their voice at her. So she decided to listen to him without arguing. She jumped into the boat moored nearby. Thisolin walked up to her and tossed her two items. One was a heavy revolver and the other was a long knife.

“How you'll have to be strong. You'll have to be brave. You will have to fight with all the strength you have.” and pushed the boat away.

B-nation sighed as she listed all her faults that made her fall so badly that she was assigned to this senseless mission. Her task was to collect as many credits as possible from those who wanted to leave the planet on their own, without counting on rescue from the governments of Kesler or Atrax. The problem was that she didn't own a ship, or even anything that suggested she did. Normally this wouldn't be too much of a problem, she'd just find a few desperate hapless suckers and then leave them for dead. It's sad and mean, but when you're one of the Thousand Daughters, you have to be willing to commit the worst crimes or die, there were no other options. This time, however, the situation was more complicated because she had to leave the planet on the same ship, otherwise she would be trapped here in the turmoil of war... at best. She had no knowledge of warfare and the mood was optimistic, but she had a bad feeling. But where the fuck could he find a free ship when everyone who could afford it was trying to escape from this planet cursed by devils and demons. However, she had an idea. So she went to a bar run by a former mercenary called Zrikar , a fearsome Vesk, belligerent even for a member of his species.

The interior was crowded and noisy as if nothing had happened. Well, the local customers were mostly veterans of many wars. They were not easy to break or scare. A beautiful topless half-elf woman approached her, apparently her "family's" preferences were well known here, but she paid no attention to it. She was a professional, and unlike most of her sisters, she was able to control her urges… usually…

“Take me to the boss.” she ordered and the girl nodded. For a while, they walked among the noisily partying patrons of the bar. Erotic dancers of various genders and species danced, while Ork metal, Shirean pop and Skittermander rap could be heard in the background . The boss sat in a dusty armchair, and next to him sat two voluptuous and armed Ramiel women, half women, half snakes... They looked like sisters, but she wasn't sure.

“Znikar , we need to talk.” she said, but Vesk interrupted her with a growl.

“NO!” she heard and the lizard showed its fangs in an extremely nasty smile.

“But I need a ship.” she said, silently praying to the mother of rats that no one would hear the desperation in her voice.

“Like everyone else on this planet, but there are no ships anywhere, and even if I had the entire fucking armada of the Aspis consortium, there would be no room for you there. I no longer do business with the Thousand Daughters, and you are even a pariah among your own people. Jantar has forbidden your sisters and anyone who does not want to make an enemy of him from helping you in any way. Goodbye."

She felt her legs go weak under her. She had known since she was given this mission that she was expected to fail, but she had no idea that things had come this far. She was at the age when the serum slowly wore off. She was also widely respected among the sisters, and apparently her father decided that she should be eliminated as a preventive measure, and this way his hands would be clean, at least in his opinion. But she couldn't let the bugs eat her or Taint kill her. She was about to reach for her gun when she heard a hoarse voice behind her.

"I also need a ship and you will give it to me."

She turned around and saw a fierce-looking Pahtra with black, slightly gray fur, golden eyes, and a screech covered in scars. He had a rifle on his back and a serrated kukri on his belt. Next to him stood a huge orc with a body covered with numerous tattoos. His attire indicated that he belonged to those orcs who wanted to recreate the ancient culture of their species. Significantly, he looked much nicer than his companion. He was armed with a huge two-handed axe. At the sight of them, Znikar jumped to his feet.

"Igzar, you psycho. How did you end up here?" Vesk growled.

"Ship…" Igzar replied, and then there was silence. Their two groups stared at each other for a few moments. It was obvious which side he would choose, but it was not certain whether that side would agree. And then the light went out. She immediately jumped to the side, firing her pistol at the snake woman, and Pachtra shot her companion, and at the same time the orc leapt with his flaming ax and cut Vesk in half. The enemies even managed to shoot. Igzar approached Znikar's corpse and began to search it.

“What is your name?” The orc asked in a friendly voice.

“I'm B-nation number...” she started, but the ax warrior interrupted her.

“Too long, you'll be Bina. Hi Bina, I'm Wagar.” said the Orc, smiling friendly. Meanwhile, Igzar stood up and turned to her.

“Are you going with us.” it sounded like an order that was best not to be disobeyed.

“Aren't you afraid that you will make an enemy of Jantar? – she asked, smiling teasingly, but the pahtra's eyes glowed gold.

“Jantar made a mortal enemy of me by allying with Felix Antares .” there was such terrible hatred in his voice that it would scare even Daemons .

Alatar stepped out of the large bus designed to carry Dragonkins. There was a traffic jam as far as the eye could see, so he assumed he wouldn't get any rest for the next few hours. And that's good, at least he'll be able to play in peace without the nasty wyvern squawking in his ear. He went to the side of the road, ate a bacon bar, bought a lot at the previous store because they were forbidden at the camp, and turned on the game. He was happy when he defeated another dragon in the seventh castle. He deliberately didn't read about her on the infonet to avoid spoilers, so he was sure it was the last level, but of course at the end there was another princess's maid, this time a high elf, who told him that the princess was in the next castle, he almost threw the datapad to the ground, smashing it. He took a deep breath. He wanted to calm down and de-stress after the "Smart" conversation with his sister, but he got even more angry. He looked up at the sky and suddenly saw countless flashes in the sky. They were colorful and chaotic. Only after a few moments of looking at this beautiful sight did he realize what he was looking at. Space battle, real space battle. he thought unconsciously. Soon the flares began to fade and he saw numerous fiery trails of ships entering the atmosphere. It's an invasion, a real invasion he thought. The planetary defenses continued to fire and one of the ships was hit and broke into dozens of fragments. He shouted happily, but then he saw a fragment of a destroyed vehicle flying towards them at great speed. For a moment he thought it would hit him, but instead it hit the bus containing his sister and the other Dragonkin from the camp. He stared blankly at the burning wreck for a moment, and then headed towards the city. What will I tell the family? I was supposed to take care of her he thought all the way.

Lilka ran in terror, looking for her mother. Something terrible was happening, and only she could do something about it. She heard the animal's mournful cry and ran towards it. She walked through the bushes and saw her mother and Mr. Tut, Shiren, who had been living on their farm for many years and working for her family. Mom had a shotgun in her hands, and Mr. Tut had an electric scythe. In front of them stood an insect resembling a large and monstrous Shiren with huge jaws dripping with green slime. Next she saw two Cowpotamas, they looked half - dissolved. Mr. Tut and Mom also looked burned.

“Tut, take Lilka to the car and drive as far away from here as possible.” her mother ordered him, but Lilka wanted to run to an ax stuck in a nearby stump. But Mr. Tut grabbed her by the waist and started to pull her away.

“MOM” she shouted, but her mother ordered again with a breaking voice

“Just run away!”

This time she didn't resist anymore, she just let Mr. Tut pull her . She immediately heard a gunshot and then a strangled scream. She started crying, but started running with Shiren . After a few unbearably long moments, they reached the family pickup truck and drove away. She never saw the house, Dad or little Mati again.

A strangers in a friendly land

Chapter Notes

> I changed Rosie nickname to Sparkle Paw because it beter fit her Polish version and is more cute. In future i will coreckt older chapters.

Eti felt better. Despite the grim story with Heart Gift, she felt better. Maybe it was because she was happy to have friends. Itel, Lilka, Alatar and... Sparkle Paw. Even Ireanis and Ilemshaw were fine. She liked Wrongdak too. As for Grimmy, she wasn't sure how she should treat her. She felt a certain fondness for her that was hard to understand for someone who wasn't someone like her. She had the same darkness inside her, which she kept at bay only by force of will. She knew what it was like to draw strength from the fear you induced in others. There, when she moved through the shadows she could see her face and realized that something terrible had been done to that woman too. Maybe not exactly the same as to her, but enough for her to feel some sympathy for her.

She knew that this Grandpa recognized her. Or rather, he saw THAT ONE in her. She shouldn't be surprised, after all, she was known here, though she didn't know why and she wasn't sure she wanted to find out... though she suspected it was inevitable. But what was much weirder was that Grandpa and Grimmy seemed to know each other and the man didn't like her. The latter was quite normal, many people didn't like the Dark Elf, but how could they know each other if this planet had been cut off from the galaxy for thousands of years? But on the other hand, THAT ONE ended up here, so they could get to know each other somehow. Truth be told, she didn't really care. If Grimmy continued to save her and was nice to Sparkle Paw, she didn't care at all. She also hid a dark legacy…

Itel suspected Grandfather of being an Azlantean privateer, which she told them as soon as they were on the Ship. Privately she thought it was nonsense, but Itel was as stubborn as ever. Maybe even a little more. She had a feeling that her friend had been excited ever since she arrived on this planet. She hadn't noticed it before, because her problems obscured her view of what was happening around her, but now, when she felt a little better, she began to notice that the elf exuded determination, as if the future of the galaxy or the entire universe depended on the upcoming events. Maybe that's how it was, after all, it was an extraordinary place and they had a BLONDE and a that Heart here. Itel wanted this Journey, and she agreed because she didn't really care. At least that's what she thought before. Now she wasn't so sure about it, maybe deep inside her torn soul she wanted to meet the OTHER ONE.

Itel was looking here for cure for Captain Blazebringer to help her fight the Swarm. But this poor Heart Gift told about this Heart and then she saw something on the Elf's face that she had never seen before, hope. But this was not a normal hope. There was desperation in it, like the eyes of a predator who had starved for so long that he no longer feared sentient beings and sneaked into herds of cattle or attacked villagers. Eti knew a lot about predators, not only because she was one herself, Jantar gave her a lot of knowledge. Itel was hungry, hungry for victory. All these years she had been feeding on the crumbs of a vague promises of Doctor Leech. Now she smelled a chance for a meal that would finally fill her up. For Itel, the hope of victory was like a drug that made her forget about everything and everyone. It poisoned her thoughts and distorted her conscience. She saw it in her eyes when she pressed Heart Gift to reveal information about this project. If Grimmy hadn't interrupted her, she could have forced the AI to discover the truth about her being alone. She loved Itel, though not in the way the elf girl wanted. That's why it hurt her to see her friend change, but there was nothing she could do. She wasn't good at things like friendship. She didn't know how she could help her, usually the ideas that came to her mind only made the situation worse. She understood that she had to help her friend somehow, but it wasn't that easy, especially since she had also hurt Itel when she had befriended Sparkle Paw.... No, it wasn't about friendship…

Grandpa decided to stay in the forest, clearly worried, but also clearly furious with Grimmy. So they said goodbye to him and then flew off towards Brightmoon. Bina wanted to talk to them, but they were flying past the mountains, so they lost the signal. Then they will talk when Bina returns to the Valley, or immediately during Victory Day or whatever the name of the holiday was on the occasion of defeating Crooked Face and some wedding... Why was something like a wedding celebrated here...

When they landed and the surprisingly polite landing pad staff took care of their ship. They handed them tourist brochures describing Brightmoon and the surrounding area, encouraging them to participate in the upcoming celebrations, and treats. She wore her usual outfit that covered her face and eyes. She knew that here she could attract the attention of those who knew HER.

Sparkle Paw looked around, beaming with delight. Very literally radiant, because she started to glow.

"It's so beautiful here." she said in sign language and jumped up and did a pirouette. She moved aside. She took off her goggles and looked around. She saw a magnificent palace, or perhaps a castle, made of pale ivory stone that rose above the small town. It looked much neater than Saltmarsh, Clytemnestra or Atrax. It was clean, the houses looked well-kept, everything exuded glamour It was like...

"It's like a fairy tale here." Sparkle Paw exclaimed.

"I don't know what it is, but the glare makes my eyes bleed." she muttered as she left, and the white-haired girl rolled her eyes.

"You are sometimes very grumpy, you know? It's really nice here!" she made a semicircle with her hand. She looked at her sideways. The girl was usually cheerful, but first she was afraid of what she did in the Wastes, and then she met Heart Gift . Like everyone else, it must have weighed on her that they didn't have the courage to tell her about her fate of hers mothers. Maybe she should do something to make her happy? She liked it here. Probably because it was so fucking lovely here. Sparkle Paw liked things like that because she was sweet and adorable herself... Neither she nor Itel would ever be like that, it was Taken from them by what was done to them. She shouldn't lose it and be like them. Hurt and bitter. She sighed and looked at the tourist brochure.

"Let's see what nice and charming things they have here," She murmured and was about to start looking through the brochure when Alatar suddenly snatched it from his hands and pressed some kind of sweet, probably a toffee into his hand. She growled softly and spoke slowly.

"For the first time in the history of the galaxy, you gave someone treats that you could eat yourself. This could mean one of two things. Either the end of time is approaching and we are all doomed, or you want to distract me from this brochure, in an absolutely dumb way, I dare say, because you should know after all these years that I don't eat sweets, if only because I don't feel the sweet taste. Since even such an absolutely perfect, amazing and unique being as me cannot do anything about the destruction of the universe, it remains to consider the second possibility." she said with irritation as she heard her accent become annoyingly nasal. Ignoring the confused air pad staff, she approached the embarrassed Dragonkin and grabbed the brochure from his hands, and then started looking through it.

She didn't notice anything special at first. A few photos of nice houses and statues, something about local customs and traditions. Some boring maps, no treasures or anything like that. Until she finally saw an announcement about a double wedding. The photo was large, took up the entire page and was colorful. The Double Wedding of Queen Glimmer and Techmaster Bow, as well as the Hero of the Galaxy Adora and Grand Marshal Catra, as it was signed. On the left was a cute girl with pinkish-purple hair and translucent wings, strangely reminiscent of Captain Moonshadow, and some black guy with a heart on his chest. They both smiled at the person taking the photo. Next was the Blonde, who looked a bit tense, but was also smiling and holding her hand…

THAT ONE! For a moment she felt a cold shudder of fury shake her body, but she controlled it, although it was like swallowing cold fire. It was an instinct, a conditioning instilled in her by Bina's Father, but not only that. Aggression and Anger were part of her personality. However, there was something much more personal going on here. Jealousy… A part of her knew it was irrational, stupid and senseless. But it was always in the back of her mind when she thought about her. But now she was surprised to find that she could control it if she just focused. She took a deep breath and looked at the photo of THE OTHER ONE again. She was muscular and athletic. Her hair was stiffer, like a real Pahtra's. The eyes were different colors, one blue and the other gold. And she had claws on both hands. Now they were out, she herself looked scared. That was probably why the Blondie held her hand so tenderly. In fact, she looked somehow... familiar. She remembered seeing her in her dream, but she couldn't look at it at the time. After a moment, she realized why this face seemed so familiar to her. She saw it every time she looked in the mirror. It wasn't about looks, they were slightly different, but something else. She saw pain and fear in her eyes... or rather, their shadow hidden in the deepest recesses of her soul. She knew him very well. He was also her close friend. But... who did this to her? Who hurt her like that?

"Is everything okay, Eti?" Miss Daisy asked, standing behind her. Now she realized that her friends, as well as the unaware airport staff, were staring at her back, holding their breath. She felt something like shame, so she spoke quickly.

"This queen is quite a pretty chick, totally my type. Do you think that before the wedding they ask if someone don't agrees to the wedding? Because then I would go out in front of the crowd and say that I disagree, and then I would kneel down and propose to her. She would probably be struck by the magnificence of my personality and leave this guy and marry me. I'm sure Etheria deserves someone as great as me on the throne."

Everyone looked at her. Sparkle Paw and Itel looked at her with resentment, and Miss Daisy looked at her with consternation. It might not have been the wisest thing to say, but she had no other idea to defuse the situation.

They set off into the city. Before they left, Sparkle Paw asked Wrongdak to come with them. The clone was reluctant at first, as if he would rather hide in the ship than visit a place he seemed to know and like, but the former intern talked him into it so nicely that he agreed. She had the feeling that something had happened during that one-day outing with Miss Daisy. He became gloomy and withdrawn. Rosie noticed this too, and tried to comfort the clone and cheer him up, which sometimes worked, but not always. She knew that when someone felt this way, others couldn't help them. It's so easy to break out of this darkness. Maybe she should talk to him, ask about the other one, but she couldn't bring herself to do it. Perhaps sometimes ignorance is bliss. Or maybe rather Truth is a curse. Durnybot knew something too. She saw the scar on his armor and had a feeling from the beginning where it came from, but in this case she didn't want to pursue the topic further. In her mood, she just wanted to go with the flow until she reached the source, the end of this aimless journey.

They reached the outskirts of the city, where platforms stands with food and merchandise, and other attractions related to the Victory Day celebrations were set up between the trees. The town itself, because it couldn't be called a city, looked so friendly that Itel should have had her usual bout of Paranoia. But Elf focused on leafing through the brochure, becoming more and more confused. Finally, she approached a dark-skinned Elf and smiled cheerfully and asked.

- Excuse me, but do you know where the central database, main information center or national library is? I am looking for Information about... The Prehistory of Etheria . – she said without taking her eyes off the interlocutor. She gues she wanted to look like she was asking an innocent question, but it had the opposite effect. Toshi started flying excitedly around the Elf, trying to bite him. The fox also liked Brightmoon.

“Er, maybe you should check out the library in Mystacor , or the Forest Library of the Techmaster Bow Fathers. We don't have any database, although apparently Princess Entrapta wants to create a planet-wide network using Prime's technology, but in my opinion this is not a very good idea.” answered the passer-by with a slightly nasal accent.

“So you don't have Infonet here?” Alatar asked in a shocked voice. - How you live here without it is the most wonderful achievement of civilization!” he exclaimed with pure nerdy indignation.

“Alatar is right… partly.” Wrongdak suddenly interjected. “I used it on Vesk III and it was very helpful, although some of the information wasn't… what I was looking for. – a blush appeared on the alien's pale face, From what websites on Vesk III can you get a blush? What can make such Wrondaks blush? So many questions… she thought, and the clone continued. “If Princess Entrapta wants all of Etheria to be connected by a network, then that's a great idea.”

The elf frowned skeptically at Wrongdak and said a little haughtily.

“Well, you clones probably have had a more... positive experience with the idea of networks or other forms of shared consciousness.”

Alatar looked at the Elf indignantly and was probably about to start arguing about nonsense like a Nerd, so she decided to take over the discussion before it got out of control. She put her arm around the Elf, pulled him towards her and began to explain to him.

“Imagine a place where all possible and impossible opinions boil and mix like in an alchemist's apparatus, so that falsehood, lies and disinformation can be distilled and can fed t the masses. All possible truths, half-truths, so perfectly mixed together that it is impossible to separate them. Billions of beings with pure hatred for each other, forming factions whose sole purpose of existence is to fight with everyone who disagree with them. The network is not something that connects thinking beings and spreads the truth, but something that allows thinking beings to separate themselves from each other and live in closed information bubbles and have pure hatred for everyone outside of them, and this is only the thinnest layer of the planet, we haven't even gotten to MOORPGs yet. The galaxy still has many wonderful secrets to discover.” she patted the terrified elf on the back.

“My brother-in-law is Queen Glimmer's advisor on the computerization of Brightmoon. I have to warn him.” The elf broke free from her hands and ran towards the castle. Toshi flew after him.

“I've never done so well, I didn't even want to scare him.” she said, looking after the running Elf and summoned the fox with a wave of her hand.

Then she turned away from him and said to the others.

“So what are we supposed to do now? Itel wants to search these databases to find out something about this heart or whatever it was. But then what will we do?” she asked, feeling growing anxiety.

“So what? " Sparkle Paw exclaimed with pure and adorable joy. “We are getting ready for the celebration and we will party with all the inhabitants of Etheria. We will eat delicacies, play games and... dance.” she did a pirouette.” she clapped. “I always wanted to dance all night at a wonderful ball, meet a beautiful prince or princess. And here I can do it.” she laughed soundlessly. Alatar looked absolutely delighted, but she, Lilka and Itel looked at the white-haired girl in horror.

“But how...” she asked in disbelief. “We don't know how to organize balls and parties. We can't just go to the party.”

“Of course you can. It says here that everyone is invited. So so do we. And Miss Daisy will prepare us for the prom! She raised Lady Cala to be a wonderful lady, and she will prepare us for the ball.” she pointed to Ponurka , whose face showed horror. She felt sorry for the dark elf.

She saw the city of Brightmoon for the first time, which was quite funny considering she had been the leader of the Horde for almost a quarter of a century and had previously served on the council of Mystacor for many years. She knew Lynortis, the capital of Carurystal, better than the seat of the queens of Etheria. Now that actually worked to her advantage. There were only a handful of people in the entire city who could recognize her, and only Catra, Adora, and Glimmer could do it from a distance while she was wearing a mask. Of course, it was still risky, but with some precautions, she should be able to avoid recognition. So she pulled her hood over her head and spoke in a low voice, hoping to get lost in the crowd of Brightmoon visitors for the holiday. In fact, no one paid any attention to her, her wards attracted her much more, although in Etheria, marked by a long war and with so diverse population, they did not stand out as much as they could, for example, on Carurystal. She even had the impression that Etheria was more alien to them than they were to Etheria . They unconsciously huddled together and looked around as if they were making their way through cursed ruins located in an unexplored jungle. This sight would probably be funny if it weren't so sad. Anyone who knew the origins of this unusual group could feel nothing but helpless sympathy when they saw the distrust with which they looked into the friendly faces of the inhabitants of Brightmoon. Did she look at everyone this way during your first days? How did she feel seeing this beauty and splendor? I would like to see it, but it is a foolish desire. Selfish and cruel in its own way. My mere presence, the mere fact that I am alive, would not allow her to enjoy such hard-won happiness? Wouldn't it be better for me to stay dead for her and Adora! she thought, clutching the brochure. She only glanced at it because she didn't want to arouse suspicion, then she would look at the photo and see how the women who could have been her daughters had changed, if only she had let them, if she had been a better person.

Rosie brought her out of her thoughts. When the girl called out that Miss Daisy would definitely help her get ready for the ball, she was at first going to say that she didn't have time, but then realized with horror that she had more than enough time. Until meeting her uncertain allies on Victory Day, she had absolutely nothing to do. Even Lady Cala left her alone to complete her part of the mission. She could have refined her plan a bit more, but it didn't change the fact that there was no rational excuse to refuse them. She wasn't sure if she wanted that anyway. She liked these kids and knew they deserved this little bit of joy in their difficult and sad lives. She sighed and said slowly, barely keeping herself from rubbing her temples.

"I can do it...." she looked at Alatar, tattooed and scowling at everyone, with many implants in her body, Lilka holding a blade on her shoulders that could cut someone in half, and at Eti, armed with a sniper rifle, waving her tail uncertainly, although in her case All she had to do was reveal her face to cause a stir. "But it will take a lot of work and a little help on your part." she added and felt Ireanis pat her on the back.

"I'll help too. Parties and partying are my specialty!" exclaimed the silver-haired sorceress. She wanted to say, "I'm not surprised at all," but she bit her tongue just in time. There was no point in making an enemy of a sorceress out of stupid malice. Especially since she was so much more talented than anyone could have guessed. What secret could she be hiding? This is another mystery she had to solve, but this matter is in the future.

"First we need to go to the tailor to make you some clothes. Unless you already have some." she asked, looking at the kids. Itel blushed, Rosie looked embarrassed, Eti looked ostentatiously at her coat, although judging by the nervous movements of her tail she was as confused as the white-haired girl, Lilka crossed her arms on her chest and only Alatar raised his hand.

“I have formar outfit, a suit.” Alatar said in a timid voice.

Everyone looked at him in pure disbelief, even her.

“When did you buy your suit, drakey?” Eti asked.

“Well, on Akiton , you can also buy formal clothes there, even for Dragonkins.” explained the technomancer

“In a minute. You bought clothes for the prom, even though we all thought we were going to a land haunted by every possible species of devil.” Eti asked in disbelief, and Dragonkin lowered his head and said quietly.

“You know, I preferred to be prepared.”

“I'd rather not ask what else you were prepared for.” the cat girl muttered. “But I like my outfit there. It is comfortable, dangerous and very discreet.” she connected the cloaking field and did a backflip. She was still noticeable, although the cloaking field made her blend in perfectly with her surroundings

“I always wear a traditional orc warrior outfit, which fits perfectly everywhere, and I have a special compartment for my sweets.: said Lilka and took out a large handful of toffee.

Only Itel and Rosie remained. Both girls looked embarrassed. Rosie was the first to speak.

“I've never been to a ball, but I'm almost sure I can dance, it's practically the same as dancing, only without broken bones and broken teeth. Only I don't have money for a dress. Dr. Quinn paid me with credits, or rather the government pays me, and here they are worth little.” the white-haired girl lowered her head sadly. She sighed and smiled slightly at her.

“I'm sure Bina wouldn't deny you money for a dress and all the necessary things, and if you don't want her to pay, then on Lady Cali's behalf I have some funds at my disposal that are more than enough.” then she looked at Itel. “And you, my dear? What you need?”

The Elf smiled sadly.

“When I went to school in Kesler, i was getting ready for the big Annual Ball. I worked after classes all month to buy my dream dress, and I even bought it, but...” The Solarian wiped her eye and sniffed. Then Rosie hugged the elf with all her might. From the corner of her eye, she saw that Wrongdak also wiped the tears from his eyes and walked over to Itel.

“I don't know much about Etheria's customs, I haven't lived here very long, but as best as we can, Emily and I will help you prepare for Victory Day.”

For a moment, there was a moment of friendly, melancholy warmth that she had never experienced in her long, wicked life. Eti interrupted her and asked one very important question.

“Bina wanted to sell Ashrak here straight from Atrax. I think we need to get a permit for her. According to the brochure, this type of thing is handled by Swiftwind”

Meanwhile, another ship had now entered Etheri's orbit, it was much smaller than Bina's. Typically, such ships were used by the Hell Knights to pursue scums and criminals, although the Order of the Eclipse rarely used them for this purpose. His only passenger did not introduce herself to Susan by her name given on the distant Minitar, apart from her title, after all, she had not come here to represent the Order of the Eclipse. This was her private mission. She did not wear armor or even a representative uniform, only a simple cloak in the colors of the Order. She took the sword though, this planet might be the friendliest place in the galaxy, but she would never allow herself to be left unarmed, and besides, something told her it was best not to leave that sword unattended. Then she left the ship, her golden hair illuminated by the bright light of the moons.

Betrayals and disappointments

Dilayla felt disgusted with herself. She was a traitor, and of the worst possible kind. Most betray for some benefit. Money, position or something similar. Others were motivated by envy or old grudges. There were even those who took excuse in the Ephemeral Greater Good, whatever it might be. However, she betrayed out of cowardice. And not because someone was threatening her loved ones or even herself. She was scared to make a decision. Take the risks, knowing that whatever choice you make will have consequences. She was a mercenary who fearlessly threw herself into battle, but she was afraid to take responsibility for what might happen. This could have had a relationship, after all, throughout her life someone else had been telling her what to do. First her parents, then the Order, and finally those who paid her to risk their lives and... take them from others. She realized it was an easy life, in a way she never had to truly grow up. All she had to do was listen to orders and go with the flow, and she would have peace of mind. Even Bina's children , with all their unruliness and chaotic nature, were more adults than she was.

She was a traitor three times over. She betrayed herself. She served Iomadae, the heiress. Her goddess demanded of her followers to be brave, truthful and above all, to stand up for the weak and oppressed. And she simply broke all these rules by remaining silent. She was not worthy of serving the Goddess. Iomadae was gracious, but even she could not tolerate such a betrayal of her orders.

But she also betrayed her friends. These poor kids were at the mercy of such a twisted, vile creature. Okay, these weren't just defenseless kids, in fact they were dangerous and a little scary. They looked more like a squad of mercenaries than a best friends squad. But they couldn't do much against the dark sorceress. He probably stays close to them because he wants to use them as hostages or as a human shield, although in this case she may make a mistake, they will not be willing to allow themselves to be subdued, anyone who tries this will regret it bitterly. But evil Hag can manipulate them to suit its purposes. Bina's wards were hotheaded, and Rosie, naive and good-natured, it was easy to use lies and deceit to exploit them into doing what she didn't have the strength or courage to do, as corrupt leaders often did. Others have always been just tools to them, extensions of themselves at best, damned shadows that exist only to do their will. Over the course of almost a quarter of a century, she's encountered many similar bastards who treat others like things. She even got rid of a few herself.

She also betrayed the inhabitants of this planet. She didn't owe them anything, after all, they weren't her compatriots or someone she had promised to protect. However, the inhabitants of this planet were nice, as she could see during their expedition.

The five of them set off immediately after landing. They took one of the anti-gravity vehicles of the local faction of the Horde, which seems completely unlike Prime's technology, which they could see, for example, in that monastery. The driver was a short hedgehog or echidna person who radiated a laid-back attitude. The vehicle was agile and surprisingly fast, making Lady Cala's hair flow in the wind like bright yellow ribbons. If it were anyone else, she would probably be charmed by the sight, but not in the case of this bitch. She didn't like her from the very beginning, long before hook discovered who her mentor was. She was too perfect, inhumanly perfect, though not invincible, as Rosie had proven, but the white-haired girl was an enigma in her own right. There was evil hidden in her. Not Darkness, darkness sometimes hid in the souls of quite decent people. Some people just managed to fight it within themselves. As the followers of Serenae said, true goodness lay in the hearts of those who were able to break free from the shackles of vice, not those weak, arrogant Puritanicals who in their pride claimed that sin had no access to them. Lady Cala was pure evil. Cheerful, simple and easygoing, hidden behind a veil of benevolent nobility. Now that she knew that Miss Daisy was a Shadow Weaver. This tried to look at things from a different angle, but many things did not fit what one would expect from someone like the person in Wrongdak's story. Lady Cala did not at all look like a girl intimidated by an evil sorcerer. Their relationship was... more equal. Under the guise of pretending to be a well-born maiden and her noble and wise mentor, there was something completely different. There was mutual dislike between them, contempt bordering on hatred, as if they were rivals forced to cooperate by a greater, much more significant power. But who or what was she? Could it be Lord Admiral Antares, another monster they brought to this beautiful place. Although she had to admit that it all didn't come together very well. The Lord Admiral and Lady Cala had a distant respect for each other, but an air of superiority that was unlikely in a master and a servant. They could have pretended, but according to her experience, such prideful and arrogant people could never agree to be subordinated to someone who had no direct control over them.

And there was something else. After learning who Antares was, Miss Daisy fell into depression for several days, accompanied by drinking spree. It had made sense to her at the time, but now she saw it from a completely different perspective. Perhaps it wasn't out of guilt for collaborating with a war criminal, but if she was associated with the Horde and that Horde Prime... Or rather Wronghordak's brother… She wasn't sure what the relationship between the clones actually was. Maybe she was just jealous that that bastard Antares would take away her planet, which she intended to conquer only for herself. But her words, her assurances that there's a much bigger game at play here... Fuck! She was just a regular mercenary, not a damn hero. She decided to believe the one thing Shadow Weaver said. “And what she wants most is to bathe in blood.” Every time she looked at that beautiful, gentle face, blue eyes and gracious smile, she knew it had to be true.

They saw a town, small by galaxy standards, their driver said.

“I'll take you there, you still have to find another means of transport. I don't feel like driving you all over Etheri because I don't want to camp under the moons, especially since now it's said that strange beings wander the lonely places after dark. Shadows and ghosts. I tell you, shadows and ghosts.” he shouted overly dramatically. Arkan-tar nodded in understanding.

“The undead plague old ruins like rats plague landfills. In my profession, you have to be able to deal with these kinds of problems.” he smiled at the hedgehog , who scratched his cheek in surprise.

“Usually everyone tells me that I've heard too many scary campfire stories, but here you go, foreigners believe me.”

“These foreigners may even give you good advice.” Rechiza said in a serious voice. “Don't approach the shadows without a flaming weapon, and if you encounter a ghoul, a humanoid monster with long claws and fangs that reeks of rotten flesh, run away, because if it hurts you, you may contract a disease that will make you one of them. So if a ghoul scratches you and there's no healer blessed by the righteous gods, you'd better take your own life.”

Their driver stared at Lashnti with his mouth open, probably hoping she was joking, but the Warper was, as always, completely serious.

“Back to more... pleasant matters, would you mind selling this vehicle to us?” Lady Cala asked, smiling gently.

“For how much?” driver asked in a skeptical voice

“Three thousand swords.” Lady Cala said. The hedgehog whistled in surprise. It must have been a considerable sum of money, since they paid twenty swords to rent a vehicle for the day. Although their currency was not easily converted into the local one, and their equipment could be sold here with multiple currency exchange rates, it was still an absurd extravagance. Previously, she would have simply suspected that the aristocrat ostentatiously did not care about money, but now she knew that there were dark intentions behind her decisions. The hedgehog thought for a moment and then shook his head as he answered.

“Uh, no. It's a lot, but I would quickly spend that kind of money on stupid things, and then I'll be poor. I'd rather save up for a house slowly, or I'll buy another one and employ my brother.” he said, ending the conversation, but Ldy Cala did not want to let go.

“You might be interested in the amount of four thousand swords.”

This time their driver turned towards them and started twitching his black nose, clearly curious. However, she sensed that the other participants of their expedition did not like the aristocrat's extravagance, so she decided to take advantage of the opportunity and interfere.

“I know that the noble lady is used to being driven everywhere, but unfortunately during such a trip you have to give up comfort. I can walk everywhere there on my own. I suspect the rest of my companions don't mind either.”

Arkan-tar nodded, smiling sadly.

“We all get used to comfort very easily, but with such limited resources, we will probably have to give them up.”

“When we agreed to this undertaking, we accepted that we would have to face much greater adversities.” said Rechiza. The Warper had been strangely somber since meeting Adora.

Lady Cala looked at the mercenary as if she had only just realized that the other woman could talk. She smiled at her sadly and somewhat indulgently, as if she were a child who didn't understand anything.

“I'm not the pampered aristocrat you want me to be. I can, if necessary, endure hardships that people like you cannot even imagine. However, I believe that the mobility provided by such a vehicle is crucial to achieving the goal of our mission. Besides, Dr. Quin needs this vehicle to transport his things. “ she pointed to several boxes with strange devices that were supposedly necessary for the scientist. Ysoka nodded at the aristocrat and said.

“That's true. If Rosie hadn't turned out to be such a stinking lazy, or if you had let me keep Palidus Valgus as a volunteer intern wouldn't be a problem, but I would have to abandon extremely expensive equipment, paid for by the government, to the savages living on this backward planet.”

The hedgehog person gave Dr. Quinn a very offended look and Dilayla rolled her eyes.

“This “Palidus Valgus' name is Wrongdak, you should have learned that by now, and if you're worried about your gadgets, I can carry them. I finally have power armor, all you have to do is pack them nicely and I can carry them to the other end of this continent.” she said in a tired voice. The scientist considered her words for a moment, then nodded.

“Sure, at least you won't be as lazy as that deaf girl.”

Rechiza felt disappointed... even though she should have felt happy. Just like that, any fears about what Etheria might be disappeared like mist in the wind, revealing a beautiful summer morning. Now she could explore Etheria's secrets as she pleased, or not, nothing forced her to do anything. There were Lictor's orders , but they could wait. She found no convincing evidence that Miss Daisy or Lady Cala posed a threat to their expedition, although she had to admit that she hadn't been keeping a close eye on their activities lately. Other things were on her mind.

She met one of the First Ones... For her, it was something much more important than meeting one of the gods, although for such Anacites she was probably a god. Throughout her life, she researched the secrets of this extinct race. Or rather, a race that everyone thought was extinct. She never thought it was possible to meet a representative of an ancient civilization just like that at a marketplace... Even though these kids were the first who met her... Just wandering around the wilderness of Icarus. Perhaps she should be jealous, if it weren't for the fact that this Adora turned out to be such a... Disappointment. One would expect the last representative of one of an extinct, eldritch civilization to exude wisdom accumulated over millennia of enlightenment and knowledge beyond mortal understanding. That her body and mind would be the epitome of perfection. And she was such an ordinary young woman. Yes, athletic, as far as she could tell, quite attractive, but otherwise more than ordinary. Lady Cala is a more wonderful creature in every way, if she claimed that she was a full-blooded representative of this wonderful and terrible species, she would believe her without hesitation. But that woman was so full of doubts, so unsure of herself, lacking faith in her own power. And she undoubtedly had this power. She saw it when she transformed into this She- Ra person . This being... was a fragment of divinity, the seed of a god that was yet to sprout and reach its full glory. Only the gods were not supposed to be so human, so mundane. It was not the kindness and love of ordinary beings but the unshakable, unwavering power that evil feared the most. And yet everyone claimed that she was the one who defeated Horde Prime. It questioned everything she had been taught and what any reasonable being believed.

The city had at most a few thousand inhabitants. It was built on the trunks and branches of several gigantic Baobabs or similar trees, but several newer and more modern buildings were built on the ground. It looked like something straight out of a children's fairy tale. It was called Treehouse, what great creativity in choosing the name, and it was located on the border between the wastelands and the Singing Jungle. The surrounding areas were a forest steppe, a bit friendlier and more densely populated than Wastes. The city looked friendly, which shouldn't surprise her, so it was a perfect base. Here they also made their first, although absolutely unexpected, discovery.

They stopped at what looked like a parking lot for similar vehicles to the one they had rented. There was a notice board nearby. The first one to notice it, of course, was looking at the large poster and adjusted his glasses a few times, and then said, smiling with the corner of his mouth.

“That's interesting... Look. – he called to them. As they approached, she saw the announcement of the wedding that the AI had mentioned. There was a winged girl with purple and pink hair who had something familiar about her, a tall and handsome dark-skinned man, Adora, whom they already knew and…

“It's impossible...” she said quietly in disbelief. At first glance, she took her for that cat-like girl from Bina crew... She thought her name was Eti. She didn't look closely at the girl, she was too unstable to associate with, but the person on the poster looked remarkably similar. Not identical, but very similar. Like siblings or cousins at best.

“I think someone was hiding something from us.” Arkan-tar said with a dark note in his voice, but Dilayla let out a broken laugh and said with undisguised contempt in her voice.

“If you took the trouble to make friends with our captain and her wards you would know who she is.”

“Well, I noticed that you have developed a very close relationship with this Bina. Would you kindly enlighten us? – said Arkan-ta with his inseparable smile. The mercenary ignored his insult and began to explain.

“Her name is Catra, it even says it here.” Dilayla pointed to the inscription on the poster. “As far as I know, she's sort of Eti's sister. Both were created by Bina’s Father. Catra was born as a baby twenty-something years ago, but Eti was born as a teenager. For some reason, Jantar did not like Catra, andsold her to Doctor Sidonius, who used her in an experiment that brought her to Etheria. I know the rest from the stories of Wrongdak, who doesn't know everything. She was found by the Horde from Etheri and placed under the "care" of Shadow Weaver, a dark sorceress who was the right hand of the local Horde leader and the brother of our dear Wrongdak. This dark bitch was extremely cruel and mean to Catra. She was also close to Adora and probably not in a sisterly way since they want to get married after all Catra overthrew that dark bitch and practically led the Horde herself until Hord Prime came along. I'm not entirely sure what happened next, but I guess she got lucky because, hey, she's a grand marshal and she's getting married, so she obviously made better life choices than I did.” the mercenary rubbed her chin in somewhat theatrical thought. She and Arkan-tar stared at Dilayla in disbelief, so she added. “Do you see how much you can achieve when you are just nice and talk to your fellow passengers?”

Dr. Quin was paying no attention to their conversation, and Lady Cala… She had the kind smile on her face, as usual, but out of the corner of her eye, he saw that she was clenching her fist so tightly that her knuckles were turning white.

“This is disturbing information, although I'm not yet sure what it might mean.” said the Aristocrat thoughtfully. Well, she wouldn't care about the fate of both cat girls if it weren't for their connections with Dr. Sidonius, who created her cybernetic eyes. She didn't trust the ancient vampire, if only because he was an ancient vampire, but now it turned out that he knew about this planet and was trying to find a way to get there. She shouldn't have felt surprised, because after all, he wasn't her friend, or even her ally, just someone who gave her cybernetic eyes, probably as part of some experiment, but she still felt disappointed, although probably due to her own ignorance. So far, she has been accustomed to being the best-informed person, someone to whom others turn with questions, but recently she has come to the conclusion that her ideas about the world around her have little in common with the reality surrounding her. A damned uneducated mercenary whose worth was measured by how many people she could kill or maim in an hour knew more than she, who had devoted her life to discovering ancient and dark secrets. Something like that took away my confidence in my own competences.

“Well, Miss Dilayla gave us an enlightening lesson on friendship, cooperation, and openness, and we were able to gain information that we otherwise would not have been able to obtain. Congratulations. Now maybe we will look for an inn or hotel to rest and prepare for the purpose of our trip." said Arkan-tar with a smile. She sighed and nodded.

The inn was large and a bit empty, but it was surprisingly pleasant. She felt the aroma of apple pie wafting around her, making her mouth water. If someone had told her a few weeks ago that she would drool on Etheri smelling the apple pie, she would have thought him crazy. The sanctuary was run by a pair of Strix, winged, lightly feathered people with bird legs. These two had feathers like colorful tropical birds. They were happy to see them. They learned that many guests had gone to Brightmoon for the wedding and Victory Day. To her surprise, the owners looked at her with sadness and compassion.

"Oh, you're Vespa, but I guess you're not from here because of those metal eyes... We didn't know that representatives of your people live in the empire. Horde Prime did not like your race. Here you managed to hide in the depths of the Singing Jungle thanks to the power of Princess Sweet Bee, she is also one of you. But you didn't have princesses... It must have been hard for you... Giving you a free apple pie..." she smiled friendly, and she smiled back at her with as nice a smile as she could muster, but the effect was moderate, and she said.

"We are not from the empire, but from the Pact Worlds. Only recently did we learn about its existence."

The owner of the Inn's eyes widened.

"We had a few non-Etheri people here, but no one from outside the Empire. We didn't even know anything existed outside the empire. Horde Prime claimed to be the ruler of the known universe.

Then Arkan-tar sat down next to him, bowed courtly and said.

"Megalomaniacs like Horde Prime often claim that they have divine attributes. This is the defining characteristic of megalomaniacs, and I am Arkan-tar, a scholar from Kemanis University.” Verthani smiled, in his opinion, disarmingly, but the woman obviously liked it, because she blushed and asked.

“Oh, university! This must be a great place.” she said with delight. She wanted to roll her eyes, but even her natural eyes couldn't do that because they were faceted .

“This is one of the greatest universities in the galaxy. It is located on Absalom Station, the largest space station in the Galaxy. It is the center of the galaxy and over two million creatures live there permanently, but if we include guests from all over the galaxy , there will be at least twice as many.”

You used the word galaxy three times too many in one sentence, she thought sarcastically.

Soon, the owners husband joined the conversation with Verthani, who started telling stories to both of them. She snorted contemptuously. Such an intelligent man should focus and not allow himself to be distracted by such mundane matters. Soon they rented five rooms and had basically nothing to do until the morning.

Two hours later she sat at the table feeling broken. She ordered an apple pie and devour it all herself. Now she was looking gloomily at Arkan-tar, who was telling his owners about one of his numerous and probably imaginary adventures, and she was eating date bread with honey and drinking hibiscus tea. It was already dark outside, and Lady Cala went out to look around or do something similar, in her current mood she didn't really care. Fifteen minutes after the aristocrat left, Dilayla approached her with two mugs of cider.

“I'm not interested in women.” she said harshly and the mercenary she glanced first at Arkan-tar, then at her, and raised an eyebrow.

“I just noticed who you're interested in. And I really don't want to fuck every woman I approach. Even in Bina's case, I had to drink half a bottle of elven wine first, really good...”

“What do you want from me?” she interrupted the half-elf, a bit concerned about her talkativeness.

“Well, now when Lady Cala's left us... I have to tell you what else I found out.” the half-elf took a large sip of cider, as if she needed to give herself courage. “Miss Daisy is Shadow Weaver.”

She felt as if she had hit the ground after falling from a very high height. Previously she felt that she knew too little, now she realized that she knew absolutely nothing.

“How did you come to such a ridiculous conclusion?” she said slowly, trying to sound more confident than she felt. The mercenary smiled not very cheerfully and said.

“Shadow Weaver was a dark sorceress and, surprisingly, the ruler of shadows. Her face was scarred and she had fangs and claws. And I saw Miss Daisy's real face. Moreover, this woman knows things that the tutor of such an aristocrat should not know. And her suspicious interest in Eti, as if she recognized her as her pupil, or rather someone very similar to her.”

She listened to the half-elf's argument in silence, thought for a moment and spoke.

“It's only circumstantial evidence. Strong circumstantial evidence, I must admit, but still circumstantial evidence on the basis of which we should not draw such far-reaching conclusions...”

“She confess it when I asked her about it.” Dilayla interrupted her.

Now she just stared at the mercenary until she simply asked her.

“How did she confess?”

The half-elf shrugged.

“I went to see her right after we landed here. I admit that at first I wanted to kill her, but she managed to talk me out of it. She simply said it would be pointless and might even make things worse.”

Rechiza laughed briefly. She turned out to be an idiot. She assumed that Mr. Daisy was either an Old One cultist or a member of the Dominion in Black. But something so mundane and yet extraordinary was beyond her comprehension.

“And what now? Next you're going to tell me that this woman intimidated Lady Cala and now we have to save the beautiful woman.” She asked But Dilayla shook her head.

“No... It's Lady Cala that we should all be afraid of. “ the fear in the mercenary's voice made her shiver.

Calamity knew this planet to be a great disappointment. Yes, it was quite nice here, but there was nothing to fight over so hard She guessed it had to do with her inability to use Magic. Nyarlathotep, in their infinite wisdom, decided that she should not have access to this power, leaving her with only limited psionic abilities . She couldn't understand it, but even she was just a weak pawn in the game of great powers and had to come to terms with their will.

She was glad that the younger monster had gone his way, although she didn't like that Shadow Weaver was left with that scabrous bunch, but that was the will of the Creeping Chaos, they wanted the dark Sorceress to try to carry out her plan . She had no intention of standing against her.

And today she finally saw this creature. She had a rightful contempt for Adora and was disgusted by the little monster, but when she saw Catra she wanted to put out her claws and tear that face apart, even though it was only a poster. This being had stolen her destiny and condemned her to this meaningless existence. She swore to herself that she would not leave this planet until she turned that creature's life into a nightmare...

But now she had to fulfill the will of the Creeping Chaos. She sensed where she needed to go. She could feel places, where rituals were performed in the glory of blasphemous entities. At first she considered letting her hosts wait and hanging the driver by his own intestines, but she decided that would be terribly petty. In the future, she will make a rug from the skin of his entire family.

The meeting was to take place in the primary school building, which must be admittedly a surprising but ingenious choice. She entered the classroom and was dismayed to notice that there were children's drawings hanging on the walls depicting an idiot, a monstrosity, or a glitter queen. Eight cultists were waiting for her here, under normal circumstances it would have been pitifully few, but on this planet cut off from the rest of the galaxy, it was all she could count on.

“Welcome and rejoice, for you stand before the face of Calamity, Perfection Incarnate.”

Few happy moments

Alatar actually liked this place. It was colorful, cheerful and a bit rustic, but actually really nice. A bit like in the RPG sessions he played in... in his old life... Here it was like in one big LARP ... There wasn't even a network, although in LARP it was usually not there to stick to reality, and not because after It just wasn't there... He hoped, however, that it would be created soon, maybe they would even need a network specialist. Maybe he could get a job here...

Itel looked beautiful when she smiled. I wonder if she knew about it? Probably not. Itel smiled slightly more often than Eti, and sometimes he had the impression that she smiled less often, because in the cat-like girl's eyes he often saw sparks of joy, a bit similar to the one he often saw in his sister... Now Itel was looking around with a joyful curiosity not much less than Rosie's... He liked the deaf girl, and not just because Eti was attracted to her, which made his chances with Itel... a little better. She was simply joyfull and nice to everyone... Moreover, she had amazing skills, like a hero from a story, although that was not the only thing. Sometimes he felt like the magic around her was working strangely. He noticed it in the monastery, it seemed as if it was slightly disturbing their aura, as if it was sucking out the threads of power. Then he quietly cast a few spells on her, but he didn't discover anything new. However, he didn't tell anyone about it, if only because he was cast spells on the girl without her consent. Rosie might get offended, or Eti might do something very Eti-like, like throw a grenade into his cabin. And it didn't matter that he had no malicious intentions, he was just curious what the deal with the deaf girl was.

They found a tent where Swiftwind , the main coordinator for the Victory Day celebrations, was supposed to be staying. Or something like that. Eti started sniffing, and he also felt a strange smell that he couldn't recognize, even though he wasn't an authority. They waited for a moment, wondering what to do, but as there were no sounds coming from inside, apart from a quiet humming, Lilka shouted.

“Swjftwind!”

Almost immediately, a horse with rainbow feathered wings and a horn on its forehead jumped out. They were white colored and had a rainbow mane. I think these creatures were called Airicorns or something like that.

“Did someone called SWIFTWIND!” the horse shouted.

“Yes, Lilka. “said Eti, pointing to Lilka, whose eyes sparkled with hearts.

“Horsee!” the red-haired girl said with delight.

“I prefer to be called Swiftwind “ said the horse, a bit confused.

“Listen, Hoofy. We came here for two very important matters for the future of the universe. Firstly and most importantly, we want to obtain permission to sell Ashrak , it is a completely harmless drink that you can drink without fear of your health and without the risk of addiction.”

“And I have a question. Have you heard anything about the artifacts here? Where can you read about it? In some royal library or museum.” itel asked .

“ And let me ask you a question, where is the best one tailor here... Or at least the good one, because we are probably not as rich as the princesses and we cannot wear such wonderful costumes.” Rosie asked.

“And as for my second question about a mystery that touches on an issue that worries all scientists in the Galaxy...” Eti began, but he interrupted her.

“Don't start, Eti. We all know what you want to ask.”

The feline friend turned to him and spoke in that strange nasal accent she got when she started talking nonsense.

“How are you supposed to know that? You have developed the ability to read minds, or perhaps you have mastered the secret art of predicting the future. Tell us, Drakey, everyone is listening.” she started wagging her tail violently.”

“Maybe we should let the girl ask a question. It's interesting what the galaxy says about Swiftwind” Airicorn asked .

“Okay Eti, ask what you want...” he said with resignation and then Eti asked.

“If I prepared you for dinner, would you count it as white or red meat?”

Swiftftwind then opened its mouth and stared at them with its mouth open.

“You just met Eti and her wonderful sense of humor.” he explained to the winged horse in an apologetic voice.

“I have no sense of humor!” Eti muttered in an offended tone.

Swiftwind sat down, head down , and said in a saddened voice.

“I'm not that amazing anymore. People used to be in disbelief that they saw a horse talking, but now no one pays attention to it. Do you think I've Boring?”

Rosie walked up to him and hugged him comfortingly and said

“You know, Mr. Swiftwind. We have a telepathically talking three-eyed fish with tentacles on board. This is a high bar. For us, a talking horse does not make an impression.” she patted him friendly on the head, and Swiftwind smiled , which actually looked quite nice, but then he looked at Alatar, opened his eyes wide, jumped up to him so that they were almost neck and neck and shouted “Wait, you're a Dragon! Quite small but still a dragon!”

Alatar sighed heavily and said.

“I am not a dragon, but a Dragonkin. This is completely different, please don't confuse us.:

“This Dragon is talking!” exclaimed the aricorn as if he hadn't heard what the technomancer was speaking to him.

“That's what I'm saying... we've been talking from some time. And most of both dragonkins and dragons can speak and yes it's not true at all that there are dragonkin riders.” he blurted out before he could bite his tongue. He was glad that Lilka was in a horse trance, because she would probably tell him that he had just lied.

“It's kind of good because sometimes I feel like Adora would prefer me to be a dragon.” Swiftwind said with sadness in his voice.

“Well, could you please answer our questions?” said the technomancer, mentally promising himself that in the future he would leave him to be eaten by Eti.

“Oh, I'll show you around” exclaimed Aricorn .

Wonderful... Dragonkin thought.

She watched her temporary wards interact with Adora's mount with some amusement. Of course, she did it from a safe distance. They spent so much time together during the occupation that he would probably be able to recognize her voice. That's why she preferred not to risk it.

“Who do you think built this castle? It's damn big, even in Lastwall they didn't have such big ones... Although they defended themselves against Orcs there, but real, wild ones, not like the modern ones.” said Ireanis, looking at Brightmoon Castle . She also looked that way and thought about it “Honestly, I never thought about it. Brightmoon has always been something that just is. I used to think that Angela's ancestors built them, but now I would put my money on the First Ones. Of all the places on Etheria I know of, their influence has been the strongest here.” she said thoughtfully. They walked along the wide streets of the capital, covered with slabs of white stone.

“So Moonshadow is a pirate queen, right?” the silver-haired elf changed the subject.

“A pirate queen and a queen being a pirate are two separate issues...” she muttered to herself thoughtfully, but Ireanis continued her considerations.

“I once knew a pirate queen, a very aggressive woman. But since the old queen is alive, whether her daughter is the queen is an interesting question, Miss Daisy.”

She frowned. This was indeed a legal problem. Purely theoretically, Glimmer's coronation was illegal and all the decisions she issued had no legal force. This could cause problems in the future and Glimmer's enemies could take advantage of it... If she had any. She looked around. The atmosphere in the city was joyful, but she could see guards around, much more modern armed than those guarding her, keeping a watchful eye on everyone arriving for the festival. Perhaps it was a habit left over from the war, or a simple safety measure, but it could also mean fear of a real threat. She'll have to find out more about it... In due time.

They reached a large park almost impossible to distinguish from the forest. Here she and the silver-haired sorceress stopped and inhaled the pure Etherian air, absorbing the power with which it was imbued. At first she thought she had forgotten how great it felt, but then she realized it was something completely new. It's thanks to you, Adora . Thanks to you destroying the Heart she thought. For a few moments they just stood in silence, with the trees rustling overhead. And then she heard the voice that brought her so much joy. She turned around abruptly and then she saw her. She stood there, dressed in civilian clothes in the colors of the order, but at her belt she had her sword, the new one that Rechiza was looking at. Now she realized that it was made of the same material as Eti's hand. Could this also be one of the First Ones' artifacts? This was getting more and more disturbing. But now, she couldn't think about it. There she was, with her golden hair and that beautiful smile illuminating her usually stern face. At first, her heart beat faster, filled with pure joy. The one who was so dear to her, for whom she did so much, for whom she killed, was here with her. And then her heart sank as she realized where she was. They were on Etheria, her planet, and in Brighmoon , the place where almost everyone she mentioned in her stories lived. She knew the truth about her, she even knew her damned name. She just didn't know that this was the planet she came from. That she had kept knowledge crucial to this mission from her. She had no idea what the Lord Admiral was doing, but he was clearly successful if she came here dressed like that... She had to do something quickly... Immediately.

“Good... Good to see you.” she said quietly. Something in her tone or face made the Lady of Blades worry, and she walked up to her and placed a hand on her shoulder.

“Is everything ok….” she didn't finish because a stone fist hit her from the side. Ireanis, she forgot about Ireanis. She looked at Ireanis, who was smiling with joy and pride.

“Ha, I saved you again... From someone you once betrayed, tried to kill or tortured.” she exclaimed in a happy voice. She took a deep breath so as not to attack the sorceress with fury and said, trying to contain her outburst of rage.

“This is Asindesa di Vir.” She realized that she was not sure whether the elven sorceress should know the true identity of the hell knight. “My friend from Carurystal.” she said, emphasizing the word friend.

“But in what sense that you said...” only after a while did the Elf realize what was going on.

“I told you I wasn't in love with anyone from my planet. – she approached the sorceress from the lost Golarion and added in a low voice.

“And I prefer that she doesn't find out where I really am from.” when she was sure that Ireanis wouldn't do anything stupid, she ran to Asindesa di Vri to make sure she was okay. The Hell Knight was just regaining consciousness. She looked fine, except for a bruise under her eye. As soon as she regained consciousness, Asidesa jumped to her feet and drew her sword, so she began to calm her down.

“You're in no danger, it was my friend Ireanis. She is a highly skilled war mage who hails from the lost Golarion. It was just an accident, she is really very alert.” she explained, pointing to the elf, who was smiling a bit goofily. Asindesa looked at her warily, but sheathed her weapon.

“Quite a painful misunderstanding, but I've witnessed worse.” she said and squeezed the silver-haired sorceress's hand very, very tightly, until she groaned painfully, and she smiled friendly and patted her on the back, until Ireanis almost fell over. “But congratulations on your training, not many would be able to take me down with one spell, even considering that I have no armor.” said the knight of hell.

“Armor?” the silver-haired wizard asked, surprised. She cursed inwardly, inwardly, but before she could say anything, Asindesa di Vir spoke.

“I'm a Hell knight... Although I'm on leave now.” explained the lady of the blades. Ireanis looked at her suspiciously, but then smiled and said.

“Oh, I knew some Hell Knights on Golarion. They were very... principled people... I would even say uncompromising. On old Golarion, most of them lived in the thrice-cursed Cheliax... But enough about the past... I'll leave you to talk.” she said and hurried away from them with hurried steps. She watxged the silver-haired sorceress, wondering if she was starting to suspect something.

“Is she really from Lost Golarion?” Asindesa asked , breaking her from her thoughts. She shrugged.

“He definitely believes it. I have no idea what the truth is, but I know all too well that anything is possible in this world.” she said and looked at the woman who was so dear to her.

“I'm glad to see you.” Asindes gently touched her face . The knight smiled teasingly.

“Judging by your reaction, I wouldn't have guessed.”

She grimaced and began to explain.

“I was surprised. Besides, my companions don't know who we're working with, or even about the fleet.” she said in a low voice. She doubted Ireanis was eavesdropping on them, but she didn't want to risk it in this situation.” Besides, they have a quarrel with the Lord Admiral, a reasonable one in my opinion.”

“What do you mean?” Asindesa asked , concerned. She sighed and began to tell her what she had learned. About the civil war on Tarak, the support of Veskarium and the tragic end, and about Jantar having some unclear connections with Antares. Asindesa listened to her carefully, with full concentration. When she finished her story, the Lady of Blades replied slowly and thoughtfully.

“I've heard some rumors that people like that don't make a career without getting their hands dirty. However, I didn't expect it to be such a terrible story. However, I can believe it. Just look at the people around him. Lady Sorrowflame and especially Lady Ka are terrible women. Are you saying that Lady Ka is a clone? No one knows her past, but she is a psychopathic sadist. Her soldiers are a bunch of scums and thugs from a dark background. She keeps them on a tight leash, brutally punishing them for their insubordination. She orders her own soldiers to be shot when they retreat without permission. And Lady Sorrowflame , she's... She's a dragon... A real dragon. Her body was transformed by numerous implants. In itself, it has the power of a small army, but that's not all. She is a necromancer, even a necrotechnician . He can create terrible monsters that are a combination of dead bodies and machines. It is rumored that it originates from the Lost Golarion. Her name there was Ashaq the Annihilator although I have no idea how much of it is true and how much is fantastic speculation. However, if what you say is true, then these two are just little devils in the service of a real archdevil." The knight of Hell rubbed her forehead. She herself sighed heavily, on Etheria dragons were considered creatures of myth and legend. Supposedly, the previous She-Ra was supposed to ride a dragon, but she considered it unlikely. But if Lady Sorrowflame was a real dragon, then it was even worse than she dared to imagine. E*very day the light around me darkens and the world becomes even bleaker*. She thought bitterly and asked Asindesa di Vir.

"Does the Lord Admiral intend to come to Etheria"? She deliberately didn't use the word attack, but Asindesa shook her head and said.

"I don't think so , although I can't be sure. The Lord Admiral does not share his plans even with his own subordinates, let alone with allies he does not trust, of which I am proud to say I count myself . So far, the operation is going well. We managed to liberate Taurus from the hands of the clones who do not recognize Horde Prime's defeat. The Lord Admiral made himself at home there. For now, he seems to be waiting for the reaction of the rest of the powers of the region, including the rulers of Etheria"

She frowned and looked Asindesa straight in the eyes.

"So why did you come here?"

The Lady of Blades looked at her tenderly and with love and said.

“For you, my dearest. To experience some happy moments with you.” and she kissed him.

Hoofy took them to a very nice, at least in his opinion, tailoring shop. Of course, he ignored her extremely important question and moved on with Lilka and Alatar, and Itel and Sparkling Paw entered the shop. She felt very stupid staying outside. Of course, she didn't envy them for their beautiful clothes and such nonsense, her desert coat might have been a bit threadbare, and maybe it deserved a little more washing and a few small patches, but it was suitable even for a royal wedding, and it smelled of her, she liked her scent very much . But as her friends entered, she felt as if she had been left out of some extremely important event that the two girls could share together. That's why she decided to sneak to the back of the shop. Of course, she wasn't supposed to peek on them, although she didn't know if there would be anything wrong with that. She had seen Itel naked and even made love to her more than once. Sparkling Paw had also seen her breasts, so maybe it should be mutual... But just because she had no intention of peek on them didn't mean she couldn't eavesdrop on them, that was something completely different. They had no reason to be angry with her. Besides, she had such sensitive hearing that she didn't have to eavesdrop on anyone, it was enough that she was standing close and everything could be heard. The tailoring shop had no cameras, no alarms, and no combat sentinel robots ready to tear intruders to shreds. In fact, the owners of this establishment should be grateful to her for showing their a reprehensible lack of safeguards against spies and assassins . Assassins! It was actually the perfect place to carry out an assassination attempt. If someone is naked in the dressing room, when attacked, they will be too embarrassed to defend themselves... So you can say that she wasn't eavesdropping at all, but was guarding her friends against the attackers! When she got quite close to the changing room, she froze and listened.

“Don't worry, I'm sure you'll be fine. You can fence, it's almost like dancing, isn't it? “ Sparkling Paw said.

“I can dance. In our village we danced, our life was not only focused on hugging trees or killing innocent animals. I heard both versions at school. It's just, you know... It was a long time ago and I've never danced at a ball or anything like that.” said Itel. She sounded embarrassed.

“Don't worry, no one will judge you here. It's not like school, I've never been to one, but I can imagine how it is, and I'm sure you remember how to dance. You don't forget things like that. Even I haven't forgotten.” she heard Sparkle Paw take a few rhythmic steps, but itel sighed heavily.

“It's not just about whether I can still dance. I… I don't know if I should. Since... Ever since Kesler fell, I have done everything to... To avenge my loved ones and everyone I have lost. That's why I came here, to get a weapon that will help defeat the Swarm once and for all. And now I'm going to a stupid princess dance for a stupid wedding while thousands of innocents are dying across the galaxy. I feel like I'm the one killing them myself. By dealing with such nonsense, instead of exploring this planet and finding a way to achieve victory, I accept this evil. I should be seeking knowledge about this Heart, but I'm trying on fucking dresses. I feel lousy.”

Itel fell silent, but Sparkle paw took a few quick steps. She probably hugged her… Sparkle Paw and Itel hugging together… That's interesting. She came closer, very curious, but then she heard a sound as if Itel was struggling or pushing Rosie away.

“Why are you like this! So nice! I'm always mean to you, I insult you, and you still comfort me. Why are you doing that.” Itel shouted, her voice breaking.

“It's just the way I am. I don't know why... But you're just mad at me because you're jealous of Eti.” Sparkle Paw said carefully.

“And I have no reason?” Itel's voice was innocently gentle. Eti held her breath waiting for the white-haired girl's answer.

“I... I like Eti.” she could almost hear Sparkle Paw blushing. She was beautiful when she blushed. There was silence, broken by Itel's growl.

“Eti, you could stop eavesdropping on us.”

“I'm not eavesdropping on you, I'm watching over you so that no Assassins murder you “ she explained without feeling embarrassed.

“What Fucking Assassins!” exclaimed the Elf.

“Very sneaky and a bit perverted...” she explained, slightly touched by her friend's lack of understanding. The Solarian sighed heavily and said.

“Just go away and wait outside, okay.”

She huffed offended but did as she was told, but before she left she heard Sparkle Paw talking

“And back to our conversation... You don't have to take the happiness of all of us on your shoulders, because you also deserve a few happy moments.”

Eti waited for her friends for almost an hour, keeping track of the time. What was this about trying on clothes? For her, clothes had to be, above all, thick, warm and cover as much of the body as possible. Or they might not have existed at all. She watched the passersby with boredom. At one point, the girls invited her in and showed her what they were wearing. Sparkle Paw chose a light blue dress that beautifully highlighted the color of her eyes. Itel wore an orange-red strapless dress. She felt herself blushing at the sight. Finally, they packed the ordered outfits and went outside the store. Her friends seemed happy… Even Itel.

“Look what a nice earring I bought. Miss Deer helped me choose one that I can wear even though I have almost no ears.” Sparkle Paw pointed to a fancy earring in the shape of a white rose.

“I see that the shopping issue is already behind you.” she heard Grimmy's voice . There was a note of joy in it, something completely inappropriate for this woman. She turned around and raised an eyebrow, surprised by what she saw. The sorceress smiled slightly at them, and next to her stood a tall and muscular woman with golden hair. She had acid burn marks on her face, and a sword that looked disturbingly familiar at her belt. The woman looked no less basic than Grimmy, but she smiled warmly, and, even more strangely, she was holding hands with the dark sorceress, regardless of the fact that the hand shimmered slightly as it broke the illusory disguise. What does this place do to people?

“Hey Grimmy, Hey Razor. Well, Itel and Sparky Paw bought some clothes for the party, and actually, Grimmy, you should buy something for yourself too, because if you'll excuse me, you look like you're going to the funeral of someone you like?”

“Razor? Gloomy?” the golden-haired woman asked, clearly confused.

“Eti has a habit of giving others new names.” she explained to her… friend, and then turned to Eti. “Unfortunately, due to my… unusual situation, I do not want to use the services of a tailor, but I have appropriate clothes with me. This is my friend Asindesa, the Lady of Blades from the Order of the Eclipse. We met on Carurystal, and now, to my surprise, she appeared on Etheria. Now we would like to spend some time together. I hope you don't mess anything up along the way.

Sparkle Paw and Itel shook their heads vehemently, and the two women went away, leaving them alone.

“But she is with the Hell Knight.” said Rosie in disbelief.

“Seriously, are you surprised? Look how well they fit together ...” said Eti, pointing to the women leaving.

Alatar listened to Swiftwind telling them about his adventures with Adora She- Ra and what was planned for the Victory Day celebrations. In the meantime, Lilka stared at him as if enchanted and fed him with fruit bought from the sellers she met, and at the same time, Toshi, apparently offended by the lack of attention from her mistress, she bit the aricorn's horn and mane, and when the aricorn, absorbed in the monologue, did not pay attention to him, he lay down on his shoulder. Dragonkin and bit his neck, squeaking sadly. After an hour of monologue, Swiftwind began to tell them about the occupation and casually mentioned the Heart of Etheri. Alatar's heart began to beat faster. Now he has a chance to make a good impression on Itel. The elf will definitely look at him differently when he is the first to provide her with information about this artifact.

“And about this Heart of Etheria, so what did you do with it? Where is it located?” He asked. The mount became confused and said.

“Well, it would be difficult to hide it, it was quite large... in fact, it was all of Etheria. Among other things... Well, he's gone. It's a scary story, but it had a happy ending! - and he began to tell them about the end of the war with the Etherian Horde, what the Queen had done when she had her back against the wall, and finally about the last battle during which Horde Prime was defeated . And how Adora destroyed the weapon, releasing the magic back into the universe.

“Great story, isn't it?” Adora's mount asked at the end. Alatar nodded cautiously and replied.

“Yes, really amazing... I think it's time for us... We have to meet our friends now.” He said and left, dragging Lilka behind him.

Right after disconnecting from the magical steed, they sat by the fountain. Itel stared at the sky where the moons floated, seemingly listening to the sound of the fountain. But he knew her well enough to know that she was angry and sad at the same time

“You know, Itel, we can just go back to the original plan.” he started, but the Elf interrupted him.

“NO!” she turned to them and glared at them, then said. “Do you really believe them? In these lies they spread? No normal person would get rid of such a weapon. They probably deactivated it and hid the activation codes or something like that somewhere.” she looked at Brightmoon Castle . – And we will get them back today.”

“I'll just do one thing.” Eti said, and for a moment he had the impression that she was embarrassed... But he didn't believe it... Eti wasn't ashamed.

A few minutes later, Eti knocked on the door of the tailor's shop. A pretty deer girl opened the door and smiled at her.

“Oh, it's you. Are you friends with Rosie and Itel? Do you also want to buy an outfit for the festival” she asked in a cheerful tone. She nodded and said.

“Yes, only in my case there may be a problem.” she said shyly. The seamstress looked at her with sympathy.

“Oh, we served war victims many times. We have special dresses, and if you think you need it, my brother can make you a special mask. He has equipment straight from Icarus.

“This is a slightly different situation.” she said and went inside, then uncovered her face. The seamstress and her partner gasped and widened their eyes. She almost smiled at the sight.

“I need an outfit, but it has to be different than what she wear... that Catra wears. And not a word to anyone... It's supposed to be a surprise...”

„How did they left the Alliance!” she shouted, absolutely furious.

„Well, normally... They sent declarations of abandoning the Alliance. In the document establishing the Alliance, created, I would like to remind you, by your parents, there is a provision stating that you can withdraw from the Alliance membership at any time by sending a simple declaration. The only condition was that no battle could be taking place at that moment. Your parents also defined the term Battle, but it doesn't matter because I'm pretty sure there isn't one going on right now.” said High Minister Shou . She was an otter person who had held this position since her mother's time. In fact, Quen Angela was served by her mother, father and great-grandfather, and the ruler of Brightmoon must have really appreciated the services of this family. After the Galactic Horde was defeated, it was decided that the title of Prime Minister had a bad connotation, so he was renamed High Minister. She was actually quite fond of Shou, who helped raise her after she lost her father. She was her teacher and gave her all her knowledge, which was very boring she must have added. She spoke with an accent very similar to her mother's, which, combined with the judgmental look in her eyes, made her feel tempted to teleport to her room whenever she looked at her.

„What does Frosta say? Did she say anything?” She asked with a bit of hope in her voice. She liked the Ice Princess, and younger girl admired her. She certainly wouldn't agree to something like that. All they have to do is talk and everything will be clear.

Shou cleared her throat significantly and began to explain.

„They declared themselves the People's Republic of Snow. It is doubtful that Frosty's consent , or lack thereof, made any difference. Moreover, a few moments ago news reached us that Grand Marshal Catra had taken Princess Frosta aboard a vehicle belonging to Princess Netossa and was going to take her to their manor... Then they would take Princess Entrapta and Mr. Lance and Mr. George to them to their homes. But first they will bring Adora She” Ra , the princess of power, to Brightmoon, because she has very important news for the queen.

She blinked several times in surprise.

„Is Adora here? When did she come here? Are Princesses Scorpia and Perfuma here? What is this important news?” she bombarded the high minister with questions. The otter person turned up her nose in disapproval and said.

„ I don't know the answer to any of your questions, my queen. I'm just repeating to you what came to me. If you want to find out more, you will either have to ask the former chancellor in person or wait a while. If you want to do the former, I politely suggest putting on warmer clothes.”

For a moment she really was going to do that. Teleport to the Chancellor and yell at him for daring to destroy the alliance they had worked so hard to build. For whom they sacrificed so much, but thanks to whom they managed to achieve victory. Just... What would she do if he didn't listen to her? She couldn't rule with threats and intimidation... She couldn't, could she? She plopped down on the chair and Bow put a hand on her shoulder. She stroked it tenderly, but then John Killthem, ambassador from Bellum, spoke up.

„If I could speak, and I can, because I am present at this meeting.” His voice was muffled by the gas mask he wore, but she could still hear he radiated cheerfulness. “I could suggest mild retaliatory action using several nuclear warheads.”

There was silence as everyone present stared speechlessly at the ambassador.

„We will not bomb Kingdom of Snow„ she growled menacingly, glaring at the short person in military clothing who replied undeterred.

„I'm not talking about bombing the Kingdom of Snow. Its Annihilation would be definitely overkill.” he laughed merrly like Grandpa Moon from fairy tales. "We'll just bomb one small settlement and then the next, gradually escalating the conflict, unless they surrender and hand over the rebellion leaders so we can publicly execute them."

There was silence again, which was finally broken by her fiancé, speaking in a hard voice

„This is not the way we on Etheri resolve conflicts. Not doing war crimes.”

„There are no war crimes if you win the war.” John explained, as if he were quoting a popular proverb.

„Would you surrender if someone bombed you?” her fiancé replied. The ambassador thought for a moment and said.

„Good point.”

She rubbed her temples, feeling a growing headache. She had been in pain a lot lately, and she often felt nauseous in the mornings. She should probably go to doctor...

„Tomorrow I will demand an explanation from the chancellor or whatever his name is now. I want to hear everything from Catra and Adora first. And Frosta . First of all, Frosta. Anything else.”

Shou nodded and General Jocelyn and Astromaster Onyx Sky of Icarus stood up and the seccond person spoke.

„ We have other, more disturbing news.” the voice of the person from Icarus was strong and resonant. The arrived here right after the end of the war and was engaged in communication with other planets. They where much more communicative than the former ruler of Dryl and didn't get distracted so easily, so she actually put them in charge of interplanetary diplomacy.

„What can be more disturbing than losing one of our Alliance members?” she shouted indignantly, getting up from the chair again

„Taurus has been conquered.” Onyx Sky said and the entire Council Hall fell silent. Not as full of indignation as when Ambassador Bellum spoke, but full of fear and anxiety

„What happened... Was it Horde Ultimate? He finally decided to get off his ass and attack, or did these fucked up brothers decide to attack!?” she shouted d after a while, feeling fear turn into rage. Onyx Sky shook her head.

„None of them. It's someone from the outside. They introduce themselves as the Research and Exploration Fleet and claim to have come here from the Pact Worlds and Veskarium on a stabilization mission, whatever that may be. From what I understand , they managed to gain control of Taurus in less than a week, although I must also note that the planet was largely controlled by a local rebellion. They say they came here because they were attacked, although I don't know much more”

She looked at them feeling numb. She didn't believe there was anything beyond Prime's empire. She wanted his words to be true, that he had conquered the entire universe. Now, in an instant, it had become so much greater, immeasurable, just as Entrapta had said. Not only immeasurable, but full of powers whose true purposes they did not know. And it was she, as the queen of Etheria and the leader of the emerging Galactic Alliance, who had to face it for the good of her subjects. She sighed and narrowed her eyes. Then she felt Bow place a hand on her shoulder. She wasn't alone. She still had those she loved, her friends, with her. He'll definitely be able to handle them. She looked at the others. Jocelyn looked unfazed, as she had been throughout the war. She has always been a tough commander, having led the Brightmoon military for as long as she could remember, though Catra took over most of her responsibilities. In fact, she had been a general for as long as almost anyone could remember, because as a Saihe she was long-lived. Her mother witnessed Queen Angela taking the throne. She was mysterious and spent her last years with her daughter. She has reportedly been spending more and more time with Onyks Sky recently, but hasn't delved into the rumors. Shou looked terrified. She wasn't surprised. She spent almost her entire life on a planet at war and even helped rule it. She hoped that she would finally find peace. Now it turned out that a new, completely unknown threat had arrived. Castaspella and the other princesses were not here. These were only the ambassadors of Eridani and Aquarius. The first was a quiet and polite winged woman with beautiful golden hair who seemed to have a bit of a crush on her as well, named Tuo. She was probably the empress's sister, though out of wedlock, whatever that meant. Aquarius's ambassador was a short green-skinned woman with a bald head and big ears named Dayiuk . Despite its name, her planet was almost entirely covered in glass deserts, although it was not real glass, but rather strangely crystallized water. According to Entrapta, these were once oceans, although the inventor has never been to this planet. Of all the places in Prime's empire that they knew of, it was there that the memory of First One's culture survived the best. Only, unlike on Etheria, they were not treated as great progenitors who brought civilization with them, but as conquerors who destroyed their world. So when the Horde arrived and its ruler claimed that he had murdered this ancient race, they hailed him as a Hero, or as they claimed, a prophet... At least until he began to impose his tyrannical rule... Still, of all the planets that wanted to join planned Alliance, most of the Horde Prime supporters remained there, and sometimes very fanatical ones. Only John Killthem seemed pleased.

„So your wedding... Victory Day will be canceled?" Tuo asked in a shy voice and blushed. She resisted the urge to roll her eyes. Such shyness could be as charming as it was irritating

„That wouldn't be a good idea; „ Shou said in a serious tone, having regained her composure. "We have all been preparing for this event for a good six months, if not more. All inhabitants of Etheria and nearby planets will be able to celebrate not only the wedding, but also the end of the war that has cost us all so much. This would lead to a worsening of moods in all kingdoms. There is another thing. During all these terrible years of war, we never canceled festivities, parties and festivals, even when we were threatened by Horde troops. If we cancel the celebration now, we will admit that this threat is more terrible than the one they have faced for thirty years, perhaps even as terrible as the Galactic Horde. This would be contrary to everything we believe in, inconsistent with the spirit dormant in the hearts of the inhabitants of our planet!" she hit the table top with her small fist and then suddenly looked at the others with surprise, as if she was surprised by her outburst and looked down. She smiled warmly at the high minister and teleported next to her.

„These were wonderful words, High Minister. We cannot let fear rule our lives and take away the joy of celebration. Besides... We don't know if this Fleet has hostile intentions towards us. We only know that they clashed with Prime's loyalists, with whom we have fought many times over the past five years. Perhaps they are not a threat, but potential friends. Allies who will help us defend against Horde Ultimate and the Heavenly Brothers." When she said this, she teleported from one of the people present in the council room to another. Tua turned beet red as soon as she was next to her. "There is a chance for us to establish relations with the rest of the galaxy. They made friendships that... Well, which are what we value the most." when it ended, everyone present started applauding, and the ambassador from Bellum called out.

„The queen talks well! Let's form an alliance with this fleet so that we can bring the conflagration of war to the homes of our enemies!"

Again, everyone present looked at John in disbelief.

„The conflagration of war is not quite what I thought." she said carefully.

Over the next few hours, they agreed that they would not declare a state of emergency or notify the general population of the planet, but would quietly warn the space fleet and all concerned services of the potential threat. Then they moved on to some less important issues. Tuo happily informed her that Castaspella had agreed to the masquerade ball. She sighed as she heard her exclamation of delight. Catra made it very clear that she didn't want masks at her wedding, which she understood perfectly. It will be very awkward to find out that one of her few wishes for her wedding has been simply ignored, not to mention the hassle of having to make such last-minute changes. She just hoped it wasn't malice on Aunt Casta's part. After she approved the idea of serving a choux pastry cake at the wedding, Catra really liked all the creamy custards. After the entire session, she felt very tired. She teleported out the door, but still let Bow lead her away. She needed the closeness of another person now. This day didn't seem to be that difficult at morning. She got up in the morning with the belief that it would be another day of crazy wedding preparations, until suddenly she learned about the collapse of Alliances, at least partial, and then the specter of another war hung over Etheria. Was this how her mother felt, on the eve of the battle during which she lost her father... No, she knew the risk then... It was like when she found Adora, and the Sword... If she had left a few moments later, or if she had not quarreled with my mother, everything would be different. They would live in another world, or perhaps another universe.

„You know, Bow, I feel like it used to be easier. We could just fight the Horde, we didn't have to think about anything else. It was that simple. It was enough, as Frosta said, to punch the bad guys in the face.”

They laughed, but then Bow turned serious and said.

„ It wasn't easier, maybe just simpler... Do you remember how many times we risked our lives by rushing into battle? How many times have we been afraid of what the next day will bring? And the next morning, everything hurt.” he hugged her tightly, but she looked at him with furrowed eyebrows.

„I thought you'd have better memories of all this.”

He laughed warmly.

„Because I have, but I also remember that it wasn't easy. I remember how I lost you. How I was almost sure I would never see you again. It's not a good memory. Fortunately, now I always have you with me.” he kissed her. For a moment she felt pure happiness spreading through her body, but then she remembered everything she had heard during the Council and felt all the joy drain from her.

„But now it may all come back. We may have to fight for freedom again.

Her almost-husband hugged her tightly.

„And just now you said that you miss the war times.” he said, smiling, and when she gave him a sharp look, he added. “I'm sure everything will work out somehow. We must be vigilant, but we cannot be afraid of the shadows. Whoever these non-Imperial visitors are, they're certainly not as bad as Horde Prime or Shadow Weaver.”

She frowned. Unlike Catra and Adora, no she could hate the dark sorceress so much, even after learning that she had sent her father to Beast Island. Much of what she was able to do, especially in the field of sorcery, but not only, was due to her. She was wise and had knowledge beyond anything other sorcerers of the Mystacor knew. There was a bit of goodness in her that Horde Prime was deprived of. Still, she was glad she died. She would have to be judged, and she didn't want to do that, especially since Shadow Weaver wouldn't accept the verdict with as much humility as Hordak. She sighed, there was no point in thinking about that damned woman. The dead stay dead. She wasn't sure what to make of Catra's story about the non-dead in Mystacor, but she didn't believe the dark sorceress was capable of returning… and even if she was, she wouldn't be stupid enough to return to Etheria. The only thing waiting for her here was the hatred she had earned. She sighed, she had other, much more important problems.

„I'm worried about what happened in Frosta's Kingdom. In her country she always had to be strong, she could never show weakness. We didn't remember this because most of the time we met her outside her own country, where she could be herself, cheerful and feisty Frosta. But we didn't see that when she returned home she had to deal with the same problems as everyone else, and on top of that she had to prove that even though she was so young, she was fit to be a ruler. It's kind of our fault that she lost her throne."

Bow shook his head.

„Don't blame yourself. It's all Lonnie's doing. She must have had a hand in it from the very beginning. Since the end of the war, she has wanted to deprive you and the other princesses of power." he said in a sharp tone. He hadn't liked Lonnie since Frosta's Ball. She didn't really know her herself. She only knew that she was Adora's friend, but not Catra's, when she still lived in the Horde. They met several times during the war, mostly in combat, but after she got Etheria out of Despondos, they never spoke to each other. Comrade General, as she was now called, did not respond to requests to establish diplomatic contacts. At first she believed that they would eventually come to an agreement with the People's Rebellion, but now.

„It all started much earlier. Sometimes I think Etheria doesn't need princesses anymore." she sighed, but her fiancé hugged her tightly and said.

„Do not say that! You are wonderful." he kissed her and added. "We all saved Etheria, it's true, but princesses have always ruled Etheria. Just ask my dads. By the way, I still can't believe they left the library and went on an adventure. We led them astray."

They laughed happily.

„Go to sleep, my dear, I still have to sign a few documents today and make the final corrections to the anniversary celebration." she kissed him and moved to the Fireplace Room. But the warm, fatigue, and spiced wine soon overcame her, and she didn't even notice Bow laying her down on the sofa and covering her with a blanket.

Heist

„Eti, but are you even listening to me?” Itel shot the cat girl an angry look. “Even Rosie seems more focused on what I'm trying to tell you, not to mention Lilka. She writes down everything I said.” she pointed to Lilka, who was sitting leaning over a sheet of paper.

„Actually, Lilka draws horses and giant flying foxes. And I don't have a problem with focusing, I just don't understand why we do it...” Rosie said and added. „I'm not sure why it occurred to you to break into Brightmoon Castle ... We could have just talked to the queen or something. Not all people lie.” she explained, hoping that Itel wouldn't be mad at her. The elf was very decisive when it came to matters she cared about. The green-haired girl scowled at her, and for a moment she felt like she wanted to say something very unpleasant, but then she thought better of it and shook her head.

„Listen, Rosie, we can't count on the good will of strangers in such matters. Not when state secrets and ancient mysteries are involved. Maybe this Adora and the rest were nice, but when it comes down to it, everyone cares about their own people first. We can't trust them, we can't trust anyone except ourselves. Not when the stakes are so high.” Said the Elf. There was something feverish in her white-free eyes, not anger, but something like hunger. She wasn't entirely sure what it might be that she wanted, but she clearly hoped to find it in Brightmoon.

They talked in the forest surrounding the city of Brightmoon, because Itel was afraid that Mr. Ilemshaw would overhear them. She didn't like the fact that they were hiding something from Wrongdak, Mr. Ilemshaw and, above all, Miss Daisy... Especially the latter, she felt sorry for cheating her. She had absolutely no idea what to think of this woman anymore, but she couldn't be all bad if she had a girlfriend. Bad people don't fall in love... Of course, this Asindesa was a Hell Knight, she was afraid of Hell Knights because she had heard many terrible stories about them. Someone who dealt with the powers of hell must have been very scary, although this woman didn't look that bad. She seemed quite nice, she didn't look like she wanted to bring about ultimate order with fire and sword. Well, about that sword. It seemed familiar to her, as did the symbols, as if she had read about it before or seen it in pictures. She didn't like it, in fact it even scared her. What connection could she have with all this? This planet, the First Ones, poor Heart Gift, with this sword? She doesn't know what this woman's order does, although she recognized the symbol of the Order of Eclipse, but she didn't want them to come here to Etheria and destroy everything... Although it wouldn't be that easy, she saw what power Adora and the other princesses had... They defeated Horde PrimeHorde 1). Hell Knights were no problem for them... But Eti was right about one thing, they really fit together perfectly.

She just… didn't want to get into trouble again… and breaking into the castle was clearly getting into trouble. She just didn't want to seem like... a coward? Ball and chain... Someone who bothers you with his stubbornness.

„Itel, do you know that we can really ask about this heart, at most they won't tell us anything. "Eti suddenly interjected. The elf looked at her in surprise, but then pursed her lips tightly and spoke slowly.

„How do you imagine it? We can't just march into the throne room."

Eti tilted her head back as if she was seriously considering and said

"Why wouldn't we be able to? All we have to do is do this." she took a few exaggerated steps. Itel gritted her teeth furiously.

„Could you act like an adult for a moment and not play the dumb like in a comedy for idiots?"

Eti looked at them, apologized with her beautiful cat eyes, does the other one also have such beautiful eyes in real life, and said.

„But seriously, we can do it. The Blonde... Adora likes us, and she seem like a very... honest person, not someone who has any secrets. And then there's that talkative horse. And if necessary... I can show them... Show them what I look like and then they'll let me in... I'd rather not do it, but if necessary, I will."

Everyone looked at the cat girl in surprise. No one expected such a declaration from her. Finally, Itel spoke in a much softer voice than before.

„Eti... you have always been the one who is the first to embark on all crazy adventures... The one who is never afraid of anything."

„I'm not afraid. You know I can't." Eti interrupted. In the golden eyes of the cat-like girl, Rosie saw pain „But it's really not wise. We don't have any plan, we don't even know the layout of the castle, and we don't even know what we're actually looking for. We'll get there withot idea what we are doing!"

„Sometimes in war you have to improvise." replied the Elf, looking at Eti seriously.

„This is not the war Itel." replied the cat girl, wagging her tail slightly.

„For me is!" Itel punched the ground. The two girls stared at each other for a moment until the scout closed her eyes.

„Fine, we'll do what you want, Itel, but I have one condition. This time we won't hurt anyone. I know I'm always the first to use violence, the one who hurts even my friends... Even the ones I love... This time I want it to be different... Because this place is different Itel."

The elf thought about Eti's words for some time, although according to Rosie, Eti was right, there was no need to use violence. She didn't want to hurt anyone either. Finally, Itel nodded.

„Fine, we won't hurt anyone. Unless one of them starts first.”

Brightmoon Castle looked even more beautiful up close, it was truly like something out of a fairy tale. He even had an enchanted queen. Actually, this Glimmer looked a bit like a fairy queen. Although she had wings like an angel, they were actually a bit similar to Captain Moonshadow's, which was a bit strange. But she was definitely beautiful, although not as beautiful as Eti... It mean, Eti was very pretty, but Itel... Ugh, all four of them would definitely be friends... And Lilka and Alatar, and Wrongdak was already her friend.

Only now they were going to break into her castle. She hoped that she wouldn't be caught, because then the queen would definitely be offended at them and throw them into a dungeon full of rats, or worse, make them work off their crimes by serving the local equivalent of Dr. Quin. The problem was that she had absolutely no idea about burglaries. She had never even stolen anything, as far as she could remember. This observatory does not count because it was abandoned. Fortunately, her friends seemed to have a surprising amount of experience in these matters, which should have worried her, but in this case it was a good thing.

They tied scarves around their faces and, just in case, Lilka painted Orc war paint on their faces, although she seriously doubted whether the red-haired girl had any idea about Orc war paint, but it had to be admitted that it was really difficult to recognize them under these paintings. They couldn't come nearby in the ship because of Mr. Ilemshaw. Fortunately, Miss Daisy was on a date, she didn't want to imagine how the hell knights' dates were like, and Wrongdak decided that he would walk around the city and see what had changed. What Ireanis was doing, she had no idea, but it was a good thing that all responsible adults were busy now, at least for Itel…

First they had to climb the walls, which was surprisingly easy, because only Lilka had to climb the rope, Alatar and Itel simply flew up, Eti climbed do wall walk and she... got to the top thanks to long jumps, although she had the impression that she could also fly up. The sky above them was covered with stars, although the moons also provided some light, so it was surprisingly bright for a night. Itel didn't like it very much, but not enough to postpone the whole thing.

They found themselves in a wide corridor, lightly lit by crystal lamps, and the walls were covered with similar murals to the ones in the Heart Gift sanctuary, although these were somehow less majestic, but they were still pretty, they seemed more friendly, a little warmer. Overall, it was as beautiful as she had expected. Together with Itel and Eti, they moved ahead. This time, the shooter did not take her rifle or pistol with her, only stun and smoke grenades. At first she thought there were no guards here, but then Eti warned them to be quiet and a pair of guards passed them. They looked dignified and a little scary, but compared to the Azlanti they didn't look modern. They were armed with long halberds tipped with what seemed to be capable to electrocuting, and had armor that looked like modern armor with traditional cloaks over it. However, she felt like she and her friends were much better equipped. This time she didn't take her gloves with her so as not to lose or damage them. If anything, Eti could translate everything.

The guards passed by without paying any attention to them. They were having an intense conversation about some Frosta and the kingdom of Snow. They were really absorbed.

„Alatar says we need to look for a communication hub, or even a terminal. Probably both will be easily accessible, because the locals don't seem paranoid.” Eti said, but itel just snorted.

Finally, they reached a corridor that was especially densely covered with murals. You entered a large, unguarded hall. There were a lot of high chairs inside, which she didn't think looked very comfortable. In the middle was a table that would make Alatar smile with all his teeth.

„I think it has a built-in computer... I secretly copied the hacking program.” Dragonkin explained and walked over to the device and started tinkering with it. Rosie didn't know anything about computers, so she started looking around the room. She saw murals on the walls and started looking at them. There were a lot of them here and they represented different people, probably important to Brightmoon or perhaps all of Etheria. One caught her attention in particular. He was right in the middle, as if in a place of honor. It depicted a tall, winged woman standing behind a shorter, bearded man. It reminded her of something. After a while, she realized who it was representing.

„Listen, I think these are Mikah and Captain Moonshadow.„ she said, but only then she realized that she wasn't wearing gloves, so she quickly turned around so that Eti could translate her words, but suddenly she bumped into a pedestal, which fell and hit another pedestal. and another. She may not have heard the noise she made, but she felt a tremble as if the lock were about to collapse. Her friends looked at her with fear on their faces.

„Sorry.” she said in sign language.

"Deaf Idiot" Itel said, her face contorted with fury, but Eti interjected.

„Leave her alone, it can happen to anyone.”

Solarian she uttered a particularly nasty elven curse that her glasses couldn't translate, then turned to Alatar.

„How's your hacking going?”

Dragonkin tilted his head as if considering something and said.

„This is kind of weird. As if they had no security. Either they are very trusting or it is some kind of trap.”

„It's definitely a trap. Check three times before you do anything. Itel growled at him.” Eti and Rosie, check if we summoned anyone when we did this mess.” she said and Eti nodded and together they moved towards the door. It was quiet in the corridor for now, they didn't see anyone. Then suddenly she felt something strange, like a flash of power that gave her a strange taste in her mouth… like strawberry marshmallows. Her glasses told her " Zap"

A strange noise woke her up. She got to her feet and took a fighting stance. For a moment she thought the Horde was attacking and they had to fight off their assault together, but when she looked around she realized she was in her Fireplace Room. It was still pleasantly warm, although the fire was already dying down, and there were papers and a half-finished carafe of wine on the table. Bow must have put her on the sofa when she fell asleep at work and she didn't even wake up. He was so caring… But the thud was real. It was coming from downstairs, from the council room, where there was a computer table on which they displayed strategic plans during the war. The room was perfectly soundproofed, so you couldn't hear anything that was said there... Apart from the Fireplace Room, it seemed that one of the architects building the castle had some sinister cunning. However, there was no time to consider the intentions of the ancient builders. Someone had broken into her castle and only she was aware of it. She could call the guards, they would certainly be able to deal with any threat, well almost any, but she was Glimmer, the warrior queen. A Sorcerer Queen who was trained by Mikach and... Shadow Weaver, the most talented sorcerers in all of Etheria . She couldn't just run for help for any reason. I'm sure she'll be fine on her own. And besides, as she told Bow, she kind of missed the old days. She smiled smugly and teleported downstairs.

She saw five people in the Council Room. Four of them looked normal and one was huge and had wings and a tail. She couldn't say much more about them because they had scarves on their faces. She put her arms around her and said.

„I think I caught someone here.” she smiled cheekily, and then the hands of one of these people lit up and a clenched fist flew towards her and she saw all the stars.

She woke up when she felt someone lifting her eyelid.

„Hey Pretty one. Don't have brain damage? Sparkle Paw will be sorry” said the person who was leaning over her. She had a strange mask on her face and goggles over her eyes. She wagged her tail, similar to Catra's tail, nervously. Her right arm was made of a strange metal, a bit like the Tallstar prosthetic but still a bit more... ancient? As if cast from one piece of metal. She pointed with her tail at a person standing behind who wore strange glasses and was wringing her hands as if in despair. Apart from her, there was also a green-haired person radiating irritation, a figure with red braids wearing a poncho, and then there was this huge winged person. She felt a bit strange, her head and face hurt, it must have been a really powerful blow, but there was something else that she couldn't define. She shook her head to clear her mind of the daze and said.

„What? Who are you?” she asked, still a bit unconscious.

„ Well, I am myself, who else could I be? Are you sure you don't have brain damage? I think I could trepanate the skull...„ said the person with the metal hand, and the winged one added.

„ Eti, "I think I can" is not a good recommendation to perform medical procedures.”

„Maybe you could focus on hacking instead of wagging your tongue?” the green-haired girl growled angrily. Now she remembered everything. Breaking into her castle! How dare they! She jumped to her feet, clenched her fists ready to fight, and screamed.

„Excuse me, but what are you doing in my castle?”

The girl in the goggles turned her head to the side and said in a strangely dull voice.

„Well, we're breaking into the castle, you can't see? My friend wanted to know something about this heart Etheria. Oh yes, you can help us, pretty one. You see, my friend thinks you're lying about ruining Etheria's heart, but I'm not so sure.

She blinked. They were looking for Heart of Etheria! Why? Well, of course, they wanted to take control of the most terrible weapon in the Galaxy. This was getting serious... With a quick movement, she cast a stunning spell and grabbed the girl with the metal arm by the arm and teleported to the nearest guardhouse...

Only to find yourself in the hallway. She looked around confused. Something was wrong. Once in space, when she was Horde Prime's prisoner, she couldn't use magic at all, but now her teleportation just didn't work properly. It was a bit like the first time she visited Castle Crypto or... when Shadow Weaver trapped her. She guess, it was because of that punch from that other person. Did she really have brain damage? She didn't have time to think about it, because the girl she grabbed screamed.

„Let me go! No one is allowed to touch me. No one!” And she started struggling with it. She tried to hit her on the head with a metal hand, but she managed to avoid the blow, but the girl caught her around the waist with her strong legs, although she hardly used her left hand. This actually worked to her advantage, because she didn't have to hold her herself so she could teleport her... Except her teleporters didn't work... First she moved to the garden, then to the roof of the tower, and finally to the fountain. That girl fought great and was stronger than her. At some point during the struggle, her face was uncovered and she gasped for air. This girl… looked almost like Catra. Her opponent frowned and bit her hand. Her teeth were also as sharp as Catra's. She screamed in pain and moved to the safest place she knew, her bedroom.

As soon as she got there, she saw Bow , who was already wearing a nightgown, but he didn't look sleepy because he immediately jumped to his feet and drew his bow.

„Shoot it with a sticky arrow!” she exclaimed. She didn't have to tell her twice, Bow chose the arrow and pulled back the string, while she threw the magic missile at the girl so as not to hurt her. The arrow hit the burglar, immobilizing her for a moment, and then she began to cast a protective spell that trapped her in a protective circle. Then the girl began to look around with fear in her golden eyes with blue dots. Now she was completely sure that this girl, despite her painted face, was very similar to Catra. Not as a representative of the same people, but as a close relative.

„Let me out of here! You can't imprison me!” she screamed. There was panic in her voice.

„Glimmer, where did you get the new Catra?” Bow asked with surprise.

„Can you believe, she wanted to break into our castle?” she asked her fiancé, and he nodded with full understanding.

„It seems very... fitting, actually.” said the techmaster, and then Brother Blade looked inside. „ Is everything OK? “ he asked, and then he saw the prisoner and his eyes widened.

„Yes, we have everything under control, she said, trying to sound as queenly as possible. The clone nodded and added.

Grand Marshal Catra and Princess of Power Adora have just entered Brightmoon City's airspace and will be here soon.=.

„That's great, because there's someone here she'd like to meet.” she said, wondering if her news would beat the news brought by Catra .

Faith, Love and Anxiety

Mr. Ilemshaw was actually very pleased with all that progress. His species had never been interested in this sort of thing. Most of the Eldritch races did not develop technology like the younger races. They didn't need a lot of equipment. They were much more physically fit and intellectually superior to most computers. They lived extremely long lives, being virtually immortal unless killed. They did not possess the desires and fears of ordinary mortals, although they, the Alghollthu, were somewhat more like them in this respect. They had no need for entertainment or religion, they saw the world simply as it was. Many of them had psionic and sometimes magical powers. So they invented machines only when they really needed them. Most often, they were related to research, exploration or war. They would never have invented things like Infonet or feedback neural interface, thanks to which there was no need to leave the ship. In a sense, this pursuit of comfort allowed them to evolve much faster than the eldritch races that viewed them as mere curiosities, barely conscious creatures, suitable as slaves, guinea pigs, or snacks. Yes, the power of the ancient races faded, or perhaps rather dimmed as their younger successors took their place... even if only temporarily. Young races came and went, like the waves of the sea hitting granite rocks. However, it was impossible to forget that the waves were crushing the rock... That's exactly what happened here. The First Ones, an ancient civilization for some and the nouveau riche for others... Beings who, in their pride, wanted to annihilate the entire universe, surpassing even the ancient Azlanti who almost killed life on the lost Golarion... And it was said that his species was vile. Of course, they also helped significantly in all this.

He himself knew little about such matters. He was born during the Gap and remembered virtually nothing of his long existence, apart from certain facts, such as the fact that he was an outcast, a dissenter from his race. He guessed why. He was a misfit...

someone with a distorted psyche, because he felt... friendship, compassion and loyalty. This was alien to his species, and even such rational beings did not tolerate difference... not this kind of difference... That's why he didn't miss his kin. He felt good among the Bina’s crew, those hurting and suffering beings who were not broken and tried to make a life for themselves in this sad and indifferent universe. Yes, he liked them and tried to take care of them, even when they didn't want him to... it was enough to just go unnoticed, and it was easy to go unnoticed when you lived in a tank inside the ship. And here they came back to technology.

He didn't eavesdrop on the crew members or spy on them, although he wasn't interested in their physiognomy. He understood what privacy was and was able to respect it. He had his own ways to obtain the necessary information. Few people realized how sensitive ordinary scanners are, at least in the hands, although in his case they were more like tentacles, someone who knows how to use them properly.

His new passengers were a good example. The Verthani, the Warper, the Mercenary , and the Scientist were not very interesting, except for the hunter's eyes, which were a form of implant he had never seen before, but the rest was a mystery even to him, even though he considered himself a scholar.

Let's start with Lady Cala. She certainly wasn't human, which wasn't strange in itself, after all, many so”called pure”blooded people, even among the Azlanti aristocracy, had some inhuman blood in them. Usually elven or orc blood, but surprisingly often also planotouched blood such as Tieflings. All you had to do was look hard enough. But Lady Cala was something else entirely. Both completely alien to most inhabitants of the galaxy, but something well known, and very closelly reated to their species. Something that did exist not only in the visible part of the universe. Something that aroused fear even in such inhuman beings as Mi-Go. He considered telling the truth to his friends, but feared the repercussions. Such a nefarious creature could want to kill everyone and probably succeed, especially if Miss Daisy helped her.

The elf was a separate riddle. She was a mix of Drow and Elf, nothing strange in these times, but there was something else. Her true form was something equally evil as Lady Cala, something that distorted the flow of magic around her. She was like a magical vampire who absorbed the power around her. But most of her power came from a place he couldn't place beyond the fact that it was strange and terrifying. He wasn't an expert in forbidden knowledge and dark magic, but he didn't like her either, although the woman seemed less evil than her ward.

And then there was Rosie, perhaps the greatest mystery of all. A dna scan showed she was an ordinary human. Although it was difficult to determine her origins, she did not fit genetically into any of the factions of humanity, on other hand this species was so widespread in the galaxy that it was impossible to know them all, and her story sounded very credible. But she certainly wasn't who she said she was... He first became suspicious when he heard the kids talking about how she fought on Saltmarsh. Glowing hands and jumping on buildings were definitely not skills an intern should have. But he gained confidence during that training fight with Lady Cala. A being claiming to be an aristocrat should not be defeated in battle by any mortal, especially not one like Rosie. The girl was blazing with power like a flare in the dark, but at the same time she was bending the flow of magic around her. He couldn't explain it, but despite her nice and friendly nature, the white-haired girl aroused his concern much more than the supernatural monster and the sorceress corrupted by dark art.

But he knew more in another respect, too. His drones had a much greater range than others had thought... although that was no secret, all he had to do was read the instructions. Sometimes he had the impression that reading the documents attached to the products they bought was, for many inhabitants of the galaxy, an effort comparable to reading an ancient book written in a long-extinct ancient language... Thanks to the drones, he was able to observe Bina's wards. He started doing this after the events on Saltmarsh, where he played fool and told the captain that he had no idea that the kids had gone into town alone. Fortunately, nothing really dangerous happened on Icarus. The princesses turned out to be really nice and understanding people. But here the situation got worse. First Eti set the bar on fire, and now Itel was planning something. First she disappeared into the forest, and now she ran into the ship and got into the hidden compartment where they kept... things they should never have used. He had to seek help... from other members of this expedition, none of whom, unfortunately, were completely trustworthy. He had to deal with what he had...

He felt lost. Once, not so long ago, he knew what was right and wrong, but now... Now he was helping the woman who hurt his friends... all of them. Which pushed his brother towards the worst evil. Why is he doing this? He wasn't entirely sure. It was probably also about fear. Even before he learned the truth about the dark sorceress, she terrified him. And now… He knew that she would be able to kill him without the slightest effort. Or she could wipe his memory and he would be that scared and lost creature who didn't even know his name. She could then shape him however she wanted, just as she had tried to do with Adora . She would force him to turn against his friends. He would give his life for his friends, but the thought of becoming someone's slave again terrified him. But it wasn't just about fear. He was taught obedience and always had problems making independent decisions. And now his brother told him to be silent, just as he had been when he left Etheria. He trusted Hordak , he was the most experienced of all the clones and Entrapta's beloved, but... He wasn't sure if he was wrong in this case, he wouldn't let this woman manipulate him again, after all, she knew him better than even the ruler of Dryl. Unfortunately, and worse, even auntie Casta and Glimmer’s dad, as he learned from listening to his young friends, had no objection to this evil woman's return to Etheria.

But the worst part was the remorse. He hid the truth from his new friends even from Rosie who was always nice to him and Eti who was somehow involved with Catra. He didn't tell them that they would be traveling with the sorceress who had hurt their scout's sister so much. He was a fool who allowed the servant of darkness to return to Etheria so that she could continue to do evil. In his defense, she was really nice to Eti and Rosie, and even to him... It was all a lie though. He knew well how easily others could be deceived by lies and seemingly noble words. He knew it firsthand. He was, after all, a clone of Horde Prime .

He barely slept that night and barely ate dinner, listening to his young friends talk about Mikah, whom Itel, for completely incomprehensible reasons, mistook for an Azlanti. privateer, and mysterious Heart Gift that everyone felt sorry for, and then they went to Brightmoon . He missed this city very much, although not as much as he missed his friends. But he couldn't meet them because he wouldn't be able to hide the truth from them, and he wouldn't know what he would do if it was revealed. Wouldn't Shadow Weaver be willing to punish his new friends instead. He knew from Catra's stories that she could be cruel and ruthless. That's why he decided to explore the city with Emily.

He immediately noticed how much it had grown. They were now surrounded by a true Energy Shield, protecting the inhabitants from attacks by enemies that might come from outer space. He saw how diverse this city had become now. He saw here not only the former inhabitants of the Etherian Horde, but also people from other planets such as Icarus , and even his Brothers, although not many. He learned that most of them now live either in the former Fright Zone or in Plumeria. As he watched the joyful inhabitants of the capital, he felt a renewed sense of guilt, for he knew how unaware they were of the evil walking beside them, which he had helped bring here.

Suddenly he was surprised to see something he had never seen before on Etheria, the true temple. As far as he knew, there were no temples on Etheria so far, in fact he had never heard any of his friends ever mention gods or things like that. He wasn't sure what to think about religion. The Horde prime ordered him to be worshiped almost as if he were a god himself and at the same time he ordered the destruction of the temples of the so-called false gods. But many of his Skittermanders were religious, and one was even a true priest of Desna. So everything was ambiguous and not obvious to him. Emily chirped at him curiously, she was definitely more fond of priests and temples, especially a one android who was a Triune priest… He nodded and said.

„Yes you are right. We'll look here. Maybe we'll find something that will help us make the right decision.”

The interior was bright and transparent. He had seen many stained glass windows here, but in a different style than the ones he usually saw on Etheri. First of all, they had eyes, something that was avoided on this planet when images of intelligent beings were created. The characters they depicted were familiar to him, although here they were all gnomes. There was the good and merciful Serenae, the brave Caiden , the terrible Asmodeus... He approached the image of the warrior but also noble Iomadae. He always liked this goddess because she reminded him a lot of She-Ra, although it wasn't as noticeable here because... well, she was a gnome.

„Oh, hello, I'm glad you visited the temple of All Gods... This is Iomdi ... let me tell you about her.” said a tall, gnome woman with golden hair and eagle wings. He didn't see her at first when he entered. He smiled and said.

„I know who she is. I even went to the Ascension Day celebration once. This was on Vesk III. There they call it Iomadae. She is liked by the nicer Vesks who do not want to listen to the conquest-hungry Damoritosh.”

„Oh, Each God may be known by a thousand names and in a thousand forms, but there is only one soul. I haven't heard of Vesk III, although I don't know most of the planets conquered by your... By Horde Prime.„ She smiled at him, but he shook his head in response.

„It's outside the empire, in Veskarium . He never got there, I'm not even sure he could handle it. The Vesks are warlike and know magic”.

The winged woman's eyes lit up with unconcealed joy.

„ It's wonderful that belief in gods has survived in the galaxy! We, the people of Eridani, are often treated as weird because of our religiosity... Here on Etheria, everyone is especially suspicious because their first contact with faith was through Horde Prime. Not many people visit this place, but I am not discouraged and I work patiently. HordeH Oh, I forgot. My name is Brine.” she offered him her hand, which he shook with a friendly smile. Then they both looked at Emily, who was looking around the temple indignantly.

„What is this Bot looking for?” Brine asked with surprise.

„I think he's looking for Triune's portrait. He likes them very much.” he explained to the priestess, who looked at him with surprise.

„I've never heard of such a god, at least by that name.”

He shook his head and began to explain.

„These are very young gods... They patronize wise machines, like Emily, and journeys through the Drift.”

The priestess began to look at him curiously.

„Are there any other gods there that I didn't know about?” Brine asked with joy in her voice.

He thought for a moment and said.

„ I don't know much about this type of thing. There is Damoritosh, but I don't like him very much. He is the god of war and conquest, he reminds me too much of His... Horde Prime. The Vesks respect him. They are such warlike and honorable lizards. Their relatives live here on Etheri, but they are completely different from those in Veskarium. And then there is Hylax , goddess of the collective mind, friendship and community. He is the patron of Shirens, species of friendly Insectoids , quite nice, most of them... I think she would be liked here on Etheria. There are a few other gods, but I don't know much about them, I've never been interested in religion.”

Though his information was sparse, Priestess Brine noted everything.

„Thank you very much. Thanks to you, I learned a lot about the universe and its secrets.” she hugged him tightly and friendly, making him blush.

„Oh, hello Brondak, it's nice to have you here. I'll just pray and we can go for coffee or whatever they drink! here” Ireanis called from the entrance. Brine immediately ran to greet her. He felt a slight twinge of jealousy, but also anxiety. He was afraid of Shadow Weaver, but this Elf aroused his dislike. She seemed to know the true identity of the dark sorceress, but she didn't seem to care about it, even though that terrible person was threat to her friends! Had the alcohol completely eaten her brain? He had absolutely no idea, although his brother had a very deep disgust for all drugs. He waited a few minutes while the sorceress prayed before the images of Cayden and Serenae, and then he followed her outside.

„Ah, isn't it beautiful here, Bondak?” Ireanis asked him, looking around with sincere delight.

„My name is Wrongdak, we have been traveling together for a month, you should know my name by now.” he said with undisguised resentment in his voice.

„You know, I was a bit drunk most of the trip, so I didn't remember everything.” she explained to him with a goofy smile on her face.

“Is that why it doesn't bother you that you work with someone like her?” he asked sharply. The silver-haired sorceress looked down as if she was considering something and finally spoke in a surprisingly serious tone.

„I'm not someone who would have the right to judge her. Out of fear, I threw my disciples into the black flame of Ashaq The Annihilator”

„What? What are you talking about, sorceress?„ he asked with surprise.

She turned to him.

„Where I lived, there was a vile dragon called Ashaq the Annihilator. It was a terrible undead monster, a vampire that left only death and ashes in its wake. Natambu, the wonderful and ancient city where I once lived, decided to organize an expedition to defeat this evil once and for all. I commanded a unit of war mages who were supposed to bring down this monster with their power. Most of my comrades in arms were my former students. Together we were sure of victory, in fact we celebrated it. But when we faced this terrible creature... It was able to kill dozens of soldiers with one breath, and then they fought against us as undead. He regenerated all the wounds we inflicted on him as he absorbed the lives of the combatants. However, we were so close to victory, but it was uncertain, so Ashaq contacted me and offered to let me go if I betrayed my comrades. So I did. I was so afraid of dying, of becoming undead. I should have been strong, I should have been brave, but I turned out to be just a coward. I survived, but I abandoned my companions. In Nantambu I told a probably sounding fairy tale. Some believed me and took pity on me, but others saw through the lie and condemned me, and I started drinking.”

After hearing this story, he remained silent, because what could be said... He simply hugged the woman and let her cry on his shoulder. After a while, however, a voice came from the sky.

„I'm sorry to interrupt such an intimate moment, but I have to inform Mrs. Ireanis that Itel has just found her way to the hidden compartment, and Eti is nowhere to be found.”

The sorceress broke free from his grip and ran towards the ship, shouting loudly, "Fuck, fuck, fuck."

He exchanged a look with Emily, shrugged, and ran after the silver-haired woman.

She rested her head on Miss Daisy's shoulder and stared at the sky full of stars. Miss Daisy, Light Spinner ... Shadow Weaver... She loved her under all her names, no matter what past they hid. She had been sneezing from the very beginning, ever since that ball at Archduke Adamson's court. Then there was that trip to Kranor Rill, where they both almost died, where she became sure of her feelings. She thought that this trip would separate them, but it turned out that they would meet on this planet and be together, at least for a short while...

First, they walked through a city full of beings so unaware of the darkness she had faced all her life... No, they were not unaware of the darkness, they had received their share of evil too... they just overcame it. Yes, these Etherians were so strong and brave, but they had not lost that something that made them so open and joyful. Many of her brothers and sisters could learn from them.

She wanted to buy a bottle of wine and a basket of fruit, but her lover said she had given up drinking, so they took a carafe of lemonade, quite sour. She was proud of the sorceress, because already during that ball she noticed that the woman had a drinking problem, and her stay in Grayskull Castle confirmed her in this belief. Fighting addiction was difficult, it required strength that even other hell knights often lacked.

While walking around the city, they didn't talk much, just their closeness was enough. They held hands, although they tried not to let anyone notice that the sorceress was wearing a holographic mask, even people as open-minded as the inhabitants of this planet could react to the sight of Miss Daisy's true face. Even she didn't want to think too much about the reason for what happened to her beloved. She just wanted to enjoy her presence... At first she felt awkward, feeling the stares of passers-by, but when they smiled at her, she smiled back at them.

He was dismayed at the sight of the sorceress's young charges, and when she saw that he was meditating with this silver-haired elf, she felt an involuntary twinge of jealousy, but now they were together, lying on the green grass, not caring what fate would bring. She knew that her beloved was hiding some dark secret, but the same could be said about her. However, as they lay there together, she suddenly heard a loud, slightly metallic voice speaking.

„Sorry to interrupt your happy moments, but I would suggest that Miss Daisy return to the ship as soon as possible if you want to prevent an incident involving the use of nuclear weapons.”

We feel the evil coming...

We feel the evil coming…

Coming back from the Kingdom of Snow wasn't easy... Not that anyone would dare to stop them, not even that son of bitch Chancellor would try something so stupid. No, this was about something completely different. When she set out on this journey, her only concern was her origins, that she had somehow ended up here from outside of Etheria. But it didn't really matter... At least that's what she tried to tell herself. But now... First Lonnie's attack using a weapon of unknown origin, then the discovery of another dark chapter in Etheria's history, then Adora bringing news about Queen Angela, and now this... She couldn't believe how quickly the joy of victory could turn into the bitterness of defeat. Could they have prevented this? She doubted this. "It all started long before this that adventure. The Shadow Weaver's sisters and the Chancellor have been developing this plot for long time... They have been weaving their dark web for months. How typical of this lousy family. ' She thought bitterly. She wasn't sure if Lonnie had any part in this plot. Back when they were cadets, Lonnie was always the one who accused her of foul play and cunning. She doubted that her former friend had changed so much. But did it even matter? She looked at Frosta, who was sitting fastened in a chair and staring blankly into space. Earlier, she cried for a while and asked if she had really failed her kingdom, now she was just silent, deep in despair, which was even worse. They tried to comfort her down, but they couldn't, because what they could do was that her own government didn't want her. She had no idea what the common people of the kingdom thought of their ruler. She had never visited this kingdom, it was stupid to admit it, but she didn't like the cold, especially the fact that her tail was freezing. "This is one of our many negligences. In their complacency, they took it for granted that everyone wanted them to rule or were happy with the situation on Etheria. When I come back and the wedding is over, we will have to take a trip around Etheria and find out what the mood is on the planet. Maybe if we had done this earlier, Frosta would still be the ruler of her kingdom now.” She clenched her fists in anger, because it was Lonnie's fault and what she preached. It was because of her that Frosta lost her home overnight. The former cadet's anger towards her has unleashed something she can no longer control, which could lead to the disintegration of all of Etheri. Isn't shea bit like me? I almost destroyed an entire planet because my anger blinded me so much. I'm no better than you, Lonnie, but you're no better than me either.

When they landed near Netossa's court, the ruler of Armoria took Frosta with her. Before her friend left the deck, she asked her.

„Are you sure you don't want to come with us to Brightmoon? Glimmer will be happy to have you visit. Besides, victory day is coming soon and we'll need you at our wedding.”

Tears appeared in the Ice Princess's eyes again.

„NO! Glimmer can't see me now! I failed her! She lost entire kingdom because of me! I'm just a stupid little Frosta that even my own people don't want.”

Adora stood next to her and smiled as she said.

„Now rest with Shogi , because it was a difficult trip, but you must come to our wedding, because who better to take care of the guests' safety. You will do it best, because you are the bravest of all princesses.

She nodded half-heartedly and petted Shogi , who was mewling pitifully.

„Yes, if I'm needed, I'll come, but I don't know if it's a good idea.”

They left her with Spinnerela, who come with Quickling and Greypaw to greet the Ice Princess. Netossa also stayed there, reluctantly handing over the family treasure to Entrapta to use with the express order that she should make no improvements, modifications or corrections. The inventor was to take them to Brightmoon, and then return to the united kingdom, from where she would drive away in her automated Skimmer, which in turn would give them back on their Wedding Day... Or not. It would be good for the former ruler of Dryl to have her own means of transport to visit them and not be tied to her castle. With similar thoughts, she approached Entrapta sitting in the cockpit and spoke in a serious voice.

„Listen. When I get back to the castle, I'll talk to Glimmer and arrange for... all three of you to come to the wedding."

Entrapta looked at her in surprise.

„But we have already received an invitation to the wedding."

She was about to explain to her friend that the invitation almost certainly didn't mention Hordak, but she thought better of it and just hugged her tightly.

They reached Brightmoon at night, so Entrapta would probably have to stay here until morning to sleep. The three of them went out to the castle landing field, where there was surprising confusion. They waited for a few moments for Glimmer, to see her running towards them with Bow. She frowned, feeling a twinge of anxiety. Sparkle didn't like running around the palace when she didn't have to, and she absolutely always teleported to them when they arrived in Brightmoon after a long absence and gave them a hug. You knew from her friends' stories that, apart from her time in space before the Heart's destruction, the last time something like this had happened was when she escaped from Shadow Weaver's captivity when she was somehow cursed. Adora thought the same thing as she became very tense.

„Catra! Adora! It's great that you're here! And you too, Entrapta! You will definitely come in handy here! Come with me!„ Glimmer spoke so fast that her words blurred into one string and she turned on her heel and was already running back, but she stopped her while talking.

„Sparkle, we also have important news... I think you should listen it.” she said carefully. Entrapta looked between her and the queen.

„Whatever you have to tell me, it can wait. There's someone here you should meet.” Glimmer gestured excitedly. She sighed. Perhaps an ambassador must have arrived from one of the previously unknown planets conquered by Prime. There were so many of them that no one, except perhaps the mad Tyrant, could count them. Melog's tail wagged slightly greenish yellow due to anxiety and confusion. She took a deep breath and said.

„Whoever this person is, they can wait.” she started, but Adora interrupted.

„Glimmer, your Mom... She's alive... but.” her fiancée lowered her eyes. The Queen stared at them for a long moment, as if she didn't understand what they were saying, and then she blinked, her eyes widening in a mixture of disbelief and delight. Only now did she notice that Glimmer had a black eye and a bite mark on her hand. Who was she training with?

„Is she here with you?” the ruler of Brightmoon asked hopefully, and Melog sniffed the bite and suddenly felt an urgency from him, as if he really wanted to go to where Sparkle had come from.

„No, she's not here. Oh Glimmer, I'm so sorry.” Adora said and looked down. Glimmer closed her eyes and shook her head.

„Then we can wait a little longer. She is here. Her name is Eti and… You have to see her.” there was so much excitement and concern in Glimmer's voice that she was scared herself, and Melog nudged her urgently with his head.

„Is Eti here? That's great! I was telling Catra about her and her friends. We met on Icarus . She knows your mom… or person who she has become... „ Adora hesitated, Glimmer looked at her carefully, and Bow asked.

„But have you seen her face?”

Adora nodded cautiously.

„Well, yes... although not entirely, because she was wearing a mask on her face... I guess she had a terrible accident, she probably lost her hand during it, and... this hand is an artifact of the First Ones „ said the heroine of the universe and Entrapta shook his hair, and fires lit up in her eyes or pure joy.

„Artifact of the First Ones! Lead the way!” exclaimed the Inventor and almost started running on her own. Her anxiety grew as she remembered a dream...

„You didn't say she didn't have a hand.” she whispered, and Melog glowed blue.

„So you didn't see her face...„ Glimmer said quietly, and she felt a shiver run down her spine.

„Her face.” she understood why Melog was rushing her so much and she started running on all fours.

„This is definitely a bad idea.” Rosie tried to say, but she still had no gloves, and Eti was kidnapped by the queen, so there was no one to translate what she said.

„Stop waving those paws, just be useful for something and hold the other side.” Itel said with a furious expression and pointed to a large metal object that they had pulled out of a hidden compartment on the ship.

Escaping from the castle wasn't as difficult as they expected, although at first itel wanted to look for the cat girl, but Alatar talked her out of it, saying that they wouldn't be able to fight the entire guard, although Lilka was convinced that they could handle it without any problems.

“I'm an orc, I can deal with even a hundred of these guards myself, and you take fifty each and we'll manage somehow.” the red-haired girl explained. They didn't argue with her.

To be honest, she wasn't sure whether the technomancer's words had convinced the elf or whether she had simply come up with a new, better plan. which she began to put into practice as soon as they reached the ship. She led them to a hidden part of the ship where they hid many things that made her worry. After a while, she chose an oblong and very heavy object with a nuclear threat symbol on the lid. The four of them managed to carry him aboard and then rested, but only for a moment as Itel urged them on. Toshi flew around scared, looking for his lady and when he didn't find her, he started rubbing against the others for comfort, but no one had the time or inclination to take care of the blue fox right now, so he lay down on the couch, squealing sadly. She tried to reason with itel but due to her rush, she didn't put on her gloves. Fortunately, Mr. Ilemshaw came to her with rescue.

„Since I know most of the basic languages, including Absalomian Sign Language, let me help with translation. Miss Rosie says your plan isn't very good, and she's right, no matter what it is, because using nuclear weapons is never a good idea.” Said the representative of a race unknown to her in a metallic voice. Itel clenched her jaw angrily.

„ It's her fault! Eti got trapped because of that deaf idiot and now we have to save her!” she summoned the moonblade and threatened the camera „Personally, I think that the current situation you are in is the result of you deciding to do a very unwise thing, but you are unlikely to remedy it by doing another unwise thing out of emotion... And what are you actually going to do? “asked Mr. Ilemshaw. Itel hesitated, as if she was just now trying to put her plan into words.

„I'm going to threaten to detonate this warhead if they don't release Eti.” she said with weakening conviction. When she finished, the entire room went dark and Miss Daisy appeared in the ship, followed by Ireanis and Wrongdak .

„This is the most ridiculous rescue plan I have ever heard of, believe it or not, in my long life.”

These were happy moments spent together with the woman she loved. But all happy things come to an end. At first she didn't understand what the fish-like alien was talking about, the idea of nuclear weapons wasn’t something she had heard about before coming to the Pact Worlds, but when she saw the horror in Asindesa's eyes, she finally understood what it meant and jumped to her feet.

„I'm sorry, dearest, but I have to go... As you heard, something unforeseeable happened... „ she started hastily explaining to the Hell Knight who was looking at her not cleary understanding what was happening.

„Nuclear weapons? Where ... why?” She asked slowly regaining her composure. She placed her hand on the blade of the sword, and the tenacity she remembered from Krannor Rill flashed in her eyes .

„I haven't the slightest idea, but I have to act anyway.” she said, and Asindesa kissed her on the lips.

„ Look after yourself,. Meanwhile, I'll go to the castle and see what I can do.” said the Hell Knight with concern in her voice. She smiled at her and stepped into the cold darkness.

She arrived on the ship just in time to learn about Itel's plan and comment on it. The elf summoned her blade and looked at her hostilely.

"It's none of your business," she pointed her weapon at her. She sighed and said.

„As far as I know, a nuclear explosion is the business of anyone who may be caught in its radius, but besides that, your captain entrusted me with the task of taking care of you, which, I must admit with a heavy heart, I was unable to cope with. Now, please, take a deep breath and tell me what happened.” she tried to talk to them, just like she talked to Adora. It must have worked, because although Itel continued to grit her teeth angrily, Alatar began to tell her about the recent events. When he finished, she felt relieved. It could have been a lot worse. Actually, nothing bad happened at all, maybe it would even be better if they met Catra under controlled conditions. Even when I, the woman who harmed this planet so much, was imprisoned, they provided me conditions that most of the inhabitants of the galaxy could dream of she thought, although at the same time she knew that she couldn't tell her wards anything, because then she would have to explain how she knew how to treat prisoners on Etheria. Fortunately, Wrongdak came with the help. The clone smiled, since he learned the truth about her he did it less often, and said in a warm tone.

„I know Glimmer. She is brave and strong, but she won't do anything to Eti. I can vouch for that.”

The kids looked at each other confused, but relaxed, even Itel. She smiled at them and said.

„Mr. Wrongdak speaks wisely. Hasty actions can only lead to an escalation of the situation, which will only worsen the situation in which Eti finds herself. It would be best if we wait until the morning, rest, cool down. Mr. Wrongdak will take you to the palace, given his relationship with the ruler, it shouldn't be difficult for him to obtain an audience with her, and you will politely apologize to the queen and ask for Eti's release.” she said, and the clone looked at her suspiciously. Well, she was risking a lot, because the clone could have handed her over to the authorities with impunity, but it was still the safest option. The situation seemed to be calming down when suddenly she heard Mr. Ilemshaw's voice, in which, despite the metallic sound, she heard pure fear.

„I detected a message coming from orbit. A ship has arrived in Etheria , with Lord Admiral Antares on board”

She felt a chill run down her spine. Everyone except Wrongdak, Emily, and Rosie looked extremely terrified.

„Okay, we have to improvise. – she said and rubbed her face with her hand. "Focus, don't let yourself get distracted... How I hate improvising"

Eti took a few deep breaths and looked around. She had a strange feeling that she was in a bedroom. There was a four-poster bed, lots of pillows, shooting targets, more pillows, a waterfall, and some more pillows. If she weren't so angry and... terrified, she would have found this place unsettling... and her eyes hurt from how colorful it was. She had spent the last half hour screaming, threatening, and punching the magical barrier to no avail until her hair stood straight from the feedback. She didn't want to stay here, she hated being locked in, with no way out. When she didn't have a name yet, only a number, she was imprisoned, watched without a moment of privacy, without the right to decide about herself in any matters. She would never allow to be treated like that again, even if she had to bite her veins. The hag and her guy left her with one of the clones, Brother of Wrongdak, who was dressed in a guard's outfit and had long hair hanging down his back. He didn't take his eyes off her and tried to look as serious as possible. She rested her head on her shoulder and thought. She didn't met any other clones apart from Wrongdak, and she wasn't sure how similar he was to the other clones, but they were all identical, at least at first, and they had only gained freedom a few years ago... Before that, they were servants of a mad tyrant who demanded absolute obedience from them. She doubted they had changed much in that time. She looked at the top, there was a vent. She would smile very broadly if she could. She put her arms around her and said.

„I demand to speak to my lawyer.”

The clone looked at her in surprise.

„ Are you demanding? To speak? With a lawyer?” He spoke each word separately, clearly confused „Is Etheria a place where the basic rights of all sentient beings are respected?” She asked in a cold voice.

„Of course.” He assured her.

„So I'm asking you to bring me my lawyer, without it I can't defend myself. It was enough of a violation of my rights that your Queen neither brought any charges against me nor informed me of my rights. Of course, such practices are not common in the Galaxy. In places where authoritarian, or even worse, totalitarian, governments prevail, as in Prime's Empire, they are of course not respected, and the fate of each citizen depends only on the will of the ruling tyrant. I assume that Etheria is one of such places, and you are just a helpless cog in a system of oppression that obediently follows every order yo6receives. „ she said in a calm, dispassionate voice, keeping her eyes on the clone. She knew she had hit a nerve. For this purpose, she used the knowledge about the minds of thinking beings, which Jantar drilled into her soul, so that she could better fulfill her destiny. She hated it, even though she was really good at it, but she had no intention of staying here any longer. The clone finally asked after much thought.

„But where can I get a lawyer at this time, it's the middle of the night and I don't even know where to look for him.

She sighed with false irritation and said as if she was explaining to an ignorant but quite nice young person.

„To be honest, it's none of my business, but I don't want to stay here any longer, but from what I know, Swiftwind , your She-Ra's steed, has the qualifications of a lawyer, he told me about it yesterday. You'll definitely find it around town. He lives in a big tent.”

He nodded and ran out of the room. She did better than I expected. With any luck, the guy will be looking for a tent for perhaps an hour. She's gained a lot of time. Bina would be proud of her. First she decided to contact her friends. To her surprise, no one was blocking communication here.

„Hi how are you?" she asked.

„Eti. It's so good to hear from you. Are you OK?„ the elf asked with a breaking voice.

„The Queen took me to her bedroom and the King sprayed me with something damn sticky. But apart from that, everything's fine."

„I'LL FUCKING MURDER THEM ALL!" Itel roared…

She think she chose the wrong words...

For a moment, hard to understand words and screams could be heard on the other side, and then Alatar spoke.

„ Think sometimes about what you are saying, Eti. Itel almost attacked Miss Daisy with the Knife... Actually, not almost.

„Okay, sorry...„ she said quite embarrassed "The Hag wasn't very good at spells, almost as bad as Ireanis, I think it was because of how the sparkling paw hit her. She's great, isn't she? And then Strzała, her guy, hit me with an arrow that covered me with something sticky... That's it. – She explained, hoping that she managed to calm her friend down.

„It's not that important, Eti." there was something in Alatar's voice that made her ears perk up. "We have a bigger problem. The Lord Admiral is here."

In fact, it was not true that she did not feel fear. She simply felt it less strongly and towards other things. And now she felt terrified like never before in her short life.

... And shadows all around

She didn't fully understand why Catra ran so fast to see the other girl, but she should probably be happy about it, because she wanted from her to do that, but she didn't have to run so fast right away. She had to keep up, but she felt like she was going to spit her lungs out. Did running cause her so much difficulty, or was it she who lost her fitness? Maybe she should walk around the castle more instead of teleporting all the time? On other hand the castle was so damn big and teleporting was so cool!

Entrapta ran right next to Catra, it always amazed her how a woman who spent so much time in the lab could be so incredibly physically fit. She guess it was because she had to carry all these tools and equipment everywhere she went as well avoid the explosions she caused on a regular basis s. Adora had always been as agile as Catra, but now even she couldn't keep up with her. Maybe if she transformed into She-Ra, but she guessed there was no need for that. When she started panting, Bow took her arm.

„Thanks Honey." she panted and now she had a little less trouble keeping up with the others, a little less.

Despite the effort, Adora's words kept echoing in the back of her mind. "Your mom… she is alive." For now, their full meaning did not reach her. She knew she should cry from happiness at this news, but... she was already used to the thought that her mother was dead, that she was gone and she would never see her again, unless those who said there was something after death were right. But if she is alive... Hordak had told Catra that she wasn't dead, that she was trapped in a space beyond time, but she wasn't sure how much she could trust the former leader of the Etherian Horde. Besides, it would require reopening the portal, the consequences of which could be so dire that even Entrapta didn't want to talk about this. But now it turned out that she was alive, just like that, and that she even knew the other Catra... But why did Adora look so distraught when she mentioned her mom? She'll find out all about it soon, just let Catra meet the other one.

The five of them ran into the bedroom together. The five of them ran into the bedroom together... Only to find the circle was gone and see the tail disappear into the vent. She probably should have done a full bonding circle, but her defense was that she was in real hurry. Catra lunged forward with Melog radiating blue and green, but they both bounced off the magical barrier.

„Take it off!" demanded the Grand Marshal. She made a few quick gestures and the circle disappeared, but that was enough for the prisoner to escape. Catra jumped in immediately after her, using her cat-like flexibility, and Entrapta ran after her. The others wouldn't be able to squeeze through the opening. Normally she would have teleported to the other side, but she felt that her power was still not working, probably because of the blow the white-haired girl had dealt. So they stopped for a moment, using this time to catch their breath and think about what they should do next, but then Onyx Sky burst into the bedroom.

„Oh, its good that you are on your feet, Queen... An urgent message arrived." They said with excitement.

That's three in an hour.

„I guess it'll have to wait a bit, though, because we're in the middle of something of a chase." she said as soon as she regained her breath, but then she realized that she saw pure terror in Onyx Sky's eyes. If something inspired fear even in someone raised in Prime's Empire, it must have been truly terrible.

„Lord Admiral Antares, High Commander of the Research and Exploration Fleet, requests a meeting with Queen Glimmer, Adora She-Ra, and Grand Marshal Catra." They explained. She let out a few particularly lousy curse words that made Adora and Bow blush.

„What Fleet? What Admiral? What are they talking about?” Adora asked impatiently, because she was about to run after Catra. She buried her face in her hands, it was just starting to be too much. Everything fell on her at once. He has to figure it all out somehow before it all collapses.

„A lot of things happened while you were gone. Adora, follow Catra, Bow and I will prepare for the official audience.”

She ran, although she didn't fully understand why. But she remembered that dream and that girl... She had to see her, had to make sure it was that girl. The girl with twin-colored eyes... She didn't believe in dreams until now. She was taught that they were just the trash of the mind. Even when she had dreams, after she believed she had sentenced Entrapta to death, she knew it was the result of her remorse, her self-loathing. It was one of the few good things she got from the Fright Zone and from Shadow Weaver's teaching. She was a rationalist who believed what she saw. This time, however, it was different... In this dream, she learned about things she had no idea about, and now there was someone who looked similar to the person from her dream. Melog remembered her and confirmed that she smelled similar to her, and to his lady.

However, as soon as she ran into Glimmer's bedroom, she saw that she was running away. It took a few precious moments to break the spell, so she lost a few precious seconds before she could continue her pursuit. Then she ran into the vent. Immediately after they emerged from the tunnel, a mad chase began through the dim corridors of Brightmoon . They used their sense of smell to track her down. She had the impression that the other woman was aware of the layout of the palace and was finding her way around the palace effortlessly, as if she knew right way... Was someone helping her, or maybe she had simply obtained a map of the castle somehow. Despite her efforts, she was unable to raise security to the level she wanted. They could have gotten them from someone for pretty eyes. Or maybe they had hacked into the computer system, according to several Icarus residents their computer security system was worse than none. Just as she thought about it, all the lights in the castle went out and darkness reigned. She could see with her cat-like eyesight, just like Melog, and Entrapta's mask had night vision, though she wasn't sure if the inventor could see in the dark herself. Most of the remaining inhabitants of the castle, however, were blind in this darkness. So someone had broken into the castle's system after all... yes, that was a good explanation...

They ran into a large gallery with wide windows on the sides. They saw her. She was just as she remembered her from her dream. A long coat, heavy boots and that metal hand. Entrapta squealed with delight when she saw her, but she didn't listen to her. All she saw was a runaway woman. She flexed her leg muscles and jumped towards the other girl. She was right next to her. She grabbed her left hand, the one with the glove, but the other one kicked her in the chest with all her strength, knocking her back. She almost fell over, but Entrapta caught her with her hair.

„Is it amazing? This hand is so similar to a sword, but... „ She did not listen to the inventor's further explanation. That girl ran away and kept getting further away, and only the glove was left in her hand. She growled and started running again. The girl's outfit seemed to slow her down, or it was the adrenaline that gave her strength. Soon she started to catch up. But then the darkness around her began to deepen, as if the shadows around her grew and thickened. She felt a cold, all too familiar. She had experienced it many times, always when she had enraged Shadow Weaver with something. Can not be. She's gone. She die. It's just a hallucination from the effort she thought, but she felt from Melog that it wasn't just an illusion... The shadows slowed her down a bit and the distance between them increased again. All she had left was a leather glove.

„She's behind me. Right behind me.” Eti exclaimed, not slowing down even for a moment.

„Turn left. There you will reach a large garden, you can easily hide there. Focus, don't get distracted.” Miss Daisy replied. She watched her with her shadows and guided the way while Alatar hacked the system.

„How do you know the layout of this castle so well?” she asked, feeling a strange twinge of anxiety.

„It's not important now. Don't slow down, I'll be able to transport you soon.” The dark sorceress replied sharply But she wasn't going to listen to her, not yet. She had to do something she had been waiting for for over two thousand two hundred days.

„Alatar, hack into the main communications system.”

She ran outside… It took her a few moments to realize she was in Shadow Weaver's former garden. Now it was kept wild, it was a great place for the other girl to hide… She looked around and called out.

„You don't have to run away... I won't do anything to you...”

„Your friend, the Hag and her Arrow-boy wanted to imprison me!” There was a voice coming from the loudspeakers installed on the seas to make announcements and transmit orders... They hacked that too .

„It was... A misunderstanding.„ She exclaimed, looking around. She hoped that that girl, that Eti, heard her correctly.

„ Misunderstanding... I know such misunderstandings. It doesn't matter anyway... You know, I've known about you for as long as I can remember. Since always” the other girl's voice was so dull and emotionless. She tried to sniff out her, but this garden was so full of different smells that she couldn't find the other one... Even now, after all those years you're throwing obstacles in my way. she thought angrily, trying to pick up a scent in Shadow Weaver's garden. Melog walked with his nose to the ground, although he didn't have to rely solely on his sense of smell to find it. He had his own, unique senses. Entrapta was tearing through the bushes, barely visible. She could be almost invisible when she wanted to. That's probably how she coped in the Fright Zone and Beast Island.

„Do you know the Tale of the Scorpion and the Frog?" a question came from the speakers.

„The one where the scorpion stings the frog at the end? I heard it many times as a child." she said, raising her voice a little so that the other could hear her. Shadow Weaver loved telling her this story with a clear hint that she was the Scorpion and Adora was the Frog. She later discovered that Scorpia knew another version of it, where Scorpion and the Frog had lots of adventures and eventually got married. Years later, she decided that she liked the latter much more."

„You know, I used to be afraid of our meeting, of what I would do when I saw you... I was afraid that I would do something very bad, but it turned out to be different. I only feel peace. All-encompassing bliss. Catharsis. Because I finally understood something... „ She heard a short, broken laugh, dry as the crunching of gravel under shoes. "We will not deny our nature, we will not escape from our destiny. It's like a curse that hangs over us. But it's not about running away from our destiny, but really understanding what it is. You came to a place forgotten by devils and demons, the existence of which no one knew., and you still followed the path that was chosen for you, even though you received no preparation, while I, an absolutely perfect, awesome and unique being, I am... who I am...„ the last words are no more were coming from the speakers so she could tell where the girl was, so she ran towards it and Entrapta and Melog followed her.

She was waiting for her, standing on the battlements. She had it down and her mask off. Her dark red hair flowed loosely against the starry night sky.

„So we finally meet.„ the other girl said, then turned to her and looked at her with golden cat eyes full of blue dots that seemed to glow like icy flames. “Hey Sis.”

At that moment she froze. She had no idea what she should do. Her whole life, all her adventures and journeys, hardships and suffering, did not prepare her for what happened here. She could only stand there and stare blankly, unable to even move or form a single thought.

Then, slowly and timidly, joy began to flow into her heart. Something completely unbelievable happened. She found her sister, or rather she found her, but it didn't matter. She had a sister, a family. She wanted to scream and laugh. Tears of joy flowed down her cheeks. She took a step forward, but then the other woman held out her hands in warning. The right one was made of metal, not like the prosthetics of Tallstar and other inhabitants of Ikarus, but rather as if cast from one piece of a substance resembling the one from which Adora's sword was made. It was undoubtedly an artifact of the First Ones. At the sight of him, Entrapta squealed with joy and stretched her hair towards her hand to touch it, at least with the tips. However, what caught her attention was the other hand. At first glance, it was normal, but someone had de-clawed it in a brutal and cruel way, so much so that the phalanges were almost cut off.

„Who did it to you?” she asked with a mixture of horror and anger. Her sister looked at her hand in confusion and said.

„It was a one evil woman, but it doesn't matter anymore... Listen.” she looked into her eyes. “Don't trust him. Everything he tells you is lies, everything.” and she jumped off the wall. Filled with terror, she rushed to catch it, but when she touched it, she was transformed into a shadow with a glowing three-lobed eye. To her right, along the vertical wall, her sister was running.

”Amazing! Real shoes which are creating their own gravity field. I have to make one like this! You know how much easier they would make my job! „ the inventor scramed, but she didn't listen to her, she just watched the running girl who suddenly jumped from the wall onto the balcony, to meet a figure wrapped in shadows and disappeared.

Can not be. You're dead.

It took her far too long to find Catra. She should know the layout of the castle better. She felt as if she had failed once again. First Glimmer's mother, then Frosta and now this strange girl... She needs to try harder if she cares about her friends. The confusion caused by the lights suddenly going out didn't help. She wasn't sure what had happened, but he guessed it had to do with the other girl. Fortunately, She- Ra's light was able to illuminate even the deepest darkness.

She found her love in Shadow Weaver's former garden. She didn't like coming here, she always felt uncomfortable here, as if this vile woman had polluted this place with her presence. Catra had no problem visiting this place, but she had never seen the Dark Sorceress working here always with her pruning shears in her hands. She always liked to trim everyone to shape them the way she wanted, she thought bitterly.

Catra sat crouched on the bench, Melog had his head in her lap, radiating sadness and fear. and Entrapta wrapped her hair around her like a blanket. Frightened, she ran to her fiancée and hugged her tightly.

„Are you okay? Hasn't she done anything to you?”

Catra looked at her with tearful eyes. They were red and their pupils were dilated, but she smiled and spoke in an almost joyful voice

„She didn't do anything to me... She's my sister. I have a sister Adora! Sister! But...„ here the cat girl's voice broke. "But there were shadows here. Her shadows. I think I even saw her. She lives Adora. She's alive and She has my sister...„ Now Catra started crying, and she felt her blood freeze in her veins. She remembered that shadow on Clytemnestra... At the time she had thought it was just a stress-induced illusion, but since even Catra, who could always see through any lie, had seen it too... She would deal with it later.

„I believe you, but now you have to come with me. Glimmer needs us... „ she said and Catra nodded and they went together to meet the Lord Admiral.

She hid one of her shadows in the throne room. She had already learned the art of spying on others in Mystacor, and had become very skilled at it in the Fright Zone. She needed this to track her rivals and obtain necessary information about them. Towards the end she didn't do it often anymore, she was running out of both strength and Rivals. But now these skills have proven useful again. Still, she had to be extremely careful.

Glimmer sat on a throne with a crown on her head. No trace remained of the fight with Eti. She wasn't sure if she hid it with makeup or used healing magic. Catra and Adora stood on her sides. The blonde haired woman was in She-Ra form. Catra wore a beautiful red and gold uniform, probably designed especially for her. The shock she had recently suffered was visible on her face, but she tried to stay tough, as always. Only her strange shape-shifting cat was shimmering in different colors, reflecting the mood of his lady. Bow stood slightly back in full gear so that at the slightest threat he could quickly draw his bow and fire. Entrapta was fidgeting nervously and writing something down on the datapad, not fully realizing the importance of the upcoming events The same could not be said for Prime Minister Shou, who was nervously clutching her robes. She didn't know her well, they only talked once after she came here from the Fright Zone. Her species was known throughout the galaxy as the Brenneri, and they were renowned as empathetic diplomats. This explained perfectly why she felt so bad around her. Several other less important courtiers stood looking around nervously, fearing what was to come. Guards stood at full combat readiness, ready to give their lives for their queen, although if anything could threaten these four, all their courage and bravery would be in vain.

There was a deafening silence, even here, through the shadows, she could hear the sound of breathing, and she felt that if she concentrated a little more, she could feel the nervous beating of hearts. And then she heard Him. First there were footsteps, strong, soldierly. It was a firm march, but not hasty, befitting someone who never had to run anywhere to be on time because he was always the one for whom other where waiting. The footsteps in complete silence sounded like thunder, but were soon joined by another sound. An irritating and unpleasant melody that Bina and Eti often whistled. This time, the acoustics of the Throne Room made it almost painful. Catra and her pet flattened their ears and Adora gave her girlfriend a questioning look, but she only responded by shaking her head slightly.

And then he came in. He was dressed in a gold and scarlet uniform made of the finest fabrics, which was probably durable enough to be used as armor. Together with the jewels decorating it, it must have been worth a small fortune. On his belt was a sword and an empty holster of a pistol that may have been confiscated before he was allowed in, as if someone like the Lord Admiral would carry out the assassination himself. His cape gently touched the polished floor.

Behind him, like a shadow, Lady Ka walked whistling. She cast contemptuous glances at the guards with her only eye. The woman seemed extremely confident, as if she already knew what was going to happen and was thoroughly enjoying it. When people like her seemed happy, there was reason to worry. There was also that dread, huge wolf, walking obediently at his master's side. Entrapta was attracted to the beast, probably because of its numerous cybernetic enhancements. Apparently, even the years spent with Hordak did not make this woman develop an instinct for self-preservation.

As she looked at the Lord Admiral, she saw something she had never seen in Hordak. The majesty befitting a true ruler. Even Horde Prime, though she didn't know him very well, exuded an aura of fear that came more from brutal military power than from a talent for leading others.

Glimmer had one too. She sat on the throne, exuding strength that none of her ancestors would be ashamed of , hopefully it would be enough against someone like the Lord Admiral.

„Welcome, Lord Admiral Felix Antares . I am Queen Glimmer Moonbright. Ruler of all Etheria, wielder of the power of the Moonstone and, soon, leader of the galactic alliance. What are you looking for on our planet.

Antares bowed to her politely, but not humbly. Whatever you say about him, he was a brave bastard if he stood up to the most powerful people on the planet, even though he was only with Lady Ka and that scary wolf.

„As Lord Admiral, I came here by the will of the authorities of the Pact Worlds and Veskarium to discover the source of the attack that was carried out on us twice five years ago.” he said with the strong and hard voice of someone used to speaking. „This region of the galaxy is known as the Ravaged Zone and was considered an unexplored and dangerous area. That's why I was entrusted with command of the Research and Exploration Fleet. When we arrived here, we found the ruins of an Empire built by a mad tyrant who was responsible for the deaths of countless sentient beings. He was, because we learned that he was annihilated by She-Ra, the heroine of the Universe. So, while my troops are conducting a stabilization mission, I have come here to discover the truth about this mysterious attack. But as Felix Antares, I came here for much more personal reasons.” now his voice softened, even became warm and softer. “For thirty years, since I and my people were expelled from our planet by treacherous enemies, I have fought many enemies, including the most terrible of all, the Swarm. War does not help in starting a family, but sooner or later each of us comes to that moment when we start to think about our legacy and what we will leave behind. Until now I thought that I had been deprived of mine, but by an unimaginable twist of fate it turned out to be otherwise. Therefore, I would like to ask for one favor. – he knelt down on one knee and looked at Catra . – For the opportunity to be at my daughter wedding."

Absolutely everyone was frozen in disbelief. There was a possibility that the Lord Admiral was lying, but as she looked at the face features of the commander and her former ward, at the cold gleam in their blue eyes, she knew it must be true. I turned out to be a blind Ignorant again. We are all doomed

Danger surrounds us

When she saw the man kneeling in front of them, she was sure it didn't mean anything good, but when he said those words... She just froze. It was such incredible, impossible news that her mind couldn't process it. She looked at Catra. The Grand Marshal was standing with wide eyes and her knees trembling. Adora placed a hand on her shoulder and hugged her comfortingly. A shy smile appeared on her shining face. She shook her head and said in a sharp tone.

„What you said is absolutely impossible. For the past millennia, Etheria has been cut off from the rest of the Universe. During this time, no one... almost no one came here." She glanced at Adora.

Antares smiled slightly and said.

„However, I am absolutely sure that Catra is my child. How she got here is a mystery we must discover. We can perform appropriate genetic testing if you wish."

She was about to shout that there was no question of any tests, but then Catra spoke up.

„He's right..." her friend said quietly and looked at the others. "I was not born on Etheria."

She blinked and looked at her friend. Was this some ridiculous joke? Adora looked at her fiancée in surprise.

„We've known each other forever. You are present in my oldest memories." Adoea said in disbelief.

„ Almost forever." Said the Grand Marshal in an increasingly monotonous voice. „ Remember how you told me you found me in an applesauce box? Or maybe you know about it because Shadow Weaver told us about it? I must have gotten here not long before this happened. I did genetic testing before the wedding and it turned out that you are not from here. That's why I asked for the Fright Zone record. I didn't find any of them, but then I looked at the box and it said it was made in a place called Kesler.” her voice was on the verge of breaking down. “I think that's where I was born.”

Then the Lord Admiral spoke.

„I know Kesler, or rather I knew. It's a planet that has been devoured by the Swarm. I had one of my greatest victories near her. However, you were not born there, but on Atrax located in the same system, which I defended against the Swarm invasion. At one time, Kesler was a large food exporter, so a box with products coming from there is nothing strange... I apologize for the poor choice of words, but it was also a extraordinary experience for me.”

She noticed that when Atrax was mentioned, Catra's ears twitched as well. Has she also heard about this place? She touched her temple, wondering what she should do now. Nothing had prepared them for this news. In the afternoon she heard about the existence of the Fleet, and at night she met its commander claiming to be Catra's father. Damn, more likely. she would have expected to meet Adora's family. And then there was the thing with her mother… No, there was a limit to the amount of world-changing news that could be received in a day. She sighed and said.

„We need to confer. The news you have brought is extraordinary and we must now consider what steps we should take next.”

The Lord Admiral nodded in understanding. This man looked completely different than she expected from a non-Etherian military man, but then again she had no idea what she should expect from someone like that. He did not resemble Hordak in any way, much less Horde Prime . He wasn't nearly as bitingly arrogant as Catra's former superior, nor half as insanely conceited as a mad tyrant. He seemed patient and composed, like a soldier on briefing waiting to get back to his job. She couldn't say how old he was, she assumed he was her father's age, but she wasn't sure. He certainly looked like a true soldier who did not hesitate to lead his men in battle. He seemed respectable, but... there was something about him that she didn't like, as if there was a deep-seated ferocity more suited to the wolf standing by his side. She could be sure of one thing. There was a visible resemblance between him and Catra, especially in the glow of his blue eye.

Entrapta approached the large wolf-like creature with genuine interest and tried to touch it with her hair, but when the half-cybernetic monster looked at her, she behave unusually cautious and asked.

„Could I watch it? I've never seen a creature with so many cybernetic modifications."

The woman in the half mask smiled at her with only half of her mouth visible, it was a particularly nasty smile, and said.

„Sure." said women In halfmask and when the inventor approached the wolf, she added. "If you think you have too many limbs."

The inventor stopped mid"move and the Lord Admiral looked sharply at the masked woman and said.

„This is Lady Ka, my intelligence and information officer. She has a specific sense of humor." he placed his hand on the wolf's head. „ As long as I'm around, Resh won't hurt you, but I'd be careful around other nightmare hunters. They are creatures created for fighting."

A specific sense of humor she thought incredulously, and then added.

„I will soon give orders for you to be assigned rooms in the castle." her voice was as tired as she was. She felt like she was about to fall asleep on her own, but she still had a serious meeting with her friends waiting for her today. Of everyone gathered in the throne room, only John Killthem looked happy, and that didn't bode well.

She sat in a chair with her eyes closed and her head tilted back. She tried to use these few precious minutes to gather her thoughts, but her mind went blank. She didn't feel anything. For the first time in as long as she could remember, no emotions tugged at her dark soul. There was no fear, no anger, not even guilt. Only numbing silence. But it couldn't last long. She was aware of the crew members of this ship looking at her, asking "What next?" Only she didn't know the answer. If Eti hadn't wanted to be so damn melodramatic, if Itel hadn't wanted to break into the castle... If I hadn't come up with a date... Bina, why did you entrust the care of these kids to someone whose parenting methods amount to tormenting and manipulation. She thought, although it all didn't matter now anyway. During this journey, she had to admit very often how little she knew. But she couldn't tell those kids that. She had to think of something, and fast, that would give them some time to analyze the situation and decide what they should do next. She looked at Eti and said thoughtfully

„So you and Catra are his daughters... Who was... the second gene donor?”

Eti tilted her head to the side and said”

„Asera, Igzar's sister ... The same one who shot him... Although only after her death. He had her body taken away and then gave it to Jantar... Old bad Cat claimed that the Admiral found it funny to create offspring with the one who almost killed him. But I'm not so sure. It doesn't matter anyway... „ she looked at her with her absolutely calm, or maybe even sad, eyes, with blue sparks shining in them. “But you're not Miss Daisy. Or maybe she's not you.”

She sighed. She hoped it would never happen, even though she should have expected it. She once believed that she could complete the task unnoticed, without affecting the lives of the inhabitants of Etheri. But these were naive pipe dreams. Even before discovering the truth about the Lord Admiral, before learning Captain Moonshadow's identity, before meeting Eti, she should have known that the plans of a being like Nyarlathotep would change the lives of everyone and anyone who stood in their way. Or even just nearby. It was actually a selfish desire. Fear of facing the consequences of one's own actions. She was afraid of being judged for her crimes and se hatred in the eyes of Catra and Adora. She had a foretaste of this when she met Mikah.

„My name is Shadow Weaver, and my former name was Light Spinner" she replied in a tired, hopeless voice.

„So you were born here. You knew her, my sister, Catra ... „ Eti said, and the lack of emotion in her voice was downright painful.

„I was the right hand of Hordak , the brother of our Wrongdak, and one of the most important people in the Etherian Horde. I was no better than your... Your father, only I was less effective. I raised your sister, although this is a very euphemistic term...„ she said, and Eti nodded, obviously deciding not to pursue the topic, at least for now, although she was aware that she would not escape this conversation. Alatar and Lilka looked astonished, and Itel looked angry... But Rosie... She saw disappointment in the white-haired girl's bright blue eyes. She guess the former intern saw her as a role model, a mentor... especially after Dilayla left with Lady Cala . The deaf girl treated the mercenary like a older step-sister. She hoped she wouldn't lose it, although considering that the half"elf was traveling with Calamity , there was little chance of that happening.

„This conversation is probably needed by all of you, but unfortunately I must ask you to postpone it until later, because we have limited fuel resources, and I would like to remind you that the last time we refueled was on Saltmarsh, and this ship has not had a full overhaul since Akiton .„ said Mr Ilemshaw. „We can drift in space for a long time if we leave the planet, but in the atmosphere for a few hours at most. So I propose to everyone that we quickly find a safe haven.”

The fish-like alien was right, but the answer wasn't that simple.

„How many ships did the Lord Admiral take with him... „ Itel asked carefully.

„I'm not sure, but everything indicates that he came here on board a small ship, a corvette even smaller than ours.” Mr. Ilemshaw replied.

„So we can escape into space and hide there.” Alatar said, but Itel and Eti gave him contemptuous glances.

„We didn't come to this planet to hide again like those rats.” Itel growled at him. “ We just need to find a safe shelter and resume our search there. Do you know the right place.”

"I finally have to find out what you're looking for on this planet," she thought and replied.

„It's not that easy. Glimmer has the ability to teleport, as you may have already seen, and with a greater range than you might imagine. She also knows tracking magic, although your brother Wrongdak has figured out a way to block it. Still, it's unlikely she'll send Adora or the army after us.” “Unless she ascertains my involvement in all this” – However, there is one place he cannot go. Castle Crypto is no longer Entrapta's home, but from what I understand it is outside the Queen's rule and Glimmer has never been able to navigate there. We'll leave Mr. Wrongdak somewhere safe along the way.

But the clone shook his head.

„No... I'd rather stay here with you and see how it all ends. – he replied, and she added in her mind. "And still spy for your brother"

„And the Lord Admiral? Won't he chase Eti now when her sister tells him everything?” Itel asked, but she smiled bitterly and said in a low voice.

„ It's unlikely. Catra has always been distrustful. It's largely my... credit.”

They were in the Fireplace Room, where the fire had been rekindled. Now Glimmer stared into the flames and listened to her stories about her meeting with Queen Angela . Catra had asked for a moment to herself and was now sitting in the chair, covered with a blanket with Melog's head in her lap. Apart from them, buddies , there were only High Minister Shou and Onyx Sky.

„That's all I know... I'm sorry.„ She said and looked down, expecting bitter words, even screams and maybe even insults. But when Glimmer turned to her, she saw that her eyes were full of tears, which she expected, but she was smiling happily, which she was completely unable to understand.

„It's wonderful! I haven't been this happy in years.” she said, swallowing tears „Glimmer… Did you hear what I said? Your mother is a pirate, she was in some prison camp before and lost her arm. She hates me because all this happened to her because of me! Why aren't you mad! You should.” she felt tears flowing down her cheeks.

„I know it's terrible, but you must understand, she's alive! Is alive! This is the most important!„ exclaimed the queen with euphoria in her voice, and Bow added with a warm smile.

„Adora, listen. We don't know everything. I'm sure it can be explained! Remember when Glimmer was in Horde Prime's captivity? Or when Catra got chipped? We managed somehow then, and we can do it now.

She smiled slightly, although she did not share her friends' optimism. They didn't see the hatred in Angela's eyes. Catra then spoke from her lair.

„She stayed in the portal. Do you remember how different and strange that reality was? How did it change our memories? We don't know what she remembers now. Besides, I may have never met Queen Angela, but from what you told me, she wasn't a woman who blamed others for her choices.” her voice was quiet and sounded as if her girlfriend was exhausted to death.

„Oh, if it's a memory problem, I can fix it.„ Entrapta exclaimed with delight, jumping to her feet. Until now, she had been sitting quietly in the corner of the room, writing something down on a datapad, and it seemed as if she wasn't listening to them, but apparently that wasn't the case. “Hordak also lost a lot of his memory and I had to help him. I made him a machine that helped him regain his memory. After a month, the headache went away and the stepping of the mice stopped hurting him.”

„A month's hangover in exchange for regaining memory... A difficult choice.” Onyx Sky said, smiling shyly, trying to lighten the mood a bit.

„For now, we need to find out where she is... Do you think she will come here to Etheria?” Glimmer asked, staring at her questioningly. She thought about it and nodded.

„He'll almost certainly come here. She wanted my sword... That was probably the last thing she remembered from before she was imprisoned. – she felt a pang of guilt again, but Glimmer put a hand on her shoulder.

„Whenever she appears somewhere, I will teleport there and I will talk to her. She couldn't forget me, after all, I was her daughter. And maybe I'll take my dad...„ the queen smiled with delight.

„This isn't the best idea. To her, Mikah is dead. Seeing people we consider dead is very shoking to say the least... „ Catra said and shuddered. “This might not end very well.”

Glimmer looked pointedly, Catra had mentioned her adventure in the library, although the walking dead were something straight out of a Shadow Weaver fairytales….

Glimmer finally sighed and nodded.

„You're right, it's better for dad not to find out that mom is alive. Just in case... „ she fell silent significantly. “And I guess we shouldn't tell anyone else about her. Let's just warn everyone about the marauding pirate, but let's not attack if she doesn't attack first... „ she said, but then Catra interrupted.

„Don't tell anyone about my sister either... especially this man.”

Glimmer, Bow and Entrapta's eyes widened and the Queen asked.

„What do you mean your sister... How...”

„That girl... That Eti... She is my sister, she told me thatherself... She is so similar to me, but also so different.” she said and described her meeting with this girl. Hearing this story, she herself opened her mouth wide, no less surprised than the others. When Catra was finished, she curled up in the blankets and seemed to be that little girl again, lost in the dark halls of the Fright Zone. Although not. In her eyes she didn't see the old despair and fear that had always accompanied her there, but rather hope, even if timid and unsure.

„That's... amazing Catra. You have a sister, a family... A little strange and unusual, but this is still a wonderful thing... Until they start stealing your things, following you around and crying when you don't let them... Jeez, I must have been a really terrible little brother.” Bow laughed and her fiancée smiled shyly and she joined her and said.

„This Eti is a nice girl, although a bit strange. She herself found me on Icarus, when I went hiking alone because... I wanted to take a break from people. She immediately offered me a place on the ship. She was there with her friends. A Saihe girl named Itel and a deaf white-haired girl they called Rosie. Scorpia and Perfume encountered her remaining two friends, a winged lizard called Alatar, and a warrior girl named Lilka. There had probably been some sort of fight between them earlier, but when we met, they had already become friends. And Wrongdak was with them!”

Then Glimmer turned to her.

„Oh, have you met Wrongdak? Is he okay?” she asked, flapping her wings happily

„Nothing, even though he dresses so colorfully now so...„ she wanted to add, "that Hordak would start growling in irritation", but it might hurt Entrapta. “He was there with Emily, and from what he told me, those kids saved him from terrible danger. They're… nice kids. They probably also came from Kesler.”

Catra frowned.

„And we're back to this planet again... Or this system.” The cat girl rubbed her temples. “Tell me more about my sister. About this Eti.”

She smiled because it was definitely a more pleasant topic to talk about.

„She likes to sneak around and is talkative and whines a lot, but she is nice and her friends gave me some crisps. Quite tasty, although terribly fatty. She can also be a little weird. She asked me to board their ship instead of Lady Cala. She probably wanted to get rid of Lady Cala, although I don't understand why, because Lady Cala is... „ she couldn't find the right word to describe this woman. “She is beautiful and strong. She is… You just feel that she was created for great things. I spent a few minutes with her, but I had the impression that she would be a better She-Ra than me.”

Then Catra giggled.

„You're still really stupid sometimes, you know that? There is no better She-Ra, because she is you.” she smiled mockingly.

„If you meet her, you'll understand.” she replied to her fiancée, who snorted mockingly.

„I guess I should feel jealous.” Catra smiled flirtatiously at her and winked. She shook her head and began to explain.

„Her name is Lady Cala Grayskull and she claims that she may be a descendant of Mara.”

Hearing what Adora said, she flapped her wings and asked.

„That Mara? The previous She-Ra?”

Adora nodded.

„That's what she said. He comes from the planet Carurystal. But I don't know much else. She saw your mother... And she told me about what happened to her. I think they traveled for a while. They didn't even suspect who she might be.”

She closed her eyes and took a deep breath. Her mother was alive, but she became a pirate. She would have laughed once if she heard about it. Queen Angel is a Pirate? Could there be a more ridiculous idea? But now, after hearing Adora's story... Why did something so terrible happen to her? A woman who did so much for Etheria, sacrificed so much for everyone. It was so terribly unfair!

„Is it true?” she asked and, seeing Adora's questioning look, she added. “It's about Lady Cala.” she didn't even want to think about the rest. My mother murdered a child. An innocent child. She has become as evil as the Shadow Weaver

Adora hesitated.

„I'm not sure. She herself said that it could only be a legend passed down in her family. She doesn't look like Mara, but thousands of years have passed since then, who knows how much her family might have changed. I know almost nothing about Mara, apart from the few messages she left for me. I don't know if she could have had a child.”

„If that Lady Cala really is a First One descendant, that would explain why She was hanging around her.” Catra said, her voice quiet and pained, her two colored eyes seeming to be staring at something others could see, perhaps the past that was so terrible.

„She? Who are you talking about?” she asked, although something in the back of her mind told her she knew who she was talking about. The couple exchanged glances and Catra spoke slowly and carefully.

„Then, when I was chasing Eti, I saw shadows. The same ones she summoned, and when my sister disappeared, she was taken by a dark figure that looked like she was shrouded in darkness. I'm not entirely sure, but it could have been her.” This time she cringed, but Adora sat down next to her and hugged her. Then she said.

„I saw them too... On Icarus. These shadows. It was after the fight with that ship of Queen Angela and at that time I thought it was just hallucinations caused by fatigue and stress, but after that Catra said...

She sighed heavily. Shadow Weaver was the last person who they needed now.

„This is terrible. Today I thought it was good that she wasn't here. What do you think she might be looking for here? Is she behind this break-in?”

Catra jumped to her feet and Melog glowed red.

„I have no idea, but Glimmer, she has my sister. You understand? SHE HAS MY SISTER.” The cat-like girl shouted, wagging her tail violently. Adora walked up to her and put her hand on her shoulder.

„I talked to these kids, dear, and they were wild and belligerent, but also confident and happy, not at all like someone raised by Shadow Weaver… Not like us. They seem to have their own guardian, a woman named Bina. She screamed at them when it turned out that they had left the ship without permission. Lady Cala and her companions seem to only be traveling on one ship. I think they even mentioned that they had a sorceress or two on board. One is called Miss Daisy, I think”

She involuntarily let out a short laugh, even though she wasn't happy. Catra looked at her, surprised and a little irritated.

„What is it about?”

She looked at both girls in surprise and said.

„Oh, you don't know that?! She once told me that her favorite flowers are daisies.”

There was silence, and only after a long moment did Catra speak firmly.

„ What we are going to do with it? We cannot allow her to roam Etheria unstoppable and continue to harm everyone.”

„I know how much she hurt you... no, no one knows that except you, but understand. She's still just one woman, with no support or allies.” She answered calmly.

Then Adora spoke up.

„You don't know what she is like! He's probably already weaving his intrigues in the shadows. You can't underestimate her.”

„They're right, honey.” Bow joined the conversation. “Even when she was on our side, she manipulated everyone to get what she wanted. Even you. And all she wanted was power.”

She sighed and began rubbing her wing thoughtfully.

„You're probably right, she was always nice to me only because she needed me. Maybe we'll let a few people know, like my dad, but if she's with your sister, we'll have to be careful if we still want to keep her existence a secret. „ she looked at Catra again. „There's also the matter of your father.”

Catra flattened her ears.

„Don't look at me like that. I've known him as long as you, actually less than Glimmer, because you heard about his exploits on Taurus. I... Just a few hours ago I was one of the many orphans of the Horde, and now I have a sister who tried to break into the castle, perhaps on the leash of the mangy woman who almost fucked up my life, and a father who came here with his own war fleet. So don't ask me what to do, because I don't fucking know”

Everyone in the Hall looked at the Great Marshal. Everyone in Brightmoon knew she didn't usually swear, so if she started doing it, it must have been serious. The first silence that followed the cat girl's outburst was Entrapta.

„We should establish cooperation with the fleet and the rest of the universe as soon as possible. I can't wait to learn about their discoveries. Can you imagine what technological development must have taken place there when thousands of worlds could exchange knowledge!” she clutched her hair, squealing in joyful ecstasy.

„That woman, Lady Ka, looked like she would love to feed you to that wolf.” Bow said, but the inventor waved her hand.

„There was always something trying to eat me on Beast Island, so I don't see a problem with that. I got used to.” Entrapta explained, apparently not understanding what the techmaster meant . Adora said thoughtfully.

„This woman, Lady. Ka, she looks very much like Bina. I don't know if they're twin sisters or maybe... Clones, but they must be related in some way."

Catra snorted in irritation.

„Sure, it's all connected, and there's a Shadow Weaver sitting in the middle, like that spider weaving its web of shadows."

She looked at her friend with concern. She knew from Scorpi that under stress she had bouts of paranoia.

„Maybe it is, but we don't know. For now, we need to find out more. This man, the Lord Admiral, I don't like him. He is too dangerous and at the same time he looks too noble... He is like a hero from a story. A noble and righteous commander who leads a noble army in the fight against evil. This is too thoughtful. Real people aren't like that."

„But." Catra interrupted her, looking suspiciously.

„But we might need it." she sighed and began to explain to her astonished friends. We won against Horde Prime, it's true, but we have been fighting his heirs for five years, but we have achieved nothing during this time, and our enemies are getting stronger. We have ships, a hell of a lot of ships, but no one to command them, and Adora and the other princesses can't be everywhere. He liberated Taurus within a week, something we have been planning to do for two years. If we are to form our Galactic Alliance, I must ask you to try to get closer to him since he wants to be your father anyway. After all, I could be wrong, he really is who he wants to appear."

Catra squinted and stared at the flames for a few moments as Melog glowed with all the colors of the rainbow. Finally she sighed and said in a flat tone.

„My sister told me... not to trust him, and I think we all guess it was about the Lord Admiral. However, if she is traveling with Shadow Weaver... She is deceitful and loves to manipulate others.

She could have turned her against him, as she did with us cadets all our lives... You're right, we need to find out more.” now her voice began to gain passion. “He can be an enemy or an ally, or both at the same time. But I want to know him because I want to know myself. To understand who I truly am and how much of that was instilled in me by Shadow Weaver.” She looked at her hands. Her claws were extended to their maximum length. “You know, those claws always made me feel safe. They were something that even Shadow Weaver and Hordak couldn't take from me. My sister... She lost her right hand, but her left hand... she was declawed... in a cruel way. She claimed an evil woman did it... If I find out it was Shadow Weaver, I swear I'll rip her throat out the first chance I get, and no one will stop me.” she drawled and looked at them, a cold flame burning in her blue eye.

...But won't bring us down

Arkan-tar stretched contentedly and dressed. The strix host couple who had made his night pleasant had long ago got up to run their inn. Waiting for him in the Main Hall were a gloomy Rechiza, a strangely self-satisfied Dilayla, and Doctor Quin , who was sitting at a table in pajamas and a nightcap, taking a nap.

„Lady Cala still sleeping?" he asked, sitting down at the table. Rechiza gave him an offended look and said.

„She went out in the evening and hasn't come back yet."

"And if the gods are kind to us, it won't come back." said the mercenary , stretching and smiling.

„"I wouldn't count on it." said Lashunti. Something interesting must have happened yesterday.

„Are you talking about the fact that he won't come back or about the grace of the gods." Dilayla asked, smiling, but Rechiza responded with a hard look.

„I have a vague feeling that I missed something yesterday. You slept together, right?" he asked, but both women looked at him in such a way that a cold sweat broke out on his back.

„Nothing, it just turned out that Miss Daisy was the right hand of the leader of the local Horde faction, you know, our Wrongdak's brother." the half-elf explained. He was silent for a moment, trying to absorb what he had just learned, until he finally spoke.

„How did you come to such an interesting conclusion?"

Dilayla sighed heavily and replied with irritation.

„I took it and read the tea leaves. What the fuck do you think?” and then she started to explain everything to him. Well, Arkan-tar called himself a scholar, someone who always had an answer to every question. Maybe not always sensible, often wrong, but at least that which sounds smart. So, as he sat there now, staring at Dilayla with his mouth open, he didn't feel comfortable with it. At first he had no problem accepting that the Lord Admiral was a war criminal, having worked for people of this type many times, Then he met the inhabitants of the Zone, who were ordinary, although fate-tested beings trying to lead normal lives... And everyone was impressed Etheria as if it were a wonderful place full of amazing heroes... And in the end it turned out to be. They even had their own avatar of Iomadae, or whoever this She-ra was. And of course she had to be friends with those strange Bina kids. Is it normal for demigoddesses to wander around the meadows and hang out with random kids? Apparently it is, well he didn't know anything about demigoddesses and kids, he was just a damn scholar after all. Then Captain Moonshadow went crazy and suddenly decided that she wanted her sword, but Adora probably broke it, but she claimed that the Pirate was the queen, which probably surprised the pirate and apparently upset her, because right after that she tried to burn down the city, which he wouldn't have been so concerned about, if it weren't for the fact that he was staying in this city. Then Adora, or should he say She-Ra, revived the kid, confirmed that Moonshadow was the queen, and left. On the ship, the situation returned to normal, Dr. Quin gave them a very interesting scientific lecture on the history of the Galactic Horde, which, however, had no significance for their current situation. Etheria herself turned out to be decidedly more likeable. The planet seemed to be a veritable treasure trove full of ancient artifacts and ancient technology that would keep him employed for the rest of his life, and probably beyond. Plus, it was quite a nice place, as he had the opportunity to see tonight, even if it was a bit rustic. However, when they reached the city, they saw this poster with an invitation to the wedding, where it turned out that some scared version of Eti was marrying Adora, which surprised everyone, except for the mercenary, who learned from Bina that Eti had a sister here. He wasn't that worried about this discovery, although if he had known that the crazy cat girl had relatives in the government of this planet, he would have tried to befriend with them somehow. Of course, who in their right mind could have guessed that a bunch of war orphans could have anything to do with a planet that had been hidden from the rest of the universe for a thousand years. It hurt him a bit that this mercenary found out about everything, but on the other hand, it has long been known that sex connects thinking beings. However, what she learned now changed things completely.

Miss Daisy, that damned gloomy drunk, was a member of the Etherian Horde, in fact one of its main commanders. He's been to places where just staying in the same room with an enemy of the state could get you shot in the head, and they fucking brought her here. Even if the local rulers were very understanding, he could probably say goodbye to the permission to open the excavations. He would be very lucky if he managed to leave this planet free... And there was also the matter of Lady Cala.

Now he came to the conclusion that what he now learned explained many things. The dark mystic probably found the aristocrat herself, attracted by her mystical origins. Or maybe she invented this story herself and convinced the noblewoman that she was a descendant of this Mara, so that she could return to her planet. The point was that Lady Cala didn't seem like the kind of person a stranger could convince of anything. She was an intelligent and self-confident woman, not a naive rich girl longing for life like in penny novels. How much did she know about her mentor and tutor? They couldn't ask her about it directly.

„Rosie was drawn to this woman. I even thought that she had a crush on her, as orphans are wont to do, but she was simply clever, although dumb. She wanted to be friends with someone so powerful because she hoped that she would never have to work again. Well, if they lock her up in jail, she'll be able to laze around until she dies. But you know what? I don't feel sorry for her at all. Not only did she force a humble and poor scientist to give her hard-earned money for doing nothing, but now she practically abandoned me to death on this planet cursed by Angels and Demons, where they don't even have an internet.” said the scientist, and Dilayla stared at her as she spoke, as if she wanted to grab her head and squeeze it until it burst like a ripe fruit. Maybe her relationship with that deaf girl wasn't so innocent? “However, I do not see any connection between our mystic's origin and our work, although I admit that if I knew the truth, I would ask her about the most interesting places on this planet.” Ysoka added and took a large sip of coffee. “THAT DRINK VERY GOOD. ME WANT MORE! MUCH MORE” she said to slowly and loudly to the landlady, who gave her the murderer a look.

„If you keep talking to the locals like they're idiots, they 'll start spitting into your plates, and ours as well.” Rechiza growled and added. “And if it turns out that we brought here a criminal who, let me remind you, was very cruel to the demigoddess and her fiancée, we will all be fucked.”

„Not to mention this.” Dilayla added in a quieter voice. “That we brought the bloody Lord Admiral here with his war fleet.”

Arkan-tar smiled slightly and also spoke in a low voice.

„Fortunately, it won't be easy to connect us and this man. Even if Miss Daisy spills the beans, it's not certain that anyone will believe her.” he took a sip of the sweet juice, first checking to see if there was anything floating in it. „The more important question is what we will do with Lady Cala now, because I guess pretending that nothing happened and everything can stay as it was is probably not an option.

„Why not, I can forget about everything I heard here as soon as I eat breakfast. When necessary, I can compromise with the truth.” said the Rat woman . As soon as she mentioned breakfast, it was brought immediately. It consisted of dried and candied fruit, nut paste, wholemeal bread and savory muffins.

„But will she let us forget about everything?” Dilayla said. “If he finds out that we suspect something, she may want to silence us all.”

This time, Arkan-tar rolled his eyes.

„Let's be serious, none of us probably suspects this woman of murderous tendencies.” he said with amusement, but the half”elf looked at him very seriously, as if she was a bit scared.

„I don't suspect her, but I know perfectly well that she has murderous tendencies. Shadow herself…Miss Daisy herself told me this to my face. Besides, you haven't seen her training fight. I, who have spent my entire life in war, know that I could not cope with it, even if she fought me with her bare hands and I was wearing power armor.”

„And who supposedly beat her then, because I heard she got hit, although I don't know who she was training with at the time.” he asked, chewing on some fruit similar to a grape, although more floury.

„With Rosie.„ the mercenary said, and then Dr. Quin burst out laughing, which Dilayla pointedly ignored. He himself smiled slightly.

„Do you know what I think, my dear Dilayla? You just liked this women, but she rejected you and now you're making up some ridiculous stories in revenge.”

He must have overdone it a bit, because the mercenary clenched her fists and stood up as if she was about to punch him with a cybernetic fist, but Rechiza signaled her to stop and spoke to him in a voice as sharp as Kasatha's sword.”

„ Don't measure us by your yardstick. Some of us think about our responsibilities, not just our pleasures”

„Are you jealous?„ He said and immediately regretted it, because a wave of chaotic magic from the Warper hit him.

„I am taking part in this expedition by order of the Lictor of the Order of Eclipse. He ordered me to keep an eye on Miss Daisy, because apparently she was a cultist... Maybe she really is, but I'm not so sure now. She doesn't seem to be someone who sincerely believes in anything, and if she really was such a powerful and important person, she should have created a real cult here, maybe even sold the entire planet to the dark powers... But Lady Cala... There were some signals that we didn't pay attention to earlier comments. Coldness in the relationship between her and her mentor, words and behavior that do not fit the image of a charming aristocrat, fighting skills worthy of the best warriors. She single-handedly defeated the entire Azlanti unit. There is something very wrong with her. I am a hunter and I have heard of many vile monsters hiding their monstrous nature behind a beautiful face. If she is one of them, we have a serious problem."

He looked at the ceiling. This day was looking quite good.

„And what are you going to do about it, my dear?" he asked in a tired voice. Then the women looked at him meaningfully. For a moment he wondered what they might be talking about, and when he understood, he leaned towards them and spoke in a low voice.

„You guys must be crazy... You want her... „ the unspoken word hung between them.

"If you want to do something illegal, do it without me.„ said Doctor Quin and put on headphones and played Shiren's pop.

„So tell me, smart guy, what choice do we have?" Dilayla asked, and he answered her with silence.

And then Lady Cala entered the inn. As always, she radiated beauty and magnificence. She smiled happily at them and said.

„I'm sorry I didn't come back last night, but I was invited to a very hot party. It lasted until the race itself. What are you doing here? Because you make it seem like you're up to something. – she giggled and, without waiting for an invitation, sat down next to them. He was very happy that as a Verthani he could control the color of his face. His friends were surprisingly composed. Or rather, they were just behaving as they always did. Rechiza was gloomy, and Dilayla smiled mockingly at the aristocrat. Lady Cala, clearly pleased with herself, ordered a sumptuous breakfast and a bowl of quite pleasant-smelling apple cider. At one point, when she got up to go to the toilet, he saw that Rechiza had put some powder into her drink. When Lady Cala returned, she sat down and drank the entire glass of apple drink in one gulp, then hiccupped, laughed , and apologized. Rehiza looked at him with a little fear.”

"You didn't think it would be so easy, did you," Verthani thought to himself.

Calamity felt content. The night meeting went well. The cultists showed her the respect she was usually spared from, although the way they showed it was exceptionally… relaxing. Well, the followers of Shub-Nigurath knew how to enjoy life. Although she was not sure how much she could rely on them, the Mother of a Thousand Young often recruited followers from among those who were more interested in the pursuit of carnal pleasures than in faithful service, although it was the same with Nyarlathotep. The creeping chaos usually bribed its minions with promises of power beyond the reach of mere mortals, but many of them were not truly dedicated and served themselves first. All you had to do was look at Shadow Weaver to understand how pathetic and cowardly these power-hungry sorcerers are. Fortunately, now the ruler of shadows was already far away, trying to fulfill her plan. Maybe she will succeed, time and Yog-Sototch will tell.

As soon as she entered the inn, she immediately noticed that her companions were planning something, which only improved her mood even more. Although she planned to kill them from the very beginning, each hunt and fight was more interesting when the prey defended herself. It was like a game, and she always liked playing games, although she wished the stakes wouldn't be too high since her companions didn't pose much of a threat. Rechiza was a good example. The poison she gave her caused a heart attack, but she had no heart, both figuratively and literally, although the organ pumping ichor in her body somewhat resembled one. They obviously didn't know its true nature, or weren't well enough equipped. If she had used Brevon, it would have caused her a much bigger problem. Even her regenerative abilities would have trouble dealing with such a deadly element, although it probably wouldn't kill her. But it could force her to stay in bed for several days, not to mention the radiation it would contaminate whatever she was wearing. For a moment, she was tempted to throw herself on the floor, pretending to have a heart attack, and point at Lashunti and shout, "It's her." She wonder what the locals would do with guests from an alien planet trying to poison one of their companions. The faces of the pathetic inhabitants of Etheri would be hilarious.

„However, I must admit that this night was not only about entertainment. I got us a means of transportation.” she said, devouring pasta with fruit. “Nothing special, three anti-gravity bikes. A certain general's daughter will lend them to us. Free… well, sort of. I promised I would go with her to Victory Day. All that remains is to discuss how we will divide the vehicles.”

„I'm taking Dr. Quin.” Dilayla said immediately.

„And I ride with Arkan-tar.” Rechiza hastily added. Ysoka looked at the half”elf and spoke in a serious, slightly cocky tone.

„I know that I'm extremely attractive, but restrain your lustful tendencies, because I'm only attracted to males and only from tailed species!”

The mercenary snorted with contempt. "Yes. They clearly suspect something, even if they knew the truth.”

Rechiza couldn't understand how the mercenary could sleep so peacefully after receiving such news. After all, what she learned ruined the point of their entire trip. They let in on their plans a woman who must have had a hand in this attack... Did Dilayla not care about Rosie? Or maybe it was that military thing. Mercenaries must have learned to sleep always and under all conditions, because you never know when there will be another opportunity to do so. However, she had to admit that the mercenary had gained a lot in her eyes. She really started looking for a solution to the terrible situation they found themselves in. She even let her in on her plans, which sounded quite sensible.

However, Arkan-tar turned out to be a major disappointment. First he tried to make a joke out of it, and then he fell into a chair, completely helpless. How could someone like that be considered a scholar and traveler? Every righteous being knew that in such a situation he must remain focused and not be distracted if she wanted good to prevail. Fortunately, she suspected that People like Miss Daisy did not understand this simple rule.

Arkan-tar, of course, as soon as he found out that she was going with him, started imagining ridiculous things. He was, of course, an attractive and charming and well-educated man, but she didn't just think about those things. Even though she hadn't been with anyone since the accident, the loss of her antennae meant she couldn't feel things the way she used to, and she was afraid that being together would be a huge disappointment. The truth was that she didn't want to go with Lady Cala because the woman truly terrified her, especially after she drank a dose of poison that could kill three people. Whatever she was, they would find out sooner than they would like.

They left the town around ten o'clock in the evening. She had to admit that this planet was quite a nice place. She had never felt such clean air even on Castrowal. But it wasn't just the clean air that made this place so extraordinary. She felt the power permeating them through and through. It intoxicated her, like pure oxygen. The magic came from inside the planet, but not only that. She felt it from the moons too, but this time it was different. She didn't know how it was with technomancers and ordinary mystics, but she drew power from other planes and thanks to it she was able to feel something amazing. These moons produced planar resonance. Everyone is different. For example, the black, barely visible moon resonated with the depressing despair of Abadon , while the fiery orange one radiated the resonance of fiery joy typical of Elysium. She had no idea whether the inhabitants of this place felt their influence in their daily lives, or whether she was even aware of their power. Unfortunately, she didn't have time to ask anyone. Animals were plentiful here, another thing that connected this place to her native Castrowal . She didn't look at many creatures, but from what she saw, some of them were surprisingly similar to those that were supposed to live on the lost Golarion, which wasn't that strange. Many of the terraformed planets were home to animals that once lived on that legendary planet, but most of them were colonized after the Gap, or not long before it ended, and Etheria would be cut off from the rest of the Galaxy for millennia. But what was she wondering about, since the inn was run by a very friendly couple, the Strix , and the Lashuntas lived in the jungle ... And their Grand Marshal looked almost like an unstable teenager they had brought here. Apparently the planet had already been partially terraformed before it was cut off from the rest of the Galaxy, and the colonizers, probably the Firsts ones, brought here a labor force gathered from all over the galaxy. But several animals looked different. They had many eyes that looked like they were made of jewels. She saw a small blue-furred mouse eating some fruit, probably of Golarion origin. It was interesting, although she doubted it would ever matter to them.

The vehicles were generally similar in structure to the skimmer in which they flew to the town. They were probably made by the local Horde, and she had to admit that they were surprisingly functional, although she suspected that the soft seats had been added here quite recently. Arkan-tar was a really good driver, and it was nice riding with him and having him around her waist felt good, though she would never admit it out loud. Dilayla rode with Dr. Quin , whom she strapped to her chest in a makeshift baby carrier. Lady Cala, of course, turned out to be an excellent pilot.

She moved ahead of their small group like a guide, and sometimes she waited for them, smiling broadly and joyfully, until it made her feel sick.

Eventually they reached the dry rainforest hills. The plants here were covered with countless thorns, although it was quite pleasant here. Dilayla divided the equipment between them and then they set off. The terrain was difficult and they had to leave their vehicles on the road, which did not please Dr. Quin , who complained about her painful joints. Well, traveling with Ysokis and scientists at the same time had its share of problems. During this journey, they often strayed from the established path, as if the forest itself was trying to get in their way. She used to wander the wilderness of the Pact Worlds very often, before... the accident, but since then she had mainly been conducting investigations or research and had lost some of her stamina, which caused her to often stop and gasp, but she tried not to complain. Dilayla, of course, had no problems in her armor, although she would have been fine in a swimsuit. She finally decided to strap Doctor Quin to her armor using the carrier she had used earlier, probably so that she wouldn't have to hear her grumbling and whining anymore and so that she wouldn't delay her march. Arkan-tar was, of course, fresh and rested, apparently his nightly activities had not tired him. And Lady Cala… well, she was tireless. She jumped over boulders and stones like a rock drake, and the vines and bushes did not pose the slightest obstacle to her, she chopped them with powerful blows of the machete. She suspected she would have chopped off their limbs with the same verve and smile. She shuddered at the thought.

At one point, Arkan-tar approached her. There was an inherent happy smile on Verthani's face , as if the morning conversation had not taken place.

„Help you? You look exhausted.” he suggested, but she glared at him furiously.

„Oh, you want to play gentleman saving a lady in trouble? I can handle!”

„Not every woman can be Dilayla... Personally, I'm glad she is n't because my nightlife would be much more boring.” Verthani chuckled, which irritated her even more. “You're the one who does magic, and it would be unfortunate if you fainted just as you were supposed to fight off Leukodaemon”

She bit her lip and said in a low voice.

„Maybe she's the best of us because she's the only one who still cares about anything. We hide behind our Mission, even though we don't really know what it is now, allowing someone like Anatares to roam this corner of the galaxy, so terribly tried by evil and tyranny . And it's not going too well for us, because we don't give a damn about anything so much that we brought a damn witch and a monster here, damn... „ she stopped and looked around with frightened eyes. “Due to our ignorance, we probably sentenced Rosie, Bina and her kids to death or maybe something worse. I won't even be sorry if our noble aristocrat cuts us into pieces!” at the end of her statement she almost screamed, then adjusted her backpack and moved forward, although only Eloritu knew how much her back hurt.”

The phrase she hated most in the world was "I told you so." But she could use it to describe the entire day today. Arkan-tar and Rechiza did not take kindly to the news of who they had been traveling with all this time. Rechiza acted as if she was offended by reality, and Arkan”tar simply denied the inconvenient facts. And Dr. Quin just didn't care. She never wanted to be anyone's moral compass, but clearly she had to. She was only happy that the Warper was willing to cooperate, and even tried to poison Lady Cala , albeit unsuccessfully. She wasn't sure if there was any poison in the galaxy that could kill such a nasty viper...

The terrain was becoming more and more mountainous and it was more and more difficult for them to climb, especially the Warper had trouble continuing her journey, but she didn't ask anyone for help, not even Verthani , for whom she clearly felt something, so she didn't lean out. Dr. Quin snored happily strapped to her armor, completely oblivious to the shocks. She kind of envied her ability to ignore problems.

Finally they reached the top of a not very high, very flattened mountain. There were many boulders and a stone obelisk decorated with images of a monstrous creature, somewhat similar to a nightmarish, humanoid version of the Golarion elephant.

„What kind of madness is this?" the mercenary asked with disgust.

„ It's Chaugnar Fhagn, Horror From The Hills. Apparently Bina's scanners led us to the temple of the Great Old One." Rechiza muttered, a strange mixture of relief and disgust in her voice.

„No, that can't be it. The statue was created quite recently. Traces of erosion indicate that it was no more than three or four hundred years ago, and using the simplest tools. We are looking for something that resembles traces of a highly developed civilization. The First Ones, as far as is known, were not worshipers of the Great Old Ones, or any other beings for that matter. This was probably built here because the locals remembered that this place was associated with the First Ones and wanted to capture a piece of their splendor by building their temple here. Or they left a statue of such a terrible creature here to oppose another, equally great evil. "Arkan-tar explained, continuing to look around."

„The First Ones are generally considered a noble race serving good, it is highly doubtful that anyone sees evil in them." Rechiza said uncertainly and winced as she unconsciously touched her cybernetic eye.

„An Angel for some will be a Demon for others." Lady Cala said, and on this one occasion she agreed with her wholeheartedly.

They stopped for a while and Dr. Quin began to examine the area using one of her devices, as she said, looking for a disruption in the structure of the magical network. About fifteen minutes later she approached one of the many mounds of stones and said.

„Hmm... Strange...”

„More strange than the image of an Eldritch monster?” she said in a sarcastic tone.

Ysoka waved her hand.

“Sure. I've seen something like this on TV many times. And here something is sucking in the micromagic waves I am sending, instead of simply bending them, as it should be done.

“So that means there's a place out there that we need to get to?” the mercenary asked, and when Ysoka nodded, she told everyone to stand back and fired several times from her shoulder-mounted cannon. After a few volleys she managed to loosen the stones and walked over to them and using the force provided by the power armor began to move them apart. Then Lady Cala rolled up her sleeves and said.

„I'll help you.” she started working with the mercenary. It didn't escape anyone's notice that the aristocrat was as strong as a woman in modern power armor, but no one commented on it because there was no point. Everyone knew what that meant anyway. Soon they saw a tunnel covered with a substance resembling a crystal.

„Let's go.” said Dilayla, feeling the battle excitement in her stomach.

The corridor was wide and illuminated by the soft glow of the crystals. Rechiza walked timidly next to the mercenary, looking uncertainly at the walls, which were covered with star-like inscriptions, similar to those in the monastery.

„The node of the northern part of the Adamantium Soul planetary defense system.” the Warper explained in a muffled voice. She was terrified. As far as the mercenary knew , it was related to an accident that resulted in her losing her eyes and antennae. She understood her. Even she, a veteran of many wars clad in extremely resistant armor, gave chills, let alone a fragile Warperr.

Arkan-tar examined his surroundings carefully, apparently more used to this type of place than the others. Lady Cala, on the other hand, seemed fascinated. It was one of the few times she acted true to the image she was trying to project. After all, this was a place created by her ancestors. And Dr. Quin just seemed disappointed

They finally reached a huge room with lots of pink crystals mounted in the walls. In the middle there was a ten-meter-wide pillar covered with an exceptionally dense network of inscriptions in the First Ones language. The pillar was hollow inside and there was a recess inside it. It looked like a place where you could put an object, perhaps a battery or some kind of generator to provide power to the entire complex. There were numerous lines branching out from it, though she didn't understand their purpose, but well, that wasn't her job.

„It's probably a geomantic network, I wonder what they were used for...” Rechiza started , but then she stopped and started trembling. She raised her right hand and pointed to the shape resting against the opposite wall . It resembled a combination of a millipede and a sea spider with countless limbs.

„I think he's inactive, but we have to be very careful, because if he wakes up, we'll be screwed.„ said Arkan-tar. Everyone, even Lady Cala, nodded.

„It says there that one branch leads to the terminal of some Heart Gift Planetary Archive , and the other to the planetary node control center. Maybe let's go in the other direction first.” Rechiza said in a hushed whisper.

Arkan-tar and Lady Cala nodded and they all headed towards the chosen branch. However When they were very close, Lady Cala jumped back and said with false sadness in her voice.

„Well, I was originally planning to give you a much more... Sophisticated death, but this one will be much more practical... I won't ruin my dress... oh , you're not surprised! I blew a joke!”

The aristocrat giggled and dodged Dilayla's shot very neatly. She then pulled out her plasma gun and shot at the mechanical monster. Rechiza screamed as the creature moved. But then Dilayla held out her hand, which held a detonator of explosives. Lady Cala's eyes widened as she realized what had happened, and with a movement so fast that the mercenary could barely see, she threw the backpack in which Dilayla had previously placed their explosives towards them. The half-elf immediately set off the fuse, but the backpack was already flying towards them. The explosion blew both Ich and Lady Cala back. The vault began to collapse, and then darkness fell.

The force of the Explosion would have killed a more pity creature on the spot, but it threw her against the wall. It burned part of her body and ripped off her arm, which was only a minor inconvenience, but it also ruined her dress, something she would never forgive those filthy worms. She didn't think these creatures could afford such treacherous perfidy. However, she should show off less and watch them more. Sometimes Shadow Weaver's words contain wisdom, she should probably listen to it sometimes... even though it was so... irritating.

She didn't feel pain the way normal mortals did. She couldn't lose consciousness either. Even when she slept, she was actually listening to the music of the universe that her divine parent hummed. So all she could do was wait for her body to recover sufficiently until she could take any action. The eyes were the first to regenerate, the sense organs were always among the first to return to functionality. She saw that the tunnel containing these traitorous scum was collapsed, so she smiled with what was left of her mouth. The explosive was much closer to her than to them when it detonated, so there was a chance they wouldn't die instantly. She hoped that they were now lying there on the other side, waiting for a slow death by starvation... Although perhaps she would find another, much more interesting use for them. For their wickedness, they did not deserve an easy end. Fortunately, the local runestone site remained intact. While these artifacts have lost much of their former usefulness, her bloodstone nerve core will thus be able to tap into the planet's geomatic grid and create its own crystalline grid. Everything was going according to plan, but then she saw movement. The mechanical guard stirred and woke up. By the tentacles of Shub-Niggurath ! This creature could be a real problem. She wasn't sure she could beat him. A similar one once almost killed an enhanced She-Ra, until Shadow Weaver had to give up her worthless life and call upon the power of an Outer God to defeat him. Although it was not easy to kill her, a few cells were enough for her to regenerate, although it was a long process, and even then, there was a chance that she would lose some of her freshest memories, but imprisoning her was devastatingly easy. She had to get away from this beast as quickly as possible, get out of here! She tried to get up and run out of there, but her body failed her. That was weird. After taking such damage, her regeneration must have been slower, but something else was slowing her down, probably the power drain that that stupid rodent had mentioned. She fell over with a nasty splat, and then the creature turned towards her. She cursed, got up and started running. She knew she wouldn't make it to the exit, but there was this side branch leading to that planetary archive. Maybe she'll make it. She tensed all her muscles and jumped. If she were like the mangy worms she had traveled with so recently, she would have lost her head, but her supernatural dexterity only caused him to lose a few strands of hair. Any damage to her perfect body, even the slightest, was a crime worthy of the utmost punishment, but now was not the time. She quickly crawled deeper into the corridor to keep the creature from reaching her. The mechanical monster couldn't get through here. She stood up, smiling with almost regenerated lips. Well, maybe she would be trapped here for a while, but even though she couldn't use real magic, she knew an ancient art that was deadly to mortals, but for someone as great as her, it was just a friendly arrangement. He only needs to wait a moment and then he will summon some servant of the Old Ones, or he will travel through the cursed plateau of Leng or the Land of Dreams

And then hundreds of smaller mechanisms similar to it began to descend from the mechanical guard's body, rushing towards her with the obvious intention of tearing her to shreds.

„Seriously?” she shouted, crushing the nearest crab spider with her foot and running into the room. Being torn apart by such tiny creatures. She bought some time. She found herself in a narrow room with several armchairs, which, according to the creators, were probably comfortable. She looked around, this would be an extremely idiotic end for someone like her!

„Hello! How can I serve you?” asked the hologram figure that suddenly appeared next to her.

„Who are you?” She asked, surprised by the appearance of a new creature. She could already hear the wave of mechanical crab spiders approaching.

„I am Heart Gift, planetary archive. I just found out that Mara and Light Hope were my moms, isn't that amazing?” Hologram said with Pure Delight.

„Indeed... „ she replied with sincere astonishment. But then she saw the robotic bugs coming and said.” Is there any way you can stop them?

„ I don't know if I'm allowed. Light Hope... my mother told me she forbade me from influencing defense programs. Geart said carefully Gift .

„Your mother certainly wouldn't be happy if you allowed an innocent creature to get hurt.” she said, jumping on a chair to avoid being torn to pieces. Heart Gift thought about her words for a moment, then waved her hand and all the creatures first froze and then began to retreat. Once the danger was averted, she looked at the hologram girl. Shadow Weaver had mentioned Light Hope to her, although honestly she didn't know much else about her. She knew that she was the planetary interface overseeing the Heart of Etheria project and was the mentor of the previous She-

Ra. As the presence of the creature standing next to her indicated, they were much closer. This can be used very creatively. She bowed as courtly as she could and said a friendly word.

„Thank you very much, Heart Gift, for saving my life. My name is Lady Cala Grayskull . My friends... they are probably dead or missing and now I am very lonely... Would you be willing to be my friend”

The holographic girl looked at her for a moment, then triggered holographic fireworks and jumped up and down happily.

„I have my first friend!”

Chapter Notes

> I would like to ask my readers to comment on my work, if you like it, it would give me strength to continue working on it.

She was lying on the border between wakefulness and sleep and was purring, cuddled up to Adora . She had several moments in her life when she wanted to stay in this blissful state, because she knew that as soon as she opened her eyes, she would have to face the terrifying reality. This was the case after Adora left the Fright Zone or when she was kidnapped by Horde Prime. This time, however, it was different. She had her friends who would help her face any danger that came her way. She was no longer alone against the world.

But this time it was different in another way too. The danger was much less obvious, perhaps it wasn't there at all. She didn't know if this man was truly a threat to them, or that Shadow Weaver was actually returned. After all, in such a large universe, there could be hundreds of sorcerers wielding shadow magic who had probably never even heard of the dark sorceress. Now, in the daylight, the idea that this evil woman had risen from the dead seemed like one of those stupid campfire stories. Her father didn't have to be a bad person, and besides, the line between good and evil wasn't always so obvious. She knew it best herself. However, something else was different than last time. Now she was in the center of all events and it was up to her how everything would unfold. The fate of everyone rested on her shoulders. She looked at her beloved, who was sleeping soundly, snoring loudly, and thought. So that's how it is… How do you deal with it, my love. With this weight crushing you to the ground? But she knew the answer. She couldn't cope at all, it wasn't something that could be dealt with. All you could do was fight to keep the weight from crushing you.

They didn't make love that night, they just fell asleep cuddling each other right away. It was already late, probably around four in the morning, and the day had been long and tiring. It was now about nine o'clock and her head was hurting. She was sleepy, but she had to get up. This will probably be much more difficult for Glimmer, the ruler of Etheria liked to sleep until noon and go to bed after midnight. To be honest, it was similar with her, only the queen was not used to the brutal wake-ups they were given in the Fright Zone. She leaned over her future wife to kiss her, but as soon as she moved, Adora opened her eyes in slight fear. Adora, contrary to what some might have thought, had a lighter sleep even than her. Sometimes she felt like she never allowed herself to fully relax

„We have to get up, beloved... „ she said sadly, although she was smiling. "Glimmer will probably want to discuss wedding matters with you, and I… . „She sighed, and Adora embraced her and started stroking her neck with her fingers, making her shiver."

„Maybe we can order breakfast in bed and lie there for a while."

She sighed heavily and wrapped her arms around her fiancée's waist.

„I'd love to, but I really can't... He's waiting for me... „ There was much more worry and anxiety in her voice than she wanted.

„He's been waiting for you for twenty years, nothing will happen to him if he waits for you another hour or two..."

„Are you going to eat breakfast for two hours?" she asked, baring her fangs. Her hand slid a little lower, to Adora's buttock.

„Not only breakfast, darling." said the heroine of the Galaxy and kissed her hard and long. When she finally interrupted her, she said.

„You're idiot, if we start making love now, we'll eat a big breakfast, after which we'll want to take a nap, and then when we get up, we'll start... taking care of ourselves again and we'll lie here until noon. Or straight to dinner.”

Adora giggled and said.

„I'm not idiot, but cunny girl!”

They laughed together, but then they got up and took a quick shower, then got dressed, kissed each other goodbye, and went their separate ways.

In fact, she was very hungry, yesterday she only ate travel rations and until noon, because she was preparing for the sumptuous welcome dinner that she and Glimmer would eat. Melog was waiting for her outside the door, for obvious reasons they preferred him not to sleep in their room, but in his own small room. The cat-like creature practically didn't need to eat, it fed on pure magic in the air, but it could sense when its mistress was hungry, so it was concerned. So she came up with an idea. She went to the kitchen and asked if the Lord Admiral had had breakfast yet, and when they said no, she ordered the cart of food back and went to where their new guest was supposed to be.

Antares was placed in a small guest house built in the outer part of the castle. It provided as much privacy as possible in Brightmoon . They had certainly been very hospitable towards the Admiral, but she wasn't sure if it was reasonable.

In front of the door of the cottage stood two guards and the woman, Lady Ka, who threw the knife and caught it as it fell. This must have been extremely irritating for the guards.

„Hey.” she said carefully, hoping not to disturb the other woman's rhythm, which could result in her hurting herself.

„Hello.” said Mrs. Ka and looked at her, smiling mockingly. “You have to wait a while because the Lord Admiral is taking a shower and shaving and stuff like that.”

She nodded and was silent for a moment because she wasn't sure what she could talk about with the other man's companion.

„So you are…„ she asked carefully, and Lady Ka replied cheerfully.

„His intelligence and information officer. His left better hand... The Lord Admiral is left-handed, probably like you.” the woman stopped throwing the knife and pointed to her left hand, which she was leaning on the food cart. She also looked this way. In the Horde, being left-handed was a bit of a handicap because everything was made for right-handed people, although it was Shadow Weaver who was most irritated by it. When she was learning to write, in a fit of meanness, even for her, she order her to tie her left hand behind her back so that she could write like any intelligent creature. Of course, she failed to achieve anything, as she always did when she tried to bend her to her will.

„So… how long have you been with the Lord Admiral.” she asked carefully, in a not very confident tone, because she had absolutely no idea what to talk about with this woman, if anything at all. But she could be a useful source of information about her... about the Lord Admiral. There was just something wrong with her...

„It depends on what you're asking, if you mean whether the Lord Admiral is my guy, then no, he's not, so if you and your fiancée would like a little experiment, I'm free.” said Lady Ka and winked at her.

„Experiment?” she asked, honestly shocked. She did not condemn such relationships, nor did most of the inhabitants of Etheria , even Sea Hawk's mother lived in such a relationship, but she was not used to such... straightforwardness.

„Ha! You blushed... I was just joking. Maybe the Lord Admiral isn't the type to kill you for sleeping with his daughter, but the gods are guarding careful ones.” she said and giggled again. “As for your question, it will be about five years. Since the Fall of Kesler and the death of Jantar. My Father and creator.” she said and became thoughtful.

„Creators? In what sense?” she asked. She didn't like the sound of that word.

„Well, creators. He created us. We are his clones, just like Horde Prime's younger brothers, although our dad always introduced a few improvements and more.” she pointed to her breasts.

Instinctively, the fur on her tail stood on end, and Melog flashed a warning green-yellow. She didn't think there was room in the universe for another fuck like that.

„So he... That Jantar was some kind of your Horde Prime?” she asked with a mixture of pity and horror.

„Uh, no. Not this scale of power and madness. Our Father was the underworld boss on Atrax, and we, the Thousand Daughters, were his gang. Well. He was a cunning bastard, but in the end he ended up just like your Horde Prime... Although we turned out to be much more sensible than the long-eared ones.” she said, grabbing the knife tightly and throwing it at the tree, right next to a very cute squirrel “We killed him.” she looked at her sideways, and the visible half of her mouth twisted into a very nasty smile. “But please don't follow our example. It would be very difficult for me to find an equally good employer now.”

If Double Trouble had a child with Shadow Weaver, it would be like that woman... I don't like her she thought with Irritation. There was something nasty about Lady Ka. Something that brought back very unpleasant memories. Melog looked down at her, his hair all ruffled. He didn't like this woman either. She must keep an eye on this woman.

„I think the Lord Admiral has probably washed and is ready for breakfast...„ she said coldly. Lady Ka tilted her head to the side, like a predator wanting to take a closer look at a newly encountered animal, and said unexpectedly happily.

„You really look like him!”

She blinked and touched the cat's ears reflexively.

„Really?” she said skeptically. “I didn't notice when I looked in the mirror recently.”

„Then look again, especially at the glow of the blue eye. But it's not about looks. You have something inside you. Something very familiar” she said and opened the door with her foot, and then in a slightly exaggerated, even mocking way, motioned for her to enter.

Lord Admiral Antares sat on the back porch, basking in the warm sunlight. He was happy, for the first time in years everything was going according to plan… No, that wasn't the right word. Yes, the war was going extremely well, although no one declared it to anyone, just like the realization of his more... personal ambitions. But what he found here… It changed everything. Until now, all his actions had been dictated by his desire to create a legacy that would last after his far too quick end, and to secure the future of his soldiers, but now… Now it turned out that there was another path, bright and clear. The destiny of the Antares family once again lay before him bright and clear. And not only in front of him, but also in front of his successor ... but he must be very vigilant. It would take great care and considerable effort, and probably many sacrifices, to set her on the right path, but was it possible to achieve true victory without shedding some blood?

Then she came in. He smiled involuntarily, which didn't happen to him very often because he always tried to control himself. Here, however, a slightly more open display of emotions was welcome.

She stood there with one hand leaning on the food cart. Normally, he was supposed to be brought by the servants, but he guessed that she needed an extra excuse to come here, because it couldn't be that she was here just to see him. Like him, she had some trouble showing her true feelings... and controlling them. The girl wore a red vest and fingerless leather gloves, and her hair, which was tied in a ponytail, was of a dark color inherited from Ashera, stiff and wild like a real Pahtra's, although it grew like a human's. The eyes, although cat-like and multi-colored, had the alertness and intelligence of the Antares family . She stood stiffly, nervous, hiding her uncertainty behind a proud, slightly arrogant posture. She had a hard look in her eyes, one hand on her hip, and a small smile on her face. But the tip of her tail was trembling nervously, and her companion, this strange cat with a translucent mane, was red and blue. He wasn't sure, but probably these colors reflected his emotions. Did they also show what his owner was feeling? At the sight of the unusual animal, Resh stood up, but gestured for it to return to its seat.

„Good morning... Daughter."

The girl's ears twitched nervously, she still probably hadn't fully accepted that he was her Father, but otherwise she maintained her composure. She was brought up well.

„I brought breakfast for Lord Admiral Antares and his companion. "she said in an official tone.

„Companions. Although Lady Sorrowflame separated from us after landing and went to explore Etheria on her own, and Ashurk, my PR specialist, left early in the morning, she is probably still looking for access to the network, but they are my subordinates. But that's not important now. Please sit down. I would like to talk to you, I would like to meet you. „ he pulled a chair for her and she sat down with some hesitation. They started helping themselves to breakfast, each one separately. There were steamed buns with sweet, fruit and bean fillings. Semi-hard-cooked vegetables, cream cheese, smoked fish and coarse grain pancakes. To drink there was sour milk and hibiscus tea. Lady Ka said she would eat later and stayed outside, watching what was happening in the castle. They ate in silence for some time until he finally broke the silence.”

„It's nice here, definitely nicer than on Atrax, not to mention places like Eox or Aukturn.”

„Where I grew up, in the Fright Zone, nothing was pretty... Well, almost nothing.” she smiled for a moment, but then became serious.

„Yes. Star Siblings told me a bit about your childhood. It's from them that I learned about you.”

This time she looked at him in surprise.

„Do you know Star Siblings? Jewlstar and the rest?” she asked, and he nodded and said

„Yes, they were the first people from the fallen empire I encountered. Very nice, although Starla has a weak head. They joined my fleet.” he said and started spreading cheese on another piece of pie. This news broke the ice a bit, because Catra visibly relaxed, probably without even realizing it. After a few moments she asked.

„How did I end up here if this place was cut off from the galaxy?” there was hunger in her voice, an answer to a question she had probably been wondering about for a long time.

„I don't know the exact answer myself, but I know that Dr. Sidonius, an ancient and extremely lousy vampire, but also a great scientist, was involved in everything.”

„A vampire... A non-dead creature that feeds on blood...„ she said, and when he nodded, she added. “Once, not so long ago, I thought they were creatures from fairy tales that scare children so that they obey and do not rebelled Against superiors.” she said, as if she was referring to some very unpleasant memory. “But where did I come from? We are not alike. We're not even the same species.” she looked at him sharply.

Now I have to be very careful.

“My family... our family has ruled the planet Tarak for centuries, more or less fairly. Not all members of our family were noble rulers like in legends, and there were a few tyrants and even simple fools among us, but overall we were not that bad. When I took over after my tragically deceased father, the situation in our part of the galaxy was extremely complicated. There was a Cold War between the two greatest powers in the region, the freedom and individualism-valuing Pact Worlds and the militaristic, conquest-hungry Veskarium . Both sides avoided direct conflict, instead fighting proxy wars. Tarak has always been on the side of the Pact Worlds, so we naturally became the enemy of Veskarium. So they sent specialists in overthrowing governments, the siblings Igzar and Ashera. They were part of the Pahtra species, warrior and independent catpeople who had been conquered by Veskarium years ago. They were… really good at their job. Taking advantage of old animosities, mistakes of local leaders and sometimes terror, they started an uprising. Igzar commanded the army, but Ashera led the troops and carried out most of the military operations.” he may have been almost entirely truthful in this part of story. After his descendant's reaction, he realized that he was referring to her memories. It's a pity he didn't know her story more thoroughly, because then it would be much easier for him to… win her favor. “Igzar was ruthless and cruel, he did not hesitate to resort to any kind of brutality to achieve his goals. But Ashera was a bit different. I wouldn't say she fought honorably, none of us did. But… she had some scruples. And she was insanely brave, she was not afraid to jump into flames just to get her way, although she was also very cunning and could easily outsmart most of my generals.” he noticed that Catra liked the story he was telling him… Perfect. “We met several times on the battlefield and began to respect each other. At some point we even started corresponding and became very close.” the girl twitched her ears, and her cat raised its head curiously, as if it understood what the story was about. Maybe that's what it was like. He had to remain very vigilant and couldn't underestimate anyone. “I won't lie to you, it wasn't romantic love. Neither I was interested in her in that way, nor she in anyone else, which is quite common with Pahtra. But... a bond was created between us, a very strong one. However, before the day of the battle that would decide everything, Igzar ordered her to assassinate me. She almost made it." he pointed to the scar on his face and the cybernetic eye. "But I survived, although I lost the war and had to evacuate with my supporters to avoid reprisals from the victors. And Ashera … Igzar did not tolerate failure. He decided that Asherah didn't kill me because of the sentiment she felt for me and ordered her to be killed." Now was the more delicate part, where the truth gave in to necessity. "Igzar committed many war crimes... or maybe he was simply too effective and his former superiors and allies began to fear him... In any case, he was forced to leave the planet. However, he took his sister's body with him... And since he had access to my DNA stored in various places... He took it with him and decided to contact a certain scientist from Atrax, Jantar.... Lady Ka told you about him, I see„ he said when he saw how the girl reacted to the name of the mad scientist. Fortunately, she and Mrs. Ka had agreed on the appropriate version in advance.

„Yes, your companion told me about him. This was the man who created her… and me, right." she asked, and her cat began to look at him suspiciously.

„Yes, he created you in his laboratories. Igzar had large funds at his disposal, which he looted during the war... And which he earned by commanding his company of mercenaries, the famous Shadows of Tarak, so he had no problem paying for the work of the mad scientist-gangster. Igzar came up with the idea that if he created a child that was a combination of his sister and me, it would be able to inherit some of my former influence, as there were still many supporters of my family left on the planet, especially after the new government began to make the planet similar to Veskarium in terms of laws. civic. He hoped that in this way he would take revenge on his former colleagues and return to the big game. But that wasn't his whole plan. He wanted this child to be a murderess, an ideal warrior who would command the Shadows, and perhaps in the distant future go to his species' home planet to fight the Vesks to liberate his planet. After that, you had one more task. Igzar decided that it would be a very poetic end for me if I died by the hand of my own daughter.„ He poured himself a cup of tea and waited for his descendant to digest what she heard. Catra stared at her hands in disbelief and pain as her pet rubbed against her comfortingly.

„So I was just supposed to be a tool, a weapon created for fighting, right? The sword of Vengeance? But why... Why didn't he take me... and I ended up here... „ she looked down. He sighed and said sadly.

„Because you were a baby and he couldn't wait for you to grow up, so he didn't want to take you. In this case, Jantar wanted to cut his losses and sold you to a research facility owned by the servants of Nyarlathotep , an ancient dark entity, that was run by Doctor Sidonius ... This is where my trail ends”

He looked at her questioningly, and he looked down, and she thought for a long moment, and then she started talking... About her childhood in the Fright Zone, being raised by an evil sorceress called Shadow Weaver, about the difficult life of a cadet. The only thing that allowed her to survive that time was her friendship with Adora . Then her only friend found the sword that gave She-Ra's power, left and joined the Rebellion, and she began her career as a captain of the Horde, and then as the right hand of its leader. The more success she achieved, the more hatred and anger burned in her heart, until finally the terrible incident of the opening of the portal occurred. Then her story was no longer bright and clear, but it all ended with the death of Queen Angela, the mother of the current ruler, and the establishment of contact with the galactic Horde. Then the war escalated more and more, and finally... Here he hesitated for a moment, as if she wasn't sure if she should tell him the truth, but after some thought, she said that Glimmer had unknowingly activated the Heart of Etheria, a terrible weapon created by the First Ones to cleanse the Galaxy. Adora then broke her sword, but Etheria was torn from Despondos and the Horde occupation began almost immediately. His descendant and queen were kidnapped by Horde Prime .

There... Catra watched the Empire's operations closely and eventually found out that Adora was looking for Glimmer, so she helped her free herself, but was punished terribly for it. At this point, Catra fell silent and trembled, reliving the terrible memories. He knew some people had trouble dealing with these types of wounds, so he waited until she was ready. When she calmed down, she said that she was freed by Adora , who had regained She-Ra's power. Her friends convinced her to stay with them. On Kryat she found Melog, who became her companion and then they returned to Etheria, where they continued to fight, but it was difficult because many princesses were Chipped. Shadow Weaver also returned and tried to separate them again. Adora agreed to a terrible sacrifice. The final battle took place when Horde Prime decided to activate the Heart on his own. At first she wanted to leave, but then she changed her mind and forced the Dark Sorceress to take her to Adora. She did it at the last minute, because her friend was fighting a guardian powerful enough to kill She-Ra . They only defeated him thanks to Shadow Weaver sacrificing herself, but Adora was poisoned nonetheless. Regardless, her beloved decided to deactivate the heart, even at the cost of her life. Then she confessed her love and Adora somehow found the strength to survive and unleash the magic. Endowed with full power, She-Ra defeated the Horde and annihilated Horde Prime .... And now they are together.

There was silence. He knew he had just obtained the information he had been sent here for, but he didn't care. He didn't come here to follow the orders of these or other politicians. All that mattered was his goals, and now the future of his house. So he stood up and placed his hand on Catra's shoulder and said the words she wanted to hear.

„I'm proud of you, daughter."

"I'm proud of you, daughter." When she heard these words, a shiver ran through her body and tears came to her eyes, and it was only with a supreme effort of will that she stopped herself from bursting into tears. Perhaps she should let her emotions flow, as Glimmer and Bow would have advised her to do, but she heard her sister's voice in the back of her mind. Don't trust him. Everything he says is a lie. But how much could she believe her? Or him? She felt torn between distrust, or caution as she called it, and her desire for this man to be… He was as he seemed. She really wanted someone who was to her like Mikah was to Glimmer. Who would replace Shadow Weaver in her memories. But she was afraid of disappointment and that the feeling that pricked her soul like a splinter stuck in her finger would turn out to be real. The feeling that everything is too good to be true... Is it really that good?

It was created by a crazy individual no better than Horde Prime... for money. She was created not out of love, but to fulfill her uncle's ambitions. She was a weapon, a blade like a sword of protection…. Like Adora in the hands of Shadow Weaver. For years she had envied her beloved for her uniqueness, at least in the eyes of her "guardian", but now it turned out that she could share her fate.

However, this was not the right time to dwell on the past and its origins. Her father was here and she still had questions for him that needed answers.

„So I was created almost twenty-five years ago. During all this time, hasn't Jantar been trying to create... another person like me? – she asked and looked hard at her father, dismissing all the recent sadness. She had to be strong to find out the truth. The Lord Admiral hesitated and sat slowly in his chair. She felt Melog watching him carefully. The resident of Kryat did not trust this man. He couldn't recognize a lie, especially one hidden among the truth. He had told her that the other man was very composed and concealed his emotions, but now her question unsettled him. It reminded her that she had to stay vigilant and that she couldn't completely trust Antares ...

„Yes, I know of one who survived.„ he said, and she felt her heart begin to pound in her chest and heat spread throughout her body.

„I need to explain to you that our family has a genetic flaw that has made genetic engineering extremely difficult.” she paled when she heard about the genetic defect, because she wanted to have children with Adora one day, but seeing her reaction, the Lord Admiral smiled sadly and said in a reassuring tone. „Don't worry. You didn't inherit it. That's why creating you was so difficult. A few years ago there was a Swarm Attack on the Kes-Atr-On system, where my forces covered the evacuation of civilians from the planet Kesler, and then I fought a victorious battle on the planet Atrax, where Jantar lived. Igzar fought there too, and I would be lying if I said he didn't show great heroism. However, he was primarily interested in the glory that he could use to regain his influence over Tarak. A year earlier, Jantar finally created a teenager that met his standards of perfection. The girl was not only more mature, but also had knowledge about military, leading others and... killing. However, Jantar was too brutal towards his daughters, so they came to me to help overthrow him. I managed to do it, but before Lady Ka gave me your sister, Igzar kidnapped her and, although he died, that girl ended up in the hands of Tarak's shadows. I hadn't heard anything about her until recently, butLady Ka spotted her trail near the zon a few weeks ago, so I put my finger on it. Perhaps I will be able to find her... „ he finished and drank the curdled milk. She crossed her arms over her chest. For a moment she wanted to tell him that she had met her sister. But… She didn't want to take any chances. The girl didn't want their father to be told about their existence, so she figured he would listen to her. If her father was a good man, or at least not a bad one, then he would understand her. And if it is otherwise, it will protect Eti from Admiral Antares.

Out of the corner of her eye, she saw movement in the bushes and what appeared to be a fragment of purple hair. Apparently Entrapta couldn't stand it anymore and went on spying missions to spy on the technology in their guests' possession. Fortunately, the Inventor could move extremely quietly when she wanted to... But she had to not lose control herself before catch the first Gadget that came within the reach of her hair. Normally she wouldn't mind, but the former ruler of Dryl wasn't very good at keeping secrets. It's time to get ready and take Entrapte with you . But she had to ask one question first.

„ Are there many sorcerers in the universe who practice shadow magic? – she asked carefully, and the Lord Admiral looked at her in surprise, then thought better of it and answered.

„Quite a lot. Although I am not a specialist in the field of mystics, as the most popular type of Magic users is correctly called. This is one of the more common types of dark magic, although that does not mean that its users are evil. From what I know, it is especially popular among the followers of Lao Shu Po, the goddess of deceit, theft and murder, and Zon-Kuthon , the God of Darkness, jealousy and suffering, but also among ordinary thieves or scouts, and other people who rely on hiding in darkness. „ said the Lord Admiral and became lost in thought.

She felt great relief. Although she didn't like all this talk about gods, apparently such practices were much more popular in the galaxy than she expected, but at least there was at least a small chance that it was just a coincidence and her sister didn't end up in the clutches of that bitch. That Shadow Weaver is dead and will never come back. But then Antares added.

„Theoretically it was supposed to be a secret, but we sent a reconnaissance mission first. It was led by Lady Cala Grayskull , who claimed to be a descendant of Mara , who, like your fiancée, was She-Ra, or so she claimed. She was accompanied by her mentor, a woman who had joined her five years ago on a planet called Carurystal, a master of magic, including dark magic, named Miss Daisy."

She felt cold sweat break out on her.

„Was this woman Saihe?" she asked, but seeing the lack of understanding in her father's eyes, she added. "Pointed ears, sharp facial features… And does he have scars?"

Antares looked at her thoughtfully"

„You mean she's an Elf? Yes, she is, although she also has a large admixture of drow blood. As for the scars... I didn't see them on her face, but I allowed myself to gather some information about her employer, so I also learned a lot about her. It is a common fact on Carurystal that she wears a holographic mask to hide the scars and deformities that cover her face. Most believe it's the result of some tragic magical accident and feel sorry for her."

They feel sorry for her. They feel sorry for Shadow Weaver felt like laughing hysterically, but somehow she held it back, even though Melog flattened his ears and emitted the blue of sadness and the yellow of fear. She got up and headed for the exit. She had to think everything over and of course intercept Entrapta before she said something she shouldn't, but her father stopped her by speaking.

„We both know you came here with one question. "Is he a good person," he looked at her carefully.

„Are you a good person?" she asked, answering her father with an equally attentive look.

"No, I'm not." he replied in a polite, dispassionate voice. She nodded and left, much more confused than before.

This planet irritated Lady Ka. It was… pastel… and definitely too nice. Perhaps she had spent a little too much time in the stuffy, filtered air of her transport, but the air here made her feel slightly drunk. Moreover, this place felt like a fucking folk park, or some shitty place in the Galaxy, worse than Carurystal or even Saltmarsh. It was a damn fairytale castle, with a damn fairytale princess, a damn fairytale prince and an equally damn fairytale knight. Only the damn cat was definitely dragged out of her world. She was able to recognize Jantar's work at first glance. She wonder if she also felt that she didn't belong in this place cursed by Devils and Quilpoths

The worst thing was that she felt useless here. The construction of a new intelligence network in the region was going quite well, but here she was cut off from its resources necessary for its work. She wasn't entirely sure why the Lord Admiral had taken her here. At first she thought that her boss didn't trust her and didn't want her to be left alone without supervision, but now she came to the conclusion that it wasn't the case, at least not only that. Antares needed someone he trusted to stand by his side. Although the locals didn't seem too dangerous, on the contrary, they were so pleasant that she felt like vomiting rainbows, but even here someone like the Lord Admiral needed support. Someone to watch his back, keep an eye on everything, and inject him with the damn drug. And of course, someone who would look at everything with a sober eye, that's what he needed most... Sometimes the greatest men and women became soft when it came to the issue of their offspring. She saw it in her boss too, how he softened at the sight of that girl. He needed someone to remind him who he was.

It didn't change the fact that she was bored, so she threw a knife for fun, annoying the strangely dressed guards, and listened to the conversation with the Cat. Her boss told her to install a listening device so he wouldn't have to tell her everything again. The kitten's story was interesting and even quite funny, although the reminder of the fact that Horde Prime liked to chip his clones made her think a little more fondly of that bastard Jantar. She would also like to meet this Shadow Weaver woman so that they can exchange experiences about parenting methods, like cat lady with cat lady. But at the last question, the kitten wasn't sure whether to laugh or gnash her teeth. She didn't like being made an idiot.

And then, almost by accident, she saw movement among the bushes and drew her weapon. She was about to shoot the bastard on the spot when the boss's daughter came out of the house and called.

„Entrapta, please leave… „ and then she looked at her and said sharply. What are you going to do?

Without removing her hand from the gun, she replied in an irritated voice.

„Someone is sneaking into... „ she didn't finish, because the head of a woman with long and surprisingly flowing purple hair appeared from the bushes.

„Hey Catra! I just came here to check out our guests' technology, but quietly so as not to disturb anyone! the purple-haired woman exclaimed.

„One moment and she might shoot you.” she growled and out of the corner of her eye she saw Catra extend her claws and start talking very slowly.

„Entrapta can be curious and a bit... careless sometimes, but she is a friend of me, Adora and the queen, and if anything happened to her, you would have to deal with us.”

The sight of those claws made her shudder involuntarily. However, she refrained from touching the mask. Entrapta waved her hair and said.

„I was in no danger. When we were returning from our last expedition, I set up a portable force field in case something buried me again or we were ambushed..” she looked at her gun, squealed irritably, then jumped up to her and grabbed the gun from her holster.

„”Leave that!” she growled, but the purple-haired girl undressed him in a few moves.

„ This is a fascinating device! Plasma microcapacitor with subgravity magnetic field generator, although it does not have maximum efficiency. If you gave me an hour or two, I could increase the stopping power of this weapon by two hundred percent. There was a time when I would ask you out on a date, but now that I'm married, I don't think I can, although I don't know if Hordak would mind... I know! Let's have a girls' night out! It's basically the same as a date.

” she exclaimed happily. She smiled at the purple-haired woman with the visible part of her mouth. If it were up to her, such people should be thrown into the river with a stone around their necks. Catra gave her a warning look and placed a hand on her friend's shoulder.

“You know Entrapta? Come with me. I need to talk to someone now.

The purple-haired woman nodded, sighed sadly and gave her the weapon, or rather parts of it, back and went with Catra, but as they walked she gave Lady Ka a longing look and a friendly wave. She had to admit that seeing Catra was a strange experience for her. The girl was sexy, there was no doubt about it, but she wouldn't go to bed with her. Not because she was afraid of the Lord Admiral's reaction. Whatever you say about her boss, it didn't bother him when people around him slept together, he was much more irritated by conflicts and excessive competition. No, this was about something else. She looked too much like her sister, the little freak that Jantar had created, and in her opinion such creatures should end at a party with birds.

The Lord Admiral sat at a table and wrote his diary in a self-encrypted journal that he could only read with his cybernetic eye. Of course, it only contained the "correct” version of events. Apparently he wanted to publish it someday. Then he will read them with joy and laugh out loud.

„You told her a beautiful story, boss, congratulations on your imagination.” she said with sincere appreciation.

„Politics is basically telling stories that others want to believe.” replied the Lord Admiral without looking away from his journal.

„So it's almost the same as a scam.„ said Lady Ka, raising one eyebrow.

„Partly, yes. But at the same time, you have to believe in your story, even if you know it's a bunch of nonsense. Sometimes this faith can make lies become truth.” Antares said and looked at her. She considered his words for a moment and then said.

„What will happen when he finally discovers the truth? Because I think we both know that this will happen.”

A Shadow of a smile appeared on the Lord Admiral's face.

„Weave the golden threads of lies into the tapestry of truth so that they become inseparable and impossible to divide one from another. And to put it less poetically, before she knows the whole truth, she must be so closely connected with us that she either doesn't care anymore or will prefer to choose lies. Either way, until then we have to work hard to convince her of... our goals.”

She thought about his words for a moment and asked.

„You don't mind that she's marrying a demigoddess.”

There was a spark of joy in his blue eye.

„What a great choice. It will definitely strengthen our genetic line in the future. I promise that I will be the cutest father-in-law in the galaxy.

She nodded, but she had a feeling that it wouldn't all be that simple, after all, nothing related to gods was like that.

„There is also the matter of the Heart. She claims that this weapon was destroyed. Do you believe her?. she asked, approaching her commander.

Lord Admiral Antares thought for a moment and said in a thoughtful voice.

„Yes, I rather believe her. Anyway, it doesn't matter anyway. These types of artifacts are dangerous and do more harm than good.

Whoever possesses them becomes a target for all reasonable people.”

There was silence again. The Lord Admiral interrupted them, speaking in a solemn voice.

„I wasn't lying when I said I was proud of her. The story she told shows that she was a strong, tough and ruthless leader. If she is properly polished, she will lead her housetowards a golden age and create a true empire. Of course, first we have to remove the obstacle which is Queen Glimmer”

Family Matters part two

Family Matters part two.

Catra was strangely touched by her conversation with her father. Glimmer was never like that, and neither was Bow and Perfuma when they speak to their parents. However, this was a very small study sample. Most of her friends didn't have parents, except for those three, she guess. She herself barely remembered her parents, having lost them when she was just a little older than the Child…. She remembered perfectly her Name Giving Day, which she celebrated with her robotic friends, but they weren't as smart as Emily, they couldn't be her friends. She sent out hundreds of balloons with invitations, but no one came. Only the regency council sent her a card with good wishes and an apology that they couldn't come due to the castle's security system. That day she realized that Castle Crypto was not her home, but a prison. That she was Entrapped there.

„Has something happened to you Entrapta?" Catra asked her, looking at her closely, and Catra's amazing shape-shifting companion brushed against her leg. He must be tested someday, take a DNA sample, do such creatures even have DNA? He needs to ask Catra to ask him about it. Ah, Catra asked her a question…

„I thought about my parents... „ She answered simply, thinking that was enough for her friend, but the friend kept asking.

„Do you know that you never actually talked about them?"

„There's nothing to talk about. They were there and they are no longer there. That's all." she replied to her friend and looked into her datapad. There was data on this strange wolf, she should probably look it up. But she felt Catra's gaze on her and realized that this answer wasn't enough for her, so she looked up from her device and said.

„They're gone, Catra. They left me when I was younger than a Child. I only remember that they said they would go somewhere and they would come back, but they didn't come back... „ She fell silent. Why were they talking about the rhyme? She had so much work to do... Much more important than thinking about... those people.

"I'm so sorry..." Catra said. There was sadness in her voice. She didn't need to mention it. Now Catra is sad. She smiled at Catra.

„ Nothing happened. I built myself much better parents after that. They hugged me every time I pressed a button on the remote control. And they never left me. I have to fix them though. Then I will introduce them Hordak and they will definitely like him. I programmed them to like any of my partner I introduced to them. And I will introduce you to them too! They are supposed to like my friends too... I just don't know about the Child... At that time I wasn't thinking about parenting, but I think I can reprogram them without any problems and the Child will have the best grandparents in the world!”

Catra looked at her painfully. Why? After all, what she told her was so happy, right?

„I promise you that we will look for them someday... After the wedding and when everything would be clear. Do you know where they could have gone?„

Why does Catra keep asking this? It was completely unimportant!

„They went deep into the Mines of Dryll. I guess they wanted to explore the network of tunnels that stretched beneath the mountains. Apparently it is supposed to reach inside Etheria... I think so. Remember those tunnels beneath the City of Elder Things! I think I even told you about the trip I was thinking about. Maybe this isn't such a bad idea! I think my parents left me recordings of their previous expeditions, but I haven't had time to look through them... Do you think your father will let me explore his ship?”

Catra looked at her confused.

„Ship? You've probably seen plenty of them, and most of them don't compare to Darla. Besides, it was probably a very small ship. “ her friend said uncertainly. She tilted her head in surprise. She kept forgetting that others sometimes didn't notice such obvious things.

„But each of these ships was different from the others, or at least from those from other planets. And usually, before the technology of interplanetary travel had developed, Horde Prime arrived and destroyed everything.” she started to explain, but Catra protested

„But Icarus was a trading hub before the Galactic Horde arrived there...”

She waved her hair.

„That's an exception, and besides, it didn't last long. And they... have been developing for hundreds of years without Prime's presence . They didn't even know it existed. Imagine these centuries of uninterrupted development. Exchange of knowledge and thoughts... Peaceful coexistence of thousands of species and civilizations that could share their achievements for mutual prosperity.” she looked into Catra's amazing two-colored eyes, secretly hoping that her friend would understand what she was getting at. However, Catra seemed skeptical. Was it all really so difficult to understand? Maybe she should be more explicit. “They must have technology that we do not know or even imagine.” now understanding appeared on the face of the cat-human, extremely fascinating hybrid. “And besides, there was no heart in the one in other regions of the galaxy, so magic functioned normally there. Who knows what their sorcerers can do. Maybe there are other non-dead creatures living there, like that creature you fought in Mystacor, or Extra Dimensional entities , or maybe even dragons... I've heard a theory that dragons were actually a kind of winged cats. Isn't this fascinating?”

Catra must have not really liked her statement, because her friend turned slightly green.

„The not-dead are not creatures I would want to deal with again. Not to mention some dragons, and besides, in all the drawings they look like fire-breathing winged lizards. What extra-dimensional beings are supposed to be , I don't even want to find out.” Her friend muttered. She was ready to start explaining her theory about the existence of other dimensions and the entities that inhabit them, but Catra motioned for her to let her finish. “I'll try to talk to him… to the Lord Admiral… to my father… But I don't promise he'll agree.”

„Oh, you can tell him that if he's worried about his ship, his friend can accompany me. This Lady Ka will definitely agree to accompany me and will answer all my questions... And I have a LOT of them!” she exclaimed excitedly. Catra looked at her in disbelief.

„Entrapta! This woman wanted to kill you! – her friend exclaimed. She looked at it surprised.

„Many have tried. You too.” She stated, but when her friend flinched, she realized that she must have mentioned something that still hurt her, so she added. “It was just a misunderstanding. I was just sneaking up on her superior for no reason, so I thought I was a ruthless murderer who wanted to kill her superior.”

Catra smiled as she mentioned being a murderer. She didn't understand what was so funny about it. She didn't use violence because it was wrong... But she could create a assassin bot, just by working on it for a while. Such a machine will definitely be useful to them. She was already reaching for Datapad to do a preliminary design, but then her friend said.

„She smiles at you like a snake smiles at a baby bird.”

She frowned.

„Snakes don't smile. They generally have no facial expressions. Unless you're talking about snake people, but that's kind of offensive.”

Catra tried to say something, but then she heard a loud screech in her head.

„She's so pretty!”

Judging by Catra's expression, she heard him too, because she stiffened, and then they heard quick footsteps and a new person was standing next to them. At first she wondered where an ant the size of Catra came from and why she wore a short skirt. And then she understood. It was a real Insectoid. She had heard that Horde Prime extremely hated these types of races and exterminated them as soon as he encountered them, so she must have come from outside the Empire. She definitely came with Catra's dad! She had colorful ribbons attached to her antennae, and she wore a white T-shirt and a short skirt, it still looked strange. She had two legs and two pairs of arms, but the lower arms were smaller, slightly tucked in, and she wore gloves on them. She stood next to Catra, hugged her with one arm, and stretched her out in front of her with the other, holding a very modern-looking datapad .

„Oh, you're cute! Like a little kitten, but a big! Do something kitty-like now!” she squealed in their heads again. Catra stood stiffly, her fists and mouth clenched, and Melog glowed with every color of the rainbow.

„Could you please stop squeaking in my head... By the way, have you heard of such a thing as personal space!” Catra drawled

„Well of course. Don't worry, a cute kitty like you will never invade my personal space!” echoed in their heads again. And then she saw that the insectoid was holding her datapad on a retractable holder, so she could take photos of herself and anyone standing next to her. Fascinating!

„ If you don't let me go soon, I won't be nice anymore and I'll rip your antennae's off." her friend growled and extended her claws. Melog was red with anger. The insectoid girl looked at Catra with what seemed to be resentment, but she quickly backed away from the cat girl.

„By Hylax and Shelyn! Just because you have emotional problems doesn't give you the right to take it out on others! – they felt her irritation in their heads. Catra looked angrily at Shiren with narrowed eyes. She took the opportunity and approached the journalist and started talking into her dictaphone.

„Entry number 38332. Today there was the first contact with a representative of an unknown race of insectoids . She seems friendly." she looked at the still furious Catra. "Although opinions on this subject are divided."

The insectoid looked at her in surprise.

„What do you mean the first one! I am Shiren after all. Don't you have Shirens here !?" She asked her.

„She claims that she is a representative of a species called Shiren and that her species is common in the galaxy."

Shiren looked at her in surprise.

„Common! I am not commonI I have my own channel on Eye of Beholder with three hundred thousand followers. This is not something common." the Insectoid woman huffed. "By the way, my name is Ashurk Klock . I am a very famous influencer and Social Media Advisor to the Lord Admiral." Shiren explained and she ruffled her hair curiously. So many new fascinating concepts!

„ And I'm Princess Entrapta. Ruler of Beast Island and former Lady of Dryl. President of the Creators Guild... And many other titles... And there's my friend Catra and her companion Melog." she pointed at Catra and her friend, who were no longer angry but were just looking at them in amazement.

Ashurk tilted her head to the side in surprise

„Oh, so you use your internet nickname! I'm Strawbery-Ant22. I don't know your websites and social groups, but I'd love to learn about them... as soon as you tell me how to connect to the local network? Because I visited the entire castle, I even woke up the queen, but even she didn't know how to contact her. Maybe you know how to connect to it, because I need to connect and upload my recordings and maybe contact my followers, and also update the Lord Admiral's profile on the Book of Faces because I haven't done it for several weeks. There was no Internet on Taurus, because there was a war, although in my opinion the war is not a reason not to take care of your network life and health, but Etheria is supposedly a very nice and peaceful place, so there should be access to the network with good bandwidth, right? In my home, on Atrax, access to social media is considered one of the basic rights of thinking beings, much more important than, for example, education or access to clean air."

Entrapta stared at Ashurk with pure delight. For the first time in her life, she completely did not understand what the other person was talking about. It was a strange feeling, a little unnerving, and at the same time she felt like she was having an epiphany. This is how others feel when they talk to her?

„Network? Yes, I'm trying to create something like that here on Etheria , but everyone associates it too much with Horde Prime . You have something like this on Atrax, right? Will you tell me about it?" she asked, rubbing her hands and hair."

„Oh, the Infonet is the most wonderful place in the Galaxy. Billions of beings meet there and... well, they do a thing!" the insectoid girl explained to her .
