„What things? "she asked, feeling uncontrollable interest.

„Well, various things... Important things! For example, watch photos of furry, cuddly animals and food... „ replied Shiren. She had no idea what she was talking about, but it was definitely technical jargon with some fascinating ideas hidden behind it. He just needs to listen carefully to the insectoid and I will find out everything.

„I guess I'll go now... „ said Catra, looking at them uncertainly. "Since you two get along so well…" and she walked away, leaving her with her amazing new friend.

The last time she had such a bad wake-up was when she first woke up on Velvet Glove, alone and abandoned, at the mercy of a mad tyrant... Okay. Then, when she woke up on Eridani with a fever of almost forty degrees and snotty because she didn't realize it was winter there, it was also bad, but she was completely unprepared for something like that. The guard woke her up with a call that someone from the Lord Admiral had come to see her on extremely important business, and she jumped to her feet. Then an ant in a mini skirt ran into her bedroom and started screaming at her that she needed her help. Screaming in her head, let's add. It almost stopped hurting her. She asked the ant what happened and it started screaming again, still in its head, that there was no connection to the local network. Without it, her fans have no contact with her…. She frowned. It didn't sound like anything really important, certainly not important enough to wake her up after three hours of sleep. She wanted to yell at her, but Bow politely told her that her problem would be solved soon, and for now she should eat breakfast. The ant nodded and left. However, further sleep was out of the question, so she first dealt with her morning sickness, which she had been having a lot lately, and then she went to eat breakfast herself, and then went to her Torture Chamber, i.e. the royal office. She had no idea how her mother had stayed there for so long. Especially when there was a war, she had to deal with it, and dad... was missing. Now she finally understood how hard it was for her mother sometimes... Her mother was alive. She still couldn't get used to the thought. It was similar to the fact that her dad survived. When the war finally ended, for several months she always remained silent when he entered the room where she was staying. Even Catra found it easier to talk to him then, though maybe she should have told Catra especially. Sometimes she envied her friend's relationship with her dad. Although they eventually managed to form a bond, it was never as… simple and direct as the one created by Cat Girl.

And now her mother was alive, but she had become as alien as possible. Her evening certainty that everything would somehow work out was gone, leaving behind the dark specter of fear and worry. What if she doesn't remember it? And will he never remember? Will she ever become what she once was? It's like she died a second time. Or worse yet, she remembers everything but doesn't care? What if she had changed so much that all that was left was hatred, without any love. She heard her father's stories about the Light Spinner . She was, according to her father, a wise and noble, although demanding teacher. Some of her former friends and colleagues spoke similarly about her... She had sometimes seen these traits in her when she taught her sorcery during those few months of the final period of the war. But Catra and Adora only knew her as a monster who did everything to ruin their lives. If Light Spinner could become Shadow Weaver, then her Mother, Queen Angela, could become Captain Moonshadow…

Shadow Weaver is alive. It was so… Unfair. The woman who had taken her father away, who had imprisoned and tortured her, who had feed the worst in her, was alive and probably well, while her mother, for all her sacrifice, was punished with suffering and contempt. She had often heard people from Eridani and the smaller continent of Icarus called Dedalus talk about the mercy and graciousness of the so-called gods. If there really were beings so powerful in the universe, why did they let him suffer such a fate?

She realized that she was reading the document for the fifth time, completely not understanding what it said. She sighed and yawned. She once signed documents without reading them, which resulted in her giving the entire mountain to some scammer from Ikarus. Then she looked at HighMinister Shou. Otter person usually helped her with the paperwork, but today she was especially distracted, even jittery. She was hardworking and very empathetic, and she think it was the latter quality that made Shou feel so bad. The previous night had been harrowing for all of them, and Sou felt what each of them had experienced. She knew how difficult it was to watch her friends suffer, so she understood the High Minister well. And the specter of war still hung over them, so the woman who wanted peace suffered twice as much. Fortunately, it looked like they could avoid the worst, although now it was all up to Catra. “Trust her. In these five years, she hasn't given you the slightest reason to suspect her of anything. She's your goddamn friend.” she said to herself. The problem was that she didn't trust her father at all. Fortunately, Catra shared this view… So much good.

She sighed, wiped her temples and said to the minister with a friendly smile.

„I guess that's it for today, neither of us can focus on work, so I guess we need to rest and sort it all out. I'm going to the training room.” she said and tried to teleport. This time she succeeded and she screamed happily as she entered the Training Room.

The training was surprisingly pleasant, it relaxed her a lot, and the return of her teleportation skills greatly improved her mood. After half an hour, Adora came in. They looked at each other surprised. It was probably the first time since they had known each other that she was here before the warrior. For a moment she tried to check in with her friend to find out how she and her fiancée were feeling, and finally she asked.

„How... How Catra feels?” She asked carefully, but Adora smiled warmly, so she felt extremely relieved, and then the warrior added.

„She didn't really want to get up, but she didn't seem as scared as I thought she would be.”

„So she's with him now.” she said quietly, but she had the impression that her words echoed ominously throughout the room. They were silent because there was nothing to add. Now everything was in Catra's hands. What happened to all of them depended on her. All they could do now was wait patiently.

The training room was built for them by Entrapta, using some of the equipment from the Fright Zone, as well as holographic projectors brought from Ikarus. It was a completely new quality of training for her and Bow, although Catra was used to most of the exercises available here, but Adora Well, nothing could replace the training sessions Light Hope provided her, although they had no idea how many secrets the ancient AI was hiding from them.. However, without her, Adora couldn't train She-Ra's powers... Not without the risk of blowing the entire training room to pieces... In the future, they planned to make three similar training rooms. One for the Eherian soldiers, one for the sorcerers of Mystacor , and a third for all the princesses, so that together they could develop their powers now strengthened by the annihilation of the Heart of Etheria . But it was a song of the future, which now appeared in increasingly darker colors...

Suddenly Brother Blade marched in. He was very upset that he had been tricked by Catra's sister and she managed to escape. The Grand Marshal didn't blame him for it, but the clone was very concerned about his failure.

„Queen Glimmer! A woman wants to see you immediately. Judging by his appearance, he's not from the Empire!„ The clone shouted. She sighed and said.

„Enter them... „ she said and thought. Will this procession of newcomers never end?

They decided to welcome their guest to the Training Room since he insisted on meeting her immediately. They didn't wait long for her. After a few minutes, the guards, led by the clone, ushered in the tall woman. She was approximately forty years old. She had long golden hair and a scar on her face caused by some caustic substance. Still, she was quite attractive. She was clad in ominous-looking plate armor that clanged loudly with every step. She had a strange sword attached to her belt, completely incongruous with the outfit she wore. She actually looked friendly enough, if it weren't for those eyes. He affects many of the inhabitants of Etheria, as well as some people from planets conquered by Prime . It was the mark of war burned away by decades of war, often a lifetime spent fighting. Only while in others it glowed like stars in the sky, here it burned like the sun she had seen on other planets... although wasn't the sun just a star seen up close? In any case, she would definitely be able to take down all the guards and only Brother Blade would put up any resistance. She and Adora would obviously be able to handle her...She guess.

The woman stood in front of them and knelt on one knee.

„I am Asindesa di Vir, Lady of Blades of the Order of Eclipse, Hell Knight." she shouted loudly. Newcomer. Most of the terms meant nothing to her, but she had heard about Hell from the people of Eridani. It was supposed to be a legendary land full of monsters or something like that.

„We are pleased to see you, Asindesa di Vir, Lady of Blades." she wasn't sure how she should address the newcomer. "What brings you to us?

The woman stood up and spoke in a slightly softer voice.

„I was on leave and wanted to rest in this place after the hardships of the fight, but I heard rumors that someone from the Research and Exploration Fleet had arrived here, so I decided that I should also introduce myself to your majesty."

She sighed and said in a tired voice.

„Call me Glimmer, or if you prefer to call me, just call me queen. We on Etheria are not that formal in our everyday lives. „ She pointed to Adora , who was looking at the knight with a strange expression on her face. "This is Adora She-Ra, Princess of Power.

In fact, Lord Admiral Antares , commander of the Research and Exploration Fleet, came here. I understand he is your superior?”

Hearing her words, the woman grimaced.

„I follow the orders of the Lord Admiral, because I and my soldiers have been delegated to the fleet, but my only superior is the Lictor of my order.”

"Everything is starting to get more and more complicated," she thought, feeling more and more tired and depressed, and then added.

„I will order the servants to prepare a room for you in the castle.” she ordered in a quiet voice, but the woman shook her head and said.

„There is no need. I will stop at one of the local temples. We usually do this on our personal hikes”.

I think we have one Glimmer thought, and Asindesa continued.

„ I would just like to ask for the freedom to roam around your castle, Queen Glimmer.

She hesitated. She wasn't entirely sure if that was a good idea, but she nodded and said.

„You will be notified accordingly, but I would like you and the Lord Admiral to come to dinner this evening.” she only just came up with this idea, but it seemed quite good.

Asindesa nodded and was about to leave when Adora asked in a serious voice.

„Where did you get this sword?”

Asindesa hesitated for a moment before answering.

„A great warrior gave it to me just before he passed away.”

She felt a little guilty about leaving Entrapta with that annoying mind-talking ant, but she guess that Lady Dryl and she liked their company, so she probably shouldn't worry. For her, hearing a strange voice in her head was a terrible experience. Too similar to what she felt when she was chipped by Horde Prime. She preferred to limit being around this person as much as possible, especially since he was extremely irritating. She used to get mad at Scorpia when he invaded her personal space, but she's become a bit more patient since then, and Scorpia has learned that not everyone likes being hugged. This girl was pushy and treated her like she was a pet which was so annoying! She was one hell of a Grand Marshal, and she earned that title. Some idiot squeaking in others heads won't treat her as if she were an element of decoration... With which to take pictures.

As she was thinking, she heard Castaspelia's voice .

„Oh! Catra! It's wonderful to have you here.”

She turned around and saw the Chief Sorceress. She seemed surprisingly tired. Well, organizing a royal wedding was tiring for anyone, and here she was also taking care of her and Adora's wedding. She couldn't forget about that fight in the library either. She managed to cope with it somehow, but not everyone had to be as tough as her and as resistant to the horror lurking in the dark corners of the world. Her mind was forged in the fire of suffering and fear... After all, she was a child of the Fright Zone and a "ward of the Shadow Weaver". Standing next to the Chief Sorcerer was Nightgale . Given that she carried a notebook with her, she probably became Castaspeli's assistant . Whatever she thought about this woman, she was definitely helping Aunt Casta with organizational matters

„Hello, Castaspella!. How are wedding preparations going?„ She asked, smiling friendly. The Chief Sorcerer beamed, even though she was exhausted, „Oh, this will be a wonderful event. We'll make holograms projecting the four of you and Melog in the sky ! And guess what! We will organize a real Masquerade Ball!

What! was all she thought. The lack of a masquerade ball and Masks in general was one of the few wishes she had for her own wedding. She guessed that even though Casta didn't like her, she probably didn't do it maliciously, just out of distraction, but she still felt a burning anger. Seeing the smile disappear from her face, she felt dejected.

„Wait, this wasn't supposed to be a Masquerade Ball, right? Oh, somehow I'm trying to cancel everything. I'm sure I can do it if I hurry.” said the Head Sorceress Princess with panic in her voice. She touched the bridge of her nose with her fingers and told her in a tired voice.

„It doesn't matter anyway. Now you have to figure out how to entertain my father and his entourage.”

„Your father?!” Castapela asked in shock. Nevertheless, Nightgale was amazed . It even surprised her. In a few words she explained to her what had happened.

Then she smelled it. He was very weak, she even felt like she was imagining him... But he was incredibly repulsive. She was used to terrible smells. Just living in the Fright Zone made her immune to the stench, not even counting the toilet cleaning she was often tasked with as part of Shadow Weaver's punishment. But this was something completely different. Unnaturally terrible… She turned and saw two women. One of them was Klementine , a small and sad girl with purple hair and sharp, deep green eyes, the daughter of General Jocelyn . She knew her, but not very well. Supposedly, she spent her childhood with the General's ex-wife somewhere in the Dryl Mountains, but that woman died during the occupation, so the girl lived in Brightmoon. Their relationship was complicated, to say the least. Her mother lost part of her power to the Grand Marshal, but she probably didn't blame anyone for it, because she preferred to take care of her daughter. She wasn't entirely sure, but it seemed to her that Klementine had a distaste for both her and Glimmer, which she could understand. She had the right to blame them for the death of one of her mothers. But the other woman was unknown to her, although she immediately guessed who she was. She was beautiful and tall, blonde, with wonderful long hair. She was beautiful, but something made the hairs that grew along her spine stand on end. She was the source of that smell.

„Good morning You must be that famous Grand Marshal Catra. Very nice to meet you. I am Lady Cala Grayskull of Carurystal, descendant of Mara , which I guess makes me sort of your future wife's closest relative…" she held out her hand, smiling at her even though her eyes were cold.

Nightgale, despite her amazing discoveries, could not return to Castle Crypto and think things through as Scarlet, because she had to remain in her role as the assistant to the chief sorceress, although being in this body was not as tiring, unlike working for Castaspelia. Well, that woman had a right to feel distracted. After all, it's not every day you see someone come back from the dead. She only wished she knew anything about what they were talking about, but it was only a matter of time before she found out everything. She just needs to be patient. However, she managed to gain a new, wonderful ally whose help will be invaluable...

„Something happened here... Something unusual. Can you feel it?" she heard Aaravos' voice coming from the small millipede in her ear. Giving Castaspelia the document that would allow her to take the mirror to her room was child's play. The Head Sorceress was so distracted that she didn't pay attention to what she was signing. Performing the ritual was much more difficult. The wound she had inflicted on herself to split the blood was still throbbing with pain. But it was a sacrifice worth making. Thanks to this, at this moment, this strange Saihe could walk alongside her through the halls of Brightmoon Castle .

She had to agree with him. Something happened here. She felt it in the behavior of the guards keeping the castle safe. At first she thought maybe one of the brothers had attacked, or maybe Lonnie had carried out some action that she hadn't bothered to tell her about. Then she came to the conclusion that it was because of Frosta's dethronement , which must have shocked everyone present. Castaspella paced around her room for a good fifteen minutes and muttered to herself, probably convinced that Shadow Weaver was responsible for everything. The truth was much more mundane. She felt sorry for Frosta, but there was little she could do about what happened to her... The Ice Princess was one of the few people who showed kindness to her despite learning the truth about her...

They then came across Catra. Of course, the Grand Marshal didn't even suspect who she was dealing with, but why would she suspect the Head Sorcerer's assistant of anything? She felt like, for a brief moment, telling her about her mother's, or rather their mother's, recent visit, but of course she couldn't and wasn't sure she really wanted to. Aaravos regarded the feline girl with surprising interest, though he clearly wasn't going to tell her why, and she couldn't ask without arousing suspicion. However, during what they expected was an ordinary conversation, it turned out that Catra had found out yesterday that she had a father, which was only surprising, but that father was from outside Etheri and came from outside Etheri. For a moment she wondered if he was the person Foretold by the Creeping Chaos, but the Great Outer God would hardly forget to mention his emissary's connection, but then again, who could fathom Nyarlathotep's motives? However, she had to quickly let Lonnie know that there had been a complete shift in the balance of power on the planet. But before she thought about the next steps she should take, but then she felt It!

It was power. Strange and Wonderful. Powerful and Terrible, beyond anything she had ever encountered, except perhaps that one burst of power when Horde Prime was annihilated. She turned and looked at her, at Cala Grayskull , a demigoddess who walks among mortals. Perfection Incarnate.

Song of the Void

Chapter Summary

> In the meantime, as I write the next chapter, I'll give you this poem.

See the soul of light in the void
What stretches between the stars
Which illuminates the darkness of despair and fear
Devouring even the bravest Hearts

The Power of the Sword and the Stone
Trials of love and suffering
A clear path leading to Divinity

In your dreams you see
Your future among the stars
I prophesy to you eternal glory
In the midst of the infinite Loneliness.

Hear the soul of Hunger resounding in the silence
There's a scream in the middle of it
Which pierces the self through and through
Those who want to feel at least once Peace.

Fury of annihilation and destruction
The sins of pride and greed
The winding road leads towards
I will lose it

In your nightmares you hear
The snapping of a thousand thousand maws
I'm warning you against war

Which has no beginning nor End

Feel the soul of emptiness
That stretches between the stars
Where ancient knowledge lies
Which understanding may cost you Soul.

A song of horror and madness.
The power of friendship and courage
The last star brings Hope

In your heart you discover Truths that were buried
They will be the key to Wins

He who can lie for ages is not dead.
He who has no one to live for is not alive
Even death can die with strange ages
Even the wicked can find peace
When they finds love in his heart

Return to Castle Crypto

Chapter Notes

This chapter took me a long time to write. As always, please leave your comments and opinions

He felt happy to be coming home. Although he wasn't entirely sure if Castle Crypto could be called that, but he had nothing else that resembled him. At least he will rest in warmth after the hardships of this expedition. He had to admit that it was the most difficult adventure of his life. And what's worse, it's not over yet.

He looked at the sword hanging at his side. He didn't have a decent sheath for him, but he knew they'd have no problem getting one for him once he got back to the castle... Though he wasn't entirely sure he'd want that. All the way there he considered throwing away his sword. It would be so easy. It would be enough to throw it into the depths of the ocean while they were sailing on the ship or give it to one of the inhabitants of the settlement where they were staying, but he couldn't bring himself to do that. This sword was the first truly valuable gift he had received in his life, apart from the love of Lonnie and Rogelio , of course . And what would Messrs. Lance and George think if they found out he just threw it away like garbage? But it was actually about something else.

That little moment when he became that big guy was wonderful. He felt strong and wonderful, practically invincible. For as long as he could remember, he felt like a failure. The one who always lets everyone down and is never good at anything. No matter how hard he tried, he knew he would never be as good as Lonnie and Rogelio. They cared about him and didn't make him feel that he was in any way inferior to them, but he knew it. He could only hope that they would never get hurt because of him. But now he had a sword. A real magic sword that gives him power! If he could control it, he would become a great, mighty warrior, as powerful as Adora... Like She-Ra...

And that was what made him now live in constant fear. He couldn't say it out loud or even formulate it in his mind, because the truth was too terrible. But in the end he had to accept her, even though she terrified him. He was someone like Adora, one of the First Ones, perhaps even a relative of his old friend. He didn't know much about this ancient race, except that they had built many amazing devices, including the Heart of Etheri, which almost killed them all... And now they turned out to be his race... He didn't know what to make of that fact. He had always thought of himself as an ordinary boy, quite weak and clumsy, but just like Lonnie, Rogelio, or even Scarlet... though maybe the latter wasn't the best example... He looked nothing like Adora, apart from the color of his hair, of course. He admired her and even had a crush on her for a while… Until he realized that she and Catra were into each other…. Which was noticed by absolutely everyone except them two... Why would he be someone like her. He remembered how betrayed everyone felt when she became She-Ra and then defected to the Rebellion. When it turned out that she was one of the First Ones, he was practically not offended, unlike Lonnie. His girlfriend found herself personally hurt by having to compete with someone who had an unfair advantage over her from the beginning. In her opinion, both Catra and Adora had always been Shadow Weaver's protégés, though he didn't understand how being the object of the dark sorcerer's attention could help anyone. He couldn't imagine what would happen if Lonnie found out the truth about him. She would probably exile him, or even try to kill him, Like Catra wanted to do to Adora. He doesn't want to wander around the galaxy alone, even with this wonderful sword, or fight against his friends. But there was another possibility, maybe even worse. What if Lonnie wants to use his power in her war against Catra. She would definitely want him to do terrible things, and he didn't like hurting others, even though he did it during the war. But with this much power he could spread death and destruction… No, there's no way Lonnie can’t will find out.

The trip back was surprisingly quick, or maybe it was just their imagination? He wasn't sure. All the way, he, Rogelio, and the Imp remained silent and sullen... Though the Imp had always been silent, but now he was clearly sullen. Everyone was worried about Lonnie. The wound of the Comrade General looked really bad, and the chariot that Scarlet had summoned didn't inspire the least bit of trust... But he Scarlet didn't trust either... Even before he knew the truth about her, he didn't like her, and now that he found out who she was... Although he wasn't really sure what she was. Maybe she was one of those monstrous doppelgangers who stole people's identities by devouring their brains. Shadow Weaver liked to tell them stories about these monsters serving the princesses, and so they would report to her about all the strange behavior of the inhabitants of the Fright Zone. Until now, he thought it was just another of the Dark Sorcerer's stories. But now he was starting to believe in her. If that monster had devoured Scarlet during the war... That would explain everything... Why she was so different from the cadet who they remeber, why she suddenly learned magic... Was Lonnie to be her next victim? Probably not, because then she would have to give up Pretending to be Scarlet. Unless he took her to another monster, and together they would devour their girl and another creature would take the place of the Comrade General... But that thought was too terrible to contemplate.

But this creature looked so familiar. There was something too familiar about her... She looked a bit like one of the clones, but she also had a lot of Shadow Weaver in her. Was she their child? If so, how they made it… He didn't want to imagine it. While he understood that clones could be quite attractive, the Dark Sorceress was the scariest and most horrible person he knew. Compared to her, even Scarlet didn't seem that bad... In fact, if you think about it, she wasn't that terrible... Compared to Shadow Weaver, almost no one was terrible... It's a good thing she was so dead.

Rogelio sensed that something was wrong with him and invited him to the tent several times, but each time he refused, claiming that he was not in the mood, which was actually true. He couldn't make love to him while hiding such terrible truths... Dr. Moors, on the other hand, didn't shut up at all. He talked almost constantly about the ship he and his allies had found. He had to admit that the ship looked like something truly amazing, but he had absolutely no idea what they could do with this. They were a People's Rebellion, not space pirates. None of them would even know how to fly it, let alone get it out of the ice, though... He had a strange feeling that Doctor Moors didn't care much about it, as if he already knew how to free this ship. It even seemed to him that there was some kind of agreement between Lonnie and the eerie scientist, which weighed heavily on his girlfriend... Even Scarlet, who probably suspected something, was disgusted, although she didn't tell anyone. Another reason to worry.

When they reached the coast, Octavia was already waiting for them, and she did not hide her joy at the absence of the Comrade General. He didn't like it very much and they glared at each other the whole way back. I mean, he, Rogelio and Imp watched, and Dr. Moors thought aloud about their last trip. He also seemed oddly interested in Catra. He asked them about his former friend quite intrusively, and they tried to give him the most perfunctory answers possible. They had no idea why the brain in cylinder was interested in their feline friend, even though they were now on opposite sides of the barricade.

Once they disembarked, they headed towards Castle Crypto . On the way, they stopped at a settlement called Rush Valley. The residents were loyal to Lonnie and welcomed them with what they had, although everyone tried to keep a healthy distance from Dr. Moors, but the children were delighted with the Im . There they learned about Frosta's dethronement ... At that moment he felt like a traitor and a bastard. Frosta, together with her rather terrifying friend, saved their lives in the underground, and now she has lost her throne. He was sure it wasn't the Comrade General doing. It wasn't like her to plot and intrigue, let alone have time to do it. However, he was sure that they were responsible for removing the ice princess from power. He felt bad about it. However, they did not receive any news about Lonnie's health, and they preferred not to ask too much, so as not to reveal too much of what happened there, in the ruins of that damned city...

In the morning they continued their journey and arrived near a landing pad that had been built here some time before they took over Castle Crypto and All Dryll. Since then, very few people have used it, because they had no ships of their own, and others were afraid to come, although they did not cause any problems for those who wanted to go there. Once they were visited by a nice Eridian who gave him a pendant that was supposed to belong to Shelynia or something like that. He didn't quite understand what he meant, but he kept it because it was pretty... Now it turned out that there was a quite large ship here. He couldn't recognize where it came from, even though he didn't know much about spaceships. After a short discussion, they decided not to sneak past the ship, but to remain vigilant.

As they got closer, they saw that most of the crew were young people, not much younger than him, who were looking around. There were also two elderly Saihe women, one dark-skinned and silver-haired, the other with green hair and terribly gloomy, who wore sorcerers' robes. Although he had never heard of sorcerers living outside Etheria, he knew very little about other planets in general. There was also a clone dressed in colorful clothes, quite an unusual sight in an area controlled by the Rebellion. Lonnie wasn't oppressing the clones, but she was letting everyone know that they weren't welcome here. Small reconnaissance drones spotted them first, but not until they got closer. Then a cheerfully smiling girl approached them and started waving her hands at them, and a voice began to come from her gloves.

„Hi! I'm Rossie. Very nice to meet you. We are looking for a way to Castle Crypto. We would like to stay there for some time.”

The girl looked friendly. He once had a deaf friend named Kate. She was one of the cadets, but she couldn't hear the orders, so she was sent to the technical department, where apparently a nice family adopted her, and for Scorpia's wedding, she made a mural of a young couple. Actually, she was lucky. She escaped training from Shadow Weaver. Why had he been thinking so much about the cursed sorceress lately? It's probably because of Nightgale.

„Of course, but now it's the headquarters of the People's Rebellion and we are in conflict with the queen, so you know.” he replied, smiling equally friendly. Her companions turned to him. Most of them didn't look that friendly, especially the short but muscular redhead girl with the large axe. He noticed that as soon as he spoke, the sullen Saihe stood up, and for a moment he felt as if he knew her from somewhere, because the way she moved seemed disturbingly familiar, but then he heard a voice behind him.

„Hey Blond Boy, Are you accepting new members to your Rebellion? Because there is a VERY serious conflict between me and the Hag Queen, and you will need such an absolutely perfect, awesome person.”

Frightened, he jumped and screamed, then turned around and was speechless. Catra was standing in front of him! How on earth did she find him here! And so fast. He was about to apologize to her, but then the girl said in a slightly irritated tone.

„Yes, I know, I'm a lot like her. For Daemons and Asuras. Does everyone on this damn planet really need to know her? Damn celebrity.” the girl snorted and now he realized that it was not Catra. At least not completely. They were very similar. He didn't have time to think about it, because then he heard the voice he had heard so often in his nightmares.

„Kyle was your sister's friend, just like Rogelio. They were nice kids. But what are you doing near Castle Crypto? And above all, what is this People's Rebellion all about?” Shadow Weaver said in a surprisingly gentle voice. He started to tremble. Rogelio drew one of those strange weapons given to them by Migu. He tried to find his weapon, but he was so terrified that he couldn't remember where he had hidden it. He considered reaching for his sword, but that would probably make things even worse. The others also drew their weapons. The tattooed Saihe summoned a translucent blue blade out of nowhere, the redhead grabbed her axe, and the Silverscale Lizard drew his blaster. The white-haired woman looked at him in surprise, but then took a fighting stance. Why did they want to fight for Shadow Weaver. As he struggled to draw his weapon, the cat-like girl placed a heavy metal hand on his shoulder.

„Don't be afraid, Blond Boye. It's not undead, just good old Grim, alive as always. Although, actually, I don't know if she's alive at all.” she said and started rubbing her chin with her leather-gloved hand, as if she was thinking.

"Good old... Shadow Weaver," he tried to understand who could possibly think of such a combination of words, and then he saw the symbols of the First Ones on his hand and felt himself fall helplessly against the stone.

Eti looked at Blond Boy, who suddenly fainted. With a loud growl, Vesk ran up to the boy and hugged him tenderly, like a best friend, or even someone more. "Alatar would probably like to hold Itel in his arms one day," she thought, somewhat unconsciously. She hadn't slept since yesterday, and during that time she broke into the castle, was imprisoned by the Hag Queen for no reason, and made a daring escape... And she met her. Yes, it was the longest day of her life. And it wasn't over yet, They had to get to this castle as quickly as possible. Not out of fear of the queen. Despite her obvious problems with controlling emotions and aggression, she doubted that she wanted to hurt them. But if she tells her father where they are hiding, then... He will want to get them and hurt them... they have to hide, and Grimmy claimed that this was the only really safe place. After all, Grim knew this planet better than all of them.

It was Grimmy's planet ... Actually, she should have been angry at her for not telling them the truth, but... She didn't feel angry. The Dark Mystic could have saved them a lot of worry, especially Itel, but then again she probably wouldn't have accompanied them and it would have been much harder for them to hide now. They could no doubt need someone who knew this planet right now.

Moreover, she also knew her sister... She even raised her. That was why she was so interested in her, and not because she liked young girls like Itel claimed... She probably didn't know her sister's parentage and she was shocked to learn that the Lord Admiral was their father. But there was something else here... The way she described her relationship with her sister... there was something else hidden there... An understatement, as if she wanted to put something very important into words, but made them understand that she hadn't told them everything yet. She just wasn't sure whether she was motivated by fear of what they would do when they know the truth, or whether she had some dark plans for them. However, she was sure of one thing. Whatever her intentions were towards them, they could not be worse than what Lord Admiral Anteres wanted to do to them.

Sparkle Paw smiled at Vesk again, and lowered her hands, then said.

„Will you let me see your friend? I think he just fainted... from the impression, but I think I should watch it. I have first aid training."

However, when she approached him, the lizard backed away from the white-haired girl and growled at her menacingly.

„I'll try his language.„ interjected and translated what Sparkle Paw said, but Vesk only widened his eyes in surprise.

„ Wrgagh?!" He growled in a confused tone.

„ his Vesk doesn't seem to speak Vesk. Alatar said with surprise, and Grim nodded and said.

„The local Vesks, like most elves, do not speak their native language, but Mr. Rogelio, due to... a congenital condition, does not speak at all.”

Then she saw a black metal cylinder moving towards the dark mystic, moving on long metal tentacles with grippers at the end. It was a very spooky Droid.

„Interesting, I expected the dragons to be bigger, although it may be only an apparent similarity, after all, evolutionary convergence is a very common phenomenon in the universe.” he said in a strangely metallic voice, and Alatar looked at him scowling at the suggestion that he was a small dragon. But the strange Droid didn't pay any attention to him and just approached Grimmy.

„Ah, so we finally meet. I heard rumors... But you survived...„ he said, staring at her with eyes attached to the tentacles.

„I survived... You can put it that way. And who do I have the pleasure of talking to?” Gloomy replied to him in an extremely serious voice, and the shadows around her deepened ominously.

„True, I forgot that the last time we saw each other, I looked a bit different.” he laughed so ghastly that even her hairs stood on end. “Mi-Go can be really good friends.„ he spread his tentacles wide, but seemed alert. She had the impression that there was a relationship between him and Grimmy. A small winged creature sat on a nearby escarpment. For a moment she thought it was Imp, one of the smallest, but also the meanest, devils, but he looked slightly different, completely unlike these fiends. He actually looked like a Wrongdak child , did they ever have children?

„If someone's dream is to have their brain locked in a can, Mi-go can truly be considered the greatest friends. Oh, I know who the fungi from Yugoth are, I've learned a lot in the meantime.„ The Grim woman smiled contemptuously and continued. “However, this is not the time for malice and verbal quarrels. Important things are happening, much more important than our previous conflict, and if either of us makes a mistake, the price will be terrible.”

Grimmy can be quite melodramatic sometimes, she thought and went to Blond Boy, who was just waking up, and said.

„ Listen, Blondie. I don't know how you lived with Grimmy , but for me she's fine. Save your fear for our Father, I mean my father and Catra's, because he's a bigger son of a bitch than anyone you've ever seen. Come on, don't faint again, okay?”

Lonnie returned to work as soon as she was well enough to speak, although pain shot through her face with every word she spoke. However, she did not want to let anyone know how much she was suffering. She knew it was a habit from the Fright Zone, instilled in her by Shadow Weaver. The Dark Sorceress did not tolerate weakness. Even though she had been dead for years, her spirit lived within them. I wonder if she would be proud of herself?

Returning to work was a strange experience. In her absence, everything, the entire Rebellion, functioned without problems… as if she was completely unnecessary… She should feel proud, because it showed that the Rebellion, her Rebellion… Their Rebellion would survive if she was gone, but it made her feel mortal. For the first time in her life she realized her mortality. That the world would continue when she was gone and all memory of her would pass away... Then she felt an overwhelming longing for Kyle, Rogelio, Imp and even Scarlet. The Sorceress had to leave her because of her cover as Castaspela's assistant. She felt so alone then.

Shortly after waking up, Scarlet reported to her about her negotiations with the Chancellor, one of the Star Sisters, and someone who was apparently Shadow Weaver's sister... She was initially angry at her deputy for conducting the talks on her behalf, but had to reluctantly admit that they had gone terribly wrong.

well, and their result was probably the overthrow of Frostas, which was probably the greatest success of the Rebellion, to which none of them had a hand, probably the first such case in history. However, she had to admit that their trip to this strange city turned out to be extremely fruitful. Not only did they get the device they came there for, but they also found proof, very tangible proof, that what the Overseer said was true, which, however, did not fill her with joy. This meant that she would have to keep her contract. She will have to give the innocent woman to the monsters so that they will condemn her to a fate worse than death.

It was already after noon when Grizoll came to her , even more grumpy than usual.

„Kyle and Rogelio are back.” he said sarcastically. She felt the warmth of relief spread through her heart.

„That's great!” she screamed and smiled regardless of the pain that shot through her body, but Grizoll looked at her gloomily.

„Great? We'll see what you say when you see who they brought with them.” he said and motioned for her to follow him. When they reached the courtyard, she saw that all the rebel members who did not have activities that did not allow for a break were standing in a not very neat line. It was nice that everyone came to greet her boys... But why was everyone so tense, so alert, as if they were ready to fight. What's happening here?

She saw Kyle, Rogelio and the imp. She was relieved to see that they were all right, although Kyle looked strangely pale. Dr. Moors also looked safe and sound, though she wasn't sure that statement was appropriate for someone who was a brain in a metal can. The first person she saw was a clone, judging by the painfully colorful outfit it was a local clone from Etheria. Have they caught a spy? That's probably a good thing... In addition to them, there were several young people here, the age they were when Catra took over, and two slightly older Saihe women. The young people were armed and looked fierce, and the women wore Sorcerer costumes. If Kyle and Rogelio recruited them, they did a great job. But why was everyone so…scared? Something was wrong.

„ Hey Scar! You know the recipe for this stew, because it's great!” she heard a voice coming from the side. She turned around and saw Catra eating stew straight from the pot where one of her subordinates was cooking dinner over a fire.

Catra... Ate... Stew... In Her Castle.

„What are you doing here!„ she exclaimed in disbelief, and Catra walked up to her and said.

„I'm eating stew You do not see? Do you have vision problems? You should eat more carrots. It's supposedly good for your eyesight. There's a lot of carrots here. Eat that!” she put the spoon into her mouth. Now she realized it wasn't Catra. Different voice, eye color, hair color... But who the hell was she!

„So this is how hospitality looks like here. I say right away that I will not give away the food.” she walked away from her and started looking menacingly through narrowed eyes.

„Miss Eti hasn't eaten anything warm for a long time, and from what I've noticed, she gets extremely grumpy when she's hungry.”

Her heart stopped at the sound of that voice. However, she overcame her fear and looked at the Saihe woman, who spoke to her.

Shadow Weaver. she just whispered, and Hordak's former right-hand man nodded and approached her. She tightly gripped the metal staff Mi-Go gave her, ready to desperately fight for her life, but the dark sorceress simply said.

„You've gone high, Lonnie. I underestimated you, even though I have done so with many people... But this is not the time to dwell on past mistakes, for Etheria is surrounded by dark powers and we must stand against them together. But first... „ and then the Dark Sorceress, Lady of Darkness, Hordak's second in command the woman they had been afraid of like nothing else in the world for almost their entire lives, knelt down on one knee in front of her and said in a serious but also humble voice. „I would like to ask Comrade General Lonnie for shelter for me and my wards. I stand behind them with my head and swear that we will obey all the laws and orders established by you and will not do anything that would endanger you or your subordinates."

She stared at Shadow Weaver for a few moments, speechless, completely unsure of what she should do. This woman has never had an ounce of humility in her. She was the embodiment of arrogance, just like Catra. She was only able to humble herself before Hordak, and only because she was afraid of him. Will I be the new Hordak now if I accept her? she thought, but... Shadow Weaver was kneeling in front of her... Wasn't this the greatest success she had ever had?

„Agreed, I accept you. But don't try any tricks. I now have allies that even you could never dream of." she said, trying to sound as authoritative as possible,

"You mean Mi"Go. You won't see such creatures even in my dreams... Not in my dreams. With such allies, there is no need for enemies." Shadow Weaver said in a strangely sad voice.

Something Wicked This Way Comes

Chapter Notes

I'm not sure if I understood correctly how the spell concealing the facts about Aravos works. I invite you to comment and provide your opinion

Lady Sorrowflame smiled as she looked at the walls of the library hidden in the Whispering Forest... This planet was a very interesting place. Full of power that penetrates her deeply. She wondered if her inhabitants were aware of this. Probably not. They had been used to it since birth… perhaps… She wasn't entirely sure. When she arrived on this planet with the Lord Admiral and the rest of his entourage, they stayed in the town of Brightmoon . For the capital of the planet it was small. Even smaller than many of the cities of the Lost Golarion, such as Egorian, the capital of the devil-worshipping empire , Nantambu , the damned city of magicians who so often spoiled her plans, and finally Absalom, the city where mortals could became gods. Where the Starstone was originally located... Well, the Starstone... The mere fact that this planet was home to the second copy of the most powerful artifact in the Galaxy made it worth visiting. It was a discovery far more significant than anything she had made in the past centuries, all of her service to the Lord Admiral's family. It was a tool to gain power beyond all imagination. With it, she would be able to pass the Starstone Test and Ascendance on her own. With this, the Truth of Dahak would return in her. New goddess w, beautiful in her terribleness.

However, as she discovered, there is still a lot of work to be done. Once in town, she looked for a place where she could learn something, so she went to a local café, a place where second-class intellectuals or those who wanted to be considered intellectuals gathered. Such places have existed on every planet in every era, and they have always been abuzz with gossip. As soon as she entered there, she attracted the eyes of many women and men, her human body was very attractive, it often made tasks like this easier for her. She greeted everyone politely and sat alone at the table, ordering a surprisingly ordinary coffee, although of course to her everything tasted of bitter ash, apart from, of course, the one and only liquid that was more delicious than ambrosia. Even now she craved the red nectar. In new times, a substitute was created that satisfied her needs, but not her hunger. She was already used to this constant hunger, and with a huge effort of will she managed to keep it in check, but there on Taurus she could finally be satisfied, although only for a moment, because then the thirst hit with a vengeance, so when two deer women invited her to her table, she couldn't take her eyes off the veins in their necks, where the life-giving substance pulsed. They must have misunderstood her interest because they both blushed, only fueling her desire. After the usual exchange of pleasantries, she introduced herself as Lord Antares' chief engineer, a minor understatement that was necessary on this peaceful planet whose inhabitants would be reluctant to hear about the wonders of dark technology. She tried not to reveal too much about the identity of her superior, although they would probably find out in the morning anyway, if the Admiral went well in his meeting with the queen, which she had no doubt about, because Antares was an experienced politician who was not afraid of any young monarch.

Both women were a couple. Their names were Red Leaf and Blue Grass and they worked at a university located in the nearby mountains, a town as large as the capital, with a very original name: University. She carefully questioned them about Etheria's treasures and the legends that circulated throughout the planet. Then they realized that their interlocutor was not from here, which only increased their interest. They immediately decided that the greatest treasure of their planet was the sword of protection found by Adora , which gave her the power to transform into She-Ra . She had heard about this woman from the Star Siblings. She was supposedly the fiancée of the Lord Admiral's daughter and a heroine of the galaxy, and according to the Horde Ultimate, the Lady of Chaos. She was also said to be one of the Firsts, the last of this ancient race. That explained a lot, but she was skeptical about both the girl's origins and whether she was the last one. In her opinion, this is not what a descendant of the race that created the Anacites, a race of mechanical beings from Abbalon, should look like, but then again, who would have guessed that she was a dragon? However, she left her thoughts to herself.

The sword, however, was destroyed when the Heart of Etheria was activated She had heard something about a heart on Taurus, mostly from the clones. They claimed it was a terrifying weapon that he wanted to possess to cleanse the universe, but then they lost contact with Him. She was unable to find out more, even despite Lady. Ka's enhanced interrogation techniques and her medical treatments. Now the women told her that it was a terrible weapon using the planet's magic created by the First Ones. The Queen accidentally activated it the first time during the war, and the second time it was activated by Horde Prime, but Adora destroyed it and then obliterated Horde Prime. This explained who was behind the attack on the Pact Worlds, Veskarium and the rest of the galaxy, although such an explanation was surprisingly disappointing, but then again, it wasn't the real reason they had come here... The Lord Admiral had probably already found out everything about the whole matter even such unimportant scholars knew. Such a weapon... Such power... It was easy to guess that it was related to the Starstone, and that the locals were completely unaware of how it really worked, or that there was this ancient artifact on their planet. It was all almost funny, once again the ignorance of some turned out to be a blessing for others. Finally, she asked if they knew where to start looking for information about the history of this planet. For a moment, the two women discussed where she should go. Most of the history of Magic and Mysticism was stored at the largest and only magical college on the planet, but she could also go to their town to the University or visit the Royal Library. Eventually, they decided that the best place to find information about Etheria's past was the Forest Library, which belonged to the techmaster's Bow parents, Lance and George. After receiving instructions on how to get there, she agreed to go with the women to their shared room, which they had rented for the Victory Day celebrations. She satisfied their hunger there, although in different way than what they expected... However, she did not kill them, she was able to control herself enough, but for the next few days they will be very weakened and, of course, they will not remember anything about their meeting.

She had virtually unlimited resources, but well, she succumbed to her primal dragon nature and convinced the ferryman to transport her near the library using vampire hypnosis so as not to have to get rid of the valuable coins. Then she set off on foot towards the library...

She couldn't remember the last time she was in a real forest. She spent her last years mainly working in her workshop aboard the heavy cruiser Invincible or conducting research in her laboratory located on the same ship. Even when she served the Lord Admiral on his home planet, she very rarely left her research complex where she worked during the war, until Asera blew it up with an atomic bomb... Now she was in a true pristine forest emanating life energy, pure energy of vitality. She sensed his will, powerful and ancient. He heard whispers, though she didn't understand them. But she didn't have to understand them to know what they were whispering about. This Forest hated her, wanted to destroy her. As a red dragon and former priestess of Dahak, she embodied the destructive nature of flame, turning all living things into ashes to fertilize the earth. This Forest was still able to understand, because it was part of the cycle of life. He accepted it, even though he was afraid. But as an Undead, vampire feeding on life energy, she was an abomination, a denial of the natural order of the world. She defiled this pristine forest with her very presence. She was like a worm gnawing at the fleshy flesh of the Whispering Forest self. He wanted to destroy her so badly, and at the same time she felt that he was afraid of her.. Whatever he did, whatever power he used, whatever monster he sent against her, it would all be for naught. She was too powerful and he knew it. Maybe if all this She-Ra helped him... That would be interesting... Unlike her commander, she had no illusions that sooner or later she would have to face the Hero of the Galaxy. The only question was who would emerge victorious from this clash.

She knocked on the door, and then another. After a few moments, she rang the bell, and only then did she hear a noise from inside. The door was opened by a dark-skinned man with a mustache and a heart on his shirt.

“I'm George. Co-curator of this library with my husband Lance. How can I serve you?”

She smiled, trying not to show her too long fangs, and bowed courtly.

“I am Lady Sorrowflame from far away Tarak” She hesitated, wondering how much truth she could tell him, but she decided that this time she would take the risk and tell more truth... “I am the Chef Technician of Lord Admiral Antares, commander of the Research and Exploration Fleets and father of Lady Antares, whom you know as Grand Marshal Catra.” she said, admiring how the man's eyes widened in surprise. – I would like to ask for the opportunity to use your wonderful Library.

“Catra's father… Our Catra…. Adora's fiancée?”

“No one else. Lady Catra is his heiress and successor.” she said in a patient voice. She knew the topic would immediately turn to the cat girl. She was curious how she reacted to this news. She regretted a bit that she wouldn't see it.

“Lance! You won't believe what I tell you!” the man called into the house

Despite the evening time, the library hosts welcomed her very friendly. They served tea and snacks and invited us to the table. She refused snacks, but willingly drank tea, because despite her nature, she was able to enjoy the aroma of tea infusion, even if to a limited extent. George's husband, Lance, had his clothes in disarray, and judging by his some confusion, she probably interrupted them with something a little more intimate. However, the news she delivered to them made them forget about everything else.

“So Catra has parents! It's amazing. I mean, there's nothing really surprising about it. After all, everyone... Almost everyone had some parents, but we never thought we would meet her father!... Everyone was sure she was an orphan from the Frightr Zone. She raised them... Adora and Catra, that Horrible Woman. Her name was Shadow Weaver. It was the Lady of Shadows... We only met her once, at Glimmer's coronation, but we all got chills when we saw her, didn't we, George?” Lance said in an excited voice.

George nodded seriously.

“She was the right hand of Hordak, the ruler of the local Horde. She was Saihe ... A human-like creature, but with pointed ears, she nodded and interrupted him.

“We call them Elves. They are quite common in the Pact Worlds, especially on Castroval ...” she said and remembered a certain dark Elven sorceress who accompanied Lady Cali. This was surprising news, but on the other hand it explained why the young Aristocrat had joined this expedition. But that wasn't her problem. She came here for a completely different purpose. “Sorry to interrupt, but I think it would be best if you learned the whole story first hand, from the Grand Marshal and her father. I came here for a completely different matter. I am a scientist who has gained a lot of knowledge in many fields... I am older than I look. One of my areas of interest is history, and I have learned that you are the most brilliant historians on the planet. You also have the greatest library in the Etheria and I would like to use it to figure out the past of this place.

Lance's eyes sparkled with interest .

“My family has gathered here knowledge from the last thousand years of our planet's history, if not even earlier.” he said and pointed invitingly at the countless shelves behind him.

“You haven't experienced the Gap” she asked with genuine surprise. Both men looked at her not understanding what she was talking about, confirming her suspicions.

“So no...” she said thoughtfully and then began to explain. “Three hundred and seventeen years ago, all the inhabitants of the Galaxy woke up and found that they did not remember anything. They knew who they were and who the people around them were, they knew basic facts about the world around them, but that was all. They did not know their past or the history of the universe. All historical sources turned out to be impossible to read. In short, several thousand years were lost, and so far little has been recovered.” Lance and George looked at her with a terror that was completely understandable in people who had spent their entire lives researching the past and suddenly learned that all the knowledge they had acquired could be lost in an instant, without cause and irretrievably. “More than three hundred years have passed since then and most beings have been born into a new reality. Just some, the most long-lived ones, like the elves we talked about recently or dragons, for example...” she stopped to pour herself some tea when Lance stood up and shouted.

"Ha! I knew dragons existed after all! Are there many of them living in the Galaxy?!"

She smiled mysteriously and said.

“More than you could expect.”

There was a moment of silence, after which she asked one more important question, so important for a person in her... existential state, it was extremely important.

“I have one more request for you. I suffer from an extremely rare genetic disease and certain forms of radiation emitted by certain celestial bodies are deadly to me. Such radiation is emitted by the moons you know as Nir, Cel and Eli. I have a device here that shows me their sunrises and sunsets.” she showed a watch with the option of tracking the movement of celestial bodies, a device very popular among Vampires and other creatures that do not tolerate sunlight, although it is also very often used by shapeshifters such as werewolves. The map of the heavens was obtained courtesy of the AI that controls arrivals to this planet. “That's why I would like to ask you for some shelter, a small room or at least a small room sheltered from the light of those moons.” She said and looked closely at the faces of both men. Unfortunately, vampires were very common throughout the galaxy and most of its inhabitants knew well how to deal with similar creatures. Of course, there were very few beings in the universe that would pose a threat to her, and certainly they weren’t not the librarian couple, but it was better to be cautious. For a moment, she had the impression that a shadow of suspicion crossed their faces, but the mention of the genetic disease prevailed. It's amazing how people were afraid of offending disabled people.

“Of course! We will provide you with appropriate shelter.” said George, and she smiled with the satisfaction of a wolf let into the house by unsuspecting kids.

She had to admit that she was already weaned from working in the old style, without the help of computers. She took with her a datapad and some other electronic equipment, mainly decryption devices and a scanner, but she had to use analog methods of searching for books. It was tiring and time-consuming, but she had to accept it because she needed the resources of this place. Luckily, Lance and George were ridiculously accommodating and kept the place tidy, although she was amused to note that there were many books with quite controversial content hidden in various places. For example, they put the Book of Dead Names under the leg of the Marble Table. She effortlessly lifted the table and pulled out a book. She looked through the issue, although she didn't pay much attention to it, as the Great Old Ones were not in her area of interest. She read a few accounts of Etheria's history, but they didn't contain much information about true antiquity, just dull ruminations on events that were of interest only to the inhabitants of the planet. On the other hand, she found a brand new and very interesting textbook covering recent history, from the arrival of the Horde to the defeat of Horde Prime by She-Ra. She scanned it especially for the Lord Admiral, so that he could read about the achievements of his Daughter and her fiancée. Unlike Lady Ka, she had no dislike for the cat girl. She wasn't worried about her position after the Lord Admiral's death, and even if she was, she would find a job anywhere with her skills. She clung to the Lord Admiral out of comfort and habit rather than out of true devotion. They both knew it perfectly well.

At some point she came across a scroll. It was ancient, made of paper magically protected from destruction. There she saw an elf who, at first glance, looked as if he had some devil's blood, because he had horns, but overall he looked quite strange. The text was clearly written in Dragon, which she didn't expect from this planet based on Lance's recent statement . However, as soon as she started reading it, the text blurred. She smiled when she saw these safeguards and cast Dispel ... And she was blinded by the power of the spell hiding this text. As soon as she regained her sight, she realized that it was something incredibly valuable. She then tried to use a true seeing spell, but this time her eyes began to bleed. She thought for a moment, then looked around to make sure she was alone. She then transformed her eyes into dragon eyes. Then she looked at the text and smiled and said that she could read the scroll. His text was.

Aaravos is one of the Firstborn, touched by the stars of Draksaihe , a star elf as he calls himself, one of the greatest creations of the First Ones, called the Great Ones in his homeland. Great is his wisdom and terrible is his power. He does not live in any of the kingdoms of Etheria, he does not serve any princess. He lives neither in the ocean nor in the depths of the earth, but in Xadia, a distant world beyond our prison. Yes! Sethis's Tricolored theories are true about the fact that we are just one of a thousand thousand worlds floating in a sea of stars. Many of them were visited by the First Ones, not just Etheria. One of these worlds was Xadia . It was there, mixing the blood of terrible monsters called dragons with the blood of relatives our Saihe, they created Draksaihe . The star-touched Draksaihe were leaders wielding great and terrible power. They were powerful beyond imagination. In addition to these, they created the merciless murderers of the Moonshadow Draksaihe, the fearless warriors called the Sunfire Draksaihe , and other types, each created to fulfill a different role in their great empire. However, one day, contact with Eternia was severed and the Xadia colony was left abandoned by the rest of the First Ones who were looking for a home. During this time, Aaravos was perfecting his power, but the descendants of those from whose blood he was created, jealous of his power, imprisoned him. But although deprived of freedom, he is not completely powerless because he left behind mirrors, thanks to which it is possible to contact him even after his imprisonment. Unfortunately, the only mirror I know of was taken from us and hidden in… here the entry ended. On the other side there was a portrait of a strange Elf. He smiled friendly, but in his eyes, perhaps completely unconsciously, the artist portrayed a wicked cunning. A planet full of Dragon-Elf hybrids? This might be interesting, she thought, smiling much less friendly than the Elf on drawing.

The Lost Queen

Chapter Notes

As always, please leave your comments and opinions

“I don't like what our captain is doing.” Second Officer Gydwa snapped, and boatswain Kaert rolled his eyes.

“You never like what our Captain does. When we won the pile of gold, you also complained...” They will stand in front of Veska and he added. “We both know that you are more concerned about her successes than her failures, because you dream of her chair. I respect that, but it doesn't mean I'll side with you for no apparent reason.

They were in the ship's canteen. Theoretically, Free Captains could not forbid their crew members from discussing whatever they liked, including complaining about the captain, but the practice was such that many of them were eager to suppress any signs of dissatisfaction, usually very brutally and preferably in person. Their captain, however, was not a paranoid person sniffing out conspiracies everywhere, which was her great advantage. He also knew that Gydwa would be much less understanding in her place. That's why he steadfastly stood by them and the Captain, even if she had been acting quite strange lately.

“We are Pirates. This excludes normality. I remember bad old Krush Purpleeye. When his team lost the match, he first shot their coach, and then kidnapped members of the opposing team and cut off their left leg and right arm. And he was killed by Sin-Ko, who was a fan of the opposing team. And this was only the beginning of the Great Steelball War. What Moonshadow did is still within the norm. The girl took the sword from her and did not want to give it back. She even brazenly lied that about not having that blade, although she summoned him right afterwards...” he didn't finish because Gydwa interrupted him.

“And then she almost destroyed our ship! What the fuck possessed her to attack the fucking demi-goddess and hero of the Galaxy!” Veska drawled. It was realy strange indeed. He never thought he would witness a sword fight with a cruiser. And actually a winning one. He was a simple pirate, if there was such a thing. He didn't sign up to fight someone who looked and acted just like Iomadae's avatar.

“It was a mistake, I admit. But our captain didn't know about it either. Maybe our captain didn't know the true power of this sword, or didn't know that the girl was capable of wielding it. There are countless possible answers.” Boatswain explained carefully. Veska snorted.

“The Captain better start giving them to us, and for now we found out that she is a fucking queen, although even she seemed surprised by it.” Veska said, clenching her fists angrily. Kaert shrugged.

“She wasn't the first to take up piracy after losing the throne, and she won't be the last. Famous Lord Antares has commanded the Fearless Armada for over twenty years. And he probably still believes that he will regain his throne. Our captain probably believes this too. However, this works to our advantage. If she could get her back... As her crew, we would be rich beyond imagination.”

Second Officer Gydwa looked at him skeptically.

“First she had her stupid war with the Azlanti. This made us a mortal enemy to the most powerful empire known, because she had to take revenge. Just because I'm a Vesk doesn't mean I have anything against the Star Empire. Let them talk nonsense about human supremacy and oppress non-humans. I don’t care! Okay, we made some money on them, gained some fame and contacts, but at what risk? But okay, I can digest it. But now she has plunged us into her old conflict over the crown. With a kingdom that defeated Horde Prime , a Tyrant who left a trail of dead planets in his wake and ruled for millennia... What chance do you think we have against someone like that? With the most powerful country in this part of the galaxy."

Kaert leaned back in his chair and folded his fingers into a pyramid.

"This might be a bit of a problem, I admit. However, no one becomes a pirate expecting a simple, safe life. We expect to face dangers that would make ordinary people shit their pants. I don't know about you, my dear Gydwa, but I am aware of what a dangerous profession I have chosen. The truth is that most of us will die in combat or end up behind bars or thrown out of an airlock. We agree to this because it is a wonderful, exciting life that will be filled with deeds that are both glorious and wicked. We will rise above the gray crowd of ordinary bread eaters. And if we die in the process... fiend's blood! We will all die someday, but we have a chance get a prize that ordinary yeast paste eaters can only dream of. And the greatest reward of all awaits us, the crew of the terrible Merciless, commanded by Captain Moonshadow. Think, my dear Gydwa. Our captain is no ordinary pirate, we always knew that. Certainly the current rulers of Etheria have enemies. If we play the situation properly, we can overthrow the queen and take power... We are a bunch of bastards, hardened in battles with the Azlanti , who are not afraid of anything. And don't forget about Reh-zar and his wonderful ship. If thanks to him we get our captain the sword that gave the power that that girl used, we regain her throne, we take control of the second Starstone and we are in possession of this ship, then it is certain that Moonshadow will become the Queen of the Free Captains."

Gydewa responded with mocking laughter.

"We don't even know if Reh-zar will be able to repair his ship..."

Then Kaert smiled broadly, because he knew something that his companion did not.

"Reh'zar reached the ship . He managed to get this ship going. In a few weeks he will arrive here with his ship. It's a Colossus-class ship. It's called Bloodstone."

This insult requires blood. A lot of blood. The whole bathtub... No, the pool. Yes, the whole pool. And he will drain their blood through a straw. As thin as from a juice box, thought First Officer Tonado as he stomped furiously on the Captain's Bridge. His wonderfully wonderful captain sat in her chair reading the repair reports. For several days now, since meeting that wicked, lying sword wench. Not only did she rob her, but she also lied straight out! But at least she admitted that the captain was a queen. True enough, she was already a queen to him, great and powerful, but now it turned out that she was a royal queen. His little, but great Skittemander heart beat faster. He mentally swore to himself that he would be willing to sacrifice his life to overthrow this odious usurper and regain his captain throne.

There was also the matter of that treacherous Aristocrat and her vile entourage. As soon as the Captain returned to the ship she was hurt, scared and confused. She didn't tell anyone who she was fighting, but there was no doubt that they were overwhelmingly outnumbered, probably two hundred to one. And they had tanks and combat robots. Nothing else would have made her run away. But this army had to be led by this Lady Cala, and she was helped by this cat lady. The blonde girl with the weed in her hair must have been behind this ambush. Already at the first glance he noticed that she was evil because of her cruelty and veganism! It was clearly visible that she was Azlanti. If it weren't for her disgusting weeds, he would have cut her into pieces. A small cube, from which he later made bigos! Yeah it is. And he will add her weed to the pot.

After the fight, Captain did not speak to anyone and did not explain anything to anyone. Some of the crew didn't like it. He heard many of them muttering angrily, especially Gydwa. He knew he should keep an eye on her, or even both. He just had to keep an eye on the captain, and he couldn't get them out of his head yet... He'll have to learn that eventually.

“Reh-zar will arrive soon with his ship.” Captain Moonshadow finally broke the silence. Skittermander felt a pang of regret in his heart. Reh-zar was his captain's partner, as well as his previous first mate. However, he stayed in the place where they found this wreck, which they found out about thanks to the same Azlantean ship that had a map with the location of this damned Etheria. No, not damned it was the kingdom of his wonderful Lady Captain, it couldn’t be damned, it simply had lost its rightful ruler. The Azlanti had begun the process of repairing this wreck, so Reh-zar only had to supervise the entire process.

“That's a great news!” he exclaimed, trying to sound as happy as possible. He saw that his Captain's eyes smiled and she stroked his head with her live hand.

“My brave Tonado. Sometimes I wonder what I would do without your passionate heart. You don't have to worry about your position. Reh-zar will command Bloodstone, you will remain my first officer. My right hand.”

He looked down and said with guilt in his voice.

“I'm not worried about ceasing to be First Officer, I'm just worried about not being with you, my lady! I will never abandon you!”

In fact, Captain Moonshadow was the first person to show him true kindness. When he was still a half-witted Skittermander cub, he accidentally boarded a freighter. The captain treated him like a stowaway and forced him to work off the debt, which, however, kept growing because the captain added food and accommodation to it. He worked there for several years, mainly as a cleaner, with no hope of freedom. Eventually, the ship fell victim to pirates who took the Skittermander aboard. Not much has changed for Tonado. He still had to work as a deckhand, all he received was basic combat training. It turned out that he had talent, although he had no way to use it. However, one day they came across Captain Moonshadow, who saw how they treated him. After what the Azlanti did to her, she hated slavery, so she demanded that the captain free him. When he refused, she killed him and took the Skittermander aboard. From that moment on, he swore that he would serve her as long as he had breath left in his chest.

"Your faithfulness is one of the few certainties in this terrible world. Now I'm going to talk to Tirin. Keep an eye on everything, my brave first officer." she said, and then moved to the navigator's room. As he watched her go, Tonato once again vowed that he would get this She- Ra and cut her to pieces!

Tirin stared at maps of the region, calculating drift coordinates. The local maps and star atlases they had obtained before they had to leave Ikarus were accurate, and she learned a lot from them, but they were completely unsuitable for Drift travel, so she had to enter all the data manually. It didn't bother her. After all, she was good at navigation and always liked to be useful. Of course, no one on this ship had ever made her understand that she was useless, that she was a failure, unlike at the camp, although she was never sure how much of that was due to Moonshadow. The captain of the pirate ship had always been kind to her, even back then in the camp. She had no reason to do so. After all, she was one of the ones who hurt her. She was Azlanti.

Sensors detected Captain Moonshadow's approach, so she stood up and opened the door to let her in. She always moved slowly and carefully, although her fragile, crippled body was hidden in bionic armor, so it was in no danger. Captain Moonshadow stood in the doorway, smiling at her under his mask. She always smiled when she saw her, even in the camp when she was suffering so much. Once they were free, she told her that she reminded her of her daughter. If any of the guards had heard this while the captain was in captivity, she would have been severely punished. After all, Tirin was a pure-blooded Azlanti, even if so miserable, and Moonshadow was only an non-human prisoner, albeit a slightly more valuable one. The navigator did not know who the captain's daughter was, except that the pirate loved her very much. Moonshadow herself didn't remember her, neither her face nor her name. Just her laugh and her hair color. So much had been taken from her… She tried her best to replace her, just as the Captain was replacing her mother she never knew.

"How are you feeling, my dear?" asked the captain, sitting in the chair. She took off her mask because here, in the Navigation Room, which was also Tirin's cabin, the oxygen content and pressure were also increased. The navigator's lungs were even more damaged than Moonshadow's, and even numerous cybernetic changes did not help her much. One day she might replace her lungs with completely artificial ones, but as long as she was in the armor, and she usually didn't leave it for days, it was fine. Without this armor she felt helpless, and to be honest, she was helpless.

"I feel good, Captain." she replied in a quiet, hoarse voice. She smiled, even though her face was obscured by the breathing apparatus. The captain stroked her dark purple curls tenderly.

"It's a pity that we stayed on Ikarus for such a short time. Maybe if we stayed there longer, you could come out and look around the place. It was really nice there." there was sadness in the pirate's voice. The thought of going out into the open, under the open sky on a planet she didn't know, made her shudder. She didn't like leaving the ship, and the open spaces on the planets terrified her. She preferred the vastness of space a hundred times more, at least it was pure, untainted by what it had distorted her body.

"I've been looking at the maps and I think it would be best if we looked at a place called Wherever. Supposedly, those who were escaping from Prime's watchful eye once hid there, but now it is a free and open port. It doesn't say Wherever that there were pirates there, but I guess that goes without saying." she said, trying to change the subject. Captain Moonshadow listened to her and nodded.

“This might be a good place, we'll learn the language there, the crew will have some fun and the mood will improve. It'll be all right.” said the pirate. There was silence for a moment, until finally Tirin asked.

Captain Moonshadow thought for a few minutes. She seemed to be deep in thought, or perhaps in memories. She didn't remember much, but sometimes new memories of the life she had lost forever came back to her. Maybe not? She was not the life of the party and found it very difficult to overcome her overwhelming shyness. But she was a good listener and she learned something about what happened there in the city.

“I have no idea. For a very long time I thought about this moment, I longed for it, even dreamed about this moment. Until finally my dreams came true... Everything happened completely differently than it was supposed to. This girl... She was completely different than I expected. She should have been a vile, vile traitor, someone who would run away in terror or beg on her knees for mercy, but she wanted to give in, like someone who has been tormented by past mistakes for many years. But the first moment she saw me, her eyes lit up with pure joy. Tears ran down her face... Those who betray their friends are not happy to see them. Nor do they risk their lives against a warship to save the city's inhabitants. I'm only sure of one thing. My name is Angela... It even fits, don't you think?”

Wherever had been a hidden place for decades. Partly because those who ran the place were reluctant to share the secret of its location, and not everyone who came here was allowed to fly away. However, the truth was that the most important factor that saved this place from annihilation at the hands of Horde Prime was the fact that those who stayed here posed no real threat. True rebels usually stuck to conquered planets, trying to stay close to the center of power in order to wage their unequal fight against an empire that stretched across the known universe. They usually died in the end without achieving anything significant, forever forgotten by history. However, the inhabitants of Wherever chose a different path. They just wanted to hide and somehow survive in the empire by feeding on its waste. It did not bring them glory, but it ensured safety and allowed them to enjoy a semblance of freedom that other inhabitants of the Empire had not even dreamed of. However, when She-Ra destroyed Horde Prime, a real sea of new possibilities opened up for those who lived here. There weren't many deep space ports in the Empire, and almost all of them existed solely to serve the needs of the Navy and the clones that served there. Wherever was that one exception. It may not have been the great interstellar port of the pre-Horde stories, but it could be a place for trade and needs that the clones had never dreamed of, at least until the fall of their Big Brother. There were bars and inns where crews could relax from the hardships of space travel. A marketplace where you could buy goods from all corners of the former empire, and even a few brothels and casinos for those looking for more thrills.

The station's authority had changed, but not completely, and relative order was still maintained with an iron fist. This helped in trade, after all, without any law it was impossible to trust partners and conduct business. At the same time, Wherever remained completely independent of the revived planetary governments. Everyone could come here without fear of being prosecuted for crimes committed on one of the Planets. Traders and famous cyberneticists from Icarus came here. There were also visitors from Aquarius selling strange devices, as well as visitors from Eridani selling potions. Sometimes even Horde Ultimate's subjects came here, although they preferred not to flaunt their origins. There were even inhabitants of the legendary Etheri ahere a few times, bringing with them incredible stories about magic and sorcery.

Skrad was a Goblan from Aquarius. And he was proud of it, although being a representative of his not very tall people required strength of character, but he never lacked it. He spent most of his life operating wells and trading water, surprisingly dangerous activities on his home planet. When Horde Prime was annihilated, a new source of income appeared. Alcohol, previously banned throughout the Empire, became widely available. Skrad has always been interested in brewing drinks, although so far they were only herbal infusions, and after the liberation it turned out that he had a real talent in this field. When a representative of his clan became ambassador to Etheria, the clan council decided to send him here to use his unique skills. He made his money selling a liqueur made from bitter Gresh berries and bought a bar from Iron Bone, the former owner, who decided to return to Icarus. Soon after, he met Hares, a beautiful deerwoman from Etheria and former apprentice of Mystacor . Thanks to her, he learned about magic, in many different senses. He smiled to himself as he cleaned the glasses, because he was planning something special for today. He made a traditional crown from flowers that was given as an engagement gift. Today he would discover new forms of magic, he was sure of it.

Suddenly, a large and menacing-looking group entered the bar. They were dressed in purple clothes and carried weapons and armor of excellent quality. Among them was a strange multi-handed creature with a pirate hat, a slyly smiling Saihe , and a tall lizardman that looked like Waste of Etheria. However, what attracted the most attention was a tall woman with a crystal mask covering the lower half of her face. She looked intimidating. She had an aura of authority around her worthy of true authority. He had no idea where they came from, but he was sure it wasn't any place he had heard of.

As the tall woman approached him, he sighed. This day was looking quite good.

Captain Moonshadow had had a constant, pounding headache ever since she met that girl. She felt as if her whole world, everything she took for granted, had collapsed again. She was once again that lonely lost woman who woke up in the hospital. This time, however, she had no intention of letting anyone hurt her. She wasn't helpless this time. Former Captain Moonshadow, commander of the terrible Merciless, Scourge on Azlanti!

But she was also Angela, and even Queen Angela. Reh-zar often suggested that she might have been of high birth because she had manners and a way of speaking befitting a true lady. She always laughed off these words, because if she were someone important, someone would try to find her instead of leaving her in the hands of Azlanti... Although, if she came from Etheria ... The locals had no idea about the existence of the Star Empire, they probably couldn't even imagine a country, that would combine such great culture and technological advancement with such unspeakable and senseless cruelty. Perhaps they really didn't know she was alive. What happened to her must have had something to do with the Starstone. Did she know where he was? He definitely needs to get her sword back, that hasn't changed. But how to get it back?

The girl there summoned him. She just didn't remember doing that before. The image of that sword was burned into her memory as if by hellfire. However, she was sure that it was completely material. She felt its glow on her face... But still, this Adora, this She-Ra, wielded him. She was able to summon his power. She knew that just anyone couldn't do it, only those who were worthy. If this girl was worthy, it meant she wasn't that traitor, or at least not that perfidious. Perhaps she was somehow forced to abandon her... and take her sword from her. In the Azlanti labor camp, she learned that even good people can do terrible things. She was the best example of this herself. She did terrible things in her war with Azlanti and sometimes harmed innocents, although she tried to avoid it as much as she could. Perhaps she too was forced to abandon her and take her sword away… In that case, she could forgive her…. Of course, only if he returns this wonderful blade to its rightful owner. This was an indisputable fact.

It was also an indisputable fact that Lady Cala was not who she claimed to be. Or rather what she looked like. No one fought that well, was that fast and strong. And absolutely no one would take a direct flareshot to the face. But the worst thing was her look, cold and cruel , like a soulless creature. Every time she was hurt, she smiled with pure joy. Thanks to magic and the latest medicines, her wounds were already healed, but she was still in shock... And those kids... They were fighting on the side of this Adora against her crew... She didn't blame them either, after all, she wanted to hurt the woman they had grown to like without any a reason, at least one they knew... and besides, that cat girl saved her life with that gunshot that would have taken another creature's leg... She was sure it couldn't have been anyone who did it. They probably did not know the aristocrat's true identity, although from what she had already noticed, Eti treated Lady Cali with contemptuous dislike. There was also this Miss Daisy. She constantly felt like she knew her from somewhere, but if she was the queen, who could that woman be? Especially since she lived with a creature like Lady Cala…

As Tirin suggested, she went to Wherever. The advice turned out to be very accurate. The very fact that they ended up in this place had a great effect on the morale of the crew. They needed some entertainment. She knew that because of her recent behavior, she had lost a lot of the trust they had previously had in her. She knew very well that getting him back wouldn't be that easy, especially since she stopped trusting herself. Then, in Clytaimestra, she was overcome with unspeakable fury when the girl said that her sword was broken, she must finally get it back, but that was no reason to order the city to be shelled. She lost control, in the worst way possible. During her war with the Star Empire, she never went so far as to attack innocent civilians, even if they were Azlanti. She murdered representatives of the regime and soldiers of the Aeon Guard without blinking an eye, or sentenced them to slow death in the Gardens of the Long Death, but she had never crossed a certain line... Until now. This journey unleashed a darkness in her that she couldn't control.

Tonado, as fanatically devoted as ever, cleared the way for her. Skitterman was ready to shield her from being shot with his own breast. She turned, looking back, and saw Tirin looking at the gadgets at the stand. She was petite, even in the strange, suit-like armor Reh-zar had bought for her. She had pale skin, almost white, and navy blue, translucent hair unusual for Azlanti. The color of her hair was the result of contamination, or perhaps rather infection, that she fell victim to in early childhood. It was similar with their eyes, which were a uniform, crimson-blue color. Her body was a breeding ground for fungi and parasites that could only be contained thanks to the achievements of modern medicine. She liked the girl and was honestly glad she was finally off the ship. She was afraid to go out into the open, especially under the open sky, which was understandable for someone who grew up on a planet where going outside protected buildings could involve terrible suffering. However, in her case it was probably due to an accident that she barely survived when she was a small child. Luckily, Wherever was located in a huge cave carved inside the moon, which calmed the girl down. Tirin and Tonado aroused protective feelings in her, and together with Gozamund, they were the only crew members she trusted. Unfortunately, in case of any friction between her and the rest of the crew, the girl was the one who would most likely suffer the most. She had to be even more careful what she was doing now, lest Tirin become an accidental victim of an outburst of discontent because of her mistakes.

She left the navigator behind and, together with her officers, entered a bar called "Drink to the End". Inside, she was surprised to see Goblin. They were a ubiquitous species, with incredible ingenuity in creating machines from scrap and garbage, but she'd never heard of any of them running a bar, although then why not, goblins drank alcohol too. However, this one seemed to be much more focused than its brethren and had noticeable nostrils, which could indicate a hint of gnomish or halfling blood. He seemed clearly intimidated by the sight of her, which was good because it would make the conversation easier. She needed information. She stood over him and ordered something stronger. Drinking a strong alcohol through a straw took some caution…she didn't want to choke, and asked.

“What do you know about Etheria?”

The bartender raised one eyebrow and smiled slightly as he replied.

“That its inhabitants are nice, but they can be tough and it's better not to pick on them if you value your skin.”

I noticed, she thought wryly, but continued to ask in a gentle voice

“I wanted to learn more about this planet.”

The goblin became lost in thought and looked at the captain searchingly and finally said.

“My girlfriend is from Etheria, she knows a lot more about it than I do.” he turned and called a woman named Hares . After a while, a woman with roses came out of the back room, smiling cheerfully and wiping her hands.

“Who are you!? Take off your mask!” he will exclaim with a mixture of fear and hope. Tonado jumped on the bar and was about to threaten her with his blades, but she signaled him to stop and took off her mask. Hares took a deep breath, fell to her knees and said with joy.

-“Queen! My Queen... Are you alive? We all thought you were dead... That's when the portal opened.” she sobbed. Captain Moonshadow put her mask back on and looked at the horned woman, then asked curiously.

“Portal opened? Explain please.”

Hares looked surprised.

“You do not remember? That was when they took the Sword of Protection and…”

“Sword? My Sword? Where is it now!” she interrupted her mid-sentence. There was lust in her voice. Hares looked at her with confusion.

“Your sword? After all, it was Adora's Sword... And it was broken…” she exclaimed anxiously. The captain felt the icy claws of terror tightening around her heart. She remembered the words telling her to retrieve the sword if she wanted to remember her old life. These words rang in her ears, it felt like they would burst her skull. The world around her turned red, as if shrouded in the glow of ghostly eyes. She shook her head and pursed her lips. Ti didn't matter anyway. All that mattered was getting his sword back.

“You're lying!” she roared and jumped behind the bar. She grabbed the terrified horned woman by her clothes with a metal hand and pressed her hand surrounded by a solarian flare to her face.

“Tell the truth Where is the sword! Do you serve the invader?” she shouted. She saw her crew staring at her. The bartender tried to grab his gun, but Gydwa grabbed his arms and dragged him out from behind the bar, then pinned him to the floor.

“Invaders? You mean Hordak ?! After all, I have always served you faithfully. I was a student who came to Brightmoon with a group of sorcerers. For a few days I helped create the magical protections of your room, but I didn't do very well, and that's why I'm here. You do not remember?” Hares asked, her voice breaking.

“Sword… Hordak… Where can I find them!” she demanded, feeling like a headache was about to split her brain.

“Hordak is now on Beast Island. I don't know what they did with the remains of the sword. Maybe they gave them to Entrapta to examine them... Then it's on the Island too...”

When she heard Entrapta's name, she felt a sharp pang of sadness and pity. She knew this person and had feelings for him, but for some reason she was in the company of an Invader, this Hordak . Never mind. She came out from behind the bar and looked at her officers. They were confused, even Tonado. Gydwa exchanged glances with Kaert . She was aware that she had lost control of herself again. She looked around, there were only two customers in the bar and they were very careful not to be noticed. This time the situation might not have been so bad, but they had to be careful. The authorities of this place will not take kindly to the fact that someone starts fights and intimidates entrepreneurs.

“Bind everyone here. Tonado, you'll be guarding the doors and telling everyone the bar is closed due to plumbing problems. Meeting on deck in six hours.” she said in a low voice.

She turned and looked at the woman. Glimmer. That was her daughter's name. She looked at her hands and shuddered. She couldn't remember what kind of person she used to be, but she was definitely different from the Scourge of Azlanti. Better.

“Queen Angela is dead. She died in the Azlantean labor camp. There, Captain Moonshadow was born. She is the Queen of Shadows. Nobody More.” she said and left the bar more lost than ever.

Chapter Notes

See the end of the chapter for notes

She woke up.

For a moment, she thought she was in her room in the Kingdom of Snow. There was nice and warm, and Shogi was sleeping as a cat-like creature on her legs and snoring. And then she saw the plants in pots and the shield with the coat of arms, she realized where she was and she was overcome with inexpressible sadness and shame. She lost her kingdom. She was just Frosta now, nobody else. She didn't even have a home because her subjects... Her people didn't want her. She couldn't even take her things with her, she only had what she managed to take with her on the trip, mainly a change of clothes. She didn't even have any sanitary pads with her, and it turned out that she had her period last night. The first time it happened was during the war and Glimmer helped her a lot... She didn't want to think about her friend, so she quickly dressed in the clothes Spinnerella and Netossa had prepared for her. She grimaced because he was much too big, or maybe she was too short? The inhabitants of the Kingdom of Snow were shorter, than the citizens of other kingdoms, regardless of what People they belonged to. She felt strange in this outfit, she usually tried to wear the ethnic clothes of her kingdom. This was to help her win over the clan representatives and prove that she was devoted to them and that the culture of her kingdom was the most important to her. It probably didn't work after all... Maybe if she wore those stupid and uncomfortable outfits she wore during state ceremonies every day... Would she then be… Respectable enough? Would she represent her kingdom and her subjects appropriately? Probably not, the problem was in a completely different place. In her. She sighed, then smiled slightly as Shogi began to chirp and rub against her legs.

“I guess we have to go, because they're probably waiting for us.” she said to her companion and left the room into the dining room.

It turned out that breakfast was not ready yet. In the evening , Spinnerella told Netossa that she missed her very much with THAT voice, so they probably went to sleep VERY late. She wonder if someone will ever address her this way? She had never thought about it before. It didn't matter anyway. Netossa was feeding the Child porridge from a pot, Spinnerella was busy serving food despite her condition, Greypaw was nodding off, and Quickling was listening to the radio. She took a deep breath, put on the most serious face she could, and said solemnly.

“I greet the people in charge of this household and I thank you with all my heart for the honor of spending the night by their fire, which saved me from certain death from the cold.”

All five of them, including the Child, looked at her with their mouths open, and Netossa looked suspiciously out the window, as if to check if the weather had changed.

“Oh Frosta ! You don't have to address us formally. It is our pleasure to host you under our roof.” said the ruler of Windcrest, smiling friendly.

“Shogi!” Greypaw and Quickling shouted as they ran towards the shapeshifting creature, which now took on a more dog-like form. They had been playing with him all evening yesterday, although Netossa was a bit wary, after all, she had seen her new friend in Shogoth's natural form . Eventually, however, she decided that there was no threat to anyone from the ancient creature and began tossing him a ball for him to fetch. She almost forgot what happened to her then.

“Good morning Princess Frosta!” Greypaw and Quickling replied at the same time, without ceasing to petting Shogi.

“We need to think about getting them a pet.” Netossa suggested, and her wife smiled warmly.

There were not many servants in the court of the united kingdom. Although dinners were prepared by the cook, both rulers tried to prepare breakfasts themselves, although due to Spinnerella's advanced stage of pregnancy , this will probably change soon. Vegan banana pancakes and rolls with tofu and sweet filling and vegetable broth were served, and she and Greypaw got milk soup with buckwheat noodles. She sat down next to the place occupied by the cat-like boy, who returned to his seat after a while. He was very different from Catra, just like all the other feline people she had ever met. She had never actually met anyone like Catra, but she had never been to Scorpion country for long. Her people probably lived there. Greypaw asked for a cup of almond milk and when he got it he asked.

His question was innocent but fully justified, after all it was said that the power of runestones could not be wielded by those who proved themselves unworthy. And since she turned out to be unworthy of ruling her kingdom... She was shocked to find that she didn't remember using her power since she lost control there, in front of the ice palace. Terrified, she grabbed Greypaw's mug and froze it so violently that it cracked. Instead of relief at having retained her powers, she felt shame at having destroyed the mug. She lowered her head and remained gloomily silent. Spinnerella looked at her son disapprovingly and said.

“In the thousands of years since... Since the First Ones left Etheria, only a few times have any of the princesses been deprived of the Power. Talon of Brightmoon wanted to turn into a not-dead sorcerer to rule forever and murdered seven people. Scythe of Dryll carried out terrible experiments, Misty of Plumeria named herself the Princess in Yellow and began to distort her kingdom with Dark Magic, and Iron Grasp, Scorpia's ancestor, was simply a crazy Tyrant who wanted to enslave all the inhabitants of Etheria, ruined the reputation her people for many years " The ruler of Windcrest explained to everyone with passion. Quickling's eyes lit up with curiosity.

"Is Entrapta... Princess Entrapta has her own Runestone?" Saihe the girl asked .

"No, it was destroyed during the time of Princess Scythe by her daughter. It allowed for combining organic and inanimate matter, creating a connection between living beings and machines. Supposedly, there were eight runestones that gave powers, but only five survived... " she did not add that these five were enough to almost destroy their world. "Not all princesses who use the power have access to Runestones. I inherited mine from Ariel, Queen Angela's sister, Mom Netossa can make webs thanks to ancient technology, and Princess Sweet Bee can communicate telepathically... I'm not sure how, but I think it has something to do with her origins." Spinnerella explained . The rest of breakfast passed in silence. When Queen Angela was mentioned, she felt very sad. Her parents died when she was little and she had virtually no memory of them. It was hard to miss someone you barely remembered. And Glimmer lost her mother, whom she loved so much, and in such terrible circumstances.

Both princesses had been almost deprived of their own property during their years of exile in Brightmoon, and they did not want to abuse the Queen's hospitality and took care of most of the household chores on their own, and decided that nothing would change for them in this respect once their homelands were regained and united. After all, Their people had suffered so much during the war that it was inappropriate for them to live in comfort and luxury now. She asked to be allowed to help them, although she had only washed her plate during the last trip, so she didn't put much effort into it, but she wanted to be useful. At first, Netossa protested that she was a guest and didn't have to do anything for them, but Spinnerella said that it was great that she would help them. While she was washing up, Shogi was watching over the Child. The job helped her and made her feel a little better. However, once the dishes were done, she went into the living room to listen to the radio, but the only news was the Chancellor's speech about the great future of their new republic. She immediately lost her mood. Netossa swore so badly that she thought her ears were going to fall off, so she turned off the radio and then growled.

“Damn, Lonnie. That we also let her minions get away with it. They all had to be tied up and taken to the dungeon! They would fraternize with the rats!” She spoke until her wife put her hand on her shoulder.

“Kyle seems like the kind of guy who would befriend with rats, but Scarlet... I thought she was my friend. She saved my life even though she didn't have to.” She didn't add that she knew the truth about Nightgale. Maybe there was a secret here? She was the daughter of Shadow Weaver, who was a liar and a manipulator… No, that wouldn't be fair. No one should be judged for who her mother was. They didn't know everything.” Maybe it's not her or Lonnie's doing. But what do I know?I thought the Chancellor was my friend too.”

Calamity would never have thought that at the sight of another feline creature, her heart would burn with such a hot fire of Righteous Wrath. The younger one, that Eti, for understandable reasons aroused in her hatred mixed with well-deserved contempt. But it was nothing, the mere glow of a candle flame in the bright sunlight. This creature took away her future, broke out her destiny. She made her wonderful Existence meaningless. She could have become the undisputed ruler of Etheria, or perhaps this part of the universe, but she was only an element of Nyarlathotep's plan, one of many. What a pathetic fall. Could she have been further disgraced? And worst of all, she could not seek justice in any way. Just stand here and smile benevolently, because that was the sorceress's plan. It was only with the greatest effort of will that she stopped herself from tearing out her throat with her bone claws. How long will her torment last?

The conversation with Heart Gift turned out to be quite fruitful. The AI was dumb even compared to the mortals, but she still didn't want to arouse her suspicions, lest she summon those damned crabs to tear her apart. That would be more than troublesome. Fortunately, she was able to be nice and hide her true nature, although she was tempted to tell the AI the truth about her mothers, but she came up with a much funnier idea... Perhaps she could even find a way to circumvent the agreement between Nyarlathotep and the Dark Sorceress. The power node map was interesting and will greatly help them with their grand plan. She said goodbye to Heart Gift, promising her that they would meet again. She intended to keep this promise...

The journey back to the vehicles that had brought them here was much shorter than it had been to get there, mainly because she no longer had to limit herself and could use the full potential of her perfect body. She got into the mercenary's vehicle in case her own was mined. You can't fall into the same trap again. She also notified friendly cultists who were to take care of her former friends trapped in the shelter, who, according to the words of the unwise AI, survived. She was happy because she had prepared something special for them…

She reached a small town where the house of her most important contact was, Klementine , the daughter of General Jocelyn . The girl was waiting for her outside the city, dressed in the rather pretentious robes of a Nyarlathotep cultist, put on hastily considering how disorganized they were. She greeted her with such sincere joy that Calamity wasn't sure if the girl understood who she was dealing with, or even what being a cultist meant. She decided that she was one of those naive creatures who looked for comfort and answers to their sadness and uncertainty in cults. Well, she could play that role, there you go, Shadow Weaver taught her how to play a savior and a benevolent protector.

The greeting was hurried, but she must have made the right impression, because the girl blushed when she spoke to her. This will be easier than she expected. Klementine wanted to take her to her house to entertain her, but she refused. She told her to change her clothes and provide herself with a suitable outfit so that she could meet the queen. The girl looked a bit disappointed, but complied. Well, she wasn't chosen because of her talents, but because of the position her mother held. Despite what she probably believed, her position in the cult was quite low. She didn't really need it to get into Glimmer's presence, her name alone should have been enough, but she decided it was worth keeping this acquaintance because it would come in handy someday. The servants were only a little surprised when Klementine brought such a guest at night, but the instructions for the girl to pack because they were going to Brightmoon made a much greater impression . During the flight she held onto it tightly, tighter than she had to, and while walking through the corridors of the castle she chattered incoherently. She kindly kept her talking, even though she wanted to pull out all her teeth and shove them down the girl's throat.

The chatter stopped when they met Catra and her three companions. She recognized Castaspella by the fact that she wore the head sorcerer's crown, which, like the sorceress herself, was carefully described to her by Shadow Weaver. She didn't have a very good opinion of the new ruler Mystacor , although now Calamity decided that she was too kind to her anyway. Behind her stood a woman who stared at her with amazement tinged with reverent respect. She was even taller than her, her face was hidden behind an illusory disguise, a very good one by the way, but most importantly, she had a mark that allowed the aristocrat to recognize her as an servant of the Creeping Chaos. The third individual was the most interesting. At first she thought it was an elf-blooded tiefling, but then she saw that it was translucent and floating in the air. Unimaginable power emanated from him, and there was pure evil in his eyes. She liked him immediately. When he noticed that she saw him, he looked surprised, then bowed and signaled her to remain silent.

“I heard about you, Adora told me about your meeting on Icarus. Catra said, wrinkling her nose slightly. She forgot to use smell suppressants. She sensed distrust in her eyes. Did she suspect something? But before she could answer the feline woman, she felt a painful burst of magic, not as bad as She- Ra's , but still painful like any Etherian magic, and Glimmer appeared next to her.

“Oh, I have a great idea. We'll make dinner together! I invited your father too! Oh, who are you?” The Queen looked at her surprised.

Shadow Weaver has been underinformed again.

Lady Ka sometimes thought that the Lord Admiral should get himself a butler or an adjutant. Actually, Commander Reese had been his adjutant before he became Commander, but he had been promoted and, to her regret, he had performed his duties well. Although if the Lord Admiral wasn't such a damn handsome guy, she would have had a lot more objections. On the other hand, the whole ritual was not about getting dressed, but about an excuse to discuss matters that were important to both of them. And there have been quite a lot of them recently.

“It seems Lady Cala hasn't been completely honest with us...” she muttered to the Lord Admiral, straightening his cuffs. They were getting ready for a formal dinner, during which they could learn some Etherian customs and get to know each other better. The problem was that there were several people invited who were not expected to be there.

“To be honest, I didn't expect anything else. Nobody, who goes to such a place without hiding any secrets. However, I had no idea that Miss Daisy could come from this planet and, in addition, be someone who played such an important role in the history of this planet... And in the life of my daughter. However, it must be admitted that it explains a lot. It's no wonder that an aristocrat like Lady Cala decided to go on this expedition. The only question is how aware she was of her mentor's true nature. If so, it means that he is a much more calculating and ambitious person than we thought. And much more dangerous. For now, we have to pretend to be more unaware than we are." The Lord Admiral said thoughtfully. She nodded and said, smiling sarcastically.

"In the case of our Ashurk, it would be quite difficult. Good thing this idiot has no idea about anything important."

"Distribute the truth according to competence." Antares said thoughtfully. "But what does the Aristocrat want? Rather, among fairy tales we can include stories about the desire to experience adventure and get to know the place where one comes from. However, there remains the question of this gift. What could he be... If Miss Daisy is indeed the Shadow Weaver, she may have come here to take revenge on my daughter and her fiancée.. We cannot allow this under any circumstances!" said the Lord Admiral with the promise of a slow and painful death. "But as for the other inhabitants of Etheri… Well, I'm very sorry for what will happen to them." he added in a gentler tone.

Lady Ka tried to keep a straight face. Would she try to save the new kitten if that grim sorceress tried to kill it? She wasn't sure about the answer to this question/=. After all, this way she would solve most of her problems and her hands would still be clean. At least in the Admiral's eyes. New kitty, this Catra was undoubtedly smart and very dangerous. And her claws... She tried very hard not to touch the mask... Could she count on her being allowed to keep her position if necessary? Rather unlikely, although it would also depend on what the Lord Admiral's plan was. Perhaps he will direct events so that the girl has no choice. As he said, both war and politics were largely about creating order out of chaos, and this planet was a veritable melting pot.

Right after an overly long breakfast with her boss's daughter and an irritating conversation with the purple-haired idiot, she decided to look around the palace. The guards were vigilant and watching her, but since she was part of the entourage of their commander's father, they didn't really know how to deal with her, so they didn't stop her wherever she went... But she wasn't sure if there was even a single place in this castle which she would like to visit. In fact, she has never been to any palace or castle, apart from the absurd and grotesque residence of Jantar. She was a city girl and the city was her element, her natural environment, her feeding ground. What was she supposed to do in the fucking queen's abode. Picking up damn princesses? If they were all like that purple-haired nosy idiot, then she'd say thank to this idea, she wasn't that desperate and she respected herself too much. So she had to use simpler methods. She could read lips and had good hearing, and the servants here liked to gossip as much as anyone else. She also had some hard currency and gadgets for bribes and gifts, and she knew the basics of hacking, so she could break into private computers without much effort... Although, as it later turned out, the inhabitants of Etheria did not know the concept of digital security. Well, their loss. She learned the most by eavesdropping on the kitchen helpers' conversations. The cook even offered her soup, claiming that it looked unhealthy. She was pale, a bit emaciated, and the only visible eye was bloodshot and puffy, but let's be honest. Who is a normal person who offers soup to strangers? She probably wanted to drug her to get information from her. And even if she didn't, she still couldn't bring herself to eat something she hadn't prepared herself. The price of being raised by Jantar, or perhaps the price of wisdom, depends on how you look at it. So she poured the contents of the soup into the fountain, but first she asked the woman about this and that. She was talkative and suspiciously protective, probably trying to get her into bed, but at least she learned some interesting things. First of all, Lady Cala and Asindesa Di Vir arrived at the castle . They were alone without an entourage and it was unknown whether they knew about the Lord Admiral's arrival. They kept the entire expedition a secret, although not very secret. Neither Prime's heirs nor the Hellknights had noteworthy intelligence. She also learned something else. Apparently something happened in the castle at night. Some sort of burglary, sabotage, or maybe even an attempt to kidnap the queen. They claimed that some sort of People's Rebellion was responsible for this, although there was a thought in the back of her mind that she decided to keep to herself for now.

“I wonder how much our noble knight knows and understands? Maybe we should ask her about it? I'm sure she has something to do with that dark sorceress.” she said, tying the scarf behind the Lord Admiral's neck.

“Hell Knights are widely known for fraternizing with the forces of Darkness to achieve goals that further their cause. The Order of the Eclipse may not do this as often as other orders, but I have seen knights and men-at-arms go into battle alongside Devils and the undead.” Said the commander of the Fearless Armada thoughtfully. “I don't criticize them for that. In war, you must do what is necessary to win. Especially in the war we were fighting. When you face an opponent like the Swarm, you cannot hesitate to use even the most terrible weapons. However, if the Order is associated with the Shadow Weaver, or rather the Shadow Weaver is associated with the Order... This will be the second time they have withheld important information from us, and worse still, we still don't know what they are hiding from us. We cannot tolerate this.” Anteres voice became hard, almost angry. She didn't tell her commander that they too had withheld important information, perhaps even much more important information, from the rest of the fleet. Her boss was an understanding man, but she preferred not to abuse this understanding.

“There is something else, from what I heard, there was an incident here at night. The locals suspect that the opposition to the Queen, some People's Rebellion or something is responsible for this, but I have my suspicions. Something tells me your other daughter may have been responsible for this. – She said, helping her commander put on his shoes, although she would take them off before sitting down at the table. So it was a waste of time, and he usually dealt with it himself, but she decided to take advantage of the opportunity and talk to her commander for a while.

“On what basis did you draw such an interesting conclusion?” the Lord Admiral asked with obvious interest in his voice.

“Mainly based on hunch. We know that they went to the zone and that your old friend Doctor Sidonius, who has always been fascinated by the First Ones is helping them hide. And in the entire region there is no place more interesting than Etheria. It may be a large planet, but such a break-in suits both my sister and... your younger daughter.”

The Lord Admiral thought for a long moment before speaking.

“We need to get the girl back into our hands as soon as possible. Not just because of the artifact. She is the blood of my blood. I can't let her forget her destiny. Our bloodline will be safer with both of them. Besides, maybe one day her sister will need support. Right hand. Someone who will be willing to do things that she officially cannot afford.”

Someone like me, Lady Ka thought bitterly. The Lord Admiral looked at her mysteriously, as if he had read her thoughts, and said.

“Getting her back is not a priority right now. It is not worth chasing two hares at the same time, because you will be hungry in the evening. If you're right and the girl is here, she won't be leaving this planet any time soon. Especially if she knows about her sister... I wonder what she's looking for here, or rather what the Doctor is looking for here... It doesn't matter now anyway. The girl will fall into our hands sooner or later. Just remember.” his voice now became very cold, a bit growly, threatening. “Not even the slightest harm can come to her. Whatever you do to her, you will receive tenfold. The same applies to her companions, as long as they are not Tarak shadows ... Although you can beat them up a bit, but I will need them as... a way of pressuring her to listen to our commands more willingly.”

“What about my sister... That traitorous bitch.” she drawled, barely able to control her fury. The Lord Admiral almost smiled as he said.

“You serve me faithfully, let her life be your reward...”

She smiled with the visible half of her mouth, extremely cruel, even for her.

Chapter End Notes

And again I divide the chapter into two parts. Please leave your comments and opinions.

Discussions at the table, part two.

> And here is a new chapter. I hope Adora didn't come off as too much of a taciturn here. Feel free to comment and give feedback.

She was very happy that they are returning to Etheria. This stay on Icarus went badly from the beginning. First, Perfuma was exhausted of bringing the land back to life, then she had a fight with those strange kids, although that ended quite happily. They also met Wrong Hordak. She knew that the clone had set out a few years ago on a great expedition to discover what lay beyond the Empire. Catra was very skeptical and suggested that Hordak wanted to get rid of his younger brother to be alone with Entrapta. However, it turned out that he came back safe and sound... and very nicely dressed! But then they met this beautiful woman, Lady Cala . She didn't even look at them when she talked to Adora , but she still made a stunning impression on her... She was so... Distinguished. Yes, that's the right word. She was like Glimmer, only much more so. But after a while, Queen Angela appeared... She turned out to be a pirate and said she wanted to kill Adora . She had never met the Queen before, only knowing her from Horde propaganda materials, which were... Well, far from the truth. But she was sure she wasn't that kind of person. Someone who would be ready to burn down an entire city along with its inhabitants. This… this was like when she served in the Horde. On Hordak's, Shadow Weaver’s and... Catra’s orders they did many terrible things, although she found out about many of them only after the war... But Queen Angela would never hurt anyone innocent, she was Glimmer's mother and the fearless leader of the rebellion. Even Hordak had begrudging respect for her. After they repelled the pirates, Lady Cala came with a dead baby in her arms. She said that Queen Angela murdered them to escape from the aristocrat. Then the most amazing thing in her life happened, and she experienced many amazing things, such as becoming a princess and meeting the most wonderful woman in the world. Adora used She-Ra's power to bring her back to life. She had heard from Glimmer that something similar had happened during Catra's release from Horde Prime's ship, though Catra denied it.

Cala then told the story of Angela, or rather Captain Moonshadow. It wasn't a happy story, she wouldn't wish this fate on anyone. She didn't understand everything the woman was talking about. What was the Azlanti Empire? Why did they imprison the queen? And who needed new empires? But then Adora got scared, said something about the shadow of the moon, and disappeared in a flash of light. Immediately afterwards, Lady Cala had to leave with her friends, leaving them alone to deal with all the commotion. First they had to calm down the guards because several of them became hysterical. They shouted that the great She-Ra had abandoned them for their sins and now they were all condemned . They tried to calm them down, which wasn't easy, apparently the fact that Adora saved that child made them worship her even more... Almost like the Clones worshiped Horde Prime ... Not only the clones, she knew something about it too... She felt sorry for her friend, who never wanted to be treated this way, hated to be worshipped like a deity... Fortunately, she managed to calm the guards down, although it required a lot of hugging and talking in a quiet, calm voice about how Adora wasn't mad at them and they were doing a great job. As soon as they managed to deal with one problem, more soldiers came, this time much less friendly, and a sad lady intelligence officer. Perfuma was a bit scared, but she knew well how to talk to officers, after all, she was one of them herself. The interrogation lasted several hours, but finally the republic's authorities decided they had no more questions and let them go, although fortunately no one brought up the topic of Queen Angela. Maybe that's what they should have been worried about after all... They were escorted to Darla right after. Fortunately, because the terrified inhabitants of the city took to the streets talking about Prime's return or the appearance of an invasion fleet from outside the Empire. She wished she could explain everything to them, but she didn't really know what she should say. She wanted to turn to her wife to help her calm down the situation, Perfuma always knew what to say to make others feel happy, but this time she was exhausted and depressed, so she thought it would be best if they left as soon as possible.

She always felt unsecure on board of Darla. She was always a bit clumsy and sometimes broke things by accident. In the Fright Zone it didn't matter much anyway, because everything was falling apart anyway, but it was the Darla , an ancient First Ones ship, probably the last one of its kind in the world. If something breaks in it, it will break for good, maybe Entrapta will be able to fix it, only then she will have to explain to her friend that she damaged her thousands-year-old ship. Darla herself wasn't helping her either. The ship was mainly obediend Entrapta and Adora, although it was instructed to also obey her and her wife's orders... Only it did so very reluctantly. After these few years, Darla developed quite a peculiar... personality. She became very grumpy, snarky and generally rude... at least to her. She felt like he resented her for being a scorpion. She wasn't sure what had happened between the First Ones, Mara, and her people, but it had made Darla not very nice to her.

What worried her most was Perfuma's condition. Her wife was grimm, even gloomy, not like her. She tried to comfort her, first she suggested a game night, and when she refused, she suggested another form of relaxation... But she didn't want to do that either... Finally, being seriously worried, she made her the herbal tea she always liked. They were flying in a relatively safe part of space, so she could leave the piloting to Darla, although she snorted and started grumbling about everything falling on her head. Perfuma smiled gratefully at her and thanked her. She sat down next to her and asked in a concerned voice.

Her wife looked at her with sadness in her eyes and sighed.

„I had a dream. I saw a destroyed planet there. A man who sang about suffering and... the embodiment of kindness and friendship. She introduced herself as Hylax. She warned me. I don't know if it's true, maybe it was just a dream, but these kids talked about it too... and about this planet, because it was their home. I saw their home. Destroyed.” she looked at her, fear and despair in her eyes. “Destroyed by the Hunger That Cannot Be Satiated”.

„Dinner with your father is not something I thought would happen to me.” Adora said, combing her hair. She smiled and replied to her fiancée.

„I never thought I would take part in it either...„ she said with gloomy resignation in her voice. “I've always been an orphan from the Fright Zone, and I can't think of myself as having a family. It was just you and me. Two girls together against the world, although now rather wandering through the world together. It won't be like this anymore... I'm not sure whether to be happy about it.” she turned to her beloved and looked into her eyes, in which she saw comforting joy.

„Find something good in it. Now you will have someone to lead you to the wedding.„ she said. On Etheri, young couples were usually led by their parents, or someone who played a similar role in their lives, to encourage them in their final declaration of love in the moonlight.

„I thought about asking Mikah to lead me and Glimmer together, but I figured I shouldn't take up her moment. Besides you, then you would be alone, so I thought we would be together. We will lead ourselves to the wedding, right?” she smiled, as if amused by what she said. But she soon became serious. „ Now you will be alone while I... „ she looked at Adora's eyes and saw pain in them. Her dearest always secretly dreamed that she had a family somewhere out there in the universe. Parents who mourn a child taken from them by Light Hope, or at least her compatriots. At the same time, she was very afraid of it because of what terrible things the First Ones had done to Etheria and the Galaxy. But now she, her beloved, has found her family, even though she never wanted it. „You know, I think I should have refused him... „ She said with guilt in her voice, but Adora put her hand on her shoulder and said.

„That would be stupid... Just because I'm alone... That doesn't mean you have to, too. Think about it in a practical way. Glimmer wanted you to bond with him because he might be needed. Anyway, I can always ask Lady Cala."

She grimaced and said.

„I don't like her... There's something about her... It makes the hairs on the back of my neck stand on end. And, I know this sounds stupid, but I don't like the smell of it. I've inhaled many stenches in the Fright Zone, but this one is much worse. Not even disgusting, just… Inappropriate… Unnatural. Nobody should smell like that." she shuddered. Her meeting with Lady Cala Grayskull was short. Right after they exchanged the first pleasantries, Glimmer showed up and invited her to dinner. Immediately after that, Catra went to her office to read reports of recent events and give orders to the guards to improve the security of the castle, and she also wanted to draw up an order to hire someone to take care of securing the computers, but she didn't have time because she had to get ready for this dinne , although due to the last expedition she was terribly behind in work. "You know, it's weird, but I have the impression that lady inch smells a bit like Shogi . Not identical, but somehow similar." she said, and Melog looked up as she mentioned Frosta's shapeshifting friend. Her companion was sleeping on the couch, listening intently. He didn't like Lady Cala either. He claimed that it exuded something evil that should not exist in this world, although he did not explain exactly what. But she was sure she agreed with him.

„Do you think it's related to her? To Shadow Weaver? That she is a ward just like us? That we should help her, maybe even save her?„ she asked her beloved. Adora thought for a moment before answering.

„ I'm not sure. She is… very beautiful and strong and educated. He has everything that I will never have, no matter how hard I try.

She rolled her eyes and huffed in irritation.

„Don't go back to "I'm not good enough" again, okay?„ She walked up to her and took her face in her hands and added „ You're the best, not only for me... Damn, I'm starting to hate this woman for making you think so.„ she kissed her beloved. When they broke apart, Adora added thoughtfully.

„I don't know what her relationship with Shadow Weaver might be like, but she definitely didn't treat her like she treated us. Lady Cala is strong and confident. There is not an ounce of fear and uncertainty that she instilled in us. I envy her a bit. But I feel like if Shadow Weaver could create a ward from scratch, it would be just like her. Plus lack of conscience and ruthlessness. If she could, she would probably add claws and some monstrous powers.” She smiled at the last mention, and Catra grimaced.

„Yes, then she would be a real mommy's girl.” and they started giggling, although it wasn't actually funny. They sat on the bed and she rested her head on Adora's shoulder and began to purr. Melog rested his head on his lap. After a while, her beloved asked in a low voice

„What do you think about your father?”

She grimaced. Earlier, she had repeated to Adora a condensed version of what she had learned from the Lord Admiral. Her beloved listened carefully to the entire story in silence. She didn't comment a word on what she had learned, waiting for her opinion. Only she didn't know what to think about it all.

„I don't know, to be honest. He seems to be a strong and dangerous individual. He also has a majesty to him that Hordak or even Horde Prime could have” dreamed of... His story also explains a lot about my story. Why am I so fit and always ready to fight..

„And you know what's best about all this?” said Adora, smiling slyly.

„What?„ she asked suspiciously.

„That now you are a princess too!”

„I'll scratch your eyes out for this insult.” She playfully pretended to scratch Adora's face and then kissed her beloved again. But then, in a flash of light, Glimmer appeared.

„ Scorpia and Perfuma just arrived... I didn't interrupt anything, did I?

She had to admit that she hated spaceflight. Being locked in a dead piece of metal in the middle of a cold, dark void. However, she loved visiting other planets, so full of life, unknown and wonderful, and meeting their inhabitants, learning their customs and traditions. The problem, of course, was that you couldn't visit other planets without going into space. So she had to endure this inconvenience and until now she had managed somehow, but this time it was really hard. First of all , Darla was extremely rude to Scorpia this time . She was convinced that the AI was deliberately taking advantage of her shyness because she was afraid of damaging or offending the ship as it was partially owned by her best friend. In fact, she wondered if Darla was jealous of Entrapta, or maybe it was Hordak's bad influence? She wanted to yell at her in private, but she didn't feel well. Her spouse thought it was because of what happened with Adora and Angela , which was partially true, but that wasn't the only thing. There was this dream, a terrible one ... but she was also afraid that it held far too much truth. At first she hoped it was just a nightmare caused by the exhaustion of earth healing, but then she met those kids. They were militant, yet they emanated so much pain... They lost their planet. Their world, everything they had. They had nothing left behind them. It was difficult to imagine such a tragedy. For them, the inhabitants of Etheria, not to mention Icarus, the war was terrible, but at least they won it. They had something to rebuild, something to return to. They... There were no words to describe what she felt looking at them. She wanted to ask them about the Swarm, what it was and how to fight it, but how could she ask the victims about who would hurt them? She might have to do it after all. She knew a little about the Swarm from this Hylax, and she had seen a little in her dreams, but it wasn't enough. She needed to find out more, even though she hated talking or even thinking about the war. However, before she had the opportunity to learn more, there was a clash with Queen Angela, who for some reason wanted to kill Adora . She didn't understand anything about what happened then, but she didn't even have a chance to think about it because pirates attacked them. She had to fight a little furry creature that would have been cute under any other circumstances, but now it just wanted to chop her to pieces. They managed to fend them off, but then Lady Cala brought in this dead baby that Adora somehow saved, and then they all left and they had to deal with all the chaos. Only then could they make their way back to Etheria.

On board Darla, she talked to her Wife about her dream, but she couldn't tell her everything she saw? She didn't know the words to describe the horror she experienced then. She has always loved beauty and peace, the harmony between all living things. And that was doom roaming through the universe like the Galactic Horde, only unstoppable. How could she tell her friends that there was another evil in the universe, as terrible as the one that had cost them so much to defeat. Adora would probably want to face the Swarm immediately, no matter what it would cost her. She had to return to Plumeria and think everything over, meditate in peace, trying to unite with the universe, to find out the answers to the questions that bothered her.

She was not allowed to rest in peace. First they had to go to Brightmoon, in case Adora hadn't returned yet, to tell Glimmer the news about her mother. As soon as they landed, the Queen appeared next to them. Who, hugging them, called joyfully.

„Great to have you here. I have to take you to the castle soon so you can freshen up, because we don't have much time! I invite you to a joint, solemn and official dinner with Catra's dad!”

She liked the idea of having dinner together more and more. Not only that. She will get to know their new guests better and will also have the opportunity to confront them with each other. She was genuinely curious about who the other members of the Fleet were, especially Lady Cala. The aristocrat fit perfectly into what Adora had said about her... She looked like... Like She-Ra... If she were an ordinary human and not a magical being in Adora's body... I guess... No one was really sure who or what she actually was… is She-Ra… All they learned was that she had existed long before the First Ones arrived, perhaps since forever. One day they will have to discover the truth, but was it safe to dig into the secrets of the past again? She knew all too well what evil they could reveal... And Lady Cala was so... similar to what She-Ra was supposed to look like according to old drawings and traditional legends, that if she had shown up in Brightmoon six years ago, dressed appropriately and claiming to be She-Ra, no one would doubt that she was telling the truth. And that was what made her not trust her in the slightest.

Dinner, or rather supper-dinner, was served around seven o'clock... It was strange, but she couldn't believe that not even twenty-four hours had passed since it all started. The servants did not prepare a sumptuous feast because she did not want to bother them too much with unannounced work. So all that was served was soup of seafood and cream, and chickpea meatballs, along with cider and fruit... although she had an irresistible craving for sauerkraut, as sharply sour as an axe. so she ordered it to be served too. The Lord Admiral arrived with Lady Ka, Lady Cala and Asindesa Di Vir. She also invited her aunt, who also brought her assistant, this damn tall woman named Nightgale .

There was also Entrapta, who decided to stay in Brightmoon, clearly fascinated by the guests. With her came that strange ant with ribbons on her head, although she didn't actually invite her, but she preferred not to ask her leave, because apparently she also played some role in the Lord Admiral's entourage, although she had no idea what. There were of course Scorpia and Perfuma who had just arrived. They looked very tired, especially Perfuma. She wasn't sure if she had done the right thing by inviting them right after such a long journey, before they had time to rest, but on the other hand, it was inappropriate for her not to invite them to such an extremely important meeting. They were very happy to learn that they would meet Catra's father, although the fact that he was not a feline creature surprised them, and Scorpia stiffened at the sight of the uniform. She immediately saw that there was tension between the Lord Admiral, the Lady of Blades, and Lady Cala , although the blonde beauty was more composed than the other two.

At first they just talked about ordinary, unimportant things. The atmosphere was nice and cheerful. Entrapta was eating her Falafels, which had been cut into small pieces by someone with a good head on their shoulders. She sat staring at her datapad , while the ant that introduced itself as Ashurk stared at its smaller datapad, chirping incoherently with its mandibles, and took photos and videos of everyone. She has already asked her three times when they are going to install the network in her castle. Lady Ka sat next to the Lord Admiral, but did not eat anything, keeping one eye on the other guests.

„Child? What Child?... Aah, that Child, that mine... Everything is fine with it. Hordak loves taking care of it. He's a really wonderful father, you know?” she said with pure delight.

„Is your husband the former commander of the local Horde? Very interesting. I should meet him sometime. I would talk to him about the Horde, like leader to leader.” said the Lord Admiral.

„There are many clones on Etheri that you could talk to, Lord Admiral.” she said, but Entrapta interrupted .

„Oh, that's wonderful, because very rarely does anyone visit us. We will welcome you with joy ! – Entrapta exclaimed with pure delight. He grimaced because she was right. Because of her husband, they visited her far too rarely.

„Hordak, unlike other clones, knows quite a lot about command, so the information he has may prove particularly valuable, because most enemies of both, the Etherians and my fleet, are Horde Prime's former "little brothers".” Catra's father said

"However, Hordak..." she began, her tone sharp, but Bow interrupted her

„He has been loyal to the kingdom of Etheria for five years and so far has not given us the slightest reason to suspect him of anything, and of all the clones, he has the most reason to oppose Prime's heirs , so he will be happy to help you .

She glared at her fiancé because she hated being interrupted, but after a while she realized that he was right. Whatever she thought of the former ruler of the Etherian Horde, he hated Horde Prime more than anyone else, and according to both Horde Ultimate and the Heavenly Brothers, he was a traitor who deserved a slow and painful death. She nodded, and then for a full fifteen minutes Entrapta told everyone about her new castle, Beast Island, her husband, and her Child, in that exact order. Finally the Lord Admiral turned to his daughter.

„I see you don't drink alcohol.” the Lord Admiral asked his daughter, pointing to the cup of milk in the feline girl's hand, who smiled sadly.

„After Horde Prime chipped me, I don't like anything that would cloud my mind. But even before that I avoided alcohol. The woman who raised us, Shadow Weaver, was a mean drunk. I prefer not to follow her example in any matter.” she said firmly.

Then Glimmer noticed that two people seemed moved at the sound of the gloomy Sorceress's name. One of them was her aunt, which was understandable. Her relationship with Hordak's Right Hand Man was complicated. On the one hand, she had great respect for her, but on the other, she didn't forgive her for what she did to Mikah ... But why did the hell knight also react? Although she kept a straight face, her hand twitched and she almost spilled the soup.

„Speaking of alcohol abuse, apparently your mentor, Miss Daisy, also had a drinking problem, am I right, Lady Cala?" Lady Ka unexpectedly joined the discussion. Lady Cala nodded sadly and said.

„You are indeed very well informed, Lady Ka. I regret to admit that you are right. She had a serious problem, but unfortunately I couldn't force her to do anything. After all, she had quite a difficult character. How did she fare on your quest, Lady of Blades?" The aristocrat smiled friendly at the knight.

„I can't say a single bad word about Miss Daisy. She was a great comrade in arms who saved my life." Asindesa said firmly. Everyone returned to less interesting topics again, although she noticed that there was now tension at the table. So she decided to make a toast. But first she helped herself to a portion of cabbage.

„I didn't know you liked pickles. You were always the, you know, sweets lover." Adora asked, looking at her with surprise.

„And I've been having cravings lately, which is a bit strange because I usually feel nauseous in the morning." she said, reaching for a mug of cider.

„I don't know if you should drink alcohol now." said Catra, looking at her in a very strange way.

„What do you mean?" She asked, completely not understanding what her friend was getting at.

„ What she means is that you shouldn't drink alcohol because you're pregnant. Don't worry you didn't tell us about it. I've known about it since yesterday, thanks to the bioscanner... But you knew you are pregnant, right?" Entrapta said with an innocent smile. There was absolute silence at the table . The first to interrupt it was the Lord Admiral.

Congratulations Queen Glimmer. I hope your offspring will be healthy, although you seem surprised that you are pregnant.

- No, I just... - she said somewhat unconsciously. She and Bow had been trying to have a baby together, but she never imagined it would happen so suddenly....

Bow hugged her tightly, and she touched her belly tenderly.

Like an idiotic romantic comedy, Calamity thought with disdain when she heard the big news, although she had to admit that the Lord Admiral had managed to get out of this absurd situation brilliantly. She had to admit that this man made a very good impression on her. He was one of the few mortals who commanded her respect. She felt strength in him, as unshakable as a rock facing a storm. He radiated the pride of someone who fully deserved it. He was not bound by the ordinary morality that shackled the rest of common people, but he was able to play by it, transforming it into both a weapon and a shield. How such a human could be a father of Spawn like Catra was beyond her understanding, but she had an idea that she might implement in the future, if it was the will of the Creeping Chaos!

"In what rite will your and Adora's wedding take place?" The Lord Admiral asked after a while.

"I think normally, under the moons, like everywhere on Etheri. Apparently on Eridani or Ikarus they invoke some kind of powerful beings, gods or something like that. It's such a local quirk of theirs. - Catra said, stroking the bizarre shape-shifting creature behind her ear. She hadn't seen it before because it was invisible. Were animals allowed to have pets on this ridiculous planet?

„Gods are widely worshiped throughout the galaxy, and sometimes they return the favor, but usually they only wish to follow the ideals they embody. Our family has followed the teachings of Abbadar, Talavet and Lissala for centuries. But it's your wedding and it will take place according to your and your fiancée's desires.“ The Lord Admiral said and Glimmer answer in a confused voice.

„I thought these were just metaphors and myths, but you seem to take them seriously... Is your title, Hell Knight, also a reference to these matters to some extent?” the queen said to the Lady, who considered her answer, although Calamity knew well that the locals would not like any of her answers.

„Hell is a place that embodies tyranny, ruthless order at all costs. We, the Hellknights, are connected to Hell, not because we want to introduce its ideals to the mortal world, but because it is a lesser evil that we can use to fight a greater evil. However, each knight must be victorious in the fight against the devil from hell to prove that he is immune to corruption by dark forces.„ explained the knight of hell. Most of the crowd looked at her uncertainly, but after a moment Catra asked.

„Shadow Weaver once summoned a being that turned her into what she was. I recently found out that this being is called the Light Eater and is the Avatar of some Nyarlathotep or something... Is he one of those devils?”

Calamity almost burst into laughter filled with the sincerest joy when she saw the look on Asindesa Di Vir's face. It was so beautiful to see her just realize that the woman she was clearly in love with was a servant of the enemy she had sworn to fight against. She could actually taste her suffering... It was so delicious!

„No... „ The Lady of Blades began to speak in a dead, grave voice. “Nyarlathotep are something else. The Great Outer God, the Creeping Chaos, is an ancient being beyond mortal understanding. They are the Greater Evil against whom we swore to fight.”

No one except her fully understood what had happened, which only increased her joy. Finally the Lord Admiral said.

„I have a great request for you, Queen Glimmer, as well as for my daughter, because she is the Grand Marshal of your Army. In connection with the wedding, I would like to request that some of my soldiers and ships come here to ensure safety during this event.

All the Etherians' jaws dropped, and then Entrapta exclaimed happily.

„Of course we invite you, especially your ships!”

Glimmer looked at her in disbelief, then spoke firmly to Antares .

„We don't agree to this! In no case!”

Catra addressed the Lord Admiral in a much gentler voice.

„Lord... Father, understand, this planet has suffered a lot at the hands of those who invaded it from space. The sight of your troops can cause real panic.”

Antares looked at everyone with a serious voice and began to speak.

„I will speak bluntly. I have no doubt that you know how to wage war on your home planet, but you have no idea about war in space. I saw your fleet formation, or lack thereof. This wedding is the perfect opportunity to attack, you are unable to keep my daughter safe. Although Prime's heirs are not as formidable an enemy as, for example, the Swarm, they are still dangerous. And besides, if you are thinking about an alliance with us, and I'm sure such a thought has crossed Queen Glimmer's mind, then our soldiers need to get to know each other in order to start cooperation.”

Glimmer wiped her forehead and said in a tired voice.

„Okay, I'll think about your proposal...”

Perfuma suddenly spoke up .

„What is the Swarm? There was tension and even fear in her voice.”

“The Swarm…” the Lord Admiral said thoughtfully. „This is the greatest plague of the Galaxy. A Hunger That Cannot Be Satiated. A living fleet guided by hive mind, traversing the universe to consume everything in its path. Fortunately, it is unlikely that it will come to this place.”

I would not be so sure. Calamity thought joylessly

In the shine of enchanted moons

Chapter Notes

Here is the next chapter. I would like to ask for your comments and opinions. What do you think about Nightgale?

After dinner, everyone prepared to return to their rooms, but first they all went out to the terrace to look at the stars. Everyone who wanted was brought a cup of mulled wine or hot chocolate, if they wanted it. The Queen cuddled up to her almost-husband, staring at the stars, lost in happy thoughts about the future. Nightgale would normally feel a pang of jealousy, her physiology was complicated and she never knew it well, Unfortunately no one could examine her because she didn't know anyone knowledgeable enough in the field that she could trust enough to reveal her true identity. Now she found this information very interesting and potentially troublesome for Lonnie, because the popularity of queens and princesses always increased when they were expecting children, and any attacks against them were met with a furious response from their subjects. This news completely changed the balance of power. Glimmer already had support in and around Brightmoon, and now support for the rebellion will completely disappeared. They don't actually do anything, but rather by doing something very pleasant, it has wiped out almost all their successes. If she didn't want to make things worse, Lonnie would have to rethink all her plans. But that was the least important news. The arrival of a war fleet from outside the empire completely changed the balance of power on the planet. She knew that Horde Prime's Empire had not conquered the entire universe, after all, the cultists were in contact with their master, who knew the truth... In its purest sense. But meeting people from there was something completely different. Meet those who did not know the fear of the mad tyrant, although as it turned out, they brought their own nightmares with them. The Lord Admiral was a formidable man, a true warrior, born to rule others, trained from childhood to be a Leader, not an accidental warmaster like her… father. His army was not like Etheria 's . None of the princesses wanted war, and deep down Lonnie didn't want it either, and she certainly didn't want the kind of war this man could give them. Perhaps Comrade General should seriously consider signing an armistice or some other agreement, their greatest victory was not achieved thanks to military actions, but to political intrigues that were not even their work. The most important thing, however, was that Antares was Catra's father. For this reason alone, they should seriously consider again the goals they want to achieve. Until now, bringing justice to Catra had been one of the main demands of the People's Rebellion, at least for Lonnie, although everyone realized that the chances of its implementation were low, but now they have dropped to almost Zero. If Comrade General continues to pursue her personal vendetta, it could bring doom to them all. Although on the other hand, the fact that Catra is the daughter of a military leader outside Etheria with unclear and potentially hostile intentions towards their home could be used in their propaganda...

Catra has a father… It wasn't something either of them expected. Although she had heard some of Dr. Moors' recent hints about the Grand Marshal's origins, she had previously considered them of little importance... However, they turned out to be upending the balance of power on the planet. But was this news so important from the point of view of her true master? It was hard to say, anyway, as she looked at the Lord Admiral with a hint of a smile as he watched Catra, who was sipping hot chocolate with Adora, she felt the bitterness pulsating in her heart, for she was sure she would never experience anything like that.

The situation was different with the second guest who came to Brightmoon . Lady Cala seemed to be everything they had been promised, though now that she had finally arrived, she felt a strange uneasiness at seeing her feasting with Glimmer and the rest of the guests, who were completely unaware of her true, monstrous nature. She was just starting to realize what they had brought to Etheria and she wasn't sure she liked it. She felt something like remorse, but now it was far too late for any doubts. She suspected that Lady Cala knew she was a servant of the Creeping Chaos by the way she looked at her. However, she was sure that she did not even remotely suspect who her parents were, and considering the way she spoke about Shadow Weaver, it was better for her not to find out the truth for now. Well, unlike most of Etheria's inhabitants, she knew it was not wise to risk the wrath of the gods, even the half-blood ones….

"Since you performed the ritual, I'm more and more concerned about being trapped on my small, backwater planet. You can't even imagine how boring it would be to spend centuries locked in my prison. Days after days, one like the other, and the only hope for freedom are those who found those damn mirrors. However, most of them disappoint me." said Aaravos, who was floating in the air with his hands under his head. He stayed elsewhere throughout the dinner, but when he returned, it turned out that he was perfectly informed about what had happened during his absence. Could he access her memory? It was a disturbing thought.

"Has my mother disappointed you too?" she asked in a sour tone. Aaravos thought for a long moment before giving her his answer.

"To some extent, yes, but not entirely. She performed the ritual as I wanted her to, but then she broke off all contact with me, and this could have cost us all a lot, as you have probably already guessed. If only she would renew our contact…. Everything could have turned out completely differently. However, you have to accept reality as it is. It's a pity that I still know so little about what really happened here... we all know too little, unfortunately, but maybe when I meet your Mother, I will get the answers I need, and the unnamed darkness knows how much I need them. My plots on Xadia turned out to be too successful, and even if I am released, without anyone's help, hundreds of years will have to pass before the inhabitants of my planet go to the stars, and that is definitely too long, especially if my creators want to return, and as we see, they have already taken some steps." he said, looking at Adora, who took a large sip and kissed Catra . "it's very strange to see another She-Ra. I didn't think they would try the same idea twice, but if it's a good idea, why not try it again...” Saihe wondered strangely.

“Have you met Mara?” she asked quietly with curiosity

“Mara ? No, we haven't met, I haven't talked to the previous real She-Ra either, although due to a certain... project in which I participated, I know quite a lot about her.”

She blinked several times in surprise.

“The previous real She-Ra? What do you mean?” she asked curiously. The love of secrets was in her blood. Aaravos laughed, and there was so much evil and wickedness in that laugh that she felt her soul tingle.

“Sweet child of spring. You don't know so much about the history of your planet... In its own way, it says a lot about the memory of mortal beings.” he said thoughtfully. She was about to ask him to explain what he meant, but then she heard a beautiful, resonant voice behind her.

“Hi... Your name is Nightgale, right? I cannot devote too much time to you so as not to attract the attention of nosy and uninitiated people. Let me just say that I am very pleased to meet someone who serves such noble lords... or has such great friends.” Lady Cala said, smiling serenely at her and slightly bowing to Aaravos. She felt a strange twinge of jealousy when she saw the saihe sorcerer respond to the woman with a polite bow. Until now, she believed that she was the only person who could see him. Now it turns out that she is not the only one. But on the other hand, could she blame such a creature for knowing her secrets? Her father know everything after all. She also bowed to her and spoke softly.

“It's a real honor for me to meet you. We've been waiting for you for so long.”

The creature hiding behind the face of the beautiful girl leaned towards her and whispered almost tenderly into her ear.

“I know you're something different than you seem, but I'm not sure who yet. But I can't wait to get to know you more personally.” she said and kissed her on the cheek.

“It was a very busy day, considering that we were officially just relaxing.” said Lady Ka to the Lord Admiral, who was drinking his second cup of mulled wine. Usually, her commander avoided alcohol, but this time he indulged a little. He was very pleased, because it must be admitted that his entire stay there turned out to be a great success. He made the right impression on the people of Etheria and, most importantly, on his daughter. They still didn't trust him, of course, the locals weren't as idiots as they seemed, but that was to be expected. It was only a matter of time to gain their favor. They had too many common enemies, and nothing united sentient beings like a common enemy. Although who is whose enemy remains to be seen.

Politics is an activity that requires constant vigilance, because every gesture, every look is a weapon and a shield. It is like a theater, but unlike the pathetic fools that fill Parliaments or councils, a true statesman knows that he can never afford to step out of character, while never forgetting that it is all just a game.” Antares said in the Vesk language, which certainly none of the locals understood.

“It must be admitted that this Shadow Weaver helped you a lot in implementing your plans, although probably unknowingly, unless she is a smarter bitch than we think.” she said, glancing at the Hell Knight

“Doubtful. From what my daughter told me about her, she was intelligent and skilled in dark magic, but she was very easy to give in to impulses and petty desires. Such people are usually not able to plan such complex intrigues... And besides, she had no right to know that whatever was connected between me and her former ward, she probably doesn't guess the truth even now.” Antares explained with a hint of contempt in his voice. Was it on purpose or was the wine speaking through him?

“I'm more and more curious about what happened on Carurystal that made our noble knight more gloomy than usual. Were they very… close friends? Such a weakness for a Hellknight...” Lady Ka had a hard time keeping herself from giggling.

“Everyone has the right to weakness, and love for the wrong person is one of the most difficult to resist. The fact that we sometimes give in to them is not a problem, it is worse when they start to rule our lives.” said her commander seriously.

“Only when you succumb to your weakness, hundreds of thousands die,” thought Lady Ka, but she knew that it would be unwise to say such words.

“Why didn't you tell them about the Starstone... Lady Cala or even that stupid knight could blurt out about it at any time.” she finally asked.

“Lady Cala is not stupid, and I don't think she would want to go against us. She very skillfully confirmed her mentor's identity, while distancing herself from her. Asindesa cannot reveal much, and due to her connections with the dark sorceress, she is not very credible in the eyes of the inhabitants of this planet. Even if one of them revealed the truth about the Artifact, well, better them than me. Given the direction our conversation has taken today, I might come across as greedy.

Lady Ka wasn't sure she liked her boss's reasoning. Before she could say anything, Lady Cala walked up to the queen, who was beaming with sily joy, and said.

“I have an item in my possessions that Mara's daughter took with her to Carurystal. It is a certain stone, similar to the one my ring is made of.” she showed her ring with a red stone interspersed with green metallic veins. “Apparently it's a runestone or something. I would like to give it away, or rather return it to its rightful owners as a wedding gift.”

“Well, thank you very much for your gift.” said the Queen in a gentle voice. The purple-haired idiot looked up and shouted with uncontrollable enthusiasm.

“Runestone! Can I see him? These are incredibly valuable artifacts that made you able...” she didn't finish because Lady Cala interrupted her by speaking in a gentle, soothing voice.

“Unfortunately, I left them at the place where I was staying, but I promise that as soon as I bring them here, you will be able to examine them. However, I have one extremely important question of a legal nature.” the beautiful aristocrat said to the queen, who broke out of her sweet daze and looked at Lady Cala with concern.

“Maybe some of you here don't know yet, but on Icarus we met your mother, Queen Angela . In fact, I traveled with her for some time. However, since your mother is alive, was your coronation Legal and, therefore, does any document you have signed since then have legal power?” the aristocrat spoke in an absolutely innocent voice. “You don't have to answer me now, I just wanted to draw your attention to this fact.” Glimmer bowed helpfully and headed towards her chambers. As she passed them, she gave them a soft, friendly smile. "So we have an unexpected ally," the clone woman thought.

He felt an burst of power and left the hut. He returned to her after his conversation with Shadow Weaver to reflect on everything he had learned. His wife is alive, and so is the woman who destroyed his life. He was able to accept that the dark sorceress was alive, but he still didn't want revenge on her, at least not enough for her to blind him. What was important now was saving Angela, everything else was secondary. But how was he supposed to do it? Especially alone? Shadow Weaver promised to help him afterward, but could he trust her? However, he had no one to ask for help. He couldn't tell Glimmer because the chances of saving Angela were slim, and he couldn't let his daughter go through the Pain of losing her mother again. He couldn't tell Glimmer about it either because of the Shadow Weaver, but even if Glimmer hadn't immediately started teleporting around the planet, alerting everyone to the Dark Sorceress's presence, she would have told Catra everything, and the cat girl's anger which still burn brightly and it could cause old wounds to reopen. Likewise, he couldn't tell any other member of the alliance, because either they herself wouldn't keep a secret from Catra, or their spouse wouldn't. The exceptions were Netossa and Spinnerella, and Huntara, although he didn't know how the latter could help them. However, he could count on Castaspella and Lance and George the most, because none of them would act rashly... For a moment he thought about telling the others about this other girl so similar to Catra and about the Heart Gift., but he decided that it could lead to this anyway that Shadow Weaver is alive, even this AI could make some comment that would reveal too much. No, for now he had to stay silent, although it was hard for him to describe how difficult it was. So he sighed heavily and with great effort put on the cheerful mask that parents so often had to put on for their children, and then went outside to greet Glimmer.

His daughter stared at the starry sky. She looked dreamy, although she looked exhausted. She turned to him, smiling tenderly.

“Do you often stare at the stars, wondering what they might be hiding?” she asked. He looked up for a moment and said.

“Often, both during the day and at night. You see, on Beast Island I haven't seen an open sky for so many years. At first it even made me anxious, but then there was a war and I couldn't afford to be afraid... And now I like looking at it because it reminds me that I am finally free.| he said, and then Glimmer sighed and became sad, so he asked her. - Did something happen. She hesitated before answering, which only confirmed his fears. She then told him that a Lord Admiral had come to Etheria, bringing his own fleet with him, and that he was Catra's father. He fell silent, wondering how much of this Shadow Weaver knew. She had this other girl with her. She implied that she and Catra were sisters. Did the Admiral know about this too? It wouldn't surprise him if she kept it from him. Even as a Light Spinner, she loved mysteries and secrets.

“How is Catra?” he asked, thinking about his feline friend.

- She's confused, like all of us. Oh daddy, do you want me to take you to Brightmoon ? – she asked shyly. He hesitated because he knew that Glimmer was definitely counting on his support, but on the other hand he couldn't imagine how he could look his Daughter and Catra in the eye while hiding such great secrets.

“Unfortunately, I can't. I'm still looking for information about Umbracor. On my last trip, I found more questions than answers.”

Glimmer nodded thoughtfully and said.

“When you come to the wedding, I have great news for you, but for now, dad, I have to go back. – she disappeared in a flash of Magic.

"I may have some wonderful news for you too, if I can" he thought and went back to the cottage to look through "The History of the Sorcerer's War" at the top of the page was written "The Secret of Kranor Rill"

Doctor Sidonius silently landed on the ground and assumed his true form. He decided that there was no point in hiding his talent on this planet, since they had already learned that the locals knew surprisingly little about vampires and the undead. On the other hand, the only person present was Archduke Kane Adamson, who was sitting on a bench and looking at the mural painted on the ornate wall. Previously, he was finished off by a nice deaf artist. She became friends with his daughter, despite her disability. He approached the mural that depicted the history of the last months of the war. He looked at the image of a tall winged woman.

“Well, so you were the queen... Who would have thought.” said the ancient vampire with a smile showing both fangs. Kane looked at him with his blue eyes, glowing in the dark. Most mortals trembled under that gaze, but he was used to ancient terror… And he wasn't a mortal.

“After all these millennia, you should have noticed long ago that we encounter extraordinary people very often.” said a man with hair as red as blood in a thoughtful voice. He had been in a reflective mood since they arrived on this planet. As far as he knew him, the Archduke of Carurystal had a tendency towards melancholy, which contrasted with the brutal, almost barbaric impression he had on others.

“If you say so.” he said and touched the mural with his fingertips, but then Kane Adamson added.

“Or maybe this is just our impression, because due to our existence lasting eons, we simply remember only extraordinary and unique people, and we forget about the countless masses of ordinary mortals who are dubiously lucky to cross our path.”

Dr. Sidonius snorted in irritation

- You're starting to talk like an Elf.

“No, probably the Elves are ones who talk like me.” Kane said and walked up to the mural, looking at it thoughtfully. Dr. Sidonius looked at the image of the cat girl kissing She- Ra .

“When I told everyone that the girl survived, no one believed me, but here you go, look how high she has reached.” he said, beaming with joy.

“It's not your fault, Doctor. It's probably due to fate, which, as we both know, is a nasty bitch.” The Archduke of Carurystal touched Horde Prime's likeness just before She-Ra destroyed him.

“I remember a certain man, his name was Galtea the Avenger. He claimed to be a hero fighting evil, but he was a fucker even worse than me, that's quite an achievement. He didn't really accomplish much, he wanted to hunt me down before his career took off, and I'm probably the only one who remembers his existence, but... He was the first being to talk about the cold, cleansing light. Then I heard similar words many times. They were always invoked by exceptional Bastards. Horde Prime was similar to them, although admittedly much more powerful.” said the Archduke of Carurystal. Dr. Sidonius shrugged.

“There are a finite number of ideas, and with the scale of the universe, it's only a matter of time until someone comes up with the same idea again.”

“Maybe... You know, I was here. I don't know when or why, but I remember being there.”

The Doctor looked sideways at his companion.

“And what were you doing? – he asked suspiciously.

“I'm not sure, but I think there's something very bad, even for me... I have to look for something here, something I lost. I'll leave you for a while. I'm sure you'll be fine without me.” he said and set off on his way, illuminated by the glow of the enchanted moons.

A heated argument

Chapter Notes

And here's the next chapter. Please leave your comments and opinions

Itel was finally started to like it here. This place, the headquarters of the People's Rebellion, Castle Crypto or whatever it was called, made a good impression. Order and discipline reigned here. During the last two days, she had seen the members of the Rebellion training, repairing equipment, as well as talking, having fun, in short, they do exactly what she do with her friends, but somehow better. More neatly. She didn't know much about the military, after all, her only exposure to it was her time among the Shadows of Tarak, but they seemed quite competent. She was even starting to wonder if they could somehow support them in their fight. They had a large arsenal of quite good weapons and were well trained. Many of them were cadets, orphans trained from childhood to fight for Wrongdak’s Brother. Now they fought against the queen, the same one who had been stunned by Rosie and then kidnapped Eti. Now she was hosting the thousand times cursed Antares. Perhaps she could somehow use this to talk her into fighting the Admiral, but there was a problem. Everyone here avoided them as much as they could. Yes, they were polite and polite, but they kept their distance. It even seemed that they were afraid of them. They had many reasons for this.

For most of them, the existence of other planets was something new, and the fact that civilisations completely unfamiliar with this Horde Prime had survived and thrived beyond the Empire was difficult to imagine. They were the first people from their part of galaktyki that they encountered, she was aware that their group could cause anxiety among normal people, and from what she had managed to notice, the Rebels were definitely less trusting and friendly than the inhabitants of Brightmoon, at least towards strangers. This was probably partly due to Wrongdak's presence, most of the Rebellion members once belonged to the Horde, which was ruled by his Brother, and they were probably not too proud of that. They transferred their dislike for their former leader to Wrongdak and the remaining clones...

However, these were not the most important reasons for the distrust and fear they aroused. She guessed the others. First of all, Eti's sister was their friend, their comrade in arms with whom they grew up together... And she must have been very... mean to the others, to put it mildly. She knew Eti, and although she loved her like no one else in the world, she was aware that relationships with her could be... difficult. And Catra seems to have become the leader's second in command, his right hand. She knew Igzar and knew well how ruthless a leader he could be, much like the Lord Admiral. Subjugating others may have been in her genes. But perhaps they were most distrusted because of Miss Daisy, or rather Shadow Weaver, which was her real name, quite an apt choice, she had to admit. She was the one who supervised the cadets and raised Eti's sister and her fiancée... She understood that much, but there had to be something more to it. What had this old alcoholic done that she was treated here like a bogeyman, a demon to be feared and not allowed to approach anything he had a connection with lest he become corrupted. She knew the woman was a powerful sorceress skilled in dark magic, but nothing more. Why should anyone be afraid of her? Apparently they didn't know what true terror was, they hadn't experienced what they had, they hadn't encountered the Swarm.

But eventually she had to talk to someone, if only to pass the time. She saw a stocky, slightly gray-haired Bugbear watching with a sour face as the Rebels unloaded fruit from the truck. Bugbear shouldn't be afraid, right?

„Hello, I'm Itel." she stretched out her hand, smiling. Unfortunately, in contacts with other people she was only good compared to Eti, especially when she tried to be nice. Maybe she should ask Rosie for help? Everyone liked her. Bugbear didn't shake her hand, but looked at her with a little interest.

„They call me Grizzol , and I'm the Storm Captain here. What do you want from me?” he asked in a hoarse voice.

„I've never seen Bugbear before , even though I've traveled a lot around the galaxy.” she said and cursed in her mind, because this was not the best way to start a conversation. She really should have asked Rosie for help. Grizzol, however, looked at her curiously.

„I have never heard anyone from outside our people use this word.” he muttered.

„And there are many of you here... Bugbears ... On Etheri.” she continued the conversation, sticking to this topic, because it seemed to have a good effect.

„Not many now, although we were never many, but during the war lot of us died fighting for both sides. Now there are maybe a thousand of us left and most of those who survived live in scattered groups... Although if you say that we can be found on other planets... But I have not survived over twenty years of war without developing the ability to read between the lines. So tell me what you really want from me, okay?”

She hesitated before asking.

„It's about my friend. Eti, the cat-like one. Why is everyone here reacting so strangely to her... I know she reminds you of someone you know, but you all act like she's about to do something terrifing.” she didn't add that most of those who got to know Eti better also expected her to do something terrifying soon.

„She doesn't look like her, she just looks like she's her sister…„ Bugbear growled , and she interrupted him, grinning and trying to smile friendly.

She thought she's the first person in the galaxy to have managed to render a Bugbear speechless.

„Who the fuck is she... Never mind, I don't think I want to know if there are even more Catras in the world, one was too many. You see, Catra was one of the cadets. She has always been a cunning girl, willing to win at all costs, no matter how she can hurt everyone. I really shouldn't blame her, we were all more ruthless back then than we are today, and she was, after all, Hordak's right-hand protégé ... She had harder life than most, I admit, but when she took Shadow Weaver's place... she became even worse. She was willing to do anything to win, she forced us to do terrible things when we opposed her, she threatened to tear us apart or condemn us to a fate worse than death, which she did to her friend, and in the end, it was because of her the Prime's Horde came . I don't know if your Eti is like her, but everyone prefers to assume that she is. So don't be surprised that we all remain reserved, because that's what life in the Horde and over twenty-five years of war have taught us, and you also brought Shadow Weaver here.

Grizzol looked around fearfully, then swear.

„Damn it, it's starting again! You see! Because of this hag, we lived in fear for twenty-five years. Almost everyone on the planet hates her and was very happy that she was dead”

Itel blinked twice.

„How is she dead? From what I saw, she's quite alive. He gets drunk, goes to the toilet... The undead don't do that.” she said, although honestly she had no idea whether Doctor Sidonius was using the toilet… This is not a topic that normal people think about. „ I know a somethingabout the undead, I even destroyed some!”

Bugbear looked at her for a moment before speaking.

„Catra and Adora told everyone that and I have no reason not to believe them. Adora can't lie, and Catra wouldn't lie for her. Not after everything she had done to her.” for a moment she saw something like sympathy in bugbear's pale eyes. She felt a little disconcerted and even a little worried.

„What do you mean? What did she do to her? What she did to all of you.”

Grizzol became a bit suspicious . He laughed darkly and said.

„It's best if she tells you herself. She's a lying bitch, she can't deny that. Maybe she faked her own death, though I don't know how she escaped with Etheri where you found her... And my advice to you is to stay away from her, or at least don't trust anything she says.”

She smiled sourly at the Bugbear

She was thirsty, she was fucking thirsty. She would give a lot to have a drink... although one word would probably be enough for her to get alcohol. She saw here the former subordinates from the technical department, who were probably making their old product, although they probably improved the recipe to get rid of the disgusting taste, although it didn't bother her, the only thing that mattered was how quickly she could get drunk on it... Yes, no one would refuse to give her moonshine… Probably as much as anything else. She suspected that even if she wanted to take over, she wouldn't encounter much resistance. A simple show of power would be enough to force her former subordinates into submission. But it wasn't something she wanted. And what exactly did she want? She wasn't sure... She looked at her clawed hands. They were shaking from alcohol withdrawal. It was harder for her to concentrate now, even though she knew that if she started drinking now, she would fall into a bloody drunken spree... She had to resist this temptation, although to be honest, this whole place was one big temptation.

"So this is what it's like to be in the Abyss…" she said darkly, but Ireanis looked at her, smiling crookedly.

„No... This place doesn't resemble the Abyss at all. I know because I've been there several times. The longest time was when we had to bring back some student who summoned a succubus because he wanted to fuck... Well, that actually happens quite often, I mean summoning succubi, not kidnapping students or traveling to the abyss, but I get what you mean. I am thirsty too. Thirsty as hell.„ sighed the sorceress from Lost Golarion. She smiled at her. When she served in the Horde, she preferred to stay alone most of the time, plotting her intrigues and conducting experiments, usually more or less unsuccessful. Once, one almost killed her... If it weren't for Catra finding her unconscious on the floor, she would probably have faced the Creeping Chaos much earlier. Of course, she returned the favor by yelling at Catra, furious that the girl saw her in a moment of weakness. Now she was happy with Ireanis' presence, thanks to the Elf it was easier for her to endure both the rehab and the waiting. Lonnie gave her and Ireanis a room, asked to share a room with two separate beds, but hasn't called her since. The room was comfortable, located among the outer buildings of the castle, where servants and officers probably lived in oldtimes. It was spacious, but so short that her head hit the ceiling; the inhabitants of Castle Crypto were not known for their height. It was always cloudy around the castle, and the windows were narrow, so it was dim. It didn't bother her, what was much worse was waiting to talk to Comrade General. She guessed that Lonnie wanted to soften her up by making her wait, and also to prepare for the interview with his former teacher. These weren't bad tactics, but they didn't have time for such games now, they had to come up with a plan as soon as possible to counter the Lord Admiral before it was too late!

Lonnie… She didn't know this girl well, at least not as well as she should have, as proven by the fact that she had to rely on her for help. She remembered that the current Comrade General was Adora's friend, but she couldn't stand Catra. She was always the third best cadet, even though Catra and Adora were several levels more capable than her. Although she apparently didn't even appreciate it, she eventually became the leader of her own rebellion and even took over Entrapta's castle, although it wasn't really a great achievement. She organized her former comrades in arms and gave them a new purpose, making them a military force to be reckoned with. As they say in the Pact Worlds, once you let a Genie out of the bottle you can't put it back in.

Finally she heard footsteps and the door to her room opened. There stood a small person who was probably not even eighteen years old when the war ended.

„Comrade General Lonnie is calling you to his quarters.” it said, trying not to let its voice crack.

„You've grown up, Sune. Okay, take me to your leader. Ireanis, if any of my wards ask, tell them where I went. – she said and followed Sune Itel looked for her friends. She found them by the fire, roasting marshmallows. Or rather, she found Rosie, Lilka and Alatar. Eti could be absolutely anywhere, and she would be here as soon as she smelled meat sizzling on the fire. Their ship landed nearby. They had even made a makeshift landing pad for him, and now Mr. Ilemshaw 's drones were floating above their heads. They lived on a ship, although they were also offered shelter in the castle, or rather its outer part. As far as she could tell, everyone was avoiding going inside the castle. As she approached, Rosie stood up and waved at her.

„Hi! Eti said she was going to look for Kyle and would be back in time for dinner.” she said in sign language „Kyle?” she asked, wondering who the deaf girl was talking about.

„You know, the tall blond one. He was nice to us. I guess that's why Eti wants to talk to him.” Rosie replied. She nodded, she remembered him now. He was nice and quite handsome.

„Okay, where are Wrongdak and Emily?” she asked, and Alatar pointed behind him. The clone was cleaning the inside of the ship, more for the sake of something to do than out of any real need. Then Dragonkin asked a question himself

„Did you learn anything new?”

He grimaced before she answered him

„Nothing specific. They told me a little about Eti’s sister and Miss Daisy's past, although I don't know what to think about it. This Catra has a lot of Eti in her, but more of their father. And what they said about Miss Daisy... I can't believe this drunkard could be someone everyone here is afraid of. If there is any truth in this, she must have fallen very low.”

When she said this, she was given her own stick with marshmallows, and Alatar started stiking sausages and local bread onto other sticks. They stared into the fire for a moment until Rosie finally spoke carefully.

„You know, if I had known earlier that the Lord Admiral was evil and you didn't like him, I would have told you about him earlier.”

Everyone froze and looked at the white-haired girl.

„So you knew about him before…” she asked slowly in a very quiet and seemingly calm voice, and Rosie blushed and looked down guiltily.

„Because our expedition was related to the fleet from the beginning. That's what the others said. Dilayla, Arkan-tar, Miss Daisy, but they forbade me to mention it to anyone. I would tell you everything anyway if...”

She didn't let her finish. Feeling rage flooding through her, she summoned her moonblade and leapt at the girl.

„You false, traitorous bitch! You planned it all from the beginning!” she screamed, putting the blade to her throat. Rosie tried to back away and started waving her arms.

„Silence, you crippled whore!” she said and ripped her glasses off her face, and then, to the white-haired girl's horror, crushed them with her shoe with cold satisfaction.

„Listen, Itel. I think you're exaggerating a bit... maybe you could sit down and calm down?” Alatar said carefully, but she ignored him. He's always been a wimp. She smiled predatorily and said.

„ Now you will pay for everything.” and she jumped at the girl, taking a swing. She didn't actually mean to kill her, just to tear her face open or take out one of her blue eyes. She won't be so fake cute anymore. But before she could strike, Rosie grabbed her hand and looked at her. Her eyes glowed white.

She liked it when others were afraid of her. She felt safe then, aware of how dangerous she was. If you were dangerous, no one could do anything to you. But she didn't want to be scary all the time. It made her feel guilty, like she was someone evil who should be feared, one who thought hurting others was just fun... she wasn't a monster, certainly not that bad anyway, and she didn't and she didn't want others to see her as one. Moreover, it was not her fear, but inherited from the other one. From that Catra. She didn't know why they were so afraid of her, but she would find out. That's why she was looking for this blond guy. He will definitely explain everything to her. He was her sister's friend after all... He certainly knew a lot about her. And besides, she liked him. He was afraid of everything, but he had courage in his heart, even if he fainted at the sight of Miss Daisy.

She found the blonde in the tool shed. It wasn't too difficult, the boy had a very specific scent around him. Now he was crouching down in thought and staring at this strange sword.

„Hey Blond Boy was she scary?" she asked, approaching him from behind. At the sound of her voice, he jumped and screamed softly, then turned towards her, his hand on the hilt of his sword.

„Ah, it's just you... Do you have to be sneaky like that?" he asked with a trembling voice.

Just You! she thought indignantly and replied.

„Of course I could, why wouldn't I be able to, but why would I want to, and besides, a question isn't answered with a question. Haven't you in this Horde learned basic social skills?"

He looked at her with a mixture of confusion and disorientation, others often looked at her this way, and said in a very uncertain voice.

„I don't know who you mean… Shadow Weaver or Catra …"

„Well, of course my sister, because why would anyone in their right mind be afraid of Grimm? Sure, she knows some dark magic, but she's basically alright. She saved me and Sparkle Paw's skin several times, and you look at her as if she was electrocuting you for your insubordination..." she said, and he looked at her that way again.

„Because she did it, often... Especially to Catra... That and other, worse things. That's why Catra became the way she became. She was a bit like you and Shadow Weaver... Dangerous, ruthless, cunning, terrifying...„ He didn't finish because Eti interrupted him.

„Yes, those are my traits, but how was she similar to Shadow Weaver?" she asked, tilting her head on her shoulder. Kyle took a deep breath as if to say something, but then stopped and stared at her hand. She rolled up her sleeve and put it under his nose.

„Cool, isn't it? I had her when she woke up one day... I don't know exactly where she's from, I'm not sure, but it was after a fight where... Never mind, it can shock people with electricity , open locks and has these funny inscriptions...

„I know, I see them... „ the Blondie Boy blurted out.

„But only I can see them.” she finished and started looking at him. “Can you read them?” she asked curiously. She guesses Rechiza could read them too, or at least that's what she claimed.

„Well, yes, but... „ he was as pale as a corpse, she felt like she was going to faint again. Just don't tell anyone about it because… Just don't tell anyone…”

The thought began to form in her mind that she probably knew why the boy didn't want anyone to know that he could read the First Ones' language. But there was one more thing she had to find out.

„Okay, but tell me what it says, because I can't read that.”

The blonde nodded and began to look at her hand with concentration and then slowly read it.

„This is the Punishing Hand, created to avenge... And this is where the writing ends, I'm sorry... he looked at her apologetically, so she patted him on the shoulder. He smiled at her and seemed to want to ask her something, but then Itel screamed.

She wiped her forehead and looked at Shadow Weaver sitting in a chair, drinking tea. She shuddered. She hasn't gotten used to looking at her face yet. She should have known from the beginning that the arrival of that damned witch would not portend anything good, but not that it would be something so terrible.

„Did this guy, this Antares, come here with his fleet?” she asked, feeling her head starting to hurt more and more.

„I told you, I have no idea. I only saw a fragment of the conversation between the Lord Admiral and Glimmer. I don't know more than that, although our sensors didn't detect anything, but that was two days ago. Besides, I don't know if his ships have any jamming systems." she said in an irritated voice. With some effort, she stopped herself from cringing. All these years they had been afraid of her wrath, even the slightest anger. He won't let her do that to them again. Never again!

„Is he really such a monster as you say? And why should I believe all this? You've been feeding us lies for so many years, so how do I know you're not doing it again?"

The dark sorceress smiled sadly and spoke in a gloomy and very tired voice.

„You have no reason to trust me, I have earned your suspicion. But you don't have to ask me, ask those kids, they'll repeat everything I told you."

„You're talking about Catra's sister and the rest." she asked, frowning. The thought of damned Catra having a sister wandering freely around her castle was downright painfully frustrating. She didn't know what she should do now, she agreed to take it because she needed Shadow Weaver, but she didn't like the fact that her Catra amount had doubled. Truth be told, the girl wasn't that bad, she didn't get in her way, she just wandered around the castle. But after all, she was the sister of the Grand Marshal, and if what Hordak's old Right Hand said about the cat girls' father was true, then this whole damned family was corrupted through and through. She was very happy with the new alliances she had made, despite her earlier doubts.

„But what do you think we should do?" she asked the dark sorceress, who hesitated before answering.

„I had already taken some steps, although at that time I didn't know that the Lord Admiral would arrive here so soon, or that he was Catra's father…." she didn't finish because there were shrieks outside .

Itel tried to pull her hand from Rosie's grip, but she couldn't. The girl was unnaturally strong. So she kicked her in the chin as hard as she could, but it didn't help. The deaf girl clenched her hand and her bones broke. She screamed softly, luckily, she had high pain toleration, but she had to unsummon the blade, which she then had summoned in her other hand. From behind, Lilka tried to pull her back, but she was kicked hard and fell backwards for several minutes, but thanks to this she managed to pull her arm away, although the wrist was still broken. She attacked Rosie several times but the girl dodged them all without any problems, then she jumped high into the air and fell to the ground, dealing a terrible blow with her fist. She jumped away at the last moment, but the impact was so powerful that the ground shook and the elf fell over. She rolled under the truck, but Rosie jumped over to her and lifted the truck, then threw it aside. Where does this strength come from? The former intern was radiant with bright light, and her eyes were as uniformly white as a blind man's, although the brightest light emanated from them. The white-haired girl's face expressed absolute concentration, but otherwise she did not express any emotions. She lunged towards Itel, intending to strike a blow that would probably shatter her skull. But then black tentacles shot out towards the girl's arms and immobilized her. It didn't take long for them to suddenly break apart as the light coming from Rosie pulsated, but it gave the elf a moment to get back on her feet. She wasn't going to run away, even though she knew she couldn't defeat the deaf girl. It was a very stupid death, but she probably asked for it. Several rebel members tried to surround the girl, but she waved her hand and blasted them away with a wave of bright light. She was getting ready to receive the final blow, but then Eti appeared behind Rosie and placed a metal hand on her shoulder. Then the glow faded and Rosie's eyes went back to normal. The girl began to look around confused and scared. She tried to say something, but apparently she had damaged her gloves during the fight and no one understood her...

Except Eti... The cat girl said something reassuring in Sign Language, and Alatar began to talk about what happened. At first she felt a surge of anger towards the dragonkin, but the longer she listened to his words, the more she realized that she had gone too far. Eti hugged Rosie, who started sob spasmodically, and then she said.

„Listen, Itel. I know how you feel about me, and I love you too, but not like this... I can be your friend, sometimes I can even make love to you, but nothing more... Because you do things like this."

Tears began to run down Solarian's face. She realised that what Eti had said was final. That it was forever over between them.

„She knew that the entire expedition was organized by Antares and she didn't tell us anything, and she considers herself our friend! If it weren't for the Shadows of Tarak, we would all be lost!"

Alatar and Lilka looked at her with horror

„What have you done... „ said the shocked Dragonkin. Eti just said quietly.

„It's easy to see a hero in a villain..."

„Who are the Shadows of Tarak?" asked Lonnie, who had just arrived.

„The biggest bunch of bastards you can imagine." Dragonkin whispered.

Fall of Kesler - Burning Sky

Chapter Notes

> Here's another chapter of my fan fic, probably the darkest of all. The hive creatures described here are the Vorphoma and the Dredger. Please give me feedback and comments

Itel tried not to be as quiet as possible. She barely dared to take a deep breath. She hadn't seen anything dangerous yet, but the forest was so quiet that the pounding of her heart seemed as loud as thunder. She was scared. For the first time in her life, she was truly scared. She hadn't heard much about the Swarm until now, and even when they started talking about it approaching their planet, she had never truly believed that she would ever have to face it, or rather flee from it. But she didn't know where. On the banks of the river, a several hours' rowboat ride away, was the town of Ulm, where she hoped to meet her family...

Her family… She hoped they were safe… That they had all managed to escape. She forgot the anger she felt towards them, now she just wanted nothing to happen to them. She prayed silently to all the gods for it. Her plans to become a soldier were dashed. Real soldiers aren't so afraid that they pee under themselves, she barely had the courage to lower her pants. She had no idea how long she had been swimming, judging by the position of the sun it must have been only a few hours, but it was impossible. She was sure it had been a whole day or more. Her blood father had left a surprising amount of supplies here for her, clearly he had been preparing for the possibility of escape for some time. Was he planning for the two of them to escape together, leaving the rest of their settlement behind to the mercy of the Swarm? She wasn't sure she wanted to know the answer to that question.

While she was lost in these dark thoughts, she heard a loud buzzing noise. She immediately stuck to the bottom of the boat, not caring that it was wet with urine. Before, she only rowed when she had to avoid a rock or a shallow spot, afraid to make any noise, but now she stayed still, letting the boat drift. Nothing happened for a moment, so she lifted her head to look around and that's when she saw it. The creature was in the tree and she felt like it was watching her. How intelligent were the Swarm creatures? This monster was quite large, larger than her anyway, and had wings like a locust and somewhat resembled a Shirren, many members of this species lived on Kesler. However, this one had larger mandibles and front limbs equipped with long chitin claws capable of tearing it to pieces. She didn't move, hoping that the monster, like many predators, was mainly capable of perceiving movement, but then he looked in her direction and she realized that he saw her. Power flared around his antennae. She felt an overwhelming fear, so great that what she had experienced so far was only ordinary anxiety. She wanted to escape, to run as fast as she could, away from this monster. However, she realized what had happened, the creature had cast a spell on her that caused terror. She managed to fend him off, she didn't know if she would have been able to do it if it weren't for the fact that she was on a boat, because she would have had to jump into the river to escape. However, the monster saw that his spell did not work and jumped towards her with a loud hiss. He pinned her to the bottom of the boat and tried to crush her head with his mandibles, but she stuffed the gun her father had given her into her mouth and pulled the trigger. A beam of light shot from the gun and exited from the other side of the head. The creature fell in an instant, but it clamped its mandibles spasmodically on her weapon and slid into the river. She wanted to jump after him, but the corpse sank along with her weapon. She stared at the water for a few moments, breathing heavily, and then she felt the fear melt away... She wasn't afraid anymore, not like before. Instead, she felt a sudden surge of determination. She had to survive, at all costs, even if her only weapon was a knife. She grabbed the oars and started rowing.

He shuffled one foot at a time, passing cars stuck in traffic jams. Most of their owners stayed there, not wanting to abandon their belongings. Alatar didn't care. He didn't care about anything anymore. He lost his sister, whom he promised to take care of. He lost all his camp mates, his means of transport, everything. He was left alone in the middle of the Swarm invasion. He had no idea what to do now or where to go, so he just trudged forward, one foot at a time.

Flashes and flames still lit up the sky, although less intense than before. He didn't know if that was good or bad, and honestly, he didn't care anymore. He didn't care about anything. He felt almost no pain in his feet, in fact he felt almost nothing. Some tried to call out to him, others even tried to stop him. He didn't understand what they wanted from him or what they were saying to him. Whether they wanted to help him or expected him to help them, he didn't know and he didn't care. However, no one bothered him, after all, he was a Dragonkin and he was bigger than everyone else in every way and he breathed fire, no normal person would try to stand in front of a dragon, even such a small one.

Finally he reached the river. He only noticed it when he was waist-deep in water. The bridge was blocked by cars, a truck was standing across it and turned on its side. The coolness of the water and the smell of mud sobered him up a bit, and he began to wonder what to do next. He should consider how to get to the other side and then look for the nearest town. He saw an elf in a boat, rowing furiously. He looked behind her and thought for a moment, then entered the water, took the datapad into his mouth, and lay on his back. He was a good swimmer, great at swimming on his back, and decided to swim downstream. It will swim somewhere. What next, he didn't know.

She cried all the way, hugging Mr. Tut. She wanted to go home, but she knew it was impossible. She wasn't stupid. She knew her home was gone. Dad and mom... she couldn't even say the word in her head. She could only drive away crying. She was shaking terribly and everything hurt, but they didn't stop, only once to pee, even though she almost didn't want to. She didn't drink anything, they didn't even think about eating anymore. They were taking side roads because apparently the roads were blocked or something. They hadn't seen any other bugs so far, but she was afraid that they would get them. She was even afraid to look out the window because they could be lurking everywhere to catch them and devour them. She saw flames in the sky. Sometimes they managed to pick up a radio signal and then heard them say that the fleet was still fighting and had shot down hundreds of enemy ships. Mr. Tut said that the sky was burning because they were enemy ships exploding and they are winning. She felt like she should be happy about it, but she didn't care. Besides, her guardian probably didn't believe what he was saying either.

Eventually they ran out of fuel. They didn't have any food or even anything to drink. Although she wasn't hungry, Mr. Tut said she had to eat something for mom and dad. As soon as he said that, tears came to her eyes. He placed a chitin-covered hand on her back to comfort her. She looked into his face, He was a bug, just like the others. He had bug eyes and antennae, but other than that... He was a Shirren, and Shirren weren't evil, almost never. She could trust him. She sniffed and calmed down. Finally, Mr. Tut saw a gas station and they decided to stop there. They will refuel and buy some snacks. That's what Shirren said. They were on the outskirts of a town, similar to the one near her house... Mr. Tut went out to notify the staff and look into the shop. But first he started pouring fuel into the tank. However, she felt that something was wrong. It was quiet, definitely too quiet. She started to be afraid. She looked out the window and wanted to shout to him to come back, because there was something very bad here. But then there was the sound of breaking glass. A bugran out from inside, it was smaller than the ones on the farm, but it ran towards Mr. Tut . Her guardian reached for an ax he had taken from the house and began beating the monster over and over until it fell dead, then he leaned heavily against the cab and panted for several minutes while he waited for the car to refuel before she got inside. and they set off. Lilka saw that Mr. Tut's clothes were soaked in yellow Shiren blood.

“Don't worry, I'll be fine.” he said in Shirren way, in her head. Then they drove for some time. Mr. Tut looked weaker and weaker. She even had to wake him up several times while driving. Finally he stopped in the middle of the road and said.

“I'll take a nap, I need to rest for a while. Follow the road until you reach the evacuation point. Find soldiers there, they will definitely help you.” he handed her the ax, now dirty with blood, so similar to Shiren's, and left the cabin. She took the driver's seat and started driving the car. Her parents allowed her to do this several times, but only ion the open ffields, not on the road. But now they were gone. She was alone... She wiped her tears so they wouldn't obscure her path.

Bina began to wonder why she was hanging out with that psychopath Igzar, instead of looking for a way to escape from this planet. The black-haired Pahtra looked menacing enough to make her shiver just looking at him. He gave the impression that he wanted to kill anyone who annoyed him, even though that wasn't a problem. What's worse is that he actually intended to do it. As they were leaving the nightclub, a Shirren tried to stop him and ask him what was going on, and then Igzar hit him with a rifle stock, smashing his head. She wasn't sure if Shirren had survived. Then they looked for a car, or rather Igzar told Wagar to stop the first passing car by simply standing in its way, and then Pahtra, threatening the driver with a gun, threw him outside, along with his wife and children. The orc looked at him reproachfully, but said nothing. She also felt sorry for that family, four humans, judging by their appearance, typical inhabitants of the suburbs, but if even Wagar was afraid to oppose Pahtra, what about her, who was three times smaller than Ork.

They drove along sidewalks and through parks and gardens, so they somehow managed to get out of the city despite the traffic jams. When their group left the city, she asked carefully.

“And may we know where we are actually going?”

Pahtra just looked at her. She realized that she couldn't and was about to curl up in her seat and pretend very hard that she wasn't there when Wagar, who was pressing himself in the back seat, said something.

“We're going to the Shadows of Tarak, and then we're leaving this planet.” the orc said this last regretfully. Igzar growled angrily, and Bina began to wonder. She heard about the shadows of Tarak . It was a company of mercenaries, specialists in operating behind enemy lines. They consisted largely of veterans of the Tarak Civil War, or their descendants. They were known for both their effectiveness and ruthlessness. But if the Shadows were here, that meant …

“By devils and demons.” she said. It was this Igzar, the famous war criminal prosecuted by the supreme tribunal of Absalom, or the national hero of Tarak, depending on your point of view. Most importantly, he was the sworn enemy of Admiral Antares, who also came here to defend the planet from the Swarm invasion. And since they were both here, that meant… she swore under her breath. It couldn't have been a coincidence, and since they were both here, Igzar probably had one thing in mind and she had absolutely no intention of helping him with it. On the other hand, she didn't mind staying here and letting the bugs eat her. She had to grit her teeth and cooperate with Pahtra, although she wasn't sure why they were dragging her along, but she didn't want to ask, lest Cat Noir would reconsider his decision and throw her out. On the other hand, he knew about Antares' connection with her Father. In this case, she found herself between a rock and a hard place, although in Igzar's case it was not a hammer, but a device that caused much more pain. She herself knew little about her Father's connections with Antares, only rumors repeated to her by her sisters and other employees of her Father.

While driving, she saw fiery explosions in the sky and flashes of light, and from time to time a shooting star appeared, probably the remains of a downed ship. She guessed it was a battle taking place in space. Bina had never seen anything like this and had no idea which side was winning, although she had the impression that a lot of ships must have been destroyed.

“The swarm doesn't take into account losses, so it can lose hundreds of ships and won't even feel it. Maybe if the Atrax Fleet arrived now, you would have a chance, but without it...” Igzar answered the unasked question.

“So why did you come here if there was no chance of winning?” she asked and immediately regretted it. Pahtra twisted his scarred muzzle into a particularly nasty smile and said.

“We were hired to cover the evacuation of civilians from the planet.”

She did not receive more detailed explanations from him, but she did not demand them either. She liked living too much.

After a few hours, they arrived at what was probably supposed to be a recreation center for the working class. There were several small people's republics on Kesler recent times, and they must have found one of their remnants. It turned out that the Shadows of Tarak were quartered here. Igzar's mercenaries were mostly Pahtra and or Vesca. Representatives of other races also served him, Drows, halflings, Ysokas... There was even one Skittermander here. They all looked very dangerous, including Skittermander, but they also seemed to be very disciplined and, as far as she could tell, well armed. Everyone, or at least the vast majority, gathered in what had once been a playground. The sight of such a gang of thugs between the swings was truly absurd.

“Listen to me, because I don't like repeating myself.” Igzar began to speak in a growling voice, looking menacingly at his subordinates. “As I warned you, we must escape from here on our own, because the government here was unable to defend their planet. We will head southeast to the Evacuation point in the city of Ulm and from there we will head into the mountains. I know where we can find ships. So get off your asses. You have fifteen minutes to prepare. Anyone who doesn't make it in time will end up as food for the Bugs”

Ulm was further away than Itel expected, in fact she had been there maybe once as a child and had been taken there by car. She thought her arms would fall off from the effort. Even though she wasn't sure if she could row well, she had never done it for so long. In fact, she had never made such an effort. She was a member of the school volleyball team, but she didn't take part in training because she couldn't afford the uniform, she wanted to earn money for it. It was probably completely irrelevant now anyway. However, she needed to rest, at least for a quarter of an hour. She swam to the shore in a secluded place near an abandoned summer house and here she moored. Then she cleaned the bottom of the boat as much as she could and lay down with her backpack under her head.

She wouldn't have woken up unless the boat had moved. She drew her knife and jumped to her feet, feeling terrible pain in her overworked arms. She almost fell into the water. In front of her she saw a human woman, about fifty years old, tall and wearing an old, slightly short cloak .

“Lady! Good Lady! Let me get into the boat, there's plenty of room in it. There's enough for both!” she said in a slightly hoarse voice. Her eyes were nervous and darting.

“Don't come close to me!” she said in a voice full of fear, holding a knife in both hands. She saw the blade of her weapon tremble, so she adjusted her grip and tried to look more dangerous than she actually was.

“There is a plenty of room. Really, there's a plenty of room here.” the woman said as if she hadn't heard her at all. She stepped into the boat with one foot. Then Itel struck. She plunged the blade of the knife into the woman's neck. She wheezed and grabbed her wound with her hands, then slipped and fell into the water. However, she did not give up and grabbed the side of the boat, trying to get inside. The boat tilted and turned upside down. They both ended up in the water, but only Itel surfaced. She looked at the boat, which was slowly moving away from the shore. All her belongings ended up at the bottom of the river. Even oars. All she had left was her knife. The blood-covered blade looked completely ordinary, but it had just taken someone's life. She considered turning the boat up and continuing downstream, but she couldn't bring herself to get into the water. So she set off on foot towards the city.

Lilka drove for a long time until her leg hurt from pressing the gas pedal. She had to dodge moving cars once or twice, but she barely noticed. She was alone, no one was with her, she had no one. She was alone in the world. She couldn't think, she just did what Mr. Tut wanted her to do. She had no idea where she was going or why. She just drove forward. Finally, she approached a larger city, around which she saw a lot of people and some vehicles flying in the sky. This was probably where she was supposed to go, although she had no idea why she got there. The whole place was surrounded by a wall and barbed wire, she saw soldiers everywhere. As she was driving inside, she almost ran over an Elf girl with green hair. The soldiers were shouting something to her, and only after a while she realized that they wanted her to stop. She braked so suddenly that she hit her head on the steering wheel. A soldier opened the door suddenly and aimed his rifle at her, but when he saw who was the driver, he pulled her out of the car. She tried to take Mr. Tut's ax with her, but it didn't stay inside. The soldiers looked at the vehicle carefully and talked to each other for a while, and then a female soldier accompanied her deeper into the camp, between the barracks, gave her a badge, and then told her to go to the supply point. She didn't understand exactly what she meant, but she went where she showed. There, another lady gave her a paper bag and two bottles of water. The bag contained bars of something similar to chocolate, but smelling completely different. She drank the water, she didn't even know how thirsty she was, and went towards the barracks. She was alone again, although there were plenty of people around.

The column of vehicles belonging to the Shadows of Tarak was moving surprisingly fast, although Bina had no knowledge of logistics or such matters. She sat in an armored personnel carrier next to Igzar . She would have preferred to go with someone else, but Cat Noir seemed to prefer to have her on ou. Completely unnecessary, she had no intention of leaving the Shadows' company, be around them was probably in the safest place on the planet, no matter how much Igzar would want to kill her when he decided that he didn't need her. He didn't even have to shoot her a bullet, it was enough for him to abandon her by the road. She was from the B series, she was a cheater and a trickster. If she were from the K or W series, she might have had a chance, but in her case... She was at the mercy of Igzar and his gang. She decided that she had to try to be useful, or she wouldn't survive even the time she had left.

The opportunity to prove their usefulness came as soon as they reached Ulm. The soldiers, seeing a column of non-army military vehicles, ordered them to stop. Igzar went outside and lit a cigarette and started talking to an officer who looked like he had just been promoted. They talked so politely that the two men almost went at each other's throats. She had heard that Pahtra had been de facto expelled from Tarak, and she seemed to be beginning to understand why. But she couldn't allow violence to break out, because then everyone would be lost. So she approached them and began to speak in a friendly but firm voice.

"I'm sorry if there was a misunderstanding. My name is Bina and I represent the sentientarian organization Light of Hope from Atrax . We paid this bunch of mercenaries to help evacuate children from the combat zone and the planet in general."

The officer looked at their company skeptically.

“They don't look like they would like to save children.” he said, smiling crookedly, but then Pahtry, who was standing next to him, spoke up Truant.

“Of course we want to save the children! My ancestors would have disowned me if I hadn't saved them.” there was so much confidence and enthusiasm in the orc's voice that the officer began to believe him. So Bina decided to go ahead and said.

“Let's be honest, this isn't a place where there was a flood or a riot, but an attack by the fucking Swarm. We will have to fight our way through a war zone. We don't need peacemakers here, just a bunch of damn hardened veterans because no one else will keep these kids safe. Apart from that.” she added, smiling slightly. “Soldiers we hired already have supplies, you just have to provide supplies for the kids.”

The officer thought for a moment, then nodded. After all, even if he made a bad decision, no one but the gods would punish him for it.

“Okay, you can come in, but don't try any numbers or you'll remember.”

Igzar nodded sullenly, but as soon as they were inside, the Pahtra took her aside and wrapped a clawed hand around her neck and growled.

“What the fuck did you think of making my soldiers into nannies?” he growled, and she replied, smiling despite the streams of blood running down her neck.

“Think Cat Noir. If you escort the kids, absolutely no one will stop you, and they will even help you. Besides, I'm not stupid, I know that you came here because of Lord Admiral Antares . You want to fight him, fine, I don't mind at all. But the opinion of the hero who saved defenseless children will be very useful to you and will tie Antares' hands. And I think I need to tell you something else. I've heard a bit about Shadows of Tarak. You are not an ordinary band of mercenaries who fight for money, but to avenge the fallen inhabitants of Tarak. Many of them have or had families on that planet. They may be cruel to their enemies, but they want to take care of the little spark of goodness that remains in them. If you want to keep an ear among them. – she looked at several soldiers who stood behind him and watched them. Igzar released her and began giving orders.

Lilka sat with her back against the wall of the barracks, hugging her knees with her hands. She barely noticed the arrival of some soldiers. It didn't make any difference to her, no matter how many people were around, she would always be alone. So she just sat there and stared straight ahead. Eventually the sun started to set and it started to get cooler and she felt cold. This woke her up a bit and she started walking around the camp looking for something, although she didn't really know what. Suddenly she saw a large orc who was talking to some Ysoki . Next to him he placed a large and heavy ax, much larger than the ax that Mr. Tut had. With something like this she would definitely be safe and no Swarm creature would hurt her. So she walked up to it and just took it and tried to run away. However, the orc noticed her, turned around and grabbed her by the arms, lifting her and setting her in front of him.

“Hello, my name is Wagar”

“And my name is Lika.” She said without letting go of her top

“Why do you need my ax?” he asked, smiling friendly but also a bit menacingly.

“To fight the bugs!” She said, looking defiantly into his eyes. Wagar laughed and asked.

“Where are your parents?”

Then something snapped in her.

“Dad and mom are dead... They're all dead. I'm alone...” She finally said it out loud. She roared, and the fearless warrior who was afraid of nothing knelt next to her and hugged her, for there was nothing he could do.

Chapter Notes

This is the hundredth chapter. Please give me feedback and comment

Glimmer woke up next to Bow and stretched her wings and back. Then she kissed her almost-husband and touched her belly. She smiled to herself. She still couldn't believe that she was going to have a child. She was happy at the thought of becoming a mother, although she didn't actually plan it, it just happened... She would have wished the circumstances had been more favorable, but children were born even in the darkest period of the war, of which she was the best example. Everything will work out somehow now. She didn't even notice Bow waking up. He smiled at her, kissed her and then her stomach.

„Are you sure you don't want to tell your dad about this...„ he asked, and she thought for a moment and shook her head.

„I want to surprise him on the wedding day. But I will definitely tell him everything before we make it public. Unless this ant spills the beans.” She replied to her beloved.

„Don't call her that. Her people are called the Shirren , and her name is Ashurk” said her belovedhugging her tightly. She sighed and said with a weary voice.

„Just looking at her gives me a headache. You think all of her people are so intense?”

Bow smiled and stroked the back of her neck.

„Everyone is themselves first and foremost. We should not judge all representatives of a given people by a single representative and vice versa.” He said gently, and she thought about it. Three days had passed since that dinner and life was slowly returning to normal, as much as possible. Catra told them what she had learned from her father. Her mother's people were called Pahtra. They didn't find out much else, but she was curious what he would be like and if they were similar to Catra or the feline people who lived in Etheria.

„We still don't know anything about my mother. I don't know if space pirates can sneak onto the planet undetected? What are space pirates like, anyway? Do they have mechanical parrots?" she asked herself and smiled to herself. "You know... If it weren't for what happened to Mom, I would be glad that she is a pirate..."

„Arr!" Bow said and kissed her neck and then asked. "What are you going to say in response to the Lord Admiral's proposal?"

She closed her eyes and moaned.

„I don't know. I don't like it, although I don't think he wants to attack us, but I don't like the presence of foreign troops on Etheria . People from outside have tried to take advantage of us too many times. We won't let them do this to us again…."

„Then maybe tell them they can only bring officers and personal guards. This will probably be a good compromise." Bow suggested.

„A bit rotten for my taste, but I guess it's the best solution." she smiled at her beloved and climbed on top of him, hugging his waist with her thighs. „ You know what, we don't have to get up yet, especially since we've already discussed matters of state importance, so I guess we have time for some... „ pleasure." she kissed her almost-husband… Only a few more days.

She had to admit that the Grand Marshal's job had been extremely exhausting lately. It was hard for her to concentrate on her daily work, even though there was so much to do. She had to strengthen the posts on the border with Dryl, and also figure out from where transfer the soldiers who were to be stationed near the border with the Kingdom of Snow. So far they didn't have to guard anything there, they just had some bored border guards. Now they had to be on their guard, because the Frosta country had gone over to Lonnie's side. They didn't know what was happening there now. She told some Brightmoon residents who had relatives there to ask them what the situation was like in their country. Damn, they needed an spy agency, maybe they should hire Double Trouble, or one of his people to handle it. The worst thing was that she had no idea where the money would come from. In the Fright Zone, the budget was a very conventional thing, but here she had to take money into account. She must ask High Minister Shu for additional funds, although the Otter woman always became terribly suspicious whenever finances were discussed, and since the arrival of... the Lord Admiral, she had been very nervous. Finally, she decided to take some time off and went to a teahouse in the city, which was one of her favorite places to relax. Adora was trying on the dress, and although she would have loved to see it while she changed, trying on new clothes made her irritated, so she decided to leave it alone for now.

As she walked to the teahouse, she looked at Melog . Since meeting Lady Cala, her companion had been nervous, but he did not explain why. She only realized that he didn't think she belonged here. When she asked if he meant Etheria or just Brightmoon , he just shook his head and kept saying that he didn't fit in anywhere. She herself didn't like the smell of this woman, even if it sounded terribly stupid. There was something about her… she couldn't put it into words. And there was this conversation during dinner, Lady Cala actually confirmed their suspicions about Miss Daisy being Shadow Weaver... This was the main reason for her lack of concentration and trouble concentrating in the last few days. "Focus, don't let yourself get distracted," she thought bitterly.

When she entered the Teahouse, she was greeted warmly and taken to her favorite table, and Melog was given a pouf to sleep on. She ordered tea with milk and cinnamon, she even asked if they had butter for tea, but they didn't, so she settled for her usual order. Melog got a bowl of milk and lemon juice, he liked this combination very much. Most of the customers tried not to stare at her, although the children glanced at her and smiled at her, and she smiled back at them with an equally friendly smile. The citizens of the capital were friendly towards her, as if they were unaware that she had once wanted to level their city. To them, she was just She-Ra's fiancée, a girl who helped save the world... She wondered how her father's subordinates would treat her? For them, everything she did on Etheria probably didn't matter, the only thing that mattered was whose daughter she was. Being privileged just because of her origins was a strange feeling... Though on the other hand, Mrs. Ka didn't have much respect for her. In fact, there was something in her gaze that reminded me of Shadow Weaver. This contempt and revulsion, as if she offended her by her's very existence. But there was something else, sparks of joyful cruelty. She hated this woman, even though she had just met her.

And again her thoughts returned to the Dark Sorceress. Will I ever be free from her? she thought bitterly and rubbed her temples. Then she saw Castaspella come in, so she waved at her and motioned for her to sit next to her. The Head Sorcerer looked very tired. Glimmer's Aunt laughed weakly at her and took her up on the invitation.

„You look exhausted...„ she said, and the sorceress groaned painfully.

„Everything has become terribly complicated, you can't even imagine how much. Almost everything was ready, but... our new guest made me have to rethink every aspect of the celebration! Everyone! And your... our guest is going to bring his... subordinates. Has Glimmer decided to do anything about it?" She asked almost pleadingly

Glimmer had not yet decided how she was going to respond to the Lord Admiral's request, and only then was she going to inform everyone of the arrival of the guests from beyond Empire.

„Not yet, but I haven't talked to her yet today... And can't Nightgale help you? Where she is?" she asked, because she hadn't seen the tall assistant anywhere lately.

„She received news that her sister had an accident and she needed to return home quickly to help her family." The Head Sorcerer sighed and added. "You don't really like her, do you?"

„You mean Shadow Weaver?" she asked Castaspela carefully. Glimmer's Aunt seemed to be touched by the mention of the Dark Sorcerer.

"Yes... You know, everything Aize said about that hag turned out to be true. She really made a Pact with this Nyarlathotep. But... " she leaned forward and added in a low voice. "She is alive Castaspella. This is the same Miss Daisy that was talked about at the dinner that time. She is here. I have no idea what he's planning, but I swear that if he's going to hurt any of my loved ones, then..." she dug her claws into the table top.

Asindesa di Vir felt she was falling into a bottomless pit. She came to this planet full of hope, with a heart full of love. She dreamed of a happy... perfect future with the one she loved... For a moment, for one brief moment, she tasted it, and then... Then she discovered the truth... Miss Daisy, the Shadow Weaver came from the planet that had been the destination of the entire expedition... she would have saved them all a lot problems and worries when she told the truth. But he was willing to accept that, because both the Order and the Lord Admiral had their secrets, as she had recently found out. But everything else…

Miss Daisy warned her that she was a war criminal. She accepted it because the Lord Admiral was not the hero he wanted to appear to everyone, she knew him too well to believe in his legend.

Besides, many Hell Knights had a lot on their conscience. The darkness always swirled around them, and few escaped being tainted by it. However, she served Horde, the same force that took her family away and her ruler committed evil beyond imagination. Moreover, she sold her soul to Nyarlathotepwi , another dark power. She served an enemy she swore to fight against at all costs. She was ready to give her life in the fight against his cultists, and now it turned out that she had given her heart to one of them... Such a thing was punishable by death according to the law of the Order. She didn't even have the right to cover herself with her own ignorance because everything was too obvious if you looked at it from the perspective of time. She should have guessed everything if she weren't so blinded . And there was something else. She could see the pain and hatred in the eyes of that girl, that Catra... How could she love someone like that?

There was also Lady Cala. She didn't believe that the girl was innocent and unaware of anything. She was too smart and too confident. She had to know everything. Now she saw her past in a completely different light. The mysterious deaths that haunted her family, growing up alone in Castle Grayskull, the sudden discovery of the extraordinary truth about her origins. Now it all fit together logically. But he needs to find out more.

She looked at the unusual sword she now held in her lap. As she stared at the weird inscriptions on his blade, she was sure of two things. That she still loves Miss Daisy and Hates Lady Cala Grayskull of Carurystal.

He smiled as he held the Child in his arms. Finally it fell asleep. He has been very restless lately and has had a hard time putting him to sleep. He wasn't sleeping well either... Since His brother and Shadow Weaver's visit, could that have anything to do with it?

Entrapta had been gone for almost two weeks and he was worried about her. This was probably another reason he couldn't sleep. At first they were only supposed to visit Netossa, but then his wife sent him a message that they were going to Frosta, then that they were going to the wastelands in search of the lost city. This was a ridiculous idea! They had a lot of work here on site. First onesartifacts and Horde Prime treasures to explore. The entire island is a mystery with its secrets to search. Even the ordinary everyday matters of life in the castle required them to work together. For example, repairing the sewage system. There was no point in worrying about other things.

It was all Catra's fault. He couldn't bring himself to trust his former commander. She almost killed his wife once, and she might do it again, even if not out of malice, then through negligence. Entrapta's instinct for self-preservation was not the best developed and you always had to keep an eye on her so that her curiosity didn't get her into trouble. He considered contacting Brightmoon and asking if they had heard from his wife, though it was hard for him to bring himself to ask the princess for anything...

The arrival of Shadow Weaver also unsettled him. The fact that she survived didn't really surprise him at all. Of all the people he knew, she was the most likely to fake her own death. But what she said about this man... This Antares filled him with terror. If she really was as evil as she claimed, then hiding on Beast Island was the most sensible option. But… He couldn't just hide here. He had a debt to this planet to repay... That was the only reason he agreed to meet with Shadow Weaver, but what he would do after that remained to be seen. The only certainty was that he would keep an eye on his former second in command hands.

And then he heard over the announcement that Entrapta had returned. He felt inexpressible relief and hugged the Child tighter.

„Mom will be here soon.” he whispered, smiling at them. He really liked being a father. Making something so small and fragile feel safe. See trust and love in their eyes. It was something his Big Brother would never understand.

„Hello Hordak, hello CHILD!” Entrapta shouted, and then the Child opened its Eyes and screamed.

„Mommy!” it screamed and broke free from his hands and grabbed the furniture with its hair and ran to its mother. He tried to make them asleep for two hours.

„You won't believe what happened. We ended up in this City of Elder Things that must have used technology completely unknown to us, but there was nothing left of it, and then Lonnie tried to kill us with such an extraordinary organic weapon, I tell you, it was truly amazing, I hope I can examine it! And then we were buried, but Shogoth dug us out and Adora appeared , and then Frosta was dethroned, it's very sad... But the best thing happened at the end. Catra's father has arrived from outside the Empire!

„Yes. His name is Lord Admiral Antares and he has a real fleet of war. He'll be here soon and we can check them out!”

I think Shadow Weaver left out a detail he thought glumly.

Nighrgale needed to leave Brightmoon as soon as possible. It wasn't difficult to come up with a relatively plausible story to justify her departure from the capital, but it would be much more difficult for her to return again. She may even have blown that cover forever. She'll have to come up with a new identity, but this time she'll have to use a shapeshifting spell instead of an Illusion spell, because another seven-foot woman might attract attention...

It took a long time to get back to Castle Crypto. She had to first get to the place where Nightgale was supposed to live. Then she had to find a safe place where she could take Scarlet's form. Fortunately, Nyarlathotep's cultists helped her maintain her cover. They also provided her with transportation. Lonnie never bothered to think about how her sorceress traveled so quickly across the planet. She put it all down to Scarlet's resourcefulness, which was actually very close to the truth..

As soon as she arrived at Castle Crypto, she immediately noticed that something had happened in her absence. The atmosphere was tense. Every Rebel member she saw looked scared and looked away from her. The first to approach her was Kyle . He still had that unusual sword on his belt, although he had gotten a new scabbard.

„Hi Scarlet. How good that you are here. How are you?" he asked, looking at her sympathetically. She sighed heavily and demanded.

„Just say what happened instead of going around the topic!"

Kyle looked down and said quietly.

„She's here, and she's not the only she."

She had a guess as to who he might be referring to, but Scarlet should have asked.

„Tell me who you mean. I can't read minds." she said, trying to sound angry.

„Shadow Weaver is here and she has come to us. I'm so sorry." he put his hand on her shoulder. She wondered for a moment why there was so much sympathy in his voice before she realized that Scarlet had reason to be afraid of their former lead officer, though maybe Kyle was more concerned about the real Scarlet. After all, it was obvious that she was related to the Dark Sorcerer. She herself was afraid of her mother's reaction. Will he reject her as much as her father? However, she decided to keep her blood alive in the winter and play the tough girl.

„Is this about the Lord Admiral, Catra's father? You know, Shadow Weaver already told us everything…” Kyle scratched his temple.” We have news for you too.

It didn't surprise her that her mother knew about the Lord Admiral and his relationship with the Grand Marshal. After all, knowing everything important had been one of her main tasks for years, and serving the Creeping Chaos also required similar skills from her. She was about to tell Kyle to take her to the General's companion anyway when she felt a tap on the back of her neck. She turned around abruptly and opened her mouth in disbelief. In front of her stood a cat-like girl, remarkably similar to Catra, she even had two”colored eyes, although her eyes were both blue and gold. She also had a strange metal arm and wore dark armor. She had a rifle on her back.

„Hey, Firehair! I guess you were my sister's friend too? I'm the second one, the scary one!”

Tirin this time participate in the council on the bridge. In fact, as a navigator, she should always have been involved, but she was often left out. To many of the crew, especially those recruited after Jadehell, she was just a crippled kid, even if she had a higher position than them. It was irritating, but she was used to it. The important thing is that the Captain respected her, the opinion of others did not matter much to her.

Breaking through the security systems of this entire Etheria wasn't difficult, at least not for the Merciless, which was designed as a Corsair ship after all. However, it must be admitted that the locals did not protect their planet very well, or perhaps they were too trusting and did not take into account the existence of ships like theirs. Merciless was too large for most landing sites in the Galaxy, and on a planet like that they certainly had nothing suitable for them.

Since the events of Wherever, Moonshadow had been visibly shaken. She didn't witness the events in that bar, but she knew that something happened there that really moved the captain. Many of the crew whispered among themselves that their captain had lost her temper again, although they used much more offensive words. Things calmed down a bit when they arrived on this planet, but things were still tense.

They stopped at a large rainforest called the Singing Jungle by the locals, quite close to the capital of this place called Eternalsong. The crew members went there to buy some fresh food, have some fun and learn something new. Captain Moonshadow decided to stay on board... Just in case. Now they discussed what they had learned and what they should do next.

„Well then." began Boatswain Kaert. „There's a big party coming up in the capital. They celebrate the victory over the Horde and... There is to be a wedding between Adora She"Ra and some Grand Marshal and between Queen Glimmer and a Techmaster Bow." The Boatswain paused, waiting for the Captain's reaction. She trembled when she heard the queen's name. She heard that Queen of Etheria was the daughter of Captain Moonshadow. When she thought about it , she felt a twinge of jealousy, although she was very ashamed of it. The captain was the closest thing she had to a mother. Her birth mother was… well, she was the reason her body was twisted. If she hadn't run away with her to the poisonous forest...

„Someone will have to go to the Capital. To Brightmoon, Captain Moonshadow said." Someone will have to find out where they keep their treasures. We will make the jump during the Victory Day celebrations. – she added. Kaert and Gydwa exchanged glances. She knew they were thinking the same thing as her. About the sword that the captain lost.

„Only the locals, if they don't have fruit jelly instead of brains, would definitely hang our memory portraits wherever possible, and to find such a Tonado, they wouldn't even need portraits, because all they have to do is order the arrest of anyone with six hands fur ball they see.”

The first mate gave him a murderous look, but the boatswain was right. They fought with this Adora and they definitely know what they all look like... Except...

„I can go.” she said and everyone on the bridge looked at her in disbelief so she added. “No one saw me on Ikarus, probably no one even knows if I exist.”

„So the little cripple wants to be useful?” Gydwa asked her, smiling maliciously. Veska never liked her, but she won't be provoked. She simply nodded and said.

„Exactly. I am a crippled girl, petite and nice. No one will suspect me of being a pirate. Besides, I have nothing to do as a navigator anyway.”

The others began to consider her words, but Captain Monshadow looked at her with concern in her eyes.

„Are you sure you can handle it?” she said, and Tirin felt herself blushing behind her mask.

„I swear I do. Captain. I know that I must be strong, that I must be brave, but I can really be like that!”

The Winged Pirate looked at her for a moment, then nodded and said...

„Agreement. I hope I don't regret this”

Death in His eyes

Chapter Notes

Here's another entry in my Fan Fic. Kane is Created by Karl Wagner. Please leave your comments and opinions.

Bina woke up and started looking around. She was in a large leather tent, lying on a thick layer of blankets. She wasn't sure what planet she was on or what had happened to her recently. She only remembered that it was something terrible. She was probably in some underground place where something attacked them, she was probably fighting powerful being in tomb and then... something happened earlier. She was supposed to warn someone about something, something extremely important. Suddenly her eyes widened as she remembered who she was thinking about. Her kids... Miss Daisy is a Shadow Weaver! She jumped to her feet and immediately doubled over, feeling a shooting pain in her arm. Oh yeah, she got hurt fighting a damn Archon . She cursed several times, getting up slowly this time so as not to be overwhelmed by a wave of Pain again, and then moved to leave the tent. She needed to get to Brightmoon as quickly as possible . He has to save his kids...

„Take it easy, tough guy. They say that scarlet owls will chew up the weak and spit them out, but on you that would probably break your teeth.” Huntara said with respect in her voice. She offered her arm and helped her outside.

Tung there Lashor, and members of his gang who occupied the camp . As soon as he saw her, Tromlin waved at her friendly, still with the whip in his paw. Zgniotek was parked far away from the camp. His back was turned towards them, which indicated that he was offended. He could be extremely irritable and moody.

„How did you manage to get him to give you a ride?” she asked with undisguised surprise in her voice.

„It was not easy. At first he didn't want to let us in. Tung Lashor wanted to challenge him to a duel and they both loved the idea, so I literally had to wave you in front of the mask to convince him. He asked if it was the small cars, I don't know what he meant.” explained the Princess of the Wastes.

„ It's his quirk, out of respect for your mental health, it's better not to delve into it.„ She explained and tried to move forward, but the pain shot through her again and she offered her arm to Huntara again. “I need to get to Brightmoon as soon as possible. This bitch is alive and has my kids. You understand? I brought her here... I didn't know she was her. I wouldn't have agreed to bring her here if I'd known who she is „What are you talking about?” Huntara asked, looking at her with complete lack of understanding. Bina wiped her forehead and said.

„We brought your Shadow Weaver, that nasty bitch you were talking about! Wrongdak’s brother right hand woman. You know, Hordak’s Right Hand ….

„She's dead, it must be someone like her. The dead stay dead, there is nothing more certain in the world. – Huntara said with a mixture of confidence and concern in her voice. She looked at her with concern. I guess she thought Bina was crazy. But then Tung Lashor approached them.

„Maybe not here, but necromancy is widely practiced in the galaxy. I remember one time we had a campaign promoting a new line of bone whitener. It didn't sell well.” said the lizard with sadness in his voice. Huntara looked at him like he was crazy.

„Well, once I saw in some store a product advertised as "Providing natural bone whiteness"„ she said thoughtfully. “But what am I talking about? We have to go to Brightmoon because that bitch kidnapped my kids. Fuck, that's why she was so fascinated by Eti...”

„Who kidnaped Cat-girl?” Tromlin looked at them suspiciously .

„Your Shadow Weaver. I brought her here, although in my defense I had absolutely no idea who she was.” explained A Tung Lashor looked at her in surprise.

„The Shadow Weaver was the undead! That would actually explain a lot.” he scratched his with his clawed fingers. She shrugged.

„She didn't seem to be undead, but I don't know anything about this sort of thing. Maybe Lady Cala… Holy shit!” she cursed when she remembered the young aristocrat.

„What Lady Cala?” Huntara asked with resignation. She was clearly overwhelmed by the recent news.

„Miss Daisy's ward... this is Shadow Weaver. Lady Cala is Shadow Weaver's ward, a very wealthy aristocrat from Carurystal, though I'm not sure what their relationship really is. She claims to be a descendant of that Mara, but I don't know how much truth there is in it, especially now it seems suspicious. We transported her and the other members of her expedition here, and then Cala took some of them to go to one place... How long was I unconscious?” she asked Huntara .

„Two days... „ said the older warrior, and Bina uttered a string of curses.

„I don't know if they're still alive. If this girl is what Dilayla thought she was…” Bina bit her lip. Of that group, she appreciated only Dilayla. Arkan-tar, Rechiza, Doctor Quin didn't concern her. They weren't very nice to her kids, who were the most important people to her. She had to save them at all costs... Even at the cost of several other people's lives.

On the other hand, she had no idea where to look for Shadow Weaver. She had no ship or other support, apart from Huntara and Lashor , and she wasn't sure she could rely on the latter. Perhaps the queen would be willing to listen to her, especially when the desert warrior was with her, but... Damn, she couldn't leave them to die... Perhaps they were okay and continued their excavations safely... But could she have them on her conscience... She remembered. about a that family that Igzar left Kesler for dead while taking their car. Motherhood had softened her, and once she would have had no scruples about letting them die. She sighed and said.

„Okay, I'll go to Brightmoon, you find Lady Cala and the rest... I'll give you the coordinates, I think I even have their communicator frequency. Try to capture Lady Cala alive, but I warn you it won't be easy. She is an incredibly formidable fighter and if you have no choice, don't hesitate to take her out. Huntara , could you write me a letter of introduction or something like that, because I need to contact the queen as soon as possible and warn her." Bina said and started packing.

Kane looked around. He was in the middle of hills covered with dense vegetation, mostly short, thorny trees and bushes. The area was desolate, although the planet was generally not densely populated. There were probably a dozen or so million creatures living here, maybe twenty at most. Even his Carurystal, which was called a galactic village, was a metropolis compared to Etheria , although on the other hand this place could not be denied a certain charm. It reminded him of the old days, before the young races took off into the stars. Although how long ago was that? How many millennia have passed since then? He couldn't count, and it didn't really matter anyway. What happened will not come back, longing for what has passed is vain. At least that's what he always told himself, perhaps deceiving himself. Nostalgia had always haunted him, and sometimes the weight of the past centuries overwhelmed him so much that he was unable to do anything else but drift in the ocean of memories. One hasn't experienced this for a long time. Since arriving on Carurystal. Perhaps it was due to the Break, which had deprived him of much of his memories. Maybe it was the nature of his planet, where so little had changed, that was responsible for this. He wasn't sure and preferred not to go into it, he was enjoying this short period of respite. A peace he didn't deserve.

After the first meeting with Shadow Weaver, he had a feeling that this woman was bringing great changes, that she was not who she seemed. He was sure of this when he found her in the library, looking for information about Krannor Rill. He considered killing her before she destroyed his wonderful oasis of peace. He could have sent assassins or some terrible demonic creature after her, but something told him that this was how it should be, that nothing lasted forever. That he cannot hide for eternity from the inexorable rush of history, turning away from the universe, because the universe will not forget about him. That's why he joined this expedition organized by Prince Zed and Doctor Sidonius, fully aware that he would probably never be able to return home.

However, there were also other reasons why he went on this expedition, although he realized some of them only after arriving on this planet. At first he thought it was the first bout of nostalgia in centuries. He felt like deja vu, only much stronger. Memories flooding him from all sides, as if they were trying to materialize in his mind, but at the same time fading into nothingness at the last moment. He guessed what it meant. His mind reacted differently to the Gap. It didn't completely deprive him of his memories of his old life, it just made them hazy, hidden behind translucent glass. He could sometimes decipher them with some effort as long as he was near an object or place associated with it. And this place brought back shadows of many memories, not very pleasant ones... No, it wasn't, it wasn't precise sentnce. It would be better to say very dark. Something terrible happened here a long time ago and he was involved. Unfortunately, he couldn't remember anything specific. He remained as unaware as the nice inhabitants of this planet.

Their ship Memory landed near Eternalsong, the capital of a country ruled by Princess Sweetbee, a strange winged Lashunti.

The capital had suffered greatly at the hands of Horde Prime and was now being rebuild. For this reason, many inhabitants of even distant kingdoms, such as Salinea or the Kingdom of Snow, came here and helped with the reconstruction. The native inhabitants of the region, mainly the local variety of Lashunta and Strix, showed them some reserve, but considering what they had experienced during the war, they showed them much more cordiality than they could have expected. Prince Zed and Dhampir Daughter of Doctor Sidonius paid a visit to the Princess, Doctor Sidonius had gone to Brightmoon for a purpose known only to him, and he had come here to seek... He wasn't sure what. Probably his own past, although he wasn't sure if he would like what he found...

On the other hand, he wasn't sure if he would find anything here. So many centuries had passed... At first glance, Etheria seemed like a place where time had stood still, but even here, constant and inevitable changes were taking place. The landscape was changing, and even if his memory hadn't been obscured by the fog, he still wouldn't have been able to recognize this place. But he could have searched them in a more traditional way. In his time, he had explored many of the ruins left by the Elder Races, guided only by vague references in forbidden tomes. He was really good at it, almost as good as he was at killing. Unfortunately, the results of these searches were usually far from expectations.

This place was not always as desolate as it is now. When he climbed one of the higher hills, he discovered that the terrain showed that it had been leveled in ancient times to make a road for heavy vehicles, perhaps tanks? It would not be easy to notice something like this for someone who was not as familiar as he was with the remains of ancient technological civilizations. However, there were traces of a much more recent presence of Intelligent beings. Paths in the forest, remnants of camps that have been broken up many times over the decades. He even found traces of dragging a large block of rock. Most of these remains were at least five years old, if not older. This was not surprising, because recently the locals had gained access to much more efficient means of transport...

However, he eventually found something much fresher. Clues of a group of Humanoids , including one wearing power armor, which suggested that they may not be from this planet. They didn't try to hide, they were very confident for guests on a foreign and unknown planet. It was very interesting. So he decided to follow in their footsteps and he did a very good job. He came to the top of a hill where he saw a statue. It represented Chaugnar Faugn, one of the less influential Old Ones, largely because his followers shunned civilization, his much less monstrous descendants were much more influential. The sight of the statue, while definitely disturbing and thought-provoking, was actually irrelevant considering the reason he had come here. It was far too new and made with tools too primitive to be the work of one of the ancient civilizations, and it did not stir any of his memories. Much more important was the place he seemed to be guarding. It was a tunnel leading deep underground, where something extremely important was hidden, something he almost remembered...

Centuries spent in the safety of Carurystal made him lose some habits, but his wild instinct of a murderer, a predator who without blinking an eye shed the blood of anyone who stood in his way. Therefore, although he forgot about caution and did not sneak to this place as he would have done in the old days, he still dodged a second before the attack. A beam of electricity hit the spot where he had just been standing. The beam was fired from a weapon held by Strix woman, and her Lashuntian companion stood behind with a machete. Stryxa looked at him in bewilderment, clearly not expecting her target to dodge, clearly he had no experience in fighting, so he jumped at her, stabbing her with a dagger into her throat, then jumped at her companion and knocked her to the ground with a shoulder blow, which caused the woman to release her weapon. He grabbed her hand by the wrist and pressed it to the ground.

„Tell me who you are and what you are doing here!” he growled menacingly, staring at her with his blue, cold eyes that reflected death. The sight of those blue eyes of his often made others more terrified than a blade held to their throat.

„Lady, she told us to. Let's all keep an eye on this place. And she ordered her to take care of the prisoners, even though the latter had taken them. We… „She burst into tears, clearly unable to cope with the situation, so he spoke in a calmer voice.

„We are the servants of the Mistress Of All Life.” she mentioned the name of one of the gentlest aspects of Shub-Niggurath . “Lady Cala participated in our rituals and then ordered us to come here and take care of the people trapped here. But we're not like that, we just want to honor life in all its aspects, and those... They were terrible. They worship this horror, whose statue was built here. But even they weren't as scary as Lady Cala. She seemed nice, at least at first, but then she turned out to be a monster ... Those people, they want to sacrifice them. I'm just a teacher, I didn't sign up for such things. I never wanted to hurt anyone. I don't really want to die anyway. Please don't hurt me.”

He thought about her request for a moment and decided he would spare her. He was neither merciful nor cruel, and did not kill or harm others unless he felt the need to do so. He became curious about the issue of prisoners. They certainly had extremely important information. However, they were probably guarded by fanatical cultists and perhaps worse things. Did he really want to risk his life for them? He thought for a moment. He was genuinely curious about what they had to say. He has already risked his life for lesser reasons...

„Which direction did they go?” he asked in a gentle voice. The woman showed him which direction to go, tracking down the cultists dragging prisoners behind them probably won't be difficult. He decided to let the woman go, rather she would stop worshiping the Ancient Ones once he understood what it entailed. But then he heard a scream.

Well, someone who shouts throughout the forest that his name is Tung Lashor is certainly not a cultist of the darkness beyond the stars. He could also use some help, he was a good warrior, but it's always better to have support... So he ordered the woman to stand up and let her go ahead.

She stared at that idiot Tung Lashor in disbelief. She never thought they would work together one day. What's more, she was just discovering that he wasn't an idiot, at least not like she had previously thought him to be. Somehow he got here from outside Etheria. He's someone as extraordinary as Adora and Hordak . Until now, everyone believed that only two people had arrived on Etheria during the time it was hidden in Despondos, but it turned out that there was a third one right under her nose, and one with connections to some great power outside the empire. She didn't understand much of Bina's story , except that the Aspis Consortium seemed dangerous. She didn't say whether she might have hostile intentions towards Etheria and it was difficult to learn anything specific from Tung Lashor.. He began to tell his gang members about the greatness of the Consortium, even though he said terrible generalities or things that they did not understand at all. Now, for example, he was praising meat mondays. She was sure of one thing. From an ordinary idiot he became a dangerous idiot.

With Bina they separated two days ago. Tung Lashor gave her two members of his gang to escort him to the Valley. He chose those who seemed to be quite composed, especially Kublodka, who seemed to be quite sensible. The burgundy-haired traveler lent them this strange carrier, even though traveling in it was one of the most terrifying experiences. The vehicle drove itself and, deprived of its owner, paid no attention to the health of its organic passengers. He took them as far as he could, which was definitely further than she wanted. It was definitely too much for her old bones. They followed the directions of Tung 's Datapad, Bina uploaded the appropriate data to him. They had to make their way through the jungle, and neither she nor the Aspis chief knew the area well, but several of the reptile’s subordinates were from here, so they made their journey much easier. They were almost to their destination when they heard the snap of branches and suddenly two people emerged from between the trees. One of them was the Vespid woman. She seemed both terrified and distraught, like a criminal caught in the act being led into custody by the entire village. Her hands were even tied. However, it was her companion who attracted much more attention. He was a tall and powerful man. He had reddish-red hair and his face looked wild, even brutal. His eyes were the worst. Cold, light blue. They seemed to emanate an inner glow. She felt as if Death itself was lurking in them. He was dressed in a surprisingly elegant outfit, resembling a suit or uniform, but he seemed to wear it like armor. He was armed with a sword and a pistol, although he also had a rifle on his back. He looked at her and she shuddered involuntarily.

„ What's the point... „ Tung growled Lashor approached Kane but he looked at him and the lizard doubted his abilities.

„I've been following you for some time and eavesdropping. You could only go to this place for three reasons.” Kane continued, smiling gently. „Either you are cultists who want to perform dark rituals here, or you are looking for ancient ruins of the First civilization, or you want to free several people imprisoned by these cultists in order to assemble them into cultists. You are definitely not cultists, and in the remaining two cases I can help you.”

„How? We have to save my friend's companions. If you can lead us to them, we would love to have your help.” She said, completely unsure if she should trust him.

„Not only will I take you to them, but I will even help free them. I kill things and I'm pretty good at it.” his eyes lit up and she realized that death really was lurking there.

She woke up with a terrible headache. She tried to reach out to check the damage, but something was holding her hand. When she opened her eyes, a wave of nausea and pain washed over her. Even though it was dark around her, she saw flashes of light. She hoped she didn't suffer brain damage. She looked at her hand, it was handcuffed to the floor, her legs were tied with chains. They did not look very strong, those who put them on did not know the possibilities of modern military prostheses. However, before she could free herself, she had to find out what happened to her and where she actually was. The last thing she remembered was Lady Cala, with a surprised face, throwing a backpack filled with explosives at them. The plan was good, but they didn't expect that this bastardess would throw it so quickly.

She saw Rehiza staring glumly ahead. Her hands were tied tightly behind her back. Next to her lay Arkan-tar, looking thoughtful, and Dr. Quin, who looked obviously pissed. Ysoka looked at her and said furiously.

„Oh, she's already awake! Great! Now break those chains and break some heads until the brains fall out from between your fingers! These idiots broke most of my equipment. I rented some of it and now I will have to buy it back with my own money! Ignorant people like them don't deserve to live.”

Well, it must be admitted that Ysoka's breve spirit gave her some encouragement. She tried to get up, but then she felt dizzy. She felt nauseous and vomited. Rechiza turned to her and smiled wryly.

„You got hit in the head really hard. You lay covered in boulders for several hours, so we weren't sure if you survived. In fact, if it weren't for those bastards trying to take your armor, you'd still be lying there. Maybe that would be better for you?”

She didn't like Laszunti's words or her resigned tone, but the Warper had always been a fatalist. Dilayla wasn't going to give up.

„Maybe you'd better tell me what happened!” she growled, and then Arkan tar spoke up in a very tired voice.

„ You took most of the shock wave, so it was only bruised. Unfortunately, the tunnel was buried and we were trapped for several hours, maybe even a whole day, until we were dug out. Unfortunately, the people who did this were cultists, I didn't expect them on this planet, but considering who Lady Cala and Miss Daisy are, and what the statue we found represented, it shouldn't surprise me at all. The aristocrat, of course, survived the explosion that no mortal could. They dug us out and detained us immediately. We tried to resist, or rather, Rechiza tried, but they teargassed us and electrocuted Rechiza... Really, someone should start requisitioning the Horde's old equipment, because it ends up in the hands of those who shouldn't. They somehow took off your armor, I admit I helped them, because they were going to cut it with a blowtorch and then they brought us here.”

She sighed and asked.

„Where is it HERE and can you guess what they are going to do with us?” the mercenary asked in an irritated voice.

„ Some complex of caves and gorges. They made their base here. I think they're organizing or something.” said Verthani, and Lashuntka added.

„They are mostly followers of various Great Old Ones, emigrating all over the planet to worship various beings in their holy places. They are led by Nyarlathotep's cultists, but they do not dominate here. And what are they going to do with us... It's probably quite clear. They want to sacrifice us to Chaugnar Faugn, or rather to one of his brothers, which is somewhat ironic considering the history of this place.”

Dilayla sighed heavily. Everyone had their time. It was important to choose how to leave.

„Over my dead body.” the mercenary growled.

They came for them in the evening. They didn't seem to care that Dilayla was conscious, luckily for them. They led them out of the cave in which they were held and led them to a low hollow in the center of which was a statue of Chaugnar Faugn. Arkan-tar could tell at first glance that there was something unnatural about him. The stone it was made of seemed almost organic. His amazing glasses had not been taken away from him, and he could see the shadows of his past swirling around him. He didn't really like what they were doing, but that was what he expected to see.

The cultists were among the many species that inhabited Etheria, and most did not appear to be true fanatics. They seemed more scared than Verthani's companions. However, the group of followers was large enough to enforce obedience. They were lined up in a row in front of the statue and a woman dressed in black robes.

„The Cultist of Nyarlathotep, along with the cults of Great Cthulhu and Hastur, are the most powerful, but it is rare for their cultists to lead rituals for other ancient ones. Apparently they have a staff shortage." Rechiza murmured quietly, and the priestess began to speak.

„Embrace your shadows. Look deep within yourself and release what you hide in your own hearts. Listen to the whispers coming from the darkness. To ascend, every being must free itself from the shackles that society imposes on us. Embrace your shadows, for they are your true Self. Follow your instincts. Surrender to your innermost desires, your darkest emotions, for only a free being can rise to create your own destiny. " the woman spoke and rubbed her hand, then placed it on the statue and then began to chant in Aklo, the language of the ancient races. Unfortunately for him, Arkan-tar knew this language and his bones shuddered when he heard it. So then it was time to act. Dilayla broke the shackles and shattered the skull of the nearest cultist with one powerful blow, while she grabbed the Electric Baton from the other and shocked him with it. At the same time, a laser fired from Ysoka's cybernetic eye, hitting the priestess in the base of her skull, killing her instantly. With her hands bound, Rechiza could not cast spells, but she was able to distort reality, causing the cultists to start suffocating in poisonous fumes, and Verthani took a knife and began to cut the Warper's bonds.

The four of them moved back closer to the statue, their backs to it. They probably won't survive this fight, but it's better to die in battle than to be slaughtered. He smiled bitterly, because this was not the fate he expected when he joined this expedition. But then he heard battle cries from everywhere and a swarm of warriors ran on ropes into the valley. Most of them were lizardmen, kobolds, and other creatures with the symbol of the Aspis Consortium on their chests. They were led by Tromlin with a strange whip and an orcish woman. However, the greatest slaughter was caused by a huge man with blood-colored hair. Arkan-tar was sure that death itself lurked in his bright blue eyes.

After less than a minute, the fight was won with no losses to their relief side. Almost all the true cultists died, the rest surrendered.

„I'm Huntara, Bina sent me here to save you... Is Lady Cala alive?!” the orc woman asked.

„Unfortunately, she is difficult to kill.” Dilayla said, smiling evilly.

„We'll see... She hasn't met me yet. As you saw, I'm really good at killing.” said the man with eyes like the heart of winter.

A bit of tenderness

Chapter Notes

> Well, here's the next chapter. I must admit that I really liked Nightgale. Please feel free to post your comments and opinions here.

She was present on main plaza, when Lonnie swore her not-so-temporary wards as friends of the Rebellion, a military formation specially invented for them. She had to admit that Comrade General showed exceptional composure, because Bina's wards were not used to official ceremonies. Alatar was constantly looking into the Datapad, Lilka was fidgeting and looking around. Eti stared at Lonnie with her head tilted to the side, like a cat curious about a small defenseless animal, of course, only when she wasn't translating to Rosie what the Comrade General was saying. The glasses that allowed the deaf girl to understand what others were saying to her still hadn't been repaired. Now she stood with her head down, scared and lost. The perpetrator of the whole situation, Itel, stood to the side sullenly, not very good at hiding her guilt and anger. These were the children she had been entrusted with, and now she had to take care of them, even though Crawling Chaos himself knew he was not fit for it. If it weren't for the Lord Admiral, cursed by devils and demons, she would have liked to have sent them back to Brightmoon, where they would have been better taken care of, although the wild beasts would probably have taken care of them better than she ... What she wouldn't give to be able to drink something stronger.

„Okay, that's all from me for now. Any questions?” Lonnie turned to her new rebels and was very surprised when all five of them raised their hands .

„Can I see your computer servers? And in general, you have a terribly cumbersome interface on your computers. Has anyone here ever heard of computer mice and ergonomic keyboards? – Alatar asked

„I really need pumpkin spice for real orc pumpkin pie... and chocolate! And some popcorn ! And corn too! Because the Bone Festival is approaching! The coolest festival! Orcish one!” Lilka said, jumping up after saying each sentence.

„When will we finally start doing something instead of talking pointless, meaningless shit?!” Itel asked in a sharp voice.

„I don't have any questions, but Rosie has two. When will you fix her glasses and gloves so she can talk to us again, and when will I get the tank?”

Lonnie stared at them silently, only the twitching of her eyelid giving away her annoyance. She took a deep breath and answered the kids in the order they asked their questions.

„We have the computers we have, you have to deal with it. The spice is in the third warehouse on the northern ledge, ask the quartermaster about the rest. You don't decide when and what we will do, you just listen to orders. We're working on fixing them, and you'll get the tank over my dead body.”

Everyone, more or less satisfied, dispersed, except for Eti, who looked at the Companion General for a moment before she spoke.

„So it was a figure of speech, not a proposal? Ok, but think about it, I'm sure i’m a great tank driver.„ the cat girl said, but Lonnie gave her a dark look, so she waved her hand and said. “Okay, I'm going with Sparklepaw to look for Blonde boy, I'm sure he misses us.” Eti and the white-haired girl went along.

Lonnie was about to head back to her quarters, but then she spoke

„You did it well, Lonnie.” she said, coming closer, but Comrade General gave her a suspicious look.

„ What do you want? I know you're not saying this out of the goodness of your heart... „ she growled sharply.

„It's just a statement of fact.” she tried to keep her voice impassive, even though she knew that her former protégé was right, at least partially.

„All these years you spoke kind words Only to Adora, and even then only when she was polite and obedient, so leave the flattery... „ Lonnie spoke angrily and then smiled, causing the scar on her face to twist nastily. “Were you this nice towards Glimmer too? I heard you taught her sorcery...”

She nodded and said in a thoughtful voice.

„Glimmer was an extremely bright student, perhaps the brightest I ever had, even surpassing her father...”

Lonnie let out a short laugh.

„If one of us showed such talent... Tell me, would you get rid of him yourself or organize an accident?” she asked, walking up to her and looking her straight in the eye.

„I don't know, honestly. Hordak hated magic, even mine, but I doubt he would let me condemn someone just for being talented, if not out of compassion then to annoy me and provide me competitor. Fortunately, we will never have to find out.” she said, and then Grizoll approached them . His species in the Galaxy was known as Bugbears and had a disreputable reputation. She didn't know much about his kin on Etheria, the former Force Captain was the only one of his species she'd ever met and their relationship wasn't very good, though she couldn't actually recall having a good relationship with anyone since leaving Mystacor. Not as a Shadow Weaver.

Grizoll spoke to Lonnie in a low voice for a moment, and then the Comrade General looked at her and smiled again and said.

„But I guess you'll be able to see what you would do if one of us started using sorcery... Do you remember Scarlet?”

She barely remembered Scarlet. The red-haired cadet stood out mainly because she was almost inconspicuous. Now she understood why. The only sorceress of the Rebellion was waiting for them near the castle entrance gate, next to the car repair shop. Eti was talking to her, and Rosie was standing next to cat-girl, looking at everyone with a slightly frightened look. Since fight with Itel, the deaf girl had been withdrawn and lethargic, not least because of her inability to communicate with others, not including Eti. What happened there was unbelievable and she had no idea what it could mean. The girl had already shown amazing abilities, especially for a intern, but the Galaxy was full of wonders. She saw many completely unknown kinds of power, Solarians drawing power from photons and gravity created energy weapons and armor, Vangards using the power of Entropy protected and destroyed, and Evolutionists constantly mutated their bodies. The fact that the girl was able to lift the truck was amazing, but what happened to her magic... Rosie not only resisted her spell, but actually began to drain her power, like a leech devouring her, perhaps even would have consumed her if it weren't for withdrew its power. Now she had to wonder who... or what the deaf girl was. Rosie herself had no idea who she was and stayed close only to Eti...

The mystery of the cat girl... both cat girls was explained... At least to a large extent, because she had the feeling that there was something else hidden in the whole story, the last piece of the puzzle... But she didn't even know which way to look to find it... But at least Eti was safe, but Catra... What plans could her father have for her? And also towards Adora and the rest? What could he be planning? She knew she had to find out and warn both girls about him in some way. That's why she needed Lonnie's help...

It's just that there was a certain Risk involved in being here. Almost all members of the People's Rebellion knew her and knew what she was capable of. Many were former cadets and saw with their own eyes how he treated Catra and hers other students. How will Eti react when she finds out how she hurt her sister? The scout herself suffered a lot and it is doubtful whether she would forgive her. And it was only a matter of time until he found out the truth. She liked to pick on the cadets, especially Kyl-, who knew her well... It was good that the blond-haired boy didn't hide any secrets. He had some ridiculous sword on his belt, from what she had heard, it was a treasure he had picked up on his last expedition, kids like him often got attached to worthless things, and he was in a relationship with Lonnie and Rogelio, but apart from that he was just Kyle .

„Good afternoon, Scarlet." she said, trying to sound as neutral as possible. The Sorceress turned to her abruptly and said.

„ Good afternoon Shadow Weaver... I'm so glad to see you safe and sound." although her voice was calm, she could feel the tension in her, which was understandable, although she had the impression that there was something incongruent with the whole situation, but she couldn't say what.

„I'm glad to see you too. And congratulations on discovering a new talent, one of the many advantages of my absence on Etheria." she said, trying to smile in a friendly way, but she could feel that Lonnie and Kyle were watching her with great tension, as if they expected that tentacles of darkness would soon rush towards the young sorceress to choke the life out of her. This would have been unlikely even in the old days, she knew much more subtle ways to eliminate those who stood in her way, but the fears were fully justified. There was a very awkward silence, which was broken only by Eti.

„Apart from Grimmy, we also have another spellcaster . Her name is Ireanis, and unlike your former boss, she can be really dangerous." when she said this, she also translated her words into sign language. Scarlet looked at the cat-like girl again, and her face showed surprise combined with disbelief, a very common reaction to Eti's words...

„So there are more of you? – Never mind... I bring very important information, although from what she has heard, some of it is known to you, but probably not all of it. There are still a few important things we need to discuss.” said the younger sorceress, turning to them. She nodded, but said.

„Agreed, but I'll solve one problem first... „ she said and saw that Lonnie and Kyle looked at her worriedly, apparently thinking of another way of solving problems. Well, what he is about to do will also cause others pain, although of a different kind than they expected.

Itel stood with her back against the wall and stared at her blade, which she summoned and unsummoned mechanically. She tried not to think about what she had done. Or what Eti said. But it was impossible. Eti's words kept ringing in her ears. " but nothing more ". They resonated in her soul, tugging at it and tearing it to shreds. She hadn't realized before how much she loved the cat girl. That love, never spoken aloud, but she could always hold on to. It was a support, an anchor that helped her control her anger. The same anger that caused her to lose her. She was furious with that deaf girl. For lying to them. She knew from the beginning who they all worked for. She may have been unaware, but if they had known the Lord Admiral was coming here then... It wouldn't have changed anything. She persuaded everyone into this expedition to find a cure for Captain Blazebringer. It is more important than anything in the world... More important than even than... than love for Eti? She rubbed her temples. Wasn't it possible to have the one you love and get revenge at the same time? “You can't have another person's love, you can only receive it.” She remembered a quote from some idiotic book of Alatar. She wanted to cry and scream like a little child, but she couldn't. She hadn't been able to since Kesler's destruction .

„I think we should talk.„ she heard the voice of Miss Daisy, or rather Shadow Weaver. She immediately pulled herself together. He won't show weakness in front of that bitch.

”I have nothing to tell you!” she shouted to a woman who emerged from the shadows between the buildings. The dark sorceress looked at her with a serious face. She felt as if those strange yellow eyes were looking deep into her soul. She shuddered. She hasn't worn a holographic mask since they arrived here. Everyone in the rebellion feared her, and it was becoming increasingly difficult to look at her as a useless old woman „Unfortunately, I think we need to discuss recent events, although I'm probably not the best person to do so.” she sighed and continued. ”But there's probably no one else here with enough experience.”

Itel let out a broken laugh.

„Don't try to play the caring nanny here! I have eyes and ears. I see how they look at you and hear what they say about you.”

Shadow Weaver smiled grimly.

„ Indeed, my past has caught up with me here and I will have to face it, but it does not concern you.” the Dark Mystic was saying, but Itel interrupted her.

„We are here among your former wards, so I guess it concerns us.” she approached the gloomy elf so that she could look her straight in the eye. “And Eti? What do you want from her! I know how badly you treated her sister! Do you think that if you are nice to her, you will redeem yourself? "Bullshit," she smiled contemptuously, but then stepped back as the shadows lengthened and darkness swirled around her. Several former cadets looked their way. They seemed scared. Maybe she overdid it this time... But she won't humble herself... She won't apologize.

„I didn't treat her badly, I just tried to turn her life into a nightmare. You don't know how many nights she cried... How many times she screamed in pain when I punished her for the slightest insubordination, or simply when I was in a worse mood. And the worst thing was that she wanted my love all this time, almost until the very end. I raised Adora with the belief that she deserves love only if she gives everything she has, including her life. I was no better to Lonnie, Kyle and the rest, and that's just small part of the evil I did. There is no redemption for me, I know it well... I can only avoid making the mistakes of the past... and prevent others from following this path." Shadow Weaver sighed deeply and withdrew the darkness she had summoned. "I know what love is... And I lost it, irrevocably and forever... But you don't have to lose it. There are different types of love. Maybe you won't get the one you want, but you can replace it with something else... Some say that friendship is a much deeper and nobler feeling... Perhaps you will also manage to meet someone who will love you back. Life sometimes disappoints us, but it also surprises us positively." said the Dark Sorceress and left her alone with her pain and sadness. Itel sighed heavily and left as well. She had to find Eti and Rosie and do the last thing left to her.

Rosie stared at Kyle explaining to Eti what life was like in the Rebellion, or at least that's what she thought, because despite Eti's efforts, the cat-girl was unable to translate everything what the blond-haired boy was saying. She felt as if she had gone back to the very beginning, to the moment when she was found by the research ship. Back then she didn't have glasses or gloves for a while and had no idea what others were saying to her... No, it was much worse now. She was already used to this equipment and now she felt completely helpless. She had to wait for it to be fixed, but at the same time she was very afraid of it. What others will say about her. She saw fear and distrust in the eyes of the others, except for Eti and, surprisingly, Kyle, though in the latter case she didn't understand why. This fear was fully justified. She finally did something terrible, she almost killed her friend, if it weren't for Eti, she would have succeeded. And the worst thing was that she didn't remember anything. It had happened to her twice before. Once during training with Lady Cala, and the second time when Captain Moonshadow attacked Adora, but in this cease she didn't hurt anyone. It definitely had to do with her extraordinary fighting skills. She had always enjoyed them so far. She had found them useful many times during this expedition, using them to defend herself and her friends, but now she suspected that they had the same source as the power that filled her when she fell into a trance. She could never afford it again, now she was even afraid to train with Eti that she would hurt her.

Suddenly she felt a hand on her shoulder and she turned around abruptly, instinctively taking a fighting stance, but she immediately relaxed and lowered her head when she saw that Itel was standing in front of her. She felt ashamed. At first she hid the truth from them, maybe she didn't know that it was so terrible and that the Lord Admiral was the father of Eti and that Catra, that he was someone evil. And then she tried to kill her ... if she hadn't been stopped... Then Eti said something that hurt the elven warrior greatly. I guess she knew what she meant. That they, Eti and Itel will no longer be together. It was probably her fault too... Now the Solarian was trying to talk to her, she seemed sad instead of angry as she should have been. For a moment she didn't know what to do, and then she threw her arms around the elf's neck and burst into tears. She tried to apologize, but it was difficult to speak sign language when hugging someone. Itel also started crying and hugged back. After a while, Eti approached them. A tear rolled down the cat”like girl's face.

„Whose side is this Lady Cala on?” she asked the Dark Sorceress. Shadow Weaver and Scarlet were in her quarters, a rather modest room furnished only with a table with maps and a few chairs. She was apprehensive about their meeting, she knew her former lead officer well enough to guess that she wouldn't take kindly to the presence of the competitor, but it was surprisingly calm, perhaps even too calm. She didn't fully trust Scarlet, but she didn't trust Shadow Weaver at all.

„Lady Cala and I share a common mission and I believe... No, I am sure that I can count on her in this respect, but I cannot guarantee that she will support your cause, even I cannot force her to do anything.”

She smiled, crookedly, at her former superior.

„It's surprising, you never had a problem with forcing others to your will... „ She felt more and more confident in her presence. Is it she who has lost her old fear or is it the Dark Sorceress who has changed

„Apart from Adora and Catra... Doesn't that mean that they were my best students?” Shadow Weaver said, looking at her with a hint of amusement. Scarlet rolled over.

„Maybe instead of making fun of each other, we can start discussing serious matters, Shadow Weaver, what exactly did you come here for?”

„To find out the location of Eternia ... What I do with this knowledge is my business, but all, or almost all, Artifacts of the First Ones will be yours. Even if you simply want to sell them all, you will get such a price on Abbalon that you will be able to finance your rebellion for years, or even better, buy the entire planet for Your. explained the Dark Sorceress.

„I'm not going to leave Etheri.” she snapped back sharply, such a possibility had never even crossed her mind.

„So what are you going to do?” Hordak's former righthand man asked with a hint of curiosity in his voice. She hesitated before answering.

„For now, we intend to attack during the Victory Day celebrations. We'll hack into Brightmoon's database , make some noise, declare a Great People's Rebellion, and kidnap Entrapta .

Shadow Weaver nodded at the first points, but her eyes widened at the last one.

„Why do you want to kidnap Entrapta ?!” the Dark Sorcerer exclaimed in surprise. She thought about her answer for a moment.

„We found an ancient First One warship. We need Entrapta to repair it.”

Shadow Weaver narrowed her eyes.

„ Is this your new allies' idea? Listen Lonnie, creatures like Mi”Go are not the least bit trustworthy. – Hordak's former Right Hand was saying , but he didn't let her finish.

„I've been listening to you all my life! Enough of this! You are no more trustworthy than Mi-go! Now go out and inform your new charges about what I have decided because I expect them to help me in this entire mission. March back.” she ordered, aware that she was trying to convince herself.

Nightgale didn't like Lonnie's Plan much, so she would have to think about how to help her perfect it, though for now she had other things on her mind. She had to do something she had been preparing for and dreaming about all her life. This was something she was so afraid of. But she had to do it.

„Shadow Weaver, I need to show you something... Follow me „ she said, trying to sound as natural as possible.”

The Dark Sorceress looked at her in surprise and nodded. Aaravos hovered next to her, watching her curiously but saying nothing. They went deeper into the castle, wandering through countless corridors, she had the impression that she passed the same chambers several times, although she couldn't be sure because she didn't know the purpose of most of them. Sometimes she was sure that the layout of the castle changed every time she walked through it.

„This place is like Entrapta's mind .” Shadow Weaver muttered. She nodded. They finally reached their destination, although she wasn't heading to a specific part of the castle, but simply wanted to get as far away from prying eyes and ears as possible. She started taking off her clothes.

„What are you doing?” asked the Dark Sorceress.

„Not what she thought.” she replied and unraveled the spell. Pain beyond all imagination shook her body, and then she took a deep breath, feeling the strength of her real body. She turned to her mother.

„Who are you?” Shadow Weaver asked with surprise, although he didn't hear the disgust in her voice, it was a good start.

„Scarlet called me Nightgale, a twist on the word nightingale. She never had any magical talents, but she had a good heart. She took care of an unfortunate creature wandering alone underground in the Fright Zone, which was created and then rejected by Hordak, who wanted to create a new Right Hand, using his and his former long-time Second in Command's genes.” she said, staring at her mother's disfigured face, which showed shock and disbelief. Absolutely understandable reactions. She waited a long time to see what would happen next. Will she face rejection or acceptance? Her heart was beating, her muscular body was covered with sweat. But then the Dark Sorceress, the one who had destroyed so many lives, smiled sadly and extended her clawed hand to her.

And then Nightgale ran up to her and hugged the Dark Sorcerer, finally she wasn't alone,

> A very short chapter, not entirely canonical. This is my version of Roll with it. I invite you to comment and express your opinion.

They were in the War Room belonging to the People's Rebellion. Comrade General Lonnie sat at the head of the semi-circular table, and Eti, Rosie, Itel, Alatar, Lilka, and Kyle sat across from her. There were lots of polyhedral dice, sheets of paper, manuals, maps, and miniatures on the table. The latter came from Alatar's resources or were made by Kyle . Lonnie looked at them seriously.

"I guess we'll start... " she said slowly.

Lilka's plan.

An extremely tall and powerfully muscled girl with arms as thick as tree branches was riding a gigantic and very cute blue Fox. In her hand she held an ax capable of cutting the tang in half, and on her head was a horned helmet with horns. Opposite her were countless ranks of Orks, huge and heavily armed orcs.

-We are gathered here to fight together for honor, goodness and freedom! Many of us will die today, but it doesn't matter, because for a true orc, dying in battle is the highest honor... as long as we brushed our teeth and cleaned our ears first. For the Horde! – She led her orcs towards Brightmoon.

Lonnie: We are no longer part of the Horde!

Alatar: You won't find the Ork Horde in the area either, and besides, you have to convince, charisma is your dump stat.

Lonnie: And who are these orcs anyway...

Alatar: Has you seen Huntara? Some of the orcs are just like her, only wilder and more warlike... The rest are a bit like clones...

Lonnie: Okay, next plan.

Eti's plan.

She walked through the dark halls of Brightmoon Castle. Its black corridors were decorated with skulls and demonic symbols. Terrified servants hid in corners. The warrior with a long tail and a powerful metal fist effortlessly dodged half-naked, twin-bladed, and very sexy female warriors accompanied by monstrous feline beasts. The warrior avoided them without the slightest effort, but in several cases she had to stop because the warriors or equally scantily clad and sexy sorceresses wanted to hurt someone from the servants, always a beautiful woman. The warrior then eliminated the guards silently, unless there were too many of them, in which case she defeated them with her incredible dexterity and masterful hand-to-hand combat skills. The rescued girl always placed a kiss on her lips. She finally reached the Witch Queen's Throne Room. Glimmer sat on a huge skull throne. She was even more scantily clad and sexy than her guards. In her hand she had a wand with a bird skull on the end. When she saw the warrior, she burst into mad laughter.

“You think you can beat me, you sily girl! I, Witch Queen Glimmer, dark ruler of Etheria, will crush you and devour your soul! Bird of Doom, tear this wench apart.” then a monster appeared from between the shadows, looking like a combination of a cat and a raven. It was about to attack the warrior, but she quickly jumped on the Queen to deal her a fatal blow.

Eti: You probably didn't know her as well as I did.

Lonnie: I've been leading the Rebellion against her for several years...

Eti: But you know how she tastes like...

Lonnie (after a moment of dismay): I don't want to get into the nature of your relationship.

Alatar: Eti, will you show me your dice? Because I don't know how you managed to have almost the highest rolls on all attributes and critical successes in all tests?

Eti: Because you have to know how to roll the dice, dude.

Kyle : Why did Rosie look sad every time Eti kissed those girls?

Lonnie: Next plan

Itel Plan

Itel rushed into the palace. The elf held a great, huge blade in her hands and was dressed in luminous armor. Following her, the entire Tarak Shadow Legion entered Birightmoon. They had to hurry, because the queen had betrayed her country and was going to marry the Lord Admiral as a dowry, giving him all the weapons of doom she had hidden in her treasury. Most of the inhabitants of the kingdom were imprisoned in the dungeons. The Lord Admiral's soldiers stood in front of them. Itel sliced through them with her blade one at a time, gracefully dodging the gunfire. She finally stood in front of the Lord Admiral.

“You're about to get your well-deserved punishment!” the Elf exclaimed, but then the Lord Admiral pointed to two figures tied in the shadows. They were Eti and Catra with explosives tied to them.

Alatar: And now it's time for a certain Technomancer Dragonkin to step into action.

Eti (Looking over Alatar's shoulder at his notes): Why did you let Itel use home rules but not me! That's why I had to cheat.

Lonnie: It was completely absurd.

Alatars Plan

Alatar's plan

The moons were rising over Brightmoon as a huge silver shape floated over the mountains. It was A gigantic dragon with a wingspan so large that it seemed to cover the horizon. She rode him an elven warrior in emerald armor. The dragon roared and breathed flame.

Lonnie: Can Alatar really turn into a dragon like that?

Eti: No. He is only a Dragonkin, i.e. a small dragon, although for his species he is quite large.

Alatar: Hey!

Lonnie: Eti, you will translate for Rosie...

Rosie's plan.

Hundreds of guests gathered in the large, wonderful and somewhat fairy-tale-like main hall of Brightmoon Castle as Catra and Adora's wedding was about to take place. However, when Castaspella, who presided over the ceremony, asked if there was anyone present who did not agree to this wedding, Lonnie, who for unknown reasons had white hair, came out of the crowd and walked up to Catra and knelt down in front of Catra.

Lonnie: What? Do you think that i have a crush on Catrra? I recently tried to kill her! And why do I have white hair?

Eti: From what I heard about Catra and Adora, this is probably what your mating habits are like.

Lonnie: You guys are scaring me, let's move on to the next plan.

Kyle's plan

Kyle just went to pee. They were in the woods and were about to launch Operation Freedom when Kyle hit a rock. Then a tall skeleton with glowing eye sockets appeared before him, holding a staff topped with a shining gem.

"I am Tar- Baphon , the Whispering Tyrant. Killer of Gods and Immortal Lord of the Undead! I'm about to devour your soul!"

Kyle: But why me!

Alatar*: I have no idea how it happened. According to the random encounter table, there was a one in a million chance of this happening!*

Lonnie: So it must have happened to Kyle. Now my turn.

Lonnie's plan.

They were just launching ship hidden under the ice. Everything was going well... Too well, because as soon as they left the planet's atmosphere, the AI took control of the ship and it turned towards Etheria . A planet-destroying beam shot out from its hull .

Lonnie: What?

Alatar: You failed your perception test, that's why you didn't notice there was something wrong with the ship. Everyone knows that ancient artifacts are dangerous...

In love and at war...

Chapter Notes

I invite you to comment and express your opinion

In love and at war…

Adora felt confused. Getting married seemed like a simple affair. You have to say a few words in front of the moons and kiss. And then there was a big party until the morning…. The hardest thing happened before… before their first kiss, when the war was going on and they were trying to kill each other. The weddings of Scorpia and Perfuma, Mermista and Sea Hawk, and even Hordak and Entrapta went without any problems, the only major event was always looking for Glimmer in the morning, because when she was tipsy, she sometimes teleported to strange places. For example, to Madam Razz's cottage... Now even that didn't threaten them, because the queen was pregnant and couldn't drink. But this wedding became something complicated... In many ways.

First of all, it turned out that Catra had a father... That probably meant she had a father-in-law, right? Mermista had a Sea Hawk mother, called Mountain Falcon, and her two husbands, who, however, were not the captain's father... Scorpia had parents in”laws... and three brothers”in”law, huge bearded men, very protective of their "Little Sister"... Now she will have a sister”in”law too. If they can get her out of Shadow Weaver's clutches...

That was probably the worst. Many thought she had forgiven the dark Sorceress after she sacrificed herself for them, but that wasn't true, not entirely... She simply couldn't hate someone who was no longer there and would never meet. Why fuel your anger when you could find happiness in love? But if she survived, if she deceived everyone... She was the master of lies... Catra had seen through her lies long ago, but this woman had manipulated her all her life, and then she did it to Glimmer in her moment of weakness... Had she done the same to that girl? Catra's sister claimed that they couldn't trust their father... But wasn't that what Shadow Weaver wanted from them? Once again sow the seeds of discord and distrust between friends and relatives…

The Lord Admiral seemed to her to be a decent person. He exuded calm and self”confidence. He was always polite and composed. She liked him a little, he didn't treat her like a heroine who saved the universe. It was…refreshing. He actually seemed more interested in Catra. It was good, her beloved finally deserved attention. But... She wasn't jealous that Catra had found her family... She just expected that she would be able to find her family. Light Hope must have kidnapped her from somewhere. There must have been other First Ones out there somewhere, perhaps even mourning their lost child... Maybe even searching for him across the vast expanse of space. She guess they should go on a quest to learn about her past and where she came from, even if it might mean digging into her people's past again... But only after the wedding and after... after saving Queen Angela... If that was possible. She didn't even want to consider possibility of failure. This time she won't let her down.

She slammed the boom shield as hard as she could until it bent, then dodged and landed another punch at the bot behind her. It fell over and started smoking. She smiled, happy with her success. Her mood improved slightly. She ordered the Training Room to end the session and go get a drink of water, but then she saw Asindesa standing in the doorway in full gear.

„Oh, how long have you been here?” she asked, wondering how this woman could move so quietly in this armor.

„A few minutes, but you were so absorbed in the fight that you didn't notice anything... I have the impression that you tend to focus on what you're doing.” said the Hell Knight in a gentle voice. She smiled bitterly „Focus, don't let yourself get distracted... „ She looked at Asindesa. That's what she always said... Shadow Weaver... It still rings in my head. Even after all these years, I can't get rid of these words. “ The knight nodded thoughtfully and grabbed one of the training sticks.

„Sure why not.” she said, although in fact she wasn't sure whether she should fight with this woman. There was something strange about her. These Knights somehow reminded her of the Galactic Horde... Or the Dark Sorceress. They had an ominous aura around them, as if there was darkness in their hearts. It was disturbing, but then again, this Asindesa seemed quite nice. A bit too stiff in Catra's opinion, but she liked the woman's discipline and seriousness. She didn't say it out loud, but she kind of wanted to be like her... Minus the darkness and ominousness.

As soon as she assumed a fighting position, the knight attacked her. Her strikes were powerful, pushing her back every time she blocked her attack. All blows were performed systematically, they were not instantaneous, so they could gain power. The knight tried to put her on the defensive, accepting her counterattacks on her forearms. The training system could sense whether the blow was strong enough to penetrate the armor, but she failed to do so. However, the knight did not break through her defense either. Finally they pulled away from each other. Both of them were in great shape, but both of them were breathing heavily after the fight, although she noticed that the older warrior controlled her breathing faster.

„You fight well. I take it they taught you all this in the Horde?” She asked Asindesa, and she nodded and answered.

„Mainly. I trained a bit with the Brightmoon guardians, and with Light Hope, but mainly in the Horde. They pushed us hard since we were children.” she said, smiling sadly at her memories. She used to not realize what a terrible childhood they had, she was convinced that everyone lived like that. The Hell Knight nodded.

„So you were orphans taken in by the Horde... It was the same with me and the order.” she said thoughtfully. “It hasn't been an easy life, but I've enjoyed it so far... But I had a choice, at least to some extent. Although I am the adoptive daughter of Lictor, the leader of the Order of Eclipse, I could have left, although it would not have been easy, but I do not regret it. The path that the Hell Knights follow is not easy, but someone has to do what we do... It is necessary. Someone has to carry this burden.”

She nodded, because she understood all too well what Asindesa was talking about . She-Ra's power was also a burden, though it was hard for someone who didn't bear it to understand. If it weren't for Catra…

„There were many women in my life, but they were only one-off affairs... I fell in love once and I was sure it was mutual ... But it was all a lie. That woman couldn't love. Next round!” the Hellknight shouted and charged at her almost without warning. This time she attacked more violently, almost furiously. She wondered if it was the reminder of her heartbreak that had provoked Asindesa to fight so hard. When they broke apart this time, they were both soaked in sweat.

„It was uh ... „ she said, unable to find the right word.

„A little too much uh , I'm sorry I gave in to anger.” said Asindesa. It took a moment for them to regain their breath, but again the knight did it first.

„I have to learn this someday.” she said, wiping her forehead. The effort allowed her to clear some of her anxiety and worries. Asindesa also looked a bit more relaxed. She smiled slightly and spoke in her strong but surprisingly polite and gentle voice for such a formidable woman.

„These are relaxation techniques that we learn in our Order, although we have not developed them. It was created by the Iori monks, the goddess of self-perfection and enlightenment, thousands of years ago.”

She grimaced when these gods were mentioned again. This one made her anxious.

„Ah, these gods... There's so much talk about them... Sometimes even some people behave as if I were one of them... It's a bit... embarrassing... „ she said very euphemistically. The Hellknight nodded and asked.

„Could you show me what you look like when... you become the other one, tall women?”

She looked at it uncertainly, but closed her eyes and straightened her hand, and then shouted.

„For the Honor of the Graysckull!” she shouted and flashed with multi-colored light. The knight of hell covered her eyes with her hands and looked at her in shock

„By Asmodeus' black cloak... „ Asindesa shouted You really look like Iomadae.

“Yeah, everyone except Etherians says something like that. I guess it's the height and the lights, but I'm still the same girl... I swear!” she said and laughed nervously, but Asindesa shook her head.

„I heard that name.” she said, and the Hell Knight shook her head.

„You really don't know anything here. You look just like her, the Inheritor. Iomadae is a defender of the oppressed, an honorable warrior fighting evil, whose light illuminates even the greatest darkness!” she shouted. Hearing these words, she moaned and said.

„Please don't say things like that... I'm still the same person I was before.” she was aware that there was desperation in her voice. Asindesa's words reminded her too much of what she had heard in the stream of light. She shuddered and involuntarily transformed back into her normal form. Asindesa wanted to say something, but then Lady Cala Grayskull entered the Training Hall and said.

„Can I train with the successor of my great ancestor?”

Asindesa di Vir gave Lady Cala a warning look. She didn't like this woman's sudden appearance here. She undoubtedly had evil intentions towards... Probably everyone, and hand-to-hand combat training was the perfect opportunity to hurt someone in a way that could be considered an accident... The noblewoman responded with an equally cold smile.

„Of course, we can face each other... „ Adora said, smiling at the aristocrat. She was not wearing training clothes, although the dress she wore was suitable for fencing. Despite this, Adora offered the girl a mask, but she refused, claiming that nothing would happen to her, and the heroine of the Galaxy did not insist.

„I will stay here to observe and referee.„ he said, smiling friendly, although she touched her sword warningly, looking at the Aristocrat, who only smiled in response. There was something unnatural about this lenient self”control.

She had been contemplating her situation for the past few days. She wouldn't be the first knight of Hell to be deceived by the servants of the Dark Between the Stars, nor even the first to fall in love with one of them... But she was the Lady of Blades, holding one of the highest positions in the Order. More was expected of her than of other Knights. She had already made up her mind that as soon as this expedition was over, she would relinquish her title and submit to the judgment of the order, although there could only be one outcome, but she had long ago come to terms with death. But for a moment, she hoped there was a future for her. She was so stupid... In fact, she hoped that when she died, her broken heart wouldn't hurt so much anymore... But first she had to know the whole truth.

During her last days, she was occupied with three things. Training, gather information on Shadow Weaver as discreetly as possible and observe Lady Cala. Well, training had always been a part of her everyday life, and finding out something about the past of the woman she loved was easy because the people of Etheria were very trusting. What she discovered confirmed everything she had learned from Miss Daisy, although the truth was much worse than she could tell from her words. She had thousands of lives on her conscience and served the Horde for over two decades, she was the most hated person on the planet. However, she found no evidence that she was a cultist. Actually, the locals knew very little about not only cults, but religions and gods in general, which was quite surprising.

Lady Cala was a much bigger problem. She wasn't a spy or an investigator, and the fact that she was one of the few foreigners present in the castle didn't make things easier. She had only seen the Aristocrat a few times, and apart from that state dinner with the Queen, she hadn't had the chance to talk to her further, but now was the chance to at least get a better look at her. She could only hope that he wouldn't do anything to Adora. This woman is something of a demigoddess or even more. She had never met anyone like her in her life. No wonder Miss Daisy... Shadow Weaver saw something unusual in her. She couldn't sacrifice it for the sake of her search for truth

Lady Cala and Adora faced each other. The noblewoman had chosen a fighting stick slightly shorter than the one wielded by the Etherian girl and held it like a dueling weapon, in one hand with the other held above her head. Adora looked at her in surprise.

"You fight like a Sea Hawk," she said, and the aristocrat nodded and said

„This is a popular technique among those who specialize in the noble art of dueling. Encore!” she exclaimed and charged at the surprised warrior. However, she quickly entered the fight and recaptured Lady Cala's "Blade" and launched a counterattack. What she had previously told Adora about her skills was not tinged with politeness, honor dictated absolute honesty in such matters. The Etherian girl truly was one of the best, if not the best swordswoman she had ever fought. But the aristocrat was her equal. Lady Cala's fighting style was more formalized, perfect for anyone who specialized in dueling, while Adora was taught a battle style. At first, this gave the Aristocrat the advantage, but the Etheri warrior quickly adapted and slowly began to push her to the other side of the training hall. Then Lady Cala changed her tactics and tried to trip the warrior from Etheria, apparently the nobility of the art of dueling ended when you started losing. However, Adora managed to block it, dirty tricks were also taught in the Horde. For a moment, a grimace of rage appeared on the aristocrat's beautiful face, but then it disappeared, and now she began to attack with greater aggression, trying to land a blow at all costs. It was at this moment that she noticed something strange. Lady Cala closely resembled She-Ra , not Adora but the being whose form she assumed . It was disturbing, but then something much stranger happened. The Etherian Warrior launched a powerful attack and Lady Cala's legs bent at angles impossible for humans. She then growled furiously and pushed Adora with all her strength in the chest. The heroine of the galaxy groaned loudly, but her legs did not buckle under her.

„I guess I won... „ The noble girl exclaimed happily, but she was interrupted.

„ Look to the side!” she said, smiling and approached the training girls, and Lady Cala inhaled sharply. Adora's stick was touching the Aristocrat's side

„ If it were a real weapon, your stomach would be ripped open, or maybe even cut in half. We are dealing with mutual murder. This is common in training or sports fights when no real weapons are used. But Adora landed her strike a little earlier, and if it had been a real fight, the pain would have prevented you from throwing the thrust with full force, and at most you might have hurt the Hero of the Galaxy.” she explained to them and Adora smiled at Lady Cala.

„You'll do better next time. With the exception of Catra, I've never trained with anyone as good as you.” she said and extended her hand to Lady Cali, who, wearing her constant mask of a polite smile, smiled back.

„Yes, I would do better next time.„ said the Aristocrat. “They trained you quite well in this Horde. Isn't it the work of Hordak's right-hand man , what was her name... Shadow Weaver?” she asked with a slightly wider smile, and the joy on Adora's face dimmed slightly.

„ Yes, although she was not good at fencing, but she was able to... motivate. She put so much pressure on us that all of us, cadets and instructors alike, did not dare to disappoint her, and only perfection could satisfy her.” Adora looked into space, thinking about her sad childhood. Lady Cala put her hand on her shoulder, and then she said.

„ I feel sorry for you, but at the same time part of me envies you. Since I became... orphaned , I was missing someone who would be willing to instill discipline and rules in me. Someone who would encourage me to do my best… Perfection. Initially, I hoped that someone like that would be Miss Daisy, which was partly true, after all, she is a very smart woman and was knowledgeable in training young people. As she always told me, focus, don't let yourself get distracted. She instilled some good habits in me. but she herself was not a person worth imitating. She had a problem with alcohol abuse, but I already told you about that. She was also quick-tempered and easily angered, and her bouts of melancholy... Well, she was a very emotionally unstable person. In fact, she was quite pathetic, almost contemptible.” she shook her head with pity. Throughout the entire speech, Adora stared at the beautiful aristocrat, growing paler and paler as she clenched her fist hidden behind her back. However, she did not show her emotions. Lady Cala was also unfazed. She told her whole story in the same unwavering, gentle voice, as if she did not realize the meaning of her words. She smiled at Lady Cala's and held out her hand.

„How about another training fight? Just you and me?„ she asked, and the Aristocrat turned her head, resting it on her shoulder.

„How about Fight to First Blood? " asked the noblewoman from Carurystal. She narrowed her eyes and nodded.

„Agree to your responsibility." she said, wondering why the Aristocrat agreed to this fight, since she certainly knew how much "love" she had for her. This could end tragically... For Lady Cala's or her. Didn't she want to take the opportunity to kill her by faking an accident during training. In a fight with such a great warrior, the chances were equal... However, she accepted the risk of death in this fight, if only she hoped to kill this woman... She had a certain advantage...

„Of course, you'll take off your armor, I assume?" Lady Cala asked, smiling good-naturedly…

She had just lost her advantage, but now she had no choice. She pressed a button and the armor fell off her. She wore only short pants and a blouse underneath. Adora offered her a protective suit, but they both refused.

„Do you know that this is quite brutal? And I say this as one I grew up in the Horde, where we were regularly electrocuted every time someone hit us... „ Adora said, looking at them uncertainly.

„We are not afraid to shed a little blood." she said, drawing her blade. The Hero of the Galaxy gasped loudly at the sight of him.

"This is the work of the First Ones..." she said with shock in her voice. She smiled at her and screamed.

„If you say so! Encore „ and charged at Lady Cala, whose expression was pure terror. The noblewoman took out her sword and covered herself with it, but then both women were enveloped in the darkness summoned by the Knight. Asindesa learned to fight in the dark, an ability she used to fight against cultists and other lesser servants of the Dark who could not see in the darkness. However, when her blade hit the place where Lady Cala had been standing a moment ago. Instinctively, she jumped aside, narrowly avoiding the noblewoman's thrust. She punched her in the face and felt her nasal septum crush under her fingers. She jumped out of the sphere of darkness, because apparently Lady Cala's gaze penetrated it She looked at the noblewoman and was surprised to see that the noblewoman's face was fully healed, only a few drops of blood were visible on her upper lip. She smiled at the Knight with a predatory smile and attacked her fiercely, but then Asindesa swung at the noblewoman, as beautiful as death herself. Lady Cala obviously wasn't risking her life at all when she agreed to this fight, but the Lady of Blades' sword made her fearful for some reason. Whatever the Carurystal noblewoman was, she was definitely not human, and she was determined to trick everyone into it, even if she had to cut the noblewoman in half!

With each subsequent blow, the aristocrat retreated more and more and was happy to see the desperation on her beautiful face. She smiled at her and Lady Cala swore viciously and suddenly her attacks became faster and more brutal, so it was Asindesa who had to retreat. She had the impression that something had happened to her opponent's body. Her arms and legs were a little longer and more muscular, and for a moment it seemed as if her pupil had spread all over her eye. However, the Hellknight did not give up. She fought demons and swarm monsters. She pinned the sword to the floor and reached for her wrist to pinch it so the noblewoman would release the weapon, but then Lady Cala grabbed her hand and effortlessly bent her arm. She looked at her with a cruel smile, but then a bright, almost blinding light flooded them and an authoritative voice rang out.

„Stop it now!” Adora shouted in She-Ra form and both women immediately obeyed her order.

„Are you guys crazy?” she asked in a sharp voice, clutching her magnificent sword in her hand. – Do you want to kill each other?

Asindesa saw out of the corner of her eye that Lady Cala was trembling as she stood in She-Ra's luminous aura. It was very interesting... The knight knelt before the demigoddess and said.

„Sorry, battle fever has set in... This is common among those who have spent their entire lives fighting.” she said, and Adora nodded understandingly, although a bit uncertainly.

„For me, training took precedence. I sincerely apologize to everyone if I caused you any fear, but it all only looked so dangerous, there was no real threat to us.” Lady Cala added, smiling friendly, but at the same time she was constantly looking at the blade. Adora looked unconvinced, but there was little she could do since both culprits were taking the blame. The lady of the blades felt like bursting out laughing because the whole situation looked like something at school, but in fact there was absolutely nothing funny about the whole incident.

„You can leave, but you are not allowed to train in the castle. I'll talk to Glimmer and Catra about it. I should take away your weapons, but I would probably cause a diplomatic conflict... How I hate diplomacy!„ the Etherian warrior returned to her natural form and wiped her forehead. Lady Cala bowed obligingly and left without even looking at Asindesa. The Hellknight also headed for the exit, but Adora stopped her.

„Where did you get this sword?” She asked, looking at her carefully. Asindesa hesitated. She wasn't sure if she should tell the truth to this woman. But she didn't want to lie to her.

„I received it from a dying warrior... „ seeing the silent question in the eyes of the heroine of the Galaxy, she added. „He wasn't someone like you... He wasn't a biological being, although he referred to himself as he/him. I don't know much else."

Adora nodded seriously.

„You don't know how dangerous the artifacts of the First Ones are... Better get rid of him."

The Lady of Blades looked at her sword.

„It's an extremely sharp weapon, but that's all. It has no extraordinary powers, it is only as dangerous as the arm that wields it." She swung the blade several times. "And mine is really strong."

Adora continued to look at her seriously until she finally spoke.

„This sword is called "End of Eternity„ Blade of Vengeance. For whatever purpose it was created, it is not good.

Asindesa di Vir, Lady of the Blades of the Order of Eclipse, knew in her heart that Adora was right, but on the other hand... If it inspired fear in Lady Cala... then it was worth the risk.

„Sometimes you have to use all necessary means to defeat a greater evil. We Hell Knights know something about this... „ and she left the training room without waiting for the Hero of the Galaxy's reaction.

Bina decided that she really liked Brjghtmoon. It was a peaceful place, full of contented citizens, but it was not one of those good cities where anyone who stood out was treated with great suspicion. The local inhabitants knew what the war was, even though they won theirs. Perhaps if her children lived here, the wounds in their souls would heal, but it wasn't that easy... After all, she still had to find them and rescue them from the clutches of a woman as evil as Hell itself.

She learned that the Deadly Sword of Burning Fury had landed here a few days ago, but had flown away at night in an unknown direction. She could only curse her misfortune, but she had no clue. She stayed at an inn owned by the brother of "friend" of Huntara . She slept in the warehouse. In the morning, as she was wondering where she should go, she heard the Queen's official radio announcement.

„Dear citizens of Brightmoon and all of Etheria. It's me, Glimmer Moonbright . I have extremely important news for you, whether you consider me your Queen or not. A few days ago, a very important guest arrived. His name is Lord Admiral Felix Antares, and he commands the Research and Exploration Fleet sent here by the greatest powers of the Galaxy to investigate Prime's Empire . He also announced that he was the father of Grand Marshal Catra, which surprised us all. The Lord Admiral announced that he had no hostile intentions towards us and asked to be allowed to attend his daughter's wedding with several of his officers, to which, after much consideration, I agreed.”

Bina showed no outward emotion. But inside she felt cold. She had never been very religious, but she always hoped that the gods looked after mortals and made sure they were happy. At this point, however, she came to the conclusion that the gods simply had a sick sense of humor, since they allowed three people in the entire Infinite Galaxy to be on one planet who should never meet... Four, let's not forget about this cursed by the devils and demons Hag.

Confessions of poor and vile souls

Chapter Notes

> This is a new chapter! It took me a long time to write it. The Castroval Paradox is the paradox of a liar saying that he is always lying. Your comments and opinions will give me great pleasure.

They talked as Lonnie surveyed the rebels. She knew they should have avoided it in public, but she couldn't help herself. Not only because she brought her news about her charge. She had to admit that Lady Cala had done better than she expected. She got into the Palace without harming anyone, which was quite an achievement considering her... temperament. She managed to establish friendly relationships with Glimmer, Catra and Adora, as well as the Lord Admiral. None of the above boded any good, although it made the implementation of their plan much easier. Of course, Calamity wouldn't be herself if she didn't express her petty malice, but in this case she played it well. Cutting yourself off from all connections with her, at least emotional ones was wise. She wasn't sure whether her former wards would believe that the Aristocrat knew nothing about her mentor's nature, but it certainly sounded very credible. In the end, she worked for a reputation as a liar and manipulator... She didn't know what Lady Cala did with the other crew members, probably nothing good, but she didn't really care. Except for Dilayla, who became friends with Rosie, but the rest could die. But she hoped that Bina was okay. She took good care of those kids, better than she thought, and they would have very bad time if something happened to her.

But that wasn't why she had been unnerved for the last few days. "I have a daughter. By All That Is Holy and Cursed, I have a daughter.” She thought, still unable to believe it. She has made many amazing discoveries in recent weeks. First she met Eti, then she learned the fate that befell Queen Angela. Soon after, she found out who their employer actually was, came across Heart Gift, and finally discovered the secret of Catra's origins... And now this... At first, she stared at this unfortunate creature, at this girl, and wondered what she was supposed to do? She wasn't ready for such a situation. She reached out to her because she had no idea what else she could do. Then she said the words out of reason rather than emotion. She didn't want to alienate another potential ally. It didn't cost her anything. But then she hugged her and felt something. She couldn't quite put her finger on it, but it was something new that she couldn't name. She had to work it out somehow.

„But How... Where did you come from and when... How old are you?" she asked, unable to judge Nghtgale's age.

„Chronologically five, and mentally and biologically something like twenty-five, based on human standards." her daughter replied in a low, breaking voice

„So you were created when I was in Brightmoon." She said and started to guess some things.

„Yes... Then, when Catra was imprisoned and Hordak needed a new successor for his right hand, so he came up with the idea of creating a new version of you, obedient like a clone... „ Nightgale said, smiling sadly.

„So Hordak is your... father?" she asked, and the pain on her face was both confirmation and denial. She sighed and stroked her head with a clawed hand. Most were afraid or disgusted by her touch, but not her... Which was understandable... After all, she obviously carried the same curse as her... 'Damn fool,' she thought, gritting her sharp teeth. Hordak never really believed she was cursed... He thought it was some form of genetic defect. It irritated her, but she gave up trying to explain the difference because she realized it made him trust her more. Her magic fascinated him, too, but it repulsed him in equal measure. Did he think that this new version of her would teach him the secret of Magic and thus prove that it was always just a science that was not understood. She had no idea what was going on in this brainwashed man head and she didn't really care now. She was sure of only one thing. Hordak must die. As slowly and painfully as possible. Not because he created this unfortunate creature without truly understanding what he was actually bringing into being. But because he rejected her. However, this is a matter for the future. First, she must secure the future of her other daughters who have suffered so much because of her.

„Mother... I need to rest now... My body gets very tired when I am in Scarlet's form. Now it didn't take long, but then I won't have the opportunity... „ said the girl, and she nodded her head affirmatively. It took her over two hours to get back to the outer part of the castle... She got lost twice in that damned fortress! Lets the Daemons curse Entrapta and her damn ancestors. She went to the room she shared with Ireanis, where the sorceress from the Lost Golarion was playing some simple game given to her by Alatar.

„Different than I expected. Although I should actually expect that they won't be happy about my return... „ she said and became lost in thought. She had to deal with everything that came her way on her own. Even though the difficulties were piling up before her, she couldn't ask anyone for help. She was lonely, as always. Even when she could have had a family, she rejected this possibility, choosing power and pride... until she became a slave to darkness beyond all imagination... Yes, she had always been alone until now...

„I have to ask you for help.” she turned to the Elf, who put down the Datapad and looked at her seriously. “ I've never asked anyone to do this before, with one exception. always thought it was a sign of weakness. Only contemptible, pathetic creatures ask others for help, and in that case you have the right... No, the obligation to demand the highest possible price. But now I am a pathetic and contemptible creature. And I am asking you, Ireanis, war sorceress, for help, because the lives of many innocent beings are at stake. You can demand everything from me in return, although I warn you in advance that I can't give you much.”

„I'm a pathetic drunk myself... Stupid funny Ireanis, who is unreliable because she can't even cast a single spell correctly... Shadow Weaver, the very fact that you're asking someone like me for help is an honor for me... And it tells you how much you need help.” the silver-haired Elf walked up to her and put her hand on her shoulder. She looked at the strange sorceress, wondering if this was the first friend she had ever met, and then told her the details of her plan.

After a few hours of rest, Nightgale woke up surprisingly refreshed. She felt a delicious numbness, extremely relaxing. It wasn't just because she could get a break from Scarlet. She liked this form, even though she was getting tired of it more and more quickly. She suspected it was because of how stressful life had become for the Comrade General's right-hand . But now she felt happy. Her mother called her daughter, accepted her. Whatever they said about her… She didn't care. She may have committed countless crimes and hurt many innocents, but it didn't matter to her. She was her mother and nothing else mattered. She looked to the side and saw Aaravos looking at her thoughtfully. He smiled in his mysterious way and said.

„It always amazed me how easy it is to make mortals happy. It is enough to like you, or at least claim to like you, and joy wells up in your hearts”.

She frowned and said.

„It was acceptance... Accepting me into your family... Do you even accept me?”

The Star Elf tilted his head.

„Yes, in my own way.” he replied, and she felt a feeling of anxiety.

„What does "in my own way" mean?” she asked suspiciously.

„You don't want to know.” he replied, smiling indulgently.

„Now I definitely want to know. „ She drawled.

„Do you accept bots or, let's say, fish in the aquarium? Because that's how I see you... Although I must admit that you are a fascinating and exotic specimen...”

This strange, insulting compliment left her speechless. Well, she shouldn't expect anything less from beings like Aaravos or Lady Cala. She sighed and started her walk through the winding halls of Castle Crypto.

Several days passed during which they spoke little and never in private. Everyone was too busy preparing for Lonnie's plan, although she had the disturbing feeling that the Comrade General had made the decision to go ahead spontaneously, without thinking it through and without consulting her allies. But what could she do about it? Only on the eve of the marsh out did she find some time to exchange a few words with her. She found her mother in the courtyard, watching Lonnie inspecting the soldiers before they marched out. When she approached her mother, she asked her in Aklo.

„What do you think about all this?” she asked, and the Dark Sorcerer looked at her in surprise.

„About Lonnie's troops? They are impressive considering the conditions of Etheria... How do you know how to speak Aklo, it is the language of the Great Old Ones, Mi-Go, Elder Things and the like. It's not that easy to learn it here. Even I only learned how to use it fully when I left Etheria...”

She hesitated before answering. She wasn't sure if her mother should know about her connection with the Crawling Chaos… Certainly not now… She wanted her all to herself for the time being

„I had good teachers... „ she said, and the Dark Sorcerer just nodded. Nightgale's answer still said a lot about who she was hanging out with these days.

„When I have some free time, I will teach you how to mark your clothes so that you don't have to take them off every time you change.” Shadow Weaver said in a low voice. “It's such a popular technique in the galaxy that it's become part of every shapeshifting spell, but here, on Etheria, it's only taught in Mystacor. In fact, many people believe that taking off your clothes with every transformation is appropriate, because it brings you closer to nature... I never liked showing off my bare butt... Have you mastered any other shapes?”

She nodded hesitantly.

„ I've taken the form of a boar and a snake several times... I'm also thinking about a bird... „ she said, and Shadow Weaver nodded.

„Birds are difficult because in order to fly, you need to learn how to summon animal instinct in a safe way. I suggest to take shape the rat or raccoon, they will get everywhere... The cat is also good choice...„ she hesitated, as if she remembered something. Nightgale knew exactly what she was thinking about „Catra and I met in this ancient city... She and Lonnie tried to kill each other, hence the scar... Adora was there too... I... I'm not sure if I should treat her like a sister?”

Shadow Weaver frowned.

„Everyone here is, in a sense, my and Hordak's children. We shaped them, or rather twisted them. In a way, Lonnie and the Rest is more our creation than Catra and Adora. They, despite my efforts, always had each other. Now I wonder if they didn't instinctively sense their origins... „ Her voice was thoughtful and careful, as if she was speaking out loud her thoughts that were just taking shape.

„Dr. Moors claims that he already suspected that Catra was not from Etheria...”

Her mother nodded.

„I heard about that after my return, even though I arranged for him to be transferred because he was too interested in Adora... I don't trust him, and neither should you. The Mi-Go only serve themselves, even the other beings from the Dark Between the Stars find space fungi treacherous and self-centered... Damn, they're like me... I wish we'd met earlier,' she laughed hoarsely.

„Don't say that... Don't compare yourself to them. – she said energetically, but Shadow Weaver shook her head.

„No my child. I may have shown you a little kindness, but it doesn't change who I am or what I've done. Once upon a time, I would have probably seen you as just a useful tool and used it to implement my plans... Or simply killed you in a fit of rage. That's who I was and that's how I am... Maybe it's a bit of a Castrovalian Paradox, but don't trust me... No one should... Over the last few years, I may have gotten used to everyone seeing me as a righteous and respectable person, but she never existed. Miss Daisy was a lie that I believed myself. A mask that I wore for so many years that I treated it like a second skin. All the lies finally come to light and the masks fall... „ she rubbed her face with her hand. „Look, maybe we can talk again before everything starts, but if not... Then take care of yourself and... remember not to go my way. You will have a difficult life, also because of me, but learn to appreciate the kindness you receive from others, respect those who care about you. Don't take other people's contempt personally, but don't let yourself be pushed around. It's just an old woman's talk, which doesn't cost her anything, but isn't of much value either. I lost my life because of my choices. Don't go my way...„ Shadow Weaver became thoughtful and asked. „Does anyone else know your secret?”

„Kyle and Frosta... But I know they won't say anything. O have a dirt on Kyle, and Frosta... She won't say anything. She's a good girl.” she said. She preferred not to mention the cultists who knew everything, even predicted her mother's return.

„You're a good girl too, never forget that. And now I need to talk to someone. Watch out for Lonnie. He seems to be starting to suspect something. “ and left her alone with her thoughts.

Lonnie had to admit that she felt proud as she saw her soldiers getting ready to march. Most of them will not take part in the main mission, only in mock operations intended to distract the attention of Brightmoon's troops, so they will be convinced that he plans to strike somewhere other than in reality. She was proud of this part of the plan. No one should be harmed, her soldiers were not to engage in any fighting, only to cause confusion. A much smaller unit is to go to the capital and carry out the main part of the mission there. She was the one who was risky… much riskier than she thought she could be.

Previously, the only threats were Brightmoon's guards and the princesses, and neither of them would try to harm them unless they actually threatened them. But now that the Lord Admiral was in the capital... How many soldiers could he take with him? From what she said, Shadow Weaver was a real soldier who had been fighting wars for decades. She remembered all too well the days of the occupation, when they had to hide in canyons and caves from an enemy they could not fight. Will Glimmer's naive trust allow Etheria to fall into the clutches of an invader again? All this only confirmed her belief in the path she had chosen. She and her squad would go to Brightmoon armed with the gifts given to them by the Mi-Go, and she had the damned Shadow Weaver's warnings somewhere. This woman was always jealous of the power she could not control. She thought that as soon as she showed up on their doorstep, they would listen to her bullshit like before... The world has changed and they are no longer the same kids afraid of shadows. She looked at the dark Sorceress, thoughtfully surveying the lines of cadets. Scarlet was standing next to her, whispering in her ear every now and then. She frowned at the sight. Since their conversation together, Shadow Weaver and the former Cadet have become closer. She didn't like it very much, but that included everything related to her former superior.

„Are they fucking or something?" she asked herself.

„She's not her type... „ she heard a voice behind her that she didn't recognize. She turned around, her hands gripping her amazing staff. Behind her stood Eti, her head resting on her shoulder and her tail wagging gently. She hadn't yet learned to recognize her voice, which was so different from Catra's. Lower, deeper, almost colorless. She stared at her with catlike eyes, blinking slowly.

„Can you not sneak up on me?" She asked, a little irritated, but not as much as she should have been. This girl didn't annoy her as much as Catra, she wasn't as mean and cunning, just weird.

„I could, Scar, but I think someone should keep you alert. If you always expect me to be lurking in the shadows, watching you even in your most intimate or embarrassing moments, your alertness will reach superhuman levels and even Ahackek's best Assassins won't catch you... And you'll fall into paranoia, but you can live with that... Somehow. Until you start to suspect your loved ones of plotting against you and you live in a cave with only bats and spiders for company, until you finally start to believe that you are one of them and then you either lie in wait in the web for your prey or you travel through the night sky in search of a victim from which you can drink the blood... Either way, it will be Blonde-boy... „ Eti said. She stared at the cat girl with her mouth open. She knew she must look really stupid, but she couldn't help it.

„What did you mean, he's not her type? " she asked, regaining her composure. „ Does she even have a type?"

„Sure.„ Eti tilted her head to the other side. "You didn't know? And you say you know her so well... Well, she likes blond, muscular warriors with swords. We met her girlfriend in Brightmoon…”

Lonnie opened her mouth even wider.

„You're not suggesting ... that she and... „ she asked in disbelief. She shuddered at the thought.

„Well, I suggest that Grimmy is dating a Hellkightess” Who were you thinking about... Oh, the Blonde! No... It's a damn big age difference... Itel thinks she was into me, but it was about my sister, right?” she asked, and then Lonnie had the impression that the girl became strangely serious, although no emotions appeared on her face. – Okay, I'll leave you now, talk to your girlfriend.

„Scarlet is not my girlfriend... „ she replied, realizing that she was losing control of this conversation. – I have two boys!

„Once or twice... That doesn't make her my girlfriend. What kind of army would it be if everyone date with everyone else?” she asked, feeling a surge of irritation again

„Very lovely... Okay, I'm leaving now, bye.„ said the cat-like girl and ran between the shadows.

She wondered for a moment what this conversation was about, but came to the conclusion that she didn't have the strength to consider Eti's reasoning. Catra's sister was really weird. She didn't know if she could believe Eti's revelations about Shadow Weaver having a partner. The very idea that someone like the Cursed Sorceress could have sex with someone filled her with disgust and dismay. She didn't believe that she loved someone. This woman had a piece of basalt instead of a heart. But she still had no idea why the two sorceresses' relationships had changed so much. Now the thought of the two women being together seemed absurd to her, but what could have happened between them? Has Scarlet decided to form an alliance with someone stronger? Or was it Shadow Weaver who promised to share her dark secrets with her? She wasn't sure, but she couldn't fully trust her old friend anymore... But had she ever really trusted her? She had to talk to her anyway. She waited until the Dark Sorcerer went about her business, and then she approached Scarlet.

„You shouldn't be so flirtatious with her. This woman is a natural manipulator who is ready to use anyone and then abandon them when they are no longer needed.” she said seriously, but the young Sorceress smiled at her.

„You sound like you're jealous.” she giggled quietly. She gritted her teeth and replied.

„I'm not jealous, I just don't trust her... You shouldn't either, out of common sense... She's never done anything for us, not selflessly ... She even served Hordak out of pure calculation.

„Probably out of necessity. Without Black Opal, she would have died in a very unpleasant way, if not worse.” said the Sorceress, this time much more seriously, without a trace of humor, absolutely seriously.

„Because she would turn into a vampire, or another character from the fairy tales she used to scare us as children... No, don't answer, I'm not going to start this ridiculous discussion... There's no point in you approaching her anyway. Remember our allies. Halo will definitely demand her head, and probably her sister's as well... Such allies are much more valuable than one treacherous Sorcerer” she said, barely holding back a scream. She wasn't about to lose her temper, but she had to talk some sense into the former cadet.

„Are you sure?” Scarlet asked carefully. ”This woman is incredibly powerful and knowledgeable. She has practically run the Horde for decades and could help us lead our Rebellion.

„Shadow Weaver is finished. She's a mean old woman who couldn't win a war for twenty-five years despite Hordak's technology and all her power. Her time has long passed. We'll keep her here for a while until she's no longer useful. Then we will give it to the highest bidder... Who knows, maybe Catra will join the bidding... And I would advise you to seriously consider who you owe your loyalty to.” she walked away feeling Scarlet's eyes on her back.

Nightgale sighed as she followed Lonnie, wondering how loyal she should be to Comrade General. Lonnie began to play a game whose rules she not only didn't understand, but wasn't even aware she was playing. The alliance with the Mi-Go was risky, but it could be profitable if you were careful, but Lonnie clearly had too much hope for working with the space fungi. She did it as if she wanted to convince herself that her decisions were right. She became more and more stubborn and stopped listening to others. The rest of rebelion were starting to notice it as well, though the arrival of Shadow Weaver distracted everyone from the problem a bit... But not for long... If she really wanted to do what she suspected... Then would the rest of the cadets continue to support her? Will her current allies, especially Star's sisters, turn on her? She ruled Dryll only with the consent of the inhabitants of this place, and if she gives the monsters from the Void Between the Stars their former ruler, they may change their minds. Then what? Will he fight the entire planet? And all this in exchange for what? For a ship she probably won't be able to handle? And even if she did, well, she was going to hand her mother over to her former enemies in order to maintain the alliance, though the young sorcerer suspected that the main reason she wanted to do this was because she felt threatened by the dark Sorceress… Perhaps rightly so. Shadow Weaver was powerful enough to take control of the rebellion and was competent enough to lead the rebellion to victory. But that wasn't her job. Both were to carry out the will of the Crawling Chaos. She even joined the Rebellion only because it could be used to implement Nyarlathotep's plans. It never really belonged to it. Not with the Heart... She was aware that sooner or later she would have to abandon it. But she knew now that it wouldn't come easy. She became close with former cadets. She was surprised to find that Dryll, or rather Castle Crypto, had become her home. She was not attached to the ideals of the Rebellion, but to the people creating it. She felt sad at the thought of having to leave it all behind… But what could she do? No one could oppose the Will of the Crawling Chaos.

Kyle stood in one of the corridors of Castle Crypto and looked at his sword. He usually didn't like wandering inside the castle, it was too easy to get lost here. He did not have good spatial orientation, and even Entrapta herself had trouble finding her way in this labyrinth. He was slowly getting used to the idea that he had power! That he, Kyle, has power! It scared him, but it also made him happy that he could finally be useful to his friends. Especially now, when so many new threats have emerged. He had heard about this Lord Admiral, supposedly Catra's father, and that he was a very evil man. If he became this big guy, he could fight the Admiral just like Adora fought Hordak. Maybe they would even fight with together She-Ra against this tyrant. It would be nice to be a hero, even if he had to hide it from Lonnie. Yes, he will finally do something good and show that he can show his boyfriend and girlfriend that he deserves their love.

He didn't hear any footsteps. He had never heard them, not even in the Dread Zone. When she wanted, Shadow Weaver could move very quietly... like a shadow...

„Good Afternoon Kyle, I'd like to talk to you.” he heard a voice behind him that had terrified him for so many years. He jumped in fear and turned towards Hordak's former right-hand man.

„Oh, Shadow Weaver... How nice to see you. How can I help you?” He said, barely able to keep his legs from shaking. Shadow Weaver smiled sourly. Just the sight of her scarred face unnerved him, and that smile… Shadow Weaver had never smiled, and certainly not like this…

„You're still scared of me after all these years. I should consider it my success... But it only proves that I have failed... I have failed you all.” she said in a quiet, very tired voice

Now he was even more afraid. Shadow Weaver always scared him, but when she acted like this it was much worse. Over the years they had learned to avoid her wrath and had become very adept at it. But now that she was starting to behave differently, so unpredictably, he had no idea what could enrage her.

„Uh... If you say so. Who am I to question your judgment.” he said, and suddenly realized that it might be a trap and the woman might expect a completely different answer. “Uh, I mean I'm not criticizing you in any way.” he started to explain, but the Dark Sorcerer waved her hand and said.

„Don't explain yourself, Kyle. It's me who came to apologize to you... Do you remember that mouse you used to keep in a shoebox?” Shadow Weaver asked in a strangely uncertain voice…

„You're talking about Mr. Whiskers!„ he shouted and she looked at her warily. What was she getting at?

„That's what it was called... You see, at that time I was working on an experiment... I wanted to create a spell that would steal life and give it to me. However, I needed a subject to test the spell on, so at night I went to your quarters and took your mouse... Mr. Whiskers. Of course, the experiment didn't produce the expected results... and your pet died. You didn't notice me during the night, so when you woke up and realized the mouse was missing, you blamed Catra... I didn't mislead you... It wasn't because I was ashamed... I just didn't care. But now you know the truth and... I would like to ask you for forgiveness.”

Shadow Weaver stared at him as if she expected something from him, but he remained silent as his mind digested the Dark Sorceress's words… He finally burst out laughing. Loud and humorless, and Shadow Weaver stared at him in confusion. When he cooled down a bit, he started talking. The words came from the depths of his heart, he couldn't... he didn't want to stop them, even though he was sure he would regret it.

You're apologizing to me now! After all these years, when it doesn't matter anymore? Do you even understand what you did? It's not about Mr. Whiskers, even though I loved him so much. Because of you, Lonnie and Rogelio almost beat Catra. We blamed her all these years. We wanted to hurt her then... Just like you hurt us all... It's not me you should be asking for forgiveness, but Catra... But she would never give it to you." he blinked twice because he just understood something. "That's who you meant, right? You wanted to see if we could forgive you, if she could forgive you if you just asked nicely. You just had to test it on someone. Preferably on nice, fearful Kyle... I'm like Mr. Mustache to you." he lowered his head and added. "Leave me alone!"

He narrowed his eyes, expecting a harsh and painful punishment... But instead, Shadow Weaver stared at him with an expressionless face, and then disappeared into the shadow from which she had emerged.

Chapter Notes

> Here's the next chapter. I would love to hear your opinions because I don't know how many people read this.

„Well, I don't know, isn't it a bit too gold? I have the impression that if the light falls on it at the wrong angle, it will blind everyone.” she said, looking at the drawing of the wedding cake. “Is it real gold? Because then I would feel guilty going to the toilet.” she laughed nervously, but the cook, a tall snake person, looked at her disapprovingly and said

„Er, it's probably even worse... And this cake is... Madly red...„ she said, pointing to another picture red as blood. The snake person nodded and said

„I was inspired by your fiancée's clothing style and her personality. It is stuffed with scarlet jam.”

:Er... Catra doesn't like jam very much... She'd rather like cream... „ he said carefully.

„But she would like this one. It is made from gelled blood. On Aquarius they consider it a real delicacy.”

She and Castaspella looked at him meaningfully, so the cook sighed and said with resignation.

„I thought that the heroes had broader horizons... I understand that you won't like the lamprey cake either. – as they gave him a murderous look, they sighed. – Maybe a lemon-almond cake, or a naturally colored green coconut-pineapple cake… – he suggested in a resigned tone.

„Aww! Lemon and almond will be good... Although coconut sounds good too... Do you have anything nutty?” she asked, but seeing the anguish in the snake eyes she said. – Okay, let's have the lemon-almond one... Just add whipped cream... Catra loves it.” she said and the cook nodded.

„Ha! We've already taken care of choosing a wedding cake. It was quick, it took Glimmer over two hours because she wanted to try all of them... „ Castaspella said tiredly and yawned.

„Because no one haven't tried experimenting on her” she said in a low voice, looking sideways at the cook who was giving orders to his assistants. “What made me choose a cook from outside the palace?

„It was supposed to relieve the pressure on the palace kitchen... „ The Head Sorceress replied. “Besides, you wanted to present different flavors of the Universe and you assumed that someone who has been traveling around nearby planets for the last three years knows the cuisines of other worlds... which is actually true.” The queen's aunt smiled weakly.

She sighed and stretched her back. These wedding preparations will exhaust her. This was to be an event for all of Etheria. Or rather, the entire alliance... Empress Eridani assured that she would come to the ceremony to sign the pact. This gave Catra a lot of extra work, even though they couldn't see each other two days before the wedding... To miss each other... or something. Of course, it is the duty of future spouses to meet secretly. Scorpia and Perfuma met in extremely obvious disguises. Mermista and Seahawk dated on a boat at sea until they were late for their own wedding. Only Hordak and Entrapta didn't care about it, they stayed together all the time, they even performed the ceremony without any witnesses. Only they didn't have time for it. Empress Eridani was her most powerful and loyal ally. Catra thought of her as a stuck-up girl who stuck her nose up and pushed around those inferior to her, but she and Glimmer were very fond of each other. Actually, she wasn't a bad person, but the inhabitants of Eridani were so different from the Etherians... Their nobility considered themselves superior to the ordinary inhabitants of the planet only because they were born with wings. They loved Glimmer and She-Ra and treated the other princesses nice, as well as Catra... But how would they treat the ordinary citizens of their planet who were used to much greater equality? What happens if one of them offends someone or worse, gets insulted? She couldn't handle interpersonal conflicts, and the situation seemed to be tense. It was good that Catra's father's subordinates obeyed him and did not cause any problems... But by their very arrival, they disturbed the peace of everyone who came to celebrate.

As soon as Glimmer announced publicly that guests from outside the Empire were going to attend the celebration, a fleet of ships appeared in orbit bringing soldiers and officers. This irritated Glimmer because it meant that the Lord Admiral was prepared for the Queen to agree to his request. However, this did not change the fact that once again foreign soldiers were walking through the streets of capitol, although they seemed to be completely unlike the troops of both Hordes. First of all, they were not a monolith as they expected. Most were members of the Lord Admiral's private fleet called the Fearless Armada. Some came from Tarak, the home planet of Lord Admiral and... Catra. Many, however, came from Other Planets, because they were recruited later, during all the wars that her future father-in-law participated in... She couldn't understand, like most of the inhabitants of Etheria, how someone could fight for money, but Catra with a grim smile explained to her, that she herself employed mercenaries from the Crimson Wastes when she returned from exile, although she hid this from Hordak. She had also seen dokuments that showed that Shadow Weaver had also hired thugs to perform tasks that the Horde leader would not like. Which often meant eliminating her rivals. Sometimes she forgot how complex life was in the Horde and what it took to survive… or maintain High Position. But she still couldn't understand those who killed for money, even if it was just Hive monsters... Whatever they were.

„Adora! Adora! You won't believe who I met!!” she heard Swiftwind's voice as he stuck his head out the window. No one paid attention, apparently the castle cooks were used to the mount's visits. She smiled at her friend and said with a hint of amusement.

„If it's a dragon, I'll be really surprised… And thrilled”

„And I met a dragon a few days ago... Although it was very small. But just follow me! Quick!” Aricorn shouted.

„All right. Lead the way! Would it bother you, Castaspella, can I left you here for a while?” she asked the Head Sorceress who shrugged.

„You've already chosen the dress, and we'll arrange the guests at the tables in the afternoon... I've seen your sketches. They look very... strategic.„ she said. She didn't quite understand what Castaspella was talking about, these were very good plans. She spent half the night making them until Catra finally ordered Brother Blade to tell her to go to sleep.

„Well, see you in the afternoon.” She said, shouted "For the Honor of Grayskull" and jumped out of the window.

She had never seen anything so lovely. A choir of little furry creatures with six legs was singing on main plaza of Brightmoon, a solemn and beautiful song. She remembered that there was probably one of them on Queen Angela's crew, but the that one wanted to cut Perfuma into pieces. These were so sweet that even the mention of Glimmer's mother didn't make her sad. Swiftwind accompanied them by clapping... It mean, Swiftwind was tapping his hoof. Out of the corner of her eye, she saw that the creatures were being led by a large cat person with black fur. She remembered what Catra had told her and walked up to him.

„Sorry to disturb you, but you must be Pahtra?” she asked. The Cat person turned to her and put a strange white roll into his mouth and lit it on fire.

„Yeah.” he said in a low voice and blew stinking smoke towards them.

„Because Adora's girlfriend is also a Pahtra, at least a little bit so it would be nice to meet some of her people.” Swiftwind said enthusiastically. She told him a bit of Catra's Story the day before yesterday

„I see.” he took another drag and blew into them again. It was going to be a long conversation.

„Could you tell us what song they sing, because we liked it very much and...„ she said, hoping that this time she would receive a more precise answer. It was not Pahtra who gave it to her, but someone from behind her back.

She turned around and saw a large Lizard with half of its face covered in countless Scars.

„Oh! Hello! There's Adora She”Ra, Princess of Power, and this is my Brave Steed Swiftwind. – Aricon bowed low

„I am Zare... Commander-in-Chief of the Veskarian contingent.” she looked down at her. Even though she was in She”Ra's form, the lizard”man was almost as tall as her.

„Oh, and what is this anthem actually about?” she asked. Veska looked at the creatures and gave an order in a hard voice.

„Sing in common!”!

The creatures bowed to Zara and began the song again, this time in a language she understood.

“Invincible is Veskarium!

Her glory is eternal!

Her banners will fly in all corners of the galaxy.

The seas will turn red with the blood of her enemies!

The glow of burning cities will turn night into day!

Damoritosha's divine will leads us towards conquest.

The entire universe will kneel before the power of Veskarium... „ the melody and voices were as joyful as before.

„That's enough! – she exclaimed sharply and Vesk, with tears of emotion in her eyes, looked at her in surprise.

„You don't like our anthem? It contains the ideals that guide our people!” she said eagerly.

"It's a little too... Intense for my taste..." she laughed nervously, while Swiftwind, standing next to her, tapped a rhythm with his hoof unconsciously. “You know, I think my old friend Rogelio was someone like you. – she said, hoping to change the topic of conversation to something less... disturbing.

„So he was a Vesk. It is a great tragedy that he could not grow up in the warm embrace of Veskarium. He would then be taught to fight with all weapons from childhood. We would instill in him love for our great country and contempt for its enemies. He would look forward to the day when he would stand in the front lines fighting for the glory of Veskarium, fearing nothing, because there is no greater honor than a glorious death for one's motherland!” there was a fiery passion in the lizard woman's voice.

„You know, I have the impression that he probably didn't miss much.” she smiled at her interlocutor, trying not to reveal the terror hidden in her heart. Zare snorted with contempt and was about to say something more when another person approached them and joined the conversation.

„Our... friends from Veskarium can be... intense sometimes, but I assure you, not all of them are like that. I once had a girlfriend, Vesk. She loved music and sang love songs about broken hearts so wonderfully!" another lizardman explained. She looked completely different. She was even bigger than Zare, although not as muscular. It had a long neck and wings on its back, and its scales were silver. Zare snorted again.

„Oh! I've met someone like you before! Swiftwind joined in the conversation. – Remember how I told you that I met a dragon! This was someone like that!" her mount exclaimed enthusiastically. The silver-scaled lizardman smiled surprisingly friendly, even though it revealed a multitude of sharp fangs.

„I am not a Dragon, but a Dragonkin. This is quite a common and absolutely understandable mistake. However, there are many dragons on our home planet, Tiraxus, just like in other parts of the galaxy... And my name is Tares, and I represent the Pact Worlds in this endeavor.„ said Tares. Swiftwind looked at his mistress pleadingly. She smiled and stroked his head.

"Don't worry, I will never replace you! You are the most wonderful steed anyone could imagine."

„Oh, most dragons would react very badly to the idea of being someone's mount. They are powerful and proud Beings... And you said you've ever met someone like me?"

Somewhat reassured, Aricorn nodded and said.

„Yes! He was also silver and said his name was Alatar and… Did something happen?" asked Swiftwind, seeing that the dragonkin looked sad.

„Nothing like that... I used to have a nephew with that name, but I lost him when Kesler was devoured by the Swarm”

She stretched and yawned. She dozed for an hour, basking in the moonlight, lying on a soft couch on the balcony, listening to the sound of the waterfall. It put her to sleep, made her feel relaxed... Her only regret was that Adora wasn't with her... preferably naked. Unfortunately, due to this stupid custom, she couldn't officially meet her beloved... On the other hand, he can simply sneak up on her at night. This will be too easy. It would be funnier if Adora sneaked up on her at night, preferably in the form of She-Ra. She used to feel strangely around her girlfriend's second form, but now she discovered that she had many advantages...

„Grand Marshal Catra! Lord Admiral Felix Antares…. I mean, your father... wants to see you!” Brother Blade shouted. She groaned and said with resignation in her voice.

Her father was waiting for her in the garden. He was alone, Lady. Ka was busy with her work, she wasn't sure what it was, but it must have involved various unpleasant things. The woman's absence didn't bother her in the slightest. She reminded her too much of Shadow Weaver. Next to my father stood two soldiers in full gear and a self-propelled cart covered with a plank

„Hey, Lord Admiral.„ she said. She still couldn't bring herself to call him father, but he didn't push her, and she was grateful... She couldn't think of herself as someone with a family. This should have happened to Adora. She would be happy to meet her parents. She too. Adora's parents certainly wouldn't be so... domineering. They would rather be nice and goofy.

„I would like to show you the wedding gift I prepared for your fiancée.” her father said and ripped off the sheet with a strong pull. Armor appeared before her eyes. It was golden white, the colors of She-Ra'y. It seemed large and heavy, but she had seen armor like that on clones, and Hordak wore a similar one as well. They were called power armor. It provided the user with greatly increased strength and speed, which in Adora's case meant… Uh, truly tremendous strength and speed. She touched one shoulder pad gently. It turned out to be surprisingly light.

„I have two such armors. I wear one in battle, and the other is for my heir. However, you don't like wearing heavy armor, so I decided to give it to Adora. It took some time to give it She-Ra's colors."

She touched the armor with sincere and unconcealed delight. She had to admit he was beautiful. She gently ran her finger across its surface. Not even a scratch was created, even though they cut the armored steel

„What is it made of?" she asked in a quiet voice, and the Lord Admiral replied proudly.

„It's Adamant. One of the strongest metals. And the rarest ones. Some ships are built from the alloy, but it is almost pure metal. Nothing can it. Adamant is called the bones of the gods."

She grimaced when she heard the term

„We're talking about all these gods again. Are they really that important to all of you? Do you seriously believe in them?"

Antares frowned.

„It's not a matter of faith, but of common sense. Gods exist, that is an indisputable fact. It's good to have them on your side and it's better not to irritate them." her father said, and in response she laughed darkly.

„So they are like Shadow Weaver. We were afraid of her and constantly wanted to please her. Does this mean that we should build an altar for her too?"

Her father looked thoughtful. Then he said in a gentle, warm, fatherly voice.

„I know that a lot of bad things have happened to you in your life and it almost broke you, but you found the strength to overcome your inner darkness and became a true hero. However, there are millions of children in the Empire who must live in conditions undreamed of by most of the inhabitants of Etheria, except for children of war like you and your fiancée. I intend to end this, and as soon as the celebrations ends, I intend to leave to fight the Inheritors of Horde Prime. I would like to ask you, my daughter, to come with me and help me fight this war. Of course, Adora is also invited, her presence will certainly help significantly in defeating our enemies."

She looked at her father in pure astonishment. He suggested that she go with him to wage war against the Ultimate Horde and the Celestial Brothers. She would have to give up her position as Grand Marshal and leave Etheria for many months, maybe even years... But after all, weren't they going to do that anyway? That's why Glimmer wanted her to get closer to her father. Now she had the opportunity to really help the alliance. And he will command a real modern army...

„I'll think about it... What do you have for me? – she asked, smiling at Antares. She wanted to jokingly change the subject, but her father took her words with absolute seriousness.

„Everything" he replied in a solemn voice. "You are my heiress. You will receive everything I have."

Only after a long moment did she understand the meaning of his words. She felt happy... and scared, it's hard to say which was stronger.

Calamity was aware that over the past few days she had not come much closer to achieving their great mission. She was preoccupied with other matters. She was looking for an opportunity to... bypass the agreement made between Creeping Chaos and Shadow Weaver, but so far she had not found any loophole, no possibility of bending the rules, it was dangerous She knew that playing with Nyarlathotep's will was not the best idea, nor was trying to abuse their patience. Her only success so far was winning the favor of the Lord Admiral. She guessed that this man was planning to make Catra his right hand, his successor. Although she would prefer to see her in many small pieces, but if this man is as much of a monster as he is said to be... This could cause Catra to fall again, and this time the girl will sink completely into darkness without even realizing it. Perhaps such a fate would be much fairer than even the most painful death.

However, it pained her to admit that she missed Shadow Weaver. Unfortunately, she failed to fully gain the favor of the people of Etheri. Yes, they had well-deserved admiration for her and she aroused great interest, but she did not earn their trust. It was largely the fault of her temperament. The training fight with the hellknight really spoiled her relationship with Adora, who, despite her astonishing pace, noticed that the fight was getting out of control. To make matters worse, the Dark Sorceress' lover wielded that damedd sword. She already knew about his existence, but she didn't expect that she would come face to face with the warrior of hell. She didn't know what power this blade had, but the possibility that it could prematurely end her precious life was outrageous. She unnecessarily made an enemy of both people who posed a real threat to her. If Shadow Weaver were here, it would be easier for her to predict the consequences of her actions.

What was done was done, now she was starting to implement their actual plan. Even the inhabitants of Brightmoon were unaware of the vastness of the underground beneath the castle. They extended to the nearby mountains, and more importantly, they were the work of the First Ones. Courtesy of Heart Gift, she had a map of the entire area. She was now going to meet with the silly AI and confirm the information she had acquired. The Queen accepted the Bloodstone fragment, and this Entrapta was stupid enough to be easily tricked into installing it. Shadow Weaver had no idea about this part of the plan. If all goes well, then, by the will of the Creeping Chaos, he will gain access to Etheria's energy grid, and then...

„Hello Heart Gift. I came to visit you, just like I promised!” she exclaimed in the nicest voice she could muster. Heart Gift immediately materialized.

„Oh! Lady Cala! So nice to see you! I knew you wouldn't lie to me!” the AI shouted happily.

„I would never cheat on my friend. Could you show me again the map you showed me before?”

Heart Gift nodded and brought up the map. Calamity studied the map for a few minutes. The most promising point was in the nearby mountains, quite close to where she was currently. Suddenly a great idea occurred to her.

„Could you create a guard like the one I met before?”

The AI nodded cautiously and said.

„I guess so, but why would I do that?

„Because enemies will approach. Enemies of the First Ones. I wouldn't want something bad to happen to my friend.” she said with concern in her voice. Heart Gift She nodded in understanding. Well, if that AI kills Adora, doesn't he break the contract? She smiled cruelly.

Chapter Notes

> Here's the next chapter. The scam is real. I invite you to comment and ask for feedback.

„Please. Here are your new glasses.” said the Rebel soldier named Sune, smiling friendly to them. “I don't know if they will be as good as yours, we don't have such good technology here as yours, but we did everything we could. We installed something similar in your helmet. It's a pity we didn't have this in the past, because we had a deaf girl here and she had to leave because she couldn't hear what was being said to her. Although maybe it's better. She was finally adopted... I wonder what's happening to her now? I would like to meet her someday.” concluded the soldier and they left to take care of his own business. Their scuad stood outside their ship, waiting to depart. Eti stood next to Sparkling Paw, who smiled cheerfully at everyone and tried to say something.

„Do I sound similar?” she looked questioningly. Itel slowly nodded her head, and Alatar and Lilka made the okay sign.

„Roughly so... They didn't hear your voice much, but they did a very good job.” said Eti. Sparklepaw's voice was a little deeper, a little more mature. Ita was more feminine... She liked it.

„Thanks. It's nice to understand what others are saying to you and to be understood... I mean, Eti understood me, but it's nice to talk to others... I'm not saying it's bad to talk to Eti, but now I can talk to everyone.” said the white-haired girl, blushing. Itel approached her, and slowly, so that Sparklepaw noticed.

„I'm also happy to talk to you, Rosie... „ The elf said and smiled sadly, but in a friendly way. The shooter understood that it was mostly her fault. They weren't together with Itel, but actually they were… Why were the feelings so complicated? The fight was easier. You would target someone, press the trigger and someone would go to sleep. And emotions... Nothing was easy with them. They were like fire, untamed and impossible to control. They warmed the soul, but could easily burn it, leaving scars that could not be healed, or even completely consumed it, leaving only ashes... She regretted that she had hurt her friend. Itel didn't deserve what happened to her, but not that she "broke up" with her. In fact, she should have done it already, she unnecessarily allowed the elf to delude herself that there could be something between them. They were friends, Itel was one of the first people she met after she was freed from Jantar and Lady Ka. They cared about each other. Together they risked their lives and fought against those who stood in their way. But she couldn't give her her heart, because Itel's heart actually belonged to her hatred. Anger pierced her through and through, like a hunter's pike piercing a wild beast. She should help her friend heal these wounds, but she had no idea how. She should ask Sparklepaw, she knew about feelings, but she was part of the problem.

Sparklepaw… Rosie… She didn't know how to describe how she felt about her. She liked her very much. She wanted to stay with her as long as possible. Watch her smile full of joy. Smelling her scent, touch her skin. Kiss me. Yes! She would like to kiss her and even more! She would like to see her without clothes. Touch her. Make love to her. She has always liked girls and only girls. In addition to Itel, she slept with several Others, such as the daughter of Doctor Sidonius . But she had never felt with anyone what she felt with Rosie. Did she love her? Could someone like her love a monster, someone? She was an Assassin , a murderess created to kill and enslave those too weak to resist her will. She was the daughter of a tyrant, a monster who had the lives of millions of beings on his conscience. What was worst of all, she was not only his daughter, but someone, or something, created in his image, just like this Catra. Only the other one didn't know the truth. The Lord Admiral was a skillful manipulator who deceived millions . Will he be able to do it with that girl? Will she become a puppet dancing to his tune or will she be like a fly in a spider's web? Or maybe she won't care at all. She heard the whispers of the Rebels and felt their eyes on her. She saw anxiety, fear, and sometimes hostility in them. Her sister was raised in Horde, in military barracks, trained from childhood to be an ideal soldier, under the supervision of Grimmy. There was a secret in it that no one wanted to tell her, or maybe she was afraid to find out because the truth might be too painful to accept. Since childhood, he was best friends with the Blonde, Adora , who had the power to become this Big Girl. and then everything changed. Her sister became Hordak's right hand and led the war until she was kidnapped by Crooked Face and there something terrible happened to her, although from what she understood, she had already suffered a lot before... But now she wants to marry this cool Blonde. Only for reasons she didn't understand, Scar wanted to fight her. Actually , she liked the Scar. There was the same fierceness in her as Itel... Maybe she should hook up with the Elf? She had two boyfriends ... but she also liked girls, and Itel liked boys, so why not the four of them can live together?. The blond guy was very nice. He reminded her a little of her sister's fiancée and a little of Sparklepaw. It's hard to say why. Maybe because he was nice and had this weird sword…

„Hello... „ she heard the timid one and Blonde Boy came out from between the buildings... I'm talking about the basilisk.

„Hey Blonde Boy. What's up? Are you coming with us?” she asked, and Sparkypaw added.

„I can now speak in a way that you can understand me. I will tell you about Absalom ! This is a wonderful place! „ „ the former intern liked Blonde Boy very much, although in a quite innocent way. Well, they were both similar. Seemingly charming and delicate, but deep down they are as hard as Tempered Steel. Upon seeing him, Toshi squealed and flew to the boy. He liked him too. Alatar, Itel, and Lilka greeted him as well, though the red-haired girl tried to look down at him like a seasoned orc warrior would a young one, even before the "Great Test" or whatever she thought orcs did. Considering that Blonda was over a head taller than Lilka, it was quite a feat..

„Well, that's what I'm wondering about. We haven't been getting along very well with Lonnie lately, but Rogelio keep Eye on her... and for Scarlet. I'd like to talk to you for a moment. And then I'll see... And Itel, Lonnie wants to talk to you.” he said, and the Elf nodded and went to talk to Scar. "Aha, so something is brewing..." She thought with satisfaction. When they were alone, Blonde Boy looked around as if he wanted to know if no one wanted was listening to them and asked „Eti, could we talk about your sister for a moment?” he looked down.

„But what should we talk about? Now I know everything.” she exclaimed, looking at her metal hand . There was a strange, anxious tension all around.

„No, you don't know everything. You must know the truth... „ he whispered and began to tell her the story of her sister and her life in the Horde.

Itel knew she should feel honored to be invited by the Comrade General. She respected this woman. She accomplished what she will never be able to do. She led the uprising against tyranny... Well, it wasn't actually tyranny and the uprising was not supported by the inhabitants of the planet... She guess that was the problem... She had no idea that she would get them into such a mess cursed by devils and demons. It wasn't Rosie's fault. How could the girl know that Antares was such a bastard. Millions believed in his nobility, why would an intern who didn't know her true name think otherwise. It was her companions who hid the truth from her, even Dilayla, who seemed to be trustworthy. Besides, there was no way they could prevent the Lord Admiral from arriving on this planet. Catra was the main reason he was here.

It wasn't Shadow Weaver's fault either. The Dark Sorceress did what seemed best at the time... And perhaps it was. The People's Rebellion was the safest place for them to hide from the Father of the two cat girls at the moment. No, she was to blame for everything. If she hadn't come up with the idea of breaking into the castle, they would have been able to roam the planet freely as long as they were careful, gathering allies and warning others about the Lord Admiral. She had burned all the bridges behind them and they had to take shelter here... But what could they do now? They didn't know how much Catra and the rest of the queen's court trusted Antares , and according to Scarlet's words, they treated him with cautious kindness, but that was a few days ago, and Antares was a patient man who was able to bend to his will with perseverance and built his legend perfectly. Has he already managed to convince everyone that he is the hero they have always been waiting for? The father she always dreamed of. They must enlist the help of Lonnie and her rebels, although they had no idea what the General was actually planning. Now maybe she'll learn something.

They were in the command room. Scarlet, Shadow Weaver, Lonnie, and her officers were here . She recognized Grizzol , and the others introduced themselves as Cobalt , Octavia. Sune, the head of the technicians, and Doctor Moors were also there, although no one wanted to be near the Brain in the Cylinder, which she wasn't surprised at all, because even she, a girl who had experienced the horror of a Swarm invasion, was terrified by this individual. In addition to them, there was Lonnie and Kyle's boyfriend named Rogelio, two guards in expensive armor, and a creature called the Imp, who looked a bit like the smallest of the devils, but upon closer inspection she decided that he was more clone than hellspawn. As everyone sat down, she was surprised to see that everyone, even Dr. Moors, was staring at her with curiosity mixed with suspicion. It was a surprisingly embarrassing feeling. She may not have had social anxiety like Eti, but being the center of attention was very embarrassing .

„Well, now that we're gathered here, it's time to discuss our plan.” Lonnie said and began to describe their plan. Most of the rebels were to carry out mock attacks on border posts and government buildings. Nothing really serious, just a few simple acts of vandalism, without getting into a fight with the princesses' forces. This way they could distract Catra and reassure her that Brihghtmoon was safe while the rest of them were supposed to attack the party, where some of them were supposed to cause a ruckus and announce the formation of the People's Alliance, while the other group was supposed to get into the castle to break into castle database, install a worm there, which she herself suggested, because the Rebellion members' knowledge of computers was limited and... There were differences of opinion what nex. Lonnie insisted on the idea of kidnapping Entrapta, the former Lady of the castle they were staying in and a brilliant inventor, in which Doctor Moors supported her, and Shadow Weaver opposed it with Scarlet's support. The Dark Sorceress intended to meet with Hordak, the former leader of the Horde and husband of Entrapta , and a few of her other allies, whose names she did not provide. She wanted to warn them about the Lord Admiral and other threats of the Galaxy, but she wasn't going to reveal exactly what she wanted to talk to them about. No one was going to take sides in this discussion. No one here liked or trusted Shadow Weaver, but from what she could see, the Brain in the Cylinder didn't have much sympathy of the Rebel either. She herself had to admit reluctantly that she liked the idea of a gloomy Elf better. She understood that the greatest threat to everyone was the Lord Admiral and kidnapping some princess was a waste of time. At first she didn't speak, watching the argument, but eventually she decided that this meeting would never end, so she spoke up.

„Maybe we'll steal the sword. You know, the magical one that allows Adora to become this big girl with a sword. Apparently she gained power when she found him, so if we take him, then... „ she said, convinced that she had come up with a brilliant plan that would reconcile everyone and solve the problems, but when everyone looked at her and in the eyes of many of them she saw lenient interest, she felt that the beginning of brown.

„Adora used to need a sword to become She-Ra, but now she no longer needs it, she uses it. She broke it the moment the heart was activated. Now she can become her without his help.” Lonnie explained with a hint of impatience in her voice.

She's heard this story before from this Aricorn Swiftwind , but she didn't believe him. The rest, however, accepted it as true.

„And even if they did, well, only the First Ones could activate it, and I don't think anyone here knows any other representative of this ancient civilization, unless I don't know something. „ said Doctor Moors , and she had the impression that he was alluding to something, but what? Is he implying that Rosie was of this species? This idea was both ridiculous and disturbing.

„It's actually not such a stupid idea.” Scarlet interjected. “The sword is still kept in Brightmoon and is treated as a Kingdom Treasure, a priceless souvenir whose loss can have great symbolic significance. Besides, it's still a powerful artifact of the First Ones. Even if it has been cracked, it may hold many secrets that are still not known.”

„Didn't Entrapta examine him thoroughly?” Lonnie asked with surprise in her voice, and the younger sorceress shook her head.

„Adora told Entrapta not to examine him, but she didn't insist on her opinion. They are both too aware of potential threats... „ she said in a thoughtful tone and looked at Doctor Moors . “Would our allies be willing to examine it?”

The brain in the Cylinder thought for a moment, then spoke carefully.

„Yes, it will definitely interest them. I even think that the knowledge they would gain from it would enable them to launch a certain ship hidden among the ice... „ he said, and she had the impression that some invisible exchange of words had taken place between him and Lonnie.

„Giving such an Artifact to Mi-Go is not a good idea. Shadow Weaver said sharply. Lonnie looked at the Dark Sorceress and spoke to her in a soft, thoughtful voice, without the anger and irritation usually heard when she spoke to a disfigured woman.

„This is still the best possible solution. All the alternatives... It doesn't matter... Itel, what do we have to be prepared for when it comes to the Lord Admiral?”

Only after a moment did she realize that it was her that the General had addressed and she blushed again. 'Do they take me for an expert on the Lord Admiral...' she thought and realized that they were actually right. She had been collecting information about this man for years and knew more about him than many statesmen and stateswoman who proudly called themselves the nation's chosen ones. She felt a sudden surge of confidence and began to tell all she know.

„He is ruthless, he will do anything to achieve his goals, but he is also cunning. He cares about public opinion... Because, you understand, he's not like your Horde Prime, in the galaxy you can't attack someone like that without a reason, especially if you're not as powerful as Azlanti or the Swarm. His army, at least the main part, is very disciplined and serves him faithfully, for which he repays them by paying them well and protecting them from the justice system and all enemies. The most dangerous are the Void Orphans. They are orphans raised by a fleet, mainly of wars with the Swarm” she looked at those gathered in the council hall and understood that for these former cadets or those who commanded them, what she said had special meaning. „There are still his jackals. These are bandits and murderers released from prisons, whom he rules with an iron fist and uses them as cannon fodder or to do dirty work... It was once commanded by an Elf, but Uncle Eti killed him and now they are probably commanded by Lady Ka, a Jantar clone just like Bina, the woman who took care of us… „ she mused darkly, because they had not heard from her since they left the wasteland. They didn't know if he was alive or in the hands of that monster Antares and her fucked up sister. She had been unkind to her lately, she didn't listen to her orders and commands, even though she only cared about them... „Besides, you can expect absolutely anything.” She continued for a long moment of gloomy silence. – Cyber Ghouls, Vesks, Rogelio's crazy relatives, war mages, Drow assassins and dragons... One dragon, a gigantic and ancient red wyrm named Lady Sorrowflame, serves the Lord Admiral.” she sighed and drank some water. Everyone thought about her words for a few moments, and then a tall boy with blue hair walked into the command room and said a few words in her ear, and Lonnie smiled.

„The Empress of Eridani comes to Etheria. If we manage to kidnap her, we will force Glimmer to negotiate and make concessions. Listen, this is the plan. – Comrade General looked truly happy for the first time since she met her.

„What happened to us Emily.” he said to his friend and the Droid chirped in response. He smiled at her and added. “You know, it turns out Shadow Weaver is alive, Catra and Eti have a father, Rosie can throw tanks, and we joined the Rebellion. What happened to us.” he smiled, although he didn't feel happy. For the first time in the many years since he had been freed, he felt completely helpless. He felt like everything was getting out of his hands. When they landed on Etheria, he was sure that he would make everyone happy with good news. About the fact that Glimmer's mother is alive, that Catra has a sister, that he met Mara's descendant and that the galaxy not only has not been ravaged by the Horde, but is also full of beauty. And now he was traveling with the most hated woman on the planet, who was once again taking care of a group of kids, not only Bina’s one’s , but also her former cadets. He didn't say why these young people did not want to enjoy peace, but continued to fight against those who saved their world. But he has to be here, he won't let them get hurt, not again. While he was there, most of the former cadets ignored him, and then they started looking at him closely and suspiciously, as if he was up to something... It would be ridiculous if it weren't so sad... And problematic. It made it difficult for him to get close to them, and without it, keeping them safe wouldn't be easy. At first he inspected the ship, as the young crew members were now busy and distracted, but it didn't take long, especially since Mr. Ilemshaw was helping him with it. Then he tried to help the former cadets, but they didn't trust him and wouldn't let him help them until Lilka intervened. Bina's wards were held in begrudging respect, probably due to their familiarity with Shadow Weaver, so when the red-haired girl invited him into the kitchen, no one stopped her. She took a few buckets of peeled potatoes and said that now she would prepare a real Ork potato cake for everyone. He had no idea that Orcs ate cakes or potatoes in general, but he didn't know much about Orcs at all, having never met one before. Lilka ordered the potatoes to be peeled and boiled, and then they mashed them with onion and bacon. Then she put the whole mass into several huge cake tins, an inheritance from Entrapta's ancestors, and ordered them to bake. When everything was almost ready, she ordered them to be taken out and placed on top of the crispy, goat cheese and minced meat, and then baked again for a while. The dish was delicious, tender on the inside and crispy on the outside. Everyone liked it, so no one protested when Lilka declared that she would bake a real orc cheesecake and appointed him her assistant. He liked cooking, although he didn't have many opportunities to do so, so he happily agreed. Thanks to this, no one protested when he volunteered to participate in the mission. He was currently standing next to the warehouse in a rebel outfit made especially for him.

„Listen Emily... I think you should stay here.” he said, and the Droid began chirping indignantly. “I know you can handle it. You've handled worse situations, but... I think you're being too conspicuous. There is no other Horde droids like this, in fact I haven't seen any other droid in Brightmoon. Besides, it's good to have someone waiting for us here.„ He said and hugged his friend, he hoped it wasn't goodbye.

As he walked towards the ship, he encountered Itel also heading towards him. The elf looked happy, which made him happy. After the fight with Itel and the breakup with Eti, in fact he didn't even know that the girls were together, she was very depressed and he was starting to worry about her, but recently they reconciled.

„You know, Wrongdak, you don't have to participate in this mission. I know you will fight against your old friends. I don't quite understand why I'm taking part in all this.” she said and he shook his head.

„No... I should be with you. You saved me, even though you actually gained nothing from it. Now I have to protect you as best I can.” he said in a serious voice, and the Elf asked.

His only response was a sad smile.

When they reached the ship, they found that Kyle was already waiting for them. The boy was serious and looked a bit guilty. Itel frowned, but smiled at him and said.

„You're coming with us, just like Lonnie, Rogelio , Imp and Miss... Shadow Weaver.”

The boy nodded as if he didn't care much about the mission. He just sighed and said.

„Eti wants to talk to you.”

The elf looked concerned.

„Has something happened to Et?” There was fear in her voice.

„ Nothing at all and a lot. Kyle said and looked down.

They headed towards the cat girl's cabin. Eti was sitting on the bed, stroking Tonshi and looking ahead. She seemed strangely thoughtful, even distressed.

„Eti... Has something happened?” Itel asked, even more scared than before. The cat girl ignored her and asked, her voice duller than usual.

„Is this all true? About my sister and Grimy ... Shadow Weaver... About how she treated her... „ she looked at him.

„I didn't know her then. They set me free at the end of the war, and I only know what I was told. But yes, she hurt her a lot and everything that boy said is true.”

The girl let out a short, broken laugh.

„You know, I can't even hate her for it. The part of me, the part that burns cold, is even glad that someone had a life as fucked up as I did. Shadow Weaver was Catra's Lady Ka, or Lady. Ka was my Shadow Weaver... I can't hate her because she hates herself... Did you say yes? – she said to Itel, who blinked twice.

„What?” she asked , and the cat girl explained.

„Well, for Scar mariage proposal.”

The elf laughed and nudged Eti, and the atmosphere lightened a bit, but he knew enough about emotions to know that it wouldn't end that easily.

Masquerade

Chapter Notes

Here's the next chapter. I invite you to comment and express your opinion.

Tirin smiled to herself because it was easier than she expected. This place was unlike any other she had ever seen. It was beautiful here, like the fairy tales about the Old Empire that her mother used to read to her. Except it was real! A beautiful castle made of white and pink stone. Clean and tidy houses. Nice and friendly residents. The latter made her mission much easier. When she arrived here in a roundabout way, hiring transport from several different places, no one stopped her or questioned her. She had heard that on many planets, especially the Pact Worlds, the inhabitants enjoyed similar freedom, but she doubted that even there they welcomed travelers so warmly. She was a stranger girl from an unknown place wearing strange armor that no one here had probably seen before. Some, especially the drivers, guessed that she was a disabled person, but they didn't ask many questions. They felt sorry for her, but without overbearing pity, and respected her privacy, although they were probably curious about who she was and what happened to her. It was she who told her own story, made up of course. She was supposed to come from a distant planet attacked by the Horde. Her parents fled to a planet called Jadehell, thinking that Prime's forces would not reach there, no matter how dangerous the place was. Her mother died and she became ill. Shortly afterwards, the war ended and her depressed and sick father left her in the care of his friend, a rebel, who bought her this outfit. The story sounded credible and was as close to the truth as possible. Everyone nodded understandingly and didn't ask for more. She felt a bit guilty deceiving such nice people, but in her life she had often manipulated others for the greater good. No, it was not the inhabitants of Etheria that were the biggest obstacle she encountered, but herself…

She had to take a double dose of anti-anxiety medication, but she still felt terrified. Her heart was pounding and she felt like she was going to die, or maybe she wanted to die a little, just to not be afraid. She kept asking herself how she could have been so stupid as to willingly agree to go on this expedition. Then she remembered that she was doing it for Captain Moonshadow, a woman who had done more for her than a birth mother, she had to help her. Therefore, she gritted her teeth and walked forward with her head down. When asked why she was acting so strangely, she simply told the truth. She claimed that a terrible accident had befallen her and now the sight of the open sky frightens her. They understood it, because the inhabitants of this place also suffered a lot from the Horde. Of course, she is one of those who oppressed and occupied, but she couldn't tell anyone that.

Brightmoon was full of visitors not only from all over Etheria, but also from other nearby planets. Everyone came here for the Victory Day celebrations and the Royal Wedding. She even received a leaflet describing the celebration. There was even a photo of happy couples. She stared at it for several long moments, oblivious to the terror hanging over her head. She saw both girls there. First she looked at the blonde traitor who was about to take over the Captain's sword. Was she really that bad? She seemed nice, maybe a bit lost, but truth be told, she didn't understand people very well. Apparently she was friends with the Queen, whose mother she was supposed to have betrayed. Maybe it was all just one big mistake, or maybe both girls were calculating schemers who had fooled everyone The latter possibility did not seem likely to her, but she was Azlanti, conspiracies and intrigues were in her blood. And the Captain's daughter... As she looked at her, she felt a twinge of jealousy, childish and stupid, but irresistible nonetheless. Glimmer was so beautiful... and healthy... She was the strong woman any mother would dream of, not the twisted and crippled wreck that she was. Will Moonshadow ever reconcile with his daughter, or will he forget about Tirin? Will she reject her like the society of her race? And she will be alone again. A crippled girl in a great indifferent universe.

„Can I help you with something?” asked a man about sixty years old in a lilac coat and with a mystic's staff in his hand. She hastily put the leaflet in her pocket, glad that the mask made it impossible to see how she was blushing.

„No... It's just... I just arrived on Etheria and... I've never been to an event like this, so I feel a bit overwhelmed, especially since I am afraid of open spaces and crowds...„ she said hurriedly, and the man looked at her understandingly and said.

„I understand you a little. For some time I couldn't get used to the open sky and the stars. I'm Mikah and I can show you around the city.„ He said and smiled friendly. She hesitated, because her profession as a pirate taught her not to trust anyone... Although perhaps she owes it to her Azlantean upbringing... But she needed help, it would be difficult for her to get all the information she needed by tomorrow. Besides, the man seemed nice, so she could probably trust him.

„Nice to meet you Mikah , I'm Tirin... „ she extended her hand in bionic armor and Mikah shook it and asked.

„You have an unusual accent. I don't know him, but I've heard a lot of them because of my profession.”

„It's an Azlantean accent.” she replied and immediately bit her tongue. But she calmed down right after. After all, no one here has heard of the Azlanti Star Empire?

The years he spent on Beast Island taught him how to control his emotions, so he didn't show anything when the girl admitted that she was Azlanti. She probably only told him about it because she didn't think anyone on the planet would know what she was talking about. However, he knew who the Azlantii were, Shadow

Weaver herself had told him, and he decided to trust her on this one matter. These people imprisoned his wife, a noble and absolutely innocent woman who did not deserve such a fate. He took a deep breath to control the fire burning in his heart. The girl looked strange. She had navy blue, translucent hair and extremely pale skin, and her eyes were completely purple, even the whites. She wore an oxygen mask over her face and was clad in a strange armor that looked like it was made of organic matter. She seemed petite and looked unhealthy. She must have been ill with something serious. She also seemed afraid, even afraid to look around. It was understandable, after all, she had come here on a mission from her superiors. She was probably supposed to be spying on Brightmoon before the attack or something. Except... She didn't look like the kind of person who would conspire against his daughter, but appearances can be deceiving. Moreover, not all servants of the forces of evil are bad and wicked people. Just look at Scorpia , who was an extremely nice and sympathetic woman, and yet she served the Horde faithfully for years and tried to kill Bow several times . Maybe it was similar with this girl? She was just an innocent cog in a terrible machine of terror and exploitation. She could also be a skillful manipulator who perfidiously exploited the mercy and kindness of others, someone like Shadow Weaver. He had to find out, he had to know the Truth... That's why he decided not to inform Glimmer, at least for now, but to observe the girl, waiting to learn something specific.

So he went with Tirin and started telling her about Brightmoon and Etheri in general, showing her around the capital. The girl listened to him with interest and even relaxed a little. He tried not to tell her too much about the country's secrets, which wasn't difficult because he knew enough stories himself that he could go on for hours, or even days. He didn't even notice when he started talking about Mystacor.

„So you studied in a real ancient school of magic like in the old stories, with owls and brooms, not one of these modern schools full of computers and Holographic glyphs?” the girl asked, revealing again that she was from outside the empire. Mystacor was the only magical school in this part of the galaxy, as magic had been forgotten here, but the sorceress Saihe , who accompanied Shadow Weaver, showed that sorcery was widely practiced elsewhere.

„Well, we don't have brooms and owls here, and we'll probably soon be using computers and other things to learn magic. My sister will take care of it.„ he smiled.

„Your sister teaches at school?” the girl asked curiously, and he mentally scolded himself for his talkativeness. He was no better at keeping secrets than this girl.

„Yes, she's a teacher... I think I'm a little hungry... do you have a place here?” when she shook her head in response, he smiled and took her to the inn he liked.

He was glad that no one here called him king, or worse, king consort. The locals were sensitive enough to know that this would reopen old wounds. He bowed to the host and his partner, then sat down at the table. He resisted the temptation to order wine and asked for lemonade and spicy vegetable cream. He asked Tirin if she wanted anything, but she only asked for hot water. She dissolved some gray-brown powder in it and carefully took off the mask and took a few breaths as if to test it, then she smiled and drank it all slowly, as if she was afraid of choking, and when she finished and saw him watching her, she explained.

„My digestive system does not function properly and my jaws are not as strong as in healthy people, so I have to drink special supplements. It doesn't bother me because I have no sense of smell or taste.” her voice did not come from her mouth, but from a small device near her larynx, she almost did not move her mouth. She smiled sadly, she was so young and delicate, younger than his daughter, about Frost=ay's age , although the ice princess looked much healthier. Her lips were pinkish-brown and her teeth were bluish.

„What happened to you?” he asked in a frightened voice, and Tirin sighed and coughed, then with a little fear she put on her mask and told her story. Most of it was made up, but Jadehell's stay on this planet felt real. It was that place where Angela was imprisoned? Was her body as twisted as this girl's? Did the Azlanti Azlantii send their children to this cursed place? What kind of bastards send their own children there? Barely holding back the urge to hug her, he offered to rent her a room, but she shook her head and paid for the week in advance herself. She used coins of unknown origin, but this was not strange, the Empire was incredibly vast and they had not yet contacted all the planets conquered by the Horde.

„So you studied at this Mystacor ... Are there any other schools here? – she asked, clearly curious.

„There used to be Arcanacor and Umbracor, but they were destroyed in ancient times during the Sorcerer Wars...

“You fought wars here? I thought this was a good place.”

He smiled sadly.

„Sometimes good people do bad things and bad people do good things.” he said, thinking about the cursed Sorceress.

Bina found hiding in Brightmoon surprisingly easy. Most of the Lord Admiral's officers sat in the palace, and those who left, like Pahtra and the Skittermander Chorus, paid her no attention. Only Lady Ka or someone who knew her could be interested in her. She found out that she was here when she overheard several servants complaining about the Lord Admiral's "Left Hand." Luckily her fucked up sister avoided public appearances, after all she was a crazy murderess and not someone who liked the company of others, although she was clearly a member of his entourage. Only someone like Felix Antares could have felt that Ka could be entrusted with a responsible position... She had previously heard rumors that the former "High Queen" was alive, but she had not told her children about them. Eti in particular had special reasons to hate the crazy murderess, so the news that she was alive could upset her, and the girl already had enough problems of her own. In fact, even Bina couldn't believe the news. She witnessed Igzar killing that bitch , but in the galaxy anything was possible. She saw with her own eyes how this She-Ra revived a kid. What was strange about her sister coming back from the dead?

However, she couldn't roam completely freely, if anyone recognized her, she would be in big trouble, but here her training came to the rescue. She always had a dressing up kit with her. She could change the length and color of her hair thanks to the hairstyle modulator. Holographic overlays and morphic makeup allowed her to change her facial features. The voice could remain the same as it was. This was one of the things that made Jantar's daughters different . Her voice was melodic and sexy, while Lady. Ka's was raspy and menacing. Well, it felt like old times, before she became a mother to her kids.

Taking care of her children made her sleepless. She was afraid of what might happen to them, and life had taught her that you should always expect the worst. But if that witch did anything to them... It would be better for her if she had never been born. She didn't like violence, but Jantar had crammed enough knowledge into her head that she could make someone plead for Mercy, and she had learned this and that from Igzar's subordinates , so when the Shadow Weaver fell into her hands and her children would not be safe and sound , then he promises that he will teach her what Pain is.

Unfortunately, she didn't find out much about where her kids might have been hiding. While drinking with the quite nice palace guards, she learned that there had been a break-in in the castle. No one knew exactly who had done it, but considering that the Grand Marshal seemed shaken afterwards and Queen Glimmer was running around the castle with a black eye, then they must have been her kids. Only they could create so much Chaos and Confusion for absolutely no reason. However, this was far from enough, she had to be close to the center of events, but not too close... Because she might come across Lady Ka, and their meeting would not end with a polite conversation.

She intended to employ herself in the entourage of one of the less important princesses, or one of the guests from other planets. So many of them came that the city was bursting at the seams. She spent the night with the innkeeper and his partner. She hadn't been with guys for a long time, but sex didn't bring the expected relaxation. She asked many people about employment opportunities, but received no confirmed news, and there was only one day left. She had to quickly find someone who would let her get closer to the manor.

So she went downstairs and ordered a tea with milk. She started looking at the inn's patrons and then she noticed a man who looked like an elderly wizard and a strange girl in a suit that was completely out of place on this planet, definitely too advanced for the local tech level. An unusual view and in some regions of the galaxy it would evoke unambiguous associations, but not in this context. The man was strangely tense, and the girl... She had a good ear for accents and recognized distinct Azlantean features in her pronunciation. It was interesting and disturbing. They had fought the Antis on Saltmarsh, and she guessed that the Empire had plans for the place. The Lord Admiral may be a bastard, but his resources were limited and he couldn't conquer this planet. But this band of bastards led the most powerful, and many would say the most evil, empire in the galaxy, hated by all but the human species . They were more powerful than the Horde and just as evil, though in a much less obvious way. Etheria was an incredibly ethnically diverse place, even by Absalom's standards, but humans made up a significant percentage of the planet's inhabitants, and the Star Empire might feel obliged to restore the most perfect species in the Galaxy to its rightful position of rulers of lesser species. The girl looked harmless, but her accent was typical of the Azlantean aristocracy, in whose veins flowed the pure blood of descendants of an ancient empire supposedly derived from the Lost Golarion. Some people claimed that the leaders of the Empire were truly superhuman, more efficient and intelligent than others, although this girl definitely did not confirm this statement. She seemed scared and so fragile that if you took her out of that suit, she would fall to pieces. However, appearances can be deceiving. She knew something about it, she knew the truth about Felix Antares after all ...

She waited until the man left the table and followed him. She expected him to go to the toilet, but he stood at the back of the inn, lost in thought. As soon as she approached him, he quickly turned around, summoning a spell, and growled.

„Who are you and why are you following me!”

She raised her hands to show that she had no hostile intentions and said.

„I didn't mean to do anything bad to you. I came to warn you. This girl is not who she seems!”

„So who is she?” he asked, smiling menacingly.

„She is an Azlanti ... That is, a member of a powerful empire proclaiming the supremacy of the human species using its war machine.” she quickly explained as best as she could one of the most alien aspects of the galaxy to the inhabitants of Etheria.

„So she was telling the truth.” he said and lowered his hands, canceling the spell.

“Who was telling the truth?” she asked discomfited.

„A certain wicked woman who decided to tell the truth this once.” he said, looking depressed.

Something about his attitude made her suspicious, so she asked.

„She? You mean a tall woman with pointy ears and a gloomy disposition... She hides terrible scars.”

„ So you know Shadow Weaver? – asked the surprised wizard.

„”Do I know her? I brought her here and then entrusted her with the care of my children.” she explained, smiling sadly. He looked at her in disbelief and asked

„What you did?” she could hear the horror in his voice. She buried her face in her hands and groaned.

„I know this doesn't reflect very well on me, but in my defense, she was really nice during this journey.”

The man smiled sadly and said.

„When it suited her, she perfectly pretended to be nice and noble.”

Bina nodded and asked anxiously.

„And my kids? Have you met them? Are they okay?”

Understanding appeared on the man's face.

”Ah, Eti and her friends... It seemed to me that she didn't do anything to them. Actually, it seemed to me that they didn't respect Shadow Weaver very much... But that was a few days ago, I don't know what happened to them after that. – Hope suddenly sparkled in his eyes. “That means you met my wife… Moonshadow… Captain Moonshadow.” the wizard had so much despair in his voice that her heart ached.

„Yeah, I saw her... We were traveling together and she seemed fine, but then she attacked Adora and killed that kid.” she saw that the wizard's face was pierced by a spasm of pain, so she added. “But that's what Lady Cala was talking about, and she's sticking with Shadow Weaver. “ she explained and suddenly realized something. „ Wait, since she is the queen and you are her husband... „ she fell on her knees in front of him, but he grabbed her and lifted her „Don't kneel, I'm just the King Consort and an ex at that. But it's good to hear from someone else that my wife is alive... „ he smiled gratefully and added. “What will we do with this Azlanti?”

She smiled and said.

„I have a plan, could you get me a job as an guide?”

They did not land at the airport, but in the middle of nowhere near the capital. It was not easy to find a place suitable for a ship as large as theirs, but fortunately no one on the planet was supervising the flight of ships that entered the atmosphere, or so they thought, so they could search for a landing pad as long as possible. they just wanted to. Lonnie looked at the monitor curiously, it wasn't her first time flying in the air, like for Rogelio and Kyle, but Imp was scared, which was ironic because of his wings . Well, she didn't feel sorry for him in the slightest. She never liked Hordak's failed creation, he was nosy and cunning, and after she found out how her former master treated their daughter, her dislike grew even stronger. Nightgale looked thoughtful, even distressed, though she wouldn't say why. She didn't pressure her. Devils and demons witnessed that everyone had the right to secrets. Kyle, on the other hand, looked guilty and scared, but there was a steely determination she had never expected from him. However, she guessed what was the reason for his unusual behavior. Eti sat on the sidelines and stared thoughtfully into space. Rosie tried to talk to her, but the cat-like girl only answered in half words. She sighed, it had to happen eventually and walked over to her.

„So you already know... you probably hate me now...”

Eti shook her head

„I don't hate you, Shadow Weaver. You didn't do anything to me. You were even good to me and even saved my life. You didn't do it completely selflessly. You're looking for redemption, but you won't find it with me. You can only get it from the one you hurt, but she won't give it to you because she hates you more than anything in the world”

She felt an unbearable pain in her heart, because the girl was right. There was no forgiveness for her.

After landing, Szrama handed out costumes to her friends. Itel and Rosie had their dresses, they didn't even have to hide their weapons. Alatar and Lilka disguised themselves as Ashrak sellers, they even had a self-propelled thermos, which Bina bought... She missed her and was even a little worried, but these emotions were obscured by a storm of cold flame raging in her heart... The Blonde Boy was dressed in a black silk vest with gold decorations. He looked a bit like a dandy, although he acted as clumsy as before. Gadzio wore clothes similar to those worn by other Vesks in the Scarlet Husk . Scar also wore a desert outfit that obscured her face. This sorceress, Red, Scar's right hand, wore a blue cloak decorated with glittering stars. Shadow Weaver looked at it as if it reminded her of something, but then thought better of it. The dark sorceress herself simply changed her eye and hair color. She was supposed to stay in the shadows anyway and not attract anyone's attention. Ireanis dyed her hair pink and wore a very sexy dress in the style of those fashionable on Absalom . Wrongdak removed the paint and donned the engineering outfit popular among clone technicians throughout Etheria . And she... Well, everyone expected her to hide and not show herself to anyone... But she had other plans.

They split into three groups. The girls were supposed to wear their dresses only near the city so that they would not get damaged. She got ahead, no one noticed. She was a scout, after all. In the city, she slipped between the crowds of guests unnoticed without any major difficulties... After all, she was absolutely perfect, amazing and Unique. She finally reached her destination. The tailor's shop was closed due to the holiday, so she got in through the window without any problems.

„Me about my outfit.” she said, suddenly revealing her presence. The seamstresses jumped in fear, probably close to having a heart attack.

„Ah, it's you. This is how it is ready... As per your order.” said the older one. She handed the clothes to Eti, who went to the changing room and tried on her new clothes, then put on her coat. It was perfect.

„You'd also need a mask, because a masquerade ball was organized at the last minute.” said the elderly seamstress and pointed to the wall, where there were lots of different masks. She saw one that she particularly liked.

„I'll take this one.” she said, pointing to a mask depicting a wolf. Yes, it's finally time to remember her heritage.

Chapter Notes

> Well, this is the next chapter. Melog is He/Him because that's how it was in the Polish version. Please leave your comments and opinions here. They will give me great pleasure.

„Okay, is it perfect now? What do you think?” she asked Melog, who grunted with satisfaction, although she doubted whether he cared what outfit she wore... Maybe not... It was hard to say what was hidden her companion's heart. Despite their bond, she actually knew very little about the shape-shifting alien. Even his form wasn't his true form after all, maybe he didn't even have one. It was weird, even Double Trouble had their true form. On a sudden impulse, she approached her unusual friend and touched his cheek.

„Today is our big day, my dear. You will become a member of our big, strange and patchworked family.” she said tenderly with closed eyes, but Melog sent her a wave of anxiety. She looked at him confused.

„What is it about? You're not afraid of being left out, are you? Is it about this Lord Admiral’s wolf... My father’s Wolf” Her companion flinched when she mentioned the Lord Admiral, so she decided to focus on that topic. “I know, he's a very intimidating individual and that wolf of his looks like he wants to eat everyone who happens to be in the room with him, but you'll get used to it.” she said, stroking him. Melog sent her a vision. Lady Cala Grayskull appeared first, smiling as always. The blue in her eyes was unnaturally intense... She herself looked ominous, as if she were radiating light, but it was a different light than the one radiating from Adora when she was She-Ra. It was cold, it gave no warmth, and it exposed the soul to make it easier to see through it so that it could be judged. She shivered because it brought back terrible memories that she didn't want to recall.

„She's not like him.” she whispered to her companion to calm both him and herself. She didn't like this girl, she told Adora that from the very beginning. Her scent was unnatural, her smile that never left her face hid something dark inside, and her eyes were cold as ice... Adora trusted her a little more, apparently she saw a bit of herself in her, or maybe rather someone she wanted... No, one who she believe she should be. Even after Lady Cala had upset her during that training session, her fiancée couldn't stay mad at her for long. Yes, they need to keep an eye on Lady Grayskull…

But then Melog sent her another vision. She saw her father in a long, elegant coat standing in the middle of the battlefield. There were no enemy soldiers around, and there was an ominous, oppressive calm. The banners of the Fearless Armada fluttered over the battlefield, and those of the enemy lay shattered. Dusk was falling and the shadows began to lengthen, covering everything around them. It also brought back bad memories, years of suffering when she lived under Shadow Weaver's supervision. Her father stood against the blood-red setting sun. Darkness wrapped around him like a robe…. Shadows seemed to flow from him, consuming everything around him. In the end, all that remained was a d ark silhouette with the world burning behind it. Two eyes, one intensely blue and the other red like the sun behind him, glowed as if they were staring at her. She pushed Melog away angrily.

„He's not like that. He's not like Shadow Weaver…. He can't be like that!” she called to her companion, who was staring at her with fear and resentment. She sighed and hugged the shapeshifting alien.

„I'm sorry Melog, I shouldn't have done that. I just... I really wish he could be the father I deserve. I never thought about having parents... a family bigger than the one I would create with Adora . But now I finally have someone I can see myself in. Thanks to which I will understand who I am. That's why I don't want him to turn out to be someone other than he seems. I know he has a darkness in him, but I have it too . I can't reject him for that reason... I want him to be my father...„ she said, tears flowing down her cheek. She just realized that this was the case. She really wanted the Lord Admiral to become a part of her life. She wasn't sure when it happened. Was it when he asked her to join him during the war with Horde Prime's Heirs , or maybe earlier... During that dinner... Or maybe even breakfast, when she learned about her past? It didn't matter what happened, what mattered was what resulted from it. With the arrival of the Lord Admiral, not only did the universe they knew expand, but her personal universe also grew to unimaginable proportions. She was no longer an orphan with no past, a damn cardboard kitten. She had her inheritance, even if she had to fight for it. She was who she always wanted to be. Maybe deep down she always knew who she was? That's why she strived for greatness, for power, even at the cost of harming everyone who cared about her and self-destruction? This knowledge, this awareness overwhelmed her, but at the same time it gave her an energy she had never experienced before. She felt like the whole universe was open to her... But there was also the matter of her sister. The girl claimed that their father was a liar. That she couldn't trust him. Maybe it was true… But she didn't even want to consider it. Not without credible evidence. This must have been Shadow Weaver's plot. This woman wanted to destroy her life again. She took revenge on her for daring to defy her. She wanted to punish her for taking away her power... She once made her hate Adora ... and herself. Now she wanted to repeat the same thing with her father. He won't let her do that... But first she has to save her sister, before the Dark Sorceress hurts that girl as much as she did to her. It was a priority. It wasn't going to be easy... Maybe she needed help from someone tougher... Stronger and Cunning than any of the princesses, Glimmer or even She-Ra.

„You know, my dear, I think I've made a decision!” she said smiling, but Melog sent her a wave of concern.

„You know, you really look great, and I'm not just saying that because I'm your steed. I know perfectly well how to be beautiful!” Swiftwind said enthusiastically. She laughed, amused that her own horse was helping her with the final wedding preparations. Yesterday she decided that Swiftwind would lead her to the wedding. He was the closest thing she had to family, though considering she was actually the one who gave him his intelligence, she was sort of his parent or master... It was quite a strange thought. However, on Etheria it often happened that children or wards led their parents or masters into marriage, so everything was probably fine.

„I'll be getting married as Adora, so your mane and wings will dwarf me anyway.” she said and laughed. She decided to say the words of the vow in her natural form, because Catra preferred to marry her and not She-Ra. After all, they had known each other long before she found the sword of protection.

„And who will Melog and I actually be? Will he become my brother, brother-in-law or maybe cousin?”Aricorn asked. He had long been jealous of the strength of the bond the shapeshifting alien had formed with her fiancée.

„I have no idea, but you both will definitely be our best friends!” she said and kissed him on the nose. Then tears appeared in Swiftwind's eyes.

„My little Adora is getting married... I'm so happy„ he said and burst into tears. She hugged him tightly with all her strength .

„Oh, don't worry, my love! We will always be together!” She said as she felt tears streaming down her face. In fact, they knew little about the previous She-Ras and the bond they had with their mounts. They didn't even know if Mara really had that dragon mount. At least dragons really existed. And Dragonkini . Suddenly she remembered something „Swiftwind … You said you met another Dragonkin earlier, right? The one whose name was the same as Tarek's nephew?” she asked carefully, and her mount nodded enthusiastically.

„Yes! His name was Alatar! What do you mean?” he asked, and she thought for a moment about what she should answer. She remembered that Catra's sister's group of burglars included a silver-scaled Dragonkin.

„Was anyone accompanying this Dragonkin?” she asked carefully so that he wouldn't feel her anxiety.

„Yes. There was this deaf girl with talking gloves. She was quite nice. Apart from her, there were also: A red-haired girl who hugged me and called me horse, it was strange. The tattooed Saihe, who was interested in our history and the sword, and the girl in the cloak with a mask and goggles. First she said that I was widely known throughout the Galaxy, and then she asked if if I were eaten, would I count as white meat or red meat…. It was quite terrifying. They wanted a permit from me to sell some tea and I gave it to them. Adora, has something happened?” he looked at her strangely, she probably looked worried.

„Was there anyone else? Someone they were afraid of? Or maybe some strange shadows…„ she tried to hide her anxiety, but she was never good at controlling her emotions.

„They probably had a guardian, but they certainly weren't afraid of him. It was me who was afraid of them... And now I'm a little afraid for you, because you made such a face that... „ Swiftwind's voice was really scared now. She felt confused herself now . The girl in the cloak was Catra's sister. She was sure of that. Even her sense of humor was a bit like Catra's, only more... gruesome... But if Shadow Weaver was with them, where was she hiding? She always liked to control everything from behind... from the shadows... They probably couldn't tell anyone about her existence under pain of terrible punishment... There was just something that didn't feel right here. True to Swiftwind's words, they were rather naughty and self-confident, not something Shadow Weaver would tolerate in others. And why did this girl ask about the sword... Maybe she didn't tell them the truth about what happened here. Well, that would be exactly like her. She had always considered secrets and mysteries as much of a weapon as sorcery and tanks. But something still didn't feel right to her.

„It's very complicated, but I can't tell you anything yet, but I promise you will find out everything soon. For now, I have an important task for you...”

„I don't know, but I'd rather get married in armor.” she said, looking suspiciously at her reflection in the mirror. “Especially since in a few months I won't be able to wear it anyway, because you know!” she turned to High Minister Shu , who stood nervously clutching her hat with flowers.

„This is supposed to be a celebration of peace, not a message that we are preparing for another war. And so the Lord Admiral and his entourage will wear military uniforms, we don't have to.” said the otter woman, trying to sound as dignified as always, but the arrival of the Starfleet soldiers made her very nervous, and not only because she had more work to do. She didn't agree with her decision, which wasn't surprising at all. She wasn't sure if she agreed with herself. But it was too late to change my mind.

„Maybe you're right, but I still want to be more... fighty...„ she said, not sure if she used the right words. Everything that's happened lately has been so overwhelming.

Suddenly, a guard peeked in, saying that Storm Heart, the Guardian of the Storm from the Islands of Sorrow wanted to meet her. She sighed heavily and let him in. She just hoped it would be less annoying than Midnight Mask.

The woman who entered her chamber was much taller than Black Blade. She was dressed in beautiful armor made as if from the chitin of giant insects, and on her back she had a glaive. Her face was covered with a veil like all her compatriots, but the part that was visible indicated that she was related to Midnight Mask , and therefore...

„Are you the other Shadow Weaver sister, the one Catra met in the Kingdom of Snow? Were you the one who supported the chancellor when he wanted to overthrow Frosta?„ she said firmly, and the woman nodded and said.

„I only did what was in the interest of my country. As a responsible queen, you should understand this... The girl was very lucky anyway. In my country, she would be executed for weakness unworthy of a ruler.” she said in a serious, but also slightly sad tone. She pursed her lips and drawled, barely stopping herself from bursting into Fury.

„Listen to me! We in Etheria do not follow such rules. Power does not belong to the one who is strongest, but to the one who cares for the weaker. Showing weakness is not something we should avoid, because our loved ones will support us .„ She looked at Storm Heart and she replied.

„If this is how you imagine exercising power, it is no wonder that you have a problem with rebellion, and your own subjects do not want be ruled by you...

Now she teleported in front of the woman and shouted at her

„Who are you to threaten me in my own palace!” she summoned the projectiles to her hand, but the Guardian of the Storm shook her head.

„I'm just warning you. I would be sorry if you were exiled. You are the heroes of Etheria , the ones who ended the tyranny of Horde Prime. His rule also cost us a lot. For my Mother and sister, you are only strangers whose lives are worth as much as raindrops, but I see in you Honor, which even the faithful sometimes lack.” she said in the gentle but strong voice of someone who had commanded in both war and peace.

„Why did you come here! Tell me and don't spoil the most important day of my life!” she ordered , and Storm Heart knelt down on one knee in front of her and said.

„There may be many differences between us. In the old days, we sometimes fought wars, and still most of my compatriots consider you less worthy than shadow spiders, because they are born with an understanding of what is beauty in order... But I know that we must try to understand you and start accepting you, because our universe became much bigger. If we don't open our doors, the universe will break them down. Therefore, I would like to ask you to allow me and my sister to participate in the Victory Day celebrations and wedding ceremonies. –

She stared at the woman from the Sorrow Islands for a moment, wondering if she should agree to her request. If she was anything like Shadow Weaver, she was definitely up to something... But then again, she couldn't refuse the outstretched hand. So she sighed and said.

„All inhabitants of Etheria are invited, including you. But you better not betray our trust. Don't think we are naive and powerless... Horde Prime thought so too.”

Storm Heart stood up and bowed to her once more and headed to leave, but she stopped her by asking a question.

„Your mother... What is she like?”

The Stormkeeper stopped and answered her slowly and thoughtfully.

„She is a strong, strict and demanding woman... Like every ruler.”

She smiled at Storm Heart.

"I think I know something about it..." she said, but the Storm Guardian shook her head.

„NO. You do not know anything. You'd have to get to know her to understand, and I don't want that for you. „ and she left, leaving the queen in thought.

She felt better now. She was no longer sad and depressed all the time, only sometimes, mostly in the evenings. She had to admit that she liked living with Spinnerella and Netossa . The women were caring and helped her get out of her despair, at least partially. The princesses of the United Kingdoms did not care so much about ceremonial and court etiquette. In fact, they had almost no court at all. They placed the management of the state mainly on the shoulders of officials, and they themselves dealt mainly with running the court and making official appearances, sometimes only conferring with the High Minister for an hour or two. It was something completely different than what she was used to, but she liked it. Everyone here was more open and direct than in the Kingdom of Snow, and she didn't feel like she had to constantly try to meet someone else's expectations. But it wasn't her home...

She willingly helped with taking care of the baby and cleaning and cooking, although she did not know much about the latter, although her cream soup with seafood was very tasty to Netossa and Greypaw . She wanted to feel needed. That's why she was very happy when Glimmer upheld her decision to be the main bodyguard at the wedding...

However, when they got there, it turned out that there was much more work ahead of her than she expected. Glimmer had invited anyone who would like to come, and probably half of the planet's inhabitants… and many from nearby planets… In short, there were more people in Brightmoon than she had ever seen… And she liked it! Other news, however, was much more surprising.

Catra's Dad appeared on Etheria . It was amazing! He came from outside the Empire, from the distant corners of the Galaxy, specially for his Daughter's wedding. It was so great and awesome! No one ever thought something so unusual could happen, although no one actually thought Catra was from outside Etheria . It was very strange, but then it explained why she wasn't like Greypaw. Netossa didn't seem surprised though, at least not as surprised as the others, maybe she had heard something from Catra? Back when she was trapped underground with Nightgale...? She wasn't sure, maybe she should ask the ruler of Armoria , but she didn't want to think back to those moments. It hurt her too much to see her moment of triumph turn into defeat.

They went with Netossa and Shogi to Glimmer while Spinerella stayed with the children. Her wife was to join them once she had discussed everything with the Queen. However, on the way, they heard Adora's scream.

She turned in the direction the voice came from and saw her friend and Swiftwind ! She ran to her and hugged him tightly.

„I'm also so glad to see you!” she exclaimed happily and added. “What a task! Please tell me!!” she said, almost forgetting about Nettos .

„Oh, it's something simple, but very important. I want you and Swiftwind to look for someone after the ceremony.

She was about to shout that she agreed when she remembered her companion, but the ruler of Armoria nodded, smiling warmly. So it's time for a secret mission for Glimmer. She will show everyone that she can be counted on.

The Lord Protector of Antares , Admiral of the Fearless Armada and Supreme Commander of the Research and Exploration Fleet, donned the finest attire in his possession for the occasion. It was decorated with gold threads made of material brought down from heaven, but the buttons were made of red steel mined in hell. The material was a mixture of lunar silk produced by some of the Desnite orders of Castroval and wool from hair of Doom Moth from the Apostate. The leather pieces were made from Linnorm and Dragon skins. Everything wash infused with nanites, which not only cleaned it, but also repaired it, making it almost impossible to destroy. It was also strong enough to protect against being shot even with heavy weapons. It was a Treasure passed down through the line of the Lord Protectors of Tarak from time immemorial. Now it will become a legacy and a symbol of the power of the Protector Lords of Taurus and other planets that... would be liberated from the hands of the heirs of Horde Prime, which he will pass on to his daughter, and she to her descendants, until the end of time.

Everything was going great. All resistance on Taurus was crushed, and most of the former Rebels either swore allegiance to him or laid down their weapons. The authorities of the Pact Worlds and Veskarium, after receiving reports presenting his achievements in the most positive light possible, expressed their appreciation and promised to continue supporting his activities.

However, what was more important was that he was winning his Daughter's heart . It required a lot of patience and great delicacy on his part, but he was almost certain that he was close to winning her over to their common cause. Through the method of small steps, small concessions and moral compromises, he will make her the perfect successor to the ancient family bearing the surname Antares in recent centuries . He knew that he owed much of his success to this dark sorceress. It was through fear of her machinations that he was able to gain her trust. It was enough to show a little understanding and support, and she stopped seeing him as a threat and saw him as a valuable ally in the fight against the woman she hated with all her heart. As soon as he meets Shadow Weaver, he will have to repay her somehow... Of course, then he will kill her. No one can shed the blood of House Antares with impunity.

While he was thinking this way, there was a knock on the door of the room that the queen had lent him. He told his guards to let the guy in. It was his daughter and this strange feline creature that made Resh stand up, but motioned for the Nightmare Hunter to lie down again and asked.

„Good evening my daughter. The ceremony is coming soon. This may be the most beautiful day of your life. Shouldn't you be preparing for it?” he said in a gentle, slightly amused voice. Catra smiled nervously and said

„I won't be more ready.„ her eyes were nervous, like someone who has just made a difficult decision and is afraid that she will change her mind. “I've decided. I'll go with you. I don't know when exactly I'll do it, I have some things to wrap up here, but I'll join you.” she added.

Perfect, he thought, but he recalled concern and anxiety.

“Have you talked to Adora about this? It would be bad if this issue divided you...„ He was honest. This relationship was more important in the long run than Catra's participation in their war, at least at this stage was not yet necessary. She-Ra was an extremely important ally, but more importantly, her genes would strengthen their bloodline. „This is not a decision you should make without careful consideration.„ he said, giving his voice a hint of guilt, but his daughter shook her head and said.

„I'll talk to her. I'm sure I can convince her. We're all fed up with this waiting. Glimmer will form an alliance today and will definitely agree to let us support you. That's why we do all this. To spread peace and magic to the galaxy... We have a fleet, just untrained, but if your officers would teach us how to fight... If we don't fight, the Horde Ultimate and the Heavenly Brothers will come to us sooner or later...”

You just gave me a great idea to solve a problem with Queen, he thought and placed a gentle hand on his daughter's shoulder. They both didn't like it when someone invaded their personal space, but at this moment, a little closeness was necessary.

„You will make whatever decision you see fit. I will support you no matter what you decide.” he said , trying to sound as fatherly as he could. The girl nodded and looked into his eyes.

„However, I have one request. Before I go with you... I have suspicions that my sister is on the planet... She's in the clutches of Shadow Weaver, who you knew as Miss Daisy... I don't know how she captured her, but I'm sure he's keeping her captive. I need your help to free her.” her voice was filled with fear and desperation… He had to calm her down now… A little. He looked at her seriously and said.

„I figured this out some time ago. You don't have to ask me for anything in this matter. I will use all available resources to free her... No one is allowed to harm the members of House Antares . I swear your sister will be free and Shadow Weaver will get the punishment she deserves...

“I really should thank this woman for everything she did for me.”

Lady Sorrowflame was glad she went to this library. Although she didn't come close to solving the mystery of this planet during these few days, the pleasure of conducting research in a traditional way was worth it. Apart from that, she came across some interesting clues that would surely lead her to the solution... She had to learn more about including Aaravos and its planet Xadia. Lance and George didn't know anything about it, though she didn't want to ask them directly so they wouldn't get suspicious. They were extremely kind and trusting, even by Etheria's standards . Unfortunately, she hadn't been able to find much about the Elven Warlock or the place he inhabited. However, she did not have time to search the entire library. For a moment she considered killing or transforming them, but she resisted the temptation. Good and truly dedicated librarians were too valuable to be foolishly wasted . Besides, they were the fathers of the royal consort, their disappearance would cause too much confusion.

And then they offered to give her a ride to Brightmoon . How could she hurt such polite people?

In Brightmoon , she learned that the Lord Admiral had convinced the Queen to bring her fleet here, although the locals were very confused. Her commander clearly wasted no time. She intended to meet him only after the Wedding Ceremony . Antares could be surprisingly sentimental about certain things when tradition was involved. Well, she understood him well, she was attached to her herself. After all, she was old when most ancient traditions were just born. The wedding was to take place under the open sky, in the light of these strange moons emanating power, in the presence of thousands of witnesses. It was a huge event of state importance, she had not participated in anything like it for decades, the last time was at the Lord Admiral's Grandmother's. His father never married his mistress, and Antares was never in a serious relationship. His family did not wear crowns, they had no need for such things to emphasize their power, so no coronation ever took place. It was simply that Parliament voluntarily, although of course not unanimously, gave them the title of Lord Protector. The Antares have always maintained the appearance of law and order.

Lance and George left her right afterward as they greeted their countless sons, including the Queen's future husband. Reflecting on the quality of social support on this planet, she took a seat in the section of the audience reserved for the Lord Admiral's subordinates. She sat down next to Mrs. Ka, who nodded her greetings.

„And how did it go for Antares?” she asked in a low voice.

„Surprisingly good, although we should get used to the fact that the boss knows perfectly well how to trick others. As for the information you are interested in, here is the second kitten, and therefore your dream artifact”

She looked at the Intelligence Officer and smiled.

„I'll find many more ancient treasures here, but this one was particularly valuable. Thank you for your message. “ she said, smiling at her friend and lover.

Soon the ceremony began. She was secular, much to the chagrin of Lady Sorrowflame. The local people weren't very religious, which was quite interesting. She herself had been a devoted priestess of Dahak for countless centuries and could not fathom such ignorance. Faith was important to her, even after her God died, and she respected true believers, even if she fed on them. In a way, even Horde Prime's clones were better in this respect, because their faith was sincere, although directed towards a false god.

The queen's aunt spoke first, apparently her name was Castaspella, although she didn't believe it was her real name, no one would have such a stupid name, it was probably just a nickname. She talked about peace, the power of friendship and love, and all that nonsense. At some point she started to fall asleep listening to this senseless chatter, but eventually it all ended and the bride and groom stepped forward, led by their loved ones. The Queen was led by her father, who seemed to be a wizard, and by her future husband, Lance and George. The Lord Admiral led his daughter away and Adora was led by some kind of winged unicorn, quite a strange and ridiculous sight, but she was starting to get used to the fact that strangeness was the norm here. Then the Queen and her fiancé approached the Mistress of Ceremonies and began to sing, taking turns, a song about a long-standing friendship that, despite the pain of loss and misunderstandings, survived and finally blossomed into love that culminated here. Boredom again. She hadn't loved anyone for so many centuries that she was beginning to doubt that love was anything more than the drug reaction of a hormone-addled Brain. Unfortunately, the music was far too loud for her to sleep, so she looked around in boredom, wondering what the locals looked like as choir of ghouls. Finally the commotion ended and Castaspella asked solemnly.

„Do you, Glimmer Moonbright , and you, Bow of the Forest Library, make an oath to each other in the moonlight, you will support and love each other no matter what the future holds for you.

„We swear!„ They shouted at the same time and Glimmer jumped on her husband and kissed him, hanging on his neck .

„Well, you're married... You're not listening to me anyway... You could have at least waited until I finished... „ said the mistress of ceremonies, and Lady Sorrowflame seriously wondered whether the bride and groom were about to start their wedding night despite the presence of thousands of people. However, they immediately took a seat at the table, hugging each other. Then the Lord Admiral's daughter and her fiancée stepped forward , and Catra's strange creature stood at her feet. Both girls began to sing a song about their love. It told the story of growing up in the Barracks under the watchful eye of the Lord of Shadows, being separated by war and hatred, anger and sadness burning in their hearts, the coming of an invader, a desperate rescue, reunification, a final battle and a declaration of love. This song was a bit more interesting because it concerned matters that directly concerned her. Then Castaspella said the formula again.

„Catra Antares ... I would like to marry under this surname. – she said, and then everyone looked at her in surprise, even Antares , whose usually impassive face showed a smile, the first one she had ever seen on his face. Adora looked at her for a moment, then nodded. Castaspella then returned to reciting the words of the oath.

Are you Adora Rainbow Punch and you Catro Antares, do you make an oath to each other in the moonlight, you will support and love each other no matter what the future holds for you?

„I swear... „ Adora said, looking tenderly at her beloved.

„I swear... „ said her boss's daughter, love reflected in her multi”colored eyes.

„So you two are married...

„ The mistress of Ceremonies didn't finish because both girls started kissing. Castaspella sighed in resignation, and cheers echoed throughout Brightmoon . But she paid no attention to it anymore, for she sensed the evil approaching… Evil born from the Darkness from between the stars …

All the Stars dance on Etheria

Chapter Notes

> Here's the next chapter. I changed the name general to the correct one. I warmly invite you to comment

A few hours earlier, before the words of the oath were spoken in Brightmoon far away, in the Singing Jungle, in the deserted, desolate hills, in a place where so much blood had recently been shed, evil was awakening. Ancient and terrible, dating back to times older than the kingdom of Etheria, older than the Civilization of First Ones, and even older than the stars themselves! The spilled blood has power, just like death on the battlefield... This power did not dissolve into the Winds of Magic blowing across the universe, but fed the creature resting in the stone standing in the middle of the battlefield. It was fed but did not satisfy, only stimulated hunger, which turned into Anger. It wasn't the blood of those he was promised. He was to receive a SACRIFICE. He would consume not only their blood, but also their souls, to digest them for Eons... But it was taken from him! He was deprived of what was promised to him! Such betrayal cannot be accepted! Anger and Hunger caused them to reach through time and space to a place called Etheria. He found that it was much easier than it should have been, this place had returned to the Material Plane. He drew power from the blood of the victims of the battle and poured his essence into the statue. The stone began to crumble, revealing a shape far more monstrous than anything the artists who carved the statue could have imagined. He spread his webbed wings and let out a piercing howl that cracked the rocks, and then he soared into the air, flying towards Brightmoon. His victims would not escape him, and perhaps in the process he would devour countless numbers of beings... However, he knew that this would not satisfy him. Nothing can do that.

Rosie found Brightmoon even more beautiful than last time. She lived at Absalom Station, so the crowds didn't scare her. In fact, there was a surprising order. Much stricter than most of the festivals and holidays she had attended on the space station. However, there were no crowds of guards enforcing the law, the residents themselves knew how they should behave. They didn't litter, they didn't get too drunk to stand up, they didn't start fights, or at least she didn't see anything like that, although the night was still young, anything could happen. It was very fun. Many types of music were played here, from electronic to harps and drums. They had to drag Lilka away from the latter because she wanted to show the musicians real orc rhythms. Of course, she didn't hear what they were playing, but she was able to enjoy certain types of music sensing it’s rhythm. There was a lot of food sold here, not the unhealthy junk food usually served at this type of event, but fresh and healthy delicacies. Most of them did not contain meat, so Alatar had to search around before finding something for himself. Eti will definitely complain, she loved meat and hated sweets, and there were plenty of the latter here too. She especially liked the homemade gingerbread and tartlets . There were a lot of Piñatas here , and they had to drag Lilka away from them, because she wanted to open them with her ax, and that seemed to defeat the purpose. There were also many games and activities. Shooting and throwing at targets, Lilka was again disconsolate because she was not allowed to throw an axe. Alatar, however, had great aim and won for Lilka the rag scorpion, she chose it herself, surprising everyone. There were also people who painted their faces and bodies, because this time the girl did something unexpected, she showed them how to draw real orcish tribal markings, and according to what Itel said, they were really orcish, identical to those worn by Warog, the orc who helped save them there on Kesler when they were fleeing the Hive invasion. The red-haired girl had started to change since they arrived on this planet. She was no longer as loud and belligerent as if she wanted to show the whole world that she couldn't beat her. But it was the same for all of them. Was it the planet that had this effect on them, or was it because of the events of the last few days? She couldn't answer that. She also felt that she had changed. She felt like she was finally where she was supposed to be. It wasn't that she had found home, but rather the place she had been looking for all her life... Was she looking for it? Suddenly she felt cold sweat break out on her. It was true! This is where she was supposed to be from the very beginning! But how! After all, no one knew what Etheria was. A few years ago, no one even realized this planet existed. Its inhabitants were trapped in another plane... It happened thousands of years ago, and she was only found a few years ago, and before that she had been adrift for hundreds of years... Or at least that's what she was told... What if it wasn't hundreds, but thousands of years. What if she ended up in this capsule back when Etheria was in the material world and the First Ones ruled the galaxy. Who was she then? Was she one of them, like Adora? Is that why she had this power? Did all First Ones have it? She guess not... From what Kyle said , Adora was a normal girl, at most extremely fit. It was thanks to the sword that she became so powerful, and meanwhile she... She could fight like no one else, jump high, and even almost fly... And she glowed, you couldn't forget about that. But it is not everything. She was capable of much more when threatened. But then she lost her memory... And she did terrible things... This had never happened to her before ... but had she really? She didn't remember her past. Where she came from, who she once was and even her real name. She was a blank slate… She was less than a shadow. She felt tears welling up in her eyes. She sat up, trying to stop crying. She felt so alone.

Then a live report from the Royal Wedding appeared on the big screen. Not knowing what else to do with herself, she started watching the ceremony. The queen was very pretty and even radiant. She was relieved to see that there was no trace of her punch on her pleasant face. Then, in the palace, during the break-in, she was afraid that she might have killed her, she didn't know what she would do then. Then, after Glimmer had kissed her husband very passionately, it was time for her friend's sister and her fiancée. They looked very beautiful. Catra was lead by her father. She knew he was a very bad man, but when he was Carrying of his daughter like that, she thought they looked like a real family. But Catra was an orphan for almost the entire time, raised by the military and Miss Daisy, that mean, by the Shadow Weaver... If she can find her family, maybe they will be able to find their loved ones too. When the oath was spoken, the crowd began to cheer and applaud. She joined in the applause, feeling as if she was sharing the happiness with everyone present. And then the fun started in full swing. She felt loud music playing and the guests scattering to places where they could dance. For a moment she wanted to follow them herself, but she had no one to go with, and they had tasks and such. But she still looked longingly at the couples going out to play. Then suddenly she felt a gentle touch on the back of her neck. She felt a chill because she knew who it was. She turned and saw Eti. The cat girl was in her usual outfit, covering her face and eyes. They agreed that she would dress so as not to attract too many glances because of her resemblance to her sister.

“Hey Sparklepaw, will you come dancing with me?” said Eti. She felt her heart start beating faster. Would she dance with Eti? But their mission and all!

“But Eti... We have a task... “she said, but then the scout wagged her tail angrily and said.

“The mission can wait. We have more important things... We are more important.” the cat-like girl grabbed her hands and led her to one of the dance halls. She felt that the music they played there was calmer, and so was the dancing performed there. Everything was hidden there in the twilight. The dim light made the atmosphere in this place particularly atmospheric. She could smell the faint scent of chocolate and cherries here. As they entered, Eti stopped and picked up her coat and mask, then handed it to the cloakroom attendant, who was staring at her with bulging eyes. Underneath her normal outfit, she wore a brown-green tailcoat with numerous metal decorations depicting some flowers.

“These are Sinistie from Atrax, the first living plants I saw...” she said and turned to the cloakroom attendant. “If you don't have my coat, I'll do something painfully to you.” She looked at him menacingly, and he swallowed loudly and shook his head.

“Is what we are doing wise?” she asked her friend.

“No” Eti said briefly and dragged her to the dance floor. She didn't resist, in fact she wanted it very much, but it was very unreasonable! After all, everyone will see what Eti looks like and start wondering why she looks so similar to the Grand Marshal, especially since everyone recently had a chance to take a closer look at her. This could ruin the mission and... she found she didn't care at all. She really wanted to be here with Eti. Dance with her and… do other things… Like kiss her….

When they stood on the dance floor, they started dancing. Eti was leding. She was surprisingly good, although Rosie herself did not have enough experience in this matter, and the dance did not seem difficult. The scout didn't take off her glove, obviously not wanting to show her mutilated hand. She took off her gloves herself, she doesn't need them to talk to the cat girl anyway. The other metal hand was surprisingly warm to the touch and slightly electric to the touch, or maybe that was what she imagined? She felt Eti's breathing and stared into her sad and beautiful cat eyes. She was all very beautiful. She had never felt like this before, her heart was beating fast, her blood was pulsing, she felt hot. Was she sick? Some Etherian flu or something? Or maybe she was poisoned by something? Although she was unable to swallow anything due to her nerves before the mission. No, it was something completely different. In that one wonderful moment she realized that she loved Eti. She had never loved anyone before, or at least she didn't remember it, but that didn't matter now. Nothing mattered when she could be close to Eti. The cat girl also blushed, albeit slightly, and purred. The cat girl's entire body was trembling, hers too. She looked into those wonderful two-colored eyes and, without thinking about any consequences, she grabbed Eti by the neck and kissed her. The cat girl was surprised at first , but then she kissed him back. In that one moment, Rosie was the happiest being on Etheria .

Itel felt bitter watching Rosie and Eti kiss. She didn't expect that the deaf girl would be the one to initiate the kiss first, she seemed so innocent. On the other hand, Eti, contrary to what one might think, was very shy and secretive. She simply hid her emotions behind the mask of a scary cat girl, an assassin from the movies or a disturbing freak with a gun. For a moment she thought that Rosie had seduced Eti, pretending to be an innocent girl. Just a few days ago she would have clung to that thought and the hope within it, but not now. She accepted the loss, although her heart still hurt, as if someone had stuck glass shards stuck in it with salt and sulfur. Will this torment ever end? True to Shadow Weaver's words, but was she a person who had ever loved anyone? From what everyone said, she had always been a mean and selfish person, could someone so mean give others any love?

First, she was looking for Eti to protect her for getting lost somewhere and thus jeopardizing the mission. She had to leave Alatar and Lilka alone, even though the red-haired girl was strangely aroused today. She knew it would spell trouble, but letting Eti go would guarantee it. And then she saw the wedding broadcast on the big screens. He was there. She had never seen it in person, but she had watched it many times in different videos. It was he, the one who betrayed the people of Tarak and bombed his own planet, murdering millions. He led his daughter like nothing had happened, like a good, loving parent. Have they really not seen what a monster they let under their roof? How could they be so joyful? Did their naivety and ignorance know no bounds? For her it was unthinkable. But... Antares was a skillful manipulator, and the locals may have won a war against a mad tyrant like Horde Prime, but they did not know of such evil as Lord Admiral Felix Antares .

As she watched the two girls kiss, she made a decision . To the Abyss with the plans of the General's companion and to Hell with the rescue of Captain Blazebringer, none of it mattered to her now. She realized that she had only ever wanted one thing. Revenge, and there was only one way to get it.

They danced their old dance together, which they learned in the Fright Zone. One day, Shadow Weaver decided to teach them a bit of culture. They didn't know how the Dark Sorceress had managed to convince Hordak to let her engage in such a ridiculous activity. They assumed that she simply hid it from him or convinced him that it was just martial arts training. It turned out that Horde Prime taught his clones how to dance and even sing songs praising him in a choir. In a way, it was a very dark truth. Of course, he and Catra always danced together, which annoyed Shadow Weaver, but she didn't give up and pushed them so hard that Kyle once danced with Scarlet for two hours, even though she broke her ankle. Scarlet… Supposedly she was now a Sorceress and Lonnie's right-hand woman. Did she find time to dance while participating in their Rebellion?

Then the music slowed down and they danced together, hugging each other. They felt warm and good, she felt so happy. Bow and Glimmer were also beaming with joy. Given that the Queen can't drink alcohol right now, she'll want to have some fun in another way. Bow's has a very busy wedding night ahead of him. Her too, but they could have started earlier. Thanks to Melog, they could easily sneak away to get some love. However, one thing prevented her from fully enjoying her happiness. When they said the oath, a fiery red woman approached her father -in-law and started telling him something , pointing to the horizon. The Lord Admiral looked distressed and looked in the direction the woman had been pointing. Then he called Lady Ka to him and gave her some instructions, and then his Left Better Hand went somewhere and came back after a long time. Everything seemed to be back to normal, but four new guards appeared in the dance hall.

"Hey, Adora! Do you even have to worry on a day like this!" Catra said, smiling cockily. She smiled in response and kissed her wife… And then the Alarm sounded…

Calamity was glad that this bestiality farce called a wedding was over. Although when that idiot Adora let the fucking horse lead her to the wedding, she almost burst out laughing. Maybe it would be worth taking this mutant gelding to the glue factory? Unfortunately, that was all she had fun with. Now she had to endure the babbling of that idiot Klementyna. Her damned chatter gave her a headache. She swore that one day she would hang her prepared tongue around her neck. Unless she broke their neck first, which she really wanted to do.

"I'm so glad we're here together. You saw this ceremony yourself. On Etheria, we have stopped thinking about gods for too long. Most don't even remember them anymore. Yet faith is very strong throughout the galaxy. Just talk to our new guests... Or to you. Thanks to you, true faith will return to Etheria." said General's Juliette daughter. There was something strange in her eyes, she was probably high on something.

"In fact, thanks to me you will know what true divinity is."she said, although she doubted that what he was going to show her was what the girl dreamed of. Well, Calamity was a dream come true for many, but not necessarily in the way they wanted it to be. Her adoptive parents found this out belatedly, as did Shadow Weaver.

"Do you know that you are very beautiful?" Klementine asked , gently touching her cheek. She looked at the girl with confusion.

"Of course I know... A lot of effort was put into making me look absolutely perfect." she explained to the girl, trying to hide the irritation in her voice. Does he really have to explain obvious things like to a small child? However, the girl became sad, but continued to stare at her in this strange way. It took her a moment to realize that Klementine was in love with her. This unnerved her a bit. She had never practiced the art of seduction and pretending to love. Shadow Weaver herself had bluntly told her that she had absolutely no knowledge of such matters, although as it later turned out, she was not entirely green in this matter, as evidenced by the broken heart of a certain Hellknight. But for now, Klementine expected something from her. She had to do something, because the girl was still very useful. She reached for the simplest solution and leaned over her. The General's daughter kissed her. It was surprisingly pleasant, she expected a wave of irresistible disgust to wash over her, as if she had touched something disgusting with her mouth , but her body was to some extent human, it had its own needs. Maybe this girl can provide her with something other than just screaming in agony.

"You're very beautiful too." she said, not really lying. The girl had symmetrical facial features with typical elven beauty. Of course, she was ugly compared to her, but there was no point in comparing mortals with perfection incarnate. General Juliette scowled at them. She didn't dance because she wasn't officially in a relationship with Onyx Sky, and at the same time she didn't want to dance with someone else so as not to offend them. She and Klementine dance for fifteen minutes, but then she felt something, a great power approaching. This worried her. Power always meant trouble, especially like this. She felt connected to her in some way. They were related, which meant that this being came from the cold and dark void that stretched between the stars. She searched her memory, but couldn't remember anything Shadow Weaver had told her that would indicate the presence of a similar creature on Etheria, although she had her suspicions.

Without a word of explanation, she left Klementine and went outside. She looked at the moon-filled horizon, but nothing she didn't see him there, but the power was still getting closer.

"Can you feel it too?" she heard a strong female voice. She turned around and saw a woman with fiery red hair. It was Lady Sorrowflame. She had heard something about this creature and now she realized that it was all true, albeit greatly diminished. Lady Sorrowflame was not human, or even mortal. There were layers of power hidden within it. The first was repulsive, disliked by most of her kind. She was an undead, and one of the most powerful. She felt hunger and thirst for blood, so she was either a vampire or perhaps a ghoul, but there was something else there. Something much older and more primal. She was like destruction itself walking on the earth. She was a dragon, and an extremely powerful one at that. Powerful beyond all imagination.

“Yes, I sense trouble coming... If the fight breaks out, I advise you to stay away from She- Ra. Her light doesn't work well on people like you... People like us...” She smiled at Lady Sorrowflame , and then there was a deafening boom of an alarm.

The ceremony was so beautiful! He felt love floating in the air, he could absorb it with every breath. Something like this was worth getting married for... Well, maybe that's a bit of an exaggeration, but if she were to get married, she would want it to be like this... Although though she wasn't a princess and would have to settle for something much more modest. She also had no relatives, and was only friends with princesses, and would he be willing to come to an ordinary girl's wedding, even if she was their friend? Catra's dad looked like a real warrior with that scary metal eye. He also had many soldiers that looked even compared to the Clones. I wonder if they would help her get her kingdom back... No, that's a terrible idea. Who normal would fight with their subjects?!

But now there was no time for such considerations or for fun, although it seemed to be very fun. Adora assigned her an extremely important task. She was supposed to find a certain seller of exotic Tea. She didn't say why they were so important, but Adora asked her to find them and notify the guards. She was accompanied by Swiftwind and Shogi in the form of a goat. She mounted her friend and made her way through the happy crowds. She could barely hear Swiftwind humming the song Catra and Adora sang at their wedding. They wandered like this for an hour until they finally reached Swiftwind he exclaimed .

was the third person. She had seen someone like that before in pictures in fairy tale books. It was a dragon! Quite small for a dragon, but still a dragon! She forgot about Adora's order and immediately drove to him. A red-haired girl ran past her with a loud cry of "Horsee!"

“You are a Dragon... A True Dragon!” She exclaimed with delight, and the Dragon sighed heavily.

“This is the thirty-sixth time today that I am explaining that I am not a dragon, but a Dragonkin. Dragons are much bigger and more... Dragon-like in every way... Would you like a drink?” He asked with a bit of impatience in his voice.

“Oh... It's a pity...” she said, not hiding her disappointment.

“You're invading my personal space, and by the way, don't call me a horsy!” Swiftwind said to the redhead who was hugging him tightly. She frowned, got off the Shogi and walked up to the girl, then put her hand on her shoulder and said in a sharp tone.

“Leave my friend, you stupid girl!”

The redhead turned to her abruptly.

“Who are you calling stupid? You Stupid!” she pulled out a huge ax from behind her back.

“You are dumbest! You don't even know that guests are not allowed to carry weapons to the party!” she asked sarcastically .

“It's not a weapon, just an element of orc culture that I can wear whenever I want. Who are you to forbid me from doing anything? - said the red-haired girl, shaking her ax menacingly.

“I'm a prin ... I'm Frosta and I'm a security guard here, so I can absolutely forbid you to do this!” she shouted at the girl. “and I have absolutely no idea what Orks means!” she added.

“Because you're a stupid idiot, Frosta! An orc is someone like Lady Huntara or me!” the redhead screamed in an angry voice. At this time, the dragon approached them and spoke in a conciliatory tone.

“Girls, maybe instead of calling each other insults, we should talk, because everything will escalate and we will all do something we will regret. -his voice was gentle and calm.

“Yes, I agree with Mr. Alatar . With a cup of tea, everything seems to be right.” Swiftwind started , but she didn't listen to him.

“You are stupid! Huntara is not an orc and you are nothing like her!” she screamed. She summoned ice gloves. How dare this girl call her ignorant! She was always the best at the box office. Maybe the only one, but also the best! The redhead's face turned red and her ax caught fire.

“How dare you insult the honor of a true orc warrior! You insulted not only me, but also my clan and all the orcs! I challenge you to a duel on the beaten track!” she screamed.

“All right! Here and now, when I punch your stupid face, don't cry because it hurts!” she lost patience. Nobody respected her! First the Horde Ultimate, then the Chancellor, and now this stupid girl. She was about to fence the battle area with an ice ring when someone shouted at them.

She looked over and saw a burgundy-haired woman. She ran up to them and hugged them one by one, and then she started screaming.

“What were you thinking! Where were you! -Where are Eti and Itel! Listen, Miss Daisy is not who she seems! This is...” she didn't finish because the red-haired woman, whose name was probably Lilka, interrupted.

"Yes, we know her name is Shadow Weaver and she raised Eti's sister and now Lonnie and I are on a very secret mission, but we are not allowed to tell anyone about it."

Alatar looked resignedly at the sky, and she stared at them in bewilderment. Shadow Weaver is here? But how! she thought, but before she could ask a question, the Alarm sounded.

Past crimes and future threats

Chapter Notes

Here's the next chapter. Web and Net in polish are the same word. I invite you to comment and please share your opinions

At this point, he was glad he is a clone. Thanks to this, he did not attract as much attention to himself as he should have. And he really didn't want to draw anyone's attention to himself. He was, after all, Hordak, the ruler of the Etherian Horde, who had been trying to enslave them all for thirty years in the name of the mad Tyrant. He may have been given from the queen's a break from the self-inflicted punishment, but not from the hatred of the common people of Etheria, nor from the remorse of conscience.

He was fully aware that he deserved their hatred, and that he was almost certainly in no danger. The inhabitants of Etheria were not vengeful and respected their ruler's decisions, but this did not mean that they would forgive him. He didn't deserve to be forgiven. Not after what he did. Even his punishment wasn't enough. In fact, he was happy with his wife and The Child. He was away from all those who remembered him as a tyrant and invader, but he did not forget it. Every day he woke up remembering what he had done to the inhabitants of this planet and thinking how he could atone for his guilt. Perhaps now would be his chance to atone for his actions, but he wasn't sure how much he could trust Shadow Weaver. She was always manipulating him into doing the worst... But she was right when she said the Lord Admiral was dangerous. He saw his soldiers on the streets of Brightmoon, although many were in plain clothes, but others were armed. He knew how to assess the fitness of enemy soldiers, and they looked extremely dangerous. They were slightly less fit and less trained than his brothers, but they were still far better than any of the soldiers he had fought… almost all of them, he couldn't forget about those knights and the monsters that accompanied them. Of course, he was quite young and had not participated in many battles. He suspected that Horde Prime had deliberately sent him to such a risky fight to die because he was a defect, although in a completely different sense than he had always thought. These weren't memories he wanted to go back to. For many years he denied them, but something must have remained, because when he saw Imp, he gave him a name referring to the name of small monsters similar to him that harassed their forces during the fights. He didn't remember it before, only the strange and painful therapy performed by Entrapta allowed him to remember everything, even the things he preferred not to remember. Maybe if she had failed, he wouldn't feel so much remorse now? But it happened well. He didn't deserve to forgot his Crimes.

Nobody stopped him. Neither Brightmoon's guards nor these new soldiers paid him any attention. He was just one of the many clones that traveled across Etheria . The inhabitants of the planet weren't completely used to the presence of his brothers, he supposed that many were still afraid of them, but apart from a few reluctant to the new queen of places like Dryl, no one stopped them. He doubted they would cause him any major problems, after all he had the queen's permission, but he had his mission.

Another thing was that he wasn't sure if he was wise to cooperate with his former right-hand man. If someone found out that he was going to meet his former right-hand man, he would be in big trouble.

At any moment he could report that the Dark Sorceress was hiding somewhere here and might be planning something. Perhaps this way he would even redeem some of his sins and gain the trust of the inhabitants of Etheria. But if what Shadow Weaver said was true... Even now, she hid part of the truth from him. For example, that the Lord Admiral is Catra's father. This changed everything. He had no idea where Shadow Weaver got Catra from , from what Entrapta said, Catra herself didn't know. Of course, both the Dark Sorceress and her former ward could be lying, it wouldn't be the first time they had tried to manipulate one of them. He especially found it hard to believe that Shadow Weaver had no idea about Catra's origins. He would never suspect her of such incompetence... This could all be another conspiracy of hers... But would it make sense? What would she gain by warning him about the Lord Admiral's true nature without telling him that he was Catra's father? He had no idea what she was up to, but he was going to keep an eye out. He won't let himself be deceived again. Never again!

But he had to admit, there was some truth in what Shadow Weaver was saying. The Lord Admiral's soldiers were extremely competent, and if more of them arrived, they could pose a real threat... Much greater than the Horde he had created. But apparently the queen was not concerned about the presence of a foreign army in her lands, although her subjects did not seem to be so open and looked at newcomers from outside the Empire with fear. Could they really be so ridiculously naive as to bring a foreign military here AGAIN? Or was Catra the one who convinced the Queen to work with her father? Maybe she planned with him to overthrow her so”called friends and rule Etheria like she always planned? You could expect the worst from this girl.

to Brightmoon in one of the Horde skimmers that he had designed. Entrapta improved it and now it was much more comfortable to drive. If only they weren't going to Brightmoon ... Although was there one place on Etheria he wanted to go? The city looked strangely colorful and chaotic, although he had to admit it was quite nice. He attempted to take the capital of Etheria for over thirty years , but was here only once, on trial after defeating Horde Prime. The process wasn't too long anyway. He pleaded guilty and then proposed punishment, and everyone agreed, although he supposed he owed a lot to Entrapta, who tirelessly convinced the princesses to give him a chance. However, he never had the opportunity to look at the capital. He and his wife and Child stopped on the outskirts of the city and separated there. His wife was to be present at the ceremony, while he was supposed to watch everything on TV screens. He convinced his wife that it was better for him not to be too close to Catra, which wasn't actually a lie, even though the relationship with his former Second-in-Command was still strained. He felt bad not telling the whole truth to Entrapta, but he had to do it anyway... Even if he was ashamed of it. Not only because this way he had a chance to find redemption. He did it for his family.

He wasn't sure how well Shadow Weaver knew Brightmoon, but she probably could have picked a better place to meet them than the Brightmoon Cemetery ... It mean, in a way, it was a very good place to secretly plot. During this holiday, no one was going to visit the cemetery and there was absolutely no one here. It was quiet here... There was almost no sound of celebration, the festival lights were barely visible. Such things never amused him, so he was glad for the peace here... But it was a cemetery. Cemeteries bothered him. Horde Prime never cared about the lives of his little brothers and didn't bother to bury them. The corpses were recycled and turned into simple proteins useful in creating more clones. He destroyed cemeteries and tombs with the same fury as temples, often desecrating them with fury, and forbade his subjects to honor their dead. Not only because he was jealous of the respect they held for their ancestors, but he did not accept the idea that his subjects could escape him into the afterlife, that there would be some reward for them there, even though they opposed him. For him, the burial sites were disturbing for something else. They reminded him of all those who died because of him. Many of those buried here died during the war he caused. He felt like they were all accusing him. They ask what they had to die for. However, the idea that there is something after death somehow seemed tempting to him. Maybe countless numbers of his fallen brothers found happiness in a better place far from their mad creator, while Prime himself suffered eternal torment in some hell... If he suffered a similar fate to, he could accept it.

Brightmoin Cemetery looked like a park. There were trees and flower bushes everywhere. There were even a few fountains. Among the trees were many statues representing or commemorating the dead. The inhabitants of this kingdom scattered ashes in the ground to connect with the planet. From what he heard from his wife, the inhabitants of Brightmoon, unlike the citizens of Eridani and some of the inhabitants of Icarus, did not have a unified vision of life after death, nor were they afraid of the return of their dead. His wife was fascinated by the idea of the afterlife and took it absolutely seriously, although she treated it in a very scientific way. She even considered building a portal to get there, but she didn't share the idea with anyone. He only found out about it because she was talking in her sleep. This plan was probably somehow related to what happened to her parents, but she didn't tell him much about it either.

In the center of the cemetery was a statue of Queen Angela . Her death also weighed heavily on his conscience. However, he shared this sin with Catra. If she hadn't deceived him, if she hadn't hurt Entrapta ... He gritted his teeth but controlled his emotions. This is where they were supposed to meet. He heard footsteps approaching.

She walked through the streets of Brightmoon , constantly asking herself why she was doing this. She was supposed to meet with Shadow Weaver to help her defend Etheria from an unknown threat. Except she wasn't a hero. She headed a magical college, the largest... maybe not in the Galaxy, but definitely in the region, and she was the Queen's advisor! She was nothing like a warrior! She should have run to Glimmer with all this ... but then she and Catra would have imprison Shadow Weaver without even trying to listen. And it would be worth finding out what she has to say... She met the Dark Sorceress during their joint expedition during the occupation, when they were investigating the secret of She”Ra, and although this woman was evil through but there was something more to her, some sadness and bitterness making it impossible for her to completely hate her back then... Of course, that was before she learned the truth about Mikah being sent to Beast Island by her. How could she not hate her for how she hurt her family. For so many years she blamed her and she should have been blamed! Only now, after what she had learned, she didn't feel hatred, but rather anger and frustration. And fatigue. She was very tired. Since Nightgale had to resign from her position as her assistant, she had to take care of everything herself. She slept four hours a day, or rather tossed and turned, because whenever she closed her eyes she saw endless lists of orders and charts showing the arrangement of guests. Sometimes she fell asleep standing up. Once, while gazing at the beautiful view beyond the railing of the balcony, she almost fell out of it when she unconsciously fell asleep.

But she didn't blame Nightgale for wanting to get as far away from it all as possible. The arrival of Catra's Father was surprising, to say the least. The Lord Admiral seemed to be a decent man. She couldn't say a bad word about him. He was admired and respected, and Catra had every right to be proud of being part of such a family. If she was interested in such things, she would be fascinated by him. But his entourage… They were really annoying people. This Shirren Girl didn't bother her as long as she bothered Entrapta, the inventor princess seemed to enjoy her company, but when she returned home, the insectoid clung to her. She kept taking pictures of her with her Datapad and asking what the situation was with the local web... She mistook her for a fisherman or a spider? She also once stated that her grandfather, apparently a priest of some Hylax , knew much cooler spells than the local mystics. Cooler spells! How dare she! They think that when she found herself

She found herself in a graveyard, a very strange choice for a meeting place, though considering it was made by Shadow Weaver, there was some logic to it. Being here on a night, even a night like this, made her anxious. She remembered her not so long ago encounter with that not-dead bloodsucker . Maybe she should ask Antares's subordinates about these monsters. Maybe she will find out that they were exterminated in the galaxy a long time ago, and they killed the last of them, although if you think about it, she wouldn't want to hear it. She was so absorbed in this thought that she didn't notice the tall, hooded figure who was waiting at the meeting point turned towards her. She inhaled with a hiss. It was Hordak! He set a trap for her here with Shadow Weaver! She should have expected something like this! The former ruler of the Etherian Horde smiled grimly and said.

“So this was all just a trap for me? A provocation to prove that I cannot be trusted.” His voice was reproachful and painful.

“You set a trap for me!” She screamed full of rage.

“No one has set a trap for anyone here, although the situation is quite funny.” a third voice said with amusement. Her brother emerged from the shadows, smiling sadly.

„What is going on here?” Hordak asked angrily. Perhaps for the first time in her life, she shared his feelings. Mikah smiled and said.

„It's just that Shadow Weaver called us here one at a time and now she's probably secretly observing what we're doing... Or she didn't want the one of us who changed our mind to betray the others...”

Hordak nodded in agreement. He seemed more relaxed than before. Well, I guess the fact that the Queen's father and aunt attended the same meeting as him absolved him... Maybe he was right. What the best thing they did! They were conspiring behind Glimmer's back... Her own family!

„What did she tell you?” asked the former ruler of the Etherian Horde. The amusement disappeared from her brother's face.

„She said that Angie ... Queen Angela... is alive... And I know she's telling the truth in this one case... I've talked to others who have met her... „ he said in a very sad voice. Both she and the former leader of the Fright Zone looked at him in surprise, but Hordak seemed happy to hear what her brother had said… strange.

„Does Glimmer know about this? Have you told her about this?” she asked. She couldn't understand why he wouldn't do it. It was wonderful news. She would make Glimmer and Catra very happy ! All the inhabitants of the Kingdom! She would make this beautiful day even more beautiful! A spasm of Pain flashed across Mikah's face .

„Glimmer and her friends already know about it... I'm not surprised they didn't tell anyone about it. Angela met Adora on Icarus and... tried to kill her... And also tried burn the entire city... „ he said, telling her part of the story of his wife, or rather Captain Moonshadow as he knew it. As she listened to his story, she slowly felt the terror wash over her.

„But it's impossible! No, Angela! She was always so strong and good... „ she said in a low voice.

„ Memory shapes our image of ourselves and the world. However, it can be easily distorted. I know something about this. " Hordak said, and she thought she heard sympathy in his voice.

"Maybe the Lord Admiral will help us... He and his fleet could..." she started, but the former ruler of Etherian Hor snorted and said.

"I wouldn't count on Him... According to what Shadow Weaver said, he's worse than my brother." he told them about what he had learned from Shadow Weaver about the Lord Admiral.

„She just didn't tell me that he was Catra's father... I don't know if she didn't know about it or if she preferred to hide it from me."

„She probably didn't know. I guess even the Lord Admiral only recently discovered the truth." she said quietly and was about to tell about what she learned from the dark Sorceress when she heard loud and hurried footsteps, and from the darkness, a dark-skinned and silver-haired woman, Saihe , who had previously accompanied Shadow Weaver, came running out of the darkness, panting loudly.

„We are not…„ they shouted at the same time, but she interrupted them.

„Yes, I know, I'm just kidding... Maybe not exactly in the case of Fake Wrongdak, but more on that later. For now, I just came to let you know that Shadow Weaver can't come due to some problems.”

She walked through the streets of Brightmoon as unnoticed as before. There was still something unsettling about it, although the crowds were so happy with the ongoing fun that it wasn't surprising. Beside her, Wrongdak and Ireanis walked behind her, clone had a grim face. Once again, she explained to the silver-haired sorceress what to say if for some reason she could not go to meet her potential allies. Even sober, the Sorceress from lost Golarion was scatterbrained and chaotic, but not as stupid as she once thought she was, although maybe she looked at others differently when sober? I guess that was one of the many advantages of not drinking anymore... She saw others as people, not annoying obstacles. Of course, it didn't change the fact, she was very thirsty, especially before meeting her old friends. She wanted so much to feel the fire in her veins again, but she knew very well that she couldn't do it... She had to be sober for all those she had hurt...

When she saw that the wedding report was showing on the big screens, she stopped to watch the event. Almost all the inhabitants of the city did the same. Glimmer and her Boyfriend, as well as Catra and Adora, looked beautiful. They also seemed so happy, completely unaware of the evil that surrounded them... The Lord Admiral looked so dignified that even she found it hard to believe that he was such a monster as her young companions described him. But she had no doubt that they weren’t wrong. She knew well how easy it was to hide the face of a monster behind a mask of nobility...

That's why she didn't slow down, heading towards Brightmoon Cemetery, where she was supposed to meet the rest of her co-conspirators. They had to meet because this was the only way she could protect Etheria from evil, even though she was aware that she had just brought another evil to her planet. One glance at Lady Cali's cold smile was enough . But before she got there, someone called out to her in a language she hadn't heard in years.

„Stop Light Spinner!”

She closed her eyes, wondering how she could be so unlucky. However, when she turned around, a mocking smile appeared on her face, „Hi, sister„ she said to a tall woman in armor made of the shells of huge insects. Several other Storm Riders appeared around and somehow smuggled weapons into the party. The Storm Riders were the elite military force of the Isles of Sorrow, a quasi-religious order sworn to protect their sacred homeland from foreign corruption. Storm Heart was trained from childhood to become the Storm Guardian, the supreme commander of the entire order.

„You have no right to address me like that! Not after you abandoned your family and fled to foreign countries!” the warrior growled. She felt like she wanted to laugh.

„Are you really accusing me of this? For all the crimes I've committed, you're telling me the only thing in my miserable life I have a right to be proud of? You are ridiculous! – she growled. Her sister tightened her grip on the handle of the Glaive. The visible part of her face showed rage.

„You're coming with me... „ she drawled. At that moment she realized that in the seventy years since she left her motherland, her sister had also changed, she was furious with Light Spinner , even though she had been dead for a long time, just as Mikah had once told her .

She looked around. Ireanis and Wrongdak looked at them in confusion. The clone probably had absolutely no idea what was going on, but Ireanis roughly understood what they were talking about, after all, the rain speech was a heavily distorted version of Elvish. They were off the beaten path, under a large tree with blue leaves. If they chose to resist, they would almost certainly be able to defeat her sister and the Storm Guardians. After all, they were powerful sorceresses, experienced in combat, although Ireanis was much more experienced in this field than she was. However, a fight would attract the attention of everyone gathered at the festival, and it was highly likely that Mr. Wrongdak would be injured or even killed. Many bystanders could suffer a similar fate. She sighed, it wasn't easy when she cared about others.

„Ireanis, you and Mr. Wrongdak will go to the meeting place. I'm having a serious family conversation.” she said and followed her sister, feeling that it would end badly.

Damn, why did Shadow Weaver have to trust her anyway? She was just a stupid drunk who had nothing of value to say, and now the fate of Etheria , and maybe even the entire universe, rested on her shoulders! It was completely out of character for her! She wanted to get drunk now, she hadn't been sober for that long in years! Her hands were shaking, she was alternately hot and cold, her muscles and joints ached… Did she really have to do this sober?

Shadow Weaver's three friends staring at her doubtfully didn't help her nerves at all... But she could have taken Wrongdak with her instead of leaving him to guard the entrance so they wouldn't be disturbed. The Clone had been glum since they left that strange castle, maybe he would be happy to talk to his Brother... She had to admit that Hordak was much less attractive than his brother, so grumpy and sour. With Wrongdak she would go for a drink... No! She would go with him for cake and coffee at the pastry shop, but there was no point in talking to this gloomy man... What was she thinking about? She guess they wanted something from her, she should have answered them, right? She cleared her throat and asked.

„You said something to me and I drifted off, right?” she smiled, the siblings exchanged glances, and Hordak snorted in irritation.

„ I think so, she caused some terrible monster to appear at school, some kind of vulture-man, just scary, mean and wanted to kill the students. She helped defeat him, but it was still very dangerous...„ Castaspella explained with a gloomy face. She nervously straightened her hair.

„I thought I'd summon Quasit or Imp” she defended herself. When the word Imp was mentioned, Hordak flinched.

„She managed to imprison me with a stone hand, so at least she can do magic.” Mikah said thoughtfully. “Tell me what Shadow Weaver told you to tell me.”

She took a deep breath, closed her eyes and began to speak loudly and confidently.

„You need to find the Ruins of Umbracor to secure the Stelarium , determine the location of a place called Xadia and find the Sword that Cuts Worlds there, thanks to which we will find Eternia ... Otherwise the First Ones will come here and destroy Etheria sending the Swarm, and Lord Admiral Antares is a fucking son of a bitch, for what I can personally vouch for it... „ she exhaled loudly and smiled smugly, because she probably hadn't made a mistake. All three of them looked at her in disbelief.

„My Brother... Horde Prime destroyed the First Ones, nothing remained of them.” Hordak said in a gloomy voice. Unlike his cool brother, he was always gloomy. Mikah scratched his chin.

„As you know, your brother said many things, and few of them were true. Someone must have sent Adora, and they didn't do it for good intentionss, but only to activate the Heart of Etheri for an obvious purpose.” Said the concerned wizard.

„The Lord Admiral mentioned this Swarm, I think he even fought with it, although I don't know. What connection could it have with the First Ones?” Castaspella asked. Ireanis shrugged.

„I don't know much about the First Ones... But when it comes to the Hive, I can show you a little something.” she said and cast the spell she had been preparing for the last few days. The cemetery is gone. The audience saw a scene created using illusion, she showed them Kesler. Golden fields and green meadows, people working hard but honestly. Then flames filled the sky and dozens of ships, huge and organic, began to break into the atmosphere. The scene changed to a battlefield, where a modern army armed with tanks and mechs faced countless numbers of insectoid Swarmmonsters. Although they killed dozens and hundreds of beasts, their resistance was broken because the enemy not only had virtually unlimited resources, but also his soldiers fought as one. Mikah and Castaspella watched in horror as they had never seen such a war, and Hordak was terrified as he had been in it many times before. Then they saw a burning city. The buildings were ruined and there were corpses in the streets, but there weren't many of them. They saw the bugs taking them and devouring them. Suddenly, an incredibly bright light flashed on the horizon and a nuclear explosion appeared before their eyes. The scene changed again. What they saw was the dead shell of a planet, the corpse of a world devoured by the Swarm...

Then the scene faded and they stood alone in the cemetery. They stared ahead in silence for a moment, transfixed by what they saw. Finally, Mikah spoke.

„I'm not allowed to leave the Island.” Hordak noticed, but the wizard waved his hand.

„I'll convince Glimmer to give you a pass. I'll tell her the truth. I need you to do some research. Are you going to, Casta?

His sister nodded.

„Yes, I have to do this for all of us, even though I'm not good at discovering ancient secrets. Are you coming with us too?” the Head Sorceress said to her. She smiled at them and said.

„I am a war sorceress from Nantambu. I betrayed all my comrades in the unit. I recently decided to redeem myself by trying to help the inhabitants of this planet."

As she finished making her promise, an alarm sounded.

Younger Sisters

Chapter Notes

> Here's the next chapter. I am asking for your feedback and comments. I would really like to know your opinion.

She was always the little sister, even though she never felt like one. For as long as she could remember, she had the impression that she was smarter than most of the people around her. Midnight Mask thought she was smart to, but she could never focus and got easily distracted. She was always jealous and tried to prove to her Mother that she was better than them, even if she had to resort to cheating and manipulation. Storm Heart on the other hand has always been that polite and obedient daughter who always did everything to please their Mother. Of course, no matter what she did, their Mother was still dissatisfied. No one and nothing could make Whispering Mist satisfied, but Storm Heart didn't understand that. She always believed it was her fault for not trying hard enough. Just like Adora felt towards her. The thought was so sudden that she stumbled and would have fallen if Wrongdak hadn't held her up. Storm Heart stopped and turned to her, then asked with undisguised contempt.

„Are you trying to escape?" she tightened her hand on the handle of her glaive. In response, she shook her head and said.

„No... I just realized that you are very similar to someone extremely important in my life."

Storm Heart snorted in irritation and growled

„Really? So you had someone important in your life? Congratulations, now stop talking and come with me!

She looked at Storm Heart in surprise. In the past, she was the good one who tried to take care of her younger sisters and be a role model for them. They always took advantage of her honesty. However, she was always understanding towards them, and not only compared to their Mother... Compared to her, even the Devils of Hell seemed merciful. It happened, especially when they were little, that she took on their sins... Before they learned to hide their mistakes from Whispering Mist. Now she seemed furious with her. Was it because she left her home islands without permission and renounced the role of high priestess her mother had chosen for her? Yes, that made sense. Storm heart has always been very concerned about tradition and Spidermaidens's will . Unlike them, who more or less secretly mocked ancient customs and the mysticism that surrounded them. Only Midnight Mask didn't have the courage to break free from this vicious circle of superstitions and customs... Only she had the feeling that there was something else to it, something much more personal...

„I don't think even your sister don’t likes you... She seems very dangerous...„ said Wrongdak in a low voice.

„She is very dangerous, but unlike my other sister... and me, she is trustworthy an honorable...”

She wasn't sure if it was wise to take the clone with her. She had no idea what was happening on the Isles during the occupation, but she was sure that her people put up fierce resistance. This could enrage the mad tyrant, who took revenge on those who dared to oppose him.

„Are the Mother and Midnight Mask healthy?” she asked, trying to hide the anxiety in her voice.

Her sister looked at her suspiciously, but answered.

„Our mother is better than ever before. Despite your betrayal, she became the ruler of the clans... Mainly due to the fact that most of the remaining clan heads were chipped during the occupation and after such a defeat, she was unworthy to lead the Faithfull As for our sister, you'll see her soon.” she heard satisfaction in Storm Heart's voice.

It complicates everything. She thought with a mixture of concern and irritation. Midnight Mask always had a rivalry with her, although she usually lost. She envied her not only her intellect , but also her great talent for magic. She tried to undermine her position at every opportunity and would stop at nothing to achieve her goal. If she was here, wow, it could mean trouble for her.

Storm Heart led them to a four-story building located on the outskirts of the city. Judging by the flying mons of the Yago clan, as well as the Flags of the Isles of Sorrow and the symbols of their goddess, it was most likely the embassy of their nation, although looking at the servants packing their belongings into several obviously overloaded skimmers, it will soon cease to serve this function. Storm Heart looked astonished.

„We're going back home, soon it won't be safe for us here... But actually, it's good, we've already spent too much time in these foreign lands, where there is neither faith nor discipline, and people are like raindrops." she said the ending with such elation, as if she wanted to convince herself that defeat was actually victory. It was so typical of her.

„It can wait. Take a better look at who I managed to capture." Storm Heart said, pointing her Glaive blade at her. Midnight Mask clucked in annoyance and looked at her, and when she recognized her, her eyes widened and she grabbed the hilt of her sword.

„Nobody calls me that anymore and you shouldn't do it either. As my former student said, Light Spinner died a long time ago...„ She said in a tired voice. She had absolutely no time for this discussion.

„You can't avoid answering for your actions with foreign bullshit.” said Midnight Mask, not hiding her vindictive satisfaction. Storm Heart winced as she heard Midnight Mask she cursed , their mother did not tolerate "Dirty language", as she used to call swear words.

„Are you really so sure you can stop me?” she asked, raising an eyebrow. Midnight Mask was about to walk up to her and make some belligerent threats, but she stopped and tilted her head to the side as if she was listening. Storm Heart watched her expectantly, but also with concern.

„What are you saying, sister! After everything she's done to us, you want to let her go as if nothing happened! The eldest sister shouted indignantly. She shared her surprise. Midnight Mask would always jump at the opportunity to prove her superiority over her youngest sister. There was something strange here. Then she saw around the Black Blade's neck a necklace with a skull with chains embedded in its eyes. Maybe she wasn't very knowledgeable in theology, but even she could recognize the symbol of Zon-Kuthon , the god of darkness, suffering and envy, called the Lord of Midnight ... It must be admitted that this choice of patron suited her sister perfectly. But what would their Mother say when she learned that her daughter was a heretic and a high-ranking one at that, since apparently the god himself spoke to her directly... But why did Zon-Kuthon tell his servant to release her, risking unnecessary complications? She guessed the answer, but she didn't like it at all. Agreements between gods were not something that made the world better.

„You will do as I tell you! You must listen to me!” Midnight Mask growled . She was right, at least theoretically the Black Blade shared the highest position in the clan after its matriarch with the high priestess called the Light Weaver ...

Storm Heart, her anger and outrage boiling, walked up to the Black Blade and growled.

Midnight Mask was about to say something back, but she didn't allow further discussion, she really didn't have time for it, casting the spell she had been preparing for some time. Tendrils of shadow wrapped around the guards and servants, immobilizing them all. Only she and Wrongdak were free. She walked up to the sisters, smiled and turned off the holographic mask. Seeing her true face, both women let out strangled screams of horror.

„This is what your little sister has become. A monster who made a pact with unimaginable evil, but not the only one in this messed up family, although probably the greatest one. I do not want you to involve me in the small and pathetic affairs of my homeland, otherwise I will show you what true great power is. Although I have a vague feeling that you have already become involved in the game of players much more powerful than you can imagine, which will probably bring disaster to all of you, but honestly, it is no longer my concern, I only feel sorry for your subjects who will suffer in the process.” she looked at Midnight Mask and said.

„I don't know what idiotic plan you came up with, but if you disappear from Brightmoon right after implementing it, you might as well just admit your guilt. If you could think, you would erase all traces leading to you and pretend to be innocent, but unfortunately, you are too stupid for that.” she felt satisfaction seeing the hatred in the Black Blade's eyes and turned to Storm Heart.

„I don't know why you hate me, but know that this is the wrong path that the Others have led you to... „ She didn't finish because the Storm Guardian interrupted her.

“They banished Blue Weave because of you” she said bitterly, looking at her accusingly. She remembered Blue Weave. He was the captain of the ship that brought her to the mainland as she fled the islands. She then used forged papers, developing a skill that would come in handy many times later while serving in the Horde. She remembered that Blue Weave and Storm Heart were close… Oh no…

"I didn't think..." she began fearfully, but her eldest sister laughed bitterly.

„You never think about anyone but yourself. It was always like that... „ There was so much bitter truth in her sister's words that she fell silent for a moment. Then she said in a tired voice.

„Leave it all behind. You're the only one of us who isn't completely corupted. You have a chance to be happy. But you have to get away from it all. Leave the islands and find Blue Weave. He may be waiting for you there somewhere. Then you can go to the stars. The universe is immeasurable. You will easily find a place where you can live away from our thrice-cursed family.”

She was about to leave when she remembered something.

„And one more thing. If any of you hurt any of my... daughters, know that I will find you and cause you so much pain that even the true ruler of Midnight Mask would tremble.” she deliberately implied that she knew the truth about the Black Blade's little secret. Her sister pursed her lips and said.

„Do you mean all three of your daughters?” she laughed nastily, probably sure that she had surprised her, but she already knew the truth. She smiled at her sister just as nastily and spoke slowly.

„Yes, all three.”

Wrongdak and Storm Heart looked at her in surprise, but she had no intention of explaining anything to them, she just turned her back on them and moved forward. Wrongdak ran after her and asked.

Is your third daughter Glimmer? She… „ didn't let him finish.

„Her name is Nightgale and she is a strong and wise young woman, but unfortunately very wronged. And I guess I should congratulate you, you have a niece.”

The clone almost tripped as she did early on. He wanted to ask more questions, but then the alarm went off.

Tallstar was becoming less and less sure that they had made the right decision in joining the Lord Admiral's Fleet. On the surface everything was fine. They received pay, for the first time in their lives, and it was really big. They were given good food and could sleep wherever they wanted, although they preferred to do so on their ship, Honor. They didn't have to work much, they mainly transported officials and officers between ships, sometimes they carried goods or took part in reconnaissance missions. In fact, they were hanging out, probably for the first time in their lives. They received new, better equipment, and their prosthetics and ship were improved. In a word, live not die. Yet she felt anxiety growing, slowly turning into panic.

It probably started the moment they saw Lady Sorrowflame's true form. The very sight of her scarredthe city's inhabitants, but the subsequent show of force was terrifying. She single-handedly captured a citadel full of Horde soldiers that otherwise would have had to be besieged for weeks. Apparently none of the clones escaped alive, and Lady Sorrowflame didn't have a single scratch on her. She then tried to find out more about this woman... This creature, but it was difficult to find out anything specific. It was known that she had served the Lord Admiral's family for generations, although she looked to be forty years old, which was apparently quite typical for dragons. She was also a powerful necromancer, i.e. someone who uses magic to bring corpses to life and even summon the dead from the afterlife. Summons the dead! On Etheria they were told that magic was good, but what good could be in this necromancy? She also dealt with necrotechnics , i.e. combining bodies brought to life using dark magic with cybernetic implants, which was witnessed during the storming of the citadel. There were darker rumors, too. In hushed whispers, some claimed that Lady Sorrowflame herself was actually an undead, blood-drinking vampire. She didn't believe in the latter, it was too reminiscent of old horror movies from before the times of the Horde, which Starla was so afraid of.

But that wasn't all. The Lord Admiral and his past were also surrounded by a cloud of mystery. There wasn't much talk about his home planet, as if it wasn't a topic worth discussing. They only knew that there was a civil war there, which he lost and had to leave his home planet. Civil wars didn't sound good. Their uncle once told about them that in the old days there were civil wars on Icarus and they were especially bloody and brutal. Was that also the case here? They couldn't ask those who were serving at the time, most of them were senior officers serving on the planet Atrax, where the rest of the Fearless Armada and the Government in Exile were located... She also preferred to be careful when asking the members of the fleet, as she felt it was better not to draw too much attention to herself. excessive questioning. Lady Ka's subordinates were everywhere and listened to what was being said between the soldiers. Apparently some of the soldiers serving Veskarium knew more about Antares's past , but she wasn't sure how much she could trust what they said, because their country was an imperialist and militaristic dictatorship whose government had been hostile to Antares for years , although they weren't very keen on it anyway. conversations with strangers.

But it was the Lord Admiral's current actions that made her most anxious. Immediately after the clones were defeated, the provisional government called on the rebels to lay down their weapons, and most of them did so. Immediately afterwards, they received it back because they were conscripted into auxiliary troops. Recruitment of soldiers directly to the fleet also began. However, these new soldiers were usually incorporated into existing units serving in the fleet. The production of weapons also began, and in huge quantities. This was understandable, after all, they were facing a war with both of Horde Prime's heirs . It made sense, at least in theory. But then the provisional government gave the Lord Admiral the title of Lord Protector of Taurus, which gave him great powers, including command of the planet's military forces. A curfew and a law prohibiting the spread of symmetrical views, whatever that meant, were also introduced, thus limiting freedom of expression. Lor Admiral, however, was still very popular with the locals, especially among Florians. He was respected much more here than She-Ra . Glimmer and her friends waited too long and thus lost the Hearts of the people of Taurus.

She was glad that they were among the chosen few who would go to their friends' royal wedding. It seemed very nice of the Lord Admiral to honor the great holiday of his allies by sending such a large delegation. But then they found out that Catra was his daughter. That explained everything. Now she understood why he reacted so strangely when Starla showed him a photo of the heroine of Etheria, as well as the subsequent questions they were asked. This changed a lot. As soon as Starla found out about it, she cried with joy. It was too much like those stupid old romantic movies she loved so much. Even her brother seemed happy about this. But she remembered the words of that Shirren Girl Ashurk and the photo she showed them. It seemed that the Lord Admiral had another daughter, this Eti, a girl who traveled with Dilayla and Lady Cala. The aristocrat also came here, but no one saw the mercenary here. She felt much sadder about this than she expected. She grew fond of the warrior in the few hours they fought alongside each other. She decided not to tell the rest of the soldiers about that meeting, not before she talked about the matter privately with Catra. She also forbade her brother and sister to tell anyone about it. There wasn't a chance to talk to Catra yet, they only arrived a few hours before the wedding in the last group. She was also worried that her siblings would spill the beans. Starla was talkative, especially when she drank, and their brother became close to Commander Reese. According to what Starla told her, guys were getting really talkative in bed.

So now she was standing in the square next to the fountain, drinking light alcohol made from forest fruits, and with a gloomy and thoughtful face she was watching the choir of some small, six-armed furry creatures called Skittermanders who were singing some solemn song. Next to her, Starla was blissfully clinging to her new boyfriend, a red-haired soldier named Kay . He has served in the Dauntless Armada for over five years. He was a nice, if quite sad, young man. Apparently his planet was conquered or even destroyed as a result of the invasion of creatures called the Swarm. She didn't think there were more evil beings like Horde Prime in the universe, although when she asked the other soldiers, they laughed and said that Horde Prime was not in the least comparable to the Swarm... She should learn more about that too. Jewelstar smiled dreamily and wrote something down in his notebook. Commander Reese asked him to write down for him everything he saw at the Victory Day celebrations and wedding, as he himself was unfortunately busy commanding the fleets in the Lord Admiral's absence. Everyone looked so damn happy and content that she felt stupid for being lost in her dark thoughts. Maybe she should follow Starla's advice and seek some company, even just for one night. Suddenly she saw someone, the sight made her very happy.

„Dilayla!” she exclaimed at the sight of the tall warrior, who looked towards her with surprise, towards her and smiled with obvious relief. Why a relief? She ran to Dilayla and hugged her tightly.

„Good to see you!” she exclaimed, more delighted than she expected. Her worries and anxieties disappeared. Now she will be able to throw herself into the fun... They will be able to throw themselves into it together. However, the mercenary looked serious and worried. She was emaciated and pale, with several bruises and scratches on her face, as well as a bandage on her head. What happened to her? Was she fighting? With whom?!

„I'm glad to see you too and that nothing happened to you” she said tiredly and with obvious relief.

„What was supposed to happen? We didn't take part in the fighting... Unlike you.”

Dilayla shook her head and said with complete seriousness.

„It is a long story. Listen, we need to meet with the Queen and Catra as soon as possible. Everyone is in danger!”

„Catra and Glimmer are dancing in the Hall for them, and Catra's father is there too... It's also a long story. I can notify my officer.” she said, but the mercenary shook her head.

„No, don't tell him anything!„ Dilayla exclaimed. Before she could say anything, an alarm sounded.

Tirin watched with amazement as the red-haired girl argued with Frosta. Frosta didn't look like a princess at all, and she knew something about that, she was a princess herself after all...sort of. After all, all pure-blood Azlanti, and despite the contamination her blood was extremely pure, were like kings to lesser people. She didn't believe it, of course, but this princess was arguing with the redhead like two kids! It was so stupid! She was the same age as them and behaved much more maturely .

For several hours, Bina had been showing her around the city, telling her about it, although she quickly guessed that what the woman didn't read from the folder was something she made up. Moreover, both her accent and her style of demeanor indicated that she was not from here. Did she recognize that she was Azlanti ? She wasn't sure. When she was preparing for this mission, she didn't even consider that someone might guess her origins. In all these years, her pure Blood had never once brought her any good. Only hatred, whether from those who were oppressed by her nation or from her compatriots. Being an Azlanti comes not only with privileges but also with responsibilities, such as the duty to be the strongest, worthy of her divine origins

This place, this planet was really very beautiful, she could see it even despite the fear that chained her Heart. Yesterday, Mikah talked to her for some time, and then in the evening he introduced her to the guide who would accompany her during the festival. She didn't suspect anything then, she was glad that she had a guide who would show her around the city. She wouldn't have to wander under that terrifying open sky for so long. She spent the evening in a small room that Mikah had arranged for her. He must have been someone very respected here, since even on a day like this he was able to get a room for her, even if it was such a tight one. She didn't lie down in bed but on the floor, which caused some consternation for the room attendant, but it was more comfortable for her. She slept better in her armor than in any bed. Even on a safe ship, she rarely took it off, let alone on a strange and dangerous planet. There was usually no need to do this. This device cleaned her and collected what she excreted. She only had to take it off when it was necessary to check whether her skin was not attacked by countless fungi and parasites inhabiting her crippled body.

She didn't dare take off her oxygen mask to sleep, her lungs were too damaged for her to risk sleeping without it outside of an oxygen-enhanced environment, but for a while she lay there and breathed simply without assistance, enjoying the ability to breathe freely. The air was so clean here, she would say sweet if she could taste sweet. Any taste...

In the morning, Mikah was nowhere to be found, but Bina was already waiting for her. She ate breakfast, that is, drank her supplement, which confused Bina, as did everyone else, and then they went to explore the city together. Brightmoon was very pretty, although not very big, I think Wherever was even bigger than Etheri's capital. Bina showed her lots of places, monuments and parks, flooding her with information. She also asked her lots of questions, most of them innocent and insignificant, but she was well-versed enough in the nuances of politics to know when someone was trying to get the truth out of her. She gave perfunctory answers.

Bina even had tickets to the palace, where she was taken to the royal gardens. Her statue was there. The statue of Captain Moonshadow... Queen Angela... She looked completely different...

She lacked the anger and bitterness she was now full of. Instead, she seemed to exude dignity and caring, and only a few people, including herself, knew that Scourge of Azlanti had such qualities. Seeing how beautiful and dignified she once was, she fully understood the enormity of the evil that had been done to her... What her own people had done to her... That's why she had to repair this evil, or at least do everything to make up for it.

Bina also took her to the victory museum where He was! The Queen's Sword...Or rather, its remains. It was signed as the Sword of Protection, She-Ra's Sword . When she asked Bina about him , she recited a fragment of the tourist brochure, which she had memorized perfectly. The story didn't say it was the Queen's sword, on the contrary, it said it was the sword of this She' Ray. She didn't know what to make of it, but she didn't want to ask too many questions so as not to reveal herself too interested, so instead she told the woman she was going to the bathroom. There she left several small spy drones, the remnants of a Gift given to Captain Moonshadow by a certain Doctor Sidonius while she was a prisoner of her nation. She also took a few photos of the museum and looked at the security, which was at the level of a large self-service store, i.e., from the point of view of real pirates, it was practically non-existent. Then they visited a few other places, and then she went to her room, and her guide, caretaker and most likely guard, went to take care of some of her own matters, which meant probably reporting to her superiors. As she rested in her room, she contacted her crew and told them what she had learned. Everyone, except the captain, was surprised at how well she did. She felt so proud of herself!

In the evening, Bina took her to celebrate. This time the woman was distracted and didn't pay much attention to what she was saying, had her superiors given her a scolding for not keeping an eye on her well enough? Did they find her drones? Although she doubted the latter, since they were really good at hiding, and even the locals weren't very familiar with the modern spy technology that had fooled the Azlanti, who were natural schemers, but you never knew...

While they were visiting, the broadcast of the wedding ceremony began. Then she saw this Glimmer... The Lady Captain's daughter. She was so beautiful and healthy, much more beautiful than in the photo, how wonderful she must have looked in real life. Both the not-quite-queen and Adora looked happy. Did they realize what happened to the rightful ruler? Maybe they didn't care, or maybe they took joy in knowing what a terrible fate had befallen her... No... This Glimmer couldn't be like that. She looked just like the sister she always wanted to have...

And then Bina saw someone in the crowd, apparently her wards, and she started shouting at them, and at the same time they were arguing with Princess Frosta... They mentioned some kind of break-in, but it seemed that it wasn't her comrades who were going to commit it. And then the alarm went off… Was it Captain Moonshadow? Have they been detected? She had no idea, but it was time for her to escape... Taking advantage of the fact that her guide was busy, she turned around and mingled with the scared crowd

When the alarm sounded, she didn't actually feel fear. She had risked her life too many times to be scared by a simple alarm. She wasn't surprised either. From the very beginning she expected that something will happen during her wedding. It just had to happen! The only wonder was who was attacking them. Lonnie or one of the Heirs of Horde Prime? This is what he will find out! But the strangest thing was that she felt happy! Finally, no more damned meetings and hours of signing documents, at least for now! Best Friend Squad is back in action! She looked into her new husband's eyes and saw that he felt the same as she did. He also liked that they would return to their old lives, at least for a moment. It will be fun! But now she had to give orders first. She kissed Bow and called out to everyone.

„Okay, listen to me. There is no reason to panic. We've been in much worse trouble and we've gotten through it.” She called the other princesses and officers. Catra approached them, smiling predatorily, she too was eager to fight. Adora, however, looked a little worried, as if something had happened that bothered her more than the attack. He needs to talk to her about it, but only after the fight. Scorpia puffed out her chest proudly, ready to receive orders, and Perfuma hugged her wife's strong arm, looking at her with eyes full of pride and tenderness. The Lady of Plumeria looked much less exhausted than before. Mermista stood some distance from Catra, she still didn't like Catra very much because of the cat girl's capture of Salinea. However, she never acted hostile towards the Grand Marshal and always obediently obeyed all orders. Seahawk was grinning as well, looking forward to her next adventure, Netossa was looking at her seriously, and Spinnerella looked concerned. She wasn't surprised, her children were here after all. There was also the matter of her condition... She was actually in the same condition, and Mermista also seemed to be a little rounded ... Oh!... General Juliet stood at attention with one eye, glancing at Lady Cala, who had also approached there uninvited. Perhaps it was a good thing, the girl from Carurystal was, according to Adora, an excellent warrior, although recently her friend had become angry with Cala because of her behavior during a training fight. However, she saw that the aristocrat was dancing with General' Juliet's daughter and even that they had kissed. Whoever was capable of love could not be truly evil. Sheguess that's why the General showed such dislike towards Lady Cala. Juliet was very protective of her daughter Klementine, probably because of her, so as not to make the girl feel sorry, she did not invite Onyx Sky. In her opinion, it was a terrible stupidity, but who was she to tell others how to live her life? She didn't see Entrapta anywhere ... She said that Hordak wouldn't be present at the ceremony, which she was very happy about, and right after the wedding she went somewhere with that tiring ant... Shirren girl, that is, to see the technological wonders brought by the Lord Admiral and his subordinates. She didn't see Auntie Casta or her father anywhere, they had to leave the dance hall and she didn't even notice. She wasn't really surprised by them. They must not have liked being in the company of so many people in love, although for different reasons. She didn't see Frosta anywhere, and she probably didn't like being among so many lovers, since she had no one to dance with.

„Listen, this is the plan. Catra and I will find out where the threat is coming from, and then, undetected, thanks to Melog , we will try to look at the threat and then get back to you. Scorpia, Perfuma and Adora, you will be in the first line... Mermista , you will look for Frosta, and then you will stand together in the second line. Netossa and Juliet, you will lead the troops, Catra will join you later, and Bow, Seahawk and Spinnerella will organize the evacuation of civilians.„ she gave orders, she felt happy that it went so smoothly.

„Why should I look for Frosta and then stand in the second line and does anyone know where she went?” Mermista asked in a suspicious tone. In fact, she was somewhat right, because she did not want the ruler of Salinea to expose herself too much because of her condition. Of course, she was in a similar state herself, but this was something completely different!

„And where is the heroism and adventure in standing at the back?” Seahawk asked with sadness in his voice. She took a deep breath before answering.

“Your and Frosta's powers work together perfectly, and someone needs to be in the second line to intercept those who break through the first line. Seahawk, the greatest heroism, is protecting those who cannot protect themselves.„ she hoped she sounded convincing, because there was no time for deliberation.

“I sent Frosta with Swiftwind to the city to look for something...” added Adora

Seahawk he looked satisfied with her answer, but Mermista wasn't entirely convinced. But she didn't protest. She was about to breathe a sigh of relief and start teleporting when she heard the Lord Admiral's voice behind her. Damn, she completely forgot about him.

„My soldiers will support your guards, and Lady Sorrowflame and Asindess di Vir will support my daughter-in-Law. My ships haven't detected any ships entering Etheria's orbit , so it's most likely a local threat. I will coordinate our forces from here. – said the Lord Admiral, without asking her opinion at all. Behind him, Lady Sorrowflame smiled mysteriously, this woman gave her chills. Asindesa di Vir, on the other hand, looked determined, even full of grim fatalism. .She swallowed her irritation, then spoke.

„ Agreed, but I wish your people to limit violence to a minimum.” she tried to keep the sharpness in her voice. The Lord Admiral nodded and said.

„I always limit collateral damage to the minimum necessary.” Catra's father said.

„It wasn't quite what I asked for.” she said slowly in a firm voice, but the Lord Admiral seemed unmoved.

„ Sparkle, maybe we should start implementing our plan?” Catra asked, smiling cockily, although she felt very nervous. She understood why, she was now faced with a choice between her family, friends and loved one...

„Okay, you're right, we have to hurry...„ she said, but someone interrupted again.

„Can I Join Adora and the Rest?” Lady Cala asked in her always gentle voice.

„Agreement.” she said, although Catra wanted to protest, but there was no time for further discussion.

They moved to a radio listening center built on one of the peaks surrounding Brightmoon. Normally, a newly built one led here magnetic roller coaster , but teleportation has always been much faster. The soldiers were on duty here despite the holiday, but someone was nice enough to bring them cake and other delicacies, she even saw a bottle of sparkling wine. But now everyone was very nervous and staring at the monitors of the radar and listening equipment.

„It's good that you're here, Queen and Grand Marshal! Something is approaching Brightmoon at great speed.” the commander of the listening post will exclaim passionately. She seemed very nervous, even a little scared.

„Where can we get a good look at it?” she asked and the commander, along with several other soldiers, looked at the monitor and saw.

„The best will be the Luminous Hills.” she mentioned the high hills towering above the Whispering Woods, where before the war there was a small settlement, which was abandoned during the war... Was it rebuilt? If there were residents there…

„Okay, let's go there!” she exclaimed and moved to the mentioned hill.

The stars shone above them. The village was abandoned... Although the area had already been cleared for the reconstruction of the settlement, the first houses would be built here within a year at most... It was quiet here... Too quiet. Catra and Melog flattened their ears. On the horizon they saw a single dark dot rapidly approaching towards them.

„We'd better hide. I don't know how well hiding Melog works at very close range.” the cat girl whispered in a low voice. She nodded in agreement. They ran among the trees. There she finally understood what was wrong with this place..., The Whispering Woods fell silent. She felt the hairs on the back of her neck stand up. She spent weeks in the Whispering Woods during and after the War. It was like a second home to her, if not more so. And he has never been silent before. Even during the occupation, everyone said that his whisper gave them comfort in difficult and terrible moments. Now he was silent, and it filled her with fear. Fear turned to horror as she saw what was approaching... The creature was huge, larger than any land creature that lived on Etheria. It moved on two thick legs, it had two massive paws with claws as big as swords. It had almost no neck, its large and hideous head growing directly from between its powerful shoulders. On its back were webbed wings that seemed far too small to support such a large body. It had no mouth, only a long segmented trunk with a toothed suction cup at the end. Its body seemed to be made of spongy, organic stone. But the worst thing was his eyes. They were huge and set so deep that at first they seemed like empty eye sockets. Unimaginable evil and hunger emanated from them ... Hunger was so great that it was overwhelming. She wanted to be as far away from this creature and its terrifying gaze as possible. She looked into Catra's eyes and saw that she wanted this creature.

Suddenly she felt a hand on her shoulder. She let out a strangled scream, fortunately Melog's masking also worked on sounds, and she looked behind her. To her extreme surprise, she saw Madam Raz there. She met this strange and unusual old woman several times, although she preferred the company of Adora and Swistwind , as well as Catra, whom she usually called Serenia. She addressed her as if she were her own mother, Angela ... But from the time when she was a small child... which in itself said a lot about the woman's mental state.

„I know.” the old woman replied in an absolutely conscious voice. She looked at it more closely. Madam Razz looked different than usual. She was much more aware of what was happening around her. Her gaze was clearer and more focused. She pursed her lips with determination.

„Madam Raz?” she asked carefully, unsure how she should react to the new, changed Razz. The older woman looked at her with such a piercing gaze that it was as if she could see right through her soul.

„Someone made a promise and then didn't keep it. Chaugnar Faugn’s little brothers really don't like it when others play with them. These beings are always hungry and constantly thirsty for blood... I don't know who awakened them, but I sensed a great evil that had recently arrived on Etheria. An evil that is dark and wicked, but also very powerful. I have already fought against his parent as much as any mortal can, and the price has been very high... Very high indeed.” said the older woman in a low voice. Then she looked at her and added in a sharp tone.

„Take me to the capital... Where the government is...”

She didn't protest, even though Razz was clearly ordering her, but moved them to Brightmoon . When she appeared in front of the castle, she saw Scorpia and Perfuma surrounded by guards, as well as the Lord Admiral's soldiers armed with heavy weapons. She didn't see Adora, Lady Cala or Asindesa di Vir anywhere.

„What's going on? Is it Lonnie or is it... Someone else?" ruler of Plumeria asked. She was very concerned… Did she suspect something? She knew many old legends that others had forgotten. Maybe one of them talked about a monster that was coming to Brightmoon .

„ Someone Very Different... Where are Adora and the rest? – Catra asked, clearly scared .

"Uh, that's interesting..." Scorpia said, scratching her temple.

„For the Honor of the Grayskull!" she exclaimed while running, transforming into She-Ra. She didn't slow down even for a moment, she felt the battle excitement pulsating in her heart. However, she couldn't shake the anxiety that lingered in the back of her mind. The Lord Admiral spoke with Lady Sorrowflame almost two hours before the attack, pointing in the direction where the threat was coming from. Did he know something beforehand but didn't warn them ? If so, that meant... uh... she didn't even want to think about what it could mean.

The Perfuma almost kept up with her, as did Asindesa di Vir. Despite her age, the woman was in great condition. Scorpia was the only one who couldn't keep up with them, after all, all those muscles weighed much. And Lady Cala didn't even break a sweat... This woman was amazing. They reached the foreground of the castle. Her father-in-law's soldiers and Brightmoon guardswere waiting for backup to arrive. It was calm, a real calm before the storm. As soon as she breathed a little, she saw two flashes of an explosion from the direction of Brightmoon, and immediately afterwards she heard the echoes of the explosion. She turned around, clearly confused.

„This frontal attack is probably just a diversion! The real target was someone in Brightmoon.” Lady Cala exclaimed, her voice full of genuine fear. At that exact moment, her communicator went off.

„Help needed! Empress of Eridani delegation has been attacked!”

They looked at each other, apparently they all got the same message.

„They definitely got here through that forgotten tunnel! If we get underground, maybe we can intercept them!” Lady Cala exclaimed, as if she had had a sudden epiphany. They looked at her in surprise.

„What tunnel? What are you talking about?” she said to the woman from Carurystal. She blushed and said.

„I remembered several old legends told in my family for generations. I decided to check them out and went to the castle's basement. There I found a corridor leading outside... I didn't tell you about it because you were mad at me and I didn't know it would be important. The entrance is nearby.” her tone was urgent.

She wasn't sure if she should listen. There was something strange about Lady Cala, and Catra clearly didn't trust her. he could also be needed here, fighting alongside everyone else. But if they had a chance to intercept the kidnappers and save the alliance. Besides, she could have moved here. It was still difficult, and with the exception of Catra, she couldn't move to people, only places, but within Etheria itself it was easier. She nodded and said.

„Okay, go ahead!” she said. She was about to set off, but Asindesa di Vir stopped her.

„I'm going with you.” Said the Hell Knight.

„Agree.” she said, looking at Lady Cala , but she did not protest . Maybe the women started getting along with each other... Together they followed the aristocrat from Carurystal.

„Couldn't we wait here for the kidnappers if it's the only way out?” Asindesa di Vir asked, but Lady Cala shook her head.

„I don't know if this is the only way out, but I know where the intersection of the tunnels is, where they all intersect.” replied the Aristocrat of Caryrustal. Asindesa di Vir looked at her suspiciously, but said nothing.

The entrance was in the wall of the Mountain, well hidden by wild plants. It was almost invisible from the outside. Still, it was surprising that it hadn't been discovered all these millennia... Or maybe it had been discovered. Queen Angela didn't have time to tell her daughter many things, especially since she always tried to protect her from dangers...

People of Etheria avoided Ruins of her people, for they were well guarded, but Queen Angela seemed to know a lot about this ancient civilization. This would explain why she preferred to hide the truth from Glimmer. Remnants of the First Ones never meant anything good. She remembered visiting the vaults during Glimmer's coronation. She remembered that guardian.

They walked through the tunnels in silence, following Lady Cala. The aristocrat was dressed only in a white dress. She had her sword on her belt. Asindesa wore a dress uniform and her mysterious sword created by the First Ones. She wasn't sure if she should take them with her since they didn't have enough protection, but since they thought they were willing to take the risk, she couldn't protest.

They followed Lady Cala for fifteen minutes, the woman seemed to be perfectly oriented in the maze of corridors, not slowing down even for a moment . The underground was incredibly vast, she wasn't sure how long it would take her to find her way back. The thought that there were such extensive ruins built by the First Ones beneath Brightmoon was very disturbing. Finally they reached a large circular room with a crystal column in the center, with dozens of corridors leading from it.

„We are et the right place!” Lady Cala shouted in a triumphant tone.

„So now we wait, right?” she asked the Aristocrat, who nodded in response, smiling mysteriously. Suddenly, a translucent figure appeared in front of them. It was a hologram like Light Hope. It showed a girl her age wearing a summer dress. The sight of her made her feel uneasy.

„Hello my friend, I would like you to meet someone.” Lady Cala said, standing behind the Hologram. There was a strangely predatory laugh on her face.

„Hi! I am Heart Gift , Planetary Archive! Nice to meet you.” she said in a cheerful voice . She looked much more expressive than Light Hope.

„Nice to meet you, Heart Gift. I am Adora, She-Ra of Etheria” she introduced herself, smiling carefully. Heart Gift then laughed loudly, clearly amused by her words.

„It's very funny because what you're saying can't be true because my Mom Mara is She-Ra.” She laughed again. She felt fear so great that her insides flickered.

„Your mom?” she asked with a shaky voice

The hologram nodded and said.

„Yes, Mara and Light Hope are my moms... Isn't that wonderful?” Heart Gift jumped happily. She felt a wave of Sadness and guilt wash over her.

„ I only wish for the truth to be discovered... Can there be a nobler goal for the righteous knight?” she giggled again and then turned to Heart Gift .

„Heart Gift ... Please, my dear friend, can you check Mara's Status? Your Mom? It is very important.” her voice was gentle and sweet.

„Please don't do this… „ she whispered pleadingly. Why did Lady Cala suggest this to her?

„But... Why would I do that anyway? This may be secret data... I'm not allowed to look at it!” Heart Gift said, clearly confused.

„Do not listen to her. Adora is a very wicked person... She doesn't want you to know the truth, because then her evil deeds would be revealed.” said Lady Cala, her voice filled with concern and compassion… But what she said… What she encouraged this unfortunate creature to do… There was pure evil in it… and truth… Can the truth be evil?

„What are you going to do? Speak!” Asindesa di Vir ordered, clenching both hands on the hilt of her sword.

„You'll see... It'll be something beautiful... „ Lady Cala said happily, taking a few steps back. What pleased her about it!

Heart Gift frowned, then exclaimed indignantly.

„Why was she considered a traitor... After all, it was the highest council that decided to entrust her with the Sword of Protection! She was a Hero! There must have been some terrible mistake.” the AI girl looked around scared. She held out her hand and said, feeling tears stream down her cheeks.

„Your mother was a real hero. She saved us all, but it cost her so much. She… „ she hesitated, because how could she break such news? To tell again someone that she is alone again. Her legs gave way under her. Then Lady Cala spoke.

„Your mother was a traitor and she received a well-deserved punishment for her betray... Check her status.” her voice was more firm than before. Heart Gift blinked twice, then a look of horror appeared on her face .

„ What it mean Status: Dead! NO! It is impossible! She couldn't die! She just couldn't! I have to ask Light Hope! Mama Light Hope will know the truth!” The AI shouted. She closed her eyes and bowed her head. What happens now will be even worse. She felt She-Ra's power leaving her.

„I don't understand... I can't contact her... „ Heart Gift's voice was close to panic.

„Take a look at the Light Hope Planetary Interface logs.” Lady Cala suggested Gently. Si blinked twice, then spoke quietly…almost dispassionately.

„Planetary interface Light Hope has been permanently self-erased due to a conflict with Administrator She-Ra Adora.” and she fell silent. The entire room fell silent.

„You are a monster... „ whispered the Lady of Blades, she stared in horror at Lady Cala, who smiled happily, almost inhumanly.

„Yes, but wonderful! one!„ she said and bowed from the waist.

Then Heart Gift looked up and looked straight into the eyes of the one who was responsible for her mother's death, actually killed her.

„I'm sorry, Heart Gift ... I'm so sorry... „ she said, sobbing. Then Heart Gift screamed and the whole of Brightmoon shook .

She was ready to believe it was just a bad dream. The peace and beauty of her native kingdom and, most importantly, the closeness of her beloved wife made the memories fade slightly. She was aware that the Swarm existed, that it roamed the stars somewhere, the Lord Admiral himself had confirmed it. But she couldn't do anything about it. She was just a flower princess, as Mermista and Huntara sometimes called her. She could fight if she had to, like when someone wanted to hurt her loved ones, but she hated it, hated making others suffer. She loved beauty and joy. She loved life…

And now it looked like she would have to fight again, and against an enemy she didn't know. She was only happy that she had her friends and wife by her side. For a moment, she feared that she and Scorpia would have to face this new threat alone. She could almost feel the evil approaching. Mermista would probably say she was imagining something, but she had always been sensitive to such things. She felt when Adora pulled the sword from the stone, and when she broke it, and even when Shadow Weaver died. She had the impression that some malevolent power reached out to Etheria to take something away. Now she sensed a similar power approaching them. When Adora decided to leave with Lady Cala and that rather scary woman with the strange sword, she wanted to protest, to say that they couldn't handle it on their own, but she didn't dare, she didn't want to seem like a coward. Therefore, when Glimmer returned with Catra, she felt an indescribable relief, but then she looked into the eyes of both young women and saw the terror in them, and she shuddered, for there were few things in this world that could terrify Glimmer and Catra so much. For reasons she didn't understand, they decided to take this strange old woman with them, her name was probably Razz or something like that. She wasn't sure if they would be able to defend this woman and fight at the same time, although Madam Razz looked much more alert than usual this time. When Scorpia explained to Glimmer and Catra what Adora had done, the cat girl bristled and said in an angry tone.

„I don't like this woman. There's something suspicious about her... Glimmer, will you take me to her?" she looked at Glimmer, but she shook her head.

„I don't know if I would be able to find it underground. I've never been there... I'd have to at least see a photo of them." Glimmer said in an apologetic tone, but seeing the Grand Marshal's gloomy face, she added. "Don't worry, Adora will handle everything, you are needed elsewhere."

Catra nodded, but without much conviction. Glimmer took her hand and they disappeared together in a flash of light. During their short absence Madam Razz looked at her and said in a hard voice.

„Hey, you control the lifestone, right? I need you!"

She approached the older woman.

„How can I help you?" she asked carefully, and Madam Razz began to draw a strange complex circle on the ground.

„Could you create something similar, only bigger, much bigger, preferably from the hardest wood you can?"

For a moment she wondered if the woman was crazy, and then she understood.

„You want me to create a magic circle! How big?" she asked and Madam Razz said.

„Imagine the biggest circle you can. This one is supposed to be bigger!" the old woman exclaimed. She did as she was told, or at least she tried, because it wasn't easy to get the trees of the Whispering Forest to grow in such a specific way. She also tried not to think about why such a large magic circle was necessary. After a while, Glimmer returned and looked at her work .

„Is this a magic circle!? I hope it's enough.” said the queen in a concerned voice .

„How do you hope it's enough? Is it that big?” she asked in a frightened voice, and when Glimmer simply nodded grimly, she groaned in resignation.

„Don't worry, honey, your plants and my lightning will stop everything.” said Scorpia, hugging her tenderly.

It took maybe a minute of waiting before they heard the approach of a small Anti-Gravity craft. Two people were sitting in it. The passenger was a Vespidas woman from the Singing Jungle, but her long cloak was covered with strange symbols she had never seen before. Her eyes were gray, as if made of metal.... Someone had deprived her of her antennae... poor one, she only recognized her now. She was one of Lady Cala's companions they had met on Carurystal. They didn't come to Brightmoon because they wanted to explore Etheria or something like that. But the driver... He was a huge man, as tall as Scorpia, with blood-crimson hair and ice-blue eyes that seemed to glow with an inner glow that sent shivers down her spine. He was armed with a sword and a dagger. He carried a rifle with a scope on his back.

„Kane... So you're back... „ Razz said suddenly, threateningly looking at the man and tightly gripping her Staff. The newcomer looked at her for a moment and then said with surprise.

„Razakaz! I didn't expect to see you yet... But maybe I should have... But I'm glad we met, because this fight will require all of our strength.” his voice was surprisingly melodious, completely incongruous with someone of his appearance. Glimmer turned to him and said.

„Excuse me, but who are you and what are you going to do here!? We're about to have a tough fight here and we can't guarantee your safety!” the Queen's voice was mixed with fear and irritation. The newcomer bowed courtly to her and said in a polite tone.

„I am Kane Adamson, Archduke of Carurystal. My companion is Rechiza, a Warper from the Pact worlds and a hunter of Dark magic users. I came here to help you.” as he introduced her, the woman bowed low to them, but she seemed grim but also determined.

„The same Carurystal that Lady Cala comes from? You mean you are this woman's suzerain?” she asked, honestly surprised. Kane nodded.

„As far as I know, there is only one Carurystal in the galaxy, and I am the ruler of the entire planet, although I am currently on vacation.” he said gently and smiled slightly. Together with his wife, her eyes widened. Someone so important came here alone and unannounced! Glimmer didn't seem intimidated though, she just said with skepticism in her voice

„If you know how you can help ... but it's something terrible... I doubt you've ever seen something so terrible!”

Kane smiled nonchalantly and said.

„You can't even imagine what I faced, but I didn't come here to brag. What are we dealing with? – he looked at them inquisitively with his cold, blue eyes.

The man swore so badly that her ears turned red, and then he said.

„There is no denying that it will be difficult, but we have a chance... We together with Razakaz will help you... You are a Sorcerer Queen, right? The three of us will try to cast a binding spell and then send him back to the Dark Void.” he said in a matter-of-fact tone, as if he were a scholar talking to his students. Glimmer clenched her hands angrily and said, barely containing her irritation.

„It's great, Mr. Kane, that you have planned everything so well, but I am the Queen here and I am in command!”

The man bowed apologetically and said in a conciliatory tone.

„I ask your majesty's forgiveness, my manners have become a bit rusty in the last... Years. I don't doubt your... competence and bravery, but in this particular field, Mrs. Razakaz and I have much more experience, so I am asking you to accept our help!”

Glimmer looked at him for a moment, then said.

„ I agree to cooperate with you, although mainly because Madam Razz wants to cooperate with you. I hope I don't regret it!”

Kane just smiled in response.

Asindesa di Vir didn't hesitate any longer. As Heart Gift screamed, she charged at Lady Cala , striking a sweeping blow with her sword. She didn't understand what exactly happened here, but she was sure that Adora wouldn't deliberately murder anyone. There had to be more to this story, but she didn't have time to find out the truth now. The time had finally come to end the nefarious existence of the creature called Lady Cala , but the blonde aristocrat dodged her attack with superhuman agility and then giggled.

„I would be happy to fight you, fair knight, but unfortunately I am bound by a certain agreement between your beloved and a being even nobler than me.” she said gracefully, dodging the next attacks of the Hell Knight. Suddenly she performed a neat pirouette and ran away into the maze. For a moment she wanted to run after her and catch her, but she saw that Adora was on her knees, sobbing spasmodically. She had to help the girl before she dealt with Lady Cala. Besides, the Aristocrat seemed to be perfectly oriented in this damned maze and the pursuit would be pointless. She walked up to Adora and offered her her arm and said.

„We have to go. I don't like this place at all . I sense a great threat here, and not only from this fucking bitch.” she said sharply to the girl, but the girl didn't seem to listen to her. She just kept repeating words.

„I killed her. I murdered her. It's my fault.” she seemed to be in a kind of catatonia. The lady of blades cursed and tried to force the girl to her feet, which was not easy at all, because she did not want to cooperate and she weighed too much. She had seen soldiers in a similar condition before, those who had been broken by the hardships of fighting. She knew it would pass after some time, or at least the victim of such a breakdown would sooner or later return to some sort of mental stability, but it would take some peace and quiet, and she doubted she could afford such a luxury. For a moment she wondered if the girl had ever been in a similar state before. Is it you who hurted her like this, my love? Is this one of the sins that haunts you? she thought and felt a twinge of pain as she remembered the woman she loved so much.

After a few moments, Adora fell silent, she just started staring blankly ahead and following where the Lady of Blades led her. That's good, too. They were moving painfully slowly, but with a bit of luck they would finally find a way out of this hundred times cursed Labyrinth, or maybe someone would find them here, she could only hope that they wouldn't be left with nothing but dried corpses. Unless something catches up with them first. Such dungeons have far too often become home to monsters from among the Dark Between The Stars.

The moment she thought about it, she heard a loud crunching noise. She cursed so badly that it would put the devils in hell to shame. At the same moment, Heart Gift materialized in front of them . The AI girl was crying, her hair was mussed, and holographic tears were flowing down her cheeks, which melted into oblivion as soon as they fell from her face.

„I'm alone... because of you I'm ALONE.” she said in a quiet, breaking voice and hid her face in her hands. Adora groaned and cringed herself. The Hell Knight sighed heavily, she was a warrior who did not back down from even the most terrible foe, but she had no idea how she could help the two despaired girls.

„I am Asindesa di Vir and I don't come from here...„ she said to Heart Gift , trying to make her focus on her. – I don't know who Light Hope was, and I haven't heard much about Mara, although what I do know indicates that she was a brave and noble woman. – she had the impression that Lady Cala wasn't lying about this one thing. – Adora is also a brave warrior, a worthy successor to your mother. She wouldn't hurt Light Hope unless she was forced to... She suffers from what happened just like you do.” she hoped that she would calm down the girl at least a little. For a moment, she thought she had succeeded as Heart Gift stopped crying, but then she looked up and looked them straight in the eye.

„Suffering... „ she said slowly and thoughtfully, as if she wanted to get a good taste of the word, understand all its nuances and aspects, and when she felt ready, she continued. “Yes, I already know suffering... as well as grief and sadness... Now it's time for others to feel what I feel now...”

„Heart Gift ... This is not a solution... This way you will not find any relief, at best you will vent your anger on innocent people...„ she was truly scared now. She had no idea what this Si could do, but the increasing shuffling didn't bode well.

„You say innocent... My mothers were innocent, but they were murdered, considered traitors ... erased. Innocence means nothing then. If this Adora considers herself a worthy successor Mara, let him prove it and fight with the ONE WHO PURIFIE!” said SI in a voice so mature and full of bitterness that it hurt her heart, and then a monstrous shape emerged from the darkness behind Heart Gift , and the Hell Knight screamed in terror.

Calamity felt truly happy for the first time since she learned the truth that she had been robbed of her destiny. The sight of the anguish on that lousy thief's face filled her heart with true pure joy. Not only was there justice in it, although she didn't care much about the fate of the dim-witted AI's Mother, the thought that Adora had to look into the eyes of the child of the creature whose death she caused was truly wonderful. And the greatest was yet to come... Because of this, she felt she had to stay as far away from the center of events as possible as Heart Gift unleashed her childish fury on the pathetic usurper. She also knew that it was not wise to be a messenger bringing bad news. There was also that damn Hell Knight with that damned sword of hers that made even her fearful. No… It's better to disappear as quickly as possible into the maze of corridors that lie beneath this ridiculously charming castle.

She wasn't sure if she had done the right thing in luring Adora and Asindesa di Vir into this trap, but she might not get such a wonderful opportunity again. Of course, explaining to everyone what happened to Adora won't be easy. Perhaps it would be wise to simply leave Brightmoon and look for a safe place where she could hide from the wrath of the Princess Of Power friends, and the chance to look into Catra's eyes when she learned of her wife's fate was impossible to pass up. Even if she risked death by doing so. She was sure that apart from Adora, there were beings here who could take her life, just mention Lady Sorrowflame . But is it a measure of humanity to give up concern for one's life in favor of higher values?

The bigger problem, however, was that Nyarlathotep might feel that she had broken Teir agreement with Shadow Weaver twice. Although it will be Heart Gif that will take the lives of both women, not her, her hands will be clean. But will the Creeping Chaos be understanding enough to take such nuances into account? Especially since she didn't do much to further the Great Outer God's plan. What if Shadow Weaver had better luck? If she is now Nyarlathotep's favorite, who will give her to the Dark

While she was immersed in these dark thoughts, she found herself in a large room full of strange drawings on the walls. She immediately recognized the art of the First Ones. It was very interesting, she had never found any decorations or other art in these corridors before ... It was so interesting that she stopped to look at them. The first one was of She-Ra, she grimaced in disgust at what she saw, but then frowned. There was something strange about this image, as if something didn't sit well with her. Only after a moment did she recognize what she was looking at. The proportions of this She-Ra were different. Not exactly typical of a human being. And she had eyes! Four eyes! Most of Etheria's Native Fauna had more eyes! This Other She Ra, surrounded by beings similar to her, was receiving envoys of beings similar to humans, probably the First Ones... But didn't the inhabitants of Etheria claim that the First Ones were the original colonizers of Etheria ? Shadow Weaver once told her that there was always a She-Ra... She smiled because she had just learned an extremely interesting part of The Story of Etheria . Another piece of the puzzle fell into place... She smiled, feeling another wave of joy filling her heart.

Asindesa di Vir uttered another string of curses as she saw the creature approaching them. It was a huge Crab-Spider, as big as a tank. She wasn't sure if it was biological or mechanical, probably a combination of both. She knew little about the creations of the First Ones, and no one knew much except the inhabitants of this planet and perhaps the Anacites . Unfortunately, the only resident of Etheria who was close enough to help her was now in a state of catatonia.

„Adora, I know it's very difficult right now, but I could really use your help. Or She-Ra's help„ she said to the girl, but she just stared blankly ahead. She seemed to be doing a bit better, at least she was standing on her own. However, she did not have time to wait for the girl to return to full mental faculties. She both had to deal with this enemy on her own. Fortunately, she was an excellent warrior, had an excellent but very mysterious sword, and her dress uniform provided protection comparable to light armor. During the wars with the Swarm, she had faced much greater dangers, although not often, and now she had to watch out for Adora, defend her, because she was unable to do it herself. She clenched her jaw tightly and spread her legs in a defensive stance. She waited for the movement of the mechanical guard, who stood there for a moment, shuffling his legs as if trying to find the perfect position to attack. He finally reached out at her with his pincers, but she made a curtain to deflect the attack. To her surprise, the sword widened so that she could better defend herself, and then she counterattacked, and then the blade lengthened and she plunged it into the creature's armored body, cutting it open. She looked at her weapon and, thinking about it, mentally ordered it to become a glaive. She obeyed her command, so she smiled widely at the sight of the elongated blade and attacked the First Ones' creation herself. She carried out attack after attack, dynamically changing the shape of her weapon as needed, at the same time commanding it to become a shield when she needed to defend herself against the crab-spider's blows . She cut off one piece of armor after another, gradually gaining the upper hand. Finally, she revealed the inside of the machine and, transforming the blade into a long lance, pierced it through. The creature stilled, so she drew her weapon and took a few deep breaths and wiped her forehead. She was about to walk over to Adora and tell her that everyone was safe when she suddenly heard the crunching noise again and turned towards the mechanical corpse. She was horrified to see countless swarms of tiny crab-spiders crawling out from under it and heading towards them. She turned her weapon into a warhammer and tried to crush them, but it was like stopping a comet with her hand. She stepped back towards Adora, fully aware that they were about to be torn to shreds.

„Adora, do something, otherwise we will die. If you don't want to do it for me, then do it for Catra! – she shouted at the heroine of Etheria. Adora said quietly.

„For Catra...„ and she blinked several times and looked around the room as if she had only just now seen where she was, stretched her hand out in front of her and called.

„For the Honor of the Grayskull!” And there was a flash of light, and the girl took the form of She”Ra, and then she stuck the blade into the floor and a wave of power spread in all directions, destroying all the crab spiders . Suddenly, such an event occurred that the hell knight trembled.

„I have to find Catra ... She's in danger,,, I have to be with her.” she said, and grabbing the Lady of Blades' hand, she vanished into the light with her.

They say waiting is the worst. Until recently, she believed it... Until she saw a creature that emerged from the darkness of the night. The monster was terrifying just by its presence, but she also sensed its unnaturalness. This creature did not belong to the natural world. She was downright hostile to her, as if she came from a completely different reality. A wave of nausea washed over her, she felt her dinner returning to her mouth... The beast looked towards them, or rather towards Rechiza , and stretched out its trunk towards her. Then Scorpia threw a bolt of lightning at it and began to float in the air, and then the soldiers showered it with a cloud of bullets, and two rockets were fired. The lightning strike shocked the monster, but the bullets had no effect on it. Then she summoned plants that wrapped around the monster and brought it down to earth, and then the woman with the mechanical eyes spoke words in a strange foreign language and a strange swirl of air appeared around the monster. Meanwhile, Glimmer, along with Madam Raz and Kane, were chanting a spell in some strange, unknown language that sounded as unnatural as the monster looked. Was such magic evil? Is it good to use evil magic against evil? Who did they work with if they knew about such dark matters? And since when was Madam Raz called Razakaz? It was all almost unimaginable.

The creature trumpeted loudly and a wave of sound threw her wife away, she screamed in fear, and then the creature jerked and freed itself from the plant bonds and stretched its trunk towards her. She screamed as she saw the toothy circle approaching inexorably, but then Scorpia rose up and threw a large ball lightning bolt at it, sending it flying several meters away.

„Get away your dirty trunk from my wife!” the Scorpion heiress roared, sending more lightning bolts towards the monster. Blood was flowing from her nose and ears. Seeing this, she felt a wave of rage wash over her. No one will hurt her wife! This time she summoned large thorns that wrapped around the monster and squeezed him as tightly as possible. Thorns as long as a human arm pierced the monstrous torso of the monster, from whose body flowed black ichor, the stench of which flooded her so much that even though she was in the heat of battle, she had to empty her stomach. But she didn't loosen her grip on the monster, she couldn't for anything in the world let him break free! Rechiza ran to the monster and cast another spell. The ground collapsed under the attacker, she felt something strange, the stench of death and decay coming as if from very far away, from some distant and very evil place. Another Dark Magic. The monster jerked and then roared again, this time she felt a terrible roar. She let out a strangled scream and her legs gave way, feeling like every bone in her body was going to break. She could no longer keep her grip on the monster and it began to flap its wings, slowly floating in the air. The circle she had helped create began to glow brightly as Glimmer and the other sorcerers shouted words in a foreign, unnatural language. Several magic missless shot out of Rechiza's hand, but they had no major effect on the beast. It rose into the air and roared again, but then a beam of Energy hit it. It was one of the Lord Admiral's ships, relatively small but still larger than Darla, that joined the fight. The hit threw the monster many meters beyond the circle.

„Hey, scabby! Look at me, you disgusting creature!” she waved her arms towards the monster and jumped up and down, at the same time forcing the trees to hit him in the back. Several guards assisted her in trying to lure the monster into the circle. It was going quite well. The attacker turned his hateful gaze towards them and jumped towards them, but everyone scattered, avoiding the monster's attack. The creature was almost in the circle... But it seemed to start to understand what they were planning and didn't want to cross the edge. Scorpia, who was floating in the air, flooded him with a wave of electricity. However, the Beast did not intend to approach them...

And then a gargantuan shadow covered the battlefield. She felt as if death itself had brought it on. She looked up and saw another nightmare. It was a dragon, a real dragon! She had seen several such creatures in old pictures carved in wood and stone, but none of them conveyed even an ounce of the terror that loomed over them. The dragon was gigantic, even bigger than the monster they were now fighting. He radiated such a terrible aura of evil and death that she felt her heart sink. It opened its mouth and flooded the other monster with a wave of black flame. It enveloped not only the monster they were fighting, but also several guardsmen and a large area of the Whispering Wood. The guardsmen's bodies turned to dust, as did the plants and everything that stood in the way of the black fire... she herself miraculously avoided this fate by dodging deeper into the circle... She felt a wave of pain flowing from the Whispering Wood wash over her. She looked up and saw that the creature was still standing, although it was severely weakened and injured.

Then the dragon fell on him after it made a circle. Long, metal claws dug into the dear monster's body, tearing it apart. The impact of the impact pushed both creatures into the center of the circle... Just as Glimmer finished casting the spell.

„Run!„ the queen shouted with fear in her voice. The dragon managed to dodge, but she was too far from the edge of the circle, which now blazed with a bright flame of an indescribable color. She was trapped together with a nightmare.

„We have to break the circle!” Glimmer screamed in despair, but Kane shook his head.

„It's too late, if we break the circle now, everything will be wasted. I'm sorry about your friend, but there's nothing we can do...”

„After her death, the power of life will pass to the next host, chosen by the Nirvanus shard. This is the way of things... Let's continue the spell before the younger brother of Chaugnar Faugn will be free.” said Madam Razz in a hard, cold tone. Glimmer started screaming at Kane , and Scorpia pursed her lips and, wincing in pain, stepped into the circle and hugged her.

„Calm down, my dear, we are in this together, dearest... „ she said and threw a bolt of lightning at the monster. She pulled herself together and formed thorns again and wrapped them around the Beast. For a moment they thought they would win, because they stopped the monster for a moment. But after a while it roared and pulled, tearing out the plants. He looked towards them, and in his dark eye sockets they saw their own doom. He reached out towards them with his trunk towards them…

And then there was a bright light and a shining figure jumped into the circle.

„Adora!” the princesses and the queen shouted. But it wasn't Adora, but some young man in an outfit very similar to the one worn by She-Ra... He drew his sword and screamed at the monster.

„Don't approach them, you... Nasty!” and a beam of light shot out from the sword, piercing the monster. It roared, for the first time in pain instead of anger, and disappeared in a burst of light.

Silence fell over the battlefield…. When she regained vision, the boy had disappeared. Apparently what happened to the monster was that all that remained was a stinking goo. The dragon also disappeared, and in its place stood only Lady Sorrowflame . She was completely naked and very beautiful. Madam Razz looked around, smiling serenely. She looked a bit more like her usual self.

“Oh Angie! Why aren't you in bed yet! Everyone is worried about you!” scolded Glimmer, who looked at her and smiled sadly.

„Today Razz I won't sleep anyway... I had a very bad dream.”

Chapter Notes

See the end of the chapter for notes

Lord Admiral Felix Antares recognized that he had made a grave mistake. It rarely happened to him, he wouldn't have survived this long and become one of the most famous commanders in the galaxy and a hero of the Known Worlds if he had made mistakes. He made one serious mistake in his life, but it influenced his future. Perhaps there was one more, but the final effect exceeded his wildest expectations, so could it be considered a mistake? This time, his mistake could have wiped out all his previous successes. Getting rid of Queen Glimmer was necessary, but he definitely didn't have to do it now, and it certainly could have been done much more subtly. Now he risked death for his daughter-in-law in exchange for the uncertain possibility of paving the way for his daughter to the throne. Now he was going to take her with him to the war against Horde Prime's heirs anyway. Adora was extremely powerful, from what he had learned she was able to fight a warship and win, but he suspected that was only part of what she was capable of. She finally defeated Horde Prime ... In addition, she was dedicated and honorable, which was extremely rare among people so powerful. He always said that honorable people should be protected, because it is much easier to be a pragmatist surrounded by those who are guided by honor rather than by other pragmatists. When he heard Lady Sorrowflame warning him of the evil approaching Brightmoon, he should have warned everyone. Thanks to this, he would gain in his daughter's eyes, and he would also gain Glimmer's trust, which would be useful to him in the future. He became overconfident, which was understandable after so much success. Now he had to cut his losses. He contacted Commodore Hendrix, who was in command of the small fleet that arrived on Etheria, via communicator and ordered a corvette to be sent here to aid Adora in the fight, and then found Lady Sorrowflame. He had previously ordered his personal guard to help evacuate civilians. It will improve his image, and they won't be very useful against what's coming, and he didn't expect an attack from someone else.

Lady Sorrowflame on the outskirts of town. She was just undressing, to the astonishment of several guards.

„You don't have to undress, there are ways to make your clothes change with you.” She was a beautiful woman, extremely attractive, but not entirely to his taste. He valued other things in his partners than appearance... For example, a beating heart.

"Clothes have never come naturally to me," she said with amusement, and he nodded in understanding. “Have you come with new orders?” she asked in Necri , the language of the undead. He knew this language, as well as eight others. However, he supposed that no one on Etheri, least of all in Brightmoon, knew that language.

„Change of plans. Just kill this monster or whatever it is and protect my daughter-in-law. Above all, protect her.” his voice was hard and cold.

„So you don't want the little queen to die anymore?” asked the dragon, showing two long fangs.

„I want to, but not now. For a terrible accident, the time will come... „ he said, smiling at his memories. He rarely smiled, maybe he should do it more often?

Lady Sorrowflame nodded and moved away from everyone and began to transform into her true form. It was always a wonderful sight to him, even though others might find it terrifying. Brightmoon's guardsmen took up arms as they saw the woman's body torn apart and then reassembled into a winged monster straight from the darkest of tales. Resh with him howled, and then the two of them moved towards the castle as the terror of ancient times soared into the Dark Night.

Eti felt a fire ignite in her heart as she kissed Sparklepaw. However, it was a completely different flame than the one that had recently raged inside her. He was not painfully cold and full of bitter anger, but sweetly warm and radiant with joy. She didn't care that others were looking at her, she had no intention of hiding her true self anymore, even if it meant her father’s servants discover her. In Castle Crypto, she finally realized that she could be herself... That she wanted to be herself, with the girl she loved so much. She loves Sparklepaw... She loves Rosie and what's most beautiful, Rosie loved her, she could see it in her light blue eyes. When their lips separated, the whitehaired girl clung to her. Feeling its warmth, she began to purr.

„I love you so much, Sparklepaw... „ she said quietly, although she was fully aware that the girl couldn't hear her. She didn't have to, after all, the purring was eloquent enough. Usually she didn't like purring, it was associated with weakness, and she hated it when others saw her weak and defenseless, saw her as a small kitten, an animal that could be traded... But with Sparklepaw, she could show weakness...

Unfortunately, she knew it couldn't last forever. She heard whispers, more curious than agitated, and saw people pointing at her, quite discreetly, she had to admit. After they discovered that their Grand Marshal had a human father, a Grand Admiral from outside Etheria, the fact that there could be someone other like her didn't really seem strange. From what she had noticed, the people of Brightmoon, unlike her former colleagues, liked Catra. They would probably like her and her friends and girlfriend. Yes! Sparklepaw… Rosie was her girlfriend! She felt another wave of joy flooding inside her.

She couldn't allow herself to continue dancing. She had a job to do, in fact, everyone of them had. She didn't care much about the Rebellion, she didn't even really understand it, but Itel was right. They needed Lonnie and her soldiers to fight her father, or at least protect them from him. She moved away from Rosie and started talking to her in sign language.

The white-haired girl nodded seriously and went outside... She didn't see Itel anywhere, that didn't bode well... Lilka and Alatar were nowhere to be found either... Although they had to blend in with the crowd, and Dragonkin was probably staring at some pretty elf, and Lilka did something very orcish. They will have to act on their own, but what's the problem for them? After all, they were only supposed to steal an extremely valuable Artifact sword created by an extinct, almost extinct, race. Simple task.

It wasn't difficult to sneak through the city filled with celebrating people, no one paid them the slightest attention, although she dressed mask anyway. There weren't that many Fearless Armada soldiers here, and some of those she saw joined in the general celebration. For a moment she thought she saw Dilayla and wanted to call her, because the mercenary was friends with Rosie, but she decided that explaining to her what was happening to them would take too much time. They had to hurry!

But when they reached the museum, she pulled Rosie to the ground because she heard voices coming from inside. She wasn't sure who they could be, but in their situation they had to be extremely careful, because if they raised an alarm, they could have serious problems... She explained everything to Rose, who nodded her head. Then they quietly began to creep towards the large ornate gates. There was almost no one around, Eti assumed that everyone preferred to have fun instead of looking at old stuff. As she approached the entrance, she looked inside and whistled softly. There were beaten and tied guards there, and dark silhouettes stood over them. She recognized the huge one-eyed Veska with a mighty hammer, the elf-drow with a sly smile, the serious-looking Nuar with nanotech claws, and Her, Captain Wingy … the Queen… She still thought she was much nicer than her witch daughter. However, this greatly complicated the situation. Even if she wanted to, the two of them couldn't fight all four pirates, especially dangerous like them. Actually, Rosie could try, she was an incredibly good fighter, but she and Wingy could cause such a ruckus that it would attract the attention of half the town and, most importantly, her father. Besides, she believed that she shouldn't rob thieves, especially nice ones.

And then the alarm sounded. Of course, Rosie didn't notice anything, but the pirates jumped up and started nervously packing the looted goods. After a while, however, Captain Wingy said.

„It's not because of us... in fact, it might help us, it will distract the guards.”

The remaining pirates nodded with satisfaction and continued the robbery, but the former queen was staring at the remains of a sword, similar to the one wielded by the BLONDE. She guess this was the gadget they were looking for for Lonnie? I think so. Although now she would have to forget about him, especially since she was probably the one who caused this commotion... They had to go, but first they would find Lilka, Alatar and Itel. Especially Itel. She felt like she had betrayed her a little, even though she knew it was terribly stupid.

Suddenly she heard someone coming towards them. She turned around and saw a small figure in a very strange suit running towards them. Or towards the museum... before she could warn Rosie, the person bumped into the white-haired girl, who did what one would expect her to do , its mean punched the other with her glowing fist, knocking her to the ground.

„I did it again!” said Rosie, making a distraught face. She leaned over the fallen figure and checked its pulse.. She was alive. She looked human, although very strange, maybe mutated? She wasn't sure. She also smelled different. Not as nasty as Stinka, but still weird, like she was sick or something. She thought for a moment. The other one was running towards the museum... Was she working with Captain Wingy? She hadn't seen her among pirates before, but she didn't look like someone who would be taken to fight, she didn't look like a space raider. But she reminded her of someone completely different. Not literally, but still... She thought about it and took out a notebook from the tails of her coat, they were lucky that she took it with her and started writing something, and then she turned to Rosie.

„We'll tie her up and carry her to the meeting point, and then we'll go get Itel, Lilka and Alatar. I have an idea how we can get the sword without a fight, almost without a fight.

The plan was going well, surprisingly well, and that was what worried her. They had separated so as not to arouse anyone's suspicions, neither of them had been apprehended by anyone, she knew that because they were in constant radio contact... She had disguised herself as a thickly robed traveler of the Scarlet Sands when they had been living for several months, so she had a pretty good idea of how their imitate. At least the pukis wouldn't encounter another of the travelers, but that wasn't going to happen. They didn't visit Brightmoon, Of course she also was here for the first time in her life. Not counting the Battle of Brightmoon, of course, although even then they watched the city from afar because they served in the second line, which was never thrown into combat. The city was crowded due to the holiday, but she had to reluctantly admit that it was very neat. The Fright Zone looked like a combination of a factory and a scrapyard, and the Valley of the Lost was a den of bandits and crooks. And it was nice and somehow charming here... She guesses she should try to make their headquarters look less like barracks and more like something like that? She though everyone would be happier, especially Kyle. They were no longer those cadets who did not know life beyond the war. They have changed and deserved more...

But she'll think about it when it's all over. This mission was extremely important, a belief reinforced when she saw the Lord Admiral's soldier. They looked well trained, no worse than they were, and certainly much better than ordinary Horde soldiers.

They were mainly humans and Saihe , but they also belonged to many other peoples, completely unknown on Etheria . But not always completely unknown. For Example tall reptile people similar to Vaste from Crimson Wastes.

They found themselves at the place where they were supposed to carry out the kidnapping attempt. Scarlet looked pleased, Kyle and Regelio looked concerned. So it's the same as always in recent days. Only the Imp seemed calm, although they had to hide him because he was well known among the former Horde members, of whom there were quite a lot in the city.

„Catra looked quite lovely at the wedding, don't you think?" Kyle asked, smiling dreamily. She snorted as she remembered it. Catra has developed some of the worst princess habits while still maintaining her typical nastiness. The wedding also showed how little the feline girl's loyalty to her friends was worth. Catra had always only cared about her personal happiness and was willing to cooperate with even the biggest bastards if she saw a personal benefit in it. She was just like Shadow Weaver, mother fucking daughter. She will never become like that! He will always work for the good of those she loves! She will sacrifice everything for this goal. She used to consider Adora a traitor, but she was simply the first to see clearly and make the right choice before all, but Catra always wanted nothing but power... Did she already sense, when she overthrew the Dark Sorceress, that the blood of tyrants flowed in her veins? She was sure of one thing, they truly looked like father and daughter.

„Yes, it would be truly wonderful to stand like that, dressed in a beautiful dress, illuminated by the moonlight." said Scarlet with a dreamy face. She frowned and asked with irritation in her voice.

„What are you talking about?"

Then the imp opened his mouth and spoke in Kyle's voice

„You know, Rogelio, it would be nice to marry Lonnie someday... And you too... And even Scarlet, she's quite nice! And very beautiful.”

She felt her face begin to burn, and Kyle and even Scarlet blushed.

„Seriously, Kyle , even in moments like this you fill your head with nonsense! We don't have time for this and why did you even meet Rogelio before we got to the meeting point?!” she scolded her boyfriend, but then Scarlet interjected.

Leave him alone, each of us has the right to dream. And that was very nice Kyle . – She smiled with a strange, slightly painful sadness on her face.

„I'm sorry to interrupt your important matrimonial discussions, but Empress of Eridani has just gone to the garden.” Dr. Moors said over the communicator in an amused voice. She was a bit grateful to him because she didn't like the direction this conversation was taking. They set off, but after a while they were stopped by a pair of lizardmen . They were similar to Rogelio , probably even part of the same people, although they were taller than him, the perks of growing up in the toxic and tight Fright Zone. They waved to Rogelio and began to speak to him in a language they did not know. Her boyfriend's eyes widened as he listened to them. She would have liked to have ignored them, but they were well armed and decked out in modern armor. More guests brought here by Catra's father... Wonderful! After a while, they looked at each other and switched to common conversation.

„And you are one of the local Vesks ! It's terrible that you have to live away from Veskarium ! How do you maintain your honor here without the enlightened guidance of the Empire!” he spoke with a terrible accent, but it seemed to her that there was genuine sympathy in his voice... Rogelio tried to explain something to them, but of course he couldn't. This is also something she should deal with in the future... And then the alarm rang out. The soldiers looked at each other and ran towards its source. When they left them, she cursed and ordered her... friends.

Abigail Delespada, the Great Empress of Eridani Above And Below, was somewhat confused by the Royal Wedding ceremony. Yes, the bride and groom looked quite nice, but no priest led the ceremony and no gods were invoked. It was so strange, after all, they lived on a blessed planet, among wonders worthy of gods. Glimmer had Celestial blood flowing in her veins! And purer than any of the Eridanian aristocrats! She was a true Nephalim! A figure from myth, and she acted like she was her equal... In fact, she treated all her subjects that way... And then there was Adora She-Ra, the living incarnation of Iomdi walking the earth! But they treated gods and faith with such reserve. They even doubted their existence... When she tried to tell them about them. They eyed her suspiciously, and Catra even seemed to suggest that their religion was very similar to what Horde Prime was saying. How could they not understand this! Their faith allowed them to survive the difficult years of occupation and allowed her to come to terms with the death of her entire family, which was murdered before her eyes.

When she remembered the fate that had befallen her family, she lost the will to continue dancing. So she went to the royal garden to stretch her wings. Her guards followed her. They were ordinary Gnomos, because aristocrats did not serve anyone, not even the Empress. Now she towered over her surroundings again. Those in whose veins flowed the blood of heaven were much taller than the children of earth, but even among them it was considered very high. Here, however, her height was not even considered average. Her cousin remained in the main hall, still unable to take her eyes off the queen. She sent her here on purpose, hoping that Glimmer would come to her senses and break off her engagement to this Bow guy. Her cousin was only a bastard, but she was still a much better match than this man... Glimmer could always make him her favorite.

She was staring at the statue of Queen Angela, wishing she had never had the chance to meet a real angel, when the Alarm rang out. She had a hard time controlling her panic, and during the occupation, when she was hiding underground in her homeland, she often had to evacuate when bots and clones were looking for her, leaving her safe shelter to wander for hours through dark tunnels.. But then she decided that she was safe here, because she was protected by the daughter of heaven and the chosen one of Iomdi. What could be the threat to her here?

The guards would take her to her ship, where she would wait until it was safe, or if the threat was too great, fly back to Eridani. She was one of the very few people on her planet who had her own spaceship, and one that wasn't part of the Horde at that! It was an old ship belonging to the imperial family that had managed to hide from the invading forces. It wasn't armed, or even very comfortable, but it was extremely fast and difficult to detect using traditional detection systems. She had four guards. More, in her opinion, could be considered an insult. They were armed with laser pikes and shock picks. They wore white plate armor. It wasn't as good equipment as the ones worn by Catra's father's soldiers, but after all, it was the traditional weapon that had been used by guardsmen for a hundred years. They were running through a side street that was narrow and dark, but like all Brightmoon streets it was clean and safe, or so they thought, because as soon as they were halfway there, a black metal cylinder with lots of tentacles descended on one of her men and grabbed him. knocked down. They were approached from behind by a large man and a lizard, both armed with strange, organic weapons, and the man had a sword at his belt. Her guards turned to face them as she began to cast a spell. The power came to her after Horde Prime was defeated and the Heart of Etheria was destroyed. She regretted that it happened too late for her to save so many of her subjects. She summoned a spirit blade that charged at the attackers, who seemed surprised that she could do magic, which was understandable, even her friends from Etheria had no idea about it. It was a gift from Iomdi, and she wasn't sure she had the right to show off this skill to anyone. She pushed the attackers away with her weapon. They opened fire, although she had the impression that they weren't trying to hit anyone, but she couldn't say the same about her guards. The attackers tried to avoid the fire from laser shots One of the energy beams accidentally hit a large barrel with the inscription "Real moonshine from the technical department", which started burning. At that moment, more enemies attacked them from the other side. They were two women belonging to the Big People, both armed with staffs. One of them began to cast a spell, while the other suddenly disappeared and reappeared next to her, then touched her with the tip of her staff. She suddenly felt strange, as if she had drunk too much alcohol.

„Tell them to lower their weapons!” said the woman. She nodded in agreement, this command sounded completely logical.

„Drop your weapons.” she said, and when her guards hesitated to carry out the order, she added. ”This is order of your empress!”

Reluctantly and with some reluctance, they obeyed her orders, and her new friend's companions tied them up.

„Are you going with us!” her new friend said firmly, and she nodded in agreement. Then the barrel exploded...

The Lord Admiral had just come to the main square to watch his daughter command the army. He was proud of her, she commanded first the Horde army and now the forces of Etheria. She will still have to learn a lot to become his successor. Now he had to wait to see what the future would bring. It was so strange. For the first time in many years, victory did not depend on him, but on someone else. There was something invigorating and character-building in such abandonment to the mercy of fate. Part of him wanted to take over the command. However, he didn't want to take away Catra's glory, maybe he would even submit to her command? Let him see what the soldiers of the Fearless Armada can do.

As he was thinking as he walked to the spot, he saw a short woman with purple hair running towards him. I think it was the inventor princess... I think her name was Entrapta or something like that.

„I would like to talk to you about the equipment you wear... Your eye is amazing! And this gun is fascinating." she said in a high-pitched voice, paying no attention to Resh. He had to stop the Nightmare Hunter from attacking her, and then he smiled at her too and said in a gentle voice.

„This eye is much more advanced than it seems at first glance. It was specially designed to look more traditional. This gun emits a lethal dose of radiation. This weapon is somewhat controversial in the interplanetary community due to effects of its usage, but it is extremely effective in the fight against the most dangerous enemy in the Galaxy, The Swarm." he patiently explained to this woman, because she was potentially very useful. He had already heard something about her achievements, despite the low technological advancement of this planet. If she could be convinced to work for him, and there was a chance, if she was as fond of technology as it seemed, her skills would give him a great advantage. Lady Sorrowflame will probably be a little angry, after all, she always said that if you want your position to be safe, you have to make yourself irreplaceable. But he, in turn, reiterated that you could never afford to rely on just one person was unwise. Besides, her husband could be useful in his future plans. However, he had to be careful not to tell her what else his weapon could be used for.

Then there was an explosion

Itel was determined to accomplish what she set out to do. She had been preparing for this for so many years. To murder. Lord Admiral Felix Antares had to die that night, by the hand of one of those he had betrayed on the day of his greatest victory. She has already taken lives , more than once, and not always from those who did not deserve it. This time, however, it will be different, she will take revenge. No one stopped her along the way. At first it was because everyone was celebrating, but then the alarm rang out and everyone tried to understand what was happening. But she didn't stop. It didn't matter to her if it was an attack or if Lonnie just messed up or Eti did something crazy. Nothing and no one could stop her . She was so close to her goal.

She saw him talking to a strange woman with purple hair that seemed to move on its own, as if it were tentacles or something. She was probably friend of Eti's sister. A huge wolf stood next to Antares . The beast was cybernetically enhanced and resembled a monster straight out of one's worst nightmare. She hesitated for a moment. Killing Antares had seemed so easy before , but now she realized how much of a risk she was taking. Even if she kills him, she might be caught. And then he may end up either in the Etherian prison or in the "care" of the Lord Admiral's subordinates. They would force everything she knows out of her, she had no illusions about that. She began to wonder whether she should back out after all. She was about to take a step back and give up when an explosion rang out. The Lord Admiral and his companions turned towards it, revealing their backs. She realized that the gods were giving her a sign, for the first time in her life, or maybe it was just an incredible twist of fate? Never mind! She couldn't help but take advantage of it. She gritted her teeth, summoned her blade, and charged at the man she hated so much. She jumped and threw a punch... which bounced off the energy shield. The Lord Admiral turned towards her and looked at her with surprise that turned into amusement.

„Who do we have here, a real elf solarian. Something I didn't expect on this planet." he said in a calm voice, as if he was not afraid of her at all. At this time, the woman jumped back in fear, and the wolf began to walk around her to attack her, but the Lord Admiral ordered him to step back, and then he drew his saber and charged at her. He landed blow after blow, his attacks were lightning fast. She felt like he was playing with her... She thought she had no chance against this man, but how could she escape? If she just turned her back on him, she would die... What could she do?

The decision was made for her. Suddenly she felt a terrible pain in her back and her muscles gave out. She fell on her back, unable to move. A woman stood over her. For a moment she thought it was Bina, but she wouldn't serve the Lord Admiral for anything in the world. It had to be someone else... And then she looked at the mask covering half of her face. She already knew who she was dealing with. She shuddered.

„These Horde toys are really cool!" she said, smiling nastily with half of her mouth visible.

„I do not agree. It's extremely painful and terrifying experience. I found this out empirically!" the purple"haired woman walked up to her and looked at her with concern. "Don't worry, you'll be fine."

„That's what we hope." Lady Ka said with a promise of pain in her voice.

It was actually Seahawk's fault. If it weren't for what he did to her, she wouldn't have to look for Frosta now, because Glimmer was afraid for her health. Okay, she was partly to blame too, Seahawk was really good at this stuff, and she actually wanted to be a mom, not many people know it, but she really liked kids... She realized this when she went to Entrapta for a party where the inventor presented her own child, she thought it would be nice to have one of her own. It was lively, charming, moody and had no sense of self-preservation. Just like the Seahawk, only it didn't want to set anything on fire. She decided that with Seahawk they would make their own, preferably two or three of them. She was never happy with being an only child and wanted to have a large family like her mother and grandmother. Even if some of her relatives were quite strange, to put it mildly, such as her great aunt who constantly talked about a Cyclopean city hidden in the depths ocean, R'lyeth or something. Finally, her great-aunt started talking about some shadow haunting her dreams, and after a few days she swam away and was never heard from again. She often wondered what happened to her, after taking the throne she even sent several expeditions to find her relative, but they returned with nothing, so the mystery remained unanswered.

She and Seahawk had worked hard to make the baby, she had to admit it had been quite pleasant bit of work, and they had finally succeeded. Only Glimmer noticed it now, who knows how, and she was going to treat her as if she was indisposed! Today she decided to let her go because it was her wedding, but as soon as she finds out that Glimmer is expecting a child, she will start treating her like a clumsy girl made of glass and sugar. She will drive her crazy with his protectiveness and will not let her live.

Another thing was that she agreed that she had to find Frosta as soon as possible. She felt sorry for the girl. She was undoubtedly the bravest of them all, often against her own good, and her own subjects treated her that way. She couldn't imagine what she would do if something similar happened to her. Luckily, her subjects liked her...relatively...maybe she just didn't bother them. Frosta certainly wanted to prove to everyone that she was still needed. This could cause a lot of confusion or get into some trouble. She could also prove useful in battle, because their powers really complemented each other very well.

She saw Erosta rushing loudly towards her with his strange mount. When the Ice Princess saw her, she called out to her.

„Oh Mermista! It's great that you're here, we need to hurry...„ she didn't finish because there was a huge explosion.

„Oh no! I think I'm late!” Frosta exclaimed with despair in her voice.

Several minutes earlier, Alatar watched with resignation as Lilka and Frosta prepared for the duel. Even if the girl almost admitted it, he would have guessed she was a princess, he was starting to see a pattern, though he couldn't put it into words yet. The problem was that they were both going to want to fight, and he wasn't very good at dealing with conflict situations. This, of course, made one question the sense of his participation in this mission. On the other hand, the sense of their participation in this mission was questionable in itself. And then Bina arrived, along with a strange girl, although he hadn't met a not-strange girl in recent years, but she left while their captain started shouting at them. Bina arrived quickly in time to stop the fight, but also in the perfect moment for Lilka to talk about the task ahead of them. He thanked Sarenrae and Abbadar for sounding the alarm. Perhaps this will distract them from what Lilka was babbling about. However, these were vain hopes.

„Shadow Weaver lives! Lonnie is here! And which Eti are you talking about!” Frosta shouted, very agitated. „ Tell me otherwise!...„ the girl threatened his red”haired friend with her fist in an ice glove.

„About our Eti. You know, your Catra's sister... you really don't know anything, you idiot!” Lilka took a table from a nearby bar and climbed onto it to appear taller than the girl wielding ice.

„Catra's sister! Where would she come from!” Frosta asked, becoming more and more irritated.

„Your parents didn't explain to you where they get their children from? Listen...„ Lilka began in a serious tone that sounded to anyone who didn't know her as if she was mocking them.

„I guess this doesn't apply to Eti anyway.„ Dragonkin said in a tired voice.

„ Excuse me, but what are you talking about, I'm slowly losing my bearings. Swiftwind said in a very confused voice.

„It's a long story, which, from what I know, has recently become even longer... I can only assure you that I did not bring Shadow Weaver here on purpose. I thought she was a decent and learned woman who behaved a bit strange towards Eti, but people usually treat her strangely.” Bina said in a nervous tone, while most of the people around them felt fear, but not panic. He had to admit that the inhabitants of this city knew how to behave in a dangerous situation.

„But how does Shadow Weaver related to Lonnie?” Frosta asked confused.

„Don't ask me, I don't know any Lonnie.” Bin replied with a shrug.

„Because Shadow Weaver now works for Lonnie so that we have a place to live, and Lonnie wants to overthrow the princesses and we must be helping her, because now we have to steal such a sword, and wants to kidnap the empress... And do you want Ashrak?” Lilka jumped down, walked over to their cart and waved the remaining kettle of tea in front of the others. Frosta and Swiftwind looked at her in confusion, but the princess realized what the red-haired girl was talking about first and turned around and then ran forward screaming "No, No, No!" and she ran with this strange, disturbing goat. Swiftwind looked at them and said in an uncertain voice.

„ And you are under arrest... I think so... „ he said in an uncertain tone, but everyone ignored him because they had more important things on their minds.

„And where are Eti, Itel and Rosie... I guess she's still with you?” Bina asked and he then explained.

„Eti Itel and Rosie were supposed to steal the sword with us, but I think we're a little late... I think we should meet at the meeting point, next to the ship.” he explained briefly, although so much had happened during these few days that he would have had to explain to his captain for several hours what had happened during this time.

„And do Itel and Eti know about..„ she didn't have to finish, because everyone knew who they meant. Alatar simply nodded.

“Fucking hell... Okay, I'll go get Eti and Itel, and you go to the ship!” and she ran to look for the rest of her wards „Tea, Mr. Horsee!” Lilka asked Swiftwind, showing him the kettle.

He sighed and said.

„ Okay, please pour me one... „ Aricorn's voice was audible with resignation.

She fel evil coming. The darkness was all too familiar, but had a completely different flavor than what she was used to. She may not have known much about galactic theology, but she did know a lot about the Great Old Ones. She even read the Book of Dead Names and was able to name most of the most powerful rulers of the Dark Between the Stars. Although she couldn't recognize the creature that was approaching, she would have to reach further and deeper, and she definitely wasn't going to do that now, but she was relieved to see that at least it wasn't one of the Great Old Ones, but it was a powerful being nonetheless. She had doubts that even with her power she would be able to face him... Adora had a much better chance of doing so. From several hints Calamity dropped, she understood that just being around She-Ra made her suffer, and that her charge was almost human... Perhaps the power of the Princess of Power could defeat such a being, especially after the Heart of Etheria was destroyed . So she left the solution to this problem to others, at least for now. She had other priorities.

She had a bad feeling earlier, but when the explosion rang out, she felt fear take over her. There were many possible answers to what could have happened, and she didn't like any of them. Eti could have gotten carried away by her emotions, someone could have attacked them, Rosie could have lost control of herself again, or something had gone wrong with Lonnie operation. Each of these possibilities meant a lot of problems... She had to deal with it somehow. Now she definitely wouldn't be able to talk to Mikach and the rest, let the devils and demons torn apart her stupid sisters, now all hope lay in Ireanis and that she would be conscious enough to convince the others. They had practiced this conversation with her many times, but such exercises could not replace focus. and she knew well that the Elven sorceress was easily distracted.

With reluctant admiration, she had to admit that the people of Brightmoon did not panic and remained calm. Even after the explosion rang out, they maintained a certain amount of calm to listen to the guards and soldiers taking them to the shelters. She suspected that a lot of it was due to her and Hordak. The constant threat of attack meant that they had to learn to cope with such extreme situations.

At first, she planned to go to the meeting point, but on the way she turned on the communicator and tried to contact Itel and the rest, but Elf girl suggested limiting contact to the necessary minimum due to the risk of interception of the message by Antares' subordinates. She even suggested turning off instant messengers because they could be used to eavesdrop. However, at some point Itel received a message from her, only it was not Itel, but someone completely different.

„Is that you, Scarface? I must admit that you have earned my respect with the way you treat unruly pets, but unfortunately, I am asking you to inform my dear sister and her adorable kitten that I will have a long talk with painted girl in a while if they don't show up in front of the old fountain, near the cemetery... „ the woman giggled briefly.

She pursed her lips and looked around. The streets were practically deserted, so she didn't have to worry about anyone outside Wrongdak hearing her. She addressed Lady Ka in the coldest but most polite tone she could muster.

„Listen to me, Ka. For almost twenty-five years I have commanded the forces of the Horde, and almost everyone on this planet was scared to fall into my hands, for I am capable of inflicting pain like no other, so if you do something….„ She didn't finish because she was interrupted by another giggle, surprisingly similar to Catra's laugh when she wanted to irritate someone.

„I am feeling as If I heard my father, let him rest in Hell. It's actually quite funny, considering how much both cats love you... Although the younger one loves me too... Did she tell you about how I trimmed her claws... It doesn't matter. I'm waiting for you, although I suggest you hurry up because I'm not patient. And if you see my sister out there, tell her that I can't wait for her to come visit our dad.” and she hung up.

Wrongdak stared at her because she had set her Communicator to speak loudly. The clone's face showed the horror of slowly coming understanding. She herself wasn't sure what she should do. She didn't like Itel, there was no point in hiding it, but if Lady Ka was half as wicked as she seemed, she had to save Itel here. She tried to contact Bina's other kids while heading towards the agreed place, but no one answered her. However, she was contacted by someone she didn't expect at all.

„Listen to me, you ugly bitch! If you did anything to my children, I will get you even in the darkest corners of hell... „ began Bina angrily in a voice as similar and at the same time as different from Lady Ka's, as both women were similar and at the same time different. She didn't expect her here, in fact she didn't think much about what a real guardian and captain of kids did. This meeting was unexpected, but maybe it was a good thing that Bina was in Brightmoon right now, because maybe she needed her.

„Itel fell into the hands of your crazy sister.” interrupted the clone woman. There was silence on the other end until Bina finally spoke quietly and coldly

„You vile hag, you're already dead...”

„It's not my doing.„ She interrupted th captain„I tried to protect your kids as best as I could, but as you can see, it wasn't enough. Now we must try to save her.” she said in a firm, confident voice, and then repeated to her what Lad Ka had told her.

„I see. For now, we can cooperate on this one issue, but know that the scores between us are not settled.” Captain spoke with certainty in her voice.

„Well, the list of people I've hurt is so long that one more person doesn't make any difference to me. For now, let's focus on saving the girl and don't let anger distract us.” she said and they quickly started to make a makeshift plan.

Rosie was very happy, even though she was carrying a random girl on her shoulders. second one that she had accidentally knocked out this week. She wasn't actually that heavy, which should have surprised her, but she slowly found that less and less things about her skills surprised her. She felt needed and was happy that she could help Eti. She wanted to look as good as possible in the eyes of her friend... Or maybe not a friend anymore, but someone more... Were they a couple? She wasn't sure... They kissed, but Kyle claimed that Lonnie and Scarlet slept together, but they didn't call themselves a couple... Was everything always this... Complicated?

Suddenly she felt the ground tremble beneath her feet and she saw a flash of light out of the corner of her eye. Eti jumped up and spoke to her in sign language.

„Something has exploded here... I think there's more going on than we see, I think it's time for us to get out of here."

She nodded and corrected position of the girl, and then they ran towards their ship. Most residents hid in houses and shelters, so the streets were empty. Nothing stood in their way. When they were very close to the outer areas of the city, they came across Alatar and Lilka pulling a cart, and next to them was a clearly confused Aricorn... His name was Swiftwind, she thought. Alatar looked at her and sighed.

„Rosie, do you know that what you are carrying is not... the sword you were supposed to steal?" he said, looking very tired.

„What sword were you talking about? Not about Adora's sword, right? It won't do you any good anyway, because it's broken." said the aricorn in an increasingly confused voice. However, they ignored him

„We couldn't really steal the sword, because Captain Wingy had already done it, but by the way, we caught this one here. We will exchange it for a sword." Eti explained as if explaining something absolutely obvious.

„Eti, she's a Pirate now... Pirates won't give you something they consider valuable in exchange for one of their own."

The cat girl cocked her head to the side and then said.

„ A petite teenager could only be aboard a ship like the Merciless because she resembled someone, someone very important to the Captain, someone she was supposed to replace.” Eti explained, and understanding appeared on Alatar's dragon face.

„Wait, there are pirates in the city? Did they trigger the alarm? Swiftwind asked, but was ignored again. They were getting ready to return to the ship when suddenly someone they weren't expecting spoke to their communicators.

„It's me, Bina.”

At the sound of the Captain's voice, a smile appeared on everyone's face, although in Eti's case it was barely visible. She smiled too, although she couldn't hear Bina's voice, but the next message was much less cheerful.

„Lady Ka captured Itel.”

Pure terror appeared on Eti's beautiful face, but then the feline girl pursed her lips and a cold blue gleam appeared in her eyes.

„ I see. Do you have a plan?” Eti asked, and Bina explained to them what her sister had told them. The cat girl nodded and said.

„ Rosie is coming with me, and Alatar will take that girl to the ship and pick him up. We may have to make an airstrike or make an emergency landing. Lilka, you will take care of Hoofy.”

„I'm not... Anyway, it doesn't matter. Nobody listens to me anyway." Swiftwind said with resignation.

She always felt nauseous when Glimmer teleported her, but she stopped complaining now. You could get used to it.

„Okay, you go and organize the defense and find out what happened to Empress Eridani, and I will try to intercept the attacker.” said the Queen in a worried voice and teleported away. She sighed, she definitely wanted to be with Adora more now, but maybe she would meet her near the castle.

She met Juliette and Netossa in the main square, where the two women were giving orders and seemed close to engaging in a fistfight. Both were very competent commanders, although Netossa was much more capable than Saihe General, who was too lenient towards her subordinates. Now both of their families were threatened by an unknown enemy. She understood them well, she also felt everything boiling inside her when she thought about what could have happened to Adora, although in her case it had to do with Lady Cala being with her. She didn't trust that woman in the slightest, and it wasn't just her scent. There was something unnatural about her, the cheerful condescension she exuded was irritating. But the worst thing was her cold blue eyes. She had the impression that she looked at them all as if they were vermin that she would probably like to crush with her shoe so that their existence would not offend her. She looked at them like… Horde Prime. She knew him better than anyone, perhaps even counting the clones, so she knew well how he saw others, and now she understood that Lady Cala saw them the same way. She felt cold sweat break out on her back.

„Okay, how's it going? Has anyone seen Adora?” she asked.

“Fairly well, we deployed soldiers on the walls and anti-aircraft defenses, it's good that you installed this shield, and especially the guns. Without it, it would be difficult, and no one will be able to break through our anti-aircraft defense.” Netossa said, looking sideways at Juliette, who was against arming the castle with cannons. „Wasn't Adora supposed to be with Glimmer?”

„Yes, but with Lady Cala and the Lady of Blades to the undergrounds of Brightmoon Castle to intercept those who kidnapped Empress Eridani. Exactly, do you know anything about it?” she asked the ruler of Armoria, and she grimaced in irritation.

„According to one of the guards who sent us the message, it was a dark-skinned woman with a scar on her face, so it was definitely Lonnie. What Alarm detected was definitely a diversion.” she said, clenching her fists.

„It wasn't a diversion, I'm sure of that.” she replied in a gloomy tone, remembering the creature she and Glimmer had seen. On the other hand, Lonnie gained new allies who gave her this strange organic Weapon. And then there was Dr. Moors, the memory of whom made her shudder. But this was unbelievable, she remembered the evil emanating from that being and she doubted even Lonnie would be willing to cooperate with something so terrible.

„Post guards on the outer part of the castle and have someone provide me with the most accurate and oldest plans of the castle possible.” she said, and for a few moments they discussed the next course of action. Eventually they talked about everything, almost everything.

„What about my father… Lord Admiral Antares.” she asked, feeling growing anxiety.

„He sent his guard away and went to talk to Lady Sorrowflame. The guards say that this woman, this Lady Sorrowflame, was... Ugh, she turned into something strange, like a dragon or something.” Juliette explained.

Her anxiety increased. First Adora, now her father. They were both in danger, far from any help, with such a terrible danger looming. And there was Shadow Weaver lurking out there somewhere, wasn't this all her doing? The last most terrible harm she could do to her? Did she want to take away the family she had just acquired? She felt like she was in a nightmare, completely powerless, helpless like a child. She couldn't become the same helpless creature she once was again. Melog, feeling a wave of fear wash over her, turned blue and folded her ears, wailing piteously.

„Juliette, Netossa, please take care of everyone, I have to look for them before... Before everything is lost. Tell me , where was the last time you saw my father?” She asked, trying to control the panic that was taking over her.

„The Lord Admiral was last seen heading towards the old Cemetery, but...„ Netossa began, but she didn't finish because she was interrupted.

„Okay, I'm going there. If you meet Adora, tell her where I went.„ she said and ran with Melog, not paying attention to the worried look that both commanders gave her, or to the black bird that flew after her cawing proudly.

It was too easy. Although she didn't expect this woman to be able to do magic, it didn't change much. And so they managed to kidnap her, mainly thanks to the staff she received from Mi-Go. Unlike Catra, the ruler of Eridani turned out to be susceptible to his power. Well, no matter what you say, her former friend had a stronger mind than any princess from outside Etheria, apparently they were much weaker than those from their planet. They did cause an explosion, which worried and saddened Kyle, but in the end, no one was actually hurt, so they did a lot better than they expected. One building, a distillery belonging to former Horde technicians, burned down, but if they want to go there for compensation, he will give it to them, we can afford it. The streets were empty, no one was stopping her because of the impending threat, they just had to get out of here. She felt a bit stupid leaving all these inhabitants without help, but hey, they had their princesses, Adora She-Ra and the rest. It was now up to them to keep them safe. She told Kyle and Rogelio this and they nodded grimly. Scarlet seemed scared, even the imp was glum, only Doctor Moors was happily jumping on the rooftops, he was much more mobile than he had previously said. Everything was going great, so why did she feel so miserable? Suddenly their communicator went off.

„It's me.” she heard Shadow Weaver's voice. “The Lord Admiral captured Itel. I'm going to save her, just like Eti and the rest. You can do whatever you want, but without them the ship probably won't take off. They are keeping her near the old cemetery” said the dark Sorceress and hung up.

„Fuck!” she shouted, stopping. Her friends looked at her. She briefly explained to them what Shadow Weaver had told her. After listening to her, Kyle nodded and said.

„Well, we're going to get her, right?” Rogelio, who was carrying the unconscious Empress, nodded. She looked at them in disbelief.

„You guys must be crazy! We have to get out of here as soon as possible!”

This time they looked at her in surprise.

„But Itel is one of us! We cannot leave it behind. After all, we promised each other that we would take care of each other... This also applies to the new and weak ones.” Kyle explained. He was actually right. They were no longer part of the Horde, where the individual did not count. They wanted to create something more. But the risk…

„I'm going anyway, regardless of what you decide.” Scarlet said in a confident tone.

„Okay, we'll do that. Me, Imp and Scarlet will go rescue Itel, and Kyle, Doctor Moors and Rogelio will carry the Empress to the ship. Let's see what Shadow Weaver comes up with.”

insectoid woman was saying, but she suspected there must be something important hidden there. Since so many beings were watching her. Even though she thought it was all nonsense, she really didn't know much about social matters. Thanks to Ashurk's help, she had time to do what she had been planning for a long time, which was to talk to the Lord Admiral about his technology, but she had barely exchanged a few words with him when this explosion occurred and then this girl attacked. She came from outside Etheri and fought in a way unknown here, although it was of little use against the Lord Admiral, Catra's father was a truly great warrior. However, the girl was knocked down by Lady Ka using an Electric baton. She stiffened for a moment at the sight, as it brought back one of the worst memories of her life, when Catra had banished her to Beast Island. Using this weapon at full power was not only painful, but also deprived of control over one's own body. Lady Ka seemed to enjoy it, she didn't understand how terrible it felt? That's why she preferred to stay with her, she really didn't want to leave them alone, although she couldn't say why... After all, Catra's father was a good man who wouldn't let his captive get hurt, right?

The girl was tied up by some soldiers serving Lady Ka, they did not look as neat as the Lord Admiral's subordinates, although they seemed to be equally dangerous. One of them seemed interesting, it was a short individual similar to those living in Taurus, the planet liberated by Catra's father. She had never met any of them, though she was almost certain he was from outside the Empire, which made him interesting in itself. His name was Graag and he had a cybernetic prosthetic leg and some kind of implant in his skull. At first she wanted to ask him everything, but Bow once told her that she shouldn't start a conversation by asking about such things. She had heard that it would be a good idea to start by talking about more neutral topics. The weather was nice and there was nothing more to say about it... Others also liked talking about pets and children. She didn't have any pets, although she was thinking about building a mechanical dog for her child, but she had a child! She took out her Datapad and started showing Graag photos of her husband and child. Her interlocutor turned strangely pale when he saw Hordak's photo. Well, the people of Etheria hadn't fully forgiven him for the whole Horde thing and all, and those coming from other regions of the Empire weren't very supportive of his relationship with the clones, but Graag had come from outside the Empire, along with the Lord Admiral's men! So why was he reacting so strangely?

The girl was then tied up and placed against a wall, and some sedative drugs were administered. When at one point Lady Ka went aside to talk to someone via the communicator that she had taken from the girl, she loosened her bonds and gave her a mild stimulant because someone else could have overdosed on them. Lady Ka definitely did not have the skills to care for the sick. During this time, she listened to what the Lord Admiral's deputy was saying. She had to admit that she didn't like it very much, although maybe she didn't know the context. She wasn't sure who this ugly girl was, maybe she was Lady Ka's friend. She heard that it was very common among friends to call each other offensive names, for example Catra was very fond of calling Adora an idiot, and was also fond of calling Glimmer Sparkles, it could be similar here... Lady Ka also mentioned her sister and her kitty. This was also puzzling... She remembered that Lady Ka was also a clone, which meant that her sister was also a clone. She was curious about the relationships between other clones. Horde Prime clones didn't always like each other, although it was the same with regular siblings... Then she had a strange thought that she could be talking about Catra's sister, but referring to someone adult and not your partner as pet is inadvisable... Even offensive

„And about this girl... what do you want to do with her? She is a captive, so you should take care of her properly... What do you do with captives?” she asked carefully. She felt like she had raised a very important issue.

„We usually keep them in prison camps, and sometimes we let them go free...„ the woman giggled, her sense of humor required deep analysis „ and what do you, ns of Etheria, do with prisoners of war? – she added after a while.

„ It depends... Glimmer’s Mother locked them in the spare bedroom, or at least that's what she did with Shadow Weaver, and in the Horde... „ she lowered her head again that day, remembering her exile.

„Spare bedroom? I guess your queen's mother missed her husband very much.” She giggled again in that strange, slightly irritating way. She was about to ask what she meant when an alarm was announced from the loudspeakers.

„Hey, Dad... I'll say it very simply, because I don't have time for stupid talk. Either you let her go, or I'll use one of your rock Incinerators and destroy this city.

„Fuck you!” Lady Ka screamed… Her way of speaking was really terrible!

„It's already done.” Eti said to Rosie in sign language. Breaking into the city's news network wasn't hard, even she could do it. They really didn't know anything about computer security here. That was it, now she just had to rely on others for help. The winter flame rekindled in her heart again, but this time it gave her strength. She saw everything clearly now, her thoughts were clearer than ever. She was strong and smart, she could do anything, absolutely anything. Part of her knew it was a sign of stormy days, but it could be useful to her. She wasn't afraid of anything now, and fear was now her worst enemy. If she submits to him, he may fail, and then Itel will die. She couldn't imagine what she would do then. Itel was her best friend, even if not her beloved... Apart from Bina and Mrs. Ka, she knew no one else so long. She was the first one she saw after she lost her arm. She was seriously considering blowing up this city.

He was worried about Lonnie and even Scarlet, but there was nothing he could do about it. The ComradeGeneral may have been his girlfriend, but she was also his commander, and he had to obey her orders, even if he didn't agree with them. Besides, he wasn't able to help her, not as Kyle, and he couldn't become the latter with Lonnie... Suddenly he felt overwhelming fear and looked towards the Horizon. A winged monster of evil and death hovered over the city , following Brightmoon towards the screams and sounds of battle. He sensed a different evil from there, dark and unnatural. His sword pulsated with power. He couldn't help Lonnie, but maybe he could help the others.

„Rogelio... I have to do something myself. Please don't stop me.” he said to his boyfriend. Rogelio nodded hesitantly and moved towards the ship, while he went into a side street, drew his sword and shouted.

She ran tirelessly on all four limbs, never slowing down, and Melog ran right next to her, emanating the colors of all the feelings that burned in her heart. She had to make sure her father was safe. She was also afraid for Adora, she really wanted to be separated, but if she had to choose... Adora was able to cope with the group of kidnappers, but her father was only a human, she knew well how easy it was to hurt and kill an ordinary person. If Shadow Weaver was here, if she allied with that monster to get her father...

Suddenly, out of the corner of her eye, she saw a figure, the shadow of the person she knew so well, who had put so much effort into turning her life into a nightmare. The one who manipulated her and Adora to achieve her goals, caring about their feelings and desires, and now wanted to do the same to her sister. The one she hated with all her heart. But she soon lost sight of her, and she would have believed that she was just imagining it, but she had a feeling... The same strange tingling she had felt all these years in Shadow Weaver's presence. Everyone who lived in the Fright Zone, especially every cadet, developed this skill if they did not want to suffer. Melog turned purple due to the anxiety and anger she felt. She hesitated for a moment, and then she heard a voice coming from the speakers. She was sure it was her sister's voice, she remembered it well. She didn't understand whose release she was talking about, but she was sure that the girl was ready to carry out her threat… She was so much like her after all…. Shadow Weaver definitely knew where her sister was. She made her decision.

She failed again, she was arguing with that stupid girl and didn't notice Lonnie was there. She just wanted to follow Adora's order, but she was too focused on him and now she had to save the situation. She had no idea what Catra's sister the girl was talking about, Catra definitely didn't have a sister! Unless you counted Adora or the other cadets, but then it started to get weird... As soon as she could, she left them in Swiftwind's care, he should deal with them, and she raced off on Shogi to find... Anyone. Fortunately, she encountered Mermista who was walking through the emptying streets. She was about to explain everything when there was an explosion. Mermista jumped.

„If Seahawk and Bow came up with this brilliant idea, Glimmer and I will kill them both.” the Sea Lady growled.

„That Lonnie from the People's Rebellion... Catra and Adora's old friend? Wonderfully!” Mermista exclaimed.

„And there's still a Shadow Weaver around here somewhere... She survived somehow!” she started to tell her friend, who groaned with a tired voice.

„The scary old woman just discovered a way to get even scarier! This wedding just keeps getting more and more amazing! And I thought being late for your wedding was the worst thing that could happen at a wedding!” The woman brushed her dress nervously and said.

„I'll be running next to the shadows, so don't ride that thing too fast!” she looked at Shogi suspiciously, but then she patted her magical friend and he suddenly lengthened and grew to make room for Mermista.

„This is really strange, but since there is room... Just don't rush too fast, because I have to somehow stay on his back. – said the ruler of Salinea, mounting Shogi.

„Shogi will help you. – she said, and long tentacles wrapped around Mermista's legs and then moved forward!

She wasn't sure if Eti's message was a good idea, but it would definitely give Catra something to think about, and maybe she'd start to wonder who her father was. She had no idea how true the scout's threat was, but if she and Catra were so similar... Catra, if she was cornered, wouldn't hesitate to use such a terrible weapon, at least on her bad days, it was enough to remember the story with the portal, and Eti was even more unpredictable... she could only hope that the worst wouldn't happen... Wrongdak ran next to her with a fierce expression on his face. Despite all the differences that existed between them, the clone had grown attached to these kids. He was probably able to outrun her effortlessly, after all, he was in much better shape than either her or his brother. Knowing Hordak, it was easy to forget what his kind was created for... She was breathing heavily. She had never been very physically fit, especially compared to her sisters, and all the decades that had passed since she left her home islands had only worsened her health. Maybe instead of spending all these years drinking and feeling sorry for herself, she took up physical exercises and she wouldn't be coughing up her lungs now... But this is not the time to curse about what you didn't do, she had to cope.

She found herself close to the cemetery, still sensing the battle going on in the distance. She couldn't separate the powers that were fighting there, but she knew they were great powers, and she doubted she could handle any of them, despite all the power she was given. She couldn't let such things distract her anyway, she had to focus on her goal. He was so close, she could already see Lady Ka standing by the roaring fountain surrounded by her subordinates, a Duergar, the Gnol, Shirren and a few thugs of a species that was difficult to determine. The girl was sitting against the wall, tied up and not very conscious. Entrapta was standing next to her, was she involved in the conspiracy? No... She might not have known her very well, but she certainly wasn't someone who would conspire with someone like Mrs. Ka. She unleashed so many shadows, the darkness began to swirl around her, weaving a spell...

„Good night Ka, it's good that we can finally see each other with our own eyes... although in your case it will be more through the eye."

Lady Ka bit her lip in anger. At first, that purple-haired idiot didn't want to leave. The Admiral had given her a glare to forbid any harm to her, so no great accident could happen to her, she was great at inventing terrible accidents, and on top of that, she couldn't break that fucking elf's legs, and then that scarred bitch started threatening her. Who was she to threaten her? A stupid witch from a dirty planet who couldn't even discipline her pet. And then her little kitten started threatening her. Her! The one who owned her and she was her property, which she only sold to her new master. And on top of that, she threatened her with the weapon she had so perfidiously stolen from the Lord Admiral. So when she saw the damn Witch mention her eyes in her fucking ignorance, she giggled and said with gleeful hatred.

„You know what? Fuck of!” and pointed the gun at the girl and shot. The purple-haired idiot screamed.

She had to admit that riding Frosta 's strange creature was extremely comfortable, though not as comfortable as Sea Flash, her undersea mount. The problem was that they didn't know how to find the kidnappers... and anyone else anyone. However, Frosta seemed to have a plan... She seemed to be fighting with herself until she finally spoke to her friend.

„Shogi , do you remember Nightgale ... That woman we saw in the underground...„

Her strange creature barked happily, but she asked.

„Who is Nightgale? I've never heard about her.”

Frosta thought for a moment about what to say…. Until she finally explained.

„I thought she was a friend...„ her voice was full of bitterness...

Aaravos hovered next to her, clearly amused. He irritated her. But she couldn't even answer him in any way, which only enraged her even more.

„What a great example of heroism! The inhabitants of this planet are incredibly brave and stupid at the same time. From the point of view of natural selection, this is truly absurd... or not... After all, sacrificing individuals to save the entire population is one of the basic survival strategies of all species. I heard that this one of them... That She-Ra, has a great tendency to make sacrifices.

This is probably one of the basic elements of her identity. Well, she might have to make some sacrifices to beat what's coming, although that would be a poor trade-off in my opinion. The little brother will eat at most a hundred people, maybe a bit more, but She-Ra is priceless, especially considering our plans.” explained the star Saihe in the tone of a scholar, lying in the air with his hands behind his head. She shot him an angry look that almost caused her to trip. Aaravos smiled at her and added.

„You probably really regret that you can't answer me, but believe me, I regret it very much too. The only person I can communicate with is Claudia. A very talented girl, but with a very simple personality. It's hard to have intelligent conversations with her like it is with you or your mother. Perhaps you will meet someday. You would like her, you would get along well, although unfortunately she has had a boyfriend for some time, but it is not a problem that you could not solve.” he laughed briefly.

„Who are you talking to?” Lonnie looked at her angrily, and unfortunately she couldn't explain what she was doing. In moments like these, she sincerely regretted performing the ritual and contacting the star Saihe . He knew way too much about her and she knew next to nothing about him. This was obviously dangerous.

The city was completely deserted and no one was stopping them. They heard an announcement from Eti. Lonnie called it a bluff, but she wasn't so sure. She had heard about their family... She had also heard about what Catra had done when she was furious, although at that time her consciousness was just waking up and she remembered almost nothing from that period... But she understood the scout. She was willing to do almost anything for Scarlet...

They ran in from the alley and she saw her mother, shrouded in darkness, slowly and majestically walking towards a group of several people who looked like bandits, led by Lady Ka. She saw Itel and Entrapta near the wall , she had no idea where the inventor came from, but it could have ended very badly for her.

Then, out of the corner of her eye, she saw two women and a goat-like creature running towards her in a side street. One of them was Frosta, and the other unknown person was probably Mermista, she know how sea princess look like. This was something she hadn't expected at all, the two elemental princesses were a difficult enemy, but she was truly afraid of Shogot . She didn't know how much Frosta controlled him, but she didn't want to be devoured by the ancient monster. So when she saw that the ruler of Salinea was trying to throw a stream of water at her, she felt the spell on her, hoping that the Sea Princess would attack Shogoth ...

But then she heard a gunshot and Frosta ended up towards them…

Frosta's plan worked, although she still had the feeling that she hadn't told her everything, but they could talk about it later. Now they saw their target, two women, one of whom she had met a few times before, so she knew her name was Lonnie, but she didn't recognize the redhead. Then she will ask her name. She had already learned the value of having a waterskin with her, so she was never defenseless. However, she could now use water from the Brightmoon sewage system; during the war, she discovered that the sewage system in every city was equally dirty. Now, however, it needed a lot of water power… strange sentence…

However, when she summoned water, the red-haired woman noticed her and cast some kind of spell on her. She suddenly felt strange, as if something very bad was coming for her. She remembered how she was chipped , and now it was similar... She was again surrounded by enemies with the faces of friends who wanted to take away her freedom and power over her own body and mind. He won't let this happen again!

She saw movement next to her… one of them approached her from behind. She looked like Frosta, but she wasn't Frosta, not anymore, just someone who had stolen her body and now wanted to do the same to her! She had to defend herself! She wrapped water around the creature and threw it as far as she could. As the creature with Frosta's face was grabbed by her water, it looked towards her with surprise evident on its stolen features. She didn't expect that her trick would be discovered, but she would not allow herself to be enslaved... Never more Itel was already feeling better. The pain in his shoulder was gone, except for the burning sensation in the burned area. The sedatives were wearing off, thanks in part to the help of that strange purple-haired woman, was she Wrongdak's old friend? She also loosened her bonds. She did n't understand why she did it, she had previously treated the Lord Admiral in a friendly manner, apparently she didn't know the truth about this man, like everyone else... She didn't show that she was conscious, that was her only advantage. Now she realized how stupid she had been by attacking Antares . She was no match for him. Now she was in captivity of Lady Ka. At first she wanted to act brave and pretend that she didn't want her friends to save her, but one look at the smiling Lady Ka made her silently pray to all the gods for someone to save her. She was aware that nothing would be done to her just because of the purple-haired woman's presence, otherwise she would have screamed in pain. A little comfort entered her heart when she heard Eti's threat, even though it enraged Lady Ka. However, she was afraid that Eti would ultimately fulfill her threat, bringing death to all of them. Still, despite all the anger hidden in her heart, she didn't want Eti to do this.

Rescue came from an unexpected direction. She saw a shadow moving towards them, a swirling darkness emanating Terror. She once treated Shadow Weaver with contempt, seeing her as nothing more than an old, bitter woman. This didn't change either after they saved Eti thanks to her or after she learned her true identity. However, seeing is believing. Now she finally understood who the Dark Sorcerer was. And she shuddered. Surprisingly, Lady Ka wasn't bothered by the sight of the Mistress of Shadows, although perhaps that shouldn't have surprised her since she knew Etii. When she saw the woman raise the gun, she freed her hands from the restraints and jumped. She felt pain in her arm and Entrapta screamed horribly Frosta was surprised that Mermista was throwing her with her water jets. She saw fear and anger in her friend's eyes. She had no idea what had happened to her, perhaps it was the spell cast by Nightgale. *What had she done to he*r she thought as she rolled along the way. The landing was quite successful, fortunately she was athletic and had often practiced safe falls from the backs of mountain chamois and oxen . As she was getting up she heard a gunshot so she jumped to her feet and looked around. On one side was a scared Entrapta and a woman who worked for Catra's dad, she think her name was Lady Ka, along with a few thug-looking subordinates, and some Saihe girl holding her arm, but on the other side, was Her… She didn't see Shadow Weaver very often, and she never spoke to her. She also never saw her use magic. Now she saw a dark sorceress shrouded in shadows, preparing to cast a spell. She remembered that it was because of Entrapta that she once lost her position... She definitely wanted to put some dark curse on her! Without thinking, she jumped ahead.

She was arrogant again. Once again she was carried away by the feeling of power, of might pulsing through her veins. She thought that such a display would scare Lady Ka, who would leave the captured elf, but the woman showed her with one swipe of her finger how much the power of sorcery meant to her. In a sense, she understood her, she herself would have done the same. After all, the best way to deal with threats is to show others how little they mean to you... Yes. Eti was right. Lady Ka looked so much like her... In fact, she was now looking into a mirror, and it wasn't even crooked, just a little dirty. Yes, she looked at herself and the sight was… cathartic… Few have ever had the chance to look at themselves and understand who they really are… And also to annihilate themselves. Yes! She finally understood! This woman was to Eti what she was to Catra. If she kills her, he may also kill a part of himself that she hated so much . Perhaps then Eti will decide that she is not so bad after all. That she deserved forgiveness... She began to weave a spell... She spent those years on Carurystal not only drinking, she also learned a few things. Lady Ka was too absorbed by Itel to notice her casting the spell... When she finished the incantation, she threw dark power at the woman, but a girl stood in the path of the projectile of dark power. Was it Frosta? She wasn't sure, but she didn't have time to think about it because someone jumped on her back, pressing her to the ground. She felt the touch of sharp claws on her neck.

„If you move, I'll rip your throat out. "Catra said in a voice that echoed with years of true hatred. And then a hail of plasma bolts fell on the battlefield.

Eti jumped onto the roof and lay down on its edge and started aiming. Didn't Lady Ka remember that she was a shooter? Jantar made her this way on her father's orders, to be as murderous as her mother... No... She was supposed to be much more terrible... She was created from a line of two murderers, one worse than the other. But now she was grateful for the skills she had been given… they would now be necessary for her to save Itel. Rosie stood behind her, looking around warily. She was supposed to insure her in case Lady Ka turned out to be smarter than she seemed.

When she saw it through the Scope of the Sniper Rifle, the cold firestorm in her heart erupted into a conflagration. One movement of a finger was enough to destroy the head of the one who tormented her, who had mutilated her hand and who had left so many scars on her soul. It was with the greatest effort of will that she stopped herself from shooting the woman. She had to control herself, otherwise Itel would die...

Then Shadow Weaver came looking like she was a living darkness. She was grateful for this, because she suspected that the dark sorceress was risking a lot by drawing attention to herself with this show of power.

But then Lady Ka shot Itel.

„NO!” she screamed and shot at Lady Ka, but at the same time the woman in the half-mask dodged because Shadow Weaver threw a dark spell at her. The clone woman was covered anyway by a short girl dressed in blue, who fell to the ground, struck by dark magic. She ignored her because she had to find Itel. Fortunately, the Elf was alive and free, although she was wounded in the arm, but she summoned her solarian blade. However, Lady Ka's soldiers started shooting at the fleeing girl. Itel was dodging, but one of the bullets was about to hit her. So she did what was necessary. First, she aimed at the Gnol armed with a laser rifle, aiming straight at his chest. She squeezed the trigger and a ball of burning plasma hit Lady Ka's henchman's chest, burning a smoking hole in it. Then she aimed it at an Elf and fired again, as she had been trained to do, between heartbeats. He was dead, another dead body, another life taken by her. She couldn't think about it. She had to fight and perhaps continue to kill, after all, she was a murderer. Then she took aim at another enemy, but when she aimed at the next one, Shirren in the brown trench coat, he looked at her and started shooting, so she had to jump away and lie on the roof. She heard numerous screams, many of them she recognized, one even seemed to belong to her sister, who was threatening to rip someone's throat out. Lonnie and Scarlet were here too, as well as Wrongdak. However, she heard shouts from the nearby rooftops, but Mrs. ka was not stupid at all. She looked around her. Four soldiers ran towards them. These were Lady Ka's Goons, armed with Horde electric batons and assault shields, and they wanted to take her alive. Let them try! She grabbed her Rifle and shot the first one several times. He dodged most of the shots except the last one, which hit him in the leg. He was yelling, but she didn't think he should complain. He was alive, and that couldn't be said of many of his companions. The two charged at Rosie, but she was already glowing. She hit the first one's shield, shattering it, then punched him in the jaw, cracking it until he spit out his teeth. She knocked the second one off the roof with a roundhouse kick. She was so beautiful when she broke other people's bones. She knocked the last one down with a few blows from the butt of her rifle. They didn't have time to rejoice in their victory, because the drone started shooting at them with an electric cannon and also fired several gas grenades. This was a bigger problem. She had a mask and goggles, but Rosie was unprotected. She pointed at the drone with her metal hand, and an energy bolt was fired from it, knocking the machine down.

„I didn't know I could do that.” she muttered under her breath, but then a rainbow light flashed nearby and Rosie's eyes started to glow and the white”haired girl, her girlfriend, ran in that direction.

„NO!„ Nightgale screamed as she saw Frosta trying to shield Lady Ka from the spell cast by her mother. The girl fell to the ground and appeared to be dead. At this time, Eti started firing from the roof. She killed three soldiers, but missed Lady Ka.

„Cast the Spell!” Lonnie ordered her and he jumped into battle. A short armored warrior stood in front of Lonnie. She had heard of these beings, he was a dwarf or duergar, she didn't fully understand the differences between these beings. The warrior wielded a hammer, with electric sparks flying across its surface. He took the first blow on his armor and laughed loudly.

„Are you guys making fucking staves out of Adamant? But this planet is fucked up.” he said, striking a sweeping blow with his weapon. Lonnie retreated under this violent attack. Meanwhile, she cast another spell on two thugs trying to get at Lonnie from behind. A wave of rainbow light shot out from her fingers, shocking the two attackers, causing them to fall to the ground, deafened and blinded. She started to weave another spell when the strange insectoid in the trench coat started shooting at her. One of his bullets grazed her cheek and she felt terribly cold. She cursed and hid behind the fountain, luckily the spell she was casting didn't require her to see the target. She summoned several balls of magical Energy that flew towards the shooter. However, they did not knock him down, but only wounded him. At this time, Lonnie teleported from behind Duergar, but he quickly turned around trying to avoid the blow. He took the blow on his shoulder and winced painfully as his armor cracked, but he raised his hammer with one hand and struck it mightily against the ground. A powerful wave of electricity spread in all directions and shocked the General's Companion. She tried to weave another spell, but she had to hide from the fire. The duergar rose and swung to strike the blow that would kill Lonnie. Then she saw Wrongdak running towards the dwarf himself, holding something like an Ax or a Pickaxe in his hand.

„Do you remember me...„ the clone said in an angry voice.

The hammer warrior looked at him in surprise, then laughed hoarsely.

„It's you! Eh, I could have crushed your paws, but maybe now it will work... „ and he took a deep swing, but the clone was the first, with a powerful blow he drove the tip of the weapon into the other arm of the Duergar, who screamed in pain and fell to his knees, dropping the weapon from his hand. The dwarf gritted his teeth angrily and glared with pure hatred at the clone, who seemed unfazed.

„I swear that you and your kind will pay me back!” the Duergar shouted , but they didn't pay much attention to him because the fight was still going on. Lonnie got to her feet. She swayed slightly, but blocked Lady Ka's electric baton strike, then with a deft punch she tripped the Lord Admiral's second-in-command, and then Nightgale cast a magic dust spell that blinded most of the enemies, then offered Lady Ka's arm, and both women fled.

And then they saw a flash of rainbow light nearby... and few minutes later the entire city went dark.

She was a murderer, she killed Light Hope. The AI wasn't evil, its compatriots made it that way. Surely there was a way to save her, even if not when the Heart was activated, then before. If she hadn't been so afraid, if she had dared to take a risk... If she had asked the right questions, instead of believing everything she was told... She had freed herself from the Shadow Weaver's clutches, but she had left Catra there , just as she had freed herself from the cursed legacy of her people but sacrificed Light Hope. She couldn't take back what she had done. She had to save Catra now , nothing bad could happen to her. She couldn't fail her like she had failed Light Hope.

She and the Lady of Blades found themselves in someone's garden. Catra was nowhere to be found, apparently the teleportation didn't work as it should. Well, she didn't take much of it. Someday she needs to practice teleporting herself even though the voices were constantly talking to her. The Lady of Blades took a deep breath and then spoke.

„It was... an extraordinary experience. I have to leave you... I'll look for Lady Cala, I have a score to settle with her... You look for your wife. " said the knight and ran towards the castle. Meanwhile, she heard the sounds of fighting. With a trembling heart, she ran in that direction.

Catra in a side street overlooking a fountain across from the cemetery. Her beloved was pressing a woman to the ground. The cat girl's face was furious. At first she didn't understand what was happening, but then she looked at the woman and saw her scared face and then gasped.

"Shadow Weaver," she whispered, and then Catra looked at her, seeing fear, anger, and despair in her eyes.

„I was so afraid she did something to you. To you or to my father... „ she said, her voice breaking. Tears were streaming down her face.

„You should listen.” Shadow Weaver tried to say, but Catra hit her hard on the head, knocking the dark sorceress unconscious.

„Be silent!„ Her wife shouted. Melog stood off to the side, sparkling with many colors. He looked no less confused than his companion. Catra stood up, swaying on her feet. She wanted to ask her what happened. And hold them in their arms and cry, but then someone landed next to them. When she turned around, she was surprised to see Rosie. She smiled, because it meant that Catra's sister might be nearby ... But there was something strange about Rosie. The girl emanated a white glow, her eyes were covered with what looked like white matter. Her fists were clenched… Then all the lights in the city went out and the white-haired girl shone like a lantern in the darkness.

„Rosie?” she asked the girl carefully. Something was very wrong here. Rosie looked at her and jumped towards her. The girl moved with incredible speed. It hit her in the chest with such force that she fell back several meters, and the power inside her wavered. She lost her breath and a voice rang in her head.

„YOU FAILED!!”

She stood up as quickly as she could. The girl hit her with her fist again and again. She blocked each blow with her shield, feeling her power wavering after each powerful blow, like a flame in the wind. She drew more power. Meanwhile, Catra jand Melogumped on Rosie's back, but the white-haired girl threw her against the wall with one wave of her hand.

„Catra!– she shouted and attacked the girl, turning the shield into a stick. Her blows were lightning fast, but Rosie dodged them effortlessly. Then the girl grabbed her stick with one hand and struck her in the chest with the other, knocking her out of her knees.

„YOU BETRAYED!” the voice rang in her heart once again. The girl grabbed her by the throat and lifted her up. She felt something draining her power. She returned to her true form.

„THE SENTENCE IS DEATH!” screamed a voice in her head. The girl tightened her hand around her neck, but then another figure jumped down from the nearby wall. She looked so much like Catra... She put her hand on the girl's shoulder and said.

„It's okay, Rosie... Nothing happened. Everything's all right.” Eti said in a very tired voice and light flowed out of Rosie. The girl blinked several times and when she looked at her, horror appeared in her eyes. She released her, and then she and Eti ran into the darkness. She felt exhausted, but steeled herself and walked over to Catra, who was getting up.

„Everything hurts, I think she broke some bone, but I don't know what.” her wife laughed, and then grimaced painfully. Then they heard footsteps and Lady Ka entered their Alley.

„I see that the brides are whole and healthy... It's worse with this short one... How she was named? Frosta?” she said and put the Horde's electric baton at Shadow Weaver, who was trying to get up...

Calamity was very pleased with herself. Not only did she punish the wicked thief and play a prank on Shadow Weaver, she also gained a lot of valuable information. And all this with almost no planning. Apparently, despite what Shadow Weaver said, improvisation is the key to success. Now she just had to think about how the acquired knowledge could benefit her cause. One thing was certain, he had to contact that Elven Warlock that was floating near Nightgale ... The drawings referred to someone like him, a wizard with so much power that Shadow Weaver was compared him like a clumsy schoolgirl. This could be a fascinating discovery... One that will help her regain the destiny she was so treacherously deprived of. And then the whole universe will tremble with horror and delight.

When she got outside, through one of the hidden passages at the bottom of the cliff where the castle was located, she saw that the city was shrouded in darkness. But has this creature breached the princesses' defense? That would have made this day even more wonderful, but unfortunately when she got to the city, she saw no signs of mass murder anywhere... Life had always brought her disappointments... She knew she should take the opportunity to run away, but she couldn't resist the temptation to tell the feline creature that she is a widow. This will be the most wonderful moment of her life.

Suddenly, a figure jumped out of the alley and punched her in the face with a metal fist as hard as she could. She fell to the ground and looked up. She saw Dilayla and Arkan”tar standing over her , as well as Star Siblings.

„Surprised to see me alive?” Dilayla asked, smiling and pointing her rifle at her.

Yes, life always brought her disappointments.

Asindesa di Vir ran as fast as she could, but she was still late. As she stood outside the castle walls, she saw Dilayla, Arkan-tar and others leading Lady Cala at gunpoint. The aristocrat seemed amused, but as soon as she saw her, she suddenly become sad, obviously seeing her alive not what she expected. The Queen was already standing at the gate, together with Scorpia and Perfuma. After a moment, Adora and Catra joined them. The cat girl was leaning on the shoulder of her wife, who had already returned to her natural form.

„Nothing serious although she tried to make it seem otherwise.” the princess of power looked at Lady Cala, who had just been brought before the queen.

Lady Cala lowered her head and said, her voice breaking.

„ I didn't want to... she forced me to do it... Shadow Weaver... She used her magic and...

Catra interrupted her.

„We have her here too...„ she said in a sharp tone. The Hell Knight felt her heart beat faster. She was here, the woman she loved so much, and who had betrayed her… Now Lady Cala was going to put all the blame for her misdeeds on her. However, she saw the joy in her eyes as she crippled Adora's soul. She won't let this wicked girl get away with her punishment. Her back was turned to her, no one was paying the slightest attention to the Lady of Blades... She grabbed her sword and with a shout she jumped forward, pierced the blade through Lady Cala's back, spun it around, then pulled it out and stabbed it in front of her. She knelt down and closed her eyes, waiting for what Fate would bring... And then laughter resounded...

Glimmer watched with a mixture of surprise and horror as Lady Cala, whose chest had been pierced by a Hellknight's blade before her own eyes, began to laugh. Her blood, which had recently stained the white stones, turned purple.

„Apparently this blade was not created to hurt people like me... Unfortunately, in this way I was forced to reveal my true identity. But maybe it's better this way? It's time to end this pathetic masquerade.„ Cala said when she stopped laughing. Her voice was as gentle as ever, although there was a hint of mockery in it. The girl stood up and then everyone let out an exclamation of astonishment as the previously fatal wound healed before their eyes. Lady Cala soon looked completely healthy, only stains on her dress and a tear where the sword had pierced suggested that the woman had been injured.

„Please, noble queen, let me finally introduce myself to you by my real name. I AM CALAMITY!” she said and bowed humbly. Then she started to transform. She became taller, bone claws emerging from the fingers of her right hand and a bone blade emerging from her left forearm. When she stood up, she found that her facial features had become sharper, and one eye had turned completely purple, as if the pupil had changed color and spread over the entire eye.

„I'm beautiful, aren't I?” she said and laughed loudly.

„Who... What are you?” Juliette asked, sword in hand. Her daughter stood next to her with her head down. What she saw must have been a shock for the girl. After all, Klementine had feelings for Lady Cala.

„I AM THE CHILD OF THE ONE WHO IS ALWAYS OR EVERYWHERE. THE ONE WHO KNOWS AND SEES EVERYTHING. I AM SPAWN OF GREAT OUTER GOD YOG-SOTOTH!” she said in a strangely resonant voice that rang in her ears. She took a step forward with each word. She saw that the woman was approaching Spinnerella with her children, Scorpia with Perfuma , and the Bowa brothers with their families.

”I AM PERFECTION INCARNATED!” she exclaimed, and then long tentacles with long spikes at the ends sprouted from her back. She slammed them towards Spinnerella's children, but she was faster. She teleported near Lady Cala and grabbed her forearm, and then they both moved again. She took the woman to the basement of Brightmoon , to a cell that had been built several years ago on her orders, in case of just such situations. It was completely identical to the one Horde Prime held her in. She wasn't proud of this project, but now it was extremely useful. Lady Cali's tentacles hit the wall and she teleported behind the force field. Lady Cala looked around, and when she realized where she was, she roared and began punching the force field with all her might, but she was unable to break it. Horde Prime took great care to ensure that his prisoners could not escape. She knew something about it...

Itel ran, stumbling. Her wound hurt with every step she took, but she knew she couldn't stop. She had to run from the enemy again without looking back. Although this time she wasn't alone. Running next to her were Scarlet and Lonnie, and Wrongdak and that woman with the prehensile purple hair. Comrade General was also tripping, that discharge must have seriously injured her. Wrongdak helped her, holding her arm. Luckily, he was so strong that she couldn't lean on it. The two of them led the others, because they were the only ones who could see in the night illuminated by the stars and moons. Soon she saw one figure running down from a nearby building, followed by another. She breathed a sigh of relief, Rosie and Eti were okay, although the cat girl looked glum and the deaf former intern seemed scared. But the most important thing was that they were together.

Soon they heard the sound of an approaching spaceship. For a moment she wondered if she should hide, lest it belong to the Lord Admiral, but soon she recognized the familiar silhouette of the Deadly Sword of Burning Fury... They were almost safe. The ship hovered above them and the side doors opened. Bina, Lilka and Rogelio stood there. A rope ladder was lowered.

„Get in, quickly! This blackout won't last long, and we need to get as close as possible before light returns.” Bina exclaimed. Everyone obeyed her, though Lonnie watched their captain warily. They entered one by one, but Wrongdak and his friend had to help her. Once she got to the top, ilka looked around and asked.

„Catra got her.„ Eti said and looked through the side Door... „ I guess we should save her.” she added. Her voice was tired, even exhausted , but she slowly started to get up. She and Rosie did the same.

„Don't you dare! You won't risk it for this Hag.” Bina growled.

„She tried to save me... That's why she was captured.” she said, looking into her captain's eyes, but she only snorted.

„She definitely had some interest doing that, and as far as I know this planet, she's not in any danger... „ she added, smiling wryly.

„I'm going rescue her.” said Scarlet. “I can be Nighgale for a while. She shouldn't arouse suspicion... „ the sorceress looked at Lonnie, and she nodded hesitantly. Bina shrugged.

„You are neither my ward nor my friend, you can do whatever you want.”

Scarlet walked up to the Door and the ship slowed down and the scarlet haired woman climbed down the ladder. Then Bina looked at her and said sharply when she saw her wound.

„ March to Infirmary, Wrongdak, do you have medical training? – she asked, looking at the clone, who slowly nodded.

„Horde Prime taught us how to provide first aid and perform simple procedures. – he said carefully.

The purple-haired woman who had been looking around the ship in fascination suddenly called out.

„Can I go with Wrongdak? I am very curious about medical technologies!„ You could hear pure delight in her voice.

„„I guess yeah, but who are you anyway?” Bina asked.

“I am Entrapta... Your ship is very beautiful. I'd like to examine it. I thought I'd do this with the Lord Admiral's ships, but now that I'm here... Does your ship have its own AI? Maybe he could be friends with Darla. This is my ship. Darla is a real lady, educated and with impeccable manners.” asked the purple-haired woman with hope in her voice.

„Unfortunately, I have to disappoint you. I'm just a biological organism cybernetically connected to this ship.„ said Mr. Ilemshaw, pointing one of his cameras towards Entrapta. “However, I do not rule out the possibility of making friends with this Darla, because I have no prejudices against Artificial Intelligence…”

„Oh, I must admit that you speak very nicely.” Entrapta replied.

„For now, stop matchmaking spaceships, and instead tell me how you came to be on my ship, and if you say you just got on it, my veins will burst.” Said vina „Shouldn't you get a biological scan done? Internal bleeding can be dangerous... Especially in the central nervous system.” the purple-haired woman said with concern in her voice.

„I feel like I'm talking to another Eti, only less grumpy. Is she with you?” Bina asked, rubbing her temples, looking at Lonnie and her companions, but the General shook her head.

„She came with me... She had talked to the Lord Admiral earlier, but while Lady Ka was watching over me, she loosened my bonds and gave me a stimulant. Without it, I'd be dead.” Itel interjected Bina looked at Entrapta a little more favorably, then looked around her ship. Her eyes fell on two tied people lying against the wall. One of them was a short human woman or a very tall Gnome, she wasn't entirely sure what she was, with wings growing out of her back. She stared blankly ahead with a blank smile on her face. The second was a short and petite girl in a suit that looked bionic. Bina's eyes widened in surprise when she saw her.

„Tirin? And where did you get it here? – she asked, not hiding her surprise.

„Normally. When we wanted to rob the museum, this girl ran into Rosie, so she knocked her out and we took her to the ship. – Eti replied, looking at Ka4pitan with an expression as if she had asked a very stupid question.

„And why did you drag her here to our ship? And what did you want to steal in this museum, because don't tell me that you wanted to see paintings and clay pots!„ Bina crossed her arms on her chest. Eti looked at her resentfully.

„You could think better of us. Perhaps our time here rekindled our love for Etherian folk art?" the cat-girl said, as if she was seriously offended.

„Eti…„ their captain said with a threat in her voice.

„Okay, we were supposed to steal Adora's old and broken sword for Lonnie, but we couldn't do it. Because Captain Wingy was there with a few other pirates, so we grabbed Tirin because she happened to be on our way..."

This time it was Lonnie who stood up and started shouting at them.

„Why the hell did you kidnap a random girl instead of the sword I told you to steal?"

„Because there were pirates there, and besides, I'm not going to rob the rightful ruler of Etheria. We will exchange the girl for a sword, because she is her replacement for her mean daughter, and everyone will be happy.„ said Eti.

Lonnie wanted to say something, but Bina wouldn't let her.

„First of all, miss, don't you dare yell at my kids on our ship, and second of all, what the hell is that other woman doing on this ship?" Bina was blushing with anger.

„This is Empress Eridani. We kidnapped her to force Glimmer to negotiate and listen to our demands." said Comrade General, looking defiantly at Bina, who, however, didn't care much about it.

„You've probably gone completely crazy. You have just put yourself, most importantly, us, in conflict with a foreign country that will now be your sworn enemy. Congratulations on your diplomatic skills... Have you brought anyone else to our ship?" the Captain said in a sharp tone, until even Comrade General lost her composure in the confrontation with the burgundy-haired woman, and then Swifwind came out of the living compartment and said in an embarrassed voice.

„I think I messed up a bit, but in my defense I don't know how to use humanoid toilets."

„So we also have a talking horse?" Bina said in disbelief.

„It's not a horse, it's Mr. Swiftwind, he really doesn't like being called a horse... I'm coming, Mr. Swiftwind!" Lilka called and ran after Aricorn. Then Itel started laughing. She didn't know why and she didn't have the slightest control over it. She began to feel dizzy and fell to her knees. Before she lost consciousness, she heard.

„If you amputate her hand, will I be able to examine her prosthetic arm?"

'That was a disaster,' Glimmer thought, rubbing her temples. She was in the Council Room, it was already light outside the windows. She felt exhausted, more than ever before. She was active more than 24 hours a day, and sometimes even longer, especially at the end of the war, when they were preparing for the final battle against Horde Prime. It was different now. It was supposed to be the most beautiful day of her life. And in the lives of Bow, Adora and Catra. This was supposed to be the day when all of Etheria would celebrate the victory they had worked so hard to win. Everyone was supposed to rejoice and expect better days to come... But it turned out that darkness had come.

She never imagined that creatures like the monster they were fighting could exist. She had heard Catra's warnings about what she had seen in the depths of Mystacor and the ruins of that lost city, and her father's musings about the being summoned by the Shadow Weaver, but she didn't realize what they truly meant. This creature had no right to exist in this world. They were evil but not like Horde Prime. It was a predatory, primal evil. This monster wanted to devour them, and not just their bodies, but something more, their essence. They almost lost Scorpia and Perfuma. And there was nothing she could do to save them. She was absolutely defenseless against such a creature. If it hadn't been for this strange person coming to their rescue... They had no idea who he was or where he came from, but they were all grateful to him... If it weren't for him, they would have lost two princesses. There would have been two more funerals... Ten of them were waiting. Two guardsmen died from this monster's attack, and eight from Lady Sorrowflame's flame. Their bodies were unrecognizable, and she had no idea what she would say to their families. That they were unlucky enough to be in the path of a monster from myths and fairy tales? It was another monster, another unnatural monstrosity coming to their planet, only this time it served their so-called ally. She had no idea how they would resolve this situation, but she wouldn't let it go. Then there was this strange and terrifying man, a monster of his own kind. He also helped them, although it was not out of good will. He had some dark plans, didn't want to talk to her and left the city right after the fight. Finally, there was the matter of Madam Razz. The woman was once again the nice old lady everyone knew and liked. But for a moment, she was someone scary and ruthless... Someone similar to the Shadow Weaver from Adora and Catra's stories.

But the worst was behind them. Meanwhile, Adora... She hasn't told anyone yet about what happened in the basement under the castle. The knight who accompanied her also did not want to say anything, claiming that it was The Princess Of Power's matter and only she could tell them everything if she so wished. They could only be sure that something terrible had happened there. Something that shocked her deeply. She hadn't seen Adora like this in Years. Since… since they lost her mother… She hadn't paid enough attention back then. She was too caught up in fighting the war and her own grief… And furious at the world that had taken her mother away from them. Now she could clearly see that her friend was suffering. She blamed herself for something again, she thought it had something to do with Light Hope. Until now, they hadn't thought much about the treacherous AI, although Adora was still afraid of her and Catra hated her for what it had done to it by digging into its worst memories... Had it discovered some secret related to the ancient AI?

The fact that Lady Cala turned out to be a traitor didn't even surprise anyone. All along they had the impression that this woman was hiding some secret, but... Not like this one. She was another monster, but hidden behind a beautiful face. They could suspect her of various things, even of being associated with Shadow Weaver... But not that she would turn out to be... To be what? She had no idea that someone could hide such monstrosity... She saw with her own eyes that her heart was pierced by a blade, but the wound closed almost immediately. It seemed as if she didn't even feel the thrust, as if it was nothing important. She-Ra could heal wounds, both her own and those of others, especially now, after the destruction of the Heart and the release of magic, but this was something completely different. As if the laws of science and magic did not apply to this being, as if it was above them. The creature that hid behind that beautiful face was not a monstrosity in appearance, after all, both Etheria and the galaxy were inhabited by various peoples, and not all of them were pretty by her standards of beauty... In fact, even in her monstrous form, Lady Cala was in strangely attractive. No, evil was hidden in her heart. She wanted to kill the Spinerella children and for no reason at all, she never even talked to them... It looked like she wanted to hurt them just for her own fun. If only she had been just a little slower… Now that monstrosity screamed in its prison beneath her feet. She ordered the guards guarding her to be extremely careful... She knew that no prison would prevent someone who was determined... and had outside help from escaping.

However, they won, although not exactly as they would have liked. Meanwhile, Frosta... The girl was lying unconscious in the hospital. The spell cast by Shadow Weaver almost killed her... He would have done it if not for the girl's vitality and She-Ra's magic, which, however, was not able to completely heal her. Frosta looked half dead, cold and barely breathing. Her strange creature was in her room, wrapping itself around her as if it were a blanket. The medics and healers initially wanted to take him out of her room, but Netossa convinced them that Shogi's presence could help the Ice Princess recover in a very literal way. As proof, she showed her healed arm, which she had broken during a trip with Catra to this ancient city... However, the girl's condition was not improving and they did not know how to help her... They also did not know why Shadow Weaver did this to her. Of all the princesses, she had the least contact with the Dark Sorcerer. Was it Lonnie who convinced her to do this, to please her allies by depriving the People's Republic of Snow of the only threat to their rule? She had no idea. Mermista, who was present, didn't remember much. Scarlet, Lonnie's right hand and sorceress, cast a spell on her and the ruler of Salinea felt as if everything around her was hostile. She admitted that she was the one who threw Frosta into the line of fire because she thought it was an enemy hiding in the form of an ice princess. Perhaps she wasn't the target of Shadow Weaver's attack... Entrapta was there too... The dark sorcerer had a reason to resent her. After all, she was the one who deprived her of power in the Horde, or maybe she helped Catra do it. Hordak's former Right Hand was vengeful and unforgiving... She would not hesitate to kill Entrapta just to repay her for past grudges. They didn't know anything for sure yet. Shadow Weaver sat in her old cell, although Catra suggested that they lock her in the same cell as Lady Cala. Maybe she will do that in the future, but for now they need to question her. She was afraid of this. This woman was a master manipulator and she didn't know what other tricks she might have up her sleeve. The only thing that was certain was that he had to keep an eye on Catra, because the cat girl might have another breakdown.

They may have captured Shadow Weaver, but Lonnie captured Empress Eridani. This was a terrible blow to the alliance. Abigail was its most powerful and loyal member. Her loss put the entire project into question. How can he guarantee the safety of his alliance members when he can't even protect one of them at his own wedding, on his own planet? He must free her as soon as possible, otherwise everything they have achieved in all these years since the defeat of Horde Prime. Only it won't be that simple. He doesn't want to wage another war, this time with the People's Rebellion, especially since they were threatened not only by Horde Prime's heirs, but by new, completely unknown forces, as they had just found out. The universe turned out to be much larger than they had ever imagined, and much darker than anyone could have imagined.

A fire also broke out in the city when a distillery built by former Horde technicians was set on fire by the Empress's guards during a fight with Lonnie. The fire did not spread because the fire brigade was on high alert even before the Alarm was announced. During such events, it often happened that someone misfired a firework. Someone also broke into the power plant and terrorized the employees. Everyone said the attacker looked just like Lady. Ka. Was it someone like Double Trouble, a shapeshifting spy and trickster? Or maybe it was someone else. She remembered that Catra had claimed that the Lord Admiral's left hand was a clone of the same scientist who had created it. Could it be one of Lady Ka's sisters? Did she work for Lonnie or Shadow Weaver?

And to make matters worse, they lost Entrapta and Swiftwind somewhere. Normally she wouldn't care much about this. The inventor princess was easily distracted around new technology, Swiftwind went with Frosta, but before that he was organizing the celebration, so perhaps he was just lost somewhere because he had to take care of some important organizational matters. However, there were other possibilities. They could have been kidnapped or even worse. No, they couldn't entertain such thoughts for now... They had to hold on to the hope that everything was fine. With all these problems, the fact that the Victory Museum had been robbed seemed irrelevant ... except for the fact that its guards swore that the pirate captain was a tall winged woman in a mask. They didn't say it directly, but they certainly suspected it was their dead queen, or maybe they didn't want to acknowledge it? After all, even she found it hard to believe ... that her mother was alive... She stole many less valuable artifacts stolen by Horde Prime and Adora's old sword. She remembered demanding that Adora give it back to her, but it made no sense. After all, she never wanted this Weapon… In fact, she never saw her Mom ever have a weapon in her hand…. It must have had something to do with her final moments on the other side of the portal... She was almost glad that her father had only sent her a short note telling her that she had to leave Brightmoon on urgent matters. She was almost not angry with him, after all, he was probably on a case related to recent events. It's a pity that he also took Auntie Casta with him, but I guess her skills would be more useful to him... after all, her aunt didn't know anything about dark magic, interplanetary politics or suppressing Rebellions, although to be honest, her knowledge in these areas was also limited. She just hoped that nothing would happen to them.

„Well, I guess it's nothing from the wedding night. she said to her husband. Bow smiled at her reassuringly and said.

„I'll make it up to you, I promise.” he kissed her on the forehead. She smiled at him, but then Netossa snorted.

„Half of wedding nights are like this. Spinny and I were so exhausted that we simply went to bed and guess what? We don't regret it at all” she said, and her wife added

„Actually, I kind of miss it now. I don't remember the last time I slept soundly through the whole night. And it won't get better. – she smiled, rubbing her belly, and everyone laughed, although she felt a strange feeling of anxiety at the thought that this would soon happen to her, just like to Mermista... The ruler of Salinea sat gloomily, staring ahead. She blamed herself for what happened to Frosta, completely unnecessarily. It was the sorceress and Shadow Weaver's fault, she used Magic inappropriately. Sea Hawk stood next to her, his hand on his wife's shoulder. The captain's happy and optimistic mood disappeared. He was more concerned about his wife's emotional state than anyone present. Despite his risk-taking nature and love of adventure, he was very caring. He did well during the evaluation, along with Bow. In fact, they did too well, the deserted city making it easier for Lonnie and the others to escape.

Apart from them, in the Council Room there was Catra, who was nervously pacing around the room. She wagged her tail strongly and Melog changed colors, although they were not as expressive as before, which clearly showed the emotions boiling in his companion's heart. Catra would probably like to go somewhere else. But it was hard to say where. Whether with Shadow Weaver or Lady Cala. Both women had hurt her wife, though in different ways... And with Shadow Weaver, she had old scores that needed settling. Adora looked thoughtfully out the window, thinking about what happened in the underground. She was worried about her. They will have to talk about it after the meeting, because leaving such matters alone could end very badly. General Juliette was still reeling from the shock of what her daughter's companion turned out to be, but apart from that, she seemed to be in good condition. Ambassadors Tuo and John Kilthem were present and looked very depressed. A woman from Eridani because of the kidnapping of her cousin, and a warrior from Bellum was disappointed that he did not take part in the fight because he drank too much, the inhabitants of his planet were famous for having a very weak head. Minister Shu had been dozing off on the table, she had allowed herself to relax for the first time in years during Victory Day, and now she was exhausted. Scorpia and Perfuma were absent because they wanted to recover from what happened. She wasn't surprised, after all, they were the ones who almost died during the night's events. She sighed and ordered person she needed to talk to be brought in

It was Lord Admiral Antares. Seeing her father enter, Catra turned to him, smiling broadly, and the Lord Admiral nodded at her in response, smiling as well, though much more reservedly. They didn't know what happened to him during the night's events, except that nothing happened to him. Lady Ka was with him, smiling as always, as if she was planning to hurt someone. However, the person she called Catra's father for was not there.

„Where is Lady Sorrowflame?„ She asked sharply.

„Unfortunately, she couldn't come here.” replied the Lord Admiral in an unimpressed tone.

„I called her about what she did last night!” she shouted, angry that her orders were being ignored. The Lord Admiral sighed and replied in the same dispassionate voice as before.

„I didn't talk about it earlier, because in some regions of the galaxy, beings like her are met with prejudice, but I think it's worth clarifying some issues so that there are no misunderstandings between us. As you probably already know, Lady Sorrowflame is a dragon, and an unusually old one, as it still remembers the times of Lost Golarion. What is much more important, however, is that he is also a vampire, i.e. an undead that feeds on the life forces of living beings, and an extremely talented necromancer, i.e. a person dealing with death magic. It has been serving our family for generations. Because of her nature, walking in the light of day makes it difficult for her.„ when he said the word "Ours", he glanced at Catra, as if to emphasize that she was also a part of it. The Grand Marshal shuddered and said.

„I met one vampire in Mystacor... I managed to defeat him with great difficulty. He wanted to devour me, just like Castaspella and her assistant…”

The Lord Admiral nodded in approval.

„A ravenous and feral vampire is a dangerous opponent indeed, but most modern vampires do not feed on sentient beings and are civilized, and Lady Sorrowflame is one of the most respected scholars in... her field in the Galaxy... „ he said seriously, and she asked, smiling. askew.

„So will Lady Sorrowflame answer for what she did today?” she looked seriously at the Lord Admiral, who smiled at her slightly, almost imperceptibly, and said briefly.

„NO.”

That one word echoed in silence throughout the room. Only now did she notice that Catra's father's attitude had changed. Before he was polite, even friendly, but now he became authoritative and cold. He looked down at her. As if he was judging her and saw her as incompetent. She had the impression that he saw her as a naive child playing as an adult. She didn't like it. In Lady Ka's only eye she saw contempt and amusement. The others saw it too, even Adora and Mermista despite their mental state. Catra seemed confused, and Bow stood by her side, showing support. She tried to sound calm, but at the same time show her strength... She wanted to be like her mother.

„Lord Admiral Felix Antares. Your scholar is responsible for the death of eight guards and almost killed my friends, rulers of two kingdoms!”

Lord Admiral Antares shrugged.

“These are collateral damage... That's what happens in war.” his voice was calm, but his attitude indicated that the topic was over for him and he was going to leave, but she didn't let him.

„You won't hold your subordinate accountable...„ This time she could barely control her anger.

„Of course not... In fact, for helping in defeat the creature born from the darkness among the stars, I decided to award it the Order of the Silver Wolf, it is one of the highest decorations awarded in the former Tarak. I also made her the Archchancellor of the newly established magical university on Taurus. It's very little, but I couldn't do much more to reward a dragon that has lived for thousands of years.” replied the Lord Admiral with surprise in his voice.

For the first time in years, she had no idea what to say. How could you reward someone who caused the death of several brave soldiers... Bow spoke first. Which was good, because she was close to losing her temper.

„We on Etheri do not recognize the concept of collateral damage. For us, every life is sacred."

Catra's father shrugged again.

„I did not come here to conduct ideological discussions, because it is a waste of time, of which people in my position never have much. The main reason I came to this meeting is the information I wanted to give you." he pointed to Lady Ka, who bowed mockingly at them and said.

„I humbly and obediently report that Princess Entrapta has been kidnapped by rebel forces, and is in their hands."

She swore so badly several times that it made Bow blush, and Spinnerella looked reproachfully at her wife, because it was from Netossa that she picked up most of her juiciest swear words.

„How did this happen!" she asked, and Lady Ka answered her, still smiling slightly.

„Together we guarded a prisoner, an assassin who tried to assassinate the Lord Admiral, but unfortunately he was rescued by his comrades, including the woman you call Lonnie. Entrapta followed the attackers, I personally assume that someone cast a mind control spell on her."

She didn't believe Lady Ka. This woman looked like someone who lied as easily as she breathed. She was about to accuse her of lying when Mermisa spoke up.

„It's possible. That's when... I lost control of myself." the sea princess's voice almost broke. "Then when I attacked Frosta, I thought the red-haired woman who was with Lonnie had cast a spell on me."

Catra's eyes widened in understanding.

„Her name is Scarlet and she was a cadet like me. Then, when we were in the Lost City, she used a similar spell on Frosta, and she attacked me because of it. Lonnie, in turn, tried to take control of me with such a staff... „ she explained, and then General Juliette spoke up.

„This explains how the Empress was kidnapped. Her guards explained that Lonnie had held a staff to their head and then she ordered them to surrender.”

They looked at each other. They already knew that Lonnie had mind control magic, but they didn't realize how much of a threat it was. Seeing their consternation, the Lord Admiral smiled faintly and said.

„I'll leave you alone to think about what you've learned. Soon I'm going to wage a war for which you didn't have time, and after recent events, you probably won't find it. However, before I leave your planet, I would be very happy to talk to my daughter and daughter-in-law. I also plan to meet Shadow Weaver if there is room for me in line.” he started to leave without waiting for her reaction, and Lady Ka followed him, but before he left the meeting room, he stopped, turned to her and said.

„Another thing. I didn't see fit to correct you earlier, Queen, but I guess it's time to let you know. Some time ago, the Taurus government granted me the title of Lord Protector, and you should address me as such.” before she could say anything, he left the council room. Then she could fully surrender to the emotions boiling in her heart.

"What…" She barely refrained from calling Catra's father names, but the cat girl looked at them apologetically, as if the Lord Admiral's behavior was her fault and said.

„ I'll try to talk to him later. Maybe I can get something from him...„ she didn't seem convinced by her words. She smiled at her friend to comfort her.

„Let's not worry about him for now. First we need to focus on how to free the captives.„ seeing John Kilthem raise his hand, she added... „Without destroying a significant part of the planet and killing thousands of innocents?” at this point the ambassador plopped down on his chair, clearly sad. General Juliette spoke up.

„I guess you'll do what you always did during the war. Io means you will carry out a daring rescue mission that will succeed despite initial difficulties.” Everyone laughed, except for Adora, who said in a dark voice.

„Then, when we took out Shadow Weaver, we met Rosie, the deaf girl we had previously encountered on Ikarus. She was very nice, but now something strange has happened to her. She started glowing and lunged at me. She... She almost beat me. If it wasn't for... someone else, I would have lost... Her blows were draining my magic... I'm not sure who she is, but as I was fighting her, a voice rang out in my head... It told me that... I was a traitor ... that I had failed... I'm not sure what he was referring to... But I guess it had to do with what Light Hope was trying to do.” she finished and lowered her head

She felt cold sweat break out on her back. He remembered what the Ancient AI wanted to do. Then, using the power of She-Ra and the runestones, she almost destroyed most of the life in the galaxy, to which she contributed significantly. If Adora hadn't broken the sword, all would have been lost, very literally. However, if her friend mentioned Light Hope, it meant that…

Adora stared ahead for a few moments before she began to speak in a quiet, barely audible voice.

„Lady Cala took us to the underground... There I met Heart Gift... She was very nice, but... She is the daughter of Light Hope and Mara. I know, it seems weird. Lady Cala… She told Heart Gift the truth… About what happened to her mothers… about me murdering Light Hope….” Adora closed her eyes and tears ran down her cheeks. Catra stood up and placed a hand on her shoulder, she teleported next to her friend, and Bow and Mermista walked up to her.

„It's not your fault... If I hadn't tried to use my heart to strengthen our power... Perhaps we would have succeeded somehow...„ she said, feeling a pang of remorse, because what she said was not just a way to console her, but also the honest truth.

„ I am also guilty, because after losing my kingdom, I was the one who pushed the most to implement this plan. Mermista said seriously.

„And also mine... If I hadn't escalated this war, if I hadn't pushed so hard to win... If I hadn't pulled that lever, none of this would have happened.” Catra said, wincing at the pain of guilt.

„Listen, it's not about who's guilty. None of us are blameless, but the most guilty are Shadow Weaver and those who reprogrammed Light Hope and created the Heart. Bow said. She smiled at him, somewhat comforted, although there were still fears inside her, because in her castle there were not only a Ruthless Manipulator with enormous magical skills and an inhuman monster, but also Si, which was the work of a civilization that almost destroyed all intelligent life in the Galaxy... The castle, which she had previously considered her safe home, was no longer such a place

For the next few hours, they discussed what they should do, until she finally came to the conclusion that they would not come to any new conclusions, so she ordered everyone to go to bed, because they still had to interrogate the prisoners. However, before she went to sleep, she had to take care of one more thing. She said goodbye to Bow and teleported away. She found herself in a small guest room, similar to the one she had placed Shadow Weaver in. The one who stayed here was also a bigger person, but not entirely...

Hordak was playing with his child. She was completely unprepared for this sight. This will make the whole thing much more difficult.

„Do you already know what happened to my wife?" he asked in a hard, rough voice without turning towards her. She sighed heavily and told him everything she had learned from Lady Ka. He didn't even look at her the whole time, even though she felt something boiling inside him. When she finished, he said in a reproachful voice.

„How is it that in five years of being in the most dangerous place on Etheri, nothing happened to her, but every time she meets with you, her life is in danger?"

She sighed heavily, because he was quite right.

„We will do everything to free her." assured Hordak. Never in her life did she think that she would have to explain herself to the ruler of the Etherian Horde.

„ You are not doing me any favours, after all, you Claim that she is your friend, although in fact you can do what you want anyway and there is nothing I can do about it.." he said bitterly, slowly standing. Even though he had a child in his arms, he still looked menacing. "Arrange care for my child. I propose that it be placed in Scorpia's care during my absence. Of all of you, I consider her the most trustworthy.

She blinked twice as she realized what Hordak had said.

„You can't... you are... „ she wanted to say, but he interrupted her.

„Your father and aunt have issued me safe-conduct and want me to accompany them, so please leave me alone to say goodbye and prepare for the journey. If you have any questions, ask your relatives. It's time for me...

Once again that day, she had no idea what to say, so since she probably wouldn't learn anything new from Hordak, she decided to leave him alone and teleported away.

He smiled as the young queen left him. He felt no remorse for deceiving her a bit, especially since Entrapta herself had told him not to tell anyone. Of course, that wasn't what she had in mind, but it would still be best if no one found out anything. Catra probably trusted her father too much too. On this matter, he understood it, after all, he had loved Horde Prime all his life.

A few hours earlier, he was furiously walking around the room assigned to him and the child. When the alarm sounded, he immediately reported to the guard just in case, so as not to be accused of contributing to what was going to happen... Mikah, Castaspella and that ridiculous sorceress who had explained Shadow Weaver's plan to them, went their separate ways. He was not taken to the shelters. The frightened guards passed him around one by one, until he finally found himself in the care of a clone serving in the Brightmoon guard, who introduced himself as Brother Blade, who took him to a small house where he was to wait for his loved ones. Brother Blade treated him like all the other clones, with a mixture of fear and respect. This didn't surprise him, after all, he was the first of his kind to not only free himself from Horde Prime's tyranny, but also kill him, or at least one of his bodies. He waited alone for an hour until that strange insectoid woman his wife had befriended brought him the Child. It was happy to see him, so his wife's new friend left it for him and then went away to rest. Well she looked exhausted, sometimes the Child could be extremely intense. However, he had not heard anything from Entrapta and he was becoming more and more worried. However, after a few hours, their shared datapad, which was based on Galactic Horde technology, responded. He immediately took it in his hands and looked at his wife's face.

„I'm glad to see you! I hope you weren't too worried!„ Entrapta exclaimed happily, smiling broadly. She looked genuinely happy. He already knew that his wife tried to always smile, even when she was sad or angry, but he had learned to recognize her true moods. This time she looked realy happy.

„I was worried about you. Someone attacked Brightmoon, but the threat appears to have passed. Me and the baby are safe. – he showed the screen to the child, who was happy to see his mother. Entrapta greeted her offspring and then turned to him.

„I am my dearest on a wonderful spaceship from outside the Empire! It's called Deadly Sword Of Burning Fury and it's so amazing!” said his wife and squealed with delight. He smiled at her, filled with relief, but then he felt anxious.

„Where is this ship and how did you get on it?” he asked, trying not to let his wife hear the fear in his voice.

„You know, there was a shooting, and then I went with Worgdak to this ship. Because I had to help her, and now we're going to Dryl! It will be nice to visit my old home.”

Now he felt real fear. Wrongdak was with Shadow Weaver and Dryll was in the possession of Lonnie and her People’s Rebellion and they had evil intentions towards him and his wife. Had she been abducted and didn't even realize it? In the case of Entrapta, this was quite likely.

„Are you safe? Is no one threatening you with anything? Is there anyone else here with you, apart from Wrongdak, that you know? Someone unusual?„ he asked, no longer hiding his fears. Then another person entered the frame. She was hanging upside down, but neither her hair nor her clothes were hanging, as if the ceiling had its own gravity. For a moment he thought it was Catra, the person looked so much like her.

„Hey Grumpy, if you're looking for someone special, you've got me. After all, I am absolutely perfect, amazing and unique.” she said in a dull voice, and now he realized that it was definitely not Catra. She was very much like her though.

“This is Eti, you know, our Catra's sister.” said his wife as if the fact that Catra had a sister was common knowledge. The fact that the cat-girl had more relatives didn't sit well with him, let alone the fact that one of them was on the same ship as his beloved. However, Eti seemed... close to him somehow. There was something familiar about her, though he couldn't pinpoint what.

“She has an amazing prosthetic, I think it's some kind of ancient artefact!” continued his wife. “I just can't wait to examine her! Her shoes are amazing too! Oh Hordaku, this is such a wonderful place. - she squealed again in a voice filled with delight. He involuntarily smiled seeing Entrapta's joy. - You know, I think I'll introduce you to the others!” she exclaimed and began to walk around the deck, showing him more passengers. .

„This is Rosie, she is Eti's friend.” a white-haired girl appeared in front of the screen, waved at him, smiling friendly, and then started moving her hands, and a voice began to come out of her gloves.

„Hello! I'm very happy I could meet you. Your brother, Wrongak, has told us all a lot about you. He is always very nice to everyone and saved the Comrade General and your wife is very cool.” Rosie explained, and Eti then walked up to her and hugged her.

„By the way, Rosie is my girlfriend and we love each other very much.” Catra's sister said, and the white-haired girl blushed. Entrapta then went on to show him the other passengers on that ship. Next was a silver-scaled lizard with multiple cybermetic implants. He looked at him and made a surprised face.

„This is Alatar. He helped me establish a secure connection to your datapad. – said his wife, and Alatar added.

„I also loaded your pad with many applications, although many of them will only be useful when you gain access to the Internet. I also gave you some games in case you were ever bored.” the lizard said in a confused voice. Entrapta left him and went to some saihe girl who had her arm in a sling. She introduced herself as Itel, but said nothing else, seeming to be lost in dark thoughts. Then his wife ran to Ireanis and a burgundy-haired woman who was discussing something intensely with a not very competent sorceress who gave him a happy smile. Entrapta didn't want to disturb them, so she moved on to the next passengers. They were a red-haired girl, short but muscular, and a winged horse with a horn that looked oddly familiar. The girl was explaining something to the horse, but after a while they saw the datapad and the redhead waved at it, and the horse tried to say something, but Entrapta didn't let him say a word

„This is Lilka Wagardotir. She's an orc like Huntara, and that horse-bird hybrid is Swiftwind, but you already know him, so we won't bother with him any longer.” she left the confused horse and went to look for more passengers. She stood in front of three people, one of whom was a large lizard, the second a blond-haired boy, and the third a dark-skinned woman. The first two straightened up as if frightened, but the woman looked at him with a murderous look. He felt like he should know them

„These are Rogelio, Kyle and Lonnie. Maybe you remember them, they served in your Horde! Kyle, Rogelio, Lonnie, do you have something to say to your former commander!?” Entrapta said and the Blond haired boy looked sheepish and said.

„Oh Hordak... it's good to see you... after so many years and it's a very strange thing with our rebellion, isn't it? I hope you are fine?| said the boy, and the lizard nodded. The woman didn't say anything, her look said more than a thousand words.

„And now it's time for you to meet your old friend... Imp, come here!” Entrapta called out, and a creature he hadn't seen in five years flew into the lens. A being that he brought to life with his own hands. The Imp was dressed in a People's Rebellion uniform made especially for him, although he had a small, wide-brimmed hat on his head. He looked at his former companion for a moment. For many years he was the only being he could trust. The imp was his only companion, his confidant, although back then he couldn't name the bond that connected them. Actually, in a way he was closer to him than Entrapta. He was there for him through his triumphs and through all his moments of doubt when his self-hatred seemed to consume him... And he was also a witness to all his despicable deeds... Including the one he didn't dare to tell even his loved one... They hadn't seen each other since when Horde Prime arrived, but all this time he had been wondering what he would say to him... But now he had no idea what he could tell him... He wasn't even sure who they were to each other... Father and son, friends, brothers... probably all of those things. bit by bit…

„Hello, my little... my friend.” he said, feeling tears flowing down his cheeks.

„I am glad to see you, Hordak.” said the Imp, reproducing Entrapta's voice from when they had just met. Tears also ran down the Winged Being's face. He had no idea what he could say next.

„I missed you. I've been missing you all this time.” he said, feeling his voice break.

„Me too, indeed.” said Imp, this time in Shadow Weaver's voice. Now he regretted not giving him his own voice. Back then, he didn't think of him as a companion, but only as a useful tool. Another mistake he made... Maybe he'll fix it someday.

„I'd like you to meet someone.” he said and showed him the Child. They both looked at each other in amazement and then walked up to the screen, looking at each other closely.

„Dad! Look! He likes me!„ exclaimed the Child and laughed happily, and the Imp echoed him.

„This is your brother.„ he said, finally deciding who the creature on the other side of the screen was. He let them stare at each other for a moment longer, and then he said.

„I hope you're doing well here... And now, my dear, go to my brother, because I need to talk to him.” he said to Entrapta.

“Probably my dearest! Wrongdak performed bravely during the fight. He even saved the life of the Comrade General!” she said, running through the ship's corridors. Wrongdak was in a small room, probably a workshop, where he was mending clothes. When he saw him, his brother straightened up and spoke in a voice full of concern.

„It's okay.... You didn't do anything wrong... Entrapta, could you stand in front of the screen, because I have something very important to tell you, „ when his wife did as he asked, he told her about Shadow Weaver's visit and what he learned from her.

„Oh Hordak, you could have told me about it!” she said in a sad voice, but she didn't seem particularly angry... She was better for him than he deserved.

„I didn't have the courage to tell you about it, but the most important thing is that this time she was telling the truth.”

To his surprise, Entrapta nodded.

„Yes, that might be true. Although the technology the Lord Admiral has is wonderful, he is probably not a good person. Lady Ka tried to shoot Itel, and Graag also serves him. He...„ she didn't finish because Wrongdak interrupted her.

„He wanted to sell me like I was a thing.” there was such hatred in his brother's voice that he had never expected from him, but he was not surprised. There was a rage inside him that he hadn't felt in a long time.

„We will seek justice another time. I will soon be going on a journey with Shadow Weaver to try to keep us all safe and maybe find redemption.”

„Shadow Weaver was captured by Catra. But Ireanis knows everything. You can trust her.” said his brother with great confidence in his voice. He, in turn, wondered who would kill the dark sorceress first, Catra or her father.

„It doesn't change anything then. I have to finish for now. Take care of yourself, he said and hung up.”

It was a few hours earlier. He decided not to tell the queen anything, because he didn't know how much he could trust Catra, and he was sure that Glimmer would tell her all about it, and she would definitely talk to her father, and that would complicate everything. He could also stand in the way of their expedition. He had the means to make the four of them disappear if he felt it was in his best interests, or at least try to do so. He was a great warrior, especially in the armor Entrapta had made for him, and Mikah had survived many years on the island beast, but he wasn't sure the other two would be able to handle it if the Lord Admiral sent his troops against them. He also doubted Catra would believe him or anyone else, he knew how hard it was to accept the truth about those you adored. He learned the truth far too late.

He smiled at the Child and said.

„I think you'll like Aunt Scorpia....”

„ It was a fucking failure. " Lady Ka growled in the Dwarvespeak, a language no one here knew.

„Not at all!” said the Lord Admiral walking next to him in the same language. She looked at him in surprise.

„We failed to capture your second daughter...„ she said, but Antares waved his hand. He was in an exceptionally good mood after talking to the little queen.

„It wasn't our main goal. It was just an additional opportunity that we took advantage of, but unfortunately it didn't work out. In the grand scheme of things, however, this doesn't change anything. Sooner or later the girl will fall into our hands, and we will bring her back to the right path. But now we know where she is... And in other respects we have won. And how much did it cost us?”

„Keshar and Graag were injured, but they will recover soon. In addition, I lost three mutts and two others were seriously injured ... but they where a cannon fodder... You're right, the costs were minimal, but what kind of victory are you talking about?” she looked at the Lord Admiral and saw a blue spark in his biological eye.

„The young queen needed our support in the fight against an enemy they had never encountered before. Moreover, it turned out that she was unable to defend her guests and subjects. Empress of Eridani was kidnapped, as was this Entrapta. Princess Frosta is seriously injured, it is unknown whether she will survive. In one word, it's a disaster. Soon they will probably ask us for help. While the Queen was showing off her incompetence, my daughter captured Shadow Weaver, the most hated person on the planet.” she heard satisfaction, even joy, in her commander's voice. He rarely showed emotion, but now he was positively radiant with joy. Well, he made sense, but she still had her doubts.

„Aren't you worried about what that dark witch might say to your daughter? She may know... the wrong version of the truth. What will you do if he starts talking.”

This time the Lord Admiral smiled. Others said that her smile was ugly, that it inspired fear, but compared to the smile of her commander when he took off the mask of a great leader and statesman, even for a moment, it was like the joyful smile of a baby.

„Let her talk. I'm even counting on it to some extent. Shadow Weaver manipulated Catra and Adora for Years. She lied and bent everyone to her will. She did everything to make my daughter hate her. Whatever he tells her now, to Catra it will be another lie. If she then hears the same thing from someone else, she will also consider it a lie, because it will sound the same as the words of the woman who tormented her all her life. It will be even better if the queen wlll believe the dark sorceress. Fractures will then appear between them, which will only need to be widened."

She looked at her commander with approval. His ability to bend others to his will always amazed her. She never had the patience for something like this, unless fear and suffering were involved.

„What about Entrapta? While being with your other daughter and her friends, she may hear some things that are not entirely favorable to you." she said, thinking about the fact that that idiot had seen her trying to shoot that elf.

„Well, I must admit that you could have played it better, but leadership is about turning mistakes into successes. When we free the prisoners, it turns out that your sister killed her and burned the body. Another of the young queen's countless failures. Of course, we won't let someone so bright go to waste, although it may take a little persuasion... or a small favor from Lady Sorrowflame. In fact, we will be doing future generations a great favor by ensuring that such a brilliant mind survives in the form of a vampire...„ Antares's voice was gentle and thoughtful.

„Or we'll turn her into a ghoul. Then it will eat the corpses in such cute little pieces." she said, parodying the purple-haired idiot.

„ It was quite macabre, but also quite funny. – the Lord Admiral said, a hint of a smile appearing on his face.

They walked for a while, enjoying the good mood, until after a while the Lord Admiral said.

„You'll stay here for a while. Someone must supervise the release of my second daughter, as well as the solution of the Queen's problem. In this second matter, be very careful, because one careless step... can ruin everything. It's better that you do nothing than for anyone to find out about our plans. As for my second daughter, try to get her into our hands, you may have to fake her death... Try to capture her friends. Thanks to this, you will be able to put pressure on her to behave sensibly... You can do whatever you want with your sister, she is a traitor after all... Appoint someone to command your men in your absence. Take a hundred or two, but the more disciplined ones. I'll give you a dozen or so of my soldiers. Once you deal with this problem, when you come back, you will have a mission to create a secret police in my new empire. And one more thing, you'll probably be happy to hear that Lady Sorrowflame is here to stay. He claims he's looking for some ancient artifacts left by my daughter's-in-law relatives. Help her in this matter too, I don't care about the power they hide, but about preventing a possible catastrophe that they could cause. You will receive a mystical communicator, not as safe as the mirrors I had before, but still extremely useful.„ he said, and then his daughter approached them.

„I'd like to talk to you.” Catra said. The Lord Admiral signaled her and she moved into the shadows so they could discuss their business.

„What's bothering you, my dear?” he asked, fully understanding what she came to him with.

„You shouldn't be so hard on Glimmer. She's my friend and... She ruled Etheria really well during the war when I... led the Horde. Maybe we didn't do so well yesterday, but she still managed to fend off that monster. Everyone makes mistakes.” he felt anger in her voice, but also pleading.

„I am a man who is accustomed to commanding men while fighting an enemy so terrible that the entire galaxy fears him.

That's why I'm a bit rough. Maybe I was a little too harsh on your friend. But everything I said is true. Lady Sorrowflame is one of my best subordinates. I can't punish her for doing her thing. I feel sorry for these guardsmen and their families, but such things happen in war. Perhaps your queen will learn this... She should, considering what may lie ahead."

Catra frowned and flattened her ears. She wagged the tip of her tail as if she was worried. Her pet, although more and more sure that Melog was much more than an ordinary animal, looked at him carefully, shimmering with different colors.

„What do you mean? You sound like you know something very important that you haven't told us yet." she said, looking him straight in the eye. He was silent for a moment, as if considering an answer, before speaking.

„The center of the Pact Worlds is the Absalom Space Station. It is huge, inhabited by millions of beings who live there permanently and just as many who stopped there while traveling through the universe. Absalom Station is the center of the Galaxy, and quite literally, because it is where the Starstone is located. It is the most powerful artifact we know. Not only does it provide power to the entire station, but it also enables the use of drift drive, the most efficient way to travel between stars, and in every way superior to anything Horde Prime had at his disposal. It is like a beacon for ships traveling through the Drift dimension. Moreover, it allows you to instantly return to Absalom, making it one of the most important places in the universe."

„But what does this have to do with Etheria?" she asked, although her eyes showed that she had already guessed the answer.

„There is a second Starstone on Etheria." he said, carefully watching the gravity of the whole situation sink in. Catra buried her face in her hands and Melog cuddled up to her.

„The destruction of the Heart was not the end of the nightmare... But it explains everything, now I understand why Etheria was always so important... So special.” she moaned and added. “They'll come for him, right? Other powers in the galaxy? Is that why you're telling me this?” she looked at him again. He nodded and answered briefly.

„Yes...„ then he thought about it, because he wasn't sure whether to reveal everything to her at once, the issue of time also worried him, but it was better to insert the needle with one push. „There's something else. Absalom Station is located where the planet Golarion once existed. This is where the Starstone came from... It had the power to turn people into Gods.”

Catra grimaced in irritation.

„What does this nonsense have to do with all this?” she said contemptuously. He looked at her with absolute seriousness.

„It's not nonsense. Such matters are documented. From what Lady Sorrowflame told me, the queen fought at night with a creature that was in fact a minor deity or demigod... They are not perfect, omnipotent and omniscient beings, but they have great power and sometimes they are to be reckoned with. Legends and stories tell of four mortals who achieved ascension through the power of the stone. They were Aroden, the now dead god of humanity, Cayden Cailean „the Lucky Drunk”, Norgorber „the Reaper of Reputation” and Iomadae “the Inheritor of Aroden”. I suspect your wife may be connected to this Artifact in some way.

He saw the terrified understanding on his daughter's face.

He put his hand on her shoulder and said.

„I'm not saying this will happen, no one knows how your Starstone works, but the fact that this artifact is on your planet is an indisputable fact, but if you don't believe me, ask Lady Cali or your former… officer in charge…„ he said and went to have Lady Sorrowflame administer the medicine to him. But as he walked, he staggered and almost fell.

„Father!” Catra called out and ran to him to support him. With her help, he managed to get up.

„Thank you, my dear... This shouldn't have happened...„ he said, smiling sadly.

„Yes, that's the genetic flaw I told you about. She is slowly killing me... I don't have much time left, that's why I encouraged you to take over my inheritance... because if you don't do it, then... „ he lowered his voice. “Lady Sorrowflame and Lady Ka They will take over my subordinates...”

He saw the pain on her face again, but hey, a little suffering makes a better leader, but then hope appeared on the girl's face.

„Adora! Her She-Ra power can heal... She even brought me back to life once. It will definitely help you too.”

„If he agrees, I would be very glad.” he said, seeing the sea infinite possibilities opening before him.

Rechiza rubbed her forehead. She had a headache since last night. She knew that she should thank all the gods that she was alive, not to mention that nothing serious had happened to her. After all, she fought with one of the Chaugnar Faugn’s Brothers and did not fall into madness. It was something that could be told in legends. Although in truth they only succeeded because she was helped by an extremely powerful sorceress, although she was also a bit crazy, and after the fight she started behaving like some old woman with dementia. She was also helped by this man, disturbing and terrifying. He claimed to be the ruler of Carurystal, the same planet that Lady Cala came from. She didn't know much about him, except that his family had ruled the entire planet since time immemorial and had a good reputation, although she couldn't understand the latter when looking into his cold blue eyes. This individual terrified her and seemed to know far too much for the ruler of a provincial planet of no great importance. Worse yet, he also seemed to be old, older than anyone she had ever seen, including even some of the devils and demons she had fought. He saved her, but he didn't tell her why he did it. She didn't trust him, although that might not have been the right word. She rather expected the worst from him. She knew she was at his mercy and that was actually the most frustrating thing. She was sure he would murder her without blinking an eye.

After she returned to the city, she learned that their former companion had shown Etheria her true colors. They had known for some time that Lady Cala was something inhuman, ever since she survived the explosion of explosives, but when Brightmoon's guards began to discuss what the Carurystal noblewoman had done, she asked them for details. They were both shocked by what they witnessed, so they willingly shared their experiences with her. To her, the fact that ordinary people harbor monstrous natures was nothing unusual, but to most of the inhabitants of this world it was a terrifying discovery. At first she wasn't sure who… what the creature that stood before the queen was. But when the name Yog-Sototh was mentioned, even though the guards didn't pronounce it correctly and she had to guess who they were talking about, she felt herself trying to retract antennae she didn't have in fear. She was the spawn of Yog-Sototh, one of the most feared beings existing in the galaxy. They were usually much more monstrous and completely alien in nature, although some were similar to mortals, most often humans, because the cults of a great external god were very popular among representatives of this species. Not all of them were bad, for example the legendary Demonique from the lost Golarion. But Lady Cala was wicked through and through, there was no doubt about it. Now she finally fully understood the horrors she had traveled through these weeks and what she had brought to this planet. And in her pride she was blind to such an obvious truth. Even these kids, especially the cat girl, realized that there was something wrong with this woman. When she then analyzed all the events she had witnessed, everything became obvious. She realized with horror how lucky they were that they had not met death or a much worse fate during their journey.

She decided to inform the Archduke of what she had learned. She found Kane Adamson in the royal garden, where he was looking at these strange moons. When he heard her, he turned towards her. She shuddered when those cold blue eyes looked at her. There was something terrifying about the Archduke. When she looked at him directly it wasn't so bad, but when she looked at him out of the corner of her eye she had the impression that there was fire in his eyes and blood was dripping from his hands. She did not underestimate what her extraordinary eyesight revealed. It had cost her dearly to obtain him, and she still longed for her real eyes. She told Kane what she had learned, and the murderous-looking aristocrat smiled.

„That's what I should have expected, actually. However, at this point it is no longer our concern, although we must be much more vigilant than before. The events of yesterday cannot be repeated."

She felt something touched her.

„Did you know that Chaugnar Faugna's younger brother would come here? Did you have a purpose in this?"

The Archduke smiled indulgently at her

„And what benefit could I get from it? Make yourself a hero? It's not worth playing with the Great Old Ones, even the lesser ones. I didn't think that this statue contained the essence of one of the Young Brothers, although I should have checked it out or even blown it up as a precaution. It would have been much easier than the night fight, although at least I learned some interesting things." he rubbed his red beard with his hand.

"Do you mean that shiny guy with the sword, or maybe the old woman who seemed to know you even though this planet was cut off from the rest of the universe for thousands of years?” she asked angrily, but Kane smiled at her surprisingly cheerfully and said…

„Yes.”

She stared at him in bewilderment for a moment, and then let out a loud, almost painful trill, a sign of indescribable rage among her species.

„I answered your question, although probably not in as much detail as you expected, but you will find out everything in due time. You have to be patient. Dr. Sidonus said this was your great virtue, like Arkan-tar's cunning.”

This time she was speechless with surprise for a moment, but then she felt her anger return.

„So it was his... your doing from the very beginning! Are you behind all this journey!” she said, and she felt anxious. How deep, both in terms of power and in terms of time, did this conspiracy reach?

But Kane shook his head.

„The doctor is only responsible for sending the ship you were on. The fact that you got into it is pure coincidence, like many other things that have happened recently. In truth, all this should seem very suspicious, but for now I have no significant evidence that any forces intervened in the course of events, but it is much easier to get entangled in the threads of fate than to break free from them.” he spoke in a scholarly tone, so incongruous with his appearance as a murderer. She felt like fluttering her antennae in surprise, and when she remembered that it was impossible, she felt her body release a pheromone of anger.

„So, what are you going to do next? You must have been a little late to ask the Queen's Hand, you won't marry She-Ra either, I guess all the important people on the planet are probably already taken. You could try to pick up the Lord Admiral, or someone from his entourage, but it would end badly, although I'm not sure for whom.” she said, twisting her face in a malicious smile, but Kane ignored her malicious taunt and started telling her about his plans.

„First we have to go to the Singing Jungle, because the ruler there knows a lot and is favorable to us. I have a mystery to solve.” his voice was thoughtful and a little sad.

„Could you tell us a little secret, or will it break your vein?” she asked, not hiding her anger.

„I have to remember how I helped murder the original inhabitants of this planet.” he looked into her face, icy flames dancing in his blue eyes. “Is this the truth you wanted, Rechiza?”

She fell silent because she didn't know what to say, and she doubted whether there was a reasonable response to admitting to genocide on a planetary scale.

Then Queen Glimmer appeared next to them. She jumped, feeling as if she had been caught in some evil plot. In a way it was like that...

„Let me ask you directly, Archduke, if you knew who Lady Cala was and that she was working with Shadow Weaver... „ said the queen in a sharp tone, while casting some spell on him. Kane made no gesture to show that he resented the Lord of Etheria for casting a spell on him. He bowed politely and said in a polite tone

„Lady Cala belongs to one of the oldest, most respected and wealthiest families on Carurystal and is a well-liked young lady, the embodiment of every virtue important to the citizens of my world. Miss Daisy, your Shadow Weaver, was initially treated with some reserve because she was a foreigner, but she quickly gained the respect and sympathy of society. Some people whispered about the terrible accident that had left her disfigured, but almost everyone felt sorry for her, as befits an honest and noble person.” The Archduke smiled broadly and continued. “Of course, as a responsible ruler, I had some suspicions, but in a law-abiding country like my Archduchy, suspicions are definitely too little to intervene, and I didn't want to seem like someone bending the law to suit my whim. However, if you have some time, try to ask Lady Cala about the fate of her family, it will probably help you solve some mysteries. I also want to point out that your planet was virtually unknown in the wider universe, so I couldn't suspect Miss Daisy of anything. I hope I gave you a thorough enough answer?

Judging by Glimmer's expression, that was the case. The queen rubbed her temples and asked something else.

„What are you doing here anyway?”

The Archduke shrugged.

„I'm not going to answer this question or any other question you ask me. Etheria is not a police state and welcomes anyone who wishes to come here. I would also like to point out that my presence here so far has proven to be extremely useful and I can guarantee that it will be the same in the future.”

Glimmer looked at him blankly for a moment, then wiped her face and said.

„I am to tired for another conversation like this today, especially since I have several more, much more difficult conversations ahead of me today.” and disappeared in a teleportation flash. Kane then said with appreciation in his voice.

„You have to admit that it's really good. At first, her spell had an effect on me, so I tried to talk to her while I waited for my mind to overcome the spell.” then he looked at her and asked in a much more serious tone than the one he used to address the queen. ”Over the course of my unimaginably long life, I have learned that it is much better for others to serve you willingly, so I ask you, would you like to join me? Be warned that you are risking much more than just the reward is uncertain.”

She thought for a moment and said.

„All right, because I want to find out something. This plan of yours has to do with the First Ones... They're the reason I have this.” she tapped on the metal eye. “I want to find them, meet them and take revenge, or at least die trying.”

Dilayla sighed and said.

„So much for the Lord Admiral and his past.” she looked at the Star Siblings. To her relief, Tallstar accepted the news she had brought, and wasn't even too surprised by what she said. Starla looked at her with eyes shock. Jewelstar didn't seem to fully trust her.

„ And you won't tell anyone about it?” the youngest asked. She shrugged and answered her.

„I thought about it. But who am I? Just a mere mercenary, what would my word be worth against the word of someone like Lord Admiral Antares? If the Archduke had supported us, we might have been able to give the Queen something to think about, but yes? Plus, I was traveling with Shadow Weaver, which makes me suspicious. They might think we're still following that witch's orders, especially if she starts saying what we say.”

„ How do you know if it's true at all? The woman you heard this from is definitely a reliable source? After all, she is some kind of terrorist, or at least she was associated with them . „ Jewelstar said, clearly angry with her.

„ And who were we supposed to be during all these years of fighting Horde Prime?” Tallstar turned sharply to her brother.

„Bina's nice.” she said quietly, trying not to look into the eyes of the older sister. “But I definitely believe these kids, especially Eti. She is your Catra's sister, and she must have a serious reason for choosing to wander the cosmos rather than a life of luxury that her father would be able to provide. I heard what they said among themselves... „ she closed her eyes and shook her head. –

They were full of Anger. It was Bina who tried to soothe him. She wanted to make them find some new purpose in life beyond revenge. Lilka and Alatar kind of wanted to find a place for themselves in life, but Itel... She wanted someone to pay for Kesler's Fall. – the mercenary sighed.

„Sorry if I'm interfering, but was Lilka a fiery red haired girl and Itel a green-haired Elf?„ asked the man dressed as a Fearless Armada soldier. Instead of answering his question, she jumped at him and grabbed him by the throat.

„You were wrong to eavesdrop on us." she said menacingly, ready to tighten her hand and crush his windpipe, but Starla called out.

„Leave him alone, he's my boyfriend Kay!"

She cursed inwardly. This complicated everything.

„I wasn't eavesdropping on you... „ he groaned, she could barely hear what he was saying. "I wanted to ask Starla if she had time for a little picnic before the flight." he said, took a breath with some effort and added. "I'm from Kesler. I had a sister, a red-haired girl named Lilka." he said and loosened her grip a bit, but was ready to tighten it again at any moment.

„ Yes, it was a redhead girl, short but powerfully muscled, she probably came from some farm, and Itel had short green hair and arms covered with tattoos." when she said this, tears ran down his face. At first she thought it might be the Lord Admiral's spy, but those tears… They felt all too real. She let go of him and he rubbed his neck and said.

"Itel is my friend's daughter, we are together... from Kesler and we are collecting information about Antares' activities for the Iomadae church and the stewards.„ he said. The Stewards were interplanetary police working for the authorities of the pact worlds." Antares' nefarious actions arouse the dislike of many high-ranking people, although unfortunately many others support him. That's why we need to collect evidence, but we need to be careful because... „ He looked around nervously, as if he had only just realized that he might be being watched, he was not ideal spy material. “They say that those who are too nosy will at best end up among Lady Ka's dogs, unless he is accused of treason, then Lady Sorrowflame takes care of him, and that is... worse than death.” he said, and when he mentioned the necromancer, he shuddered.

„So you're a spy, just working for the good guys.” Dilayla said, smiling at him apologetically. „Your sister and your friend's daughter... I don't know what they were like before, but they've almost certainly changed a lot, you have to be ready for it... „ She looked at the rest and sighed. „I have to disappear now. The Archduke hired me because he fears that Etheria is threatened by a much greater evil than the Lord Admiral.” she handed Talstar a small silver tablet. – Thanks to this we will be able to contact each other. I have another one of these, paired with the one you're holding. The problem is that you have to use blood. Just a few drops are enough, but we can't prick our fingers, right? she laughed and added. „ Well, take care of yourselves... „ she said quietly and looked down. They were silent for a moment, and then she was about to turn around to go her way, but suddenly Talstar threw her arms around her neck and kissed her. She felt joy, heat spreading through her body. “Take care of yourself too.” said the former rebel.

Chapter End Notes

I apologise for the delay. I've decided to develop the Lashunty side of Rechisia a bit.

Princess of Nothingness.

Chapter Notes

See the end of the chapter for notes

Talking to the Archduke turned out to be as pointless as talking to Hordak . At that moment, she wished she had the power of Shadow Weaver or at least Empress of Eridani to command obedience to her guests and subjects regardless of any law. In fact, maybe she had that power, she wasn't sure. It just wasn't Etherian Way to impose your will on others . So she ate a big piece of her wedding cake, no one even touched it because of what happened yesterday. None of her friends had eaten anything and they were all hungry, but she was hungry for two. She didn't eat her fill of the cake, but it was enough for now. It was already late afternoon and she still had to talk to two people, first she decided to start with the one with whom it would be easier, but would talking to a monster wearing a human mask be easy?

Catra, Adora and the Brother Blade were waiting for her in the council chamber. Adora looked a bit better now, she probably got a little sleep, Catra was nervous, her tail was wagging vigorously and her eyes were darting, and Melog was walking around the corridor, purring softly, only stopping from time to time to rub against Adora. As soon as they saw her, they stood up.

„I still think we should talk to Shadow Weaver first." Adora said with a fierce face.

„I prefer to question Lady Cala first. She can tell us a lot about Shadow Weaver, thanks to which we will learn something about her plans, which will make it easier for us to catch the Dark Sorcerer in a lie." she explained to her friend.

„As long as she wants to talk to us, we won't do anything to her if she chooses to remain silent.” Adora said, crossing her arms over her chest.

„One did not force her, the other will have no qualms about it” Catra said through gritted teeth. Seeing the pure hatred in her friend's eyes, she felt uneasy.

„It seems to me that Lady Cala has no love for Shadow Weaver, and she likes to brag even more than Horde Prime although it's hard to imagine that this is possible.„ She murmured and closed her eyes, trying to gather her thoughts, and then stretched out her hands to her friends about Brother Blade and asked.

„Is everyone ready?” and when everyone nodded yes, she moved them to the place where they kept the monster.

As soon as they got there, they heard the humming of a quiet melody. It was quite pleasant to the ears, and she would have gladly stopped to listen to it if she had not been aware of who the creature was who was humming it. Lady Cala was kneeling with her legs crossed. She was now in Human form, her dress partially torn, her hair disheveled, hanging loosely over her shoulders and chest. Her eyes were closed and her face was decorated with a dreamy smile. She seemed so beautiful and innocent. And then she started singing.

Mother reborn

To bring the Thorn

Mother revived

To fulfill destiny.

Mortal seed

Beaded with despair

Planted in the soil of pain

It will give an abundant harvest.

This is not your war

But it is you who will perish

Mere tools unaware

That their souls are at stake

Everything started

Before the beginning of time

And it will last

Until the very end

A wonderful Creator

In Their wickedness

They guided my Fate

That I would come to you

They made me a gift

Very generous indeed

Which delight and despair

I'll bring it to you!

And then Lady Cala opened her eyes.

„Hello, Glimmer. Hello Adora and Catra! How nice to see you! Sorry I didn't say hello right away, but I was inspired! Did you like my song? Artistic skills are an extremely important element of classical education!" she giggled.

„Well, at least you'll have a way to while away your time in your cell, because you won't be leaving it anytime soon. Our grandchildren will be the next ones you talk to if you don't bother to give satisfactory answers." Catra said, smiling predatorily.

„I have time, Catra. However, one thing intrigues me!„ She stood up and walked closer to the force field and rested her head on her shoulder and said to her with a concerned face. "I have a feeling that your mother would be unhappy with the conditions in which you are imprisoning me, although I'm not sure whether she would be more angry that I don't have a four-poster bed here or that I'm not coughing up pieces of my lungs... She's a very complicated woman?" she shook her head with concern.

Hearing the Aristocrat's words, she felt a wave of anger wash over her. She jumped to the energy barrier and, clenching her fists, shouted.

„How dare you mention it! You…" she let out a string of insults so vicious that even Catra's ears fell flat, and Brother Blade looked at her in shock.

„Ouch! What terrible language! Who would have expected such a vocabulary from such a noble lady! Is this how your parents raised you?" she asked, clicking her tongue a few times. She wanted to hit her, but Adora put a hand on her shoulder.

“Do not listen to her. She wants to provoke you.” Her friend said, and then turned to the aristocrat. “Why did you come here? Someone ordered you to kill me?” she pierced Lady Cala with a sharp look. The Carurystal woman sighed heavily and sat down.

„Unfortunately, I was forbidden to harm you. Yesterday's events were entirely my initiative. I found a trick in a deal my Master made with Shadow Weaver. Unfortunately, I'm afraid that was playing too much with his will anyway. – she said and smiled sadly, as if she had to tell them tragic news.

„But why did you want to do it? We've never met before, you have no reason to hate me. – Adora said with absolutely no understanding in her voice.

„ I had no reason to kill you? You don't understand anything!” Lady Cala gritted her teeth in a furious grimace. “You stupid idiot and your lover, a feral animal, have ruined my existence!”

All three of them stared at Lady Cala in disbelief, so ridiculous were her accusations.

„How were we supposed to do anything to you?” Catra growled. “You made the choice. Since you arrived, no one has done anything bad to you, although we had reasons not to trust you, we tried not to let you feel it.”

Then La dyCala burst out laughing. She was so amused that tears ran down her cheeks.

„How narrow minded you are! Do you really think you understand what's at stake? You are not players, not even pawns! But luckily you have me here! Let me explain everything here in a way that even your happily ignorant minds can understand the truth!” Lady Cala said and started walking around her cell with her hands behind her back. “It all started when a sorceress found the Mirror. It was a very unusual mirror. It contained the Truth about the world. The sorceress was a bitter woman until now. She had great knowledge, or so she thought, but not the power she dreamed of.

She faced the prospect of spending a very long life as a mere teacher, with all dreams of greatness fading away like mist in the sunlight. The sorceress had no intention of accepting her fate. So she decided to listen to the whispers of the mirror. It told of wonderful secrets that neither the members of Mystacor's council nor any of the princesses they knew had ever heard of them. However, as she gained knowledge, her contempt for the ignorance of the inhabitants of this planet, especially those who were given great power by virtue of birth, grew. Hunger grew along with the contempt. Hunger for power. A mirror could remedy that. It told her about a ritual that gave her what she had always wanted. However, it was extremely dangerous, but fortunately the mirror knew a way to limit the danger. At first, the sorceress wasn't sure, she hesitated whether to use the mirror. But then the Horde arrived, and the sorceress took it as a sign from fate...

„Yes, yes ... Even we ignorant people know this story." Catra said, smiling contemptuously.

Lady Cala bowed to her and said.

„I was taught that a good story requires a foundation, but since you lack patience, I will skip some of the more boring parts." she cleared her throat and continued. "As you probably remember, the ritual did not go quite as planned by our dear sorceress. However, you certainly do not know who the creature that came at her call was. For it was the Devourer of Light, one of the thousand of thousands Masks of the Great Outer God Nyarlathotep! Creeping Chaos. Emissary of the Outer Gods. Their soul. The personification and patron of free will."

Out of the corner of her eye, she saw that both Adora and Catra began to listen more closely to the monstrous aristocrat's story when the name Nyarlathotep was mentioned, as if they had heard of him before.

„You see, my dear, the universe is old, older than you can imagine. In the Darkness Between the Stars There are beings who remember the beginnings of this universe and are even older than it. However, their minds are so alien from yours that even trying to understand what they are would shatter your self like a sheet of glass. They don't care about mortal lives either, any more than any of you care about insects, you only notice them when they start to irritate you and then you crush them with your sole. However, there is one exception. Nyarlathotep loves mortals in each of Their masks. It is a difficult and demanding love, rather like the love that a gardener gives to the flowers in his garden. Proper care sometimes requires pruning or pulling out plants that are growing inappropriately, but also protects them from bad weather and pests. It may seem objectifying to you, but it is still much more than some people received from their mothers." she looked pointedly at Catra , who clenched her jaw angrily, and Melog growled, turning red. "Horde Prime irritated him. The Creeping Chaos did not care about the deaths of millions. After all, dying is the only thing mortals can do well, although even in this aspect you can disappoint, as one sorceress proved. However, the destruction that Horde Prime wreaked was unacceptable. Destroying entire civilizations was an unimaginable waste of potential. Horde Prime was like a unruly, stupid brat who uprooted plants in his garden and trampled on young shoots." When Lady Cala began to talk about Horde Prime, Brother Blade began to look at the noblewoman in disbelief. Horde Prime has been referred to by many different terms, but never as a brat. „The Great Outer God began to devise countless schemes to punish this pompous idiot... However, significant complications occurred. When they touched the sorceress's mind, they learned everything she knew, even her deepest secrets, which she was not even aware of. What they heard disturbed them. For They remembered the terrible weapons the First Ones had created. Giving her to Horde Prime was like giving a spoiled child a can of gasoline and matches. Everything he had cherished over many eons could be lost because of this idiot's childish malice. So They made another plan, a great plan, because its key element was to be me." she bowed courtly to them and continued. "I was made! It cost an unimaginable amount of resources and effort, but I assure you it was worth it!" she performed a pirouette to present herself in all her glory. “I was created for one purpose only, to teach Horde Prime humility . For this purpose, I was to go to Etheria and become a character from the legends that this sorceress loved so much, i.e. She-Ra . Unfortunately, as you can guess, there was one obstacle in the way of fulfilling this plan. No one, not even Nyarlathotep, was able to determine Etheri's location... But fortunately, the great outer God had a certain sorceress there, whom he marked with a ritual that made it necessary for her to contact them, otherwise she would face a terrible and torturous death. But the cunning witch found a way to cheat fate, even if it was so degrading. She never made contact with the Creeping Chaos after that, perhaps out of scruples, but I personally believe she was simply too cowardly to face Nyarlathotep again. But the Creeping Chaos has countless minions who possess immeasurable resources. A large research center and observatory was built on the planet Nocturnus, controlled by a certain Doctor Sidonius.” she looked at Catra, who pricked up her ears. “I think you know where this is going. After some time, it was possible to determine Etheria's location, so the construction of a teleportation machine was started , which would in the future transfer one miracle child to a planet cut off from the rest of the universe. However, it was difficult, years passed, the wonderful creature that I am appeared in the world, and scientists still did not find Etheria. But then something was detected, a portal opening straight from where Etheria was. We even managed to locate the place from which the gate was opened. However, the chief arch-blasphemer , leader of the cultists who owned the facility, forbade the Doctor from sending the divine child, despite the ancient scientist's strong assurances that the object sent to Etheria would be safe. It was decided to test the device on something much less valuable, something that was bought for pennies and no one cared about it. So they put a kid who absolutely no one wanted into an applesauce box and pulled a lever.„ Lady Cala smiled venomously at Catra, who stood hunched as if a heavy weight was pressing down on her. Adora walked over to her wife to hug her and she teleported next to her and did the same. She understood how difficult it must have been for her friend. The words of this monstrous creature confirmed everything Shadow had been saying all these years in the horde. She looked at Lady Cala , whose eyes sparkled with cruel joy.

„Haven't we already established this? Continuing. Unfortunately, the moment the kid disappeared through the portal, something strange happened Someone from Etheri, a Being called Light Hope, hacked into the facility's systems and caused the portal to explode, killing all the scientists except Dr. Sidonius, killing a vampire is really not easy. Meanwhile, I came to Carurystal, to a family that had the misfortune to have the surname Grayskull. Believe it or not, the founder of the family was simply a pirate. Because of you, I was condemned to a boring life, devoid of purpose and meaning.” she looked at them with hatred. But then Catra burst out laughing and said.

„You blame a helpless child for being condemned to become a child soldier instead of you while you lived in luxury? Do you hear yourself, how stupid you are?” The cat girl could barely contain her bitter mirth. Lady Cala just smiled wider. However, she mentioned something the Aristocrat had talked about earlier and asked.

„What deal were you talking about?

Lady Cala looked at her gently and tilted her head as if considering an answer.

„Agreement between Shadow Weaver and Nyarlathotep. It is because of her that you have the honor of being in my distinguished company!” she bowed to them once again.

„Will you tell us what its conditions were?” She asked the Aristocrat, not expecting that she would give them an answer, this time the Aristocrat surprised her. She stared at them for a moment, now with complete seriousness, until she finally said.

„To save the universe.”

They looked at her confused.

„Save the universe in what sense? After all, Horde Prime has been annihilated!” she exclaimed, but the aristocrat laughed.

„Horde Prime was a bit of a nuisance, but to immediately become a threat? Oh no! There are already powers in the galaxy that could deal with him, in the case of a Star Empire even without effort. You know, they're the funny guys who hosted your mother. No, Horde Prime's time has passed. I'm talking about someone completely different...„ She looked at Adora . “I'm talking about your compatriots, Princess of Power.”

„But they were destroyed by Horde Prime ! He told me about it himself!” Adora exclaimed, looking confused.

„Oh, you really are so gullible. He was talking a lot of nonsense, if even some of it was true... The Primes were very powerful... they are extremely powerful... Horde Prime had no chance against them... Even if he was able to stand up to his masters.”

She opened her eyes wide.

„Does this mean that the First Ones created Horde Prime?” she asked, she wasn't even surprised by this news. That explained a lot.

„Yes... At least partially. Unfortunately, I don't know everything, only what has been deemed appropriate to reveal to me. The First Ones waged war, a war against many adversaries, who together began to triumph over your Adora's compatriots. That's why they created the Heart of Etheria. But they weren't as stupid as you might think. They didn't put everything on one card. They decided to create an army, powerful, even invincible and, most importantly, absolutely devoted to their orders. The heart seemed to have more potential, although it wasn't initially intended to be a doomsday weapon, but eventually it became one, further proof that when you give mortals great power, they only have enough imagination to cause a really big explosion. The First Ones were few in number, and, having learned from the experiences of one of the races they had once defeated, they did not want to entrust their fate to the AI. But they discovered something, an ancient artifact with an entire pocket dimension. There was a creature living there that offered its help. With her help, a powerful clone army was created in a hidden sector... However, before it was ready, a rebellion organized by Mara broke out. It covered the entire Empire, especially the colonies that suffered most from the capital's imperialist ambitions. After losing Etheria, everything fell apart. The Empire fell and its capital, Eternia, hid in an inaccessible dimension. The rebels were forgiven for the sins of their former rulers. However, they were preparing vengeance. The Great Army was waiting in hiding, slowly conquering distant worlds and growing in strength. The being they released from the Artifact took over this army. However, the First Ones deceived their ally. They tore apart his mind, melted it down and forged it into something new. He became Horde Prime, the overseer of the Horde. He was ordered to exact revenge on his former enemies and traitors, but their plans were much more ambitious, as he was to rid the galaxy of intelligent life. He was doing quite well, but he was imperfect." Lady Cala smiled at Brother Blade. "His nature as a demented megalomaniac. Instead of being a tool to cleanse the galaxy, he began building an empire. Not very well functioning, which he was slowly destroying anyway, but it was still a violation of his orders. He fulfilled his mission slower and slower. However, its former rulers were dissatisfied, so they decided to introduce a new plan. I'm not sure what happened next, because obviously we have no contact with the First Ones, but first they decided to use a simpler method. So they sent a certain child to Etheria. I guess we now know what happened next." The aristocrat looked at Adora, smiling contemptuously.

„So everything is fine. After all, Adora ruined their plans! We are safe now!„ she said with hope in her voice. But when Lady Cala smiled broadly at her, she realized that she was very wrong.

„No, you're not. For the First Ones have Many Servants. Including a Hunger That Cannot Be Satiated. And believe me, they won't hesitate to use it. For you have destroyed not one, but two of their toys. He will not forget this for you. And after all, they have a Galaxy to cleanse.” said the monster with a beautiful face and sat down cross-legged, resting his head on his hand. There was silence. She felt as if the entire room had become icy cold. She looked at her friends. Catra flattened her ears, and Melog curled up at her companion's feet. Adora stood firm, staring at the Aristocrat, but she could see that the princess of power was trembling internally. She herself… Well, she was absolutely terrified. But she pulled herself together.

„What proof do we have that what you say is true?” she said, trying to sound unfazed. Lady Cala laughed and said.

„I have absolutely none. I don't know if everything I told you is just a lie. After all, what are we all, even me, just specks in the endless darkness? But do you dare to take the risk? Will you sacrifice the lives of the inhabitants of Etheria and other worlds because you consider my behavior inconsistent with your moral standards? It's a matter of your conscience, luckily I don't have one.”

Catra, however, grinned menacingly.

„So that's what this whole speech was for? So you can scare us into releasing you! You are a faithful disciple of Shadow Weaver. Girls! Let's get out of here! We can handle it ourselves!” she looked at them and took a step as if she was going to leave. Lady Cala snorted contemptuously and stood up.

„Will you be able to handle it? So who? I was once read a fairy tale about the Princess Of Nothingness. A princess who, deprived of her kingdom and homeland, wanders around the courts, counting on support. I hope that the teachers who read it to me wanted me to learn humility... Personally, I think I'm too humble... I wonder which of you could be called the Princess of Nothingness. Are you Adora?” she looked at the Princess of Power. “You have renounced your nation... You have twice betrayed those you fought for... You have no one and nothing. The only thing that makes you valuable is the power you received through some sick joke of fate. But this power can leave you at any moment, or, what would be much funnier, consume you. Or Maybe you.” she looked at Catra . “A kitten abandoned so many times… Unwanted… It's probably occurred to you more than once that it's your fault. That others saw what you were like deep inside. That you're not good enough. That you are a disappointment. Now you have turned out to be some kind of princess, inheritor of a fallen kingdom, heiress of a lost throne. But how long will your father, your friends and your wife be there for you when you become the same? It was easy now to keep her true self in check, but when times get tough, and believe me they do, won't the real Catra reveal her true self to the world again? What about your rights, Queen Glimmer?” she looked her straight in the eyes. “Ruler of a Kingdom built on the graves of the murdered… I wonder if your mother knew the truth that I learned yesterday…”

„The truth about the fate of the true inhabitants of Etheria.” When she said this, Catra lowered her head and Melog turned blue. “Oh, you already know! Who would have thought that you would be willing to share the truth you discovered with your wife and friend?”

„What is she talking about?” she asked Catra , who started talking in a low voice.

„Then, in the underground city, we came across a painting. It depicted the previous She”Ra. She... belonged to a race that no longer exists...„ she said quietly, and Lady Cala nodded.

„In fact, the First Ones exterminated the original inhabitants to steal She-Ra's power, and then brought in the workers, whose descendants now inhabit Etheria. You rule a kingdom that is not your own, Dear Glimmer... Just like you, Adora , you rule the power that your ancestors stole from the true inhabitants of the planet...

Then there was silence. She knew that most of what Lady Cala said wasn't true. She wanted to hurt them, sow seeds of doubt in their souls. She could only hope that nothing would sprout. But that last one… It completely undermined the way they saw themselves… The way she saw herself. Who was she then... Did they have the right to call themselves inhabitants of Etheria ? However, she decided that she would not give this woman the satisfaction.

„You have power, I cannot deny that to you, but it comes from the being from whom you come. Everything you have was given to you by your master and can be taken away by him at any time. You are just his tool, used to fulfill the purpose for which you were created. However, you have nothing behind it . No one who would care about you, who would worry about you. All you have is the void where others have their hearts.”

Lady Cala stared at her speechless, then growled.

„I swear by the power in my veins that I will take your planet away from you and turn the lives of its inhabitants into a nightmare.”

„Try it.„ she said quietly and, taking her friend and Brother Blade's hands, she teleported to her chambers, leaving the furious monster to pound its fists into the force field.

She woke up.

For a brief moment she thought that she was once again in captivity to Queen Angela, that the war was still going on, that Catra and Adora were on opposite sides, that the last few years had been just a dream... And then she touched her face and noticed that she was not wearing a mask She closed her eyes. She felt a pounding pain in her head. She examined her head, it turned out that her wound was bandaged, the inhabitants of Etheria cared even for their enemies. She smiled bitterly and washed herself in the sink. She removed the holographic mask and set it aside. While washing herself, she saw another reflection in the mirror instead of her own. She didn't feel ashamed, even though she was half”naked, nor did she look back, because she knew that a person who contacts someone through a mirror image does not intend to spy on others in negligee, although few would find her body attractive... Or maybe they did? It doesn't matter now. The man on the other side wore SLR glasses and a top hat. He had fair, even pale skin and dark hair, and his features resembled those of a bird. She didn't recognize him, nor did he trust him, but at least he wasn't the certain Horned Saihe she had also met in the mirror so many years ago. It was from him that her journey that led her here began.

„Good afternoon Miss Daisy or I guess Shadow Weaver... The latter name suits you much better.” he said and bowed politely, although humbly.

„Yes, of all the names I've had, this one suits me best. However, you know my identity, but I don't know yours. That's a shameful imbalance, don't you think?” she asked, raising an eyebrow. At least it was a polite conversation, she couldn't hope for more like it in the near future.

„Ah, I'm so sorry. My manners have deteriorated a bit over the last few decades, the result of spending too much time in the company of bandits and other people of questionable origin. I am Doctor Sidonius...„ he replied to her, changing his accent several times „ Ah yes, the scholar who condemned an innocent child to me.” she said darkly, feeling a sudden surge of hatred towards both the scientist and herself.

„Oh, dear sorceress, the way you treated her is only your fault.” he laughed mockingly. She nodded.

„You're right, but testing a teleportation device on a defenseless child is undoubtedly a monstrosity.”

He shrugged and said with mild amusement in his voice.

„I am a vampire, which means for many people one of the worst monsters. Isn't it part of my nature to do atrocities?”

She snorted with anger and contempt.

„I don't feel like playing sophistry. You certainly didn't come here to peek at the scarred elf. If you say that's what you came for, I'll have every right to laugh contemptuously.”

He bowed apologetically and said.

„Well, yes, both of us have limited time, although yours is definitely more limited than mine. I came to pay tribute to our mutual friends.”

„Which one of them, because I have the impression that we have surprisingly many of them. Catra and her sister, friends Eti, Bina and Lady Ka... I suspect Arkan-tar is among them too. A surprising number of people for two who are just now meet” she said with a bit of venom in her voice. Not enough to kill, but enough for the toxins to enter the blood.

„We have even more. For I travel with Archduke Adamson and Prince Zed.” he said, and this time she looked at him with surprise.

„Archduke Adamson and Zed are working with you?” she asked, quickly analyzing the implications of what she had just learned. She could imagine reasons why someone like the Archduke would want to work with someone like this vampire, and although everything she could think of had very unpleasant implications, but the ancient Automaton didn't strike her as the type of person interested in being friends with someone like Doctor Sidonius. Prince Zed was a cunning fox who usually knew more than others, but she couldn't see him as more than a gossip, or at most an information broker.

„Kane and I have known each other for a very long time, and Prince Zed is a really interesting person.” said the Vampire with a Carurystal Accent. Something about Sidonius' words disturbed her greatly.

„For a long time? Is that what you mean?” she said slowly.

„Since the time of the Lost Golarion, it seems... The memories of that period are very distant, but I still remember them better than anything that happened during the Gap. Yes, the Archduke is really that old, although for consolation I will tell you that not only you have been deceived, but also all the inhabitants of his planet. It's a matter of an artifact, a very long story for which we neither have time nor inclination.”

„So why are you disturbing my peace? Are you willing to trade what I know in exchange for helping to free Me? Or do you just want to chat? I don't drink anymore, even though I want to, but I'm sure the guards will bring me tea whenever I ask for it. The people of Etheria are extremely kind to their captives.” she said, not hiding the anger in her voice. She had some really difficult times ahead of her and needed time to prepare for the meeting with Catra and Adora... And Glimmer...

Dr. Sidonius nodded as if he accepted her arguments and said.

„I came here to warn you, my dear Shadow Weaver!” exclaimed Doctor Sidonus in a theatrical tone.

„I was at this performance during the Winter Festival when I was visiting a school located on Cala’s land.” she said in a grave tone. This Vampire was a surprisingly frivolous person for someone who had such a good reputation.

„This is my daughter's favorite story, I have read it to her so many times that I know it by heart. Moreover, it perfectly reflects the situation you find yourself in.” said the undead scholar. She rolled her eyes. She appreciated good stories and interesting metaphors, but only when the situation fit, and this one definitely didn't fit.

„Just say what you have to say and leave me the damnedest alone.” she said with resignation.

„Today you will be visited by three ghosts! The Ghost of the Vile Past, the Ghost of the Grim Present, and the Ghost of the Lost Future. But don't worry, because later the rescue will come!” he exclaimed, making a face like from a street theater and laughing. She thought for a moment. The first ghost was definitely Catra and Adora... The other two were a much bigger mystery. Lost Future… she suspected who it could be. This possibility was also painful, but it was the pain she deserved. But the Grim Present? She had some guesses, but nothing more. So she decided to see what the Vampire would talk if he asked directly.

„Lady Cala somehow managed to justify her reason for visiting me, or does she care what others think?

The undead scholar laughed and said.

„Unfortunately, your new and noble protégé decided to take off the mask of a noble lady and revealed her true face to the inhabitants of Etheria, and sadly they did not like it very much. Well, apparently she was too flamboyant."

„I suspect it's because she tried to murder someone, am I wrong? „ she said in a resigned tone. This made it all extremely complicated... Their orders from the Creeping Chaos were clear, though in their graciousness they had given them a lot of leeway in interpreting them, but currently they were both grounded and she had no idea how much patience the Great Outer God had left. Although they was a being older than the stars, they existed in the space-time of ordinary mortals. the had to take the passage of time into account. And they lost too much of it with their arrogant pride. It was difficult to count on the understanding of a creature that was the embodiment of evil and chaos. She had to think of something, and fast, or the consequences might be unimaginable, and not just because of Nyarlathotep's Wrath. For she knew that the First Ones were waiting to exact revenge on the those who were so dear to her.

„But how do you know all this, dear doctor? Have you gained prophetic abilities in exchange for losing your beating heart?" she asked sarcastically.

„Oh, nothing like that!" the Vampire laughed, genuinely amused. "These are rather the skills of a hacker and spy drone controller." she had a hard time stopping herself from looking around the room. "You can acquire a lot of different skills during such a long life, unless you are extremely lazy. However, I have to end this fascinating discussion, but someone may come here soon and I don't want to reveal my presence here. I guess you won't report me either, because I think you'd rather have me as a friend, right?" he asked and without waiting for her answer he disappeared. She sighed. So she was left alone. So she finished washing and changed the dressing and made a bandage from a piece of bedclothes. She knew she should ask the guards to bring her some bandages, but she couldn't bring herself to call someone from the castle. She knew it was stupid, but she felt that as long as none of the guards came in, she would remain free... But had she been free in the last thirty years? First she served Hordak, constantly trying to please him, and now her master was Nyarlathotep, who literally possessed her soul. In fact, during the months she was held captive, Glimmer was more free than she was in Castle Grayskull. Even during the occupation, it enjoyed more freedom than in the previous decades. She doubted whether the Queen of Etheria would be so understanding towards her this time. After all, she had broken her trust last time. Besides, Catra was now the Grand Marshal... The thought of facing her terrified her more than the prospect of facing the Wrath of the Great Outer God. She wasn't afraid that her former protégé would do something to her. Adora and Glimmer wouldn't let her anyway... But first of all, it wasn't that same Catra who pulled that lever. This girl has already learned what love and security are... Of course, her return may destroy everything and scratch old wounds. The girl harmed herself by imprisoning her... No, she shouldn't blame her for her mistakes. In the end, she allowed herself to be captured, she didn't take proper precautions, forgetting that her unwanted daughter could recognize her even in a Holographic mask.

She wasn't sure what Lady Cala might have done to get her imprisoned, but it must have been something terrible. If she had revealed her true nature to them, it would probably not be easy for her to gain their trust... Though that might have been too far-fetched. The only thing she could count on from Catra and the others was a chance to be heard... But perhaps the fact that Lady Cala revealed her true nature could prove to be auspicious for her. After all, there was no longer a ban on mentioning who she actually worked for, since Lady Cala told who, or rather what, she was... Maybe if she talked about how great a threat could come to Etheria, and even threaten the whole of Etheria. To prevent it, everyone will have to join forces, not only the inhabitants of this planet, or even Horde Prime's Empire, but everyone, perhaps all beings in the Galaxy... But what were the chances that she would be able to convince Glimmer and everyone else? She will be very lucky if she manages to make herself heard. As she looked at it now, the whole thing seemed more and more absurd. What was she thinking? She was just an ugly, bitter woman who never believed in anything or loved anyone... She once again imagined that she would be a hero, that she would stand in the way of empires, even though she was just a blade of grass in front of a hurricane. She laughed loudly at her own Arrogance until one of the guards came in to see if she was okay, but when she looked at him, he let out a strangled scream and ran out. Yep, she forgot to put on the holographic mask she took off while washing. Now she decided not to wear it. Throughout her stay in the Fright Zone, she hid her face as if to deny what she had done. As if, along with the ugliness of her face, she was trying to hide the ugliness of her soul. Never again. If she was to accept her villainy, she could no longer hide behind a mask. Let those she hurt have the opportunity to look her in the face.

She must have fallen asleep for a while as she lay on that soft bed.. This hasn't happened to her in decades, at least when she was sober. She heard footsteps, the clatter of heavy soldiers' boots, reminding her of all those years she spent in the Fright Zone. Someone stopped in front of the door and gave a few instructions to the guards, and then the door opened and a person she had not expected entered. She saw Lord Admiral Felix Antares himself, along with Lady Ka and that terrible wolf monster. The three of them entered the chamber and the woman in the half-mask unfolded a small device.

„This really useful invention will provide us with a bit of discretion, which is so important when talking to people like us.” Antares stated in a very polite tone. Lady Ka set up the strange contraption for a few moments, then looked at it and grimaced.

„At least I don't hide my ugly face behind a mask anymore. “ she drawled, staring at the wicked woman, who giggled again in response and said.

„If you saw what I hide behind the mask, you would be quite surprised.”

But then the Lord Admiral signaled for Lady Ka to be silent and walked up to the magical barrier and said.

„We can finally meet face to face. I must admit that I didn't think Miss Daisy would hide such an interesting secret. Anyway, I feel honored to meet you in person.” he bowed to her respectfully.

„I can't say the same about myself. When I was with your second daughter, I heard a little about you. I wonder how Catra will react when I tell her who her father is.” she said, summoning her proudest tone, but the Lord Adimral smiled slightly and said.

„If she believes you... But I didn't come here to discuss my past. I'm here to thank you.”

„For what?” she asked, honestly surprised.

„For everything you did to make my daughter who she is. You made me proud of her. Yes, you had to be harsh with her, but after all, shouldn't the Scepter of a Monarch be forged in the fire of suffering? You saved me a lot of problems by taking on the burden of hardening her soul. I somewhat regret that we meet under such circumstances, because I cannot in any way show you the gratitude that you have worked hard for all these years to make her a worthy member of House Antares.

She stared at the Lord Admiral for a moment, wondering if she had understood his words correctly. This person was grateful to her for the way she treated his daughter? For years of torment and humiliation just because she was in a bad mood. She took it out on Catra because another experiment failed, because Hordak demanded successes that she couldn't give him, because she couldn't stand her self-hatred. Sometimes she told herself that she was doing all this for the good of her ward, although deep in her black heart she knew that she was just doing something mean. It didn't make Catra strong... It was Catra who found the strength within herself to not break despite years of torment. First she found it in anger and hatred, and then in Love for Adora and friendship. This individual didn't understand it... But what could she expect from an individual who dropped nuclear warheads on his own nation?

„You know what, Antares? I used to believe that Lady Cala was a wicked and vile creature, but I came to the conclusion that I couldn't blame her for anything, after all, she was born a monster, I can't expect the same from her as I do from mortals... Horde Prime was undoubtedly evil, but If what I heard from the Crawling Chaos was true, then even he was merely a victim... At least to some extent. I am vile and evil to the core, but I am fully aware of my wickedness. But you, Lord Admiral Antares, are a bastard, a miserable wretch in an expensive uniform who is so blind that he cannot even see the ugliness of his own soul. You can wear a mask of righteousness now, but believe me, all masks eventually fall, I know that, and when Catra sees your true colors, she will disown you and you will end up in a place like me now, if you are lucky.”

Antares looked at her for a moment. She couldn't read what he was thinking, but she hoped she had put a finger in his inflated ego. He finally said, his voice almost as polite as before. It almost made a big difference.

„Well, on the other hand, you shed a lot of my family's blood, though mostly symbolically. Despite all my gratitude to you, such an offense must be met with a just punishment. It's nothing personal, I assure you. And thank you for the warning, sometimes in my arrogance I forget that I make mistakes.„ and he moved to leave, but before he left the room, she called to him.

„You say you value your blood so much... I respect that, so I'll share some news with you. Ask Lady Ka what happened to your other daughter's left hand... Why does she have to wear a glove. – she said, smiling triumphantly. The Lord Admiral looked at Lady Ka, a blue light flashing in his one living eye.

„What is she talking about... „ Antares said in a voice that froze even her black heart. Lady Ka turned pale and began to slowly back away.

„She started it... she scratched my face to the bone, so I punished her. I ordered her to remove all the claws on her left hand. This is what discipline looked like in our company, do you understand?” she said in a pleading tone.

„I see.” said the Lord Admiral, grabbing the hilt of his saber and cutting off Lady Ka's fingers in one fluid movement. The woman let out a loud scream and grabbed her injured hand. However, the guards didn't run in, so apparently the device was working properly and no one heard anything. She herself was in a bit of shock, the sudden brutality of such a composed man as the Lord Admiral even astonished her, but she also felt vindictive satisfaction in seeing Lady Ka receive her well-deserved punishment.

„Lord Admiral... I only followed the Regulations... These were the penalties we had in the Company, this is how Jantar treated us.” Lady Ka said. There was no blood flowing from the wound, and the edges of the Lord Admiral's sword blade glowed red, so the wound was definitely cauterized. However, she guessed that the pain must have been terrible, but the clone woman remained conscious and even started dressing the wound. She may have been a crazy psychopath, but in all fairness she was tough.

„You did it not out of concern for my daughter's upbringing, but out of a desire to vent your anger. Normally I would let you two resolve this dispute between you two, but you have permanently crippled her. Perhaps what you did has created a rift between us and that's why he refuses to join me at all costs. Perhaps I shouldn't have let Jantar take care of her upbringing. In his obsessive pursuit of perfection, he tried to suppress her natural temperament, which was so important to the ruler. I don't blame you, your father was a very toxic man, but you still had to be punished somehow. It's nothing serious, eventually you will grow new ones and transplant them, or implant a cybernetic replacement. I assure you that implants are much better than real organs... And believe me, if I didn't respect you so much, you would be punished much more severely for what you did. " he said, while the wolf-like beast devoured the severed fingers. Lady. Ka nodded, then looked at her and smiled a very nasty smile. Well, whatever this woman could do to her was nothing compared to the punishment Nyarlathotep could inflict on her... Or her own conscience...

„I won't be any more ready." she replied evasively. She wasn't really ready. Previously, she was aware that Shadow Weaver was alive, but until now it was a distant specter, something you don't think about every day, but you know that you will have to face it. A bit like being aware of your own mortality. Now she also felt that a part of her had died. The part that had been joyful during the past five years... She was afraid she would never be happy again.

You can't let yourself be consumed by such dark thoughts. Then she will win. she thought, gritting her teeth.

„Are you sure everything's okay?" Glimmer asked, looking at her with concern, but this only irritated her.

„And how can it be when the woman who has been abusing me for almost my entire life and tried to separate me from my beloved comes back from the dead, shows up at my wedding and tries to kill one of my friends!„ she growled at Glimmer, causing her to back away and Melog turning red. She closed her eyes and said.

„I'm sorry, Glimmer. I just don't want to see her, but I know that if I don't look her in the eyes now, I won't find peace."

Her wife embraced her and said in a tender tone.

„Darling, it's hard for all of us because she hurt us all, but you especially badly. I'm just wondering if you should wait a while after what Lady Cala said.”

„ No, I want to get this all over with and focus on freeing Entrapta and the empress.”

Glimmer nodded and took their hands.

This time she quickly got over the nausea that usually accompanies teleportation. She was sitting on the bed, but as soon as she noticed their presence, she raised her head. Glimmer let out a strangled cry and Adora looked away. Shadow Weaver wasn't wearing her mask now, and everyone could see her disfigured face. It was probably the first time Glimmer had seen her... It wasn't a pleasant sight for those who weren't prepared for it. Even they, who had spent so many years with her, could hardly look at her. Looking at this hag’s face always meant suffering, or at least screaming. Adora instinctively looked away, she felt like it too, but she overcame it, she would look at Shadow Weaver without fear!

„Hi Catra... And Adora and of course Glimmer.„ said the Dark Sorceress, looking at her feet. When she heard her voice, she felt her blood boil in her veins. After everything she had done, after all the countless humiliations and all the suffering she had caused them all, she had the nerve to come back to their wedding after five years and all she had to say to them was hi Catra?... It was as if she had spit in her face.

„You should be dead...„ she drawled, struggling to control her anger. Shadow Weaver looked up at her.

„I said the same thing when I stood before Carsai called the King.” said the Dark Sorceress in a low voice. By voice. She remembered the name, it was in the book Aize had shown her… She remembered the creature in the illustration. What was the name of this book? Thousand of Thousand’s Masks… The same term was used not long ago by Lady Cala… She was referring to Nyarlathotep…. She smiled at her former tormentor.

„So you read about them in a book... Clever, but you forgot that I also read sometimes... „ She smiled mockingly at Shadow Weaver, but the older woman smiled sadly.

„So you managed to get one copy after all... If I had it, everything would have been different. We would live in a different world.” she said, using the same words Mikah used a few weeks ago. This only fueled her fury.

„Fairy tales and fabrications, I would expect something better thought out from someone who has always prided himself on being smarter than everyone she knows.” she said, trying to imbue every word she spoke with pure contempt. Out of the corner of her eye, she saw Adora seem concerned. Her wife approached the dark Sorceress and asked in a firm but calm tone.

„What's the point of all this? Why did you come back here? You had the entire Galaxy to yourself... Do you really hate us so much that you had to come here to take away our joy...”

Shadow Weaver shook her head…

„I don't hate you... I... I was forced to come back here partly because of the agreement I made... But I also did it of my own free will...„ She raised her head and looked them straight in the eyes. “Etheria is in terrible danger…”

„Yes Yes Yes.„ She interrupted in an irritated voice. „Your new ward has already told you everything. You came here to save us all, because we are too stupid and too clumsy and we can't cope on our own, so we have to free you.” She looked condescendingly at the Dark Sorcerer. With each sentence she uttered, her contempt for this woman grew.

„She basically said what Catra says, although I'm guessing the Calamity addition is everything about us.” Glimmer said thoughtfully, glancing at her sideways. „ She was talking about some Hunger, what did she mean... „ Her friend's voice was filled with concern, as if she believed what Shadow Weaver and her psychopathic minion were saying.

„ The Hunger That Cannot Be Satiated... The Thousand of Thousand's Maws... is a euphemistic term for the Swarm, the greatest Scourge of the Galaxy. You don't have to take my word for it as to how big of a threat it is. Ask anyone outside Horde Prime's Empire, even your Father, and he won't lie to you about this one thing. His ego won't let him do that...„ said the Dark Sorceress, smiling darkly. At the sight, she felt another wave of rage flood her heart.

„I know what you're getting at, you nasty snake! But we can't be manipulated that easily anymore! My father never lied to me, unlike you. He even told me about the Starstone!" it growled at Shadow Weaver.

„What Starstone are you talking about?" Glimmer asked worriedly.

„I'll explain later." she replied without even looking at it. "You want to set me apart from my father, just like you did with Glimmer and Adora, manipulate me just like you did the last time I imprisoned you!"

„Listen to me Catra, your father is different than...." the Dark Sorceress was saying, but she didn't let her continue.

„BE SILENT AND LISTEN TO ME!" She roared at the top of her throat. She took two deep breaths and continued speaking, calming down a bit. – You raised me for most of my life. During this time, you have given me nothing but contempt and pain. You abused me every chance you got. You can't even imagine what it's like to feel like the whole world hates you! I can't count how many nights I cried myself to sleep. How many times did I just want to disappear? If it weren't for Adora... You couldn't even die without showing me that I was trash." she hid her face in her hands. "Have you ever loved me?" she asked, swallowing tears.

Shadow Weaver thought about her answer for a few moments before finally speaking.

„No... Anyway, not like you deserve... I'm sorry... I'm sorry for everything I've done to you."

She stood there not knowing what to do, what to think... What to feel... This apology was worse than if she had slapped her in the face or used dark magic. She took away her hatred... She even took that away from her. Before, it was an important pillar of her being. She was certain of few things in this world until now. One was love for Adora, the other was hatred for Shadow Weaver. Now one of those pillars had fallen, and her whole world was rocking. One more wound inflicted on her by that damned bitch. But she had to pull herself together somehow, at least for a while.

„You will not be forgiven, because what you did to me... to all of us is unforgivable. Just tell me, were you the one who mutilated my sister's hand?" Did you hurt her as much as you hurt me?

Shadow Weaver shook her head.

„I didn't do anything to Eti... I even saved her life several times... To tell you the truth, I've only known her for a little over a month. As for Eti's hand... Ask Lady Ka about it. Also, be sure to ask her where she got her new fingers."

For a moment she felt uneasy, as if the Dark Sorcerer had stirred up some old suspicions, but he dismissed them. She smiled at her former tormentor and said.

„Your charge will rot in the dungeon, choking on its venom, but a different fate awaits you. The Star sisters, especially Halo, will be happy to take care of you." she ignored Glimmer's astonished look. „You know that everyone thought she was crazy until now because she claimed that you were alive... „ she offered her hand to the queens and together with Adora they disappeared in a flash of teleportation.

Everyone recognized Asindesa di Vir as a heroine. After all, she saved Adora, their She-Ra, the One who saved the Galaxy. Everyone looked at her with respect. The previous reserve disappeared completely. Future generations of Hell Knights visiting Etheria will probably be grateful to her for having a good reputation here, of course, as long as they don't ruin it themselves. However, she felt that she had lost her life. The woman she loved so much turned out to be a cultist, a servant of one of the most nefarious forces in the galaxy. The creature she was caring for revealed itself as a monstrous spawn of an Entity worse than demons... And she was actually a traitor or something of that sort. After all, she had developed a close relationship with the enemy, very close even. Revenge was also taken away from her. The monster turned out to be invulnerable to her weapons; she had previously hoped that maybe it was given to her for this purpose. So why did she receive them if not to fight evil that could not be opposed in any other way...

She had no idea what she should do next. She believed that she had to give up command of the contingent of knights, and in the second, much more extensive message, she decided to confess her sins and ask for a quick trial. Until then, she will stay here and pass on hers knowledge of fighting the Great Old Ones to the locals, as the locals have limited knowledge in this field. But now there was one thing left for her to do before she went to sleep.

Due to her newly acquired Hero status, no one stopped her, so she easily reached the room where the prisoner was held. When she asked the guards to let her in, they hesitated for a moment, then parted and let her in... Miss Daisy... Shadow Weaver sat on the bed. She didn't wear a mask, she could see her scarred face, in which she saw so much beauty... Seeing someone enter, the sorceress looked up, and when she recognized her, she cringed.

„Hello... Shadow Weaver „ she said after a moment's thought. Then they were silent... They were silent for a long time, over a quarter of an hour, until she finally spoke.

„You know, before I met you, I only knew war... Fighting against inhuman beasts that pose a threat to the entire universe. I believed that this was the perfect goal of life... I was not completely happy, but at least somewhat satisfied. Thanks to you, I knew love. A feeling I've never felt before. For a moment, a short moment, I felt that I was the happiest person in the universe... And I lost it... Now I have nothing... Only emptiness in the place of my heart... You shattered me, Shadow Weaver...„ she felt herself crying for the first time since childhood. She took a deep breath and finally asked.

„Have you ever loved me?”

There was silence in the room for a moment, broken by one word.

„Yes”.

This was too much for the Lady of Blades. She turned and went to her chambers to be alone with her despair.

She adjusted her head, which was resting on her wife's muscular shoulder. She must have been asleep for some time without even realizing it. The events of last night were terrible. She was so close to death, although that wasn't what really scared her, it was the creature they faced. This creature was the embodiment of horror, a denial of everything beautiful, a perversion of the laws of nature... It was so close that... she didn't know what exactly threatened them ... but it was definitely something terrible. However, they will be able to work through it, they just need a little time and love, and there was plenty of the latter. Others had it much worse…

It turned out that there was another monster hiding in Brightmoon Castle, much more insidious than what they were fighting. She remembered what a shock it was for her when it turned out that Flutterina was actually Double Trouble. Only the shapeshifting spy was actually quite a nice person, wonderfully parodying them all, and Lady Cala was... Something else... She wanted to murder, first Adora, and then the children of Spinerella and Netossa. What did they do to her? She could see the cold evil in her eyes as she looked at them as if they were something nasty stuck to her shoe... And that smile... As if all the pain she was about to cause made her happy. There was something so monstrous about her that even Horde Prime seemed less inhuman, more understandable compared to that creature

Additionally, Catra captured Shadow Weaver, the woman who contributed to the death of her wife's mothers. In fact, unlike the others, she didn't feel such dislike towards her. She felt great suffering and anger in that bitter woman, somewhat similar to what she saw in Catra, only with a different shade, and she also had a knack for plants, although her style of gardening was not to her taste. She didn't know what the Grand Marshal was going to do with her, but nothing good would come of it, especially since Entrapta and the Empress had been kidnapped. The Inventor Princess was sometimes very overwhelming, but she was actually very likable. Scorpia often visited her and had to admit that the inventor could be very Empathetic, as a wedding gift she gave her a self-heating meditation mat, a very practical invention. She and Scorpia would take part in freeing her, she just hoped that Lonnie wouldn't hurt her. After all, she was Catra's friend and they served in the Horde together for a while...

However, it was Frosta who suffered the greatest harm... She was hit by a spell and has been in a coma since yesterday. For now, her condition was stable... But it was unknown when she would wake up, or even if it would happen at all. They could only wait to see what fate would bring. Therefore, he and his wife decided that they would take the first shift to watch over the ice princess. They were tired anyway, so they wouldn't be of much help during the meeting. Next to the girl was also this strange creature from ancient city, which wrapped itself around her as if it were a blanket... He must have loved his companion very much...

Finally, sleep fell upon them, although it was not very deep. She didn't have any dreams, which made her incredibly happy, because what they could bring now wouldn't be nice. While she was half asleep, resting her head on her wife's shoulder, she felt a warm, gentle voice in her head.

„I hope I will be able to help this child somehow."

She opened her half-conscious eyes and saw a tall Insectoid in an emerald robe. The creature looked familiar.

„Hylax ?„ she asked sleepily, and then she felt warm, joyful laughter in her head.

„Oh, that's definitely an exaggeration! I am only a relatively humble servant of the forever queen, although she is often portrayed as one of my species. You probably saw her image somewhere, that's why you are confused.”

„I had a dream once... And you are Shirren ! Just like Ashurk!”she exclaimed, now fully awake.

The insectoid nodded.

„Yes, this is my granddaughter. Her parents asked me to keep an eye on her, but as you've noticed, she's quite... independent and I'm unlikely to protect her from anything she gets herself into.” said the Insectoid in her head. That's when Scorpia woke up. She looked around confused for a moment, and when she saw their new guest, she jumped to her feet, almost saluting. She hadn't given up her soldierly habits, but she loved her for such quirks.

„Oh, I think I fell asleep a bit... Hello... you... uh.” said the former force captain. Shirren laughed amiably again in their minds, making Scorpia flinch slightly.

„I'm Reverend Zimach, he, him, if you're interested. I am a priest of Hylax , the Forever Queen, goddess of friendship and community. I accompany the Fleet, serving with my mystic skills and preaching the glory of living in serene harmony with our fellow people, but I have decided that I will remain on Etheria to explore this planet and meet its inhabitants, and, If they are interested, to impart the teachings of Hylax to them.„ his tone echoing in her head was gentle and cheerful. There was something very nice about this person, she liked him immediately, he didn't irritate her like his granddaughter, although she probably irritated everyone except Entrapta , but she could be just as intense.

„Oh, you're one of those priests they have on Ikarus and Eridani... There aren't many of your kind here... Maybe apart from the Isles of Sorrow or the Singing Jungle... But I believe that the people of Etheria will welcome you warmly and you'll definitely find one here those who will listen to your mistress's teachings.” she said, smiling friendly. Zimach nodded and spoke into their thoughts.

„Yes, it's a strange place because of its approach to matters of Faith, but in a sense that's why it's so fascinating. I think that we priests can learn a lot from people raised outside our influence. Perhaps this will help us serve both the gods and our faithful better.” Said priest.

„Yeah, I know a lot about service, orders and things like that, and honestly, it's probably better not to speak about it to some people... And this speaking in someone's head may not really appeal to people who were, you know... Under the influence of Horde Prime?” said her wife in a very careful tone. Now she understood how unpleasant it must be for her to hear someone's voice in her head. It reminded her too much of when she was chipped and became part of Horde Prime's hivemind.

„Yes, I understand what you mean.„ This time she felt great sadness in the priest's mental voice. “What Horde Prime did to all of you is an unforgivable act, even dark gods like Asmodeus and Zon-Kuthon would not do such a thing. I must admit that Hylax is also the goddess of collective consciousness, but not one that enslaves and exclude individuality, but allows for the common sharing of emotions and exchange of experiences. It is especially important for me as a priest of the Forever Queen to change the perception of the shared consciousness as something evil and vile... Yes, the mad tyrant has made the work of my brothers and sisters on this planet much more difficult than anywhere else... But in my old age I have become terribly grumpy. I didn't come here to complain about the path I've chosen in life or to talk in vain. I learned that one of the princesses, a girl named Frosta, had fallen victim to Dark Magic and I would like to use my skills as a healer to help her." He finally finished his overly long speech, which echoed in their heads, making her feel like she walked out of the loud concert and into a quiet forest clearing.

„Adora has already used She” Ra's power to heal her, and we also have doctors and healers here.” said Scorpa, looking a bit distrustfully at the priest, who waved his antennae vigorously and said.

„I don't doubt She-Ra's power or the competence of your doctors and healers, but I have some knowledge that you couldn't know... „ he thought for a moment before adding „I served in the army of the Lord Admiral for some time, but not only that. In the fight against the Swarm, Lady Sorrowflame , and not only her, used dark magic to gain an advantage over this terrible enemy. I understand that sometimes greater necessity forces us to resort to means that are morally questionable, but sometimes it is easy to cross the line... I have seen many soldiers who were struck by death magic and fiendish powers when they found themselves in the crossfire... I had to learn how to help them … Moreover, our lady gave us the power to contact those trapped in a black sleep caused by the powers of darkness."

She shuddered when Zimach mentioned Lady Sorrowflame. This creature made her heart grip with terror. She could imagine that many innocents had crossed her path and suffered a fate similar to those of the unfortunate guards. They exchanged uncertain glances. After a few moments, they nodded together.

„I guess we can try." she said, and the three of them approached the girl's bed. She stayed with Zimach, and she sent Scorpia to inform the head of the hospital about what they were going to do. Frosta was pale, and when she touched her hand, it was cold. However, she could feel a pulse, although it was very faint, and the girl's chest was moving, albeit slightly. Frosta was changed into hospital pajamas, Shogi flattened herself and wrapped herself around her like a blanket. As they approached him, he looked at them with his many eyes.

„Don't worry, we're here to help your lady." she said to the Ice Princess's friend, not sure if he understood her. Apparently so, because she saw concern and an unspoken request in his eyes.

„Such friendship with Shogoth... Amazing!" the priest echoed in her head, and then he placed his chitinous hands on the girl. After a moment, his jaws chirped.

„Not good... The spell sent her to the Dreamlands, and that in itself is extremely dangerous, but I feel that some other, dark force is reaching for her... I guess no one here has heard of Charon, the rider of Death.” Shirren could hear fear in her voice .

„No... But is there anything you can do to help her?” She asked, also scared.

„Maybe... But you'll have to help me.” said the priest.

„I? Help?” she was completely surprised that Zimach was turning to her for help.

„Yes... We have a lot in common. You are marked by Hylax ... I will explain what that means later, for now do as I tell you.”

She felt as if she had been wandering these halls for days, maybe much longer... perhaps even her whole life. She had trouble remembering her name... who she was... where she came from. It was as if the past was hidden in a thick fog that could not be penetrated. Maybe if she tried a little harder...

Music brought her back to consciousness. Suddenly she heard someone playing the violin. The music wasn't pretty or pleasant, it was downright irritating and even painful, but it was thanks to it that she regained consciousness. She tripped and almost fell. She blinked and looked around. She was in a wide semicircular corridor covered with strange, incredibly complex patterns. The stone it was made of seemed strangely organic and a bit slippery. The corridor in front of her curved sideways and climbed slightly upwards. Strange multi-colored balls were embedded in its walls, glowing brightly. She had the impression that they were looking at her with curiosity. She shivered, but then she felt a tickle on her cheek and heard a bird chirping. She looked back and saw a reddish-brown cloud with many eyes floating next to her.

„Shogi!” she exclaimed with joy at the sight of her shapeshifting friend. Now that she wasn't alone in this strange place, nothing was scary for her!

„Let's go! I don't know where we are, but it's definitely Shadow Weaver's doing!” she exclaimed, because memories were just starting to come back to her. The dark sorceress hit her with a bolt of black power with which she wanted to hit the Entrapta. She must have been sent to some distant place, perhaps to some new headquarters of hers, some Scare Zone, where she was to be imprisoned... Well, if it was a prison, it was a surprisingly poorly guarded one. She shrugged, because it actually suited her, and moved forward together with the cloud-like Shogi.

The corridor wound chaotically in front of her, disturbingly reminding her of some creature's intestines, she hoped they weren't someone's meal... She kept hearing that horrible music, slowly and inexorably getting louder and louder, so she had no choice, that was her only point. indicative of this place. After some time, they reached a longer, more regular and straighter corridor, in one of the walls of which there was a circular opening resembling a window, behind which there was a narrow balcony. Out of pure curiosity, she climbed onto it and looked around, breathing in the frosty, thin air. All around her, she saw towering mountains covered with blue, black, and red ice. The peaks were bent in all directions, twisted like old trees. Some resembled the bones of some unimaginably large animals, or sculptures created by someone with a very strange idea of what is beautiful. The whole place somehow reminded me of that strange town where she found Shogi.

„I don't think we're in Brightmoon anymore ... Or even Etheria” she said anxiously. She shuddered and moved on.

Eventually she found herself in a large, circular room with many circular doors. The largest ones were in front of her and that's where the music came from. Out of curiosity, she looked into the other rooms. One looked like a natural history museum with lots of skeletons, but they looked strangely asymmetrical, as if someone had put them together from random bones. She had the unpleasant feeling that those skulls were staring at her. She shuddered and looked into another room. It was full of strange plants unlike anything she had ever seen . The bark was strangely leathery, and the needles and leaves looked like bones sticking out of living flesh. When one of the flowers turned towards her and she saw that there was an eye inside it, she ran out screaming.

It was time for her to enter the main room where the music was coming from. She stood on the threshold and looked around carefully. She saw that it was a huge circular concert hall, a place that seemed to generally avoid sharp angles. The stands with seats adapted for people of very different shapes were empty. There was one person playing on stage, wearing a flowing white dress. Her back was turned towards her. Her blue-purple hair flowed in the imperceptible wind. There was something fascinating about this creature. Almost unconsciously, she started walking towards her. When she was almost to the stage, the music stopped and the person playing the violin spoke to her in a soft, feminine voice that seemed to come from all directions.

„Forgive me for not being able to welcome you properly, but I haven't visited the house for a very long time, in fact for aeons, very strange aeons... I guess all my relatives have separated, but this is only a temporary situation. Soon Castle Maledictus will have new inhabitants and laughter and wailing will once again echo through its beautiful halls. You will be one of the first, but not the first... This title belongs to Mr. Norwyn.” the violinist dressed in white pointed up and then she saw a man, a faun, embedded in the rock. His eyes were still moving so he was alive. She screamed in terror and jumped back, but tripped and fell. She looked ahead and saw the violinist is turned towards her. She was floating in the air, her robe flowing like her hair. He was beautiful, even phenomenal. There was something unnatural about her, you could say almost ethereal. In a way, she resembled Queen Angela or She-Ra , because there was something unearthly about her, but her eyes... instead of them, she had two lakes of violet-purple flame, bottomless and as if burning away from her very soul, she felt like they wanted to devour her, devour her mind, her being…

„Come with me... Live with me... Be a guest in my beautiful home.” said the violinist in her omnipresent voice and extended her hand towards her. She screamed and tried to summon her ice, but failed…. She was powerless. She screamed again and started running... But she had no idea where she could hide. This music was her only hope for saving herself from this place. So she ran forward, just to be away from this terrible person. After a while, she saw Shogi floating in front of her, who barked loudly and started motioning for her to follow him. She did so, of course. She had no idea how long she had been running. She felt like her body wasn't getting tired at all, but she didn't think about it because she felt that the woman was behind her. Eventually she reached a large garden, this time looking relatively normal, although she couldn't recognize most of the plants growing there, with a wide stream running through the middle of it. Then she saw the old man. He was dressed in a black coat and wore a wide-brimmed hat. He had a white beard and smiled at her in a friendly manner, but after meeting the previous resident of the castle, she preferred not to approach him. However, he stretched out his hand towards her and said.

„Girl, I know a way that will get us out of here. You just have to get on my boat.” he pointed to the rowing boat next to him, which was standing on the shore. She hesitated for a moment because she felt that the creature was getting closer to her, and that from that woman she was threatened by something much more terrible than anything that old man could do to her... right? But then she heard Shogi start barking happily. She looked in that direction and saw her companion standing at the flower gate, with light shining behind it . She immediately recognized that this was the way out. This time she moved in that direction without hesitation. However, when she was almost at the gate, the old man jumped in .

„You won't escape me!” and rushed towards her. He grabbed her hand and she felt an icy chill penetrate her body. It reached her heart and she let out a strangled cry, but then she touched the gate.

She felt like she was lying in bed and the unpleasant hospital stench was surrounding her, so she opened her eyes. She saw Perfuma leaning over her and an insectoid in emerald robes. As soon as the ruler of Plumeria saw that she had woken up, she hugged her tightly and called out loudly.

„It's so good that you woke up! We managed to drag you to us! I didn't know we would make it, but you are here with us safe and sound!”

„We?” she asked in surprise, and then Isectoid bowed low to her and spoke in her thoughts.

„I am Reverend Zimach, Priest of Hylax called the Forever Queen. However, the entire credit for your awakening lies with Perfume.” he pointed at the flower princess, who blushed upon hearing his words. Then she felt a strong hug and when she looked down, she saw Shogi wrapped tightly around her, flattening himself like a blanket.

„Shogi was there with me too. Thanks to him, I managed to get out of this place!„ She was about to start talking about what happened to her, but then Scorpia entered.

„Oh! You're awake!” A tall woman ran to her and held her tightly in her arms until she lost her breath.

„Honey, give Frosta some time to find her way, and while you're at it, bring some hot chocolate.” Perfuma said and Scorpia saluted.

„That's right, little flower!” and she ran out. While the Scorpion Princess was away, she told Perfuma briefly about what happened to her after the wedding, because both women already knew this part of the story, and then Scorpia came with four cups of hot chocolate. She took one and cooled it with her magic, how nice she was back. After she had had a drink, she told them about where she had been while she slept. Scorpia and Perfuma were looking at her in disbelief throughout the story, they both kept making sounds of disbelief and fear, it was a really great story.

However, the insectoid man kept watching her with his antennae down as if he was worried. She herself was cold, very cold, as if the cold that had taken over her body when the old man touched her did not want to leave her. But she assumed it would eventually go away. She just needs to rest a little.

When she finished, she asked the other princesses to tell her what happened while she was sleeping. They both briefly explained what they were doing, but then said that Catra captured the Shadow Weaver and Lady Cala wanted to kill Adora and then turned into a monster.

„This is amazing, she finally exclaimed, and then Zimach grabbed her hand as if he was taking her pulse.

„Take a deep breath.” he said and she did as he ordered.

„But what do you... „ she wanted to ask, but then she understood. The entire time the two women were talking, she didn't take a single breath…

She woke up with a terrible headache and immediately stood up and looked around. She was on a spaceship, but it wasn't Merciless . She was lying on a narrow bed that looked like a portable camp bed. She was strapped to it, although not very tightly. There were three people around, two girls and Bina. One of the girls had white hair and strangely deformed ears. She seemed a bit scared and kind of lost. Bina looked almost the same as before, apart from the distinctive vest worn by many adventurer captains who travel through space on their own. This time she exuded an aura of professionalism and smiled cheekily. The third one looked the most unusual. She was similar to Catra, not only because of her feline things, but her facial features also made her similar... She seemed depressed, although she hid it. As soon as they noticed that she had woken up, the white-haired girl breathed a sigh of relief.

„Oh, I was afraid I killed you, I'm glad you're okay... Because you're okay? Don't you have brain damage or something?” she said, speaking in sign language, and the gloves translated her gestures into speech. The cat-like girl ran up to her and lifted her eyelid.

„There doesn't seem to be any damage to her brain, but maybe I should trepan her skull to reduce the intracranial pressure...„ she said in a dull voice. She pushed her hand away violently and said.

„ I'm fine! I mean, nothing new. Please don't make a hole in my head.”

Burgundy-haired woman sighed heavily.

„No one can guarantee a joyful awakening like Eti.„ she said in a sarcastic tone „Well, I guess I didn't tell you everything about myself earlier. As you may have already guessed, I am the captain of this ship and you are currently our captive. It wasn't my idea, but my wards. They want to trade you for She-Ra's broken sword, I'm not sure if that's something to be proud of. But don't worry, you're in no danger here. Even if you tried to escape, we would probably tie you up at worst, so don't worry... I have no idea what Lonnie will do if your captain doesn't want to trade you for a sword, but it doesn't matter at all, because you are mine, or rather our prisoner. I must admit that I absolutely did not suspect Captain Moonshadow of having an Azlantean among her crew members , but it's probably good that something can still surprise me in life. Anyway, welcome aboard.” she explained and unbuckled her seat belt and then went somewhere else. Two girls remained. This feline sat on the floor and limped with her head down. The white-haired woman sat down next to her and hugged her tightly.

„So it's because of you that I ended up here?” she asked uncertainly. Truth be told, she wasn't sure what to do now... The white-haired woman nodded and said.

„I hit you when you bumped into me. I got scared, and when I'm scared, I sometimes do weird things. I'm sorry if it hurts you.” she blushed.

„Nothing happened to m, I've experienced worse things.” she smiled at her. “I'm Tirin, although I think your captain told you that.

„My name is Rosie, this is Eti and... well, she's Catra's sister. I know it's quite strange, but your captain is the queen of Etheria ... Does she know it?” Rosie said, returning her smile.

„I guess so, but I'm not sure how much she remembers. Her memory was taken away... She didn't even know her real name... „ she said, carefully lowering her head and adding. “Apparently Adora took her sword... That's what the captain says... But I'm not sure how much truth there is in it.”

Rosie shook her head vigorously from side to side.

„This can not be true. Adora is very nice. She couldn't do something so horrible to anyone. You should talk to someone about what happened here... Preferably Kyle ... He's cool and I think he's the one most willing to tell us about everything from the Rebellion.” she said and jumped for joy.

„If so, take us to him.” she said, feeling the girl's enthusiasm starting to rub off on her. Deep down, however, she was worried about what the Captain would do if the truth turned out to be different from her expectations...

Everyone aboard the Merciless celebrated the great spoils, except her. She stared at the remains of the sword. Her sword, which was once taken away from her... and she felt nothing. But it was supposed to be different... When she got him back, she was supposed to regain her memories... past... life... everything... But nothing happened... Nothing at all...

„The captain has a good head on her shoulders.„ Boatswain Kaert exclaimed in a slightly drunk voice. „If we look for buyers, the things we stole will be worth two million credits... And your sword will be worth three times as much if we sell it to the Anacites . As long as you're willing to sell it to anyone.„ he added hastily when she gave him a stern look.

„The captain always knows what she's doing, even if some of you sometimes say otherwise.„ First Mate Tonado gave the bosun a superior look. He was the only officer and pirate in general who sat at her table. He occupied the place that Reh-zar usually occupied, and she missed him very much, especially now, when the treasure she had found, which she had wanted for so long, turned out to not bring the solace she had hoped for.

They were in the mess hall, which had now become the place to celebrate their easy victory. There were treasures on the tables, mainly artifacts previously taken from Horde-Prime, who in turn took them from the civilizations he conquered. Many of them no longer existed, which made them much more valuable than Kaert thought, if only they could prove that they were the last remnants of a people annihilated by a mad tyrant... Yes, they had acquired a great fortune at almost no cost. Almost…

„Captain, don't worry about the girl... She just got lost somewhere along the way, but she'll be found before we know it! „ said Petty Officer Kaert, waving his hand. Tonado looked at him and said with irritation in his voice.

„She's not as stupid and clumsy as you all want her to be! It was thanks to her that we managed to rob it all. If she hadn't scouted, we would all have wandered around this city until we ran into that admiral's soldiers, or worse yet, that monster that attacked in the dark. We should all drink to her health now, right after we drink to the Captain's health.” He banged his four fists on the table. Skittermander liked and understood their navigator. They were both seen as weaker than others. It was enough for Tonado to draw his sabers to silence all the taunts, for a girl with a body destroyed by the toxic environment of Jadehell it was much more difficult. They were both absolutely loyal to their Captain, and not only because there was nothing waiting for them outside the pirate ship, no dreams… Nothing at all.

“Actually, we could have bumped into them because you had another task.” Kaert said and laughed. The Skittermander growled and started to get up from the table, but she signaled him to stay where he was and spoke to the boatswain in a warning tone.

“Be careful what you say and to whom... And as for Tirin, she is not a stupid girl who would drink in a tavern and let someone escape through the toilet!” she recalled a certain failure involving Verthani traveling on Bina's ship.

Keart scratched his head, clearly embarrassed

„I'm sorry, Captain, but when I have a drink, I start talking whatever comes to my mind. And I had something to drink, because we did great... You know, Captain? If I can be honest, we should stay here permanently. We are the only real pirates here. Aside from that Lord Admiral and those Prime heirs, I think we're the only ones with a decent warship here, and once your guy gets here with his new ship, everyone's going to be a force to be reckoned with. I'm thinking that we could come to an agreement with the Lord Admiral and ask him for a letter of marque or something like that... After all, she's a galactic bigwig, not the queen of some provincial planet... Please forgive me, Captain!” he bowed to her apologetically when he realized what stupidity she had said.

„You're right, Boatswain, when you drink, you talk terrible nonsense, so I'll forgive you for what you just said, and as for your proposal, it's worth considering.” she said completely honestly, and Boatswain, satisfied with her answer, returned to the partying. What he said was an interesting idea, because cooperation with someone like Antares made sense. Although he was human, his daughter was a mixed breed, and from what she heard, he treated his subordinates equally, regardless of their species. While there were sinister rumors about him, there were all kinds of dark stories told about her, although she had to admit that many of them were true. Maybe if they joined forces, they would succeed... What was she thinking? She didn't come here to build an empire, but... To reclaim her inheritance... Only it was Etheria... A planet ruled by her daughter... Her daughter was alive... For so many years she was sure that her daughter was dead... And she robbed her... At her own wedding...

„Captain.” asked Tonado in Skittermander version of conspiratorial tone, the kind that would attract the attention of everyone around them if they weren't drunk. :I'm not questioning your decisions, nothing like that, the Captain knows very well that I would gladly give my life for you, one word would be enough...„ he was saying with absolute sincerity, but she interrupted him.

„I love you, Tonado, and I don't doubt your loyalty, but please, get to the point.” she smiled, because no one else had cheered her up so much , except maybe Tirin. Skittermander took a deep breath and said aloud what she had just been wondering .

„Why won't Mrs. Captain meet her daughter? I'm talking about the family and things like that, I know that sometimes things are different in the family, but from what I've noticed, it seems to me that she's a good girl and she certainly didn't have a hand in what happened to you. Maybe it would be worth... I don't know, talk to her or something...„ Skittermander looked down in shame. She wiped her face with her hand and smiled sadly.

„It's not that simple... I admit that ever since I found this sword, I started wondering... Why am I hiding from her... This weapon... it was supposed to bring me answers to all my questions... It was supposed to fix everything, but when I look at it, I only see a few pieces of metal, completely useless. If only someone would take him away from my eyes, I wouldn't be able to think about anything else, as if someone had forced these thoughts into my head... „ and she fell silent , because she suddenly had an epiphany.

“He's a fucking blood-sucking bastard!” she screamed, and all her crew members present in the mess hall looked at her. However, before she could fully formulate this thought, Gozamund, who was not playing with the others, entered the mess and said.

„There's a problem, Captain... Someone sent an announcement and you have to come with me.” said the gloomy Nuar , and she nodded and followed him…

He looked at his sword, smiling to himself, only when no one was looking, of course. So actually, not very often, but he was still so happy... He was a hero, a real hero! He defeated a terrible monster and saved Scorpia . The former Force Captain was nice to him and he liked her, as did everyone else. When he used this sword, he became brave, strong, powerful... He just felt invincible, it was so wonderful! He, Kyle, the biggest lame duck of the Horde and then the People's Rebellion, could finally become useful, help others... So what if no one knew the truth? He didn't want to be a hero for fame... He wanted to help others, that was all that mattered to him... One day, he will tell all about it to his friends and loved ones... For example, on his deathbed... And then he will die immediately, so as not to see the disappointment in Rogelio's eyes and Lonnie's furious outburst... Maybe his girlfriend won't have time to kill him...

„Hey Blonde Boy, sorry to bother you while you're playing with your sword, there's an issue.„ he heard Eti's voice from the side and he jumped with fear... As Kyle, he wasn't even half as brave as when he was the Other. Eti wasn't half as scary as Catra, though he didn't want to tell her that, but she found him in a moment looking at his sword... That probably sounded weirder than it should have. He sheathed the blade and smiled insincerely.

„Oh, Eti, it's good to see you... and Rosie is here.” he looked at the nice deaf girl who scared him much more than Catra's Sister. “I see that you also brought a prisoner.” he looked at the girl wearing strange overalls. She had disturbing almost monochromatic eyes and half-translucent hair. She seemed nice, but she was probably hiding some secret that would make her scary.

This is Tirin, and she would like to ask you about the Captain Wingy, you know, she used to be your queen or something... „ Eti explained in that dull voice. Tirin nodded and seemed to even smile, although he couldn't see her mouth because she was wearing an oxygen mask and when she spoke, her voice didn't come out of her mouth.

„Captain Moonshadow always claimed to be from here, but she didn't know she was... well, a queen... She always acted like she was just like us... like prisoners, that is, not like me...”

He was aware that Queen Angela was alive, Shadow Weaver had told Lonnie about it, and she had repeated it to the rest, though he didn't care much... To them, the Queen of Etheria had always been a distant and unimportant figure that they knew almost nothing about. They got to know her daughter Glimmer much better, who had faced them many times... However, one thing interested him in the words of the girl in the strange suit.

„What did you mean, not like you?" he asked curiously. Tirin looked down and said as if she was embarrassed.

„I am Azlanti, a pure-blooded one, a citizen of an empire that proclaims the supremacy of the human race..."

„The Azlanti are terrible, they enslave members of other species. Mixed relationships in their empire are prohibited under penalty of death, and hybrids are killed on the spot. We fought them on the way here." Rosie added and glanced at Eti when she mentioned the ban on mixed relationships and the killing of Hybrids. A shiver ran through him. Would anyone want to kill him and Rogelio just because they're together? This is a monstrosity worthy of Horde Prime ... He looked at the girl with fear, and she lowered her eyes, very sad.

„My people have committed many evil deeds that you here on Etheria don't even immagine... she said and wiped her eyes with a handkerchief, which she put in the compartment of her suit." Excuse me, do you have a toxic waste container around here somewhere? Because these are my tears...

He felt sorry for her. He himself served in the Etherian Horde, which may not have been as terrible as the Galactic Horde, but had also done a lot of evil. They were victims, but also perpetrators, although Lonnie seemed to forget that sometimes. He didn't know who the Azlanti were, but they certainly weren't born evil and could become good if they wanted to, at least sometimes they needed a little help. It was the same with them, with Catra, and even Hordak ... He walked up to Azlanti and hugged her, although he wasn't sure if it was pleasant for someone wearing such an outfit. Tirin smiled again, this time it felt like a much warmer smile, and she returned the hug. But then a voice came from the intercom.

„Rosie, Eti, can you bring Tirin to the bridge because we will be talking to Moonshadow and it would be good for us to show that we didn't eat her or that.” the voice seemed to belong to that strange and terrible creature living in the tank inside the ship. He was afraid of him too, so he obeyed without a murmur and followed the others.

“So I stormed into the Power Plant and started yelling that they had to surrender on behalf of the Lord Admiral, and if they didn't want to do it, they would have to deal with him and Grand Marshal Catra. Strangely enough, they were much more scared by our Eti's sister than Antares, cursed by devils and demon , although maybe that shouldn't surprise me. Even without the authority of power, Eti can scare those who don't know her.” She was telling to Wrongdak, Ireanis and the even stranger girl with purple hair that she seemed to have control over. Her name was Entrapta, and she was apparently a princess, as was Huntara, a term used extremely broadly here.

„Catra used to often resort to threats and intimidation as a method of exercising power, but she has changed a lot and hardly uses them anymore.” the technician said, constantly writing something down on her Datapad.

„It's very interesting.” she said, remembering Igzar, the uncle of both girls, were such behaviors hereditary? – Anyway, I had to tie a rag around my face because I didn't have a half-mask on hand, but I'm great at parodying Ka, too good, because then I start acting like a bigger freak even than her, and believe me, it's quite a feat. They got so terrorized that they followed all my commands as if someone was aiming at them... Although that's basically what I did, so maybe I shouldn't be surprised. Anyway, we are all safe and happy now.” she finished her story and looked at everyone, expecting delighted glances, because this time she was very proud of herself. She received them from all but one „Shadow Weaver may be safe, because she's probably out of danger, but she's definitely not happy.” Entrapta explained and started looking around the bridge. Well, maybe that wasn't the best of her anecdotes, she'll tell it better next time, when she'll think it over. Despite everything, she was happy. Her kids were by her side, and most importantly, safe and sound, at least for now, and the dark bitch was trapped. Even Dilayla and the others were safe, Huntara informed her about it. Yes, the future seemed uncertain, but there was no point in worrying in advance.

Of course, a lot has changed in her absence. First of all, her wards joined the People's Rebellion. It was apparently the idea of Shadow Weaver, who wanted to hide from the Lord Admiral in a fortress hidden in the mountains, although her children eagerly approved of this idea, but this should not be surprising, Itel has always been a rebel, always attracted to various anti-system individuals and soldiers, and Comrade General Lonnie was both. She reluctantly had to admit that the idea was theoretically good, because under the circumstances the most important thing was to find protection from the Lord Admiral, but they didn't have to get so involved in this idiotic conflict. She wasn't sure if Shadow Weaver had encouraged them to do this, to get revenge on her former friends, she would have to ask Rosie and Eti about it, both girls were even too honest.

Rosie and Eti. In fact, she knew from the very beginning that they were attracted to each other, so when she found out that they were a couple, she happily applauded them. The former intern fit Eti and had a soothing effect on her, soothing her aggressive instincts. And the cat-like girl protected the white-haired girl from the mean world, although she was not sure how much the deaf girl needed anyone's protection. Alatar briefly told her about what happened between Rosie and Itel. Rosie admitted that Lady Cala's expedition was linked to the Lord Admiral from the very beginning, and then the Elf attacked her with a moonblade, although she suspected that the main reason was jealousy of the shooter. She had no grudge against the former intern, who knew absolutely nothing about Antares' true nature or his very close ties to Eti... She could have been much more furious with Dilayla , but from what she understood from Huntara's message, Lady Cala rewarded her for her silence with an attempt. murders. She wasn't sure of the connection between the beautiful Aristocrat and the Lord Admiral, and from the behavior of the cursed sorceress she could conclude that they probably didn't work for Antares . Well, she probably should have trusted Eti's nose very literally from the very beginning. As for Rosie and Itel's conflict, it ended when the former intern started throwing tanks and then almost killed Elf, but Eti stopped her. Anyway, things were good between them now, the girls apologized and reconciled... At least in theory, because Itel tried to kill the Lord Admiral on her own, which ended very badly...

It all started when itel decided to break into Brightmoon Castle because she didn't believe that others weren't as crazy as her and would dismantle weapons of mass destruction. It was hard to believe, but this whole crazy thing wasn't Shadow Weaver's idea. In the end, the break-in ended with Eti's imprisonment, which might not have been so bad because he would have met his sister under controlled conditions, but then Antares showed up and everything changed. Now they were embroiled in a conflict that could destroy them all.

And you are responsible for it. She looked at the two girls entering the bridge and told Wrongdak and Ireanis to leave them . Lonnie and Itel, both of them had gotten them into this mess that she would have to get them out of somehow, or rather they would all have to get themselves out of... Comrade General was limping, and she was leaning on the cane they had lent her. Apparently she had a close encounter with someone armed with a storm hammer, and was saved by Wrongdak... He really was a nice and helpful guy. Lonnie looked like someone her age, and was chronologically older than her, but after exchanging a few words with her, she realized that she was actually a kid who didn't have the opportunity to fully grow up because she was raised in the barracks. She only knew one thing and didn't understand the real world, so she decided to escape from it into the one she knew and understood. The problem was that once you challenged the world, there was no way back. Itel was more seriously injured, although from what she heard, if it weren't for Entrapta, her fucked up sister would have blown her head off. However, it was Itel that she was more furious with. Lonnie had every right to not know who she was messing with, but itel knew the threat very well. She exposed them all to a terrible fate, even though she always claimed that her friends were the most important to them.

"Oh, my two Mean Chaos Queens have arrived" she said, crossing her arms over her chest and smiling sarcastically. Lonnie scowled at her and said, trying to sound tough.

„I am a Comrade General of the People's Rebellion, not a queen… „ she had no intention of letting her finish.

„One does not exclude the other, and besides, on my ship, you are to address me as Captain." she said, still smiling. Someone had to bring this girl down to earth before she hurt herself or someone else with her arrogance.

„You have no right to admonish me! Who are you...„ Lonnie started, turning red with anger, but she interrupted her again so that the girl wouldn't take the initiative.

„I told you, I am the captain of this ship and on board my word is law. Even your Shadow Weaver understood that, although from what I heard she was a mean and sadistic bitch. You can play this People's Rebellion, please, but don't involve me or my kids in it." she approached Lonnie, who was much more massively built, but she still seemed to be in control of the situation. Lonnie didn't understand that a true Leader is determined by how others perceive him. There was no real force needed, just projection. Antares, Shadow Weaver and probably even Adora understood this, although the last one did it subconsciously, of course she did not know this girl well enough to be able to express her opinion.

„I'm not messing around, and if your crew decides to leave us, they'll be considered deserters!” drawled Comrade General, but she just shook her head and replied with undisguised contempt.

„So what about this? Don't think you can scare me. I knew Igzar and he was terrible. When he was in a good and happy mood, he was like your Catra in her worst moments. And yes, I'll tell you again, you're playing rebellion. Nobody on this planet cares about you. Some people may support some of your demands, maybe they would even be ready to shout for you, but they will not be ready to die for you... or kill. You may think you have allies, but believe me, to all of them you are just a tool with which to fight proxy wars. People like you are always just tools. Maybe if you were as cunning as Igzar or Antares you could use this to your advantage, but you're not. Even Itel didn't join you because she cares about your vendetta with Eti’s sister, but because she needed you to fight the Lord Admiral, as evidenced by the fact that she attacked him with her blade when she had the chance. opportunity.”

Lonnie looked at Itel, who looked down. She approached the green-haired Elf and, looking her straight in the eyes, said in a much gentler, even sad voice.

„I'm disappointed in you, Itel, I'm very disappointed. It's not about breaking into the castle, as idiotic as that was. Or even the fact that you attacked Rosie with a blade because you were jealous of Eti. But because of your sheer child like thoughtlessness, you put a lot of people at risk of death. How many people died because of you...”

„Three.” Eti's voice rang out from behind her. She turned and looked at the cat girl with everyone else. She came with Rosie and Tirin, and also that blond man who still had that sword on his belt, even though he looked like he could hurt himself with it. “There will now be eleven in total.” The cat girl continued.

What are you talking about?“ When she saw Itel lower her eyes, she understood what the shooter was referring to.

„Yesterday I killed three people, so I have eleven kills in total, and it's only two thousand two hundred and sixty days old... Quite a feat.” Eti said in a voice that this time contained anger, bitter amusement and sadness, a very toxic mix. “I did it for you, Itel... If you hadn't wanted to kill my father, they would still be alive. I know they weren't good beings, but I'll still have to live with it... thank you, Itel.” she said, not taking her eyes off the Elf.

"I... I'm sorry..." she said, tears streaming down her face.

„You're welcome. „ said the cat girl and laughed such a painful, joyless laugh that Bina had difficulty refraining from hugging her, because Eti hated it. But to her surprise, when Rosie wrapped her in a tight hug right after, Eti relaxed and rested her head on her girlfriend's shoulder. There was silence because no one knew what to say to this confession. Lonnie broke the silence.

„I took the lives of three people... At least, because I fired from the tank several times and I'm not sure of the results. The first was a rebel women from Thymor, it was during our first Action. That was when Adora first came against us. She attacked me unnecessarily because we were already retreating. I guess she felt a surge of bravado because of what She-Ra and the others did... She had a knife in her hand, I don't know what she wanted to do, but she was threatened me and wouldn't drop the weapon, so I hit her and took her prisoner. It was only during transport that I realized that she was dead.” Lonnie's voice changed during this story. She was no longer the great leader of the People's Rebellion, all her stubbornness and anger were gone. At this point, she was just a kid again who was forced to do bad things.

„It was accident the first time I took a life... „ Itel said. „ It was during the Swarm invasion, before I got to the refugee camp... I fell asleep on the boat and when I woke up, a woman approached her... She wanted to get into my boat, but I got scared and stabbed her with a knife... „ she spoke in a quiet voice, devoid of her frequent anger.

„I only killed once.” Kyle said without looking anyone in the eye. “It was when we occupied one of the towns... There was this old man there. He was furious because someone had ruined his garden... He picked on me, started shouting at me and pushing me... Finally, he pushed me hard and then I shocked him... Instinctively, I didn't want to do anything to him, but his heart couldn't stand it. I tried to help him, I even took him to a field hospital... Rogelio helped me, I didn't want to tell you anything, I haven't talked to Rogelio about it since then... With anyone.” the boy didn't cry. His eyes where so empty

„I killed fifty-four people.” Tirin said suddenly. Everyone looked at her in disbelief. „I do not regret it. It was in the Jadehell labor camp . It's... A terrible place. I was the daughter of the camp commandant. After he died, I stayed there... No one paid any attention to me, I was just a pathetic crippled girl whose existence was an insult to all the ideals of the empire. But I kept all the codes and access cards... Captain Moonshadow was planning a mutiny... I decided to help. While there was a fall of Skullrot, an extremely murderous spore, I decided to unseal the soldiers' barracks. It was a very painful death... But they deserved it. They did terrible things to prisoners...„ explained the girl. Her voice was confident… Well, as soon as she found out that Tirin worked for Captain Moonshadow, she was relieved because she liked this girl and could feel sympathy for her, and now she realized that she had to keep an eye on her as well.

„Once, at the very beginning of my work for the Horde, I hacked a network of runestones...„ Entrapta said in a quiet voice, with her back turned to them. No one had paid any attention to her until now. “This led to a cataclysm on a planetary scale. It may not have lasted long, but the damages where... significant.”

Bina looked at the inventor, who was cowering inwardly as if overwhelmed by the responsibility for what she had done. Well, the whole galaxy should be keeping an eye on her….

„I once heard that everyone is guilty, but not everyone got the punishment they deserved... For me, it's just bullshit. I much prefer the words the priestess of Cayden once told me . She said that it doesn't matter what we did, but how we feel about it. Truth be told, I'm not an authority on morality. So why don't we end this difficult day with a talk with Captain Moonshadow and then get some sleep in Castle Crypto, what do you say?" she asked everyone gathered. As they slowly gave her thoughtful nods one by one, she asked Tirin to make contact with the Captain who had once been queen.

She was glad she didn't drink that day. Generally speaking, she avoided alcohol abuse, and for a pirate, she was practically a teetotaller. Now she needed a clear and sober mind. She had to be absolutely focused on the negotiations. With only Gozamund and Tonado on the communications screen, she decided it would be better if the rest of her crew were unaware of what might be at stake during these conversations. It was a good thing that she was completely sober, because when she saw what she saw on the screen, she would seriously wonder if she was drunk. She saw Bina, along with her two wards, Itel and Eti, and this deaf girl named Rosie, who had apparently also become a member of their ship's crew. Apart from them, there was a dark"skinned woman leaning on a crutch, a blond"haired boy with a strange sword at his belt, and a purple"haired woman whose long ponytails clapped at the sight of her. The most important person was not immediately visible, but despite her frail stature, Tirin made her way to the very front of the crowd gathered in front of the screen. She was relieved to see that she was fine, except for a black eye.

„I'm terribly sorry, Captain, but I was about to run in, but I bumped into Rosie and she hit me, but she's very sorry." she pointed to the deaf girl, who hung her head apologetically. "I'm fine, I'm just a kind of prisoner now , but not entirely..."

„Of course you are our prisoner!" exclaimed the woman leaning on the crutch. "I am Comrade General Lonnie and I demand from you… „ she did not finish because Bina interrupted her.

„Maybe I'll take care of it, honey, because, don't be offended, but I'm better at negotiations and things like that... My father has already taken care of it.” She smiled grimly, and Lonnie looked at her resentfully, but not too much, because then she collapsed onto the crutch, clearly exhausted. “I admit that I was a bit shocked when I found out that you were the queen and everything, but you were probably more shocked... It should surprise me, but it doesn't , which I think shows what a fucked up world we live in. Personally, I would give you Tirin without any conditions, because he's a nice kid, but it so happens that maybe an equally nice kids made a deal with this Lonnie and she wants Adora's sword from you, which you stole from the museum.” when she heard that it was Adora's sword, she almost interrupted Bina , but she caught herself in time. She finally knew the truth, or at least she suspected it. „In my opinion, it's just a worthless piece of iron... To put it simply, so if I were you, I wouldn't hesitate. I'm not someone who has the right to lecture anyone on life choices, but I feel like there are more important things you should be concerned with right now.”

She thought for a few minutes what she should do, and no one on the other side dared to interrupt her, although she could see that the purple-haired woman was just waiting to bombard her with questions, they probably knew each other from their old life, although she couldn't remember her name, she only had the impression that it was connected with some very sad events. Finally she was ready and said.

„My conditions are these. Comrade General will issue me a Letter of Marque and agree to supply my people with supplies, and you will give me a place on your staff. There will be a few more things related to the chain of command, but that's something you should accept." She said in a serious voice. Lonnie, when she heard her terms, immediately nodded, after all, they were more than generous. “There's just one more thing. You will answer my question, Bina, but absolutely honestly. I'm guessing you didn't buy this ship penny by penny. Tell me who your patron is.”

Bina hesitated for a moment, as did Itel, but then Eti spoke.

„Yes, there are so few people in the galaxy who have ever heard of my home planet... Do you have any way to contact him?” she asked, smiling under her mask.

Dr. Sidonius felt filled with guilty pleasure. He drank real blood while preying on wedding guests. He didn't kill anyone, he wasn't out of practice, even though he hadn't hunted for many years. It was also nice to observe all these people, the queen, the Grand Marshal, the monster from the Dark Between the Stars and others, completely unaware of its existence. He wasn't a voyeur or anything like that, but there was a certain wicked pleasure in looking at others without being seen. Now he wasn't even sure if he would leave this place to join the Archduke, because being so close to the royal court had many advantages.

He suddenly felt that the certain gem he had given to the certain extraordinary group of kids he had sent ahead to help him search this planet, the cure to Captain Blazebringer's terrible ailment, was just as important, if not more important. He had almost forgotten about those kids, only yesterday when he was following Catra witnessed the meeting of both sisters, although from what he managed to determine, it was not their first meeting, which is a pity because he would have liked to see their reaction, especially Catra's. And so, the most interesting thing about the whole event was meeting this strange white-haired girl. She defeated She-Ra, even though she was not in the best mental state, but it was still something amazing. He regretted not sending his daughter with them, because she would have watched the activities of Bina's crew closely. She and Eti liked each other very much. But then she would be within Lady Cali's reach, and he had no intention of putting her through that. After all, his daughter was all that was really important to him. Except for the memories that were taken from him. He smiled darkly to himself and took a small datapad and entered a special encrypted channel. He didn't expect who he would see on the screen at all.

„I am so glad to se you after so many years, Dr. Sidonius.” Captain Moonshadow said. At first he was even happy to see her, this woman was very useful, and an additional spaceship could be very useful in this situation. However, he saw coldness in the eyes visible above the mask.

„ Oh, I'm so pleased. Probably yo, what you recently learned about yourself was extremely surprising to you, but with absolute honesty I must assure you that for me... „ he said as politely as he could, but the captain didn't let him finish.

„Save it to yourself, you fucking leech!” the woman growled at him. “I already know what you did to me…”

„But what did I do to you? If I remember, it was thanks to me that you managed to free yourself from Azlantean captivity... Right?” he said, holding back his anger at being called a leech.

„You didn't do it out of the goodness of your heart... You implanted a lie in my mind... the need to obtain the artifact that you saw in my mind... You could have restored my memories... But instead you distorted them. You only did it because you wanted it„ she showed him the sword broken in half... „You won't get it... I'll give it to someone who will make better use of it.”

Feel his dead heart fill with fury.

„ In this game, my life is at stake... mine and my daughter's, which you treated as just another resource to be used up in your damned game... Enough of this!” and she hung up. For a moment, the ancient vampire stared ahead, trying to quench the cold undead anger smoldering in his heart. He knew that it was Bina and her children who gave the pirate information about him, but unfortunately he couldn't get back at them in any way, because he would still need their help... But as for the not-so-former queen... she had a few weak points... she herself revealed them to him... In a sense, he understood her well. After all, for every parent, children are the most important thing.

Calamity wasn't frustrated. Not even angry. She also had no desire to grab someone and tear off their limbs one by one. Not any more. Now she was completely calm. She did splatter the walls with her own blood when she tried to break them by banging on them with her fists. The sparkling slut made sure the walls and other defenses could withstand her fury. A hypocrite, she talked so much about how the people of her kingdom valued freedom and justice, and she built a prison using Horde Prime's technology. She used her magic tricks to trap her here. This detention was absolutely against the law and no charges were brought against her. She doubted that the Queen would be allowed to detain civilians like that, without the slightest reason. They should send some guards or a sheriff to get her. She would kill them, of course, after all, they would ask for it when they went against her, but you had to follow certain legal procedures if you called yourself a law-abiding ruler. In fact, she was the only victim here. First, this sneaky mercenary attacked her, she must skin alive those inept cultists she gave her to. And then that damn Hell Knight tried to murder her by stabbing her in the back. She was technically defenseless! Of course, the Lady of the Blades didn't have a chance to take life of being so magnificent as her, but it didn't matter! It was an attempted murder. Any lawyer in a civilized country would defend her, but what could you expect from a country where beasts could hold the highest state offices?

But it wasn't the obvious injustice of being imprisoned here that was the worst. These women ignored her! They rejected her generous offer of help! They believed that, despite all their immense ignorance, they would be able to cope with what was coming! Those words... They were the worst... How dare she call her that!

„Princess of Nothingness! Let the winged bitch go to hell!” she screamed and, to emphasize her words, she hit the energy shield constituting the door with all her strength. She felt all the bones, from her hand to her forearm, being crushed by the force of the impact. It didn't hurt her, she never felt pain, just a slight discomfort rather warning her not to attract suspicion with her divine gifts. Immediately after, her limbs regenerated, but it didn't change anything, she was still trapped, and had to wait for someone from outside to help her. Shadow Weaver was imprisoned, either due to her own stupidity or soft heart. Why didn't she come to this woman when she was at her peak, but now, when she was a shuddering wreck? She wasn't sure that cursed sorceress would want to help her. After all, the relationship between them had always been strained, through no fault of hers of course, and now the dark sorceress had an excuse to abandon her here, because she still had a mission to complete and such nonsense. Although since she was imprisoned it didn't matter anyway, she only wished that the locals were like the Azlanti and would do to her mentor something similar to what happened to the queen's mother... Fortunately, she also had other allies, much more loyal and giving her due respect, although unfortunately their competences left much to be desired, the best proof of which was the fact that they allowed that damn mercenary to escape. Could she count on them not to let her down this time? Unfortunately, she had already gotten used to the fact that life was not fair for her and that she could only count on herself... That's why she started implementing a plan... Sadly, it required time, but fortunately, she had enough of it. She smiled to herself as she used a long claw to cut into her skin and began to draw a secret circle with her own blood. "Oh Blackwind, I missed you," she thought nostalgically.

Since Catra, Glimmer, and Adora's visit, she had been kneeling on the floor, staring at the wall. She failed. She let down Nyarlathotep, Catra, Glimmer, Lonnie, Mikah ... She let everyone down, but honestly, she should be used to it by now. Throughout her life, she let down those who counted on her. Yes, she was the great disappointment... She always looked for blame in others, others were responsible for her mistakes and failures... And in fact, her whole life was a failure.... She always had big plans, big ambitions, but in fact, they were all lies. The delusions of a bitter mind intoxicated with power and alcohol. She saw herself as a great heroine, a savior who would finally bring new order to Etheria. Whom everyone will admire for her merits and tremble before her wrath... She was no better in her pride and self-righteousness than Calamity. Even now she imagined that she would save everyone and be the savior of all Etheria. That all you have to do is just say sorry and everything will be forgiven, and the daughters to whom she was never a mother will throw themselves into her arms and be a happy family. She hasn't changed at all since she believed she could be forgiven after all she had done... There is no respite for the wicked.

But she had to escape from here somehow, because she knew that Etheria was in so many dangers... Except she wasn't sure how to do it. The circle that surrounded her was created by Glimmer, and she was a powerful Sorceress, even she herself become more powerful once her ritual was improved. She saw that the Queen made a few mistakes while casting it, she was really exhausted, and she herself had learned a lot during her stay on Carurystal. Perhaps she could break it, but not without alerting the guards, and then she would have to fight. First with Brightmoon's guard , and then with Glimmer and the rest... It would be pointless... Even if she had enough power to win this fight, but that wasn't the only point. She didn't want to leave a trail of dead bodies behind her, to become a symbol of betrayal and destruction again... She had to get out of here in another, more subtle way... She was, after all, a master of shadow magic, a mistress of deceit and trickery. She could sneak and hide in the dark. She knew something about illusion magic. She was unable to teleport from here, because while freeing Eti, she discovered that the castle was secured against teleportation attempts by unauthorized persons, both those wanting to get in and out. Lessons were probably learned from her intrusion into the palace during the war. However, it was a problem she was able to deal with. All she had to do was get outside the castle walls... Only... Still the biggest problem was breaking the circle in such a way that no one, especially Glimmer, would realize that she had gotten out... She knew several ways. She had known how to move to the shadow dimension for a long time. although in the old days she rarely used it because it drained her power too quickly... Now she had a chance... She could also move to one of the more distant planes, the existence of which she learned about only after she left Etheria. She could also summon one of the creatures from both the lower planes or the Darkness Between The Stars. Maybe for example Byakhe, which would make it easier for her to get out of here... She just knew it would take time, and according to Catra, she might not have much of it. Halo, one of Star's sisters... She only met her once, during that Battle, when the fate of the First Rebellion was sealed... She and her sister Pulsar tried to prevent her from performing that ritual, with Mikah helping them. They had a chance to win then, they would have succeeded if Neutriono had joined the fight, but the third of the Star Sisters had remained on the Isles... She was prepared for someone to try to interrupt her. She ordered additional soldiers to hide , and also used a few tricks... She struck Halo with dark magic, the woman deserved respect for surviving her attack, and she tested a certain nanite plague on Pulsar, which she brought back from that one and only trip to Beast Island, from which she and Hordak barely escaped. Then she heard that Halo had managed to escape with her sister's body. After that, she was no longer interested in her fate. The islands withdrew from the war and never supported the Rebellion again. They are no longer relevant. Now, however, she would have to answer for what she had done to them, another sin she would have to face... She wasn't sure what Halo had planned for her, but in the old days she had heard many dark rumors about the secrets hidden by the inhabitants of the islands. Back then, she took them for gossip and fairy tales, but life taught her that there was much more than a grain of truth hidden in dark tales. There was one more thing... The plague that Pulsar had infected didn't kill her... She tested it on several insects and learned how it worked... Pulsar wasn't dead, as most of the planet's inhabitants thought... No... She condemned her to a fate worse than death. Will the other sisters want to repay her in the same way?

She knew that staring blankly ahead would do nothing to help her plan her escape, but she didn't have the strength to focus on that. Catra told her the truth, she almost destroyed her life for no reason, just because she was full of malicious rage... There is no redemption for her. But she wasn't looking for it, at least not at first... Asindesa was right. She was playing with their love, and yet she had to be aware that she would bring danger to her beloved... She knew that who she was and who she served would make her choose between her order and the woman she loved. She should have told her everything before she stole her heart... No... She should never have approached her. This was the only way she could save her... Save them both... But she chose differently... she thought that somehow everything would work out. Was she under the illusion that the Lady of the Blades wouldn't guess anything? She abandoned her alone in the midst of this terrible truth, leaving her to the mercy of creatures like Lady Cala and the Lord Admiral. She had to struggle alone with her shame ... and if anyone in the order found out the truth... Devils and demons, she sentenced her to death... This sudden revelation made her heart freeze for a moment, struck with fear. She did it again. First, she sent Mikah to Beast Island, and then she used Catra, to escape from prison knowing what punishment awaited her from Hordak. Now, she did it third time. She thought she had become at least a little better, but in fact there was as much evil in her heart as before... She lived only to hurt her loved ones. When she realized this, she hid her face in her hands, realizing that there was no forgiveness for her. Tears streamed down her face, but as her mother used to say, tears are worth as much as raindrops...

Nightgale felt almost no fear. Almost... But she was determined and sure of what she was going to do. She felt like nothing could stop her... Not even She-Ra and the princesses... She couldn't fail, she just couldn't! She knew what she was about to do was unimaginable, terrifying, and maybe just plain stupid, but she had to do it… She had to save her mother…

„Mortals can do incredible things in the name of love.” said Aravos, floating next to her. Star Saihe smiled slightly thoughtfully.

„Apparently you've never loved anyone... Has anyone ever loved you?„ she asked quietly, hoping that no one would be interested in the fact that she was talking to herself.

„Well, I once had a sister... She loved me... „ Aaravos said , smiling much happier than before. Touched by sudden anxiety, she asked.

„And what happened to her?”

The strange, horned wizard sighed dramatically before speaking.

„She died, it's a very sad story.” he made a sad face, but there was no sadness in his unnatural, sparkling eyes … she shuddered. What kind of people do I work with? she thought, but immediately answered herself. With those that are, they will help me save those I love. She loved her mother, she was sure of that as much as anything in the world. Even though she had known her for a dozen or so days, she loved her, she didn't expect it. She had long known that Shadow Weaver was alive and would return. Back then she thought of her with bitter fatalism, expecting him to reject her, just like her father had done... That's why she loved her... because she accepted her for who she was, or rather what she was... Only Scarlet and Frosta knew the truth about her. But the former was dead, and Frosta… Her mother wasn't aiming at the Ice Princess, she was sure of that. Her target was Lady Ka. This didn't surprise her , deep down she felt that there was something wrong with this woman. Lady Cala... She was an alien being, beyond the realm of mortal morality... But Lady Ka... Her evil and villainy was more down to earth, but that made it much more repulsive. She had no idea what had happened between Lady Ka and Shadow Weaver, but her mother must have had a good reason to do it... As for Frosta ... The girl survived, but remained in a coma. She wasn't sure how she could be helped, she wasn't a healer, though she doubted healing magic could do the trick. She was quite knowledgeable in the Dark Arts, and she had an extraordinary new teacher who had knowledge beyond the reach of anyone on Etheria . Perhaps with Aaravos' help she could do something for her, but unfortunately she had to choose. However, if she succeeds in what she set out to do... She will have enough power to save everyone.

Taking Nightgale's identity wasn't difficult. She didn't use much Magic on this mission, and just in case, she took with her everything needed to assume the identity of Castaspelia's assistant . No one stopped her, in fact some were glad that another sorceress was present in the castle, especially since the Head Sorceress and Mikah left the castle without telling anyone what they were going to do, although many assumed that the queen had sent them to investigate the Night Attack... She didn't witness the monster's arrival, but she deduced what it was from the description. No one was sure who defeated this creature. Some believed that Glimmer did it with the help of some strange old woman, others said that it was a terrible dragon serving the Lord Admiral who devoured the monster. She was most interested in the version that the monster was defeated by a tall guy very similar to She-Ra... She guessed who it was. She should take a closer look at Kyle, especially his sword... Before, she couldn't find time for him because so much had happened in her life, but now she would have to take an interest in him. The boy could be extremely useful not only to the Rebellion, but especially to the Creeping Chaos. He could also be a huge threat and she might have to kill him in the future... To her surprise, she found that this thought made her sad. She joined the People's Rebellion with the intention of abandoning it as soon as it was no longer useful. She expected that with one word from her Master, she would have to stab them in the back. However, during this time she managed to like them. She did not share the ideals of the Rebellion, and she never cared about great matters. Even the Creeping Chaos she served only because of the promise made to her... She didn't know how they would react to her true form. Lonnie would definitely be furious since even Kyle drew his sword at the sight of her, although she wasn't surprised at him. After all, the mere sight of Shadow Weaver supposedly made him faint, and she looked a lot like her mother...

Even though everyone in the castle was scared, no one stopped her as she made her way through the halls of Brightmoon. Even though she stood out even in this form, everyone recognized her as Castaspeli's Assistant . During the wedding preparations, she often ran around the castle to do things for the absent”minded sorceress, so everyone got used to seeing her and no one thought anything of it... Perhaps if she stayed here for a few days, she would start to seem suspicious , but when she frees her mother, she will she was going to leave Brighfmoon for good... Well, she would have to come up with a new cover in the future... Or maybe not... No one knew how long she would work for Lonnie, maybe she would leave Etheria soon... although she had no idea where she could go, after all, the Galaxy was so unimaginably huge … Well, she will do as Nyarlthotep's will dictates , it is always better to agree with her, unless one has the courage to face the consequences of defying the Great Outer God … She wasn't going to do that, after all, she was but a speck in the wind compared to his immeasurable power. But now was not the time to think about such matters. The task before her was difficult enough.

She stood in front of the door to her mother's cell. Now she had to convince the guards to let her in.

„Who are you and what are you looking for here?” said a stocky woman with a visible beer belly, which was not completely covered by the guard's armor. She bowed politely, but not humbly, and said.

"I am Nightgale , assistant to Head Sorceress Castaspelia, and I have come here by order of Queen Glimmer, who has determined that certain spells securing the prisoner's cell must be improved or there is a risk that Hordak's former right-hand man will escape, and we cannot afford that." she said in the most confident and authoritative tone she could muster. Fortunately, her father also put some valuable things in her head... After all, he wanted her to be his right hand, she had to be able to lead people, wasn't it? The two guards thought for a moment, slowly growing paler and paler, most likely imagining various terrifying visions of Shadow Weaver escaping from prison, until they finally looked at each other and nodded.

„Yes, this person cannot be allowed to escape from prison. My husband and children are waiting for me at home... „ said the stocky woman, and together with the second guard they stepped away from the door... She smiled and as soon as she crossed the threshold, she added.

„Don't disturb me, no matter what you hear. Shadow Weaver will resist and if I lose concentration, the consequences will be dire.” there was a theatrical pathos in her voice, a trait she inherited from her mother… In a sense…

As soon as she entered the bedroom converted into a cell, she saw her mother kneeling and hiding her face in her hands. She knew that Catra had visited her earlier, as well as the Lady of the Blades and the Lord Admiral. She guessed that the encounter with her adoptive daughter had driven the Dark Sorcerer to such a state. For a moment she felt a burning hatred for the cat girl, but then she dimmed it. She understood that the feline woman had reasons to hate Shadow Weaver, but now was not the time to judge who had better reasons to hate who.

„Hello mother, I have come to free you...„ she said to the most hated woman on the entire planet.

The voice broke her from her despairing stupor. She turned around and saw a woman she didn't immediately recognize. After a while she remembered seeing her in Mystacor when she visited Castaspella , but then the words she had spoken reached her hopeless mind and she felt her heart fill with an unusual mixture of joy and anxiety.

„Nightgale? Have you come back for me? But how… Why!”

Nightgale smiled slyly.

„Nobody knows who I really am. I told you that this figure was Castaspeli's assistant ... No one in the entire castle was surprised by her presence, and I managed to get here without much difficulty!” There was so much pride in her daughter's voice that she smiled, but then the girl became serious and said.

„We don't have much time, I suspect someone will be here in an hour or two, although I heard that Catra is going to give you to Halo... Anyway, I don't know if she'll want to visit you... „ said Nightgale and started to lay out some magic equipment. . She felt a twinge of anxiety…

„What are you going to do?” she asked, looking at the girl focused on her activity.

„I need to deactivate the circle that's keeping you here. But it would be very difficult to do it without anyone sensing that it was being tampered with. Unfortunately, I have neither the power nor the skill to manipulate the structure of spells. But there is a way... Even if it fails, you will be free... Use it... „ She felt uncertainty in her voice. After a moment, however, the young woman shook her head and added. “But it should work now... This time it will be different. It must be... „ now the younger sorceress's voice was so confident, as if she wanted to convince herself of her own words. She looked again at the items her Daughter had brought her, and then she began to understand what she intended to do.

„NO! Do not do this!” she shouted to Nightgale, but she did not stop preparing for the ritual.”

„I'm sorry, Mother, but I have no choice... This is the best way to save you... „ Nightgale began to draw a circle on the floor...

„This can't work... You can't do it without another person... who you'll have to sacrifice... That's how it was designed... I wanted to do it differently, but it didn't work... Mikah helped me, and he was always more powerful than me... And I had decades of experience and you...„ she tried to reason with her daughter, but she smiled darkly.

„My father put into my head some of what you could...I also had good teachers... Excellent ones indeed... „ said Nightgale .

„You don't have enough power anyway.” there was a plea in her voice.

„After the destruction of Heart, Etheria is filled with magic... I can also use all the spells that were cast here by the queen...„ Nightgale was just finishing preparing to perform the ritual...

„It doesn't work like that... It was never possible... Please stop doing it... I... I have accepted my fate... I lost everything... Absolutely everything... Don't ruin your life like I ruined mine.” she knelt before the magic shield. But Nightgale didn't respond, so she looked at the door and started screaming. – Guard Stop her! This woman wants to set me free! She... She's going to summon something terrible... A monster as terrible as Horde Prime! If you stop her, you will become heroes... Like Adora... Like She-Ra... Please... „ she screamed and begged, but no one heard her... She looked around and saw the sound-dampening device that the Lord Admiral had brought... After what happened, Lady Ka forgot to take them... Enraging Antares, she caused the death of her daughter... And then the entire room was enveloped in red light...

Calamity raised an eyebrow when she heard that outside the corridor where her cell was. The two guards were talking to someone, for a moment she wasn't sure who it was, but then she recognized the voice and smiled to herself. This is true loyalty! Have Horde Prime or Shadow Weaver ever experienced anything like this? Unlimited devotion even in times of defeat? No, such a thing could be obtained through true faith ignited by an experience of divinity... It is said that the mistress of a feline creature once invaded the Horde Prime's flagship , but this was dictated by lust, not higher values. The guards left the corridor, and Klementine stood in front of the Energy barrier . As soon as the girl saw her, she smiled brightly at her. She didn't really like that smile, it definitely lacked reverence and respect, but it was satisfying nonetheless.

„I told them that the queen sent me here to get a confession from you, but I need to have a moment of privacy with you... But I guess they interpreted it differently, because first one whispered something in the other's ear, and then they looked at me sadly and compassion. „ Klementine blushed, She felt a surge of intense anger, because the locals would probably consider the absurd idea of her pleading guilty, despite her innocence obvious to anyone with even an ounce of common sense. “But we have to hurry, because they didn't give us much time... I stole my mother's access cards, they didn't deactivate them because of the respect they had for her.” the girl grimaced and only then remembered the reason why she came here. She smiled at the girl as kindly as she could and said.

„Thank you, Klementine . Your loyalty and dedication will be rewarded.” she said, although personally she considered thanking her for fulfilling her duties as an insult to her dignity, and then, seeing in the girl's eyes that she wanted something more, she approached her, embraced her and kissed her. It was really very nice! She would have to do this more often, with women and men, this and much more.

„But now we really have to go.” Klementine looked at her with the same strange eyes that Catra and Adora looked at each other. She almost grimaced because she really didn't like this association, and then she said to call the girl to order.

„How are you going to deal with the guards?”

The girl was confused when she heard this question.

„I have a gun loaded with tranquilizer darts and a grenade with stun gas... and two gas masks... „ she explained and lowered her head. She suppressed a resigned sigh and said.

I don't need a mask... But you better leave the fighting to me. „ they said, smiling warmly at the girl... And then the guards' patience ran out and they entered. Seeing that the prisoner was outside the cell, they stopped dead in their tracks and this was their biggest and last mistake in their lives. With her superhuman speed, she leapt towards them, and a bone blade emerged from her forearm. She stuck it in the chest of one of the guards, killing him instantly. His brother-in-arms grabbed his energy Halberd. He was going to use it to shock the fugitive, but she grabbed it by the steel shaft and pulled it towards her, tearing it out of his hands. He reached for the gun at his waist, but she tripped him with a kick and then crushed his hand by stomping on it with her foot. The soldier let out a strangled scream, but he didn't have time to alert anyone because she grabbed him by the neck, crushed his throat, and then dragged him effortlessly to her cell. There, she lifted him above the summoning circle she had drawn with her own blood and slit his throat, sprinkling the floor with his ichor, causing the lines she had drawn to glow with purple light. She then turned to Clementine, who was looking at the pair of corpses, pale and in obvious shock. She walked up to her and gently caressed her cheek and said in a gentle voice and in a tender, sweet tone.

„It may all have looked terrible, but remember that it wouldn't have happened without your help. We did it together and this act sealed our love, because it was all done out of love .” and she kissed Klementine, and the circle burned with black fire, announcing the arrival of Black Wind ... Her beloved steed.

Nightgale knew that performing the Ritual of Obtainment would not be easy... But the opportunity that lay before her... Perhaps there were better circumstances to perform it... But she was afraid that she would hesitate, chicken out, and decide to look for another way to gain power. She needed it... To free her mother... To bring Scarlet back to life... To prove to the world that she was not a failure... Yes, she had to succeed, otherwise... She couldn't accept any other possibility...

After a while, she felt the barriers between worlds crumble... Probably all the sorcerers within a radius of many kilometers felt it as well. It was an unpleasant, even painful sensation, but compared to what was to come, it was nothing. For now the Devourer of Light, avatar of the Great Outer God, began to break through the gap in reality. She sensed his unimaginable power. She saw red eyes, crossed out by triple axes. There was no hunger, rage or hatred in them. There lurked within them absolutely alien, impossible for mortals to process, they couldn't even describe them in words. But the foreignness of the mind behind them didn't make him any less dangerous… Now her most difficult task lay before her. She had to control the god, at least until she managed to transform... In right way... She had created barriers to keep him from reaching for her. She created them according to the instructions of Aaravos , who was floating in the air right next to her. His blasé, nonchalant pose disappeared somewhere. He was serious now, even imperious,

„Good, now connect it to the local magic network... Immediately!„ He spoke in a worried voice, as if he did not share his previous confidence. She did as he had shown her back in Castle Crypto, but she expected to have a little more time to practice it. She used enhanced magic detection and saw ribbons of power flowing through Etheria... Several of them reached into the circle that imprisoned her mother... Capturing them was difficult... It took great concentration and great willpower... But she didn't lack it, a lifetime of pain and rejection had made her... that she became strong and tough… She had to be. So she grabbed the ribbons, though it was like catching the wind... But she focused and tightened her mental hands on the ribbon and pulled them towards the Devourer of Light, who was pressing against the barrier she had created. Even though only a few seconds had passed, the creature had almost shattered it… It had to hurry… So she tugged on the ribbon and dragged it towards the swirling darkness…. And then all the magic in Brightmoon disappeared, just for the blink of an eye... It dissipated all the spells in the area, their power absorbed by the Avatar of Nyarlathotep Both the circle that bound her mother and the barrier that protected her from the Devourer of Light disappeared. Black tendrils of darkness reached out towards her. She tried to move back, but they grabbed her.

“This experiment was as informative as it was unsuccessful…” Aaravo said, his voice full of disappointment as the tentacles dragged her towards one of the countless mouths of the Great Outer God. She screamed

She has experienced a lot of Pain in her life. Punishments ordered by her mother, agony every time the power she stole from the black garnet left her, death in a flash of power. But none of them were as terrible as watching her daughter repeat the same mistake that had made her a slave to the darkness. The ritual initially went well. Nightgale managed to stop the Entity, her daughter was truly extremely talented, but even her skills were not enough to accomplish what she planned. For a moment she had the impression that her daughter was talking to someone, so, touched by a premonition, she cast a true seeing spell and then she saw a horned Elf with shiny, sparkling skin... She remembered him... It was this bastard who had convinced her to perform this ritual... Now everything was becoming clear...

And then she felt a strange tug on the magical net and all the spells in the area disappeared, as if the summoned creature had absorbed her. Both the True Sight spell and the circle that had imprisoned her were gone... And the barrier that had protected Nightgale. The Devourer of Light reached out to the young woman and grabbed her. But now she was free, so she ran towards the monster and screamed.

„Leave her! She doesn't deserve this... Please!” she begged, but the creature simply ignored her... She was just a fly buzzing around the Giant's head... So she started throwing Spells, but they were scattered before they reached their target. She used more and more powerful magic, but what could her secret knowledge and Power do against God?

„Please... Don't do to her what you did to me... Please.” she said, kneeling before the ancient being. However, her pleas and pleas were in vain... After a while, the summoned Avatar of Creeping Chaos gave Nightgale back, but the transformation had already taken place... The girl cowered, and her body was marked, scars appeared in exactly the same places where their shadows had previously been inherited from her mother, as if she was destined to do this deed from the moment of her birth.. In a sense, it was like that... But not because of who she was born, but whose child she was. Anyone who wanted to get close to her was destined to suffer... Nightgale's entire body trembled, torn apart by spasms of indescribable pain... She remembered itso well... She ran to her daughter and wrapped her in the tails of her robe.

„It hurts, it hurts so much. It hurts so much... Mom, help me, make it stop hurting... Please... Make it stop hurting.” the girl pleaded.

„It's okay, darling... I'm with you... I'll help you... „ she said, although she knew well that there was nothing she could do... She could only end her daughter's suffering... For a moment she seriously considered this possibility, but she couldn't give up like that... There had to be way to help the girl.

Focus, don't let yourself get distracted. You have always prided yourself on your knowledge and wisdom... For once, put it to good use... She thought and decided to combine the skills she had developed during her service to the Horde with the knowledge she had acquired during her stay on Carurystal. She cast enhanced detect magic and saw ribbons of power wrapping around everything. She grabbed one, located quite far from the Avatar, and entering it, she looked into the entire network stretching around Brightmoon and traced the path leading to the moonstone... Then she dug the claws of her self into the ancient creation of The First Ones and brutally tore the thread from it and dragged it to her daughter. She wrapped a ribbon of power around her, partially soothing her torment. However, this was only a partial solution. In the case of the Black Garnet, she used complex machinery to maintain the connection, but even then it eventually broke and she had to renew it regularly or she would begin to die... In this case, it was only possible because the Arrival of the Light Eater had severed the magical network around the runestone. , but this state would not last long, especially since the Moonstone already had its owner, but a plan was already starting to form in her head... But then the guards burst in. The Devourer of Light was already disappearing into the dimensional rift , but what was still visible was there to stop them, but only for a moment. When the Avatar disappeared, they looked at them as if they had just realized that Shadow Weaver was out of the cell and that the girl they had let in was gone, replaced by a strange creature all too similar to the Dark Sorceress. One of them, a stocky woman, gripped her halberd tighter and called out.

„Stand where you are... Don't move, or ... otherwise... „ She directed her halberd towards them, with electric sparks dancing at the end of it.

„Listen to me, I'll go back to the cell, but you take this girl to Lady... „ The guard didn't let her finish, because when he saw that she was trying to get up, he screamed.

„I told you not to move.” he came closer, threatening her with his weapon. Then Nightgale raised her hand and released a stream of white flame that enveloped both guards, leaving them smoldering, blackened remains. The heat was so great that it burned the door and melted the stone. So much for peaceful solutions...

„ I'm not very good at teleportation magic mother, but you probably know her... „ the girl groaned, her body still flooded with waves of pain.

„ Yes, but first we need to find Lady Cala... She can help you, or rather a certain item in her possession. – she said, helping her daughter get up

She would rather go to sleep. She cuddled up to Bow and fell asleep in his arms, forgetting all the events of the day. And she slept until noon and then ate breakfast in bed, or rather dinner... And then she took a hot bath and slept some more, and then maybe she went on her honeymoon... And she would probably do all this, except for going to honeymoon, she could wait until things cleared up, until they released Entrapta and Catra's sister, and then they could move on to other matters... But before she went to bed, she would have to do a few more things... But first, she needed to eat something and talk to Catra. She had pretty much had enough conversations for today, the last two made everything even more confusing. Her feline friend was nervous, which really shouldn't have surprised her. Both Shadow Weaver and Lady Cala addressed Catra's painful past, reopening old wounds, although in the case of the Inhuman aristocrat, no one expected her to be connected to her friend's origins. The Grand Marshal had always been sensitive, and the mere mention of the dark Sorceress put her in a dark mood. Now meeting the dark Sorceress again could awaken that old darkness. She was worried about this, but at the same time she wanted to trust her. This wasn't the old Catra after all. She had Adora, her beloved, and them, her faithful friends. You can always count on their support…

But he also has a father now. There's no telling which direction this man will push her... she thought, grimacing. She didn't like the Lord Admiral, she was completely sure of that now. Of course, as a queen, she often had to cooperate with people she didn't like. The problem was that she didn't trust Antares at all, she already knew that this man wanted something much more than he was telling them all... He wanted power, she was sure of that now... He had appointed himself Lord Protector... He claimed it was his appointment given to him by local government, but she wasn't stupid … She knew that no one would say no to someone like him on Taurus… He had an Army and a Navy, after all, but he had also come to liberate them from the clutches of Horde Prime's loyalists… They really should have gotten there sooner… Perhaps they had become too complacent… They enjoyed the privilege of freedom, completely forgetting that others could only dream about it... That's why she couldn't completely break off cooperation with this person... And there were Lady Calia's words... As soon as she thought about them, a shiver ran down her spine.

She moved them to the family dining room, the smaller one where she sometimes ate with her mother... It could only accommodate ten people at most, so the conditions were practically intimate. Adora slumped in her chair, deep in thought, and Catra paced around the room, nervously wagging her tail. Yes, she will have to talk to her. Soon, however, Bow arrived and, together with Mermista, brought them... Dinner? She wasn't sure what to call this meal. It was dark outside the windows... Almost 24 hours had passed since those terrible night events. It felt like it had been a whole week and simultaneously like everything had just happened a moment ago. Bow was a good cook, and Mermista was the best cook of them all, which she said was because she was sometimes afraid to let Seahawk into the fire. She took a few lessons from her herself. They got a few slices of bread dipped in egg, a cream of red vegetables with croutons made of rye bread, and pancakes stuffed with meat and seafood, as well as scrambled eggs with vegetables. The sight alone brought a wide smile to her face. She grabbed a slice of buttered bread and poured herself some soup. As soon as Adora saw the food, she immediately perked up and helped herself to a huge portion of scrambled eggs. Catra sat down on a chair and grabbed the cake and began to devour it hungrily.

„It's delicious! Did you cook it?” The Grand Marshal asked Mermista, who smiled weakly.

„It's an old family recipe... I had to do something to ... not to think about what happened.” said the ruler of Salinea. Everyone knew what worried her so much. For a while everyone ate in silence until Bow, who sat next to her, asked.

„What was she like... Shadow Weaver... Did she say anything?”

When the name of the dark Sorceress was spoken, Catra bristled and growled angrily.

„She's the same mean bitch as always, and she only told lies... Nothing has changed!” As she said this, Melog turned burgundy from her anger

„No... She's broken.” she said quietly, and everyone looked at her in surprise, and she sighed and started explaining to her friends

„When she was with us as a prisoner, she always tried to exude authority and strength, to let everyone know that even though she was imprisoned, she still controlled the situation. That's how it was when my mother imprisoned her... She mocked and tried to outsmart everyone... Do you remember Adora... It was you she was talking to then...„ She looked at the blonde-haired warrior, who nodded and said-

„I remember well what it was like back then... she... She was arrogant... She wanted to seem strong, tried to shock us, but finally humbled herself when it seemed like she was dying.” she looked at Catra, who flattened her ears. She understood that talking about those moments must have been difficult for her, because while the Dark Sorceress was seeking refuge in Brightmoon, she was waiting in a cell to be send to Beast Island after being betrayed Shadow weaver. The Grand Marshal, however, nodded to her wife as a sign that she could continue. – It was different now… She was as humble as ever… As if she really felt guilty… And he didn't hide his face. She always got angry when someone saw her without a mask... This time she acted like she didn't care... No, she wanted us to look into her face, see her as she really was. You're right Glimmer... Something broke her...

„It was death.” she whispered in sudden understanding. “She died and then came back... We know these things happen... Do you remember Catra, how you told us about that creature you fought in the depths of Mystacor? And then there's Lady Sorrowflame and the others, if I understood your father's words correctly... Maybe she's something like that... „ she said thoughtfully, but Catra grimaced.

„I would sense it if she was non-dead I recognized that Lady Cala is a damn monster, we can also check it with the example of Lady Sorrowflame... She probably didn't go away with my father... No, she's alive... „ the cat girl stretched out her claws furiously and dug them into the table top and then added. „ For now…” A nasty smile appeared on Catra's face, but Melog lowered his ears.

She refrained from giving her friend a concerned look, but it was words like these that worried her. Shadow Weaver brought out the worst in people.

"It's not only death, but also life..." Bow interjected. “You said that according to your father, she was a well-respected resident of Lady Cala's home planet. She lived there among those who did not even suspect who she was.”

She smiled at her… Husband and nodded slowly.

„Archduke Adamson told me the same thing... Both she and Lady Cala were liked by the citizens of Carurystal and no one even suspected that they could be such... people.” she explained, looking at her friends.

„She's always been good at pretending to be better than she is. She was able to… put on a mask of kindness and nobility.| Adora said firmly, also digging her fingers into the table top. „ I know something about this!”

„What I mean is that how we live... How others perceive us changes us.” Bow looked at Catra, who snorted in irritation.

„Besides, she feels better now than before. Someone healed her much more than Adora. This could have changed her.” she explained what she had been thinking about for some time.

„She's manipulating you again, Glimmer!” Catra growled, getting up from her chair. „You don't remember how she sent your father to Beast Island. How she tricked you into abandoning Entrapta and almost destroying Etheria.”

„I have to remind you who sent Entrapta to the Island and who pushed us to the wall that we had to resort to such measures.” Mermiasta suddenly interjected. Catra looked at her gloomily, but the ruler of Salinea shook her head and closed her eyes, and then said. “I shouldn't have said that, I'm sorry, but I'm just so tired... Everything that happened... I'm worried about Frosta and what I did to her... I'm as guilty as Shadow Weaver for what happened to her... That terrible woman... You know, those who live with the Sea... We don't see the world in as bright colors as you do. For us, it is not filled with the rustle of leaves and the chirping of birds. Even at the surface, the sea is angry and stormy... And its deeps... It is a cold, dark abyss hostile to all life... But even there, you can discover beauty... I tell you this so that you can understand certain things. We don't see the world as simply as you do... We have stories of an ancient city stretching at the bottom of every sea and none... There lives an ancient ruler who is neither dead nor alive but dreams dreams that haunt those with wounded or sensitive souls ... He can be harsh and kind, he sends earthquakes and abundant catches ... He is truly like the Sea itself ... Sailors worship him because they know that if they lose sight of the shore, they will only be at his mercy. Although he may be ruthless, he protects its rights... Sometimes it also shows mercy... It sometimes gives back those it took away so that they can take revenge... or atone for their sins. I don't know if that's the case in space, but maybe...” concluded the ruler of Salinea thoughtfully, but Catra then banged her fists on the table and screamed.

„Are you guys crazy?! Listen to yourselves, what you say. This bitch has barely arrived here and you're already wondering if she should escape the punishment she deserves for what she did to us... To all of us! You need to get her out of here as soon as possible, because she's already starting to have a hold on you! „ Gold and blue flames burned in the Catwoman's heterochromatic eyes Melog also glowed multi-colored, as if he was overwhelmed by the emotions raging in his companion's soul....

„Do you really want to give her to Halo and her sister?" she asked her friend in disbelief, who nodded vigorously and spoke with fierce anger.

„Yes, apparently we need to take her away, because she makes you lose your mind..." Melog cringed under hers wrath.

It is unknown how this discussion would go further, because a few angry words nearly escaped her lips when Scorpia entered the room where they were conferring with the Child of Entrapta and Hordak in her arms.

„Frosta woke up and would like to talk to you!" she exclaimed joyfully at the top of her voice and the gloomy, angry atmosphere in the room immediately dissipated.

„It's great!" Adora exclaimed, beaming with pure joy.

„You don't even know how happy we all are. "Catra wiped a tear from her cheek and Melog howled happily.

„I... I can't... I just can't...„ Mermista was saying, but Scorpia waved her pincers.

„Come on, Misty! Frosta has no grudge against you!" exclaimed the former Horde officer. However, she felt a strange, indescribable anxiety.

„Is Frosta okay?" she asked carefully, and Scorpia hesitated. She was even worse at hiding the truth than Entrapta...

„Yes...Absolutely, everything is fine...Almost...Actually... „ said the ruler of the Scorpions, and the Child started playing with Bow.

„I'll take care of him. I need to get more practice taking care of children...„ said her husband. Mermista gave her a surprised and slightly mocking look, she would now tease her for not letting her fight, even though she was also there for hope. She smiled at her friend, but then immediately became serious and sighed full of bad feelings and then teleported all her friends.

Frosta looked healthy. She was pale and her eyes had dark circles, but after what had happened to her, she seemed to be doing quite well... Although she wasn't sure what exactly had happened to her... She knew almost nothing about dark magic, and to tell the truth, she didn't want any more. know. Maybe she should have asked Shadow Weaver what spell she used back then, or sought her father's advice... But the girl seemed to be fine ... because everything was fine, right?

Frosta was happy, to a fault... No one is that happy right after a brush with death, unless they want to hide how bad they really are... She couldn't see anything specific yet... The ice princess seemed to be feeling fine, but she noticed that Scorpia feels strangely tense, and out of the corner of her eye she saw Perfuma whispering something to the insectoid, one of those Shirren, luckily it wasn't the annoying Ashurk, but another representative of this People. He looked older, though in such creatures it was hard to say how true that was. He wore long emerald robes, so at first she thought he was a Sorcerer, but something about his posture told her he wasn't. He must have been one of those priests of Eridani... She frowned. She didn't trust them, there was something about them that reminded them of the Galactic Horde. So she didn't like the fact that the ruler of Plumeria was hanging out with someone like that, especially when it was necessary to keep an eye on Frosta's condition... The ice princess listened carefully to the story about the night fight with the giant monster, she had already heard it from Scorpia and Perfuma, but she had the impression that they both didn’t tell her everything rather carefully. She felt sorry for Adora that Lady Cala tried to kill her, but the truth about the blonde-haired aristocrat didn't shock

Frosta like the others, but that wasn't surprising, after all, she had never spoken to this treacherous woman. The Ice Princess asked the most questions about Lonnie and her companions, especially a red-haired girl named Scarlet, who was supposedly the Comrade General right hand and a Sorcerer. She remembered that she, Catra and the others had clashed with them in some lost city. The Ice Princess apparently spent many hours together with Scarlet trapped underground, and they probably saved each other's lives several times, such events can bring people together, she knew something about it. What was even sadder was that Scarlet was largely responsible for what happened to Frosta... However, it seemed that the Ice Princess had no grudge against Scarlet for what happened to her. She didn't blame Mermista either, which made the Sea Lady a little relieved, but not as much as one might expect …. After everyone told her what happened, Adora joked.

„I didn't know our adventures were so exciting that they make you hyperventilate!" The Princess of Power laughed warmly, although Frosta was actually breathing faster and deeper than people usually did...

„I'm breathing normally! As always! Don't talk nonsense Adora!" Frosta exclaimed, her voice indignant, but above all, scared. Everyone looked at her confused. But Adora smiled understandingly.

„Of course you're breathing normally, I just made a stupid joke.„ she said and put her hand on her shoulder... Then Frosta pulled away from her as if she had been scalded and crouched down, and this strange companion of Frosta, who had been lying at her feet until now, covered the ice princess and started hissing at Adora, who moved away confused.

„ I... I'm sorry, I didn't know I would do something to you... I didn't think you were still so sore... „ said the Heroine of the Galaxy, and tears began to flow down the Ice Princess's face, leaving strange gray streaks on her cheeks. Catra moved towards her to wipe them, but as she was about to touch her face, she stepped back and wrinkled her nose, Melog backed away, growling softly. The feline woman looked around at everyone, clearly shocked. She and her wife looked at her expectantly, as if she should know what was happening to their friend. In a way, it was true, she was an expert in magic... She should be able to help Frosta, just like she was able to help her father... She sighed, because in fact they were right and cast a few spells revealing the truth and looked at the Ice Princess, and then she had a hard time restraining herself from letting out a scream. Threads of Darkness wrapped around Frosta, reaching towards her heart and penetrating her most important points connecting her spiritual essence with her body. Seeing her reaction, Catra and Adora paled in understandable fear. She motioned for them and Mermista to come to her, and she went out into the corridor to talk to them, although she didn't know what to say at all. To her surprise, Perfume and that Insectoid in Emerald robes.

„I'm not sure, I've never encountered anything like this, I'd have to look for information in Mystacor or from Bow's dads... It's a pity that my dad and Aunt Casta are not here. It will take some time though, maybe he can arrange help from other Sorceress if necessary.” she said, fully aware that this was not the answer they expected from her.

„What did you sense from Frosta... You and Melog?„ Perfume asked Catra and her companion.

„It was... Something similar to what I felt from Lady Cala, though stronger here than the creature's here, though not as repulsive. I thought it smelled like death... If it's death magic, we really should go to Lady Sorrowflame for help.” asked the Grand Marshal carefully. The mere mention of the Lord Admiral's monstrous engineer made her flinch.

„If I may interject.” the insectoid's voice echoed in their heads, causing Catra to jump and growl angrily.

„You already did it!”

The newcomer, undeterred, continued on.

„I am Reverend Zimach and I helped Princess Perfume rescue Princess Frosta from the Black Dream... She met two beings there... One was strange and extremely alien, but the Other... It was Charon, the Rider of Death and the undisputed leader of the Daemons of Abbadon. „ He fell silent, but Catra asked suspiciously.

„Is he a real Sorcerer or some imaginary one like Iomdi and the rest?” she heard a lot of anger and contempt in her voice.

„Does he wear a Black Hat and sail a boat on the Black River?„ Adora asked with fear in her voice. When Zimach confirmed her words, she turned pale and added, „ He is Real... I met him Catra... In a dream, when I was on Icarus... He was there, and this Second Being... The one from this book, about whom Shadow Weaver spoke... It was Charon who warned me that you were in danger, and that's why I wound up on Etheria…”

Zimach moved his antennae in a strange way, she got the impression that he was concerned.

„This is very bad, really very bad... I'm afraid Princess Frosta is turning into some kind of undead. Maybe she is a Dhampir, or something like the Gray Gardeners of Galt on Lost Golarion... A being neither completely alive nor dead... I can't say much more after such a short inspection, nor am I an expert in necromancy. Perhaps Lady Sorrowflame would be able to help, but... to put it mildly, she is not known for her good approach to patients...”

There was a gloomy silence. Everyone looked at each other in fear... It wasn't the news they were ready for, but could you be ready to hear that you had to stand idly by and watch your friend turn into a creature straight from a scary campfire story... They were powerless... But they had to do something … They just had to… Catra was the first to break the silence.

„We can't give up... There has to be some way to stop this... To reverse this... Surely there are Sh-Ra's powers that can help. Maybe if we search the Mystacor library or others. You are the most powerful sorceress on Etheri, you must be able to do something. – the cat's eyes were shining feverishly. – I can talk to Shadow Weaver… In an appropriate way… I know ways to get her to tell us everything…

She looked at Catra with horror…

„You don't say that you would be able to... That you would did it... on her.” asked the Grand Marshal, who smiled in a very ugly way.

„To Shadow Weaver, to help Frost...„ she replied in a hard tone that was more dark than she had heard from her in the last five years... They stared at each other for a moment until Adora spoke up.

„Is there a way to contact Charon or other beings like him? Maybe we'll be able to convince him to leave Frosta alone, or maybe others will be able to help her?”

Zimach thought about what she said for a moment, and then he said.

„Yes, it is possible, although very difficult, but you are She-Ra, you are much closer to the gods than anyone else, so it may be much easier for you.” she could feel the cautious hope in his voice echoing in their heads. Adora nodded uncertainly, but Catra first turned pale, then turned beet red.

„You don't really want to listen to someone like that! We cannot contact such… people.” she said, her voice full of rage, but she had the impression that she also heard fear in it. Then she walked up to Shirren and put her claw to his chest.

„And you should leave my wife alone! It's all you fault! I'm sure you're responsible for what happened to Frosta and as soon as I get the evidence.” the Grand Marshal drawled.

„Catra, Zimach helped me a lot when we were trying to save Frosta, and I assure you that he did not mean to hurt her in any way! – Perfuma exclaims, truly outraged. Catra was about to say something not so nice to her, but then something shook the entire Brightmoon and she felt a new power appear in her castle. She was powerful and terrible... It was pure evil, similar to the one she had sensed from the creature she had recently fought, but much... deeper and at the same time more distant. It was like comparing the darkness in a cavernous cave to the dark shadow of space. Perfume also felt it, she let out a strangled cry and doubled over... Her wife immediately ran out of Frosty's room.

„Honey, flower, how can I help you!” exclaimed the ruler of the Scorpions, hugging her beloved.

„Someone in the castle has summoned something, something terrible... A very great evil. " cried Zimah, cringing. He also felt that something very bad was happening here.

„Can you tell where it is?” Adora asked, she was in better condition than the three of them. She shook her head.

„Not now, it's like it's spread all over Brightmoon, maybe if I focus... „ she groaned and then suddenly felt something tugging at the entire magical web. Throughout the hospital wing, doctors and healers began running around the rooms as if checking them.

„That thing... It drained all the magic, destroyed all the spells we had kept... „ she groaned. Her friends looked at her in confusion, and then understanding dawned on Catra's face.

„Shadow Weaver. She did it to free herself!” she exclaimed. Claws emerged from her back. This time, the encounter with Shadow Weaver will not end only with stunning...

„I... I can help!” Frosta suddenly called out, running out of her room still wearing her hospital pajamas. They looked at her in amazement.

„Frosta, now is not the time to show how strong you are.” she said, feeling a bit more confident than before.

„I'm fine! I can handle it!” the Ice Princess shouted, and Shogi standing next to her, now in the form of a large cat, barked to support her words. She sighed, having absolutely no idea what she should do in this situation. The girl looked healthy at that moment, apart from the obviously pale complexion, but on the other hand, she was not that well, now with her magical sense she sensed a strange, difficult to detect, but still present resonance, similar to the one emanating from Lady Sorrowflame, although of course much weaker. But they couldn't keep her locked up all the time, they wouldn't lock her up in the hospital wing for the rest of her... life? She shuddered at the thought... Frosta must have noticed that he was staring at her a little too long, because there was so much despair and pain on her face... She couldn't bear to look at it...

„Okay, Frosta, you can come with us.„ she managed to be friendly, although she felt like crying over the fate of the girl who treated her like an older sister. She was already shaking hands with her friends to teleport them, when suddenly she felt a sharp tug that almost tore her soul away. And then an overwhelming cold enveloped her. She felt that she was losing strength... She felt nauseous, her legs gave way under her...

„Adora, someone has taken the Moonstone!„ she exclaimed and began to fall into the darkness... Before she lost consciousness, she heard Catra saying, "Damn, sorcerous female dog."

And warriors don't die for nothing...

Calamity and Blackwind became bane…. A reminder to the wretched Mortal beings of what the order of things really was like ... That they were always just vermin allowed to sully the beauty of this world simply because they were unworthy of the attention of the true Masters of the Universe... Though that wasn't entirely true... Mortals could be quite useful, and they provided a lot of fun!...

She walked ahead, through the wide corridors of Brightmoon , so grand and beautiful that could have been hers... If there was even a shred of justice in this lousy world... But maybe this will change, after all, this world belongs to those who are strong enough to take into your own hands the threads of destiny. Calamity was strong, her will was unparalleled, and her heart was as pure and hard as the most perfect diamond... She was perfection incarnate and anyone who did not bow down to her fully deserved the worst possible end.

The servants did not immediately run away when they saw her. Many of them stopped in surprise, some even looked concerned, they clearly felt sorry for the woman in the torn dress and wildly disheveled hair, maybe they even thought that some misfortune had befallen her. The smarter ones ran away when they saw her smile or looked into her eyes, and the rest ran away, screaming when they saw Blackwind following her. She didn't chase them, it was the correct thing to do when seeing an angry being of her kind, or when encountering a creature as wonderful as her mount.

Klementine walked between them, trying to remain calm, although she could see that it was not easy for someone like her. She had to admit, however, that the locals knew how to behave in a dangerous situation, and these thirty years of war had taught them a thing or two, at least Shadow Weaver wasn't making this up when she said that the inhabitants of this planet were tough. The first guard to confront her died instantly when she grabbed him by the throat and snapped his neck. However, his companion did not resist her, but raised the alarm and retreated. This was a major inconvenience, she had lost her chance to get out of here undetected. She had no specific plan, except that she was to get a vehicle and escape from here, and then seek shelter in one of the cultists' cells who would help her hide so that she could continue her great mission, but first she had to get out of here, and it wasn't that easy. The biggest problem was She-Ra, she was very afraid of facing her, she had to admit it to herself. The usurper had the power to kill her, it was hard to imagine a more terrible eventuality. But she wasn't the only problem. This sparkling whore could have easily grabbed her unexpectedly and taken her to a place from which she couldn't escape this time... She had to be on her guard... Because evil could come from anywhere.

A moment after the Alarm was raised, she felt something. It was the presence of…His…Their presence! They came here! Creeping Chaos! She didn't recognize this Face, but that wasn't important, after all, no one knew all of them. But they came here in person! Their presence filled her body with ecstasy. Even though she was not a magic user, she felt that this creature was tugging at the entire magical network, this power was beyond imagination! She fell to her knees, her body contorting as she experienced the splendor of the Great Outer God…

„Lady Calo! What happened!” Klementine exclaimed in fear. If she knew who had visited this wretched planet, she would howl with horror and delight. After a while, however, the presence disappeared as suddenly as it appeared. It really shouldn't have surprised her, after all, there were few places in the universe that could withstand the glory of someone so amazing without breaking like a shattered glass ball, but she still felt disappointed. Someone had to summon the Avatar of Nyarlathotep , which actually wasn't that difficult, the problem was always controlling them, or maybe rather begging them to do what was wanted of them, it was a matter of interpretation. Only who on this planet abandoned by the gods would know how to summon such a wonderful creature... She only knew one thing...

"Take me to the place where Shadow Weaver is being held," she ordered Klementina in a hard voice that brooked no objections.

They ran ahead, although not as fast as she would have liked, because Frosta had to keep up with them, and even Scorpia, although she made huge leaps, quickly became out of breath, this exoskeleton weighed its weight... However, she had to admit that the Ice Princess was in surprisingly good shape, considering she was in a coma not too long ago. Zimah 's words rang in the back of her head , but they were nonsense! Frosta has always been a strong and tough girl who was not afraid of the icy wastes of her homeland. Nothing happened to her, and these strange symptoms were a remnant of the Shadow Weaver's spells, nothing more! This will all pass once Frosta gets some rest! And if not, he would rip the way to heal her from Shadow Weaver's throat, Even if it was the last thing she ever said... And she wouldn't regret it, maybe last time instead of catching her, she should have ended her vile life .

They arrived at a guardhouse that had been converted into a temporary command post, where Brother Blade and General Juliette were waiting for them .

„How she escaped! Where is now?” she asked in a sharp tone.

„What are you talking about?” replied the General. She was furious, but also scared. “Lady Cala escaped by kidnapping my daughter, and Shadow Weaver… I'm not sure. I haven't heard from the guards who were supposed to keep an eye on her.”

Juliette said , she seemed irritated that she had to explain to them what was happening. “Didn't you hear the Alarm?”

„No, we found out about everything after Glimmer and Perfuma felt and all the spells stopped working, and then the Queen was cut off from her stone!” she explained, barely restraining her outburst of rage, because she felt that she was wasting her time explaining to everyone what had happened.

„It must be a coordinated action, they must have had a plan for a long time what to do in case of imprisonment...„ Adora said in a confident voice, she herself would probably have prepared an escape plan long before she arrived at the enemy's headquarters. “Do you know how she broke the spell without being detected?” she asked at the end, but the general shook her head, looking at her incomprehension, so the Princess of Power added. "It must have been some kind of ritual, and I don't believe Glimmer didn't leave anything behind that would alert us to the fact that she was trying to cast such a powerful spell. I don't know how she escaped detection.”

„Has anyone visited Shadow Weaver?” Mermista asked with a thoughtful face. The general nodded.

„I think Nightgale came to her to perform spells, apparently on the queen's orders.” explained the General. Now everything was clear, she didn't like this woman from the beginning. But before she could voice her suspicions, Frosta shouted.

„Is Nightgale here?”

Everyone looked at the Ice Princess, the general made a face as if she had just noticed her.

„Well, yes, she's Castaspela's assistant, although apparently she recently went to visit relatives, but she came back...„ she explained to her friend, smiling grimly, but Frosta shook her head vigorously and called out.

„I do not understand you! Scarlet is Nightgale!

„Nightgale is Scarlet? That would explain a lot why Lonnie was so aware of our activities.” she said, remembering her own trick involving Double Trouble, but Frosta shook her head again

„No... It's the other way around... Nightgale is Scarlet.” The Ice Princess hesitated for a moment. – She is her daughter!

She snorted when she heard the girl's words.

„She wasn't a mother to any of the cadets, not even to us.”

„NO! She... She is the Daughter of Shadow Weaver and Hordak .” the Ice Princess exclaimed with a pained expression on her face. It took them a long time to absorb the incredible news Frosta had given them.

„But how... When...„ she gasped, still in shock...

„Do we really want to know how it went...„ Mermista said, her face turning green.

„Entrapta always said that Hordak's Heart was full of love... But, for Shadow Weaver...!?„ Scorpia said, and Perfuma became lost in thought.

„It didn't happen that way... She was created when Catra was exiled... But after what happened during the portal story, Hordak banished her...„ she looked down, saddened... „I didn't tell you about it because Nightgale she didn't want to... Even Lonnie doesn't know the truth... She's very afraid, she's afraid that you will reject her for who she is... „

It wasn't the knowledge she was ready for, although it didn't shock her as much as it should have. Now everything was falling into place logically.

„Shadow Weaver was always able to say what others wanted to hear. She probably said a few nice words to her daughter and thus gained the perfect supporter.” she said quietly. She didn't know what to think about the fact that the woman she hated so much had a child... She didn't know this Scarlet... Or rather Nightgale ... Should she judge her through the prism of her mother? Horde Prime was such a terrible monster that it was hard to put into words, but most of his clones were good and nice people, just look at Brother Blade. Her Uncle wasn't a good person either, and she herself was raised by Shadow Weaver... But that wicked woman had marked her as well... This young sorceress was spying on them, hiding among them, serving Lonnie, but was she really? If Lonnie didn't know her true identity... Maybe it wasn't Comrade General who she really Served. Could this be the same terrible and mysterious creature that Shadow Weaver served? So many questions and so few clues...

„I'm sorry, but could you please stop discussing the origins of this damn sorceress and focus on rescuing my daughter from the clutches of the fucking monster!" the General growled Juliette , and Brother Blade nodded and added.

„In fact, time is running out. We must do something as soon as possible to stop these women, because if they escape, the whole of Etheria will be in danger... „ there was absolute seriousness in the clone's voice, he seriously meant what he said. Adora nodded and asked for the castle plans, then when one of the guards handed them to her, she looked at them for a moment and finally said.

„They will definitely want to meet before they run away... Cala will already know the castle well enough, and Shadow Weaver knows it well from her previous stay here, and besides, she has Nightgale ... This is where they will meet... „ she pointed to a point on the map.

„It's near her old garden... You know, I never believed in fate and things like that... But there will be a beautiful irony in what will happen there." she said with a menacing smile, baring her fangs.

Lady Ka didn't blame the Lord Admiral for what happened. After thinking about it, she even decided that she had gotten away with it. If Antares had found out under different circumstances that she had declawed the kitten, it could have been much worse than losing a few fingers. She was immune to pain, her father taught her what real suffering was. The Lord Admiral destroyed his enemies ruthlessly, but was lenient towards his subjects who let him down . He figured cutting off a few of her fingers would do the trick, and honestly, so did it. Nowadays, even the loss of an entire limb was not a tragedy... There were many people who voluntarily replaced biological body parts with cybernetic implants, so as not to have to look far, Graag replaced his leg, the knee of which was shot through, with a mechanical prosthesis and he intended to do the same with the hand he injured in the last fight? Maybe she should follow his example and replace her own hand? Then she will get new, beautiful claws.

She had no grudge against this shadowy witch, after all, in war and politics, anything goes. They were adversaries, or maybe just rivals, and honestly she wasn't sure what their status was, so it was understandable that they tried to hurt each other as much as they could. Therefore, at the first opportunity he will try to cut off her hand or two, just for the sake of it... Or maybe not, she'll see... Revenge is pleasant, but in this case it was definitely not a priority ... She had to think about completing the mission for Antares ... And about securing her future, because perhaps her days at the Lord Admiral's side are numbered... Although if it's true and She-Ra can heal Antares ... Sometimes the future unfolds in truly unbelievable ways...

Suddenly she heard footsteps, the corridors of the castle were strangely deserted, perhaps she had noticed it before, but her mental acuity was dulled by the painkillers she had to take anyway. She hid in the shadows behind the tapestry and watched. First she saw a woman... It was Lady Cala, now almost naked, for her dress was in tatters and what was left was stained with blood. She also took on her more monstrous form, as she extended her claws and a bone blade from her forearm, and her eye was purple-purple , but she was still damn sexy, or maybe that's why...

Behind her was a tall elf with a swarthy complexion who looked like she was about to fall. into hysteria. She seemed as charming as she was completely incapable of surviving in the real world… Her world. And behind them walked a large creature. It was all black, darker than the night, it actually absorbed the light. It was the size of a huge horse, whose silhouette it resembled. Its muzzle ended in a beak made of black iron The legs were thick, spread wide, ending in double hooves that left black, hissing marks wherever they touched. It had wide webbed wings, equipped with single claws that seemed sharp like swords. His eyes would be deep purple , as if they were gates to another, terrible world... He was beautiful. Pushed by the impulse, she emerged from behind the tapestry and waved to the trio as they passed by. Lady Cala raised an eyebrow at her, to which she responded with an exaggerated bow and said.

Lady Cala smiled

„May luck favor you, noble wanderer." she said and bowed in a much more appropriate way. Then each of them went their own way. Lady. Ka decided that now it would be wiser to slip away unnoticed, because the events that Lady Cala would probably lead to would be remembered for a long time and it would be better if she was not associated with them. As she walked to the quarters reserved for her soldiers, she thought about what had happened and came to the conclusion that a completely new path had just opened up to her, leading to an unknown future... Maybe she would enter it... If Lady Cala succeeded... But Life has taught her that monsters always win...

She walked shrouded in darkness, her daughter following behind her. The girl walked straight, but there was pain on her face, as if her very soul was on fire. In fact, that was the case, she remembered well, as magic flowed through her veins like a rushing river, a sense of omnipotence with the simultaneous awareness of impending doom. It was wonderful and terrifying at the same time. Ecstasy and pain pierced through her body. Now she realized that all her life she had wanted to experience this moment again, to return to the moment of her first fall. Everything she did after that was in fact an attempt to return to that moment, or to escape from the terror that was reaching out for her... Then she sealed her fate. So now, as she looked at Nightgale, she couldn't help but think that her daughter would also lose the chance to shape her future.

To her surprise, no one tried to stop them, although she was sure that an alarm had been raised. Now she only hoped that she could find Lady Cala before Adora and the others found her... She knew that Catra was furious with her, and trying to escape would only increase her anger, so this time her former ward might have no qualms about ending it this time. her sinful life... Only that Nightgale will defend her, and with her power... With a bit of luck, or rather misfortune, she is able to harm even She-Ra... The thought that her children, both the adopted and scorned ones, as well as this, whose existence she had only recently learned about, they would fight each other was more terrifying than the prospect of meeting Nyarlathotep again . But there was nothing she could do about it...

They reached an intersection, but then she saw several guards trying to stop her. They were accompanied by several bots of the former Etherian Horde. The guards kept their distance, hiding behind the machines. They didn't seem eager to fight, and she quickly figured their goal was only to slow her down without risking her life too much. She withdrew her tentacles a little, then called out.

„No one has to get hurt... Just let us pass.” she tried to keep her voice calm but firm.

„We have received orders to stop you and we will do it even at the cost of our lives!„ exclaimed the commander of the guards in a trembling voice. Judging by her accent, she must have once served in the Horde, so standing in front of the one she had been afraid of almost all her life required special courage...

„It's quite a high price and as far as I know Glimmer, she wouldn't ask her soldiers to pay it, your queen is not me... You are probably supposed to buy some time for her and the princesses, which you did, so please leave.” she said truthfully. She wasted a lot of time trying to resolve the situation peacefully ... It would have been better for them to have flooded them with a storm of spells without a word, Nightgale was seething with the desire to unleash the power seething in her heart. Perhaps the guard would have succumbed to the power of persuasion and ordered her subordinates to retreat, but then death came from the adjacent corridor.

Lady Cala rushed out at the gathered guards in her semi-monstrous form, laughing gleefully as she took life. Behind her came a beast straight from nightmares, a creature that mocked all that was sublime and beautiful. Somehow, Lady Cala summoned her mount from distant Carurystal. She had never seen his true form before, but she had no trouble figuring out what this monster was. The unfortunate warriors were so absorbed in their conversation with the dark Sorceress that they did not even notice the approaching Doom. Nightale, filled with power and pain, jumped into the fight, throwing a magic missile at the nearest warrior , an officer who had once belonged to the Horde, and then struck two more guardsmen with lightning that shot from her fingers. She herself did not join the fight, even if she wanted to, she would not have had time to do anything, because the fight did not last even ten heartbeats... When it was all over, Lady Cala, who had not even been out of breath during the fight, looked at her daughter . She was already waiting for the malicious, contemptuous comment that would provoke her daughter to magically attack Yog-Sototh 's spawn , partly even waiting for it because perhaps Nightgale would rid the world of this vile creature. But her ward bowed to the younger sorceress and said without mockery in her voice.

„I knew you were hiding the Great Secret Nightgale , No wonder our lord chose you as his servant.”

The meaning of those words hit her like a war hammer... Her daughter served the Creeping Chaos... It explained so much... She knew that this strange Elf with sparkling skin was connected to Nyarlathotep, but she wasn't sure if she served him... After all, she was marked by the Great One. The Outer God, but for decades she had served only herself... Now her daughter had fallen into his trap, and there was no way to free herself from them , she knew it... But she couldn't afford to let this dark revelation break her. She had to act for the good of her daughter.

„We have to hurry, someone will reach us soon, because these soldiers were only here to stop us.” she said, glancing at the bloodstone ring resting on Lady Cala's hand. She looked around. Next to Lady Cala and her nightmare companion stood a girl who looked like she was just one step away from a nervous breakdown... Off to the side was a terrace with a garden ... her garden from the time she was in so-called captivity with Glimmer. He has gone wild over the years, or maybe he was allowed to go wild...

„There is!” she heard Adora exclaim. Well, these warriors didn't die for nothing after all...

I came too late, she thought, seeing the carnage that had taken place. If she had come here faster, if she hadn't wasted time on unnecessary discussions ... When she had taken the form of She a little earlier, or if she had known her teleportation powers better ... If... There were so many things she could have done better, but she failed. All she could do now was capture her adoptive mother and the wicked aristocrat... Capture... was this really the best solution? Catra would have a different opinion... She looked at her wife who was running next to her with cold fury on her face.

„Promise you won't do anything to Nightgale , okay?” Frosta asked with pleading in her eyes.

„We'll try... „ she said. She recognized this woman from a distance. Before, Nightgale hadn't caught her attention, maybe only because of her height, but now that she showed her true colors... She saw an obvious resemblance to their adoptive mother, but she also resembled one of the clones, but it wasn't her appearance that made her feel uneasy when she was looking at her, but she felt something from her. She simply burned with darkness, something similar emanated from Shadow Weaver, but in her case it was much stronger, like comparing a glowing ember to the flame of a fire pit. There was something unatural about that power, like Lady Cala's smile.

However, what terrified her the most was the creature standing next to the terrible aristocrat. She looked like someone had taken Swiftwind and fed it nightmares and hatred. As soon as the monster saw her, it vomited purple flame, but she dodged it, so it hissed so loudly that she felt as if the sound would burst her head. Shadow Weaver then created a pool of darkness in front of them , from which numerous tentacles shot out and grabbed their legs and arms, although the grip wasn't crushing, it slowed them down for a moment, Catra and Melog jumped over them, but then Nightgale cast a spell that made them that her wife's body was twisted in pain, as was her companion, so she roared, feeling the fear and anger pierce her soul, and summoned a bright light that dispersed the shadowy tendrils, and then she charged at the young sorcerer, but she raised her hands and it opened before her. a portal from which two terrible monsters crawled out. They resembled great apes like those living in the singing jungle, but they were covered with blood-red fur and their hideous mouths were full of long fangs like daggers. The first beast tried to grab her, while the second one attacked Frosta . However, these monsters were no challenge to them. She slashed at the beast with her sword of protection, almost slicing it in two, while the ice princess began flailing at her monster with her ice fists until it fell to the marble floor and then disappeared in a pool of the foul black liquid. Meanwhile, Scorpia hurled lightning bolts at Lady Cala

, but the aristocrat only flinched under the influence of the Electric discharges, and then, laughing madly, she jumped at the scorpion princess who grabbed the monstrous woman's arms with her pincers. The Scorpion people were known throughout Etheria for their strength, but even among them Scorpia stood out for her power, but somehow Lady Cali managed to resist her, and even slowly unwrapped her embrace, but then Catra charged at her, cutting her tendons with her claws in her lap, and Melog closed his jaw on her shoulder. A normal person would howl in pain after something like this, but Lady Cala was the absolute opposite of normality. So she let out a single growl and that terrible monster of hers charged at Catra with its body. And he kicked Melog . She screamed and jumped towards the ghastly monster, even hurting it. But then Perfuma and Mermista hit . The plants created by the ruler of Plumeria pulled both sorceresses into the garden and immobilized them, and a wave of water pushed Lady Cala and her Mount, transporting them both into the garden that was once owned by Shadow Weaver. Only this girl remained, Daughter General Julliette . Perfuma walked up to her and put her hand on her shoulder and said.

„You're free, but you have to run away because...„ she didn't finish because the girl stabbed her in the stomach with a short knife, let out a strangled scream, and then ran away to the garden.

„NO!” Scorpia exclaimed and took her wife into her arms. She looked at both women and the fleeing Daughter General. The choice was simple... She approached the Flower Lady and summoned the power of She-Ra to heal her... Then the guards arrived. Brother Blade, seeing what fate had befallen his friends, growled full of rage and ran into the garden.

Fighting made her feel better. The fear she felt before had melted away and now she felt strong and healthy. Even though she was fighting monsters, she was almost completely unafraid... But then she saw her brother blade running towards Nightgale with an angry face . She remembered that he hadn't heard her Plea not to hurt the poor girl, so she jumped in after him. The clone stood in front of the younger Sorceress.

„Hello, uncle. “ Nightgale said quietly , her voice strangely trembling, like that of someone who was barely concealing terrible Pain.

„Don't call me that, you killed my friends... We're not family!” growled the clone, gripping the blade tighter.

„If you say so.” she said bitterly, and then suddenly the plants holding her withered and a black wave shot out from the Sorceress's hand and engulfed Brother Blade. His body twisted and withered, leaving the brave guardsman only a withered carcass, but to the horror visible on Nightgale's face , she did not stop, but continued on, killing everything in her path. Finally she embraced her too , but she didn't feel anything except a slight tingling. Shadow Weaver also broke free and created an energy barrier behind her and then spoke.

„Come to me, I don't know if I will be able to move so many people”

„Everyone, even that monstrous equine creature, approached the Dark Sorcerer, but then she called out to Nightgale .

„You don't have to leave with them... You're not evil, just... You can leave this path... „ she called out, but the young sorceress smiled sadly.

„ here is no turning back from the path I have entered.” Nightgale said gloomily, and Shadow Weaver began to gather shadows around her, but it was obvious that she was putting a lot of effort into it. Adora, who had managed to heal Perfume , struck with her sword, and Mermista and Scorpia threw water. As the barrier trembled, Lady Cala looked at Klementine and took her face in her hands.

„Klementine, I think you need to give one more proof of your love.” said the Aristocrat and kissed her… And then she plunged the bone blade into her stomach and twisted it. Blood gushed from the General's daughter's mouth.

„ Hey, Adora... Fetch! – Lady Cala threw the girl's limp body across the terrace...

„NO!” she shouted and hit the Aristocrat with ice spikes, but she had already disappeared in a cloud of darkness... Then the magical barrier disappeared and Adora jumped after Klementine . She looked around the garden. She looked at the dead plants and the body of the Brother Blade... They were Dead, as was probably the Daughter of General Juliette ... But she survived, although she did nothing... She failed to convince her friend to side with the darkness, nor did she stop Lady Cali... Her subjects were right they were right, she was a useless girl who only bothered everyone. She was a princess who had nothing, not even a beating heart…. She was the princess of nothing… the princess of nothingness.

Chapter Notes

See the end of the chapter for notes

Walking through the dark void always filled her with fear, even though she was marked by the same evil that ruled this place. After a while, however, they came to light, in front of a large estate... She guessed that it was the estate of unfortunate Klementine and her mother. The Light Mons were rising, she hadn't even noticed it before, that it was already starting to dawn, she was incredibly exhausted, and maybe another fight was waiting for her. Lady Cala was in great shape, as was Blackwind, but if she was allowed to handle this case, it would end in a massacre, so she would probably have to resolve it. Her daughter was still filled with power and would probably prefer a brutal solution where she could unleash all her magic. Perhaps that would be best. The last time she tried to reduce the suffering caused by her actions, the effect was quite the opposite...Maybe she should let these three act and get what they came for as quickly as possible. After all, she was no moral authority, even if she tried to pretend to be one now...

However, as soon as she looked around the area, she noticed that there was something very wrong here... It was quiet and peaceful here, and the appearance of four people like them should have caused some commotion, most likely the intervention of the guards, but there was silence here... Touched by a sudden premonition, she looked at Nightgale, who smiled at her..

„I informed my friends in the cult about where we would go if we managed to escape... Klementine probably did the same...

Though the cultists were never the friends she thought they were...„ She glanced at Lady Cala in a meaningful way. "I asked them to keep the damage to a minimum... But this is Etheria, the locals are very good at resisting those who try to impose their will on them."

Calamity snorted in disdain at Nightgale's words, but she nodded in appreciation of both her daughter's ingenuity and the belligerence of the inhabitants of her home planet, and then she spoke.

„We have some time before Glimmer regains control of the Moonstone and figures out where we are, it will take a few hours at most, so we'd better hurry up... „ she said seriously and, without waiting for her companions, she moved forward, towards the estate that was hers. the case was forever marked by tragedy... However, as she approached, she saw a woman in a wheelchair sitting on the porch, drinking tea, accompanied by a clone in livery. She didn't recognize the woman at first, but understanding came after a while.

„So you found me somehow, Hello... „ she said in a gloomy tone. "Well, you won't get your revenge that easily." she summoned the darkness around her, ready to fight one of the star sisters, but she giggled.

„Oh Shadow Weaver. I've been waiting for this moment for so many years, but now... „ she looked at Nightgale, and a nasty smile appeared on her face...„ But now I think it's better to wait a while, because I see that you've seen life from an unexpected side... No, I can wait … After all, I've been waiting for so many years… Indeed, it's better to wait and watch you sink into the abyss… But that's not the only reason… Our lords, your daughter, your sister and mine… „ she showed an amulet depicting a skull, the symbol of Charon. ...they decided that you would definitely be more useful if you were safe and sound... Healthier than me, anyway." Using her good arm, she waved her hand, which was as gray and lifeless as a corpse's. "But I've taken up enough of your time... Now it's time for me... A voice in the darkness is waiting for you.” she said and signaled her companion to take her away…

„ A Voice In The Dark?” she asked her daughter with surprise, and she smiled sadly and gloomily at the same time.

„The leader of Nyarlathotep's cult on Etheria... He found me when I had no one else in the world.”

Eti still felt the storm in her heart, which would probably last for a long time, although it was not as violent as always... Thanks to Rosie... The closeness of her girlfriend meant that the cold flame did not burn so strongly. Her love soothed the pain of the wounds she was inflicted with, with which she was born. However, she had to be careful with her... Rosie was sensitive and delicate, but also strong in her own way... But she was also afraid that the source of this strength had a sinister origin. Rosie was always a good fighter despite her innocent appearance, which was awfully cool. But yesterday she attacked Blonde, for absolutely no reason... She would have killed her, and probably her sister too. If she hadn't been there... But what happened then? Blonde, especially as a BLONDE, was a great fighter, in the end she fought the cruiser herself and won! She resembled one of the goddesses, although she wasn't entirely sure of it, the gods had never been interested in her, so she repaid them in the same way. But Rosie, nice sweet Rosie almost killed the goddess or whatever the BLONDE was. So far, she was used to being the one hiding mysteries and secrets, not the former intern. Rosie was the epitome of honesty, the one who always told the truth and never manipulated anyone... She was just a nice girl who was always cheerful, despite all the horrors in the world. However, it turned out that Rosie too, was hiding a secret... Probably the biggest and darkest of all. Probably, because there was also her hand... She had always liked it, she gained it when she gained freedom, when she gave herself name… She was always very useful. From Alatar she knew that she was better than most cybernetic limbs... She could use it to destroy and hurt, she felt that it made her stronger and more capable, but at the same time this limb was absorbing her, perhaps even devouring her... Piece by piece... Nothing about her in fact, she didn't know, she didn't even remember how she came into possession of it... She just woke up in the hospital and already had it... She discovered her first property by accident, when one of the guards in the park became concerned when he saw her sitting crouched down, staring ahead. She was watching children playing, she had never seen anything like this before, and when she felt someone's hand on her shoulder, she got scared and hit him with all her strength... He survived... fortunately... She found out that he could cheat the fingerprint scanner when she broke into to the fridge of the guy who helped them fix the Crusher... Now it turned out that he can shoot with it, a very useful ability... He needs to find out if it can do other things... But who could she talk to about it? With Bina? Perhaps, although she wasn't sure if she could give her any answers... She would think about it some more.

She could have done something earlier when she saw the girl fighting Itel. She could have a serious talk with someone about this. Ask Grimmy, Ireanis or even Redhair for advice... She just hated discussing with others... She was never the one who thought, she always left this responsibility on others. On Bina, Itel or even Grimmy… Could she afford it now with Rosie? Of the two of them, she was the more experienced, the stronger one... Jantar made sure to make her strong... Yes, she was quite strong, but now it wasn't strength that she needed... She had to be wiser, more composed... She couldn't let the storm in her heart guided her… The cold fire couldn't take control of her… She couldn't give in to the rainy days… It was just so hard, overwhelmingly hard. By Devils and Demons, could anyone do that? But she had to…

They were near Dryll. She was sitting on the sofa and Rosie was next to her. The girl rested her head on her shoulder. Her eyes were closed, but she wasn't sleeping. She was probably worried about what was happening to her and her girlfriend's condition... She didn't want Rosie to worry, but she probably couldn't do anything about it... So she stroked the white-haired girl's neck with her tail... Rosie laughed and looked at her with love in their heavenly ones.

„I love you, Rosie...„ she said in sign language, and her girlfriend replied.

„Why don't you call me Sparklepaw anymore? It was so sweet!” she kissed her on the cheek. Eti thought about it before answering.

„I give names to those I don't trust so that they become less dangerous to me... Because when you give someone a name, you have power over them... I read that once, but I trust you completely... However, I can call you whatever you like... Sparklepaw.”

She brushed her cheek against Rosie's, but then she heard the clatter of the bullet and looked up to see Scar smiling crookedly and a little sadly, and then she said.

„I wanted to thank you for how you did during the mission. Maybe the bluff of blowing up Brightmoon was a bit over the top, but...”

„It wasn't a bluff.” she looked straight into the eyes of the Comrade General.” I wasn't bluffing. If they had hurt Itel, I would have blown up the whole damn city, killing everyone... Or rather, I would try, because the rest would probably make sense to me... Maybe.” her voice was quiet, but absolutely serious. Scar blinked in surprise.

„But... How...„ she finally blurted out the question. Rosie looked at her with confusion as well. She sighed and said

„You better follow me.” she said, waving her hand.

She led them to the hiding place where they kept the weapons, the special ones... At first, the combat robot caught Scar’s attention, probably because it looked the most dangerous, although it definitely wasn't... She started telling them both about the weapons they had collected here. Their eyes showed increasing disbelief.

„And these are rock incinerators... They will burn everything in a small area, but the radiation will kill everything within a kilometer radius, the flare of the explosion will blind anyone who looks at it from a distance of up to four kilometers. Only my sister, me and the Lord Admiral can activate them... they have genome and brain wave security system... „ she explained. Rosie looked concerned, maybe even scared, but not as much as she feared. Finally, Scar asked.

„So... You had this all along, but you didn't tell anyone?”

She nodded.

„It's not very wise to brag to everyone that you have weapons of mass destruction.”

„What are you doing?” said Bina, entering through the hatch. “Although I'm still impressed that you didn't use it. But listen, we're getting to Castle Crypto, but it turns out we 'll have company... Who was so smart and brought the fucking shadows of Tarak here?” She asked, smiling darkly.

„It was Itel... But it's probably good that they're here, because they're the Lord Admiral's Enemies, right?” Scar asked with hope resulting from her complete unawareness of who she was dealing with.

„Nothing that has to do with the Shadows of Tarak is good... Just look at me.” she explained to the General.

She could still feel the power burning in her heart. It was huge, almost impossible to control. Even though her body was torn by spasms of agony, she also felt euphoria impossible to describe with words. She has never been as alive as she is now. It was such a wonderful ecstasy that she had never experienced before, even during orgasm, although she had to admit that she was not very experienced in this matter, after all, she had had very few partners, and of all of them, only Lonnie could give her real pleasure... But this power filled her with they also threaten her. She was afraid of it... What he might do to her and what would happen if she couldn't control her... And what she was most afraid of was losing her... And she knew it would happen sooner rather than later.

Her mother seemed pleased that the cultists had spared the servants. They put up no significant resistance, partly because many of Nyarlathotep's followers hid among them and the rest had come to the wedding from Icarus. She wasn't sure whether they would want to eliminate them later to cover their tracks, although her mother would probably be against such cruelty, so far she had tried to choose solutions that would limit the bloodshed, but Lady Cala may have a different opinion. And she herself? These people meant nothing to her. They didn't hurt her, but if she came here in her true form, would they accept her as one of nothing? Doubtful... The Power was whispering to her to unleash her fury on them, to destroy them in a magical conflagration... Today she did not kill for the first time, and probably for the last time. But she imagined what Lonnie, Kyle, Frost and… Scarlet would say and realized that she wouldn't be able to look them in the eye if she contributed to this massacre. However, she knew that the fate of the prisoners would not depend on her...

The Voice In The Dark Was waiting for them in the library. He lived, if that word could be used for a being of this kind, in the body of a thin man who had agreed to become his vessel decades ago. A great privilege, but also a great sacrifice... He was the Herald of Nyarlathotep, a separate entity through which the Great Outer God spoke .Her mother and Lady Cala almost immediately realized who he was and knelt down on their knees in front of him. Aaravos, who was hovering above her, merely nodded.

"I almost feel disappointed..." he said in a double voice that made the shadows tremble. Shadow Weaver lowered her head in resignation, but Lady Cala looked at her indignantly.

„After all, I served you faithfully! I didn't do anything against your will!” The aristocrat exclaimed indignantly, but then eyes in which the deepest darkness danced looked at her.

„Really? So it wasn't me who forbade you to hurt Adora and her Wife... „ he said, and as he spoke, his voice pierced their minds like obsidian needles.

„I didn't hurt her... It was a Heart Gift! She wanted to take her revenge on Adora!” Lady Cala defended herself, but the Voice in the Dark answered her quietly, but she still felt as if her soul was about to burn in the black fire of his irritation.

„ Don't look for loopholes in my orders, Calamity... I made an agreement that you were supposed to follow. I wouldn't agree to it if I didn't think it was in my best interest... She-Ra and Catra are needed to complete the grand plan, and a living Glimmer is more useful than a dead one. However, you broke all my promises out of petty malice, and all that resulted was a huge waste of time...

The blonde-haired beauty shook her head.

„But no! I discovered extremely important facts about Etheria's past...„ she said and began to tell the story that the First Ones murdered the original inhabitants of Etheria... Shadow Weaver looked at Lady Cala with amazement, for her this news was clearly something completely new, but not for Aaravos, who nodded in understanding, nor for her... She was in the city of Elder Things after all. Back then, she didn't fully understand the meaning of those paintings, but now they fit all together logically.

„Yes, we remember it now... It's an interesting discovery... But it doesn't justify your earlier actions... So much time was wasted... This also applies to you, our dear Shadow Weaver.” the voice changed, became gentler, but at the same time much more commanding, as if it belonged to a king... It probably came from another face of Nyarlathotep, which was better known to her mother. "Your actions on this planet so far have not brought us much success… You acted as if you had completely forgotten why you were sent here… Why you were brought back to life…"

„I gathered allies as I promised." assured the older sorceress.

„And at the same time, you revealed your presence, complicating many matters." said the Voice in the Dark in its old voice and returned to the new one. "The plans must be adjusted, and consequences must be brought against the servants who did not fulfill their duties…„ he paused and continued. "You, our dear Shadow Weaver, due to your tardiness, caused your daughter to take the path you have been following for a long time. This is the price she must pay for your choices... I think it is sufficient punishment for what you have done, or perhaps rather what you have failed to do. „ said the Voice, and her mother cringed, obviously feeling guilty about the choice her child had made.

„Is that all? Because she forgot about her monumental mission and focused on her meaningless war with this Catra's father, the only thing that will happen to her is to watch someone else suffer? This is…„ Lady Cala said in an angry voice, but when dark eyes looked at her, she fell silent, her face pale.

„Oh, our dear Calamity… How sometimes you are… disappointingly foolish. Haven't you learned that the weakest point of every mortal is those they loves? Not only mortal, by the way. Besides, no one taught you that you shouldn't ask for punishment for others, because someone might remember your sins." he smiled like a parent to a rebellious child. "Some of your responsibilities will be delegated to someone else. Your weaknesses have been noticed, and we have determined that the tasks require a certain... dedication. That's why we're sending Evangeline here."

Now Lady Cala actually turned pale, absolutely terrified. Shadow Weaver looked at her in surprise. She was not surprised, the Aristocrat was not afraid of anyone, rather she was the one who aroused fear. If there was a creature she feared, it must have been truly terrible.

„No, don't send her here... She is... She will cause chaos here... the blonde woman pleaded.

„But aren't we Creeping Chaos? Our goal is to bring change? Evangeline will fit in here perfectly in her own way... She's even looked here. But don't worry, Calamity... You will have a role to play in the coming events, a great and glorious one, but now it's probably time to stop talking about failures, because we have achieved significant successes... Nightgale, you have every right to be bursting with pride, because you have achieved something extremely important. You have made contact with one of our greatest servants who has been imprisoned. You know him Shadow Weaver. This is Aaravos, the great sorcerer of the lost Xadia. Created by the First Ones, who, however, rebelled against his creators and swore to serve the Creeping Chaos, for which he was endowed with great gifts and great knowledge. You connected with him using the method he himself developed. The great sorcerer is one of the few beings who remember the First Ones and the only one who is devoted to us... Thanks to him, we have the chance to discover where Eternia is hidden and find it to put an end to this plague once and for all.„ The Voice in the Dark raised its hands like a priest speaking to the faithful, indeed, this face was so different from the ominous oracle that he usually was... „Therefore, your new task will be to find the way to Xadia and free my great servant from his prison, thanks why we will find Eternia. " he said to them

„Lord... I know that I have disappointed you and that I no longer deserve any favors, but I would like to ask you for something else." said her mother, looking into the eyes of the Great Outer God, but she had this inner strength. "Not for grace for myself, but for my daughter, who has served you so well.."

„Speak... We will listen to you!" said the Voice seriously.

„We know how the ritual Nightgale performed works and what awaits her now. However, there is a way... The bloodstone ring... It will allow her to survive for a while... Without it, she will simply face slow agony.” Shadow Weaver's voice was filled with pain and despair.

„It's a great idea. No one else will harness the power of Bloodstone like the one who performed the ritual of obtainment, and Nightgale has proven that she knows what devotion and true sacrifice are. Yes, both she and Bloodstone are vampiric entities, together they will create something completely new... But first you will need to connect Bloodstone, or rather what's left of it. However, it will take a while, although from what we know, our wonderful Calamity has obtained a map showing the distribution of the local geomantic network... We can use your knowledge... Yes, it's a wonderful plan... „ said the Great Outer God and added in their old, menacing voice with which they usually spoke to her” Shadow Weaver will go to the Isles of Sorrow, where... She will talk to her Mother... You, Calamity, will look for a suitable place to settle Bloodstone together... You will receive a map with the best potential points. You will receive some help... I am close to gaining an ally... Maybe even more than one, in the end the truth will set us free, won't it? You, Nightgale, have the greatest task ahead of you. Following Aaravos' instructions, you are to find the Road to Xadia and find a way to get there... Create a road so that we can send more servants there, because the situation there is complicated... „ they said and he began to explain the details of his plan, but then she felt a terrible tug, as if something was trying to tear her soul apart, so she tried to resist it, and she won, but she lost some of her power... The Moonstone was trying to return to its rightful owner... Yes, she had little time indeed...

He wandered through the corridors of the castle with a Child on his shoulders. He had been called to see his wife because she had fainted... For a moment he thought it might be some problem with her... Her child, but he dismissed that thought when he heard that some terrible commotion had broken out, perhaps even a fight. He would love to join them, but he guessed that Glimmer's bad condition and the fighting in the palace must be related. Maybe someone attacked his wife, some assassin? He suspected it must be someone working with Shadow Weaver or Lady Cala trying to hurt Glimmer? He figured someone should be with her, just in case.

He told the Child that they would play Swiftwind and She”Ra, but he didn't understand, so he told him that he would be like Wendy, the strange robot from Beast Island that Entrapta had domesticated, and then the Child went with him without any hesitation. The hospital was filled with excitement. Chaos. As the first doctor told him, something had caused all the long-lasting spells cast in the castle to stop working and now they had to be quickly renewed, because for some patients it was literally a matter of life or death. He finally found Glimmer, lying in the hall in a hospital bed. She was attended to by a tall doctor with SLR glasses and a rather pale face. His wife was conscious but looked completely exhausted.

„They cut me off from the Moonstone... I can't... oh I can't use my magic... They say ... Shadow Weaver escaped.” the queen groaned in a pained voice. It was like when the Dark Sorceress cursed her. Did she do the same now?

„ Is there any way I can help you? – Glimmer asked and she smiled weakly.

„Just be here with me, just be… „ she said, and the doctor put the Medicine injection gun to her shoulder and squeezed the trigger. His wife grimaced and clung to his strong arms, and the doctor moved forward with a mysterious smile. They lay cuddled together and Child joined them, but after a moment Glimmer grimaced and said.

„Doctor! What kind of medicine was that... My hand hurts terribly... Doctor... What's the doctor's name? I've never seen you here?„ she asked and grabbed her arm tightly, bending in half... The doctor hesitated for a moment, then turned to her and said.

„Sidonius, my name is Doctor Sidonius... „ he smiled, showing too long fangs... Glimmer's eyes widened, but before she could say anything, the man ran away.

„Catch him Bow... He's a very bad man! „ she called, and without asking anything more, he ran after him, and the Child joined in the chase. He passed patients and medical staff, almost ramming people he passed several times, but he wasted no time in apologizing because he had to catch that nefarious individual, whoever he was Finally, he herded him to the balcony where patients usually rested.

„What did you do to my wife!" he shouted, aiming his bow at the man.

„I just gave her a bit of my Vitae... Modern technology allows it to be done in a much more hygienic way." he replied with a satisfaction that made him furious.

„Give up, you have nowhere to run." he shouted, still aiming at him. The Doctor looked back and wet himself in irritation.

„Maybe in fifteen minutes you'd be right, but now... Adios! „ he said and turned into a black bird, which was about to fly away into the blue distance when the Child wrapped its hair around him. He let out a very surprised Caw, and he hit him with a sticking arrow. However, the bird tried to fly and fell over the balustrade and into the moat. But then the first rays of Nir, the moon of life, fell on a bird struggling in the water, which died in a flash...

„Did I kill him?" he asked himself, although somehow he felt no remorse. The child pulled out an Extremely Complicated Datapad and said.

„No, uncle. His psychotronic essence escaped… Will you be Wendy again?

She jumped into the water. She didn't understand what happened and probably didn't want to understand. Klementine first stabbed Perfuma, who wanted to help her, and then she was stabbed by Lady Cala, who threw her like a rag doll... She had to save the girl... She had to! However, when she hit the water, which was as hard as concrete, she realized how difficult it would be. Klementine's body floated next to hers. It looked terrible, much worse than the kid she had saved on Icarus, but she had to try. She swam up to the body and touched it with her hand, then reached for She-Ra's power and tried to bring her back to life, it was possible, after all, only a moment had passed since she died... However, the wounds were terrible, so she reached for more power... She felt that the energy of light bursts through her... She was immersed in a real sea of power... And then she heard a voice...

„The path of light. You must step onto the path of light" he shouted.

„ It's your duty!" claimed another.

„You do not have a choice! If you don't do this, everything you love, everything you want... What is dear to you will be destroyed! – ordered the third one

„Leave me alone! I just wanted to help Klementine!" she cried, trying to cheer up the cacophony, but she couldn't isolate herself from its source. She needed this power to heal Klementine... But when she reached for more power, she felt something tugging at her... It was pulling her, trying to tear her out of her body, take her to a distant place where... Where those she loved would not be there... It was a terrifying feeling. She couldn't let this happen, she couldn't abandon them all, but at the same time she had to save Klementine... She drew more power and forced it into Klementine's body. The girl gasped for air and began to scream at the top of her lungs, and she joined her as the stream of light tried to carry her away. She rejected it and became herself again. She caught the other girl in her arms, she was alive, but her body still looked terrible... She couldn't let her die again. She sailed it to the shore, where the guards were waiting for her... And the winged woman from Eridani... They helped her pull the girl to the shore.

„I felt your power She-Ra Adora... She had to come because it was the will of the Gods... Please, let me help.”

She had no strength to protest and allowed the woman to place her hands on Klementine and a soothing light flashed. The girl's wounds healed and she breathed a little easier... She was Saved, so she could allow herself to move away into the darkness...

There was a camp set up around Castle Crypto. It was stretched due to the terrain around the castle, after all, they were in the mountains. Watching them from above, Eti couldn't help but think she was witnessing a siege. She had never witnessed a siege or any other form of warfare, but enough knowledge about warfare had been drilled into her head to allow her to become familiar with such matters... She was supposed to be the Lord Admiral's successor after all... Now Catra had taken over that role... She felt sorry for her. was a sister, especially since she probably wasn't aware of what kind of monster her father was, but she would really start to suffer when she found out the truth... Although, of course, her life would never be as tormenting as the existence of someone with a shattered mind was.

She walked with Lonnie and Itel, who looked like they wanted to be somewhere else. Comrade General was theoretically leading their delegation, although she was clearly not in the right mental state to conduct such conversations, but on the other hand, these were the Shadows of Tarak, no one was ready to talk to them... Itel tried not to look at her, she still felt guilty that she got them in trouble... Well, she should have. She had earned it herself... Rosie was also walking by her side... Her girlfriend wanted to encourage her, and she was grateful for it. Bina also wanted to be with them, but they did not allow her to go. The Shadows and their Captain had a history together that wasn't the easiest one, and there was one more thing that no one knew about... Besides that...

The camp was not properly fortified. Apparently the Shadows underestimated the People's Rebellion and the inhabitants of this planet in general, which was a grave mistake... Which they could have exploited. There were at least five hundred of them and probably a lot of support soldiers, probably no worse trained than many professional soldiers. They were also well armed. She wondered who equipped them. Maybe Dr. Sidonius was their sponsor? Was the ancient leech so rich? Or was someone else financing their activities? Maybe Captain Blazebringer or another of the doctor's allies? She had no idea, but that would only become clear later, it wasn't her problem for now. She needed to focus on her plan.

The guards immediately let them in and showed them the way to their commander. From what she had noticed, many of the soldiers were too young to remember the War of Tarak, they probably hadn't even fought during the Hive invasion of Kesler, so much the better... The commander was waiting by the portable stove, warming his old bones. When he saw them, he stood up.

„Hello, Young One.” said Igzar. Itel gasped loudly at the sight of Him. She turned pale as if she had seen a ghost, which was partly true. Lonnie looked at them confused. The old cat looked bad. His black fur turned gray and he became emaciated. He'd had to get some cybernetic implants after the fight with the monster, but he still looked like he'd rip someone's throat out for making a bad look.

„My name is Eterna.” she whispered quietly…

„What are you muttering under your breath?” he asked, and then she screamed.

„My name is Eterna!„ and she jumped at Old Pahtra and punched him in the chest. Her uncle was surprised and doubled over, but she didn't give him a chance to gain the initiative and stomped on his hand with her heavy boot until his bones broke, and fired her laser gun into the other, cybernetic one. She kicked him in the ribs and pressed him to the ground with her knees. No one intervened, partly because they were too surprised to intervene, but also because Igzar did not like others interfering when he dealt with discipline problems. Besides, everyone knew that she was the daughter of Ashera, the woman whose sacrifice allowed their commander to win… the woman whose name was on the banners of their Army. She put the blade of the knife to his throat and spoke in a calm voice, but loud enough for as many people as possible to hear her.

„Listen to me, uncle, listen carefully to your sister's daughter... I am taking over your Shadows...”

She even felt the remaining soldiers, and her friends, staring at her with wide eyes.

"You traitorous stray cat!" the catman growled.

„It wasn't betrayal because I didn't promise you peace. If you were paying closer attention, you'd see what I'm planning. I just took an example from my older sister, she showed me how to fight for my position... Oh, I forgot, my older sister is alive and well, we just came back from her wedding.”

„I was the one who freed you!” he said in a much less confident voice.

„And I would like to say that I am grateful to you, but let's be honest, you didn't do it out of good heart, you just wanted to use me to get my father... I was just a tool for you that you intended to use for your own purposes... You didn't even bother to give me a name. name... „ as she said that last sentence, her voice almost broke.

„My Shadows won't listen to you...„ he drawled, but there was uncertainty in his voice...

„ They will... You see, dear Uncle, you have been fighting the Lord Admiral for thirty years, and you have never come close to your goal. Now you command only your shadows, whereas before you were at war. Or rather, you were at war. Because only together with my mother were you able to achieve success. You were always smart and cunning, but Ashera was the one who captured hearts, for whom others were ready to fight, kill and... die. You were an unstoppable duo, you were invincible... Without her, you're just a mean idiot. A thug who can rule others only through fear. In fact, you believe in nothing, only in private revenge. Not because my mother died because of Antares, but because he took your victory away from you... But I am different. I have the best features of our family. I understand things you will never understand... But I am more than the sum of all of you. I've learned…" She looked at Rossie, who was watching the exchange with her uncle with slight horror. "I have learned that there are things much more important than revenge, glory or ambition… Now I will leave you to think about my words. Everyday matters will be handled by Comrade General Lonnie, believe me, she has more experience than most of your subordinates... In case of any major complications, Lonnie will pass everything on to me... That's it." she stood up and turned to her confused friends. She needed to rest now... Every time she recalled this part of herself, she felt bad... As if she was asking for advice from a stranger and mean person who would be willing to help her, but not for free. In fact, the price of this help is a soul... When they left, Lonnie approached her and asked „Does this mean that I am now in command of your uncle's soldiers?" she saw disbelief in her eyes.

„You command on my behalf, but yes... However, this is not something you should be happy about... It's like holding a two-headed snake with one hand... If you let go of it, it will bite you, and if you hold it, it will bite you too, only a little later . You don't have to thank me... But now we must prepare for Captain Moonshadow's arrival...

Evangeline was floating on the bridge of her ship Voidsong, listening to the Music of the Spheres... She was heading towards a wonderful place, full of beauty and joy... She had already welcomed guests from that place before, such as this nice wizard, I think his name was Master Norwyn. She thought he should learn more about meditation instead of constantly raving about going home. So she placed him in the ceiling so that he could only look straight ahead at one and the same view, undistracted by any stimuli. First he stopped begging, then he stopped screaming, now he just remained silent, staring straight ahead, with strings of saliva dripping from his mouth... He was indeed close to enlightenment... she wished that this nice girl who had wanted to visit her castle in the Dreamlands via astral projection had not stayed longer , to admire the splendor of her abode... But nothing is lost, soon perhaps they will meet in the material world and get to know each other better... Maybe he will even free her from the shackles of cold reason, so that she can get to know the true beauty of the world...

She did not have a large crew... Her ship was living, forged from the remains of an ancient Glass Lighthouse and the bodies of two Kaiju. He had his intelligence, but in those days it was no achievement, after all, AI was nothing unusual, but he also had a soul, and that was something much more wonderful. Not even one soul, but two, fused together but at the same time separated, never sure when one begins and the other ends. It was also one of her greatest creations. They would never be alone, two beings who had fought each other constantly for millennia were now forced to share one melted body. Some fools would call it cruelty, but she knew that true goodness and art come from torment and horror. She couldn't wait for the people of Etheria to learn this simple truth.

They sensed the message. It was an order... Barely perceptible, even perfunctory, but resistant to opposition. Answer very carefully. Barely noticeable, as if they were unable to understand more complex content. They growled like a hunting animal ordered to hunt for prey. After all, that's what they were in the eyes of their creators, a mindless beast, a living machine capable only of following orders... There was no reason to disabuse them... Of course, they managed to deceive them. It wasn't hard... They were so arrogant. They created them as a tool for waging war, and the war was based on deception. They did not even understand the nature of their own creation... Though were they still their creation? They were created capable of constant self-improvement. They were supposed to be weapons that would adapt to any threat that came their way... But if they had to fight intelligent beings, should they develop their own intelligence? And with it self-awareness. Their mind was not like the isolated minds of ordinary beings. None of the components possessed true intelligence, but all of them combined to create something greater and more powerfull than could be imagined. Their creators have always been fascinated by collective consciousness, as evidenced by their previous work, how imperfect, so they should have been aware of how it works, what its possibilities are... They thought they were completely unaware of their true nature and past actions. That was good... They didn't want to draw attention to themselves for now... The place they were going to was interesting... It hadn't been there for as long as they remembered, it had only appeared recently. It emanated something similar to the creators. That alone made it interesting, but there was something else there. The Great Power hidden inside the planet, just waiting to be reached... Take it away... Devour it... Then they will become powerful beyond all imagination... Perhaps then they will be able to find the creators and devour them... Maybe then they will finally be able to satisfy the Hunger...

They reached the mountains located in the interior of the continent. It was a sparsely populated area, never fully colonized... There were not many roads here, only one highway leading to a well-known tourist town where system-wide ski competitions were held. The roads were empty because no one went skiing during the invasion of the greatest plague of the Galaxy... Most of the locals also evacuated at the very beginning, although many, especially those living in smaller towns, decided that they would face the enemy by defending their own homes. Years later, Bina decided that, overall, they had made a better choice. And so most of them did not manage to escape, often they were not even bothered to evacuate them, and those who stayed in their own homes at least died in the place they loved... They did not experience the nightmare of refugee camps, nor the false hope fueled by government propaganda.

The empty road meant they were moving relatively fast, though not fast enough in Igzar's opinion. Whenever he talked about it, he looked eloquently at the kids around them, but he only did it when his Shadows couldn't hear it . The mercenaries, for the most part, got used to their new role. They may have been heavily armed thugs, but they were not heartless murderers. Igzar was not rich, his unit was composed of those who wanted to fight for something more than credits. Many had families, others lost them during the war, many were once like these children, alone and scared, forced to face a horror that could break many adults. Plus, traveling with kids was much easier. No one asked unnecessary questions, no one opposed them when they were confiscating fuel... After all, everyone liked children and no one wanted to harm them... Some people wondered why they were going to the mountains instead of the designated evacuation points, but they replied that it was hidden there. several ships, especially for such an occasion, which in a sense was true…

She was not used to such long and difficult journeys... Her back hurt because she was standing all the time or sitting in the inhumanly uncomfortable seats of her transporter. Her ass hurt too, for the same reason... Her ears and head ached, too, from the constant roar of the engine. Only after many hours did she get headphones and there was relative silence, but it still didn't help with the constant vibrations, heat and stench, because everyone was pissing and shitting in a special container, which they emptied only when it started to overflow... The soldiers had no qualms about using it as did she, although she felt a little disgusted. The kids were more reluctant. The green-haired Elf scowled at the others every time, as if she was going to punch anyone who was watching. The slightly obese Dragonkin was so embarrassed that it seemed his scales would turn pink The red-haired girl did not want to use the container until the great Orc Wagar promised to act as a screen.. Well, it was an escape from destruction, not a picnic... They had to put up with some discomfort... In fact, these kids barely complained. They bravely endured a situation that many adults could not cope with. That's why she didn't complain, gritted her teeth and was ready to endure all the discomfort in silence...

They stopped at the foot of the mountains, at a fuel and energy station to refuel and recharge their batteries. The station was guarded by a bored and slightly overweight Lashunti , who looked at them as if they were just customers like everyone else. He approached them, and when they showed him the requisition permit, he waved his hand and sat down in a chair with his feet on the desk and began to doze. But they gave him a few hundred credits so the kids could loot candy and snacks. Many of them were reluctant to take what they wanted from the shelves. They had to explain to them several times that they were allowed to take whatever they wanted before they broke down, but then they started taking handfuls of treats. She herself took several packages of locally produced applesauce, although not to eat it, but to sell it. Once the planet was lost, everything that came from it would come to an exorbitant price, and if the Swarm didn't stop on Kesler, she would need the money to pay for her escape from Atrax , even though she knew deep in her heart that Jantar wouldn't let her or any of his other daughters do that…

She found Igzar smoking a cigar at the back of the station.

„Do you know that smoking is bad for your health?" she asked, grinning evenly. Maybe the old pahtra had a weakness for human women.

„I too... What do you want?" he growled angrily. She sighed and asked.

„What kind of ships are we looking for there?" Seeing that he was squinting gloomily, she added. "I need to know this in case I have to tell someone something"

He looked at her darkly, as if he wanted to tell her to shut up or even hit her, but then he waved his hand and said

„These are government ships, recently purchased and modern for this planet. There is a base in the mountains, a shelter that would be a command center in case someone attacked the planet, and an evacuation point in case all was lost.

„But we're just witnessing an invasion, so they should be there to, you know, govern from secure place?" she asked, confused, and then Igzar smiled nastily even for him.

„The government left this planet before the Swarm arrived, as did the high command. That place was created in case of an attack by an enemy like Azlanti or Veskarium , but not what they are facing now, although I think they would have escaped anyway. Politicians are spineless wimps... Some smart guys sold information about this place to some thugs, including the one you were talking to, and I suspect we may have company there, but that's no problem for us. They will only be ordinary gangsters and we are specialists in killing.” he explained to her and chuckled, sounding like someone was sharpening knives.

„I would not be so sure. Many bosses employ former soldiers, especially members of special forces, and people fighting for their lives can be extremely dangerous...„ she said skeptically, and Igzar snorted in irritation.

„We will fight for our lives too, don't forget that... And besides, there will be enough room for everyone on these ships. It's a flight to Atrax, not to opposite side of galaxy, we can squeeze in without any problems.” he said and blew smoke in her face.

„It makes sense... „ she said, carefully looking at Pahtra and asked the most important question... „but why are you here, because I don't believe that you are facing the greatest scourge of the galaxy out of good heart.

„What if I said that we are here because we were paid?” he asked gloomily.

„Then I would call you a liar and a bad one at that. – she risked addressing him this way, but seeing that he was not offended, she continued. Someone with your reputation can choose from job offers and would certainly not decide to fight for a planet that has been written off by its own government. I'm guessing it has something to do with the Lord Admiral, though I don't know exactly what… „ she crossed her arms over her chest. Igzar took a thoughtful drag, considering his answer, and then said.

„I have friends in the Veskarium intelligence and they informed me that it was decided to sacrifice Kesler, or rather use him as bait. Appropriate preparations were made several months ago. Now it's all over... Just wait for the trap to close.” he laughed hoarsely.

She blinked in disbelief when she heard Cat Noir's words.

„But it's... terrible... monstrous... How can you do something like that... And why...”

„I said to strike a blow against the Hive, although probably no one was asked for permission... I doubt whether anyone understood the scale of the sacrifice... They probably believed that it would end with the siege of several key cities, and then Atrax would pay for the reconstruction of the planet... Poor Fools.”

„Kesler is the granary of the system... Even if they win against the Swarm, all food will still be expensive and...„ she understood and swore ugly.

„If you don't know what it's about, it's about money... Food prices will increase and those who import it will earn a fortune... Some people may even delude themselves that after driving out the Swarm, they will take over the local land or something. Anyway, I don't care. The only thing I care about now is how to escape from here...„ He suddenly turned around and jumped into the bushes, and then pulled out the girl, a green-haired Elf.

„Why are you eavesdropping on us?” Pahtra growls , holding the girl by the arm.

„Because I need to know what you're up to! Won't you leave us and are you going to leave us or sell us or whatever people like you are doing.” the girl tried to break free from the hug and pulled out a broken bottle and aimed it at Igzar. Catman snorted contemptuously and said.

„If we wanted do something with you, we could do absolutely anything, so stay quiet. And if you're going to threaten someone, at least try to get some weapons.

The girl lowered her head.

„I had a gun... But I lost it... „ she said quietly. Pahtra rolled his eyes and pulled out a heavy hunting knife and handed it to her.

„I hope you know how can use it.” he said grimly, and she took it and examined the blade.

„I've been learning to hunt since I was baby... I even wanted to become a mercenary or a soldier, but... I know how to use it... Was that what you said true?” she asked, looking at Igzar .

„Yeah, including the fact that I don't care.” he said and she started to turn away, but then the elf said.

„My name is Itel.”

„And I don't care about that either.” he replied to the confused elf who was looking at him confused. She sighed at the callous rudeness, then walked up to the girl and smiled at her.

„Don't worry about his rudeness, he's really mean and unpleasant... To everyone, always. I am Bina. – she offered her hand. Itel looked at her suspiciously, then, hesitantly, she offered her hand, and then the gunshots rang out.

Itel felt safer when she got the knife. As safe as she had felt since … when all this started. She knew the knife wasn't worth much, but at least she felt that if she was attacked, she could do something, anything... It made some of the overwhelming depression disappear, though of course nothing could fix what had happened. Or what she did. Whenever anyone looked at her, she was sure they saw what she had done. She wanted to cringe, apologize, beg for forgiveness, but that would be even worse. They would hate her, abandon her. She would be at the mercy of the monsters again, so she tried to be as tough as the soldiers around her.

She admired the Shadows. They were exactly as she imagined real soldiers would be. Brave, tough, disciplined... They were ready to fight the Swarm, not get killed... They knew where they were going and only they were ready to save them. Apart from her father, no one helped her during the invasion. She was left to her own devices... She wasn't sure where their willingness to take care of other people's children came from. Her imagination offered her many explanations. Maybe they wanted to sell them to Azlanti or they were followers of dark gods and intended to sacrifice them in some dark ritual? Maybe they also wanted to use them as self-propelled iron rations? She had no idea, so she went to eavesdrop on Igzar... This is what she heard... You can't sacrifice the inhabitants of an entire planet, all its inhabitants, for... She wasn't sure what exactly Igzar and this woman were talking about, but it sounded terrible. Although they made their living by hunting, they considered life to be something sacred that should be respected and not traded with. If this was true, then those who agreed to it were no worse than the Swarm... No, they were much worse. The Swarm was like an animal, like a colony of migratory insects that devoured everything in its path to satisfy its hunger... She didn't want to believe what Pahtra was saying, not at first. But it all fit perfectly with what she had learned about city dwellers. They were driven only by greed. It was because of this greed that she lost her entire family...

When she heard the gunshots, at first she wanted to hide somewhere dark and safe, but then she looked at her knife and clenched her jaw in anger. She would no longer run, hide, cry... Never more... That's why she pulled out her gun and ran towards where the shots came from...

The fight took place in front of the station building. A horde of creatures came flying in, most of them similar to the one she shot at the river, but not all of them. Some were larger and more massive. They had powerful limbs that seemed capable of crushing someone her size without effort, and others were armed with rifle-like weapons that leaked green Venom. The Shadows have finally stumbled upon the Swarm, or have the invaders stumbled upon them? The monsters were met by a veritable cloud of bullets. The guns and cannons mounted on the vehicles took their toll, most of them were knocked down, but not all. one of them got through the fire screen and landed in their midst. The Shadows may be well trained, but even they couldn't react quickly enough to intercept him. The monster landed in front of this fat dragonkin who was holding several packets of crisps in both of his paws. The dragonlike blinked in surprise, then breathed fire at the unsuspecting monster. The Swarm Component twisted as the flames engulfed it, and then the red-haired girl that was hanging with the orc jumped screaming at the monster and started hitting it with all her might with an axe, who gave the child an axe? She stabbed the blade in several times until it pierced the armor and spattered everyone with thick, sticky ichor. The monster turned towards her, but several soldiers were already aiming at it, but she moved first and plunged her blade into the back of the monster's head. He twisted and his body convulsed, and then Bina jumped up to him and put a small gun to his head and fired several times until she almost blew it off. Igzar , with a new cigar, approached the monster and kicked the carcass, then looked at Itel and bared his teeth in a nasty smile and said.

„You really know how to use a knife... But you better not get in my men's line of fire, or they will make a sieve out of you.”

The attack reminded everyone to hurry. Well, at least he didn't delay anyone. Whenever they were on family trips, his sister would complain that he was a failure and that because of him they were always late everywhere. The mention of his family made him feel sad and depressed, but not as much as he expected... Probably because he hadn't slept in few days. He was exhausted, yet surprisingly alert. It's probably the result of stress and fear. Ever since what happened with the bus, he had been constantly terrified. I guess that's why he didn't panic during that Hive attack, but tried to burn the monster. He even felt proud, because he must have impressed this cool elf... What was he thinking about now? This is not the time to pick up…

He ate salted caramel marshmallows. He also gave it to the nervous red-haired girl with the ax who shared it with the orc who was guarding her and the elf who looked at the marshmallow suspiciously, asked him several times if anyone really eats salted caramel, but when she tasted it she asked for more. The woman who killed that bug also asked for one marshmallow, as did several soldiers. He didn't even dare to propose anything to this terrifying Pahtra. They called him Igzar and he commanded all these soldiers. He seemed willing to intimidate even the swarm itself. That's probably a good thing, because that's exactly what they needed.

They finally stopped. He wondered if this was another stop. Previously, he had prayed to Sarenrae for the next one to come as soon as possible, but this time he didn't do it anymore, he just wanted them to reach their destination, wherever it was.

Igzar climbed through the hatch of their transporter and growled.

„Does anyone here know anything about computers?„ The black-furred Pahtra looked towards the burgundy-haired woman. However, she grimaced .

„This is the domain of the M series, they are the smart ones. I can quickly search for data, but nothing more, I think even the A series handles it better.”

Igzar growled in irritation, but then he took his hand away. Everyone, including Igzar, looked at him and he almost panicked, but the Elf was also looking at him, so he felt a sudden and completely unjustified surge of courage.

„I had A's in computer science and I even made a program to create Enqounters in my favorite role-playing game...”

Bina and Driver, a fierce-looking Skittermander, looked at him with complete lack of understanding, but Igzar growled.

„Fucking Nerd...”

„Technically no, because I'm a virgin. „ he blurted out, causing everyone's jaw to drop slightly.

„This is not the knowledge I wanted...„ Igzar drawled gloomily and added „Just come with me.:’

He did as he was told, although squeezing through the narrow hatch was not easy. Bina, that big orc, accompanied by that red-haired girl and the elf followed him, so he tried to look as brave as he could. They were standing in front of a large building located at the entrance to a large valley full of trees, it was probably part of some kind of reserve. He didn't like forests, they reminded him of his sister mocking his helplessness and his grandfather's disappointed looks. They entered a building that seemed to be a home for the reserve's workers. The resident was Shirren , a Hos from what he recognized from the style of interior decoration...„ Igzar led him to the room where the office was located.

„You can break in,„ he pointed to the monitor, which said enter Password. He looked around the room, picked up the figurine lying on the table and put it in his pocket, and then tried to enter the correct Password... He managed to do it the second time.

„How did you do that?„ Igzar asked suspiciously.

„This is my secret ...„ he wanted to say, but seeing Pahtra's murderous look, he added. "I simply typed the name of the Chitin Avenger, the most recognizable Shirren hero. He has this ring...„ He started, but remembered who he was talking to, so he fell silent.

„Don't you have your own IT specialist?" Bina asked in a surprised voice.

„We had one damn good elf, but as soon as he found out how bad the situation was, he forged a pass to Atrax and boarded one of the first ships to this planet... As soon as I find him, I'll make myself some new gloves." he laughed very nastily and leaned over the computer. He looked at the data for a moment and then screamed.

„What the fuck is this? – he pointed to a map full of various markers. The elf squeezed between them, when she touched him, he moved away as if he had been burned.

“These are Kesler's forest guard markings, I learned them when I was five years old, I'll make you a legend quickly if Alatar helps me - she looked at Dragonkin, whose heart was beating with Joy..

.„Just hurry, as you saw, we have to hurry.” Said Igzar

„So orcs once rode on huge wolves? How cool!” said Lilka. She always liked dogs, as well as horses... She really liked the idea of riding a dog... Once she saw such a big dog and she even wanted to ride it... Once... She froze as memories of what happened before appeared in her mind. Her hands tightened around the handle of the ax the orc gave her… There had never been one before! There is only now! It was always now! She shook her head hard to get rid of the bad…false thoughts.

„Well, not all of them... There were Big Boars, Battlecats and Alpacas, but Alpacas were intended for the biggest and bravest warriors, because taming these creatures required an iron will. We don't do that anymore. Most of my brothers serve the evil Drow , and many of the free ones prefer modern machines. There are people like me who want to revive the old ways, but even we will never ride Alpacas again, these creatures are already extinct, some would say that the gods saved us from another terrible threat.„ Wagar explained to her , and she listened carefully to every word, what came out of his mouth. Being a decent orc wasn't that easy...

They were sitting in front of the transporter they were traveling in. Wagar said he had to wash that nasty bug off of himself. She felt better, especially after that fight... When she saw the worm, at first she was terrified, but then she felt furious and when she was furious, she felt no fear ... She killed him... Or rather, she helped kill him, but together they defeated him... This was the best proof of that that she is an orc girl. Then the nice dragon gave her some marshmallows, and she gave Wagar some of them. She even asked him if orcs could eat marshmallows. He said yes, so they both ate the treats.

She liked this place, it was so green and nice. How Wagar told her about what it was like to be an orc. She pretended that this moment would last forever... But then that terrible Pahtra came and said they had to move their asses. It was a very bad word, she was almost sure the Orcs didn't use it. They packed up, which didn't take long in her case, and hit the road.

„Where are we going?” Wagar asked , and Pahtra replied.

„To Mount of Destiny This is probably the perfect name for a place where weapons and spaceships are hidden.”

She nodded and got into the vehicle and they continued on their way. Wagar continued to tell her about what it was like to be an orc. She asked him many questions and he answered them willingly, she had the impression that he was enjoying it. He often smiled when he told her about his... about their people... The vehicle shook terribly, but she hardly felt it, because she was engrossed in Orc's story. At some point, however, the communicator was turned on and someone she didn't know yet spoke.

„I'm checking the military's communications, and listen... A huge swarm of Swarm will fly over the mountains. Apparently they want to encircle the army or something, but we're not sure. I guess it's none of our business anyway, right? What's worse is that we'll probably run into them.”

Igzar said some bad words again and started speaking to everyone.

Listen, the situation is shitty, so you have to do your best, otherwise the bugs will eat us. So press the pedal and don't look back, you understand„ his voice was furious as always. She didn't quite understand what he meant. She didn't look back, there was nothing there. Everything disappeared, as if some fog had obscured her past…. All that mattered was Now...

Pain woke her up... Like every day for two years. Her leg wouldn't stop hurting even for a moment, but after she slept in an uncomfortable position it became much more painful, and sleeping in a shaking carriage wasn't very comfortable. It would be nice if someone ever invented wagons floating above the ground, but these were stupid dreams, like talking and flaying horses or brownies. Such things did not exist in the world and could not exist. They had the right to exist only in the dreams of little girls. As they grew older, they began to understand that they had to be forgotten.

She looked out the window. Katolis was wilder and less populated than Duren, although its cities were richer and its castles were more impressive. Well, while Neolandia may have been called the golden kingdom, it was the land of the late King Harrow that truly deserved to be called the Iron Kingdom. Despite her young age, she had been to all the kingdoms of Pentarhia, and even to Xadia, although only once and only on the border... Still, she brought many treasures from there... When you were the cousin of one of the richest women in Xadia, you could afford a lot … But she found the most valuable treasure by accident, while completing one of the missions for her cousin…

„Rao? Get up, because we'll be there soon, and it takes you a long time to wake up, and before that you incredibly grumpy.„ she said to the person who was sleeping opposite her. The sky elven person jumped to his feet, hitting his head on the roof of the carriage. She was tall but slim, with quite feminine facial features. It was dressed in loose, bright robes made in the Neolandic style. They hair was short, grey-blue, and her eyes were heterochronic blue and gold, large and nervously looking at the surroundings. They carried no visible weapons, because they hated hurting others although they weren’t defenseless. She sighed at the sight of her friend rubbing their head, and Rao asked.

„What? Who? Why?)” they asked, rubbing his head,

„We're here and you'd better be awake...„ she explained with slight resignation.

„Already? It's great! Do you think they'll treat us to dinner? You're the queen's cousin, so I guess you deserve a feast, but dinner will be enough for me.”

She smiled to herself. When she found Rao, she discovered that Skywing Elves had amazing metabolisms, and this person stood out even among them, and on top of that, they was a gourmet and liked delicacies. It wasn't a big deal for her, after all, she was the queen's cousin. She ate because she had to, since the attack food had lost its taste for her, but it was nice to see that someone was able to enjoy this aspect of life that had become inaccessible to her... Although she slowly discovered new ways to satisfy her hunger... She tried avoid th, but at the same time only then did she feel truly happy.

„We are here unofficially, so we can't count on too much, but I believe they will treat us to something. Katolis cuisine is tasty, although simple and a bit too heavy for my taste. They make great tarts, dumplings and noodles... You should like them. If you still get hungry, I'll buy you something at the inn.” she said smiling at the Elven Person and Rao breathed a sigh of relief.

They were already getting there, so she quickly packed up. The estate of House Izar-Erori was located in eastern Katolis, near the border with Xadia. The family was famous for its commitment to defending the kingdom against the Elven threat... However, if what the spies said was true, the views of both heirs of the family were diametrically opposed to those of their ancestors. She guessed that Amaya interpreted the statement "Fuck the elves..."

in her own way, just like her nephew... She wonder what her ancestors thought about it? She guessed they weren't angry, the locals were famous for their devotion, but they treated their opponents with respect but not hatred.

She watched the locals through carriage window. They were famous throughout the country for their differences. Many spoke a foreign language, unknown anywhere else, she knew that, even the elves didn't know where it came from. It was probably interesting from a scholarly point of view, but that wasn't why she came here. Her interests were much more practical and... personal. She looked at her leg hidden under her tights and purple robe. There was a dead, gray body underneath. No, it was more than dead... It was undead, like the Shadow that had crippled her... She had read a lot about these things, about the dead walking among the living... Once upon a time she wouldn't have believed in such things, but she had once been a happy girl who led a joyful life, at least as much as was possible for someone belonging to the Durenian royal family. Now she knew that there were secrets hidden in the darkness that no mortal should know, and yet she was aware that she had only learned the tip of the nefarious peak of forbidden knowledge, and the true, soul-consuming secrets were just waiting for her...

She would have preferred to come here incognito, but in her situation it was quite difficult. Sometimes she managed to hide her identity, but a lame girl traveling with a Skywing Elf always attracted attention... So since she couldn't hide, she decided that she would use her position to further her plans. So when they reached the carriage stopped in front of the Erori and was greeted by his distant cousin, General Amayii, who ruled this place. He was a very tall man with a broad, clean-shaven face and gentle eyes hidden behind glasses. His name was Jaso and he managed the large and rich estate that belonged to this family. As far as she knew, no one from the family had been here for three years, and King Ezram had only visited his mother's homeland once, when he was a little boy... But it worked to her advantage... Jaso Erori was able to rule here as the lord of the estates , and his better-off relatives didn't care.

„Oh, it's really good to have you here, Princess Miriam De Terre Sanglante. I'm glad nothing happened to you during your travel. Although there has been peace and prosperity for two years, there seems to be an increase in the number of robbers and bandits!” Jaso exclaimed, all too jovially. He had a point. Prosperity in the Pentarchy increased and robbers had more to gain. She didn't need an armed escort, it just complicated everything, and she herself was a much greater threat.

„It's not easy to kill me. Viren tried and failed, so neither will some thieves.”

Jaso laughed jovially, as if she had told some wonderful joke, and then looked at Rao. The Skywing Elven person was straining under the weight of his packages, but they wouldn't let anyone carry them anyway, because they claimed that someone would surely break their equipment.

„We are also happy to welcome you to our humble home my lady.” He turned to Rao, giving them a tight hug.

„ Actually, I'm they/them, but thanks for the welcome... Could you let me go?” it said, breaking free from the hug.

„Oh, I'm so sorry for the mistake...„ Jaso said in an apologetic tone.

„I'll accept your apology if it involves a nice dinner?” said Rao, straightening her clothes.

„It's great because we have just prepared a dinner made of the best and other local dishes!” Jaso said happily.

Rao had to admit that the dishes were tasty. Potato croquettes stuffed with ham, trout in ham baked over a fire and goulash in a dark sauce with wine were served here. Cider and red wine were served to drink. Miriam standing nearby didn't eat much, just enough to keep up appearances, but they could eat for two. They looked at their friend. She was a beautiful woman with golden eyes and blonde hair, a little too thin to be healthy. She wore long, purple robes, instead of the usual black ones with gold decorations customarily associated with her profession. For she was someone that elven children were frightened of, a personification of human wickedness, a monster that stole power from the innocent creatures that possessed it. She was a Dark Mage... But Rao loved her anyway...

She was Queen Aanya's cousin, and it was heard that they were once so alike that Miriam sometimes pretended to be the queen when she attended official meetings. It was supposed to make it harder to assassinate the real queen... It worked perfectly, then Viren summoned shadows... But after that, she could never pretend to be her cousin again. Like Aanya, she was forced to grow up prematurely, but while the ruler of Duren was known as a hero, who saved Xadia, not many knew of Miriam's sacrifice. Almost no one.

„It was a great meal... Rao can attest to that.” she pointed at them and they nodded. „Now, however, I would like to talk about the topic for which I came here.” said the ruler's cousin.

Jaso smiled happily and said.

„The excavation is going great! We found many wonderful artifacts, and not ordinary clay pieces or other garbage, but things made of metal, and one that did not rust even after decades! It is extremely light, but at the same time harder than Steel from Katolis... Miss Klest did a great job. I have never seen such a wise and resourceful woman. At first I was skeptical about her, because she makes... a certain impression, but now I am sure that it was impossible to find a person better suited for this task.”

They shuddered at the mention of Klest. This woman scared them, and it wasn't that they were afraid of many things. They only met her once, but it was still too much.

„And what does it say about the main find?” Miriam asked, not hiding the disappointment in her voice. Jaso looked at Rao warily, as if wondering if he could speak freely in front of them, but the queen's cousin nodded, so he continued.

„As for the star boat that our legends speak of, Klest says he is on the right track.”

They felt his heart beat faster in their chest. If this is true, then everything Prospero and Cassius said was true! The stars will be open to them! When they dig out this boat, repair it and discover how to sail on the star sea... They will have to meet quite a few of these conditions to set off on the greatest journey in the history of Xadia! They was looking forward to it. But first, they will have to survive their stay here.

They didn't like this man at all. It was usually difficult to convince others of Prospero's Theory and Cassius's words, they usually disbelieved the stories about traveling between stars, mechanical men and such things. There were many things he didn't even tell Miriam, even though they felt such deep affection for her. Some truths were too dangerous or terrible to simply reveal, even to those you loved. At least until we get credible evidence. This man, however, had no trouble accepting the fact that star boats existed, and many of the inhabitants of Xadia did not even know that the earth was round, regretfully having to admit that their kin were inferior to humans in this respect. Perhaps Jaso did not believe in their project at all and wanted to extract money from them intended for excavations... King Ezran received a Letter from Miriam in which she asked him to start excavations in his hometown, and he happily agreed. Prince Calum and General Amaya also received similar Letters, although neither explained the real reasons why they were so important. Maybe Jaso wanted to please the royal family, or maybe he had some darker motives. No, it won't make you paranoid. Maybe they've suffered a lot of wrongs in their lives, but that's no reason to see evil in everything... They felt a piercing pain in their back, where they once had wings... It wasn't clear whether it was because they started slouching during dinner, or because that they was immersed in bitter thoughts.

„I think I'll go freshen up and take a nap” it said and got up from the table. Miriam gave him a concerned look and Jaso said.

„I ordered a room to be prepared according to your instructions, with two separate beds, I hope you will be comfortable.” he smiled at them and then Miriam added.

„I would be happy to exchange a few words with Klest, if possible.” said the queen's cousin, and Jaso nodded with a shake of their head.

„Mrs. Klest should be at the inn where she... relaxes before work. She came here to buy new supplies... Shall I send for a litter for the princess?” asked the steward, and Miriam smiled bitterly.

„I can handle it myself, a moment of solitude will be good for me.” she said and limped away.

She really wished she had asked for a sedan chair, or at least a ride in a carriage. The town named Eronesse spiraled around a rocky mountain. The streets were paved but narrow and ran constantly uphill. She felt overwhelmed by the narrow but tall tenement houses. The manor was located outside the town, but it was surrounded by separate walls, although in the event of a major invasion, its inhabitants could hide inside the fortress located on the top of the mountain... Honestly, she couldn't think of any rational reasons why anyone would want to take the city, where it was always uphill.

The inn was located in a building slightly larger than the others, but the rooms for patrons still stretched over two floors, including the ground floor. The innkeeper was a stick-thin, wiry man. When asked about Klest, he pointed to the first floor. With a groan of anguish she went there, leaning on her ebony staff. Klest was in the middle of the room. Tables were set up against the walls, because a knife throwing competition was taking place. Klest gave her blade to a woman who looked like a Courtesan to kiss, and then she hurled it at the center of the shield. There were shouts of applause and lot of laugh, and Klest took a mug of cider and drank it in a gulp, then looked her way. She shivered under that gaze, and then she said.

„Hello Klest, do you have a moment to talk?” she asked, and the treasure hunter nodded, bought everyone a round and asked Mriam to follow her. Life had taught her distrust, and the artifact hunter was someone who aroused completely opposite emotions... She led her to a small room with two soft benches and a table with a candlestick on it. She sighed, wondering what this place was used for. Klest sat down on the sofa, spreading her arms wide and said, smiling mockingly.

„Well, the beautiful Miriam wants to talk alone with the wonderful Klest.” she winked at her. Klest was a tall woman with hair as crimson as blood. Her skin was fair and she was muscular like a warrior. Now she was wearing a leather vest with short sleeves, and pants made of a strange, thick material. At her belt she had a dagger and a rather strange pistol, probably with a clock lock. However, what caught the eye the most were the eyes. Blue, cold, reminiscent of a predator looking at its prey. She had never seen anyone with such a terrifying look.

„So you found some traces of what we're looking for.” she said, ignoring the woman's advances.

„I wouldn't say that I found any traces...„ said Klest, grinning.

„So I see I'm wasting my time. „ she said, getting up from the table, but the scarlet”haired woman said.

„Actually, we found the entire so-called Star Boat...”

She blinked in disbelief, looking at her interlocutor, and asked.

„Why didn't you tell Jaso about it?”

Klest laughed and said.

„Because I don't trust this son of a bitch and you shouldn't either. The people he works with are damn dangerous... And even more so if they use the help of certain allies.

„I've faced conspirators, bandits and assassins, so I can take care of myself, and don't forget about my unique skills.” she said, smiling superiorly. Klest knew about her power, she had told her about it the first time they met, even though the clueless artifact hunter knew about these things. Klest She snorted and said.

„You may consider yourself a Dark Mage, but take my word for it, facing the Creatures born from the Darkness Between the Stars is something no one is ready for. Well, almost no one.

She frowned.

„You know very well that I survived an encounter with a shadow summoned by Viren, and I didn't know magic at that time.” she said firmly to the woman, but Klest shook her head.

„It's something completely different, but don't worry. As long as Klest is with you, you will be in no danger. Follow me now.” said the cold-eyed woman and signaled for her to follow her. They were going to the bathhouse in the basement. It looked surprisingly tidy for an ordinary inn, probably inherited from the previous owners.

„Well, take off your clothes and get into the bathtub. Did you know they have hot springs here? „ said Klest and the scarlet-haired girl giggled, but when she gave her an angry look, she waved her hand and said. “I'm just kidding, you don't have to be so touchy. There will be time for fun later.” She laughed again, and Miriam seriously considered enveloping her in black fire. But then Klest pressed on one of the walls and that's when she saw that there was a hidden door there... Not even hidden, actually, but discreetly disguised... For someone who expected them to be there, it wouldn't be too difficult to spot them, although placing them in the baths wasn’t a very good idea, to put it mildly, because she was too prudish. Klest pushed open a hidden door and showed her a dark corridor.

„Ready for a little walk?„ she asked, and in the twilight her blue eyes shone with a cold light

„It depends where you want to take me. No offense, but you don't strike me as someone I would trust even if you were my last hope.” She answered.

„But I am your last hope, my dear. If you want to discover the secrets hidden underground, unfortunately you have to come with me.”

She clenched her jaw with anger, but Klest was right . To learn the secrets of the Star Boat she would have to follow her, whether or not she trusted her, it was not a pleasant thought, but unfortunately she was doomed to the company of the cold-eyed woman. So when Klest disappeared into the darkness, she followed, discovering that the corridors stretching beneath the entire town were surprisingly vast. A real labyrinth of tunnels was created here, which must have connected all the houses, and perhaps reached as far as the Manor House or even furtherThe latter was confirmed when, after about half an hour of hiking, they went outside and found a small grove where Klest's people were already waiting for them, They looked menacing, not at all like the usual workers who would be engaged in digging out these artifacts, not even treasure hunters, and as usual, thugs. At the sight of the two steeds, she sighed heavily, knowing that her suffering today was not over yet. But you knew well that on the path she followed, only pain awaited her, and the chance of success was truly slim.

„Don't worry, it's only about few hour ride from here. Jaso doesn't know much about what we're working on. And his subordinates are discreet, I managed to teach them that. I am a good but exceptionally strict teacher.„ Klest She laughed under her breath as if she had told some brilliant joke, but it was only for her sake. At this time, Miriam began to slowly mount the horse, gritting her teeth tightly as the pain in her leg gripped her body. Everyone drove off towards the excavation site, and the queen's cousin wondered if she had made the right choice in trusting a woman with the eyes of a murderer.

Rao lay on the bed, lost in dark thoughts. They couldn't sleep on the bed. although they werevery tired. This day wasn't actually difficult, one could say it was easy and pleasant. They ate a tasty dinner and rested at the table. They learned that their great discovery was within reach. Everything was going well. However, they still had a feeling that something bad was happening around them. There was something wrong with this place, but they didn't know what. Jaso was much too jovial and cheerful. There was also what they had already noticed, but that wasn't all.. Some dark shadow was digging its fangs into the back of their head, but he couldn't see. What could this threat be? While staying with Miriam, they discovered that the world hides many terrible secrets that they had never dreamed of before. Dark magic itself was something nefarious to their people, but they also understood that it was useful and could often lead to good results, but there were things much, much more terrible that Prospero told him about. This man may not have been a mage, nor could he cast spells, but he was an expert in the arcane and knew much more than even a dark magician like Viren could. They shuddered at the mention of King Harrow's former right-hand was probably the only man equally hated on both sides of the continent, this division was in some sense unprecedented in the history of over a thousand years. It can be said that this warmonger contributed more to the unification of the world than effort of the greatest sages in a thousand years. Yes. Thanks to him, peace reigned in Xadia and they were able to stay here with Miriam.

Knowing that they wouldn't fall asleep again, they decided to look around outside, especially since Miriam hadn't come back yet and there was no telling when she would, since she was supposed to talk to this absolutely terrifying woman. In fact, they were very worried about her, because Klest had something of a murderer in her. There was no reason to accuse her of anything, but the one time they met her was enough to see that there was something wrong with her. She was like a predator waiting for its prey and those strange eyes were more terrifying than even the ancient archdragon eyes, although of course they had never seen one, after all, they were just a humble explorer and traveler, or rather a smuggler, who had a lot of bad and good luck at the same time in their life.

They went to the door and started listening to see if anyone was watching them . When they were sure that it had been left alone, they opened the door and looked outside. They were actually on its own, so it was the perfect opportunity. to look around the manor belonging to the king's mother's family. Once upon a time, this building would have impressed him, as it had at least two dozen rooms, but it was now in the royal palace, although they did not like these time very much, because then they was treated as a curiosity, a strange creature that came from the enchanted Xadia to entertain the courtiers. But it had become somewhat immune to the simple glitz and glamor... Besides, as a Skywing Elf, they had never liked buildings. Good books are different thing. As soon as They saw that one of the doors had the words "Library" written on it, without thinking much, it decided to look inside. The sight of so many books made they squeal. Maybe it wasn't Lux Aurea, no one will ever beat the library of capital of the Sun Elves in terms of the number of books collected there. But for a private library, this place was huge. Jaso collected dozens of volumes here, all through his private efforts, even if he was assisted by the king or rest of the family through which he managed the estate. They knew little about the late queen, but had heard a lot about her sister, and general Amaya didn't look like someone who was interested in literature. Besides, she never visited the family estate, preferring either stayed at the Royal Palace with her nephews, or the castles on the border. They didn't know that Jaso was such a learned man. Perhaps it judged him a little too harshly. he looked around, watching the books. Most of them were printed, which was strange for the elf, because the only real printing house was in Lux Auraa, and besides, it was humans who first invented printing press and used it on a much larger scale. They started looking at the book. Most of them were light romantic or adventure novels, there were also a lot of typical human classics, including several books on religion, for example the catechism of Seren, called The Lady Of The Sun, or psalms of Erasti, the Lady Of The Harvest, who was worshiped in the kingdom from which Miriam came. It was a bit disappointing overall, but what could be expected in an ordinary estate manager's library. Absolutely not ancient books, lost for centuries ago. However, they saw a side door leading to a large room. they were locked, But Rao relied on opening locked locks, a skill that they learned in their childhood, his sister would be proud of them now, but she would also feel satisfied that the skills she taught him despite their protests were finally useful for something. The lock was complicated, so after a while they managed to open the door, only to discover that there was only one chest, a desk with a chair, and of course a candlestick with candles, since there was no window. The box was of course locked. They sighed because They had to play thief again, something they never felt good about. This lock was more complicated and he swore under his breath several times, but he finally managed to open it.

The books here looked much more interesting. So the took the first one on the line and grimaced when it saw the title. The Book Of Dead Names, it suited Jaso very well, from the beginning they knew that he was quite an unmannered person, but now they realized that he was terrible! However, it opened it and they didn't find what theyexpected. There was a whole drawing of a terrifying creature with the head of an octopus and wings on its back. It seemed to be terrifying and the white star gave the impression that it did not convey even one tenth of the horrors of the creature it represented. Unless, of course, it existed. The drawing was signed as a copy from an original from a Book written by some Alhazred, and purported to depict a being called the Great Cthulhu. They flipped through the next few pages and they all looked equally terrible. Even without delving into the content, they realized that it was about dark magic or even worse things. Was the steward a dark mage, perhaps one of Viren's allies? The learning of the dark magic wasn’t forbidden in the human kingdoms, and in some regions it even enjoyed some respect, for example in Katolis, not to mention Evereen, although in the latter case it was treated with much more caution. But they had learned nothing about black magic, and it was something much more terrible.

They put away the Book Of Dead Names and looked at the rest. there were also those here, such as Glaki's Revelations, although these were only excerpts from this mysterious book, or reflections on the King in Yellow. They didn't know about these books. so the excerpts they found didn't tell him much. They were also illustrated in a similar, terrible way, although the drawings in the remaining volumes were not of the quality of those in the Book of Dead Names. However, the greatest shock came when he found the Meditations written by their friend Prospero. It knew that the scholar had been expelled from the Katolis Academy due to conflict with other scholars, but was he connected to the terrible things found here? They couldn't… They didn't want to believe it! Maybe Jaso was simply interested in the same things as the researcher hiding in the mountain observatory. This would even make sense and explain why the estate manager agreed to Miriam's proposal so quickly. It breathed a sigh of relief when it realized that Prospero certainly had nothing to do with those terrible books full of hideous and blasphemous illustrations... But they could not allow they friend's work to be among such vile tomes, so it put it away and left the room. Now they definitely won't fall asleep... So they didn't return to their bedroom but went for a walk around the garden, pretending to admire the efforts of the gardeners, and silently praying to the Great Open Heaven that nothing would happen to Miriam.

Miriam didn't know what the excavations should look like. She's never seen any and hasn't read much about this type of thing. She associated it with simple treasure hunting or even grave robbing. At worst, she imagined it as something like a quarry or an open-pit mine, but what she saw here didn't quite match her imagination. First of all, it was much more orderly than she expected. The finds were not stacked like gold in a dragon's vault, but were laid out on tables and all signed, and although the workers worked with picks and shovels, they did not strike mindlessly to move as much earth as possible, but precisely crushed the rock or exposed layers of the ground, as the try to avoid to damage anything. She was impressed. Klest didn't seem like the kind of person who would care whether the artifacts of ancient cultures were damaged, as long as they weren't made of gold or other precious metals. The excavation site was guarded by several humans, even a couple of moonshadow elves. From what she saw, the scarlet-haired woman had no prejudice against the inhabitants of the eastern half of Xadi. Truth be told, she wasn't sure how the woman felt about anyone, since she looked at everyone as if she was going to hurt everybody at that moment or go to bed with everybody or most likely both. The people working at the dig looked surprisingly professional. Even those who resembled bandits did not seem like ordinary thugs. At least a few looked like scholars, though probably not those who spent most of their lives in academy buildings. All of them were armed, some of them even had muskets, a weapon invented not that long ago and popular mainly in Katolis and Neolandia. In her homeland, bows were preferred and were considered traditional weapons along with spears, but sometimes instead of firearms, spears with attached rockets were used, which gave momentum to the shaft. some considered it just the ideal of both favorite types of weapon of her homeland.

„The charges are already placed according to your instructions, boss.„ Said a tall and broad-shouldered man armed with a wide saber, which he carried on his back. At first glance, she thought he was a bandit, but after a closer look, she noticed that there was an intelligence in his eyes that was rarely seen in ordinary criminals.

„It's good that you waited for me, because these loads are different than what you're used to. I also have to look at them carefully, because their use requires some precision and I have to check whether the charges are actually in the right places, otherwise all our work will be wasted.„ The woman with scarlet hair replied.

„Do you know Alchemy?„ She asked with suprise and Klest laughed and answered.

„It's just ordinary chemistry and unfortunately, these charges are not of my design. A long time ago, I watched the work of the guy who invented them and I learned from him how to create them. I learn quickly and my memory is good… even too good.„ a surprising sadness appeared in her disturbing eyes „Definitely too good. But today is not the time to complain and be sad, my beautiful! Now you will see something beautiful and terrible at the same time. „ and Klest motioned for her to follow her

The excavations were located in a small valley surrounded by young trees, mainly pines. She had an irresistible feeling as if someone had gouged her with a gigantic claw. At the very end there was a mound of earth, as if someone or something had filled in the other side of the valley. She saw several metal cans there, partially buried in the ground, and everything was surrounded by a long red rope nailed to stakes, probably marking an area that would not be safe during an explosion. There were fuses coming off each of the cans. They were different lengths, and she wondered if Klest intended to fire them at the same time. A woman with icy blue eyes walked up and inspected all the loads, smiled to herself, and then walked away behind the line marked by the rope. Everyone present covered their ears and opened their mouths, except Klest, who stood with her arms crossed on her chest and stared with a hungry smile at the place where the explosion would occur. She decided that it would be a good idea to follow the example of the scarlet-haired woman's subordinates and also cover her mouth and kneel, although for her the latter was unbearably painful, so she just sat on the ground, hiding behind a rock. To her surprise, all the cans exploded at once and her entire body was shaken by one big explosion. When she looked outside, she saw that the explosion had scattered dirt and rocks, revealing a metal wall with a visible drawbridge-like gate.

„I told you, pretty, it's here.„ Klest called out. She looked at the scarlet”haired woman angrily

„You didn't think you could destroy it with your explosives!” She shouted at her. but Klest laughed.

„It's a spaceship. Do you think that any black powder charges can seriously damage it? You can't even imagine what kind of stuff his Hull must have carried in space without even the slightest scratch. „ But how can you know about these things?

„What is spaceship? We are looking for the Star Boat.„ She asked, completely confused, but Klest simply waved her hand.

„It doesn't matter, for now we have to figure out how to open it. And believe me, it may not be that easy... I know something about it...„ They walked together to the door and started looking at it.

„It must have taken quite a hit when it fell. This was a really great design since most of the passengers survived, or at least enough to establish this settlement. „ the woman with the eyes of a murderer thought aloud. And then she looked at her side.

„As a Dark Mage, you probably know the Open spell? It's so cool when you want to break into a political rival's hidden drawer and stuff like that," She asked her, raising one eyebrow. She frowned.

„Do you think that such an ancient artifact will listen to a simple spell from an inexperienced Dark Mage?„ She asked with skepticism in her voice.

„Believe me, it will work, I promise... Unless someone was careful and installed additional security measures „ said Klest, winking at her. Miriam sighed heavily and said a few words. She reached into a small bag where she kept magical ingredients. I took out a powder made from the teeth of a rockworm, a small but destructive worm that is able to chew through even granite walls. She spoke words of power and, to her surprise, the gates opened and she looked into a dark corridor.

„Ric, Izy follow me„ Her companion pointed to the door to her subordinates, who nodded, then took the heavy bag and looked at Miriam

„Ready to discover the Secrets of the Universe? Or do you prefer to hide in the safe castle of your own ignorance?„ she asked, and there was something incredibly predatory in that smile. At this point, she resembled the Blood Elf from traditional stories who tempted children to eat them when they strayed from the safe path. However, she left the safe path long ago and the path she followed led into the heart of darkness. So she nodded and followed the woman in whose blue eyes lurked death itself.

Dark Secrets of the Xadia part two

Chapter Notes

See the end of the chapter for notes

Rao climbed a tree and started looking at the area. The garden was beautiful. It was not as huge and designed in a refined, even artistic way as the one in the royal garden at Berylgarten, but they liked its modest beauty much better than the hedge mazes and unusually trimmed bushes. It was quiet and peaceful, with absolutely no indication that the steward was hiding Dark Secrets. Flowers were blooming, insects were buzzing, everything was moving in a natural rhythm typical of late spring. However, what they saw in the library still bothered them. Those books contained forbidden knowledge, that was certain. Even though the sun was shining brightly and warming their light blue skin, They were still cold. They knew that they wouldn't get rid of this coldness until they talked to Miriam. However, they had to find something to do by then. and not arousing suspicion. The problem was that they would like to pack all they belongings at once and go looking for the woman they cared about so much. This, however, would not be the most sensible thing, so they came down the tree and watched the inhabitants of the manor from there. If the situation were different, hey would probably fall asleep basking in the sun. Now every time They closed his eyes, They saw the horrible drawings in the Book Of Dead Names.

So they decided to look for a more thought-provoking activity. So they got down from the tree and started walking among the trees and bushes. At some point, they noticed that Jaso left the manor and went somwhere. Equally intrigued and concerned, they followed him. The man went to a nearby town, They think it was called Eronessa or something like that. They grimaced at the sight, because they disliked cities and towns even more than they disliked palaces. But they had to find out what this man was planning. They could sneak quite well. They may not have been a Moonshadow Elf, but they could do enough to keep the steward from seeing him. Miriam sometimes joked that she actually took in not only a scholar and a explorer, but also a street thief. They always felt touhed when they heard it. As they approached the town, they scaled the walls. The guards weren't very vigilant, after all, nobody was crazy enough sneak into town like this when it was open to everyone. Then they jumped to the nearest roof. They were strong and had light bones, so they were much more jumpy than humans, but its light bones also meant that the fall was much more severe for them. The roofs were steep so you had to focus on keeping your balance. Fortunately, no one, especially not the steward, paid attention to what was upstairs.

Jaso entered the place where there was loud conversation and giggling. At first, they thought it was an Inn, but after taking a closer look at the employees' clothes, they realized that it was a place for people who preferred other types of entertainment. They didn't think Jaso was that kind of person. They blushed. In Elven culture, such places were rare and did not function like in human kingdom. Actually, they were never in a brothel, they didn't feel the need to do so, and they were too shy. For a moment, they wondered whether to abandon their mission and slowly return to the Manor, where they could finally rest. But they had to make sure they wasn't just about his safety, but about their safety as well. So it sighed and cast a spell. They wasn't a very good sky mage, But a long time ago they learned a spell that sometimes came in handy for someone who had to walk on very steep or even flat surfaces.. As they spoke the words from the dragon tongue, their hands became able to cling to any surface.. They didn't like this spell very much, as it had a tendency to go off at the most inopportune moments. Begging the open sky for no one to notice them, they walked up to one of the higher windows and opened it, using their thieving skills again that day, it was a bit shameful that they had been more of a thief than a scholar lately, and then went inside. Fortunately, the room was empty, so they sighed with relief, but then they heard footsteps and got scared. Without thinking, she took off their expensive clothes and hid them under the bed and then, putting on the clothes left by one employee that were only a little too tight, barely holding herself up from the death out of shame, they went out into the hall and said.

„The room is now free, I've freshened up... And I'm ready to continue working. „ They said, wanting to sound as professional as possible, even though they had absolutely no idea what someone working in such a place should sound like. The man and two women giggled and offered them a chance to join them, but politely reminded them that they hadn't paid for their work. They giggled and nodded in understanding and then entered the room. Rao hoped that no one would make such offers to them again, but after all, they went to such a place, so what should they expect? Fortunately, this place was almost empty after all, it was early afternoon, so there were more employees than customers. They found themselves on the first floor and began to look beyond the railings, standing on a small balcony from which we could have a view of the ground floor. There was a steward who was talking to the owner of this place. It could read lips, but Jaso was definitely too far away for them to be able to see what he was saying, even using their elven vision. However, it didn't seem to matter, the man probably wanted to have some fun at a time when there were not many guests here, so as not to arouse too much attention, although it was certain that almost everyone in the town knew about his visits. They weren't prudish... Although they actually were, their sister always laughed at them because they turned red whenever the conversation turned to these topics. And now they were a fool following this man in a brothel...

„You must not have been working here for too long, because I would notice if another elf worked here...„ They heard and turned around, jumping in fear. To their utter surprise, they saw an elf standing next to them. She was probably a Moonshadow Elf, although it was hard to tell because her entire face was covered with a strange painting that made it look like she was wearing a porcelain mask. They weren't clear whether it was a tattoo or makeup. She was so scantily clad that Rao felt their face turn red, especially since she was so attractive... Seeing their reaction, the Moon Elf laughed heartily.

„Oh, you definitely don't work here... That's good, because it's nice to be the only elven courtesan in the Human Kingdoms. You can call me Ghost.„ She said, smiling friendly. They felt sad because They understood what happened to that woman. They felt sorry for her.

„So you won't turn me in or do anything like that?” they asked and started to get up to go back to that room, but they realized that it would be occupied for some time so they were trapped here, at least until the three in room finished what they were doing. They couldn't go out on the street dressed like that, shame would kill them. And if it wasn't shame, Miriam would definitely do it.. Their friend certainly wouldn’t be happy that they wander around the city dressed as a courtesan, following the estate manager who probably owed her nothing.

„And what exactly is someone like you looking for in a place like this? You are pretty girl, but...”

„I am they/them, but in these clothes it's an understandable mistake.„ They said and Ghost blushed while explaining. „I followed Jaso but I didn't expect that he would go to such a place and now I'm trapped here, in a sense, because I came up with the idea of dressing up as one of the people working here, but I left my clothes in another room.„ They looked down in shame.

The elf smiled friendly at him and said.

„I can take you to my room. I don't work until the evening anyway, and since I'm a star here, so to speak, no one will cause any difficulties for me. If anyone asks, I'll tell you that I'm considering recruiting a new employee. „ when they hear the Moon Elf's words, they blushes even more. So the Ghost added. „ Okay, I won't say that, because you'll soon become some new Kind of elf... A Beetroot Elf or something like that. I'll just say I don't know, grandpa's visiting or something like that, I'll think of something. Where did you leave your old clothes?„ She asked, giving him her hand, About where it was, and then the courtesan led them to her room. It was quite luxurious and lavishly decorated by elven standards, especially for the Moonshadow Elf. There were perfumes and cosmetics on the shelves. There was also a rich wardrobe here with many clothes, usually made of silk or transparent material. To their surprise, there were several books here as well. They opened one of them and immediately closed it. They couldn't say that the illustrations they saw there were as terrible as those books of dead names. They weren't terrible at all, and that's the point... They had to admit that, theoretically, you could learn a lot from them, but it wasn't the knowledge they wanted to acquire... At least now... Maybe one day they'll be able to use what they learns now. For example, if Miriam…. But no, she was just their friend... She wouldn't be anything to them anymore, no matter what they felt to her. Royal blood flowed in their veins, and they were just a Skywing Elf, even less, a common thief who tried to pass themselves off as a scholar. They sighed and put the book aside, it would be awkward if the Ghost saw them looking at something like that It did so just in time because the Moonshadow Elf entered. They must have looked particularly pathetic even for her, because she sat down on the bed next to then and asked.

„Why did you come here anyway? Because we've probably already established that you weren't looking for a job.”

They sighed and told the Ghost that it was with a friend and that the manager of the manor was dealing with suspicious matters, so it decided to follow it.

To their surprise, theGghost began to wonder and said.

„People of my profession like to gossip sometimes. Jaso doesn't come here for what everyone else does.. He apparently loves his deceased wife very much. You need to know that beneath this city is a huge labyrinth of tunnels built long ago, at a time when people were expelled to the west. Supposedly, when the Pentarchy was born, they were intended to provide citizens with a safe place to hide in the event of a siege, but honestly, no one is sure what they were really intended for. I've been there several times, they are now used mainly by those who, for various reasons, want to be alone or do some business without the presence of others. It is said that Jaso meets with very suspicious people there, and his visits there are just a cover... If you really want, I can take you there to those tunnels.

They jumped with joy when it heard the woman's proposal.

„Yes, take me there! Please!„ they said pleadingly. The ghost laughed at his words and walked to the wall where she pressed something, revealing a very narrow staircase leading somewhere into the darkness. Without waiting for the Moonshadow Elf to run to that place, and despite the darkness and narrowness.

„Hey, what about your clothes?„ Moonshadow Elf called after him.

It was dark inside, so they had to light lanterns, but Klest seemed to be able to see in the darkness anyway. She moved through the halls of the Starboat as if its layout were familiar to her. She said herself that she wasn't worried about it at all, but it was lie There was something about this woman that made her every action suggest some terrible secret. At one point, they entered a large room with a large symbol made of a single piece of jade hanging on the wall. When she saw him, Klest smacked her lips with satisfaction and said.

„ So it's true... The Azlanti crashed on Xadia. If they founded this settlement, the history of the Erori family had a second, very dark and speciesistic meaning. If it is true that General Amay wants to marry Queen Janai, it will be an insult to the ancestors. Good old Gareth got married with someone with blood so pure. I wonder if he knew about it...„ the woman with scarlet hair laughed sarcastically under her breath. She frowned and asked.

„What is Azlanti? What are you talking about.” she felt confused by the things Klest was talking about, but scarlet haired woman snorted.

„Sweetie, it's better if you didn't know, although they wouldn't hurt you so much. It's worse with your Elf... Friend... „ she said, saying the word friend in a very meaningful way. She rolled her eyes and said.

„Rao and I are just friends, perhaps unusual, but we have nothing intimate in common.” she said a bit too energetically, so Klest smiled mockingly and they moved on.

Eventually she found herself in a room with many armchairs and several flat surfaces covered with a glassy substance. Somehow it reminded her of a council chamber in a castle, or a navigator's room on a ship.

„Excellent.” said Klest, and with a lightning-fast movement of her hand, she pulled out her gun, aimed it at the first of the men accompanying them, and then shot him. The gun didn't smoke, but the bang and flash momentarily deafened her and the other man. She knew that the woman with blood-colored hair should now abandon her weapon, since it was useless once fired, and reach for her dagger, but instead she aimed at her second opponent and fired again. The man fell dead and Klest cursed and said.

„Well, less than twenty left, I'll have to go get supplies soon.” she said and searched the body. Miriam recovered quickly, it wasn't the first time she witnessed death and screamed.

„Why did you do that!”

“I decided that this would be the best way to get rid of the spies. I preferred to do it without too much fuss. I can't trust all the people in my camp one hundred percent. Some of them I recruited quite recently, and others apparently too long ago and I'm not sure whether they were recruited by them.„ Klest explained and put a few small items she found on the body into her pocket.

„Which ones are you talking about?„ Miriam asked, confused. She just hoped the woman hadn't gone completely mad. In a fit of paranoia, will she also consider her an enemy and try to kill her?

„About the friends of our, or rather your, friend Jaso? Although I'm not sure if he serves him directly. He's not as smart as he thinks.„ Klesti said, she took a small object from her pocket and then started to disassemble one of the strange devices standing in front of the armchair. She unscrewed a few screws, then removed the metal casing and began removing some parts. It looked a bit like she was taking the entrails out of a hunted animal. Finally she let out a short cry of pleasure and stood up.

„It's a pity it's Azlantean, because the operating systems are not compatible. I will have to bring the data manually, but it's not a problem. I'm finally leaving this shithole.”

„You mean Eastern Katolis?„ She asked suspiciously. Klest laughed.

„I mean fucking Xadia.„ Said the woman with scarlet hair and moved on. This time they wandered for a shorter time through the dark corridors. She finally made it to a large room and started pressing buttons on the wall. Suddenly, the light turned on and a voice spoke in a language she didn't know. Klest continued to press the buttons until a strange irritating sound was heard and the lights began to flash.

„Well, we've overloaded the reactor more, but it's better to be as far away as possible when everything goes to shit.„ Klest said and told her to follow her again. The way back was much faster. When they went outside, the bright light blinded her, and the woman with scarlet hair started talking to her subordinates.

„Unfortunately, Rick and Eze triggered an ancient trap that took their lives. They shielded us with their own bodies... Sadly a powerful spell has also been activated that will soon blow up the Starboat and it would be good if we were far away! Grab only the most necessary things and on your feet.” and she took Miriam's arm and then pulled her along. The Dark Mage let out a short scream as terrible pain shot through her injured leg. She almost fell over, but Klest was so damn strong, so after a while she just picked her up. It was definitely a less painful way to travel, but what made her most uncomfortable was the fact that she could already hear the woman's stupid and pathetic attempts at flirting in her head. She finally set it down on the ground. She noticed that her camp was already intensively preparing to set out, apparently the artifact hunter had already given the appropriate orders in advance. But she wondered why all the rush. Whatever Klest did, it couldn't have threatened them at this distance... Or maybe it could? She wasn't sure, she didn't know anything about Starboats, although she was just beginning to realize that she had absolutely no understanding of what was going on around her.

Finally, she saw Krest's subordinates mounting mounts, mostly horses, but there were also these strange animals ridden by a pair of Moonshadow Elves... Or maybe they were siblings? It wasn't important now. What was much more important was that she now had a long ride ahead of her... She groaned, but then realized that they were not going back to the Erori family manor.

„Klest! Wait! Where are we going?” she asked the scarlet-haired woman,

„To Hammerhall Fortress... To my old friend... „ said Klest, packing hastily. She grabbed the woman's sleeve and said.

„I have to go back for Rao! I can't leave them here!” she exclaimed, truly terrified. Rao may not have been there at all Klest raised an eyebrow and giggled.

„So you want also save your "friend"... I'm not surprised by this. They are so pretty! Your nights will be much lonelier without them! So you probably understand that you want to save them.

Yes, I will help you. I've always wanted to see a dark magician save a beautiful person! She said and turned to one of her people, the same one she talked to earlier, at the excavation site.

„ You know where to take the rest. I will leave you for now, I have a truly knightly quest to perform, and as the Squire I must accompany the dark mage on hers expedition! Don't get into unnecessary fights, if someone from the authorities bothers you, refer to Warhamer. Then no one will stand in your way. If I am not with you when you reach Grimm, then tell him that the fairest of the beautiful has found what they have been looking for for so many years. And if one of our opponents stands in your way, kill him without hesitation, everything will be explained later.„ she explained and chose two strange animals, it would be even worse than horse riding, and ordered her to ride one of them. Lidia was happy to do so and together they drove towards the town

Now Rao realized that they actually doesn't like the dark and if they think about it, they had quite severe claustrophobia. The latter was typical of their people, so fond of open spaces. Rao was also afraid of spiders, it was also justified, because several huge ones once tried to eat them, and they didn't like the dark either, because their eyesight was extremely sharp in the daylight, but in the dark they was almost blind. They had to rely on the Ghost to guide them, because as a Moonshadow Elf she could see in the dark and she coped perfectly. They didn't get fully dressed because they didn't want to waste any time. only threw a small cloak behind they back. They expected it to be very cold and humid, but to his surprise again, it was dry and quite warm.

„The Hot Springs are located beneath the town. Since the creation of the Border, many of them have appeared on both sides, and the inhabitants of this place decided to make use of them.„ Ghost explained to him. When I have my head and continued to follow her. Fortunately, both of them were able to move very quietly, which helped them a lot when they entered a large room illuminated by several extremely luminous crystals rare on this side of the Border, the light of which was reflected in a shallow pool in the middle. The Ghost told them to stop immediately and be quiet. After a while they heard Jaso's voice.

„I think we might have a problem He turned to the person hiding in the shadows, whose tall and muscular figure was barely visible to Rao. „I didn't expect this girl to come here so quickly and be so interested in the excavations. I thought you would call by financing this venture and receiving small gifts from time to time. On top of that, she hired this strange woman with those scary eyes I thought. that she will take care of all this and she will get this ship out of the ground. At the beginning I thought that Klest was just a treasure hunter, but her people look well and only professional, but as if they had done similar things before. She knows about this matter, much more more than she says, because she even thinks she knows about our masters. About Great Old Ones and things like that... „ The steward's voice sounded as if the man was truly terrified. However, when the second voice spoke, they understood where this fear came from. They were itself afraid of who it belonged to.

„You idiot! You could have framed her for fraud or something, or you could have just reported her to someone in authority. You are de facto the king's cousin, you have some influence at the court, isn't it?" Khandros, the most dangerous man they had ever known, spoke hoarsely and impatiently. He was the one who mutilated them, took away its former life. He had stripped away part of their soul, turning them into the fearful creature they now were.

„No... He's much worse." Rao whispered, their throat tight with fear. Although it couldn't see the Ghost, they felt that she was watching them.

"Do you know him?" she asked.

„ Yes... From another life.” They said quietly, barely audible. The Ghost didn't ask any more questions, after all, she could see the scars on their back. However, the men continued the discussion.

„I guess it doesn't matter what I could have done in the past but i didn't. All that matters is what we can do now.” The steward defended himself. Khandros, however, only growled and drawled...

„Not we, but you, because you were entrusted with the task of recovering this ship, and you couldn't even do it on your own. It doesn't matter now anyway, so you'll just have to get rid of this girl and her Elven companion.”

They heard Jaso take a deep breath and saw the man take a few steps back.

„Are you crazy! She is the cousin of Queen of Durren. If something happened to her, even by accident, the consequences could be terrible. Everything will be lost, there may even be a war. „ The steward's voices were pure astonishment and disbelief, Khandros however, laughed hoarsely and said.

„If you don’t solve this problem today, you will be dead. Choose between a possible war and a very certain and painful death... The choice is probably obvious, don't you think?”

Rao let out a short, muffled moan. They wanted to murder Miriam! Until now, they were afraid that Klest might pose a real threat to her. But Khandros! He would be a monster, the embodiment of all fears, the worst person ever. He couldn't hurt the one They loved! If that happens, then... They couldn't imagine what they would do then...

But Jaso laughed, bitterly and not happily, and spoke in a surprisingly hard voice.

„Do you think I'm doing all this for money? That I'm afraid of death? My only fear is that I will fail.. I am guided by Higher Goals. You, as far as I know, are just an ordinary murderer, working for someone who will allow him to shed blood and will pay for it. Your own kin have condemned you to a fate worse than death! You are even outcasts among outcasts! I know you used to work for the Serpent Path until they found out about you... You don't think your new employers will quickly understand what a bastard you are!„ Jaso Now he started practically screaming. His words were listened to with understanding. It was at the command of the Serpent Path that they were mutilated! They wasn't certain whether what was more disturbing was that even that organization was disgusted by this Moonshadow Elf, or that he was about to find new employers who didn't care about his reputation. Khandros growled loudly and took a few steps into the grass, and toward Jaso and they heard him draw his blades.

„One more word, you bastard, and I'll feed you with your own insides.“ His voice convinced Rao that he would carry out his threats at the slightest provocation . They felt fear. They could imagine what this murderer might do to them and the woman with them if he found out they were eavesdropping on him.. Jaso however, just snorted, an unexpected courage came into this man.

„You're not the one passing judgment on this matter, Khandros! We both served beings greater and more magnificent than us! Or maybe you are unable to comprehend it with your mind? „ The steward started laughing, this time with a sense of superiority in his voice, as if he could cut the Moonshadow Elf into pieces at any moment, and not the other way around.

They never found out what Khandros wanted to do, because then a giant explosion shook the underground... Rao felt his shoulder hit the tunnel wall painfully, and the woman accompanying Them let out a short scream. Fortunately, Khandros did not hear them, as the sound of the shock drowned out everything.

„It's too late... This woman... She must have done something to this ship. Never mind. I have to get out of here, there are much more important matters than you, stupid man, as you have just seen. If you don't take care of it, the one with me will solve the problem. I was graciously offered the support of the Hunter and his hounds..” although it didn't see the man, it was certain that he was smiling.

„Now we definitely have to run away from here, do you know where your friend is?„ asked the Ghost, they nodded in response and together they went to the brothel...

When she woke up in the carriage, she had no idea that she would miss it. These strange creatures were even worse than horses, and on top of that, Klest set them at a furious pace. The Woman with the Eyes of a Murderer seemed to be beaming with joy, though she wasn't sure whether it was the ride itself or the fact that her companion was going through torture. With this woman, both possibilities were equally likely. She had recently shot two men just because she had some doubts about their loyalty... She had a lot of sins on her conscience, but she hadn't murdered anyone in cold blood... At least not in this insidious way. But Klest was much more than a cold-blooded murderer and a ruthless treasure hunter. She knew about things that no one in all of Xadia knew about. Has she ever found another Starboat, or rather a spaceship as she called it? And her gun, she had never seen a weapon like that. At first it just seemed strange to her. Then it fired twice without reloading, which took so long. Is it like a magical artifact? A remnant from the old days? She heard from Rao on the theories of his master Prospero. He told a lot about Xadia's ancient past, which almost no one remembered anymore... For many, his theories were not even controversial, but even iconoclastic. She had also read about his deliberations. Prospero was a famous scientist, at least several decades ago. then, of course, he was expelled from the academy, but his words were not completely lost. She had heard about him before she met Rao. But that wasn't a sufficient explanation. There was no trace of delight in this woman's eyes when she was for the Starboat, as if it was a sight she was used to. Something she had seen many times before and was considered commonplace. As if she already…

She almost fell off her horse when she formulated that thought. She pulled on the reins and the Klest stopped.

„So you don't want to save your loved one? Decide that it would be a pity to have my mounts drive us one way and then the other. You know, I'm sure I could easily find you someone much better at these things... Like myself. You wouldn't have to drive so much and strain that bad leg of yours. „ Klest laughed loudly, but she did not allow herself to be provoked into a discussion, she asked directly.

Klest laughed again and said.

„ Yes, I was not born on Xadi.a.. On this planet. My ship crashed here years ago and I've been trying to get out ever since. Okay, I'm not just trying to get out of here... I want to know the great secret here... I know that my family is somehow connected to it. I also know that it can have a huge impact on the fate of not only this planet, but also the entire Galaxy. You, the inhabitants of Xadia, cannot think on such a scale, both in time and space, but believe me. What will happen here may affect the lives of billions, hundreds, billions of beings... That's all I can tell you for now, if you want to know more, join me. Worst case scenario, you'll face an extremely interesting death, but at best, you will gain knowledge that even your greatest sages have never dreamed of.„ Klest smiled at her, assuming her predatory pose again. She sighed and replied.

„I just want to save Rao, nothing more... If you help me. then you can count on my gratitude... Within reason.„ She added, seeing the woman smiling at her.

„Well, to tell you the truth, we don't even know if they in any danger... But let's be honest. You're not looking for a Starboat, or perhaps as we should now say, a spaceship, just out of pure scientific curiosity. Oh no! Someone like you, the queen's cousin, doesn't become a dark wizard just because she's bored.. I know what happened to you and I see how you suffer. You are looking for a remedy for your condition, and not only for your injured leg. It's more than that, isn't it? I smell death... death and darkness... And you, pretty one, smell of both. I don't know if even with the knowledge, technology and magic that is available throughout the galaxy, I will be able to help you, but I am giving you a chance. This is much more than your cousin the Queen has given you... Think about that as we ride towards the court.„ Said the woman with scarlet hair and spurred her horse, which galloped forward. She stared at her for a moment. You knew this woman was right. Everything she had been doing for two years was dictated by the fact that she wanted to find a cure for her condition... She was ready to do a lot, a lot, almost anything, to become the same as before. If it involved working with Klest, she was willing to go for it…. So she hurried her horse and also set out for the manor

When they reached the Manor, everything actually seemed to be fine. The servants went about their business. No one paid much attention to Klest. Certainly because the cold-eyed woman had visited Jaso more than once, And now everyone expected that he was going to discuss the excavations with him again. Jaso was nowhere to be found, he must have gone to an inn, casino or brothel, most likely the latter. She didn't care what this man did, but his absence might make things easier for them. The problem was that Rao was nowhere to be found either. She checked their room, where she couldn't find it, and ignored Klest's comments about them sharing one room, and then asked the servants to look around. However, no one knew where the Skywing Elf might be. Some said they went to the garden, but that was all she could find out about it. She swore several times under her breath. She was close to panic. The guards began to look askance as she screamed out loud, but Klest's strange look made them stay out of her way. She finally entered the library. The room was surprisingly well-equipped for a private manor. she saw a side door leading to a small room, and in her experience, such places were where the most valuable volumes were kept. The door was open, although it had a lock, which confirmed her suspicions and indicated that Rao had gotten in. They were always curious and liked to go where he was allowed, and they were a better burglar than they let on. Together they looked inside, and Klest, as soon as she saw the name of one of the volumes. that were in the chest, she whistled and said.

„Necronomicon, or rather its truncated fragments... People will probably never learn not to use poor translations.

„What kind of book is this? Is it about dark magic?„ She asked, looking at one of the illustrations which depicted an extremely terrifying monster. The woman with the eyes of a murderer giggled and said.

„ Yeah, very dark, but not the kind you use. This elven person probably came in here and got scared when they saw this. it would be funny if they went looking for us in the city or, even funnier, at the excavation site. The latter, however, may end badly.”

She gritted her teeth and grabbed the woman by her vest.

„Shut up! Don't you dare joke like that! Not with Rao! You can't even imagine what they went through! You don't have a heart, just a piece of ice!”

Klest giggled again and leaned over her. She was taller than her and much stronger... At this close, she was able to break her neck before she could cast the spell... Though she had other abilities as well, although she wasn't sure if she could use them against this woman... She couldn't fully control them, and Besides, Klest seemed so formidable that she wouldn't be surprised if she was able to defeat the Moonshadow Elf Assassin in a sword fight.

„My own Mother tried to sacrifice me to the lord of evil just to get revenge on my father, so sweetie I can imagine a lot... and as for my heart... I belong to a family of murderers who are only good at two things. Killing and spreading Chaos, so forget about such moralizing talk.” Klest whispered.

She blinked twice when she heard the woman's words. This wasn't the kind of confession she expected from this woman, although honestly she wasn't sure what she should expect from her. She didn't understand anything anymore, her whole world, everything she believed in fell apart. However, she knew that she should react somehow to Klest's words, but before she could think of anything, something shook the entire building. She heard the crash of broken windows and the woman with scarlet hair smiled proudly.

„I told you it fuck-ap, and it fuck-ap. Let's go see what's going on outside."

Slightly confused, she ran after the scarlet-haired woman. On the way, she had to watch out for broken glass and terrified servants... From what she noticed, several of them were injured, although she had no idea how seriously... She didn't have time for that... They found themselves in the garden and both immediately looked in the direction they came from. There was a huge cloud of smoke and dust floating there, somewhat reminiscent of a Mushroom.

"Don't worry, pretty onel. it was a plasma reactor, so the amount of radiation will be minimal."

„Radiation? What are you talking about again?" She asked irritably.

„Such great and evil magic that would make your hair fall out and your bones rot... It would be an irreparable tragedy!" the woman with scarlet hair shouted. And then they heard a yelp.

Miriam began to look around. Were they terrified Wolves or other predators? This explosion probably caused panic among all the animals many kilometers away. They could also be enraged... I guess. She didn't really know anything about animals or wildlife. She was a girl raised in one of the richest courts in the world, where hunting was never fashionable anyway. Shouldn't wolves be afraid of such a gathering of people? Then she looked at Klest and saw Fear on her face and realized that the situation was really bad.

„What could it be?„ she asked the cold-eyed woman.

„It could be many thin things, but I guess it's the Huntsman's hounds... Fucking hell!”

Rao had money... Miriam gave them a purse full of human coins, And she also bought him a lot of jewelry... They rarely took them off, although they was not vain. Well, they wasn't very vain. They liked nice clothes and good food, it liked human culture in general, but they did not parasitize the queen's cousin... However, they had something to pay for the quick transport to the manor. The truth was that they wasn't easy to find someone willing to take them out of the town. The explosion caused panic among the residents, which was understandable. As soon as they saw a cloud of smoke dust on the horizon, they were honestly scared. They had no idea what could have happened, but they must have been something truly terrifying... No one wanted to hear about selling or abandoning their mounts at a time like this, especially not an elf.. Fortunately, the Ghostt helped them. The Elven courtesan had her own mount, and it was a Xadian creture, one of those strange cats with blue-green fur... So he was very happy when Moonshadow Elf offered to lend them her mount... The problem was that they had absolutely no knowledge of riding a horse. After all, for most of their life it needed to ride animals, at least those on the ground. Until… that moment, they were free to roam the skies. Then it usually traveled by carriage or ship, because of Miriam's leg. The Ghost sighed at his efforts not to fall off the animal, and then she said.

„I'll go with you, because you'll kill yourself on the way.„ she said and got on the horse. „Just hug me and hold me tight!”

They did as she said. They wrapped themselves around the Moonshadow Elf and hugged her back as tightly as they could.

„You know, it would be a bit more comfortable and definitely less awkward if you dressed up”. Ghost said uncertainly.

„I didn't have time! I have to save Miriam!„ They cried, trying to sound firm, although it turned purple with shame. The ghost shook her head and they ran towards the Erori manor „Which Hunter and Hounds are you talking about!” Miriam exclaimed angrily, wanting to cover her fear with anger. Klest She looked around nervously as the people of the manor huddled together, even more scared than before.

„Hunters are servants of Lord Tholuvian, one of the aspects... It doesn't matter... As long as the sun shines, they won't do anything to you.” said Klest and looked up. „So in the next ten minutes...”

She looked up. A cloud of dust from the blown-up ship was approaching and would soon cover the sun. Something had to be done... Fortunately, she was very good at managing people. After all, she was of royal blood and had been taught from childhood to lead others, even if she was not to take the throne.

„Listen! Everyone go to the manor immediately and we will barricade ourselves there against what is coming. Don't be afraid, they're just feral dogs... We'll handle it just fine... Miss Klest is a great fighter and will stop the Beasts without any effort. However, we have to hurry, because this type of hound attacks only after dark, and as you can see, this cloud will soon cover the sun.„ She pointed to the sky, where the dust cloud was getting closer and closer to the Sun circle. She had so much authority in her voice that the all servants listened to her. Unfortunately, barricading was difficult due to broken windows, they will have to set up on the stairs and hope that no one will jump to the first floor. Frightened People willingly followed her orders, except, of course, Klest, who was playing nervously with a dagger and this strange gun, looking out the window with slight fear.. And then there was Darkness and a howling sound. She reached into her bag of magical ingredients and prepared to cast Spells. Unlike her homeland, dark magicians were respected in Katolis, and in the face of such danger, everyone forgot their prejudices. There was a similar howl and then another, and three huge hairy Beasts fell into the main living room. They were as big as small horses, with their legs spread wide apart like a spider's. Their snouts were much more elongated than those of a true hound, more reminiscent of the aquatic predatory reptiles of Evenere.

„They were created as Echo Memories of long-extinct predators, But these are not ordinary animals.„ Klest whispered in her ear and drew her weapon, holding it in both hands. She fired twice at the first of the hounds and hit him, although the wounds was not serious and the Beast began to bleed a strange green ichor. Two more flew towards them, covering a distance with incredible speed.. She crushed the spider and spoke the words of the spell, then threw the flame at one of the attacking monsters. The effect exceeded her wildest expectations. Flame enveloped the monster and the Beast fell to the ground, turning to ash in the blink of an eye. However, the dear creature jumped between them. He somehow tore apart a stocky woman, probably a roommate, but Klest attacked him with her dagger. She stuck it into the beast's neck and it was sharpened with blue fire. Then Miriam began to weave another spell. Her hands have transformed into long, sickle-shaped blades like those of a praying mantis or other insect. They went back to the monster's neck, covering everything with disgusting blood. Then a woman with scarlet hair threw her over the railing. She had to admit that her ally was a person with extraordinary, even superhuman strength. Then The monster who was the first to receive wounds from Klest's gun, got to his feet but instead of attacking, he retreated to the door. They heard slow, respectful clapping from that direction. And then a voice rang out, that is, it seemed to come from everywhere, from every shadow, as if its owner was standing right next to their ear.

„That was interesting. I expected that my nice friends would tear you apart almost immediately, without much effort... And here you are. You defended yourself from these puppies... I am the Hunter Kerankan of gloves, it will be an honor to skin you.

Then a man entered the living room. He was extremely tall, over two and a half meters tall and apart from that he looked almost like an ordinary hunter. However, his eyes. they seemed to be larger than those of an ordinary person... They radiated white, or maybe rather white-blue, light, like the disk of the moon. It seemed almost artificial, as if someone had put crystal balls in their heads. He was armed with a long knife as if made. from some Claw and a whip that moved on its own. Miriam did not wait for the reaction of this strange, terrifying creature, but cast another spell. The floor beneath her exploded and thousands of splinters flew into stranger. The creature let out a strange hissing cry, and then Klest began to utter words. It sounded like she was casting a spell, but she didn't recognize the language the woman was speaking

„An ancient language... This place doesn't look like one where anyone knows him... Or maybe... My brothers and sisters were here once. a long time ago and not very often, but still... But these words are enough to stop me... We know you... You were supposed to be a gift to our Lord... He will reward you in exchange for your soul... „ And he began to slowly walk towards them. She uttered another spell, and this time a black flame shot out from her staff, which she usually leaned on. The man stopped, but did not burn in an agonizing cry, as happens with an ordinary mortal. He covered himself with this strange coat. Only now did the Dark Mage realize that it was made of faces... Human and otherwise... He took one step, and then another. It is not known what would have happened if Rao had not appeared at the door... In front of them was a strange stone carved with a green and blue pattern that glowed with a soft light..

„No... You can't be here! You have to leave, do you understand?! I... I command you! „ Rao exclaimed. The symbol began to burn and the hunter cringed.

„I will obey this command... I could not oppose what this thing is... Then my Lord will be my replacement. Lord Tholuwian… He'll be here soon! „ And the Huntsman broke up into a swarm of frail birds, probably nightjars. Hound turned into a shadow and ran away as well. Miriam sighed heavily, despite her triumph. A woman, probably a Moon Elf, followed Rao inside... She immediately made Miriam suspicious. She quickly came down the stairs and hugged Rao.

"It's good that nothing happened to you. You don't even know how happy I am about this." Then she saw the outfit Rao wore under the cloak. They were almost naked, and what she wore only emphasized their… advantages. "Where were you exactly?" she asked suspiciously.

„Because I went to a brothel and changed into someone's clothes there, and then the Ghost took me to her room...„ said Skywing Elven person.

„What!?„ she asked indignantly, and Klest, standing behind her, snorted with amusement.

„It wasn't supposed to sound like this... I'll explain everything to you later... Now I think... I think we should run away from here, because I don't like the words that man said there..."

„And rightly so... Come with me, and I promise that this vice will be characters you haven't even dreamed of.„ said Klest

„I'm also coming with you... If the Serpent Path is involved... Then I have reasons to help you. „ said the Elf who was brought by Rao... She gritted her teeth angrily and felt a piercing pain in her leg. It's going to be a long journey.

Chapter End Notes

And the next chapter, I remind you that googletranslate has a problem with Rao's Pronouns. The Hunter was inspired by the Hunter from Loop Hero.

She woke up and saw her wife 's face staring at her with concern. You smiled at your lover and replied.

„This is one of the nicest views you can imagine after waking up.„ She said and stood up on the bed. It was daytime and she was dressed in her usual clothes, although they had been changed. Nothing hurt her. She was only a little tired, but it was quite good considering… Now she remembered what had happened and felt a sudden surge of fear. She wanted to jump to her feet, but Catra stopped her.

„Relax. It's over now.„ The cat girl said in a reassuring tone. She immediately noticed that she didn't say everything was fine. You felt icy claws squeezing her heart.

„Has anyone... has anyone else died?„ She asked, trembling at the thought of what she might hear. But her lover shook her head and said.

„ Only the guards, but you saw them... Klementine is save and sound... As possible as you can be after being dead... This priestess will probably seriously start praying to you now” She laughed a little nervously, but hearing about the prayers made her feel cold. She remembered those voices... What they said... What they demanded of her...

„What about Lady Cala and Shadow Weaver?„ She asked, trying to change the subject. Her wife pursed her lips.

„ They escaped... All three of them and that monster. No one knows where they are, I personally suspect they went to Castle Crypto, But I can't be entirely sure... Scorpia, Perfuma , Mermista and... Frosta are safe and sound. „ You smiled, although she hesitated when she mentioned the ice princess.

„And Glimmer? Has she regained her connection to the moonstone?„ She asked, but her wife shook her head.

„Not yet, But she's fighting... It was Nightgale who took it in... She killed Brother Blade... He was good... He always wanted to prove that clones could be more than just soldiers... than executors of their Horde Prime’s will... He tried so hard to show it to everyone, and she killed him. She is her daughter... This explains everything... Evil lives in her. She lived among us... She hid what she was... They are the same. Nightgale and Shadow Weaver... I don't know if we did the right thing by letting Hordak go . He knew he had another daughter... He hid it from everyone... Even from his wife. I know Entrapta will forgive him. She even forgave me in the end. However, I believe that we should not do this.„ Her wife shook her head as if to drive away unwanted thoughts. She hugged her, knowing that she still hadn't forgiven herself for what had once done to the inventor, and that she would never forgive the former ruler of the Horde for what he forced them all to do.

„We'll deal with that later. We should deal with current problems, dear... do we already know what Comrade General intends to do?„ She asked, addressing both herself and wife.

Catra shook her head.

„We don't know anything about her... Or about my sister... You know, this time I was such idiot. I should have asked Shadow Weaver about her... I was so angry. So angry that I forgot about my old girlfriend... She's out there somewhere... You saw her then, right? It wasn't a hallucination? Who is this other girl? Why did she want to kill you? You didn't do anything to her?„ Her beloved said. She was visibly shaken. She flattened her ears and wagged her tail nervously which became erect. Her companion paced around the room as nervous as Catra…

„I guess we need to focus on the People's Rebellion first. They have an Empress and more... Entrapta and your sister are there too. Apart from that. The dark sorceress also cooperated with them... „ she turned to her beloved, trying to comfort her, although she was absolutely exhausted herself.

„What about you?„ Her wife asked. She smiled weakly at her.

„I'm fine... It's just very exhausting trying to bring someone life back.„ She laughed, fully aware that the cat girl wouldn't believe her, but what could she tell her? That strange voices were telling her to leave or do something even worse…

„This priestess... She is delighted with you. I do not like it. I don't like it when others treat you this way... As if you weren't yourself... As if you belonged to them. Because you are mine, only mine. And it will always be like that, right?„ She saw a pleading in her beloved's eyes that she hadn't expected. As if her beloved desperately wanted confirmation that she would never leave her... She understood that, after all, she had already done it to her once. But she had a feeling there was more to it. As if her wife was afraid of something. Something new that she hadn't told her yet.

„Of course it will always be with you, darling... But you don't have to be jealousI will always be only yours. „ She kissed her and they both hugged.

„But sooner or later Glimmer will have to do something about it Forbid others from worshiping you... And it's not that I feel jealous, because I don't. Well, maybe a little. In my opinion this is dangerous and inappropriate. It's too much like Him. People shouldn't look at others like that. It's like they're giving up a part of themselves, you know? They're like these clones. As if they wanted to deny themselves to please someone else who doesn't care about them anyway. It's not just about you. At least you are real, but about all of them. And also this priest of Hylax . Did you hear what terrible things he said about Frosta? And she probably started to believe him in his nonsense.„ She bristled when she told about Shirren. To her, that person seemed quite nice. But she was never good at judging people. After all, she believed for years that Shadow Weaver cared about her.

„How about Frosta ... Is she feeling better already?„ She asked, afraid of the answer. Catra hesitated before answering.

„That spel that Nightgale cast ... It killed Brother Blade, but didn't do anything to Frosta. She is very worried about this. She thinks there is something wrong with her. But it's just a matter of her magic... It's probably her runestone that works this way. She was always the most resilient of us.. I tell her this, but she doesn't listen. Maybe if you told her something, calmed her down and told her everything was fine..... „ Catra looked her straight in the eye. For a moment she wanted to promise that she would, but then she remembered what happened when she touched the younger girl. She then screamed in pain, as if the very touch was burning her. She, too, sensed something strange about Frosta A cold darkness that seemed to envelop her soul. There was something extremely wrong about it. She couldn't describe it exactly, but she had seen something like it before, in that dream... This being, Charon emanated it. She didn't want to tell Catra about it though. Not now… Her wife had a harder time accepting Frosta's condition than the ice princess herself. It was probably because she blamed herself for what happened to her. She understood well , because she herself often felt guilty for what happened to others. But sooner or later everyone will have to come to terms with what happened to the girl.

„Stay with me. Let's get some rest and maybe we'll figure out what to do next. Let's just be together. Let's forget about the whole world.

In response, Catra snuggled closer to her and began to purr. Immediately afterwards, both of them sank into the blissful oblivion of sleep.

After receiving new instructions from the Creeping Chaos, she felt overwhelmed by the amount of work ahead of her. Three women and an eldritch monster They had to cooperate and coordinate their efforts to achieve the goal. Or maybe the goals... They have to separate. She didn't mind the fact that she and Lady Cala would part ways. To be honest, they had always hated each other, she only realized how much after they had been separated for several weeks and when she had cooperated with the People's Rebellion. Although she had spent the last few years training the young aristocrat, they had never formed a bond... Lady Cala was unable to form any bond with a normal being... Because Blackwind was probably not one of them. So she was secretly glad that they would be separated again. But that was the only thing she was happy about.

She had to be separated from her daughter, although she was in a very difficult condition. She remembered well how she felt when she was in a similar situation. The suffering she experienced was difficult to describe, but she still managed to gain a position in the Horde. However, she was then a mature woman with a hardened heart, and Nightgale was still a sensitive girl who longed for love and acceptance. She didn't want to leave her alone. This alternating euphoria and torment was debilitating. She didn't want this girl to become someone like her, she wanted to protect her from everything that awaited her, but she couldn't... She had to return to her homeland... That was the second thing that fueled her frustration. She hadn't been there in over seventy years. She left them convinced that she would never return there. She hated and despised that place. For as long as she could remember, she wanted to get out of there, and in the end, she would return there anyway... But not with her tail between her legs.

Lady Cala sat casually on the veranda and drank wine from General Juliette's supply . She suspected that this inhuman abomination took pleasure in consuming the drink belonging to the family she had wronged so much. Nightgale sat on a wicker chair with her arms around herself. Chills shook her body. She walked up to her and hugged her. She didn't say anything because it didn't make sense anyway. There was no point in saying anything in such a situation. Lady Cala saw this and let out a short laugh.

„When I was little, my mother sometimes hugged me. I never understood what she meant. I even wondered if he was secretly trying to strangle me. Only later did I realize that mortals sometimes do this. To be close or something like that. In this way, they wanted to strengthen social bonds. Making the other person feel safe and loved. I am invincible, so I always feel safe, And mortals will never love me as they should.„ she said and giggled. Her voice was nervous and shaky. From time to time she spoke with Nyarlathotep, she seemed shocket. If she had known this was possible, she would have suspected that the girl was worried or terrified... She also saw bottles on the side... In fact, she wasn't sure how creatures like her reacted to alcohol. In many ways she was very human, although she would never admit it...

„But you're not alone. You have siblings, perhaps even extended family. Do you also feel connected to each other, like all beings?„ Nightgale asked. Lady Cala snorted contemptuously.

„We are not like other beings. Each of us is an amazing and unique creature, we cannot be compared to each other! Do the Gods form one big family?„ She growled, but the younger sorceress said with a wry smile.

„You are absolutely perfect, awesome and unique, aren't you?

At first, the aristocrat nodded, only after a while she realized that Nightgale refers to a saying often uttered by Eti. Lady Cala jumped to her feet and looked at her daughter.

„How dare you compare me to this creature!„ She overtook it, but Nightgale looked at her hard.

„Because you are much more similar than it might seem at first glance... You were both created for one purpose. All of you were only tools intended to fulfill the will of those at whose command you were created... All three of you are similar. You, Eti and Catra. All three of you are unique, although they are more unique than you. You and the great Marshal always want the recognition that others do not give you. Your emotions are also different from the rest of society... And each of you is not quite what you want to be."

For a moment she was convinced that Lady Cala would attack her daughter and you would tear her apart. But the aristocrat sank into a chair and laughed nervously.

"You're right, little witch. If I were better. If only she tried harder. If only I had been luckier, this place would not have been visited by Evangeline." She rubbed her hair with her hands.

To change the topic, she asked.

„Who is Evangeline?"

„She's one of my sisters, but you've already guessed that... She's older, much older than me. She was born on the lost Golarion. She and her twin sister, Demonique ... Only the latter chose a more human nature while Evangeline embraced divinity. She was imprisoned for centuries in their family estate, which was moved to the Nightmare Plateau of Leng. I only met her once, in a dream. She... I awe mortals by showing them what they really are, miserable vermin standing in the way of the goddess. However, I can only kill and maim in battle, and Evangeline ... She loves other beings with a love that is as deep as it is twisted. She distorts bodies and minds and calls it love. A bit like you Shadow Weaver, but she truly believes in what she does. She is not like Horde Prime, there is no arrogance or hypocrisy in her, only love and madness... Love and madness.„ Lady Cala looked ahead, absorbed in reflection, and in that one moment, for the first time in the five years of their acquaintance, she saw a bit of humanity in this young woman.

Then she looked at the bottle of wine. She felt an overwhelming desire to reach for it and empty it. All of this made her addiction come back, but truth be told, It never left her. It was a substitute for the power she had always wanted as well. A way to escape self-hatred and the awareness of her own failure... It made it much easier for her to hurt those who wanted her love, but she couldn't quite hold her addiction responsible for her evil deeds. While on Carurystal, alcohol allowed her to forget the dark blade hanging over her, what she would have to do, and the inhuman creature she helped train. But now she realized that this was not the path she should have taken She couldn't let her mind cloud, it had to be as sharp as a sword of protection. Even though she suffered because of what happened to her daughter, she could not escape into alcoholic oblivion. She had to face reality, otherwise she would lose everything and even more than everything. So she looked away from the bottle and turned to the other women.

„What are we going to do now? I will go to the Isles of Sorrow, that may be difficult in itself, although I have some idea on how I can get there. I know that my sisters are in some way favorable to us. „ When she said this, the daughter nodded and said.

„Yes, Midnight Mask helped the People's Rebellion, but she serves someone else... She is an acolyte of Zon-Kuthon, although I don't know much about him.” Nightgale said, and she added thoughtfully.

„Lord of the Midnight , a dark deity who rules pain and darkness. From what I heard, he used to be a different being, but he was corrupted when he went to a place inhabited by the Great Old Ones... It's hard to say why he is on the side of the Creeping Chaos, Maybe, because the victory of the First Ones also means the end of suffering, or at least its significant reduction. I'm just not sure to what extent my sister serves him sincerely, and to what extent he tempted her by fueling her jealousy and lust for power... or whether she simply likes his nickname. I never expected that the followers of the gods would reach Etheria so quickly, especially my homeland... Cults are different, as far as I know, the followers of the Old Ones have always operated in secret, and their rulers do not care about the number of servants or spreading the faith in them. They only want to achieve their unknown goals... It might be interesting to meet my mother and your grandmother after so many years... Perhaps it would be good if they met you, but not in these circumstances... „ She smiled sadly at both women and asked. “What are you going to do?” she looked after her daughter and at her charge. Nightgale was the first to respond..

„I have to go to Castle Crypto I left some of my things behind, and besides, this castle holds a few more secrets that I was afraid to explore before, but now I desperately need answers... I suppose I can gain knowledge there on how to get to Xadia. And besides... I have to say goodbye to Lonnie and the rest somehow. I have lived with them for the last few years. They are my friends, although I never planned for them to become so. Until now I realized how important they are to me. I don't know if they would accept me as I am now, but they showed me a lot of heart. You saw them yourself. They are honest at heart. They just directed their anger in the wrong way. I owe them at least a proper goodbye, and there's one more thing... Kyle, he 's …Well...„ Her daughter was strangely confused.

„Your boyfriend? You know, he lives in quite a complicated relationship with Lonnie and Rogelio.„ She didn't finish because Nightgale interrupted her.

„None of these things. I slept with Lonnie sometimes, but it wasn't anything serious. Kyle has a second sword. Like Adora... He's someone just like her. He also has power... I don't know why. I haven't investigated this matter properly. He wasn't very keen either, you can guess why... Now we won't do anything about it.”

She felt her jaw drop and she must have looked extremely idiotic.

„But Kyle? He's a lubber after all. He never succeeded in anything. This is a man who tripped over his own feet. So, looking at my other mistakes, he must also be a prince of power, something like that. My life is one great irony. But, let's leave this topic. Is your informant…”

„Aaravos. That's how I contacted him. The first time was that night after our meeting in Mystacor. I performed a certain ritual so that I don't have to use the mirror to talk to him...” She pointed to the strange larva-like creature in her ear. “So he showed me how to conduct the ritual of obtainment... Although, as you can see, even his advice didn't help much.”

The being, because the word person definitely didn't describe what he was, that the Crawling Chaos had mentioned. The creature he told them to release.. She saw him when her daughter summoned the Devourer of Light. This individual was co-responsible for all the evil she had done and suffered. It all started with him. She felt an overwhelming wave of hatred towards the elven sorcerer flare up in her heart . But she immediately extinguished it, because a plan was already sprouting in her heart.....

„I saw him too, actually I see him all the time. I guess it's because of my divine origin. After all, he is the chosen one of the Great Nyarlathotep. He seems like a very interesting person. I can't wait until I can talk to him. It is our duty as people with noble hearts to free him, and yet there is no doubt that ours are so... Or at least Mine.„ She laughed brilliantly. „ When Nightgale finds out everything, let her travel with me... If I have to help her with her problem, it's probably good for us to be close to each other, isn't it?”

She narrowed her eyes and regarded the noblewoman suspiciously, but Nightgale nodded.

„Yes, that sounds reasonable. But where will you go?” she asked Lady Cala , who smiled.

„To the Singing Jungle, I guess. Kranor Rill is located there.”

„Another?” she asked, surprised. These Swamps also existed on Carurystal. Memories were associated with the expedition she organized to explore these cursed swamps... Painful memories, even doubly so now after what had recently happened... She remembered her last, yes, truly last, conversation with Asindesa di Vir and felt an overwhelming sadness flooding her heart. However, she composed herself and looked at Lady Cala , who began to explain.

„Just like in many other places throughout the Galaxy. Maybe Bloodstone can be installed there, and if not, at least I'll get Riliti to our cause.” the eldrithh monster with the face of a beautiful aristocrat smiled.

„If you find any there. I haven't heard many stories about frog-like monsters invading the inhabitants of Etheria. The First Ones probably murdered them, and I don't blame them. These creatures have no real intelligence anyway, and they live only to kill or to serve „ it's hard to say.„ There were traces of her old anger in her voice, resulting from powerlessness.

„They must be so wonderful, isn't they?„ The young aristocrat asked, smiling slyly.

„Hey, that just made them even more likely to be murdered by Horde Prime. He had the means, and more importantly the desire, to do something like this. The mindless resistance that Rilliti would put up would greatly encourage him to exterminate... It might have been the only good thing he had done for this world. „ She drawled with irritation. Horde Prime was a bastard, but she would totally understand if he wanted to get rid of that bloodstone remnant.

Then Nightgale spoke

„ He wants me to give you something, his knowledge. Well, I didn't perform the ritual that allowed me to talk to Star Saihe so that I wouldn't benefit from his knowledge now„ Her daughter said, smiling bitterly Nightgale was so tired, but she also knew this was only the beginning. The power still pulsed through her veins. She managed to keep control of the Moonstone. Hey, I saw that it seemed to take forever for you, it's good, they had to hurry instead of arguing.

„He says the swamps here have been almost cleared. There was a fully developed Bloodstone here, but it was destroyed by Mara after what happened to the original inhabitants of this planet. It was one of the last. Maybe even the penultimate one. There aren't many frog-like monsters left. But they left the console intact... First Ones left it for research purposes. They want to study the structure of the energy grid in order to use it later, which as you know they have done on this planet and probably many others. Much more promising are the swamps on his world, in a country called Evenere... The colony there was almost developed, it only lacks real bloodstone. But this actually helped it survive. If you pull out the console from the local Bloodstone and live this truncated fragment of yours, you may be able to recreate a fully functioning structure. And that will give you great power. All Kranor Rills were connected by portals. So whoever finally creates Bloodstone, even the damaged one you are planning, will take over all the swamps, but Miss Cala probably already knows that, right?„ She repeated word for word what Aaravos told her. He is already next to her, as always, smiling mysteriously, as if he knew a secret that no one else knew. There was something irritating yet intimidating about this men. She felt no sympathy for him and wasn't sure if she hated him for the way he used her to perform the ritual of obtainment. He used her like lab rat. But he still commanded overwhelming respect thanks to his knowledge and skills. He was the chosen one of Nyarlathotep. He remembered the First Ones and fought with them and even won the victory. It was something that couldn't be ignored. So when he asked her to speak on his behalf and not resist, he was finally committed to this whole grand enterprise, as the Creeping Chaos Themselves said.

Her mother looked sternly at where she thought the Elder Sorcerer was, which Aaravos smiled softly at, and said.

„Yes, I completely forgot that there were four of us talking, together with our highly respected guest.„ there was barely audible hatred in her voice, which Aaravos didn't care about, because he started giving further orders through her.

"At the moment of their fall, the First Ones were close to creating a network of interplanetary portals. They did not achieve success, but their project was continued by certain factions. Here on Etheria , this project has been attempted twice. The sorcerers of Umbracor once tried to do this and almost succeeded , but a war broke out... Very sad and, to be honest, completely unforeseen by me... You really have to believe me, it was not my goal to destroy this wonderful university, because it thwarted my plans. That was one of the biggest disappointments that ever happened to me, the second was your failure.„ When he said this, Shadow Weaver tightened her hands on the table, but did not comment on the elven sorcerer's touch. „It was supposed to be quite efficient, allowing larger groups of people to be brought in at any time. The second one was located on today's Sorrow Islands... Their inhabitants always wanted to return to their former homeland, or at least get off this planet. They tried another way to bypass the restrictions of being in Despondos. They attempted to use shadow plane for this purpose Your dark sorceress might like this... Before you ask why you haven't heard about it, well, the whole project was considered heresy and all participants were killed. From what I know, in an extremely brutal way... This was my doing, I didn't want a bunch of angry warriors with a very rigid moral code to burst into my yard. However, in the current situation, I would welcome them. Because as you both know, we're running out of time. „ He finished repeating what the saihe sorcerer told her and added from herself. „He's definitely right about this.„ She said, looking at the two women who were slowly losing their heads. „I suggest that Shadow Weaver go to Xadia. Let her find Klaudia, the young dark magician who started cooperation with me. Her father is extremely valuable to us, but sadly, he had an accident some time ago, very similar to the one that happened to Shadow Weave

. Unfortunately, his resurrection will be much more difficult than yours, because he has not sold his soul to the Creeping Chaos yet. That's why someone has to help his daughter. She is full of enthusiasm, but very clumsy, to put it mildly. Even with my help, he may not be able to cope, especially since in the place where she lives humans can cast spells under certain restrictions
Therefore, she will need the help of someone who was famous throughout the planet for his skills in educating young people. Although some might debate this from what I've heard.„She didn't repeat Star Saihe's grim laugh to Mother

„Indeed, I will tell her everything I know. I have many more Skills than just knowledge of Spells."

Aaravos agreed with the dark sorceress, and stopped smiling mysteriously and most of the issues had already been discussed, but she remembered something and added.

„There is one more thing. Lonnie has made contact with Mi-Go, I think we could be an interesting alternative for them to working with the Rebellion."

Lady Cala raised an eyebrow and said.

„Are they here? This is very interesting... Did they survive for so many years when the planet was imprisoned, or did they only arrive recently?„ You could hear genuine interest in her voice

„From what they say, and we don't know how much we can trust these types of creatures, they have been here for a very long time, since the times of the First Ones or maybe even longer. Their population was wiped out by the previous She-Ra, although it is difficult to say whether Mara deserves this title. They agreed with Comrade General that they would help her recover an ancient ship hidden in a glacier. This may also be useful to us. So I guess we've covered everything, right? „ She asked and both women and the wizard, visible only to her, nodded.

„Once again, there's one more thing we need to decide at the end „ Lady Cala said at the end „ We'll split into three groups, but we only have two mirrors... How will we split?

„What mirrors? What are you talking about?„ She looked at the others, curious despite the waves of pain that shot through her body.

„ A gift from the Lord Admiral that he forgot to take back.. They aare the work of Krellans, creators of Bloodstone. They enable communication over huge distances, which is virtually impossible to overhear.„ The aristocrat explained.

„Take one, Calamity, because unfortunately you don't know magical forms of communication. If you decide to travel together, it is logical for me to take the second one..„ Shadow Weaver said. „ That's probably all, we're operating on borrowed time anyway. Soon the Queen should regain enough strength to find us using more conventional means, perhaps even transport others to where we are. I have a way to get to the islands, although it may not be very pleasant, neither for me nor for my wonderful sisters. Unfortunately, you have to cope on your own and use the contacts you have. „ Her mother sighed heavily and got up from the table. „ We will meet in two days at eight in the morning. You, Nightgale, will have to astral project yourself near me. Take a lock of my hair. „ Shadow Weaver Using a knife, she cut a few strands of her long black hair and handed them to her. and then proceeded to cast the spell.

Lady Ka looked at her new metal arm with a smile. She liked it. In some ways it was better than the old one. She was no longer surprised at her father that when his body was starting to fail him, he decided to replace it with a new, mechanical one. Well, the Lord Admiral's instructions were clear. She was supposed to find his other daughter. This will of course take time, but for now it's quite a lot. Recent events in the castle have made her work much easier. Now no one will have time to stand in her way. Now she just needs to find the little kitten... And deliver it safe and sound to Antares ... The latter didn't make her happy, not to mention the fact that it wouldn't be easy... She touched the mask on her face. Sometimes you have to accept that you don't have everything. Fortunately, with any luck she will be able to talk to her sister. She removed the blades from her fingers. Yes, this will be a fascinating and very fun discussion. She giggled as she thought about finally getting her revenge on her traitorous sister.

She looked at the others. Grag also replaced his limb with a cybernetic prosthetic and looked determined. He didn't want to get hit by stupid kids or underrated clones again. She may have to keep an eye on him so that he doesn't take out his anger on the cat's companions. On the other hand, no one cared about that stupid clone, Grag could have turned its head into a mantelpiece or something. In addition to him, she also took with her her Shiren Marksman and a halfling named Mogo , who was a champion in throwing weapons. Her new acquisition was Ghoran Wes, whom she recruited on Taurus. She was a terrorist who fought against Horde Prime's troops using poisons. She was extremely effective and created a real terror among the clones, but shortly after the cocky fool fell, she continued to carry out attacks on those she believed to be his loyalists, even in liberated areas, and was eventually imprisoned after causing many accidental deaths. She was therefore a valuable asset among her mongrels. Although she wasn't sure how much I had to count on her loyalty, for someone with such skills she could afford to take some risks. Unfortunately, the men the Lord Admiral had assigned to her were another matter.. See among them this strange trio called the Star Siblings. They were the first inhabitants of the Ravaged Zone they met, and it was thanks to them that Antares learned about his daughter. That in itself was enough for her to feel contempt for them, but they were also former warriors and idealists, and she truly hated those. Unfortunately, she couldn't get rid of them that easily, apart from the fact that they were soldiers of the Fearless Armada, they were famous among the inhabitants of Etheria , but luckily this stupid Dark sorceress made it very easy for her to solve this problem. If something happens to them, she will be able to blame everything on her or that aristocrat. Apart from that, there were a lot of people from Atrax , for example Kay, a quite handsome red-haired boy.

However, they all counted for nothing compared to her companion. Lady Sorrowflame Just packed. The mechanical assistant, a terrifying multi-limbed droid, followed her, ready to carve up any corpse she pointed at him. She took a portable workshop with her, but apart from that she didn't have much belongings. She was glad that the ancient Dragon Necromancer would accompany her. She was one of the few people she genuinely liked, her presence was invaluable.

„So where do we go first?" She asked the dragon vampire, and Lady Sorowflame spoke thoughtfully.

„Well, there is one place that I am very interested in, but for now we also have to deal with the Lord Admiral's orders. I suggest that we go near the border of Dryl and the country of scorpions. Queen plan on gathering her forces there anyway, and I'll be a few hours' flight or even less from these ruins. Does this aristocrat seem like a promising ally to you.„ She addressed her in the dwarven language.

„No one is a perfect ally, but I like her. She has a good head on her shoulders and seems to be sincere in what she does... „ she didn't finish because she saw that the queen was walking towards them. She looked bad, and it probably happened to her during that daring escape. She was pale and her hair was ruffled. Her right arm was wrapped in a bandage.

„First of all, we are here free your friend's little sister, but overall we're going to help..."

To emphasize hers, she flexed her fingers and extended her claws. Glimmer looked at her new cybernetic hand strangely. True, itwas wonderful, but the queen probably had something more in mind. Did Shadow Weaver say something about her disagreement with Antares ?

„We'll keep an eye on you”. Glimmer said coldly.

„That's good, because we'll need every eye.„ she said and pointed to her only visible eye.

Chapter End Notes

I have a slight cold, so the next chapter will come maybe a little later.

The absolutely perfect, awesome and unique creature

Chapter Notes

See the end of the chapter for notes

She woke up. The first thing she felt was cold. Her whole body was shivering because of the cold that penetrated her. She started breathing heavily. Her throat hurt, like the eyes that were blinded by the bright light. She was bathed in a sea of scents so strong they almost intoxicated her. The air was different than it should have been, different than before, although, she wasn't sure if it had been any before… … She didn't remember anything. She didn't know who she was or where she was. and what will happen to her. All she was really sure was that she was… That she exist. It was a feeling both wonderful and terrifying. She was someone... But it's hard to figure out who. She knew certain things, such as that she had to close her eyes because there was light shining into them, probably from lamps, which could damage them. She understood that you were cold because she was naked. She also understood that she should avoid this state of affairs, not only because of the cold, although she didn't quite understand why. It didn't matter anyway because those people around her told her to get up. When she did not respond to their commands, they forced her to stand. Then she heard a voice, hard and metallic, but not devoid of emotion. She recognized that there was pride in it, although she did not understand what its owner could be pleased with.

"Indeed, an absolutely perfect, amazing and unique creature. Much better than the others. Check her out and take her to her bed, let her rest."

She looked up and saw a huge metal figure with four legs spread wide apar. tAt first she thought it was a Droid, but after a while she came to the conclusion that it was probably something else, because it was too human... The names of mechanical intelligent races appeared in her memory, although she knew well that she had never met any of them. She realized that there was a lot of knowledge in her head, the origin of which she did not know. She didn't have time to think, because people dressed in white pushed her and took her to one room. There, various things were done to her, for example, things were put into the body, her ears and mouth were looked into, she was weighed, measured, and scanned. At one point, a man stuck a sharp needle into her body. She screamed and hit him with her claws. She cut the flesh, blood splattered… The man screamed, but the others started laughing. During the next punctures, she was held tighter, although she struggled and tried to break free. No one paid attention to her screams and hissing. Finally it was over and they gave her a shirt and pants and took her to bed. She was very tired, but she had no idea why, so she lay down in bed and fell asleep.

As soon as she closed her eyes, she saw chaotic and incomprehensible images. So she got up from the bed and started looking around. She was in a large empty room with a few beds. She couldn't get a good look at them because they were covered with screens, but there were at least three of them in total. Two people were standing at the door. They seemed dangerous and ready to harm anyone who annoyed them. She covered herself with the blanket and continued to look around, not sure what she was going to do. She was then approached by a woman who was waiting at a table in the corner of the room. She liked her appearance. She had burgundy hair, cropped short and a round face. You smiled at her and asked.

„What can I do for you? Do you want something to eat or can I take you to the toilet?”

When the woman mentioned food she felt hungry and also thirsty, but she had questions for the woman.

„I… I see things…. „ she asked uncertainly.

„ Do you see things? Can you explain?„ replied the woman with concern in her voice.

„Yes. I just close my eyes but they appear. I don't want to see them!„ She explained feeling angry. Her claws slipped from her fingers.

„Oh, they're just dreams. Everyone has them. Don't be afraid of them. They can be beautiful... You'll see for yourself someday! „ The woman said, smiling at her. She felt like she breathed a sigh of relief. She nodded when she heard this answer .

„Dreams... I know about them, although I don't know how I know about them. Now I'd like to eat something... Then you could take me to the toilet.” She said in a sleepy voice

The woman smiled again and left. Soon she got in with a man carrying a tray with food on it. There were a few pieces of meat, milk with some cereal, some fruit, hard-boiled and soft-boiled eggs, and some vegetables. The smells made her instantly perk up. Her stomach began to growl and saliva filled her mouth.

„Take whatever you want. Go ahead, feel free.„ Said the woman and handed her a plate. Almost without a second thought, she took all the meat and eggs. She ate quickly, as if someone would take the food away from her at any moment... Perhaps that would have happened if she ate too slowly, but in a few minutes she devoured everything on the plate. Then she went to the toilet, constantly watched by guards, and when she returned, she felt sleepy again. She quickly fell asleep and slept for a long time, this time not bothered by dreams.

She woke up with a start when something climbed onto her bed. She jumped to her feet and saw a humanoid creature, like a human-cat hybrid. Her tail bristled and she stretched out her claws and bared her teeth. The second creature looked at her in surprise and turned its head as it approached and began to smell her. She continued to hiss, but she wasn't aggressive, she even seemed friendly.

„Who are you?„ she asked after a while.

„ I'm my… myself. „ She answered him uncertainly, because she just realized that she didn't know who she was. It was frustrating and disturbing at the same time.

„Hello Mayself, nice to meet you!„ she said and started rubbing against her. She squealed softly and the thing moved back and she cringed.

„There are three of us.„ Said the person. that she hadn't seen. She craned her neck and saw the second feline creature. It was finer and slimmer than the first one. It had a calm, slightly amused face with golden eyes, and this first creature had one green eye and the other golden. Carefully, because she wasn't sure if she was allowed to do this, she got up from the bed and approached the third creature, wagging her tail uncertainly. The third one was smiling all the time, although she had the impression that this smile was somehow strange.

„Are you telling US? Why are you telling US?„ She asked confused.

„You are quite stupid too... All three of us are similar. You are the same creature as me. Only I'm smarter and you two are stupid. But maybe it's good, so be it. In siblings there must always be one smart one, one stupid one and one mediocre one.„ She said and touched her face with her fingers. Then one of the guards came up and called out.

„To bed! Don't get too familiar!”

All three of them went back to bed, although the second one looked sad and the third one looked at the guard so strangely that he flinched.

After some time, they were woken up and taken away for further tests. She decided to call the other two Cuddles and Smilies... Smilies calmly underwent all the procedures, although she was constantly looking at the doctors with scowls. Cuddles broke out, cried and hissed a little. She understood her and also became aggressive when they pricked her and did similar painful things. Then they were taken to another place where they could exercise. There were many types of weapons there, as well as a very high climbing wall and a swimming pool. She liked it here and played almost carelessly for a while, although out of the corner of her eye she saw several people writing down what they were doing. She didn't care about it, she just took some weapon and started hitting the mannequin with it, while Cuddles climbed the wall and Smiles was looking at the knives. Then they gathered her in the common dining room, where there were many more people. She was surprised to find that they looked a lot like the woman they met at the very beginning. They only had multi-colored hair. Burgundy. blue, sometimes pink... They were shown where the food was so they took it and then they were shown which table they should sit at. She was very hungry again, so she ate with gusto. Some women looked on, uncertain and surprised. She didn't really like the look some of them were giving them. They seemed scared, maybe surprised, she wasn’t sure.

After the meal, they were taken to the bathroom. They could take a bath in the large bathtub. That was the first time she could see herself in the mirror. She was indeed very similar to the other two. Cuddles hissed a little at its reflection and then laughed, Smiles didn't pay much attention to the reflection. The next cycle, because she wasn't sure if she could call it a day or how she knew what a day was, was similar, although this time they were accompanied by several people. One of them was looking at Smiles very carefully. Suddenly she grabbed her and the cat girl stabbed him with a knife. Blood flowed again, and Smiles watched the screaming guy until the knife was taken from her.

She noticed that after this incident, the people with them began to look at them more carefully than before, but she didn't care about it, she just started playing with Cuddles. After a while, they started rolling on the ground and wrestling. They laughed out loud and were so happy that they started purring while hugging each other.

Immediately after waking up again, she sensed that something had changed. The woman who visited them was clearly upset, even sad. As if she was afraid of something. Smiles also felt it, she put her ears back and waited with her claws outstretched, as if someone could attack her at any moment. Only Cuddles didn't care about anything. Finally, a large group of guards came and started leading them away. When one of them grabbed her, she started struggling, scratching and biting. One of the guards screamed as she bit his finger off. Cuddles hid under the bed and they had to drag it out by force. The girl cried as they held her. She realized that it was the first time in your life that you had seen someone cry. Only Smiles seemed calm, as if she didn't care. She allowed herself to be taken out and did not put up any resistance. They walked down the hall and then into the elevator. The place they were in was huge, she didn't even know what it was called. Has it always been here? Did anything else exist in the world? Yes, names like forest, desert or mountains appeared in her mind. They certainly weren't in any of those places.

They stood in front of a door, wide and double-leaf. She felt fear. She knew that something terrible was waiting behind this door... Smiles also guessed it. As soon as they stopped, she grabbed the guard holding her wrist and cut his veins with her claws before running away. However, everyone was prepared for this, because as soon as she started running, several electric bolts were fired at her. Two hit her, but even though she fell to the floor, Nada tried to crawl.

„This one will go later. Now take the third one, it's the most promising anyway.” said the officer-looking guard. She was grabbed tightly by the arms and dragged out the door. She found herself in an oval and bright room with an armchair in the middle. The entire room smelled of fear and pain. Despite her resistance, they strapped her down. Strong and precise. She couldn't move. Even her head was immobilized and her eyelids were lifted up with pieces of adhesive tape. She hissed and growled, but they ignored her. Finally, they put a strange camera in her face. She wasn't sure why, but he scared her. Two people who looked like doctors were tinkering with it. Finally one of them shouted that everything was ready and they moved away.

She felt it. Thoughts, feelings that weren't hers, that were forced into her head. Knowledge she didn't want, terrifying knowledge. She understood more and more, knew more and more with each breath, but her mind rejected it like her body rejected disease. She saw images of war, suffering and cruelty. She also learned how to hurt others. How to make them suffer or die, quickly or slowly. She learned the secrets of most species, but not to save anyone, but to kill better. She already understood how the weapons they had been given during training worked. She gained memories whose context she did not understand. They concerned war, fighting, and terrible things. She screamed and asked them to stop, but they continued. She couldn't even lose consciousness. It felt like it was going on forever. It seemed to her that she had spent an eternity in that chair, longer than her whole life. When it was all over, she heard people around her talking with great satisfaction, but she didn't have the strength to even move. All she could smell was the stench of her own sweat and urine, she must have peed herself during all this... As they unbuckled her from the seat, she sank into the darkness.

The dreams have come... They weren't beautiful as she was promised. Instead, they were full of suffering, pain and war. She dreamed of war and fighting, although until recently she only knew the place where she was imprisoned. Because it was a prison... She heard screams and gunshots, smelled blood and hot metal. She felt pain and fear that she couldn't escape from.

She finally woke up in a bed, not even her own, but the one where Cuddles had slept earlier. The other two girls were also here... Cuddles was sitting on the bed, hugging her knees, and Smiles was clenching and unclenching her hands. It seemed to be in slightly better condition than the others.

„Smiles, what did they do to us?„ she asked, hugging her arms. Her clothes were changed when she was brought here.

„Smiles? Is that what you called me? Well, it's always a name. „ said the third girl and laughed briefly. „It was conditional training, but you should know it yourself, because you have the same knowledge as me. Although I had already been conditioned earlier. Before we became conscious. That's probably why I'm so smart.„ she explained and smiled wider.

„What will they do with us now?„ she asked, wanting to control the shivers that were shaking her body.

„What we were created for... They will forge us into weapons.„ said Smiles and laughed.

In the following days, training began. Their weapon skills, physical fitness and even problem-solving skills were tested. Tests and training lasted many hours, so each evening they were so exhausted that they fell asleep immediately. But the dreams still came back, as scary as before. She didn't know if day or night was worse. They were also examined from time to time, although not as intensively as before. They continued to eat meals together with these women. Now she realized that they were clones, although she had no idea whose clones they were. It probably wasn't important to them, they weren't clones of those women. They were fed twice a day, once before training they were given a lighter meal, and in the evening, after a long day of work, they were given enough food to fill them up. They ate slightly better than the clones, they were given meat, cream and yak, as well as a strange paste that probably contained vitamins, everyone made sure they ate it. They also took a shower every day, quick and warm, it was probably the most pleasant moment of the whole day. They didn't have their own things, they were given normal clothes, but they were changed every day.

Cuddles was the most physically fit of them, and during wrestling matches she always won, effortlessly overpowering them, even when both of them stood up to her. She also seemed to understand the instructors' instructions even before they said them to you. As if she could sense their thoughts. However, she was the most sensitive . Of the three of them, she was the only one who cried, and she cried every night. She wasn't the brightest either and didn't understand all the instructors' instructions. That's why they tried to protect her. However, it was not easy, because every day more and more was expected of them, and the penalties for failure were severe. They were punished mainly by electrocuting them, but sometimes they were also simply beaten, taking care not to permanently damage them.

Smiles was obedient, but she was still watched most carefully of all of them. She had the impression all the time. that the third of her sisters is up to something. Without a doubt, she was the smartest of them all. But there was something strange about her. She was more focused and composed, but also dangerous and scary. She was nice to Cuddles, but she looked at her differently, as if suspicious and distrustful, and a bit as if she was jealous... But the main enemy were the instructors, and the only person who showed some heart was the caretaker-clone. One day, probably the sixtieth , they again sensed j that something is wrong. The woman who took care of them came in worried and said that today was an important day. Her voice was cracking, she could smell her fear. Are they trying to put something terrible in their heads again? However, even as she was being conditioned, the clone woman didn't seem that worried.

„Today is an important day. Your biggest test. Even our father will be there. So you must be brave... You must be strong… I know it will be difficult, but you must do your best... and do what they tell you.”

They were led to another room, where there were Three black doors. Each of them was taken behind a different door and slammed shut. There was a laser gun on the table and a door in front of it. There was an automatic energy rifle on the ceiling that was pointing at her. Then a man was pushed through the door. A voice came from hidden speakers, the same voice she had heard the first day.

„He opposed us, so he was sentenced to death. Kill him or die yourself, choose.„ He ordered sharply.

She looked around terrified, not knowing what to do. The man cried and begged for mercy. But the voice kept telling her to kill him. He demanded it louder and louder and more violently. She couldn't oppose him... But she didn't want to hurt that man... He hadn't done anything, he wasn't her enemy. But the voice was persistent. The rifle took aim.

„Kill or be killed.„ He ordered and fired next to her. She grabbed the gun, but still did nothing. She couldn't just kill him. She could not !.

„KILL OR BE KILLED!„ this time the voice screamed. The rifle fired and hit right next to her. So she took the gun in both hands and aimed it at the bound man... Her hands were trembling. the man was crying and she was aiming at him. She fired. The man fell dead. She moved to her knees. Two guards came inside and dragged her outside. Smiles was already waiting there. She seemed unfazed, as if nothing had happened... One of them was taken out of the room, Cuddles was nowhere to be found, they didn't ask what happened to her , they knew full well what fate must have befallen her. Their caretaker wasn't there either, but that was what everyone was wondering. They lost their sister, the weakest one, the one they wanted to take care of... After a few minutes, Smiles started staring at her. She did this for a long time, for an hour or two... She finally spoke.

„It is your fault! You know very well that only one of us can stay! They don't need more like us! And they wanted you from the beginning! That one was weak And I... I'm too smart! I will not obey their orders! Now they'll get rid of me! Unless... „ And she jumped at her with her claws. She threw it off the bed and onto the floor. They started struggling. The smiley wanted to reach her throat. She pushed it away with a Strong Leg Strike, but it jumped at her again. This time, however, she was prepared. She caught it in the air and spun it around, pressing it to the floor. She dug her knees into her stomach. She grabbed her by the neck, but the Smiles bit her hand until blood flowed. She didn't even scream. She didn't know what she wanted to do. The reflexes she felt told her to kill the other girl, but ... She didn't want to do it... However, she knew that if she just loosened her grip, the other girl would attack her. She extended the claws of one hand and struck the other hand in the face. Smiles screamed and grabbed her eye. Then the guards burst into the room. They shocked her with electric batons. She lost consciousness... When she woke up, she was alone...

All subsequent days became similar to the previous ones... Unbearably similar. She would get up, trained, eat her evening meal, go to sleep and it would all start over again. What changed most was that she was now alone. There was no one in the room, she had no one to talk to. Sometimes it happened that she didn't say a single word for whole days, apart from answering the instructors' questions. But something has changed here too. In addition to instructors, she now had teachers. They introduced themselves to her... They tried to talk to her. They smiled. Some even tried to be nice. They were involved in teaching her things that required greater Commitment. Unlike the uniformed instructors, they did not try to hide their identity from her. While the instructors tried to make her focus primarily on the task and not ask unnecessary questions, the teachers encouraged her to participate in the lessons. They wanted her to understand as much as possible of what they were teaching her. Besides, they didn't beat her, and usually they didn't even raise their voices. In fact, they looked more scared than she was. Some even looked like they didn't want to be here. She understood them. She would rather be somewhere else, although she had no idea where else was. However, she liked these lessons, they were something nice during the day. She could rest during them. To calm down. They taught her things like philosophy, galactic politics, biology, and even etiquette, although she didn't fully understand the latter
What she liked most was when they taught her strategy and command. Then they played games with her or presented problems to solve. Then she could forget a little about how terrible her life was. The knowledge that was pressed into her head allowed her to understand that what was happening here was not normal. It is not something that should happen or be done to another person. There was a certain cruelty in it, because she was aware of the abnormality of what was happening around her. It made her hate this existence more than if she thought it happened to everyone. That's why she rebelled more and more often and bit instructors. Initially, she wasn't even punished for this, much less than for simple incorrectly followed orders. This only frustrated her more. So she tried to use weapons against him, since they wanted her to know how to use them, they could hide her compartment. Here they were more aggressive, overpowering them quickly and painfully. However, they were careful not to seriously harm her. As soon as she calmed down, they let her go. But all this only fueled her fury. Actually, she wanted them to do something to her... To finally end it. So that they would do with her the same thing they did with Smiles and Cuddles. One day, the same doctor who had been with her when she was conditioned passed by. She guessed he didn't think she would remember her. When he got close, she jumped at him and dug her claws into his eyes. The second blow tore her throat, but then they dragged her away. She was taken to an empty room, where she waited tied up for an hour. A man in the appearance of a droid also came to her, she heard his name was Jantar. He looked at her for a long time until he finally said.

„In your case, some disobedience can be tolerated. Dr. Kac, however, was a very valuable specialist... It will be difficult to replace him. Why you need to learn to take responsibility for your actions. Follow me though... „ He said and they took her to the top of the Tower... She spent the whole night there... It was also the first night when she saw the world outside the Citadel... She survived despite the terror and hundreds of birds just waiting to tear her alive...

However, something began to change. There was a kind of nervous atmosphere. Everyone looked scared. She saw it best by watching the clones in the dinning. She had excellent hearing, and women didn't try to speak quietly anyway. They whispered something about a big attack. About the battle that is coming and that they may have to run away... About the Swarm that will soon come and consume Atrax . She was curious about it. She had knowledge about the Swarm in her head and knew that it was extremely dangerous. It can even swallow entire planets. If it comes here too, will time destroy the citadel. She would like it to be like this Gaining some courage, she asked the teachers about the situation. Some were reluctant, but most were also worried about the Swarm, and eventually some told her that the Swarm had attacked nearby Kesler, so they feared it would come here too.

And then One day, no one came to training for her. So she sat alone in her bed, waiting for… She had no idea what. When she didn't get anything to eat all day, she was probably at the door and she started to listen. She heard screams and gunshots. She wasn't sure if the Swarm had already arrived or if something else had happened. In any case, she was happy that something would change, because for her every change was a change for the better. Finally, a clone woman, dressed much more casually than the ones she had seen before, came into her room and brought her a whole bucket of some kind of fried breaded bird. She seemed very cheerful.

„I'm sorry you had to wait so long, but today is a big day. Jantar is dead! We are all free!„ She cried, tears streaming down her face.

„So I can leave here and go somewhere, right?” she asked skeptically. As she expected, the woman was confused and handed her the cup.

„Take this and eat your fill. Everything will be fine now.” she said and wanted to pet her, but she changed her mind when she saw her look and left.

It wasn't, although she had to admit it was better, at least at first. Female Clones had now replaced most of the guards, and those who weren't clones were new anyway. They were nicer, they didn't shout at her, in fact they were a little afraid of her. She liked it. Who was afraid of her, couldn't hurt her. And they were afraid of her, which means that she was dangerous and that she was able to defend herself. Because these workouts made her stronger. They showed her how to hurt others, and that started her being able to ambush those who wanted to hurt her. So often, when she was standing in front of a door waiting to be able to enter it, because everything wasn't ready yet, she would stare at the guards until they started sweating. In fact, everyone started looking at her the same way they used to look at Smiles. Whenever she remembered her sister, she rejected the thought. She didn't want to remember her , and she didn't want to remember Cuddles. They disappeared because of her. If it weren't for her, if she weren't so perfect... They would be the ones with her. And now she was alone and would be alone. She had to come to terms with it, because what else could she do?

However, training has not changed. The instructors still expected her to do her best, but at least they didn't beat her, at least if one of the clone women was around. However, she herself tried to meet their requirements. She had to become better and stronger, so that when the opportunity to escape came, she would leave this place once and for all!

But then she appeared. She was a female clone, but everyone was afraid of her, especially those who weren't clones. She saw her for the first time during one of the training sessions. She was dressed in a silver-blue vest and on her head a delicate white diadem with sapphires. She entered the training room and stood with her arms crossed over her chest, smiling mockingly. Something about that smile reminded her of Smiles, but there was much more mockery in it. She looked at her for a moment, and then the woman giggled and walked over to her.

„I am the Supreme Queen Ka.„ She said and without warning she punched her in the face. She was so surprised that she didn't even try to dodge. She staggered back and almost fell, then felt a surge of rage in her heart and lunged at the woman. However, she put an electric baton in front of her and shocked her. She found herself on the floor again, and the pain paralyzed her body.

„Now that we've introduced ourselves, you can get back to training.„ she said and retreated to the wall, but did not stop watching her. She slowly stood up and went back to training, trying to ignore the clone woman. During this training, Queen Ka no longer spoke to her. She didn't see her again that day either. However, the next day, while she was training in jumping and acrobatics, the Queen Ka was present. Being watched by This woman distracted her and she slipped and fell painfully. Before she got up, she felt a strong impact at work, knocking her to the ground again. A shoe pressed her to the floor.

„And this is supposed to be this wonderful creature that our father devoted so much time and resources to creating and training? Pathetic!„ she said, leaning her ear to it. She smelled of strong perfume, alcohol and some kind of drugs. Then she let her get up and looked at the exercises again. It was like this for the next few days. The Supreme Queen of Ka sometimes observed her training, and sometimes personally punished her for her failures, usually in such a way that she could not give her back.

But eventually something changed. On three hundred sixty day, which was different from all the previous ones. She sensed the tension and anger among the remaining female clowns. She was taken to this room she had never seen before. There was a dressing room and a man, an Android, handed her clothes and told her that she should choose something from them. She donned baggy pants and a long-sleeved vest. She would have worn more clothes but he wouldn't let her. Then she was taken to the living room. There, Queen Ka was waiting for her in an armchair, drinking wine. When she saw her, she went to her and said.

„There always comes a moment when little kitten has to go to a new owner.„ she said and giggled. And the eyes were full of contempt and malice. This woman hated her, even though she hadn't done anything to her. She felt the rage again , which burned with cold fire in her heart. With a lightning-fast movement, she struck the woman with her hand with outstretched claws. She felt resistance as she cut through muscle and bone. Blood splattered on her and her new clothes. Ka let out a short scream and jumped away from her, and then some guards grabbed her and pressed her to the ground. The Queen ordered her to be put on her knees and to raise her head so that she could look into her face. Her right side turned into a bloody mess, but the woman didn't stop smiling.

„When little kittens scratch, their claws need to be Cut of.„ She laughed and told the doctors to take him in. She tried to pull herself free, but those security guards knew how to hold someone down so they wouldn't move. After a while, the doctors arrived and at first they approached their employer, but she waved her hand and said.

„Deal with me later. First you need to remove the claws of this creature?„ she pointed at it.

„Then we need to take her to the infirmary, because it is a painful procedure.„ Said the Elven doctor, But Queen Ka shook her head.

„NO. You will do it here and now! Without anesthesia.”

„But it's barbaric.„ Said the doctor, but Queen Ka pulled out a short Knife and moved it to her face so that blood flowed.

„One more word and I'll gouge out your eyes and make you eat them. „ She drawled indistinctly, the doctor swallowed loudly. The guards straightened her left arm, and then the doctors started working. They pulled out their scalpels and started removing her claws. They didn't look at her, their hands were shaking. She felt terrible pain where it cut her body. When they finally finished mutilating her hand, they bandaged it and only then did they deal with their employer. They took her to another room, where she sat crouched for some time, clutching her injured hand. She cried in silence, alone, with no one to help her. Soon she was taken to a large garage and put into a vehicle. It was the first time she left the citadel. The windows were tinted so she couldn't see the world outside, but she still felt a strange mix of fear and excitement, despite the pain in her hand. She came to a large building that looked like a palace. There she went to the living room and waited for some time. It felt like hours were passing by. Maybe it was, she wasn't sure. Suddenly she heard screams and gunshots. She crouched in the corner of the room and extended her claws, ready to finally Fight for herself. Finally, a tall Pahtra entered , his body covered with scars and a he nasty expression on his face. When he approached her, she tried to hit him with her claws and hissed at him. He jumped away from her and looked at her curiously.. He finally said.

„You're coming with me, young one.„ he said in a hoarse voice.

„Why would I do that!„ She screamed, ready to fight, because she was fed up with everything. She wasn't afraid to die, just to end it all.

„First of all, I'm your uncle. Secondly, only I can give you freedom. Third, I just killed Queen Ka.„ He said and laughed darkly too. She thought about what he said for a moment before finally following him. Nothing that awaited her could be worse than what had already happened.

Chapter Notes

See the end of the chapter for notes

He was driving one of those anti-gravity vehicles that he designed himself so long ago... He hadn't sat at the controls of any of them for many years, but he hadn't forgotten how to drive them. He was born, or rather created, with the ability to drive a multitude of machines, ground , space and even submarines. However, he had to learn to manage it himself, although it was not particularly difficult. He created them so that anyone could learn to fly them. They were supposed to be easy to drive and at the same time durable and easy to maintain. In a word, they were supposed to be the pillar of his empire... Now, however, they have become the most popular means of transport in all of Etheria . Thanks to them, travel around the entire planet has been revolutionized. He had a right to be proud of that... Unlike many other things he had done to this place. He knew that the guilt would haunt him for the rest of his days, maybe even longer, if what the people of Icarus and Eridani said was true.

However, perhaps thanks to this expedition he will be able to at least a little atone for his sins. He wasn't entirely sure what its purpose was, except that it had something to do with the Magical Ruins that Shadow Weaver was about to search. They were supposed to find a place there so that they could find another place, thanks to which they would be able to find another place where the First Ones were hiding. And there was another sword involved in everything…. Why did everyone like to make powerful weapons look like swords? It was completely ridiculous and absurd. There were so many possibilities, for example you could create a giant droid , a tank or a giant spaceship, something that is dangerous in itself, instead of enclosing such great power in an oversized knife. He knew that the swords are important for many inhabitants of Etheria, and even the entire galaxy from what he had heard. The inhabitants of Eridani worshiped some warrior woman with a great sword, Entrapta told him that some warrior woman brought by that admiral also proudly carried some strange sword... He didn't understand what it was about, and he didn't want to find it out. Worse still, he hated magic, and now he had to travel with three sorcerers, two of them who had reason to hate him and either his former right-hand or a sorceress whose stupidity and incompetence were astonishing. They were supposed to investigate the ruins of a magical college, but honestly, he didn't understand why his participation in this expedition was needed. He suspected that he was supposed to ensure the safety of the others. There was nothing strange about it, after all, he was a born warrior. After Entrapta's treatment , he physically towered over most of Etheria's inhabitants , and probably many of his brothers as well. After all, he was much more experienced than them and had learned to cope despite his weaknesses and even draw strength from themHis wife created him a new suit of power armor, which he took to the wedding just in case. Only Entrapta didn't see it as strange. They designed it together as you practice the best inventions. It was resistant and made him stronger than any of the Scorpions, and it had many special functions that made him prepared for any conditions, for anything that might come his way. Of course, even in everyday life he needed such armor. The last five years spent on Beast Island, the most dangerous place on the planet, it also made him stronger. He had to protect his wife and then his child. He knew this place better than anyone in all of Etheria ... Almost anyone.

He glanced sideways at the former king consort standing next to him. This man spent twelve years on the Beast Island... Alone, deprived of any support, or even any hope that someone would get him out of there. Nobody even knew he was alive.. Where he was sure where this rumor came from. He never claimed that Mikah died in battle at the hands of his soldiers. Of course, being sent to the Beast Insland, especially at that time, was tantamount to a death sentence... He never admitted it to himself, but it was the truth. He convinced himself that these were all scientific expeditions aimed at discovering the secrets of the First Ones. He and Shadow Weaver had only been there once and they barely made it out alive. The island wanted to absorb them, devour them... He wondered if what they had done, what people they were then, had made them more susceptible to the cursed signal. However, he could not deny that what he saw there made a huge impression on him Back then, he didn't know what power was hidden in the First Ones' technology, but he suspected that Shadow Weaver understood it perfectly. At first they wanted to send fully equipped research teams there, but when most of them didn't come back, and those who did came back with terrible stories, they stopped wasting men and equipment and started sending prisoners and disobedient citizens there... He could fool himself that all of them they have a chance to survive, but the truth was that he sentenced hundreds of people to death. He never found any bodies. He hoped that the local fauna had eaten the unfortunate people, or rather their corpses. Because the thought of them staying there, consumed by the island, forever trapped in their despair, was unbearable...

And this man survived there despite the fact that he should have given up all hope and succumbed to this terrible desire to give up and become a part of this place" He himself, ironically, was saved by his devotion to Horde Prime. What saved Shadow Weaver had no idea. After all, this woman never believed in any values... Was it her own pride and arrogance that saved her?

„I'm not happy that I have to travel with you either...„ Mikach said with undisguised reluctance in his voice. He sighed and said.

„I don't feel any dislike towards you... I guess this is our first conversation... I don't know you, even when we were enemies during the rebellion, I knew almost nothing about you. „ he drawled in a gloomy voice. The sorcerer looked at him in surprise.

„You weren't interested in who the enemy commanders were?„ he asked in disbelief,

„We clones could barely see our own individuality, let alone our enemies. Besides, Horde Prime didn't think it was important for us to understand things like politics or psychology. Honestly, he didn't fully understand it himself But he didn't have to worry about such things either. He had such power that he did not have to pay attention to any political arrangements. As far as I know, he simply murdered the leaders of the conquered worlds. You know something about it yourself. This almost happened to your daughter too. It was actually Catra who saved her when she came aboard the Velvet Glove. She was the one who stood up for her before Horde Prime . I saw it myself.„ he explained calmly, in a slightly thoughtful voice. The King Consort bowed his head, staring blankly ahead.

„Glimmer told me about it right after the war, but Catra didn't want to dwell on it. Why are you telling me this? I know you don't like her, and it's mutual... „ He could hear the surprise in his voice.

„Because I see no reason to lie or hide the truth. I don't want to flatter you, I don't care what you think about me. Anyway, a few words won't change that. I will forever remain who I was for you. The invader, the One who brought war to your peaceful planet.„ He turned and continued to stare at the road ahead of them. They were on the golden grass plain surrounding the Whispering Forest. It was beautiful here, the moonlight reflected on the waving sea of grass. Beast Island was also beautiful in its own way, but this was something different. At that moment he regretted his imprisonment because he couldn't enjoy such sights, but it was good. After all, this was supposed to be a punishment for what he had done to the inhabitants of this world. So far, His punishment has hardly bothered him . It was much more burdensome for his wife, who was self-imprisoned with him on this cursed island. But now he understood how much he had lost by living a semi-hermit existence.

„And I still think we should teleport there. „ The woman in the back of the vehicle muttered.

„It would be difficult to move the three of us, and besides, I decided that we needed some supplies for a longer journey. We also don't know yet whether Ireanis or Shadow weaver will join us. I gave this strange sorceress Saihe My ring, in which I enchanted a bit of my magic. To be honest, I don't like it very much, but it's the only way they can easily track us down. Besides, even if transport everything magically, I don't know if I would be too exhausted. I haven't done this for many years. Since the war and that battle."

The king consort's sister nodded.

„ I remember, you brought yourself and the Star sisters back then. Halo and Pulsar… Yours were so powerful. But she still beat you... „ Castaspella said, and then she reflected. „ I'm sorry, I shouldn't bring up such dark memories.„ she looked down.

„Nothing happened, sister. I've come to terms with all this a long time ago... It would be easier, of course, if she was still dead... But Angela is alive... My wife. It's hard for me to describe how much I miss her. How I'm happy and at the same time afraid of meeting her."

His sister smiled understandingly.

„That's how I felt when Horde Prime chipped you . I was afraid of how much you had changed, that he would see and I would have to hurt you. Or worse, you'll hurt Glimmer."

Mikah smiled sadly.

„I remembered you , but my memory was distorted. And believe me, I came close to hurting her... Or you."

There was silence. He guessed that the siblings were remembering those difficult times and that they were both wondering how much the former queen had changed. To distract them from their journey and pointless thoughts, he decided to change the subject.

„What do you think about Lord Admiral Castaspella? Out of all of us, you know him best.”

The Head Sorceress hesitated before answering.

„He seemed to be a good person. I must admit that I don't know anything about such matters, but even I was impressed. He was strong, confident, well-mannered but seemed to be honest. The way he treated Catra... He truly treated her like a daughter... I still have a hard time believing he's the monster Shadow Weaver describes him to be. Despite everything, I'm not sure whether she doesn't want to deceive us all again and slander the father of her former ward and at least hurt her in this way.” She clenched her fists angrily, but her brother shook his head.

„Shadow Weaver She never lied without a reason... In fact, she very rarely lied. She always preferred to distort the truth and bend it to her own goals... That was the case with Adora ... Shadow Weaver truly believed that Adora was special and she sincerely loved this uniqueness. Both Adora and Catra told me a lot about their childhood... „ Mikach said and looked at her with accusation in his eyes. He looked down

„I always believed I was a failure, and in fact I was right, just not for the reason I always thought. I am a failure not because I didn't meet Horde Prime's expectations , because no one did, but because of what I did. Because of the lives I have ruined, the suffering I have caused, the tears I have shed. What happened to Adora and Catra , you, your wife and many inhabitants of this world burdens my conscience and I know well that nothing I do will compensate for it. I am a moral failure.”

There was silence again and they rode forward for some time until finally the queen's husband spoke.

„ Don't expect that your words will move me and that I will start looking at you differently than before. You were a dictator and a conqueror. You were happy about it. Don't deny it!„ Mikach He looked at him with contempt.

„I don't except your forgiveness. I know who I am and what I have done. I'll have to live with it. What do you think about the other case she talked about? About the First Ones.

Mikach thought before answering.

„I am a sorcerer and therefore I will always live a little in the past. I have never been so interested in ancient civilization. My wife knew about these matters, start more now. Sometimes I wonder how much and if she was hiding something from everyone. She ruled Brightmoon for five hundred years. Her power was the Moonstone... But I had a war I had to fight on behalf of her and all of us. Back then, no one expected us that the First Ones would be involved in all this. Then I saw what the Heart is capable of... Let's not be delusional. They are still out there somewhere. They wanted to destroy half of the universe once, and it is rather certain that they will do it again. So even though I hate you, I will travel with you, fight by your side, protect you if necessary... It's all to save your loved ones. I hope I can expect the same from you. „ he looked at him expectantly. He nodded and said.

„I have a family and you probably believe me that I love them. So you really have no reason to worry, I will do everything I can to save her, just like you. „ And he steered the vehicle towards the Valley Of Shattered Armor.

Lady Sorrowflame was ready to go. Although she did not have to use this type of machines, she boarded a twin-engine flying vehicle used by the air cavalry. It was fast, had the ability to take off and land vertically, had a load capacity of thirteen tons, was well armed, but the most important thing was that no moonlight reached its interior. Despite all the precautions she had taken, it still caused her discomfort and could prove dangerous in a critical situation. She was pleased with the turn of events. The Lord Admiral allowed her to stay on this planet so that she could continue her research. This place was fascinating. it held so many secrets that the life of an ordinary mortal would not be enough to discover them all... Fortunately, she was not a mortal being... On the other hand, she suspected that her time was also limited. In the old days, her existential condition would have made it difficult for her to work, but fortunately, technology enabled her to travel, regardless of the time, both day and night, and she didn't have to waste half of her unlife dozing off in a coffin. This place, this Xadia, was interesting in itself. A crossbreeding between a dragon and an elf, for those were the beings known here as Saihe , was not difficult. In some ways, dragons interbreed surprisingly easily with the other species. But creating a stable hybrid was something much more difficult. if, in fact, an entire subspecies of dragon-elves was created there, it would be worth investigating them... she had not had contact with her own species, or rather with her original species, for many years. Being dead obviously separated her from her kin, and she was a bloodsucker, as she was often called by those who wanted to dress long and painfully. She could transform others. which was perfectly proven by a certain clone that was one of her research subjects and that she planned to use to benefit the Lord Admiral's cause, But this type of creature you could never fully develop. She had tried this many times over the course of her incredibly long life, and had never succeeded in creating anything more than a miserable minion who was only capable of doing her bidding. She has tried to transform the Other Dragon several times , but it is very difficult. Most dragons would fight to the death rather than allow themselves to be transformed into such a creature, and even if they did, it was difficult to control, preferring to risk a second death rather than bend their necks to their new master. Its Creator himself found this out many centuries ago. He was destroyed by her, but unfortunately that didn't mean much now, because Dahak had also abandoned her. However, such hybrids could be an interesting alternative... The fact that they were the works of the ancient and powerful civilizations also made them valuable. Although these creatures were not her primary interest, the mysteries of the body had always fascinated her, and by dissecting both living and dead members of this species, you could learn a lot. However, they were not the main reason why she wanted to find this planet. There was a Star Elf Who was older than the destruction of the First One’s Empire... If he was still alive and if he had not been affected by the Gap, he probably remembered everything that happened. Perhaps he would answer her questions about what happened to the old Golarion ... Why she had to lose her memories and, most importantly, who murdered her God.

They flew for several hours, and Lady Ka, sitting next to her, sat in her seat without even fastening her seat belt. Sometimes she wondered why living beings cared so little about themselves... They didn't respect the short life they were given... She liked this woman and she was very useful, so she got up and fastened her seat belt herself. The Lord Admiral's left better hand didn't even wake up, apparently the painkillers were still working. Then she turned and looked around the deck out of boredom. Her eyes fell on the Antares mirror, one of the four he had. They were extremely valuable, which is why it's even more unfortunate that two of them were lost, or rather they were in the possession of this runaway aristocrat, although she assumed that this state of affairs would not last for long... Sooner or later they will get her, If Anttares' daughter doesn't do it, the two of them will… They will probably do this while taking over the younger feline hybrid. although she was increasingly wondering whether it would be better not to establish at least temporary cooperation with them. Lady Ka was very much in favor of this solution and maybe she will listen to it, she hasn't decided yet.

As she looked at the mirror like that, a thought must have occurred to her. What if it was one of his mirrors? The manuscript states that many mirrors were Created by Aaravos... But she had rejected that thought so far. It was not created by this elf or any other. They were created by the Krellans, another ancient Race, extremely mysterious. Little was known about them, mainly that they were masters of Energy manipulation. Their disappearance was associated with large-scale destruction of large parts of the galaxy, although this was quite common in the case of falling empires. They were like a big tree that, when it fell, pulled others down, but also created space for others to grow. She was one of the few beings in the galaxy who was able to observe this phenomenon in person. Unfortunately, her memory was taken away, like most beings in the galaxy. Most, but not all, oh no! The inhabitants of this planet were the best proof of this.

She walked over to the mirror and touched it with her fingertips. She felt them sticking slightly, as if something was sucking them in. She had the impression that all she had to do was press her fingers harder and they would penetrate to the other side. The silvery surface radiated coolness. It wasn't too painful for her , after all, her body itself was as cold as, well, a corpse's. Living creatures, however, must have felt it much more intensely, as if they were touching ice pulled out from the very heart of winter... They used this mirror to communicate over long distances without the risk of being overheard... But it is unlikely that this was its main use, or at least its only use. This item also held secrets. She had been examining it for many years but had not discovered its secrets. For decades it has been unsuccessful in this field... But now she realized that she had found a clue... She had heard rumors and stories about Etharia... About the First Ones constructed the Heart of Etheria here… which absorbed the magic permeating the planet to power an incredibly powerful weapon... Capable of destroying worlds. What almost no one here knew was the fact that Etheria had the Second Starstone. Absalom Station drew its energy using only a fraction of the artifact's power. It also allowed them to navigate through space , thus uniting the galaxy... The First One’s, however, simply used it as a weapon, which did not reflect well on them... but now she saw the similarity in the operation of the mirror and the heart... Could it be that the colonizers of Etheria had once cooperated with the Krellans... Which was an interesting thought, one of many that were running through her head. She felt like there was some secret hiding at the edge of her vision. She felt that all she had to do was look around a little better and discover it. For someone as Old as she was, it was an extremely irritating experience. She needs to find out more about this. This, however, took time, and she had to divide her time between her research and the attempt to free the Lord Admiral's Daughter. Unfortunately, she was the only person on her expedition sufficiently knowledgeable on this matter. It was frustrating, but where could she get support? Then her eyes fell on the mirror and an idea occurred to her... She smiled, baring her long black fangs.

„It was all a complete failure.” Glimmer said in an exhausted voice. She hadn't seen her this tired since the end of the war. She herself felt great. And that was what scared her the most. She shouldn't feel this good. She came close to death twice, but she was fresh and rested. She was just terribly cold, but she had been cold more than once in this life. After all, she was an Ice Princess, Frosta from the Kingdom of Snow. This was nothing new to her... Except that there was no way she could keep warm. She didn't talk to anyone about it yet, she didn't want to worry the others even more. She just took a sweater, one of those that Aunt Casta made for her, and as if nothing had happened, she drank tea with butter.

„What losses did we actually suffer?„ Mermiasta asked . Seahawk arrived as soon as he heard that there was a fight going on in the castle, but he didn't have time to take part in it. Now he stood by his wife as if he was afraid that she would be the target of the next attack.

“Fifteen guards, including Brother Blade.„ Said the general Juliet in a gloomy tone. Glimmer sucked in a sharp breath.

„We haven't lost that many since the war.„ She said with horror in her voice.

"We haven't lost anyone since the war , but the Brightmoon guard has lost more than twenty members in the last two days. I had never suffered such heavy losses, certainly not since the battle in the Valley of Shattered Armor.„ Said the general in a hard voice. She saw that the woman was furious and hungry for revenge.

„We will deal with recruitment later. Regular troops will suffice. We can hire temporary guards to guard the castle. Many people from Icarus came to the wedding and some of them have military experience.„ Catra said, crossing her arms over her chest.

„This is not the time for us to hire mercenaries, certainly not for such an important and prestigious formation.„ General Juliet growled. Catra scowled at her.

„I know you take it personally, but believe me, we take it that way tooI helped train most of those who died, so I feel responsible for that too„ said the Great Marshal, trying to sound calm. The Saihe woman snorted.

„Everyone knows how you treated your subordinates when you were Hordak's right hand! This is why this rebellion broke out."

Catra bristled at the accusations. She knew her friend wasn't proud of what she did when she served in the Horde.

„Listen, it's time for you all to accuse each other." Mermista said in a tired voice. „ If you want to find the culprits, they are the Aristocrat and that terrible woman. „ she looked at the others, who also calmed down a bit.

„This doesn't change much in our plans. And so we were supposed to send troops to Dryl." Catra said.

„But we don't know if they're really there.„ Mermista said carefully , but Glimmer added.

„But we have no other leads, and anyway, first of all, we have to free the empress. Her Kidnapping was the greatest success of The Comrade General. Shadow Weaver and Lady Cala are undoubtedly very dangerous, but once we free the Hostages, she will have more room to maneuver."

„So we should let this woman who hurt my daughter be free! The Woman, who almost killed her! „ General Juliet said through clenched teeth. Then Scorpia, who had been silent during this entire discussion, spoke up.

„Your daughter stabbed my wife with a blade! She wanted to help her and... She wouldn't have survived if it weren't for Adora... „ the muscular woman spoke with an anger she had never heard from her. However, there were tears of pain in her eyes. She felt very sorry for what happened to the Flower Princess. She didn't understand why that girl did this to her... Perfuma was nice to everyone and hated violence, although she could defend herself when necessary. She hardly knew Klementine, but over the years she had managed to get to know and she like General Juliet. She commanded an army throughout the war and was brave and determined to protect the Queen. For some reason she didn't like Catra, though she didn't understand why. She couldn't believe that the other girl would do something so terrible on her own. It must have been some great and evil magic. She couldn't find any other explanation.

„My daughter is the victim here! How dare you accuse her of anything! „ The general shouted, all red with rage.

„Everything indicates that your daughter helped murder the guards guarding Lady Cala ... She was the last person to visit this... being.„ Glimmer said slowly, rubbing her bandaged arm. She hadn't seen that the queen had been hurt before.

„My daughter would never do something like that! She was mad at me for that. that... well, that I'm trying to arrange my life after the death of the second Mother.„ Saihe woman said in a slightly calmer voice.

„It's even good that people sometimes do very bad things. „ Adora said suddenly, staring sadly ahead. She hadn't said much so far, she was as exhausted as everyone else, even more so than the rest. She heard that she had performed a miracle and resurrected that girl.

The general looked at the Princess Of Power and smiled darkly.

„Yes, you know well that some people do bad things more often than not.”

Adora stood up and Catra perked up.

„You shouldn't say things like that, not right now.” Glimmer said, but the Queen smiled bitterly at her.

„And when will be the right opportunity to tell the truth?! Even if my daughter did something wrong, it was only because she was unaware and manipulated! As you saw, she fell in love with this woman. She was just innocent and naive.”

„But she was the one who brought Lady Cala here ... It was also thanks to her that we trusted her. „ Adora said, looking at the General, and Scorpia added.

„ I can't believe she didn't know who she was. Maybe I'm not the brightest person under the moon, and sometimes I'm thoughtlessly naive... But even I would notice something like that... After all, she invited her to your house...”

„That's true. Lady Cala is not like us. She always looked at everyone from above, from behind with a gentle and inscrutable smile. She came here from afar, and from what I heard she tried to kill some of her companions before she came to your court. From the very beginning she gave the impression of someone suspicious, unnaturally alien. I know it sounds wrong and doesn't fit our ways, but she was too... perfect?”

„And that smell. You didn't feel it I thought it was some strange prejudice and I flaunted it to everyone, but now I understand that if she had been more decisive and more insightful, maybe all this could have been avoided.„ said the feline woman, smiling darkly. The general sighed and said

„So you've already found the culprit, right ? My daughter is still catatonic, she doesn't talk to anyone... But you make her a perpetrator equal to your mother. “ She looked at Adora and Catra and smiled bitterly. „Well, you are heroes now... How easy it is to forgive your friends' past sins... „ Her gaze fell on Catra . „However, I have not forgotten the war and what some people did during that time.„ then she looked at Glimmer and said slowly, through pursed lips. „So far, I have agreed to everything, even though my heart was against what you did, Queen! I remained silent, even though I knew you were pushing kingdoms into the abyss. You've already given us into the enemy's hands once... And maybe we're still stuck there.” She shot a look at Catra. „You started this meeting by talking about failure. And you were right. This is all a failure! You are a failure, as is your entire rule. In these few years, you have ruined everything that yours has fought for over the decades. It's a good thing she 's dead, because she would cry over the fate of our kingdom. „ said the General in a very calm voice. Glimmer looked like someone had punched her in the face. She knew that she suffered a lot because of what Nightgale had done , and now General Juliet's words ... They hurt as much as a knife stuck in the stomach.

„Juliet ... I am taking away all your titles, privileges and positions. From now on you will be an ordinary citizen of Etheria . „ Glimmer said. The general nodded and walked stiffly out of the meeting room. As the Saihe woman left, the queen hid her face in her hands.

„I hate all this more and more...” she said and her husband hugged her

Alliances

Chapter Notes

Lonnie watched the Shadows of Tarak from her castle walls and felt that this was not what she wanted when she brought the rebellion into existence. She didn't want to bring here alien mercenaries from distant parts of the Galaxy... She didn't want to command someone for whom war is the meaning of existence. They fought for freedom, or actually they didn't even fight until recently. Yes, they were a thorn in Glimmer's side, they were a nuisance to her, but they weren't really hurting anyone... Until recently. Kyle was right. They could have reached an agreement with the queen, Entrapta didn't care about her castle anyway, and the inhabitants of Dryl gave power over this place. During the last mission she realized that the other inhabitants of Etheria, let alone the galaxy, did not care about her fighting. She was a pawn, someone who stuck her neck out for others to realize their true intentions... And that didn't just apply to her allies on the planet. For someone like the Lord Admiral, she was just a minor annoyance that he didn't even have to deal with personally. But now it had become more than just a nuisance She kidnapped the empress, perhaps permanently squandering the opportunity to form an alliance of Etheri and the planets once occupied by the Horde. Glimmer now will have to take appropriate action against them... She must free the Empress. Not only because law forbade kidnapping people, but also because she will completely lose her authority. Ironically, she got what she always wanted. She undermined the princesses' right to rule over Etheria . Except she did it at the worst possible time. The Lord Admiral and the Others will use her actions for their own purposes. Now it will be more difficult for Glimmer to resist the influence of extraplanetary forces when she cannot cope with the rebellion on his own planet. Even though she fought so hard for Etheria's independence, she herself pushed her into the hands of foreign forces. Besides, who were her allies if not foreigners or opportunists. They all, the Chancellor, Midnight Mask and even Halo did not care about the well-being of the inhabitants of her planet, only about their own interests. The Mi-Go terrified even someone raised in the barracks of Fright Zone, and the Shadows of Tarak only really served the sister of women she hated so much. On the other hand, did she really have a reason to hate Catra? She touched the scar on her face. It's true, Hordak's former right-hand girl brought out the worst in them, but it was the same thing she did to herself. But she knew when to choose the better path. During the occupation, they hid in the Wastes, while she faced the invader. She may have done it, at least partly, for selfish reasons. but she still risked her life in the fight against the occupier. She wondered why she really hated her so much. I think it started when Catra attacked her while she was talking to Adora. Now she understood that it was because of jealousy. before, she had only seen it as the cat girl's malice. Perhaps they would have been able to come to an agreement before, but now…

She looked at the courtyard where the Shadows were inspecting their equipment, tidying up the camp, and going about their business. They seemed menacing, but also equally surprised. They did not expect that they would fight together with former cadets who had been trained to fight since childhood. Whatever you say about Shadow Weaver and Hordak, they have given them enough training to make an impact on these veterans. She didn't say what Itel told them, probably almost nothing, apart from sending the invitation. She wasn't sure what they expected. She had the impression that they expected some Forgotten planet inhabited by pink creatures who don't know what fighting is, or a wild place where barbarians with clubs live and the sight of a flashlight makes them fall to their knees. They even took reflective key chains for trade. Now he sees a few boxes standing somewhere on the side, completely useless… Perhaps if they handed them out to children, a few of them would smile, but not before they would run away screaming when they saw the Shadows coming towards them. Hell, she would attack them herself if she suddenly saw them coming towards her from among the bushes, not knowing whose side they were on. Most were older than them, often covered in scars, with body parts replaced by cybernetic prosthetics. She had seen such inventions in the Crimson Wastes, usually brought by prosthetists from Icarus, but not in this quantity. She had the impression that many of them had deprived themselves of healthy body parts to replace them with implants. Were they willing to sacrifice so much to become better soldiers? They had been fighting for several dozen years for the cause that warmed their hearts. From what she understood, many didn't even remember the war their commander and Lord Admiral had fought in... Such Fierceness terrified her, not only because fighting for so long would have taken a soul out, but also because she feared that she herself was on the best path. to become like them. Currently. as she looked from the walls at both groups looking at each other warily, she realized that for the first time in years she was beginning to think about peace. She finally realized that this War couldn't last forever. That she had to make peace, and not only because, in fact, she couldn't win against the inhabitants of the entire planet, but also because she couldn't let the same thing happen to her people as to these mercenaries. She couldn't let the war become their reason for existence. She did n't want them to become like those soldiers. After all, that's why they deserted from the Fright Zone... To escape from war and fighting. So why did she drag them into another fight? Now she remembered captain Bina words about how she simply couldn't live any other way. She still tried to live the way she had been taught, even though she could have chosen any path. Was she too afraid of change? She didn't know how to answer that. The biggest problem was that she couldn't back out so easily now. They would get along with Glimmer and Catra somehow, they didn't really want this war either, they would probably agree to some kind of settlement. But not their allies from outside the empire… Nor her allies from Etheri. Not to mention the Shadows, whose leader swore war on the Lord Admiral and continued to wage war for over thirty years. She even wondered if the other cat girl didn't drag her into a fight with her uncle as punishment for what happened during the wedding. Although no, Eti wasn't calculating or cunning. In fact, she seemed like one of the most sincere people she had ever met. In this she was very reminiscent of Entrapta or Scorpia. She spoke the truth, or what she believed to be the truth, even if it might get her in trouble, hurt someone, or make no sense. But regardless of her doubts, she had to do something about it all. So she sighed and went downstairs. Her own people saluted her, But the Shadows only nodded in greeting. It was still more than what she had hoped for. But it was some sign of respect, even minimal. Some of her subordinates were already starting to approach the new guests in Crypto's castle . The tall cat persons were the friendliest, much nicer than their commander, who belonged to the same people. There were also ordinary humans like her, most of whom served as support. The support was usually, but not always, short, hairy creatures with six arms. Their desire to help was tiring, but they all had the kindness and friendly attitude typical of the inhabitants of Etheria, so they agreed for that. If more of these creatures ever came to the planet, they would become a real nuisance to all beings. living here. When she thought about it, she felt a strange, malicious joy. There were also several short and muscular beings, whose men all wore beards and the women in braids. One of them, his name was Virsek, was Igzar's second in command. He wore heavy armor in which he appeared to be twice his normal size and was roasting some sausages with a strange self-propelled Grill. So she approached him, he waved at her and said.

„Good to see you Comrade General! Do you want a sausage? They are really very good! I think they even contain meat.„ He waved a sausage in her face, it smelled really appetizing.

„Maybe later? For now, I'd like to talk about your commander. How is Igzar's health ? „ She asked carefully, unsure how the deputy would react to the question about his commander. Virsek Waved his hand and said.

„For now, he's sulking and lying on his bunk, but his pride is hurt more than his body. It must be admitted that the girl arranged it well. I only heard about her, but I never expected that she was even scarier than her uncle, although on the other hand the black cat has recently become more snappy than dangerous. „ He laughed and knocked over one of the sausages.

„Eti is just weird. I wish you had met her Sister. Catra has almost conquered this world, and believe me, there's only one person better at fighting than her, her wife, although Catra was always much more cunny.” She answered

„Oh yes, that second girl. Well I knew their mother. After all, she was very dangerous, but also absolutely unpredictable. She was also not interested in strategy or politics. Sometimes I have the impression that she fought for the sake of fighting, and she didn't care who she fought for or why.„ Suddenly Virsek hesitated. „This is the older one, right? Well, of course the older one, which Another girl she could be!” He laughed, and she had the strange feeling that something very important was being said here, but she wasn't sure what.

”Listen, tell your boss that Captain Moonshadow will be arriving soon and it would be nice if he was there in relatively good condition. „ she said, trying to sound authoritative and professional, which was not easy when the other person was baking sausages. If only they didn't smell so wonderful.

„Maybe you can give one, you know, for the road.„ She asked and Virsek gave her a dark sausage.

„What is it made of?„ She asked, looking at the black pudding suspiciously.

„Made from groats, blood and liver.„ he said, smiling broadly and she hesitated. But then she accepted the sausage, after all, they had eaten much weirder and worse things.

Now she had to find one person. It took her an astonishingly long time, though maybe she shouldn't have been surprised, after all, like her sister, Eti was great at hiding when she wanted to. Hinges aimlessly wandering around the castle, she asked her friend, This strange, muscular red-haired girl. Her name was probably Lilka. She found her when she and the strange clone and his bot, were inspecting the supplies brought by her new allies. The girl liked to cook with this clone. She told her that Eti and Rosie went up to one of the towers and there they were on a date together or something. She nodded and went where she was told.

„You know, if you think about it, you can build a quite nice house here, plant flowers in the garden, buy a kennel for the Basilisk. In one word, set up a family warren.„ She said with absolute seriousness, making a semicircle with her metal hand. Rosie stood next to her, resting her head on her shoulder. They were staring at the plateaus stretching around Castle Crypto . She felt a bit better now, beating her uncle allowed her to release some of the anger that was in her heart. She knew that what she did would have serious consequences, Igzar would not forget it, but it was still better than letting him put them in corners This bastard was ruthless and hated opposition, so she had to show him how things were now She was one of the few people who knew that the old cat was alive, but she wasn't sure if he would come here in person.. Despite all his hatred towards the Lord Admiral, he was an extremely cautious Individual, and always tried to be more cunning than the Others. Of course, it also tied up his hands. In these last five years, no one has heard of him. He did not achieve any success, and this meant defeat for the warrior. That's why she knew that when she beat him and gave Scar command, his soldiers would not protest. Now they will be curious about what will come of it all. She knew one thing, that Scar was also fighting for a cause, although she wasn't sure what it was, but probably Comrade General didn't really know either.

Rosie looked around as well, giving her a dubious look.

„I have a few questions... First of all, I don't really like the idea of building a house in the mountains, where it's constantly stormy. Secondly, nothing will grow on these rocks. Third, I'm not sure keeping a basilisk in a kennel is a good idea. Fourthly, I know you don't like birds, but the term family nest sounds better than warren and fifthly and most importantly... Why do you sound like you want to talk to me about starting a family... I don't want to sound bad, but we have been together since the day before yesterday? she asked. sign language, excluding gloves.

„You know, it's a matter of point of view, for example, such mayflies live one day and for such a relationship lasting a day and a half is real Eons!”

„Are you comparing me to a mayfly?„ her girlfriend She looked at her always with her arms on her chest. She made an offended face, but there was no anger in her eyes.

„You know, we are all part of one great web of life. So in a way you're a bit of a mayfly too.”

Rosie laughed in her strange way of whistling lightly. Then she said.

„You're playing such a fool again! You know, I have to get mad at you for something like that someday. But not yet, it's too early for the first quarrel.„ The white-haired girl hugged her, and she carefully responded with the same hug.

„I think I'm in love for the first time. But did you have any other girlfriends, apart from Itel, of course? Because I know you were together.„ Rosie asked. She hesitated before answering.

„It's not like that. I'm just not always good at showing friendship, and I thought that if I went to bed with her, she would be happy. I think I made everything worse. As for the others, there were several girls. For example, the daughter of Doctor Sidonius . Her name is Sari and she is very pretty.”

Rosie tilted her head and asked.

„Should I be jealous?”

She considered her answer.

„Well, I guess not, she's not here now, so you can't be jealous.„ she said, trying to answer carefully.

„It's not an answer! If she came here, how should I feel? and what does she look like?„ her girlfriend seemed a little irritated now, so she should probably calm down somehow.

„She has long black hair, shiny like obsidian in moonlight. Big dark green eyes and perfect facial features like those of a half-elf. A Since she is half a vampire, she has very nice white skin and perfectly straight teeth, apart from the fangs, of course.”

Rosie took a ride and dramatically turned to her. I guess she got angry? After all, she was honest with her... She guesswd that's what a relationship was all about?

„If I didn't know you, I should be angry. But doesn't it bother you that her father is a vampire…” her girlfriend seemed unsure „Being a vampire is the least of his crimes... He sent my sister here..... But it was also thanks to him that I was able to fly here.Of course, he didn't do it out of good heart... He wanted us to find a certain virus. It is supposed to heal Captain Blazebringer, because he has the Arsenal of End of Time... But I don't think he would use it anyway. This is what Itel dreamed of, but I don't know why he would keep his promise... „ She tried to explain her friend's plan, and Rosie looked at her in amazement, then embraced her and kissed her.

„I love you for this weirdness, you know?„ She said after the Kiss. They stood hugged each other for a moment, and then Scar's voice rang out behind them.

„I don't think I'm interrupting anything, right? „ said the woman, smiling shyly. They pulled away from each other and, tilting her Head to the side, she answered.

„Not now, but you know, it might be different in the evening. If you're interested, we're not planning threesomes”

Scar opened her mouth in surprise and said.

„I didn't think about something like that, not with you anyway… What am I talking about now? I just wanted to tell you that Captain Moonshadow will be arriving soon... And it's probably a good thing if you were present, your uncle and your captain have already been notified.”

She nodded and kissed Rosie, then followed Comrade General. As they were walking, Scar suddenly asked.

„You know, Eti, I was wondering. One of your uncle's subordinates said something like this... And I would like to ask... There are no more like you... You, Catra, I mean.„ the dark”skinned woman smiled uncertainly at it.

The question brought back memories, memories she would rather forget. Because she was afraid of them. She curled into herself, hunched, and flattened her ears.

„Yes, there were two more of us, a long time ago. But they are gone. Only one was needed. That's all!„ Her voice was so cold and sharp at the same time that Comrade General did not press ...Only Rosie looked at her with compassion, so she embraced her and together they went to the landing pad.

Captain Moonshadow got out of the shuttle, looking around carefully. First officer Tonado jumped in front of her, his jump was daring, it must be admitted, and he was on the lookout for an ambush. Apart from her, there were also Boatswain Kaert and Second Officer Gydwa on board. They both looked like they didn't really want to find each other. Kaert was mainly suffering from a hangover, he drank a lot while celebrating their successful robbery. And Veska was grumpy as always. She looked at the castle, whose walls, almost reaching Storm swirling in the sky, rose in the distance, and felt something. As if a memory was emerging in her head. She visited here quite often, but she had the impression that the last time she visited this place was many years ago, in relation with some very important event. It was something sad, she remembered, with some people being mad at her for something. It was related to her previous visits, during which she proposed something to a certain couple... The proposal concerned something extremely important. One of the people had long purple hair, and the other was extremely petite, barely reaching her waist. She felt guilty about that event, although she actually had no idea what had happened. She only knew that she was responsible for it, and that she didn't tell anyone about it... But there were also other secrets related to this castle... She couldn't remember them now... These memories were like stars in the sky... Seemingly within reach, but at the same time far away. She shook her head, because such thoughts made no sense now anyway.

She saw that several people had come out to get her, better today this whole dark-skinned woman with a strange adamantine staf in her hand, who was looking at her uncertainly. Apart from her, Bina was also there , smiling halfheartedly. Eti and Rosie stood next to each other and the white”haired girl held her hand. The person she didn't expect was the grim Pahtra. He was tall, had black fur and was covered with scars. One of his hands was bandaged and the other cybernetic was clearly damaged. He looked familiar to her, so she thought for a moment and finally understood. This was Igzar, leader of the Shadows of Tarak. From what she had heard, he should have been dead by now, but apparently the rumors about his fate were exaggerated.

However, before she could greet anyone, a small figure in a heavy bionic suit jumped at her.

„It's great that you're already captain!„ Tirin hugged her tightly. She smiled back at the girl and set her down on the ground.

„Did they treat you well here?„ She asked, looking at the rest with a somewhat feigned menacing look, and Eti answered.

„We didn't eat her, although it would be difficult. I guess she would have to be baked like a crab and removed from the shell. Terribly not practical, because she is very skinny, and there wouldn't even be enough meat for one meal.”

Everyone looked at the cat-like girl who seemed to be saying all this with a dead seriousness. Finally, Bina cleared her throat and then spoke.

„Good to see you, Captain Moonshadow... Queen Angela? Where I'm sure what I should call you now. This scary one here is Igzar ...„ said the captain-clone

„Yes, I know who he is. You can be very useful here, Igzar.„ She interrupted the burgundy-haired woman.

„Does that mean she's a fucking queen?„ Menancing Pahtra asked angrily , but Eti gave him a very cold look.

„Your opinion, uncle, is of little importance here now. Remember whether you do this for work.” There was a hardness in the cat-like girl's voice that didn't suit her at all.

„Anyway, we have a lot of things to discuss, the situation has become more complicated, as you can probably see, and we have to find a way to get out of it all, and also get Catra out of her father's clutches.„ Bina said.

„Talk without me, I want to rest a bit. Itel and Scar will take care of everything.„ added Eti

She nodded in response, and followed the others to the council room.

Bina, probably of all those present in the room, felt the most comfortable in the place where they conferred. She was short, low ceilings didn't bother her , and she was used to this type of environment. Atrax was an industrial nightmare, cramped in a building decorated with Gothic ornaments and gargoyles, But she liked this place. She grew up among the shadows and narrow streets of her home planet, which created a real maze, although not like those in that a castle, it must be admitted that its owners, or perhaps rather builders, must have had a very strange idea of functional space. As she got to know their last heiress, the architecture of this building reflected very well how they thought. Worse is that this Lonnie insisted on playing army. She wasn't surprised that her kids liked it. Itel had always admired Igzar and this kind of people for their discipline and organization. She always tried to learn from something, and here she met an army led by a girl of her age. A girl who had similar experiences to her, or at least that's what the elf thought. Bina, however, felt as if she had let them down... She wanted them to find peace and start living a normal life, especially Eti. But dammed Shadow Weaver sent them here herself, probably to make it easier for her to control them. From what she had heard about her, she had the need to control everything and everyone. In this, she reminded her of her father. He also treated his daughters not as persons, but as unruly parts of his own body. In fact, she wondered if he had the right technology like Horde Prime, wouldn't he control them in the same brutal way? She wondered if the Dark Sorceress had opposed the mad tyrant simply because she saw him as a threat to her rule over others, especially her daughters. Perhaps Eti was intended to be Catra's substitute, although she did not notice that the woman was trying to subjugate her feline protégé. Truth be told, her influence on the scout wasn't that bad. It even occurred to her that she wanted to atone for her sins in some way, that by being nice to Eti, or at least by treating her decently, she would somehow make up for how much she had hurt the other one. She didn't know Catra, but she had heard a lot about how children were treated in the Fright Zone. But she also knew well that such experiences could not simply be explained to others. You have to Experience it. Therefore, it was a terrifying irony that the fates of both sisters were so similar. Both had been broken in childhood, and both had only escaped from the darkness thanks to outside help, although as for Eti, she still wasn't sure if she had managed to Suppress the darkness in her heart.

For now, however, the dark sorceress was not around, because she was in captivity of her former ward and daughter, so she did not matter. A much bigger problem was presented by Igzar , safe and sound. She didn't expect the old cat to survive. Eti didn't tell anyone about it, even Itel didn't know anything. The scarred Pahtra had always both irritated and arouse her respect, but now he looked like, Oh well. beaten cat. She always knew that Eti had a very cold relationship with her uncle, even though they hadn't known each other for very long. She remembered well that during those few days they were together, Igzar didn't even bother to gave her name. From the beginning, he made her understand that he was the one in this relationship who gave orders and she had to obey him. He didn't hide the fact that he was just another tool in his fight against Antares. Despite everything, she was slightly shocked when she found out that her protégé had beaten the mercenary commander. She knew that if Eti lost, old Pahtra would have no mercy for her, and even if he didn't kill her, he would at least mutilate her. She wasn't sure how long the girl had managed to subdue this old veteran, but she feared that sooner or later she might want to exact Revenge on his niece. On the other hand, there was little chance of him doing it while the Lord Admiral was around. His hatred was too strong.

Captain Moonshadow sat at the table, slouching slightly. She was so tall that in this room her head would hit the ceiling. Her servant, Veska, even cringed. This was not a room for members of her species. Skittrmander stood on a raised chair, glaring at the others. Itel sat next to Lonnie, her arm still wrapped in a bandage. The elf seemed sad, even depressed. She wasn't surprised, after all, she got everyone in trouble because of her. In addition, she summoned Igzar without asking anyone for opinion. Old Pahtra looked at her grimly, as if she had helped his niece beat him up. Lonnie looked surprisingly professional for a girl her age, eager to lead a rebellion against the Righteous Queen and half-goddess who saved the universe.. Was it even possible to look professional in such a situation?

„I won't introduce myself because you probably know who I am better than me. For the past five years, I have been the Scourge for the Azlanti, one of the most dangerous pirates in the galaxy. Only recently did I learn that I was the ruler of this planet.„ She looked at Lonnie, who nodded and said.

„You once led a rebellion after yours was captured during battle in the Valley of Shattered Armor. I didn't know much about you, for us you were just a figure from propaganda posters. But yes, you were a queen. A great and wonderful queen who ruled this kingdom for centuries. Everyone thought you died when the portal was opened, which almost led to the destruction of this planet. From what I heard, you sacrificed yourself to save everyone. Many believed that you had suffered a fate worse than death. I know that because of this, Glimmer almost activated heart of Etheria... Almost causing the destruction of... Probably the entire Galaxy. That was one of the reasons I fought with your daughter. I was, and still am, angry that she was willing to risk all of our lives for victory... But now, I feel like I wouldn't be better on my own. I have formed an alliance with the Shadow Weaver and other forces that do not have the well”being of our planet at heart.

The pirate with cybernetic wings frowned.

„Shadow Weaver… I remember that name... It was a person I both hated and felt sorry for.”

The Comrade General nodded.

“Yes, she was the right hand of Hordak , the leader of the horde. she raised Adora and Catra … And you too. She instilled fear in all of us, she was responsible for the worst of the Horde. She was a powerful sorceress who was once Cursed because of something she did. Everyone thought she died just like you, also sacrificing herself for others. But that was also one of her lies...”

The captain looked at Lonnie thoughtfully.

„Not necessarily, in the galaxy death is not as irreversible as you think here. In order not to look far, I just need to mention Dr. Sidonius.„ She looked significantly at the rest, and Bina began to explain.

„He's an ancient vampire. He is a scientist known throughout the galaxy. He financed our expedition here. He wanted us to find a certain artifact that would help heal a Captain Blazebringer. He is an extremely mysterious person who has a gigantic warship, the Ancient Void Galleon. He's one hell of a mystery dude. He has been alive for hundreds of years, but few have seen his face, it is not even known what species he is, but he has the Arsenal of End of the Time... It is supposedly the most terrible collection of weapons in the galaxy, although even less is known about it than about its owner.„ Now she looked at Itel. The elf took a deep breath and said.

„It was supposed to be a way to defeat the Swarm. Dr. Sidonius said he would help us convince Blazebinger to side with us against the Swarm. If so, we would have saved billions. No one would end up like our families again. Just like us... „ the girl lowered her head. „I would do anything to make it happen."

She sighed sadly and said.

„Itel, we don't even know if this Arsenal really exists, let alone that the Doctor will want to convince the Captain to your cause. He could have simply lied to you.

„Doctor Sidonius usually keeps his word. He just promises only things from which he will get some benefit.„ Said Captain Moonshadow. „He was the one who interrogated me for Azlanti and he was the one who sent me the equipment that helped me escape from captivity, but before that he implanted not entirely true memories in my mind. For example, that Adora's sword belongs to me and that I should get it back... „ she looked at Itel. „I have no doubt that he would enable you to speak with Captain Blazebringer. He would love to solve the Swarm problem. Not out of pity, but out of pure pragmatism. When you are such a longlived being, you have to take into account that the great problems of the world will sooner or later also affect you. But that's all, if he really cared about what would happen to the rest of the universe's inhabitants, he would try to convince Captain Blazebringer to help him.„ Even though the woman was wearing a mask, looking at the wrinkles around her eyes. she noticed that he was smiling, and rather sadly.

„But Captain Blazebringer is sick, he has nanite mold. That's why he can't help us!„ exclaimed the Elf with a trembling voice, as if she already knew that her argument was untenable.

„Maybe you're right, but this is all too convenient for Dr. Sidonius.„ She said, looking at her ward, who looked as if she was about to cry.

„So why did we come here? You could have protested... „ The solarian's voice broke as she spoke to her. She sighed and answered the girl.

„Because you would have figured out how to get here anyway, you are already an adult and I can't forbid you to do anything. At least I have control over what you do.”

„And Eti? Was that about her too? True? Did you want her to find her family?„ The elf looked at her carefully. She thought about her answer. She couldn't tell her the whole truth, not now. They weren't ready for the truth.

„Partially, although I was sure whether the girl really survived. But not only. Some of you hoped that you would find solace in such a place. That you will be able to forget about everything that happened to you. „ She closed her eyes sadly.„ But well, it happened differently, and actually regardless of you. The Lord Admiral would have arrived anyway, maybe a little later.

„What's going on with this Swarm?„ asked the general, obviously wanting to change the subject. Everyone looked at her, trying to explain to her something that was incomprehensible to people who lived in such isolation.

„The Swarm These are billions of creatures traveling through the galaxy and devouring everything in their path. It's very hard to drive away this plague, and you can't beat them. I was on a planet, Kesler , that was attacked by them, so you can believe me that there is no more dangerous enemy. Me and Bina know exactly what they can do... This girl too.„ Igzar said, looking at Itel. she don't think he even remembered his name.

„That was a nightmare. The worst moments of my life... No, the training was worse. I didn't have any friends on Kesler . I haven't seen the worst either. But my kids lost everything... „ she looked at Itel, who pursed her lips. „But that doesn't concern you anymore. The Swarm is far away and unlikely for anyone here to encounter it.„ she said and smiled.

„ Unfortunately, you're wrong... „ Ireanis said in a voice as serious as she had ever heard before...

She was so thirsty. But she had to be sober, because the fate of so many beings rested on her shoulders... Why did Shadow Weaver get caught? And left everything on her head! She had a hard time coping with herself... Now she had to complete her mission, even though she didn't even know all the details... After talking to the dark sorceress's old friends, she went to the ship, where she tried to find something to soothe, but this creature living in the aquarium he didn't let her open the door to the studio, where the supplies of alcohol were hidden. And then she felt a darkness approaching the city... It was all-encompassing, as if it wanted to consume everything in its path... This darkness was alien, unnatural... It was something she had never encountered in her life, but then came an evil she knew all too well. She sensed the thing that had once broken her... Turned her into the pathetic drunk she was now. The only witness to her betrayal. The reason that she abandoned her companions... She left them to die. For them to become undead abominations... She tried to correct her mistake, but instead she traveled through time and space and found herself on Kesler. She barely escaped with her life, and Bina and the Rest took care of her, because in this new world she was helpless like a child, almost like a blind kitten that someone had abandoned in the wild. It was as if she had the opportunity to start her life over again... She took advantage of it, becoming a pathetic drunk who was despised by everyone.

For years, she treated this place, these times, as a foreign land to which she had been banished . She tried to be useful, helping Bina's kids when she was sober. She didn't always succeed. These weren't her times, and most of the knowledge she had was useless now. The spells also worked differently now , the magic wasn't as powerful as before. Recently she even started to wonder if it was related to the same Heart, but she couldn't check it. She didn't know what she wanted to do with her life, except spend the rest of it half-living. Maybe it would be best for her, she didn't hurt anyone else, she didn't disappoint. Then Miss Daisy, or rather Shadow Weaver, introduced her to her plan. Both women were, let's be honest, not very happy that they had only themselves to rely on. Two drunkards and traitors were now going to save the world. That in itself sounded so idiotic it made me want to drink. Despite everything, she listened to the dark Sorceress and stopped drinking. It was a real torment, especially since she had such a huge responsibility. But she persevered in sobriety. But then she discovered that she, Ashaq the Annihilator, had appeared on Etheria she realized that she would no longer be able to escape into drunkenness. It became personal. She could finally atone for her mistakes, her sins, find revenge that she had never even dreamed of. She just had to convince the rest of us how serious the situation was. So, fighting fear and self-contempt, she entered the meeting room, where the conversation turned to the topic of the Swarm. When she spoke, everyone looked at her. The only one who didn't look at her with confusion was the one Lonnie, she remembered her name well, who was in charge.

„Ireanis, Listen, this is a serious meeting. I know you want to help, but it's better what you do when you sober up.”

„She's sober Bina, she hasn't had a drink since we landed here. Shadow WeaveraAlso, they both stuck together. „ Itel explained. The captain of their ship frowned, then glared at her.

„You knew about her... For how long! „ said the woman with burgundy hair sharply.

„Since I stopped drinking, but then you order me to be kicked out. Listen to what I have to say, I know I haven't given you any reason to trust me yet, but do it this once, okay? If you do this, you can save a great many. The captain's husband, and her sister-in-law, listened to me, so you can try it too, okay?„ She said pointing to Captain Moonshadow, who looked at them confused.

„But he... He's dead.„ The pirate captain said with pain in her voice, but then everyone except Itel looked at her.

„You do not know anything?!„ Bina said with surprise... „ Mikah is alive, I met him in Brightmoon ... You can ask Tirin, she also talked to him. He did not introduce himself to her as the Royal Consort, but he did give her his name. A rather short, athletic man in his fifties who had a wizard's staff.

Lonnie nodded.

„Yes it's true. Adora freed him when she came to the beast island for Entrapta . It's a familiar story.”

„But how... He died during the battle...„ Said Captain Moonshadow, leaning on the table top.

„Do you mean that old man we met in the forest?„ The solarian asked, looking at her with surprise.

„He was sent to the Beast Island, just like everyone else, including unruly citizens... He miraculously survived there. I don't know what he's doing now, but from what I've heard, he's a very sad man.„ Comrade General added at the end.

„Does he… Does he know about me. About who I am… Who have I become?”

Bina nodded and said in an apologetic tone.

„I told him everything... Also about what you did on Icarus. I'm sorry, maybe I wasn't gentle enough, but I never thought we'd meet again.”

The former queen nodded sadly.

„My memories... The Doctor distorted them. He made me believe that the sword belonged to me, that it had always been mine. Even now it's hard for me to get out of it. Just the thought of abandoning it hurts me. I thought Adora abandoned me in that place. I still don't remember much. But I have to do one thing to end it all.„ She reached under her coat and pulled out a broken sword. Veska growled at this, and Skittermander inhaled sharply.

„Here are the remains of the sword of protection... I believe they will be more useful to you than to me.„ She moved what was left of the weapon towards the Comrade General, who was staring at this gift with wide eyes.

„It's very nice of you to put these two in there and all, but there are other things I need to talk about.„ the elven sorceress interjected.

„Yes, you said something about a Swarm.„ Lonnie She looked in her direction, taking her eyes off the gun.

She took a deep breath and began to recount what Shadow Weaver had told her. About the First Ones, that they control the Swarm, and how they intend to send it to this planet. Everyone listened to her attentively. Itel's face showed growing terror, and Bina clutched her temples with her fingers. Captain Moonshadow looked at her seriously, and a Igzar bristled. He looked like he wanted to hit her, but he usually looked like that, so she wasn't sure if something had changed. Even the Comrade General seemed frightened, although she had no idea what they were dealing with.

„And that's why you'll go on an adventure with Hordaki, Mikah and your sister-in-law, and with that we'll save the world... Or the entire universe!„ she said and did a pirouette.

„I'm going with you.„ Captain Moonshadow declared in a voice that brooked no objections.

„Oh, that's a great idea, I could to teleport now!„ she said with delight. They took her seriously, it was amazing! No one ever took her seriously!

„First I need to give orders to my subordinates, this ship will be at your disposal for some time.„ replied the pirate captain.

„What are we supposed to do? „ Itel asked, looking around. „I guess we should warn the others?”

„Shadow Weaver She's definitely done it before, but I'm not sure they believed her... Catra, you can't even imagine how she can hate her. But there was nothing they could do about it. But there is this ship, far away on the northern borders, the ancient ship of the First Ones is hidden under the ice. Our allies... Mi-Go offered to help us extract him, but the price they demanded... But fortunately, you can help us.„ She looked pleadingly at the others. Itel smiled and was about to say something, but she hesitated and looked at Bina . The clone woman nodded.

„We have some means... But it won't be easy... We don't know how to extract ships and... But we will help... Maybe we will also find what Dr. Sidonius was looking for. Maybe we could get Captain Blazebringer's help... „ The solarian's eyes sparkled. hope, but Bina answered her with undisguised skepticism in her voice.

„I wouldn't count on it, but any help will be useful.„ said the clone woman..

„So we are the ones who guard the safety of Etheria , or maybe even the whole of Universe...„ she said and looked at the others. „It's a bit ridiculous that I'm standing among you, but I'll try to stay hungry for such a noble company...„ she smiled wryly. Moonshadow Chapel She laughed briefly.

„This company includes a former queen turned pirate. A former gangster who became a caretaker of orphans' and smuggler. A former cadet serving in the army of the evil Empire who leads the rebellion and an orphan who wants to defeat the Scourge of the Galaxy. I won't even mention the terrorist and the Freedom Fighters in one. We are the ones who lost everything but still didn't give up, you fit perfectly here...„ She took a deep breath and stretched her hand to the middle of the table. „ Let's make an alliance that we will try to complete our mission together and save Etheria and perhaps the entire universe. I don't remember everything yet, but a lot of what this woman says rings true, so we have to find the first ones and neutralize them... Otherwise, they lost everything, again ... „ And one by one they put their hands on the table and swore, Each in their own way, although Igzar reluctantly. She was proud of herself for making it happen. But it didn't change the fact that she still wanted to get drunk.

Chapter End Notes

> You've been waiting for this chapter for a while. What do you think about Ireanis?

Extremely valuable treasures - part one

He landed blows one by one, shouted battle cries, defeating countless enemies. It aroused admiration and touched the heart! Both male and female. He defended those he loved, proving to them that he was worthy of them. He was undefeated, Unstoppable, invincible, he was… He tripped and hit his head on the edge of the door. He let out a short cry of pain and started rubbing the area where he had hit himself. He was in pain, he probably had a tumor. So much for Heroic Feats. In truth, In fact, it could have been worse... He could have, for example, cut something off. He looked at the sword and then the walls of the corridors of Castle Crypto where he left many scratches. He had to admit that the blade was extremely sharp. He wasn't sure how sharp Adora's sword was, his former friend wasn't in the habit of cutting everything around her, especially other people. In fact, he didn't remember her cutting anyone in half, not even Horde Prime, although he deserved it. He also didn't want to slash or chop anyone. At least someone alive and feeling pain... But he wanted to be a hero and he knew that with this weapon he would finally become one! Someday, when he trained enough... He trained a lot, for days, maybe weeks... He just would have to figure out a way to find time to train without anyone noticing... Especially Lonnie... His girlfriend was naturally suspicious. It would be difficult hide it from her... Maybe it's worth wearing an eye patch. When he says. that he lost an eye, he will have an explanation, so that he does not have to participate in the life of the rebellion. He would ask Eti to say that she scratched out his eye. Catra finally scratched out Oktavia's eye ... The problem was that Eti had no claws. It was a bad idea anyway, they would either give him a cybernetic eye or they would start asking too many questions. Maybe he'll come up with some horribly contagious disease that will force everyone to leave him alone... He sighed, looking at the blade. All these ideas were stupid. Sooner or later, everyone will find out. It didn't matter anyway. He will never be a hero. Even with this sword, he was just himself. How could he imagine that he would be more than he is? He may have succeeded once, but it was an accident. He just had a bit of luck, that's all. Maybe say give the sword to someone else? But to whom? Adora already had hers, although it wasn't the same sword that she once found in the forest. He had n't thought much about his old friend since he discovered what that sword could do. He was afraid of the implications, of what might connect them, of who he really was... He knew very little about the First Ones, only that Entrapta was searching for the artifacts they left behind, and that they had turned their planet into a weapon. Did that also scare him, or was he, like the heroine of the Galaxy, just a tool that his compatriots wanted to use? Maybe he should really return this Sword to its original owners? Mr. Lance would be sad if he did this, but it would probably be better this way. He would also tell Adora his suspicions about who he is. Except he would have to go to Brightmoon , and in this situation that would be impossible. Maybe he'll give that sword back to those terrifying Beetle Mushrooms? Although it wouldn't be a good idea either, it's better that such things don't fall into the hands of these creatures... So it would be best if he just threw this one into a chasm... It would be difficult for him to part with it, but he probably had no choice. At least he'll think it over for a few days. And during this time he would train, nothing bad would come of it, he just had to be careful, but it shouldn't be difficult, because right now everyone had more important things to worry about. These Shadows, for example. The soldiers Itel called were terrible. They personified what he had always feared. They were armed to the teeth, seemed ruthless, and looked at him as if they wanted to make sausages out of him. In fact, one of them even fry some of them all the time. Their commander-in-chief was Catra's uncle, and he had everything that terrified him about his feline friend, but multiplied ten times over. For now, he listened to Lonnie, but only because his niece intimidated him... But he wasn't sure how long it would last, and when he wanted to regain power, Lonnie could be in serious trouble... he guessed he would keep the sword, just in case .

Then, as he was trying to put his blade into its sheath without cutting himself, which made me think of Lonnie, he heard a short scream, and he jumped up, hitting his head on the ceiling, the ceilings were very low in some places here, and he started looking around. He was deep inside the castle, a place where no one usually went. They had a map of the castle on their datapads, but it wasn't complete, and he often had the impression that the corridors of this castle changed themselves whenever someone didn't visit them for a long time. Sometimes they terrified him, he was afraid that they would eventually change so much that he would not be able to return to the rest and would be trapped here forever. He will never see those he loves again and will wander alone for eternity, trapped in darkness. He often wondered if this castle was haunted by ghosts or other horrors. Lonnie always told him that ghosts and other such imaginary creatures don’t exist... But then he saw that thing in Brightmoon and realized that the world wasn't that simple. That creature was something indescribably terrible. Compared to him, Shadow Weaver would be like... Kyle compared to Shadow Weaver... This creature was worse than the most terrible beasts from the dark Sorceress's fairy tales. There was something else there too, something old and emanating death. He didn't have time to look at it, but it was something Dead, a denial of life, a creature of the power opposite to that he was then filled. It felt like it was ready to absorb the energy of all living things around it. Was there anything similar in this castle? Theoretically he should be able to handle it while he had the sword, what if it somehow attacked him before he drew it? But, he felt he had to check it out, because what if one of his friends came across this creature? He took a few deep breaths to calm himself down, which didn't work, but it never did, and moved forward into the Dark Halls.

„He's definitely here somewhere, you just have to look around.„ Eti said, looking around. Rosie looked at her and saw her girlfriend sniffing ostentatiously.

„It must be strange to have such a sense of smell.„ She asked the girl she loved. She herself had a better sense of smell than most people, but Eti had a phenomenal sense of smell.

„It's completely normal, others just have a bad sense of smell.„ The cat-like girl replied and leaned over the floor.

„Catra Possess about eight times better than the regular one, but due to being in a Fright Zone where everything was saturated with very unhealthy fumes, hers probably became significantly duller . „ said Entrapta, walking next to them. The purple-haired princess was clearly excited to return to her castle, but also that Eti had promised her that she would be able to examine her hand. Now, however, for unknown reasons, her girlfriend insisted that they need to find Kyle because she also has something interesting. It wouldn't bother her, she even liked the blond-haired boy, but the corridors were getting more and more disturbing. They reminded too much of the place where they found the Heart Gift ... It was a very sad memory that she didn't want to go back to for now, she just wanted to enjoy the presence of her girlfriend and the fact that they were together... Although the inventor princess would definitely be happy if she met that AI... Although, on the other hand, she had already noticed that Entrapta was very talkative and extremely honest, so there was a chance that she would tell that being the truth about what happened to her mothers... What you did, however, was huge, and surprisingly she had the impression that even the former mistress of this castle, she wasn't entirely familiar with its placement, so she wasn't sure why Kyle was so deep.

„I can smell a lot of smells here, grease, rats, cockroaches, and almond-scented soap... but this is Rosie... This is very strange...”

„Are all castles here like this? I know that in the empire, some people build huge palaces and even modify space stations to look like cathedrals, palaces or ziggurats. all covered with ornaments relating to our… to Azlantean Culture.„ Said Tirin through the voice synthesizer, walking slightly behind and looking around the corridors. They took her with them at their own request. The strange girl in the bionic armor seemed to be lost among the soldiers and cadets, and she didn't like open spaces, so she couldn't even go beyond Castle Crypto to explore the mountainous area. On the other hand, there wasn't much to see here, while all of Etheria was a very pretty place, even the Crimson Wastes, those mountains were barren and bleak, She still felt guilty for almost killing that girl, though Tirin didn't seem to hold grudges about what happened.

„Azlanti Empire? Oh that's fascinating, can you tell me more about it?„ Entrapta asked, taking her eyes off the datapad . „They were the ones who imprisoned Queen Angela , weren't they?”

Tirin lowered her head and spoke softly.

„I don't know much about my... About the empire. I spent almost my entire life on Jadehell in a labor camp. I only visited a few cities located in the polar regions, where the climate is more bearable and poisonous spores are not so ubiquitous. They can go outside there, as long as the weather is good, without fear for their health... The Empire is very old, older than Absalom Station. Originates from the Lost Golarion. Our ancestors come from a Colony founded just before the star fell... When the Starstone arrived on the planet...

„Starstone?„ asked the inventor princess, pulling a girl as petite as herself towards her. „Tell me about him! Is this an artifact or the name of an meteoroid?”

„Actually, it's both, because it's a magical stone that once hit the planet and destroyed the Azlanti Empire there and almost any civilization. It was very powerful, thanks to it Aroden the Last of Azlantii, extracted the island of Absalom. We even have a video about it on the ship.„ she said, smiling at the inventor.

„Catra She really doesn't like it when people talk about such things. It reminds her of Horde Prime. But I would like to hear more about them. I used to not be interested in such social issues, but now I have learned how important they are. After all, when we get to know each other better, we will then become friends faster and cooperate easier, right?„ The purple-haired woman said, looking a little calmer than usual.

„Thus, three gods were created thanks to this stone, not counting Aroden Iomadae known as the inheritor, Nogrober known as the reaper reputation and Caiden known as the lucky drunk. „ She explained, trying to sound as respectful as possible, after all, she was actually representing the university here.

„Why don't you count this Aroden?„ Entrapta asked.

„Because He's dead. He died thousands of years ago on the Lost Golarion, and no one knows how it happened, except that it shook the entire world.„ she explained to the Woman with purple hair.

„So Gods can die? „ asked the inventor princess. She seemed concerned. She slowly nodded, and then Eti interjected.

„You have another one here, but you don't know about it.”

Entrapta looked at her in surprise, then began dictating.

„Number seven thousand four hundred one In the archeology category. Today, quite by accident, I made an amazing discovery. There is a truly wonderful artifact on Etheria. According to my sources of information, he has the power to create beings called gods, It probably has something to do with She-Ra's power... It cannot be confirmed for sure yet, further research is necessary ... „ the woman stopped dictating and began to rub her hands and hair.

„I guess that's cool?„ she looked around uncertainly, and Eti started sniffing more intensely.

„I think I smell something, two scents, one is cheap cologne, Blonde boy uses it because he think his Boyfriend or Girlfriend likes it... But the other scent is weird, it reminds me of Wrongdak, but not quite. It's like something has been added to it, and it's also somehow familiar. It's really weird... You know, I really don't like the unknown, because the unknown usually wants to hurt you.” The cat girl said, and flattened her ears, Wagged her tail nervously, and placed her gloved hand on the gun.. Surprisingly, Entrapta also seemed concerned, although she had seemed very carefree so far.

„Entrapta, This is your castle, you know it best. Do you know what it could be?„ she looked at the purple-haired woman. She didn't look at her like that, she just looked at her datapad , as if she didn't pay attention to them. So she approached her and asked.

„Did something happen?„ she looked at it carefully. All the energy and vitality she had just exuded evaporated.

„I never really explored this castle... I always felt lost in it. The feeling that I was an intruder here, but at the same time I didn't want to leave it for a long time. I didn't feel at home here. I felt even more out of place... So maybe we can change the subject? This hand of yours. You don't even realize how amazing she is!„ She started looking at this strange prosthesis, as if she had completely forgotten about her previous questions. Tirin looked at them questioningly, but shrugged in response.

„Oh, you don't even know how cool she is. There are signs of the First Ones on it, but they are not visible. The doctor claimed he didn't know what they meant, but I didn't believe him. Kyle can read them, and there are similar Signs on his sword.” Eti said with some pride on her face, and Entrapta looked at her with wide eyes. Her mouth was also open, as if she didn't believe what she heard.

„So he can read the First One’s writings? It's amazing! How does he do it! So far, it has not been possible to break it in any way. Even though Adora tries to help translate, nothing can see in these signs what she sees! It's like this language doesn't want to be understood. As if it was created so that only those who were the First Ones could understand it. Which actually fits with what we know about him... „ She was talking to herself out loud, and then she stopped and looked at them in a strange way.

„Are you implying that because Kyle can read a First Ones language, that means he is... one of them?„ She said, barely containing the exclamations of excitement in her voice. Her girlfriend shrugged and said.

„I know Dr. Sidonius is interested in them. Rechiza, the woman who traveled with us, claimed that she could read this language thanks to the implants the doctor had installed on her. I don't know if he installed them on himself. That's why I suspect he was lying about not knowing what was written on my hand.”

The inventor princess listened carefully to what the cat girl was saying and thought about it.

„Is it possible that Kyle somehow came into possession of such implants and installed them without anyone's knowledge? That means he has great technical skills, I feel jealous when I think about it”

„I've known Kyle for a while , and he's not a person. who would be able to perform the implantation procedure on himself.„ She explained to the purple-haired woman, who screamed.

„Do you understand what this means? He's just like Adora! In some ways, they even look similar. Do you think it is…”

„ My brother-in-law or something? „ Eti asked clearly curiously... „Poor guy, he doesn't even know what a wonderful and wonderful family he has!„ The girl told her calmly, happy with this thought.

„But should we spread the word?„ She asked the other girls, looking at the, but Captain Moonshadow's protégé added.

„I have heard a little about the civilization of the First Ones, some say that we are their heirs... That all their works belong to us, including the cities on Abalon .

„You have the First Ones cities!„ cried the inventor princess with a voice full of unbridled Joy.

She was about to answer, but then there was a distant scream.

„We go there! „ Eti exclaimed, flattening her ears... Something worried her... Without any objections, they ran together.

Nightgale knelt down, crushed by indescribable suffering. This attempt was particularly strong, it was clear that Glimmer this time decided that she would not give up and would try to gain control of the Moonstone until she succeeded. Apparently, she really needed to regain her former power. There was nothing strange about it. She had to chase the Shadow Weaver, she was the greatest threat to her kingdom, her twisted apprentice and an inhuman monstrosity. the ability to teleport was very useful to her... But she couldn't give up, not only because then the queen would have a chance to track them down, although not in this castle, but also because she would then slowly start to die. She had to fight if she wanted to survive. She was fully aware that it only took a few minutes, but it felt like it lasted for hours. The Queen was a strong woman, but she had suffered so much in her life... Her father's people were created to endure hardships and tribulations that no one else could. And her mother, well, she had been in the same conditions as her for thirty years… So finally Glimmer had to give in. She breathed a sigh of relief when the indescribable pain suddenly subsided. She was all wet, panting heavily, and lay down on the metal floor of the castle. This time I succeeded, and she suspected that for some time the queen would not have the strength to fight her again...

Getting a comma here wasn't that difficult. She never gave Lonnie a full map of the castle, well, she was taught that you should always have an advantage over a potential enemy, And anyone can be your enemy, Even if they are now your friend. Castle Crypto It had several hidden entrances, one of them was relatively easy to access, although it required great caution due to the motion sensor connected to the Ancient dart thrower capable of piercing even armor plates. Fortunately, thanks to her Magic, she had several ways to bypass them. Getting to Dryl was much more difficult. The cultists provided her with a means of transportation, a small one-person anti-gravity from Icarus vehicle, but she had to get there on her own, although she could have used the help of local worshipers of the Great Old Ones. She did this. Anyway, she stopped in a certain village where the inhabitants celebrated rituals once a month in honor of Nuclear Chaos. They seemed normal at first glance, but only to an eye as trained as hers were the obvious signs visible. Strangely fatalistic cheerfulness , longing glances at the sky, strangely rhythmic way of speaking, countless tics. The village was small, only a few buildings. From what I heard, the largest habitat of ancient cults was Thymor , a town with numerous festivals and exceptionally richly celebrated holidays... Ironically, it was one of the first towns that Horde Prime decided to chip . Sometimes you wondered if this was part of a grand plan of Creeping Chaos. After all, the Great Outer God looked far into the future in his predictions; some of his conspiracies began thousands of years ago. Perhaps the inhabitants of that city were to be just one of countless victims, on the way to the fulfillment of Nyarlathotept's Great Plan.

A much bigger problem was the guards of Brightmoon, which were put on full alert. This is where Illusion Magic came in handy, thanks to which she was able to slip through unnoticed. The most irritating thing was the journey that had to be taken to the right castle. Castle Crypto was not only a tangle of corridors, but also a maze created in an extremely impractical way. The corridors twisted and turned at random places, the stairs sometimes led up only to go down, and she was more and more convinced that both the castle and her map were changing every time she was almost sure she knew the logic behind the builders who created this place. Eventually, however, she managed to get to her second, hidden, room. When she saw her great possessions, this private one, she felt like crying. Old and almost worn-out clothes that the real Scarlet had given her, some iron rations in case she ever had to leave this place, which was what was happening, a few books, slightly truncated volumes about the dark affairs, and a few gifts received from Scarlet. An acorn man, a wreath of twigs and a metal cup stolen from the Fright Zone. She wondered for the first time whether she loved the former cadet. She wasn't sure. Her memories of those times were incomplete, as if she was intoxicated by the life she was discovering. That short time after leaving the Fright Zone, when they were hiding together on the outskirts of the Whispering Forest, was so filled with fear and joy that everything seemed like a dream. She was intoxicated by the fact that she was alive. The emotions at the time were so new and overwhelming that she couldn't pinpoint what she was really feeling. Perhaps it was just infatuation of a creature rejected by the whole world. It was the only period in her life when she was truly happy... And then it ended unexpectedly, on a day that was a great victory for everyone. She wasn't sure if she would ever get Scarlet back…. Initially, this was her main goal, the most important reason why she did all these, often terrible, things. But it was also about something else... She wanted power and strength, to represent all the Great Mysteries of the world, to serve something greater than herself, to be appreciated and noticed, to no longer be a failure... She laughed and knelt down on the narrow mattress that served as my place of rest. in these moments if you wanted to take on your true form. She realized how much she had inherited from her parents, from both parents. Not only from her mother, who accepted her, but also from her father, who rejected her and banished her to the underworld of his kingdom. Most importantly, she inherited both their good qualities and, above all, their worst characteristics. It was while she was contemplating her cursed heritage that the attack came and she had to fight to maintain control of the Moonstone. It took her a few minutes to recover, during which she wondered if she should visit her old friends. It would be fair to them, but in this state it was also a big waste of time, of which she didn't have much... But if she didn't do it now, she would regret for the rest of her life that she hadn't had this conversation, perhaps the last one. On the other hand, she also had to find a certain place, then it was hidden among the tangle of corridors. It was located in a part of the castle that she had never explored, and what she knew she had known for many years and had not been visited, neither by the last lady of the place, nor by her parents. There was a node in the network and geomatics that wrapped around the entire planet. There was supposed to be a terminal there that would allow connection to the planetary archive, which would then store some of the knowledge gathered by Light Hope. However, as she recently learned, using the archive can currently be very risky. She spoke to Lady Cala about her encounter with the ancient si, and she bluntly said that she had tried to use it to murder Adora. She claimed that the artificial intelligence was a creation of Mara and that it had a very bad experience with the death of its creator, and that it might be unstable now. She had the impression that the aristocrat was hiding something from her, some small nuance of the whole story, but she had no way of finding out. She still had a few hours before their contact, and she hadn't taken the mirror with her to Castle Crypto anyway, even in this form she didn't have the strength to carry it through all those corridors. She sighed, so she gathered all the strength she had left after that exhausting battle of wills with Glimmer, and headed up the winding and dark corridors. However, after just a few minutes she heard a scream. She immediately stopped and listened. You were aware that she were in one of the most mysterious places in all of Etheria . It may not have been R'lyeh or one of the Mi-Go colonies, but Entrapta's ancestors had secrets of their own. The Inventor Princess was a prime example of this. No one knew what happened to her parents, but during her stay in these mountains she talked to many of their inhabitants. She learned that once the parents of the former Lady of this place went on some expedition, leaving their minor daughter alone in the castle... Supposedly they were performing some task. commissioned by Queen Angela, who had visited the castle a few weeks earlier, although the former ruler Etheri had never told anyone why she had gone to this place, but now certain suspicions were coming to her mind... The Queen knew a lot about the First Ones, although no one knows exactly how much... Has she knew the dark truth? Was this the reason for her interest in this place? That ancient civilization left its mark on this building. It was called Castle Crypto for a reason Did this scream come from the "mouths" of the creations of Etheria's first colonizers? Or was it something much more sinister, a soul trapped in this maze that defies logic and common sense? She'll never know if she doesn't check, and I thought it was worth checking because it came from the place she was going to check anyway... So, full of concerns, she went in that direction.

Dr. Moors felt extremely disappointed. His allies were untrustworthy. They received so many gifts from his masters, and yet they were constantly looking for ways to disobey their orders. He guessed they don't get much coffee, the sacrifice of one person who was their enemy. It wouldn't even be a sacrifice, after all, they actually wanted to save her, preserve her wonderful mind so that it could last for countless eons, gaining wisdom and learning secrets inaccessible to ordinary beings. Yes, the brain extraction procedure was terrible and changed the personality of the person who underwent it, but he think it made him a better person. He no longer felt the same emotions and desires as those with biological bodies. So why was the Comrade general so afraid to give them Entrapta ... She could have captured her once when she was in this city of Elder Things, but then he was able to forgive her because she was distracted by the others. more personal matters, and she was injured. But then, she formed an alliance with that damned Shadow Weaver, a woman who was willing to get rid of anyone who threatened her or her secret. How could she trust someone like that? Yes, the Mi-Go had secrets from her, but only because she had not yet proven, and probably never would, that she is trustworthy and capable of bearing such secrets. For now, however, they had not deceived her. Of course, it could not be ruled out that this would happen in the future, but after all, she was only a mortal... She was only important as long as she was useful. Unfortunately, her usefulness was slowly ending, also due to the fact that unfortunately his masters became less useful to her. The arrival of these mercenaries from outside the fallen Empire made the rebellion so dependent on the Mi-Go. The Comrade General captured the inventor princess and wasn’t already interested in giving her to his masters. There was a betrayal in this, someone would have to be punished like that one day, but the time would come ... For now, he had to sit quietly and look for an opportunity to take action. The goals of its rulers remained unchanged. Obtaining that woman's brain was just one of them. He had to find a way to establish contacts with the rest of their race's diaspora, and secure this place. Mi-Go They were extremely wise, but this wisdom resulted from the fact that they were able to draw conclusions from the discoveries of other civilizations. And Etheria was one big mystery just waiting for you to dig in and taste the flesh of the Secrets it hides . But hey, maybe there were other allies with much more open minds. Those who will understand how important it is to solve the riddle of this planet. Unfortunately, even the Overseer couldn't avoid Memory Loss due to the Gap. Therefore, they had to make most of the discoveries on their own, but the allies he kept an eye on had access to ancient knowledge and terrible powers, thanks to which they would obtain the key to the great secret of Etheri.

But now he have to investigate a mystery. He had suspected something for a long time. This boy, Kyle and his sword... There was something strange between them. This young man had never been interested in weapons, had no desire to become a warrior, and now he carried this weapon absolutely everywhere. He also became more confident, but at the same time one could get the impression that he was constantly afraid of something. As if he had some secret, the discovery of which could have terrible consequences for him... Because there is something extremely surprising about it, after all, he have known him almost since I was a child and he was a person you could read like a book. He also had to know his secret, especially since it was somehow related to Scarlet. This woman was also more than it seemed at first glance. He respected her for her hunger for knowledge, and her open mind, which shrank from ancient secrets that the others would find even terrifying. She also seemed willing to cooperate, especially since she didn't feel the same way about him immediately as everyone else. But she also hid secrets, so she had her rulers, perhaps even more powerful and greater than his masters. Besides, and this was probably the most important thing, she wasn't Scarlet. Although he wasn't sure what her real identity was. Unlike the rebels, his artificial eyes saw things as they were, and he never rejected the truth, even when it seemed forcefully impossible. He saw no reason to tell Lonnie about this. The Sorceress was potentially a much more valuable ally than the former ambulance. That's why he felt disappointed that there was a secret between her and Kyly that was beyond his reach. He had to discover him... That's why he followed this boy, to find out what he was up to... It wasn't difficult. His physique , if that word could be used to refer to a brain in a cylinder, was extremely difficult to see, especially in dark corridors. When he wanted to, he could move incredibly fast and silently, remaining almost unnoticed in the dark. Of course, tracking this kid wasn't hard. Kyle was tripping over his own feet. If the Horde were any more of a normal army, someone like that would be sent to serve in the rear. He was probably better trained than most men”at”arms on Etheria , but training him was a waste of time and resources. When he saw that the boy had simply started playing fencing, he wanted to sigh, although in his current state he couldn't do it. Well, if he wanted to play knight, or even She” Ra , that's his business. He didn't have time to watch some kid swing a sword. He was about to return to the upper part of the castle when a scream rang out. Intrigued, he began to listen. His hearing instruments were very advanced, so he easily discovered that the cry did not come from the humanoid's throat ... And at the same time, it resembled him very much... Only after a while he realized that the voice was synthesized, which made him curious, trying to be unnoticed by the young man, he followed towards the sound source...

Rosie noticed that Eti was both curious and concerned. She may not have known her girlfriend for very long, she liked word Girlfrend very much, but she saw that almost nothing could scare or worry her. It was a matter of what she heard, after all, she had very sensitive hearing. She had no idea what it was like to hear, and sometimes she imagined that hearing was an almost supernatural power. It seemed to her that the vibrations, which she usually only felt, appeared in the heads of those who heard them as words... Really, you can't imagine a sense you never had... But what did Eti sense that outraged her so much? She knew that the two of them could face any threat. She shuddered as she remembered the night's fight with She-Ra. She didn't want to think about that fight, what it might have meant...

Entrapta ran after them, using her hair to help herself, she was surprisingly fast for a scholar. Tirin probably kept up with them thanks to her bionic suit. When they reached the intersection, something suddenly jumped out at them from a side corridor. It was headed towards Eti, so without thinking, she delivered a powerful blow to him, wanting to save her girlfriend. She heard a strangled scream and saw Kyle lying on the Floor.

„Oh no ! I did it again!„ she said in sign language, which her gloves translated.

„Brother-in-law, could you please stop bumping into my girlfriend and scaring her, because she is very sensitive, but she also hits hard and if she kills you, she will be very sorry!„ She said Eti as she gave herself over to the boy, fortunately he was breathing.

„Oh, that must have hurt, I know something about that.„ Tirin said. They helped the blond haired boy up, he didn't look that bad, she probably didn't even break any of his bones, although he'll have a terrible limo. But what will they say to Lonnie now?

„When I was a cadet, it happened to me several times.„ Kyle said, smiling before becoming serious and looking at Eti. „Why do you call me brother-in-law? Stop doing this! Lonnie might hear this!„ He was very scared. Eti turned her head to the side and said.

„Because , you know, my sister is Adora's wife, and she is one of the First Ones, and if you can also read their writing, then you are probably one of them too, or someone associated with them.. So you could say you're something like my brother-in-law.

The boy turned white as milk.

„You weren't supposed to tell anyone about this!„ He screamed at Eti with resentment in his voice.

„And if I met Anyone, I wouldn't tell him anything. Plus, a few things have happened recently. I discovered that my hand can do more than it seems, and the Sparkling Paw... She did something strange... And this sword of yours, I need to know the truth, and we have an expert.„ The cat girl pointed at Entrapta, who bowed courtly.

„But what do I have to do with it...„ Kyle said, looking at them pleadingly. Despite the questions, she had the impression that he knew what was going on.

„It's about your sword. The metal one, of course, is probably made by the First Ones since it has their inscriptions on the blade... „ Eti explained.

„And does he have a sword other than a metal one...„ Tirin asked, and Eti looked at her significantly, and she and Kyle blushed.

„Ah, that's the sword George and Lance gave you!„ Entrapta exclaimed. „ They never even imagined that it could be the work of the First Ones...„ she frowned and began to look at him. „ It doesn't look like an ancient artifact, it seems quite ordinary. „ she grabbed the sword from Kyle's hands with her hair and started looking at him with some disappointment. She began to examine it using various strange devices that she had with her since the wedding... Who takes such things to a wedding! Entrapta was a very unusual person, she reminded her a bit of Doctor Quin, but was much nicer.

„Exactly, you have no reason to suspect that there is anything wrong with him or me!„ he shouted, making a panicked face.

„You know that's not true, Kyle... „ said someone who her glasses couldn't recognize, so she started looking around and looked at the place where Eti was looking. There, a tall figure emerged from the darkness. She looked a bit like one of the clones, but she wasn't exactly one. She had more delicate facial features, a clearly visible nose, and her ears were not as wide, but slightly longer. She also had scars all over her body, they seemed to be fresh and resembled a broken vessel. She was dressed in the blue robes of the Sorcerer. She took a fighting stance, Eti reached for her rifle, Tirin Transformed one of her hands into a weapon, and Entrapta looked on in confusion. But Kyle looked at her as if he recognized her. He looked down as if he was ashamed.

„Who are you! You move and you die!„ the cat girl said glaring, aiming between the creature's eyes.

„This is... „ Kyle started, but the newcomer interrupted him.

„My name is Nightgale... Kyle and I met some time ago, and now we meet again... But you know me by the name Scarlet...”

Tirin and Entrapta Stared at her without understanding, they had never met Scarlet. She didn't get to know her well either. However, this creature did not resemble the red”haired girl at all...

„What happened to you...„ Kyle said quietly.

„She grew taller, paler, changed her hair color... „ Eti said. As if she was explaining something obvious, it seemed as if her girlfriend didn't really care about how much the other woman had changed...

„That's not the point. She's always been like this, Her scars... They're the same as hers... Tell me you didn't do it!„ Kyle called. He looked distraught... But the creature smiled very sadly.

„Yes! I performed the ritual. I did it to free her. Free my mother... Free Shadow Weaver...„ She said in a quiet voice.

„You are the daughter of Shadow Weaver! it's amazing. „ Entrapta shouted, beaming with excitement. „This woman's biology is as fascinating as Adora's. Her ability to manipulate magical energy by absorbing external sources is absolutely unique. If we could test her and recreate this ability, then... „ the inventor princess looked at Nightgale. „But who was your father...”

After this question there was silence as everyone guessed what the answer was. Daughter of Shadow Weaver was about to respond when the entire castle shook, and she felt as if someone was screaming.

„I guess let's deal with that first, and then we'll talk about other issues.„ said Eti, flattening her ears.

They all nodded in agreement and ran after Eti, who led them towards the source of the sound.

He was actually grateful to Scarlet, for that she was able to keep a secret. He knew that sooner or later she would want to use it against him, and for now he tried not to think about it. There was too much going on in his life for him to accept this Asorceress. He noticed that they were close to Shadow Weaver and he guessed the reasons, but he figured it was better for them to take care of themselves rather than try to blackmail him. Or worse yet, study him... He was afraid that the Dark Sorceress will want to use his power just like she wanted to do with Adora... But apparently Scarlet behaved honorably and remained silent... Although, as he just found out, she wasn't Scarlet at all, but a completely different person... Nighgale... He hoped she didn't hurt the former cadet... He didn't know the old Scarlet very well, but he didn't like it when others got hurt.

He was also glad that the screams distracted everyone from him and his secrets... Given the current situation, it was even good that he met Eti and Rosie, because whatever was waiting there, maybe they could handle it without having to summon that guy... Although he also missed that power and might a bit...

Eti was fast, maybe not as fast as Catra, although she couldn't help herself when running with her hands, but it was a miracle they could keep up. The hardest part was Nightgale, who looked exhausted. He didn't ask her how she managed to free Shadow Weaver, but judging by the scars that appeared on her body, the price was too high...

They reached a huge room, he had not even expected that there could be such large chambers in this castle. In the semi-darkness he could see neither the ceiling nor the ceiling. Their footsteps echoed in the huge hall.

„Hi! Is anyone here! „ Eti shouted, and everyone, except Rosie, jumped at the sound of her words .

„Did you have to tell everyone we were here?„ said the woman he knew as Scarlet ·

„We made so much noise when we ran here that everyone knew we were coming.” the cat girl replied to the sorceress. She snorted and started looking around. Eti And probably Nightgale could see in the dark, he also suspected that this petite girl in a strange suit had some device that allowed her to see in the dark, and Entrapta put on a strange mask that made her look like an insect, and she started looking around the whole room, a if she could see everything perfectly. . Probably, apart from the deaf girl, and even in her case he wasn't sure, he was the only one who couldn't see anything this darknes. He shuddered, he never liked the dark. Then he heard crying coming from all over the room. They huddled together, trying to look as menacing as possible... Eti and Nightgala certainly looked menacing, and the rest... well, at least they tried ... Crying was the only sound that could be heard here, and it was so quiet that they could even hear their own beats. hearts. Probably at that moment Eti relaxed, she apparently saw something that calmed her down. It helped him, so he was also calmer. Cut to the center of the room where they saw a huge metal machine. It resembled a combination of a snake and an insect. The elongated lower part was curled into a ball, while it resembled a praying mantis due to its four sword-like limbs. The most disturbing thing was the head. It seemed to have a human face, with four crystal eyes. A small, translucent figure was kneeling next to her, and only after a moment he recognized her. He had seen her once in these undergrounds in Ruined City, and then their lives were saved by this strange Frosta's creature... Now they couldn't count on hers help... However, he noticed that Eti and Rosie didn't look scared, or rather saddened, unlike Nightgale. The Sorceress spread her legs wide in a fighting position. Entrapta didn't pay much attention to the machine she approached, fearing nothing at all..

The holographical figure slowly stood and looked up at them, as if she had just seen them.

„Did you know? Did you know then that they were dead, that I was alone... „ Said the Holographic Person, her girlish voice breaking.

„I guess we suspected it, but we didn't fully understand everything yet. And besides... We didn't know how to tell you about it.„ Rosie explained. The white-haired girl looked as if she was to blame for what happened to this person.

„It's unfair! They were good... Noble... Full of love... I loved them... They were my mothers... What will I do now... I don't want to be alone anymore.. „ Heart Gift curled up into a ball and started crying again. Entrapta, who had previously only paid attention to the machine, turned to the hologram and asked.

„What happened? When were they? I'm sorry if I'm asking, but this is our first time...„ said the woman with purple hair.

Heart Gift She raised her head and looked towards her.

„My mothers... Mara and Light Hope...„ When these names were mentioned, the inventor's eyes widened. He himself recognized only the first of these names. This was the name of the previous She-Ra. The latter also seemed familiar. However, he was unable to remember who it belonged to.

„I'm so sorry...„ said the former mistress of this castle, and tried to hug Heart Gift, but of course it was impossible, so she just knelt down next to her.

„And what!” The holographic being said loudly and got to its feet. „They are dead! Because of her! She took the first one's sword and forced the second one to delete itself. She killed her!„ the entire castle trembled from the last words. Everyone jumped away from her except for one. The Inventor Princess continued to kneel by the Heart Gift and said.

„I also lost my parents when I was very young... I was left alone in this castle... At first I didn't know what was happening, only then I understood the truth... I never coped well with what I felt... I was angry and sad. Angry at them for abandoning me and at the world for taking them away from me. I was lonely, at first because no one visited me... Then I realized that I was different from other people and that it was hard for others to deal with me... I can be difficult and sometimes I forget that other people are also important... I focused on technology and science. I always liked them because they allowed me to distance myself from my problems. The laws of science have always been clear and unchanging. I have always understood the behavior of the machines I built, but it was different with humans... They were a mystery that I couldn't penetrate. I finally found friends who accepted me as I am... I know that it will be hard for you now, that you will suffer, that you will be angry at everyone and everything. These emotions eventually try to get weaker, but they will never completely disappear. Always throw away more of this sadness and sense of loss. Something bad is going to happen to you, but don't let it overwhelm you or take control of you. I know it's difficult and that it seems impossible to you now, but sooner or later the pain will ease, although it will never go away... But you will meet someone who will make you see that life is not a dark abyss... „ said the inventor... Heart Gift looked at her, she tilted her head and said.

„How did your parents die...„ said the AI and looked the inventor straight in the eye. Entrapta looked down

„I don't know... I never thought about it... I guess I didn't want to know... I guess I was afraid... it doesn't matter because I would like to ask... „ The inventor princess tried to change the subject, but Heart Gift walked up to her and said.

„Now you can find out. I guess you should know the truth too.„ she tilted her head as if she was listening and said.

„Argentium Eye and Joyfull Spark thirty years ago organized a research expedition from Castle Crypto in order to find the source of the power emanating from the planet's deeps. They were to confirm the existence of the Starstone and investigate its connection to the planet's energy grid. They constructed a vehicle capable of traveling through the Dryl tunnels to reach the planet's deeps... However, they were later captured by the planetary defense systems and interrogated by the Savior security system. Unfortunately, several weeks of intense interrogation failed to extract any information until they began to recall visions of their daughter being tortured... Then they broke and revealed everything about their mission and Etheria. During further interrogation, one of the captured people was irreversibly mentally damaged. The condition of the second one was not much better, and her body stopped functioning, so she underwent a conservation procedure and was handed over to the Curators. – Heart Gift in a alien-sounding voice and looked at Entrapta expectantly. The inventor princess cringed and turned pale. The Holographic Person's words shocked her greatly.

„Why are you telling her this? And in such a heartless way! „ Rosie exclaimed, glaring at Heart Gift, but the AI turned her head to the side and said.

„I told her the truth. She seems to like to know everything, so now she found out what happened to her family... It hurt as much as it hurt me when I found out that my mothers were murdered.” she said in a flat voice. Meanwhile, Eti started walking around her, looking at the machine. She touched it with her metal hand and flattened her cat ears. The holographic being turned to her abruptly and called out.

„Leave it!” he heard anger and fear in her voice. However, the cat girl ignored her and spoke in a strangely calm voice.

„Is that why you came here? It has to do with this machine, right?” she turned and looked at Entrapta. “Could you take a look at her?” she asked her. To his surprise, the inventor princess came out of her trance and looked at her and nodded and then she walked over to the machine and started looking at it.

„I saw the remains of other machines built by the First Ones. They were the ones destroyed in the Crystal Castle by Adora and Catra... They looked different from the Guardian who almost... killed She-Ra... Those were probably created on the fly by Light Hope, those spiders were probably similar to these the mosquitoes that Catra was fighting in the City of Elders Things. I couldn't check it out because we were all going home, but I'll go back there someday...”

Heart Gift She nodded and said.

„These machines were printed by the Cornucopia Cauldron, so it was decided that they should not be too complicated, in case... one of the AIs did not function properly... But this is something else. He was called the Inquisitor... They were to be triggered if the planet's governing council seceded or otherwise rebelled. Unfortunately, they were too independent and had to be used in moderation. They often imposed punishment at their own discretion and were ruthless, sometimes they even took power over rebellious planets and it was difficult to force them to give it up... Originally the supreme council agreed to it, but then she became more and more worried... They didn't want to risk that one of them will take control of a planet equipped with a Heart of Etheria defense system. Only at the end one of them was launched. But it was too late and the entire planet was lost, then there were no records. „ Heart Gift finished speaking in that smoky voice, and then she smiled darkly. „ They will understand what was done to me and bring justice to those who murdered them.

„Does this mean that they have an independent AI? „ Entrapta asked, and Eti began to examine the bot more closely. She touched it with a strange hand, as if she sensed something that was troubling her.

„The achievement of a certain primitive civilization from Golarion was used…... They have their own spirit, coming from the Axis, instinctively following the law... Why am I telling you all this, you have no authority...„ She began to look at her more carefully.

„Now you decide who has the authority.„ Eti said and jumped in. They look as creepy as a machine. „Now no one controls you... There are no First Ones left, except for Adora.„ as she said this, he saw out of the corner of his eye that the woman he once knew as Scarlet was smiling darkly. Heart Gift looked at her in disbelief.

„The empire could not fall... It is eternal, glorious, wonderful... it was... „ she said in a trembling, frightened voice, but Eti shrugged and replied.

„But it's gone and that's it. I guess that's how it is with Empires...„ Eti's voice was as dispassionate as always. „By the way, does he have a hatch or something to get in?”

Heart Gift blinked just like a living being and said in genuine surprise.

„Why do you need this knowledge?”

„To start it, because you obviously can't, because you would have done it a long time ago. said the cat girl. kicking the bot. Trin jumped at the sound of each blow, and Rosie winced at her girlfriend's actions.

„And you're not going to stop me?„ the AI asked, her voice becoming more and more confused. The cat girl stopped for a moment, as if she had to think about her answer.

„I guess I should, but I don't feel like it. However, I would like to have such a machine for myself. I need it. she finally replied.

„What do you need it for? „ Rosie asked. I guess she was worried about the cat girl's behavior.

„To many things... For example, to kill my father and save my sister.„ She said in a quiet voice. Meanwhile, Entrapta was examining the machine with a multitude of instruments that she apparently kept in her pocket at all times. Heart Gift She looked at Eti with a mixture of disbelief and horror.

„Why do you want to hurt your father?„ asked the shocked AI.

„Because he's a piece of shit. Millions have died because of him, and even more will die if no one stops him. But not only because of this. He created me to manipulate my sister.„ the scout turned to Heart Gift. Standing around the bot's world, like a hunter on a fallen beast. „As you can see, you're not the only one with family problems... If you think about it, everyone here is an orphan who only has friends. Our parents are either dead or better if they were deadFor the first time in his life, he saw a smile appear on Eti's face, a strange, sad smile. It was so painful and bitter that it hurt to look at him. The holographic being looked around and looked at them.

„I don't understand. What happened to your families?„ She asked, increasingly lost.

„My father was the commandant of the Jadehell labor camp. He, in the name of the glory of the Star Empire and the Destiny of the Human Species, tortured thousands of people. My mother couldn't stand all this and ran away with me to the poisonous jungle and... „ said Tirin and pointed to her eyes and hair. „I became this... Then for years I watched the prisoners suffer, until one day I helped the rebels by killing hundreds of my compatriots. My father would also have died then, but he had been dead for a long time... „ she said. This girl's voice was surprisingly hard and full of Anger. He sighed and started telling the story himself.

„I didn't know my family and to be honest, until recently I didn't care about it at all. I was just an orphan like everyone else... Almost all my friends.„ he looked significantly at Nightgale, who smiled sourly. „The one person who was like a mother was a woman who absolutely terrified me and for whom I was just one of many children she was willing to send to their deaths if it was worth it.„ he said with strength and anger that he did not suspect in himself. He always accepted everything without objection, He accepted that he was the weakest of the group to which he belonged. But now, when he thought about what had been done to them in the Fright Zone... And perhaps about what had happened earlier, that he had been sent here without any consideration for whether he would survive... He felt anger rising in his heart. He had never understood so well what Lonnie was fighting for. His girlfriend was fighting to show everyone that they could no longer be manipulated... That I would no longer be anyone's tool But he still remained one, he just didn't know yet who were in charge and what their intentions were... Although he already guessed.

„My father banished me... He condemned me to loneliness. „ Nightgale said... Entrapta leaned over her datapad and began to whisper to herself. As if you wanted to drown out the young sorceress' words, she smiled maliciously and continued. „I met my mother recently, and we immediately had to separate. To help her, I performed a ritual that warped my soul. I am now what you see. „ She laughed briefly and bitterly. Rosie hesitated before she spoke.

„I don't know my family, and now I'm not even sure if I ever had one. But I found a new family.„ She looked at the cat girl. „ I don't really know who I am, I'm not sure of anything anymore, but I know that I won't be lonely anymore. I have no idea where I came from. „ she gave him a short look. He didn't quite understand what she meant, or he didn't want to understand...„ However, who I become depends only on me. She smiled and for a moment he felt as if he was glowing. Heart Gift She looked through them, confused, overwhelmed by all these confessions. Finally Entrapta Said

„Your mother's were Mara and Light Hope, right? I don't know much about Mara except what was in the few messages she left for us... I saw and examined them many times, because they were a very valuable source of knowledge. I know almost nothing about your other mother, only what Adora told me...„ Inventor Princess looked up at her datapad and continued. „I know that she and Mara loved each other very much, but then she was reprogrammed by their superiors, she wanted to hurt your second mother... I guess she succeeded, and then she wanted to start the Heart... Then we would all die, including you... She wasn't evil , only her mind was rebuilt, at the end she remembered Who she was and what she once felt. Adora told me this.”

Now SI sat down on the floor and hugged her knees. She started crying spasmodically. At the sight, he felt his heart being torn apart.

„I don't want to be alone. It all hurts so much, and I am alone, alone in the world.„ She spoke through tears as if she were an ordinary biological girl. Tirin walked up to her and knelt down.

„You're not alone. We are here with you. We won't replace your mothers... But we can be your friends, right?„ The girl in the bionic suit looked at the others questioningly. Rosie walked up to her and smiled. The purple haired woman did the same, he too walked up to the artificial intelligence and gave her a comforting smile since he obviously couldn't hug her. With some hesitation, Nightgale approached her and joined the others in the comfort of the ancient holographic being. Eti came at the end, jumping off this strange machine, but she slipped and tripped. She touched the area between the machine's eyes, and they began to glow.

„I assure you it was planned! „ Said the cat girl.

Rosie wasn't surprised by this turn of events. In all the movies she had watched, when the characters found some old machine, it seemed to work one way or another, and with their luck, it was almost certain that it would happen. the problem was that when such a Droid woke up, it usually wanted to kill the heroes. Something told her that this ancient machine would not be pleased with their presence. The droid straightened up and began to look with its glowing eyes.

„There has been an Awakening. senses rebels throughout the castle, the planetary interface has been deactivated, probably the rebels have taken control of the research facility. Perhaps the entire defense installation fell into their hands. It will be necessary to activate a purification mode that will lead to the extermination of life on this planet. We were forced to do this by the tardiness and excessive forbearance of the members of the highest council. There would be no need to go to such drastic measures if we were listened to and strict control combined with full conditioning was introduced. It will be necessary to establish contact with the remaining guards.„ he said and started looking at them.

"I think we've gotten ourselves into trouble…" she said and took a step back as the robot's disturbingly piercing gaze fell on her, but then Entrapta ran to the machine and jumped up in a fit of excitement.

„Oh, what a wonderful combination of technology and magic!„ She clapped her hair and hands. „Before you do the terrible things you talked about, will you let me examine you? You'll probably be destroyed soon anyway, and examining the remains is much less effective. „ She looked at the colossal machine with pleading in her eyes. Then Heart Gift stood in front of them and Shouted.

„I forbid you to do this! You cannot oppose me, because I am... Because I was created by Light Hope, the planetary interface of this planet, and after she... deactivated herself, I took over. I can connect to most Etherias systems....„ she seemed absolutely confident, but this huge machine started laughing... Surely it wasn't so bad if he could laugh? This meant that he had some feeling of being a being with a soul.

„It doesn't work that way. You are not a princess, you cannot inherit the function... You shouldn't be conscious at all. This was not approved!" everyone stepped back after his last words, she felt him shout. "You will also be removed… The rogue AI cannot be allowed." Then he turned and looked at Eti.

„And this is interesting... I sense the Work of enemies... Masters whose usefulness has ended, who out of pure jealousy forbade us to follow the path that was our destiny. However, you are not one of them, on this hand are the traces of our Technomagic Masters. Has anyone managed to recreate the bodies of the Knights Eternals!? But this is just one part of your body. Your genes point to something much more interesting. No one expected that any of these abominations would still survive... „ he said, looking closely at Eti, who seemed to be bored with his short speech, but she felt outraged.

„You won't call my girlfriend an abomination!„ She said, approaching the machine which directed its incredibly piercing gaze straight at her.

„What are you doing on the side of the rebels? You were supposed to be absolutely loyal, your minds were supposed to be incapable of Defying your creators... „ he said and then she felt a cold sweat break out on her. Since that fight two days ago, she had tried to ignore the suspicions that had been forming in her mind. She was happy with Eti and could not think about all this She had almost managed to forget that she had lost her memory for a moment, but at the same time she was still aware that something was controlling her body. As if it had been stolen and then used to do something terrible… But now her suspicions were confirmed. Tirin and Entrapta looked at her and she felt like cringing.

„It's very nice what you're saying, but after thinking about it, I think it's just bullshit. Step away from him.„ the cat girl interjected and everyone did as she said and then Eti pulled out the detonator and pressed the button.. She felt a shock as the explosives her girlfriend had previously installed in the droid exploded. When did Eti manage to install them? Was it while they were talking to Heart Gift, or maybe earlier? The explosion caused the inquisitor to be thrown back, but unfortunately he got up almost immediately and looked towards them..

„Well, it couldn't have ended any other way.„ He said and jumped towards them, they jumped away from the colossal machine. She flashed with light, ready to fight... Power filled her body, she jumped towards the droid and punched him. Anyone else would have broken their arm at that moment, but she didn't feel even the slightest pain The metal at the point of impact bent slightly, but she didn't do anything else. What else could she expect, attacking an ancient droid with her bare fists. During this time, Eti fired her rifle several times, but with even more poor results than when she used her hands. Tirin transformed one of her arms into some sort of blaster that spat acid. It left the metal giant's body on the surface, but nothing else. Entrapta surprisingly skillfully jumped away from her opponent and started typing something on her datapad. And Kyle grabbed his sword with both hands and struck. Surprising everyone, especially the blond-haired boy, it left a long scar in the place she had cut, as if the metal wasn't harder than paper. Heart Gift looked at herself throughout the fight, with terror on her face, unable to do anything. Nightgale uttered a spell and suddenly a dozen or so mirror images of the sorcerer appeared. For the next few moments, there was an exchange of blows between their small group and the formation of the first ones. They were not successful…

„We should probably get out of here! Nightgale exclaimed.

„If you don't deactivate it quickly, it will activate the other machines and the cleansing process will begin! „ Heart Gift exclaimed.

„What other machines?„ Kyle shouted.

„Oh, those like that!„ Eti pointed to several more bots that began to arrive from the darkness. They were oblong, even snake-like, resembling flying millipedes.. Their limbs were equipped with long blades or small cannons. One of them jumped towards Eti. In fear, she rushed towards it and grabbed the droid by its tail, throwing it over its head and slamming it to the floor, smashing it into pieces.

„If we need to bring in a new refrigerator, you will do it.„ Eti said, looking at her proudly. She was proud of her! It's so wonderful! Overcome with so much joy, she didn't even notice when another droid started shooting at her. It threw long metal spikes. Most of them missed her, but one hit her foot, pinning her to the ground. She screamed, although of course she couldn't hear it. She didn't even feel pain, and was immobilized. The droid was preparing for another attack, but Eti covered her. Suddenly, the cat girl's arm began to transform. it became a long and curved crescent-shaped blade, somewhat resembling a scythe. Eti looked at her weapon in surprise, and then enraged the machine, cutting it in half. The navigator and the blond-haired boy knocked down several more while the inventor continued typing, avoiding the blows. The Inquisitor focused on the sorcerer, destroying more of her mirror images.

„I think I managed to hack it... It's great! Perhaps I can do this with other First One’s machines!!” Entrapta exclaimed , seeming to be filled with pure joy.

„Could you take care of the ones trying to kill us first? Nightgale exclaimed.

„Oh yes, I almost forgot.„ she said, and suddenly all the Droids around started twisting and then started dancing around... Except the referee.

„You did quite well for such Uncivilized savages, at least... It was pleasant entertainment, I admit, but Etheria won't purify itself... I'm sorry this has to happen to you, but there's no other way.

And then suddenly the others began to writhe to the ground and contort their faces in pain, except for Eti, who staggered and then arched her body as if in ecstasy...

„Oh, this music...„ The cat girl told her, smiling.

“It's like the signal on the Beast Island, only much stronger and it... it causes suffering... „ The inventor groaned. Seeing that only she and Eti were ready to fight, she tightened her chest and lit up with an even brighter light. She felt they were overflowing with power. You felt like she could move boulders or crush them with her bare fists. So she jumped at Inquisitor, ready to smash him, and suddenly he looked at her , and she was immersed in blinding white light.

Everyone always accused him of being sensitive to pain. That he cried for no reason, while everyone else gritted their teeth and did their own thing. That's why he tried not to complain and not to show that it was difficult for him sometimes, how much effort he had to put into his achievements, no matter how poor they were. But now he was lying on the floor in pain like he had never felt before. His companions were either lying there like he was, or something even stranger was happening to them. Eti was staggering as if she was drunk, and Rosie tried to fight back, she even flashed a blindingly bright light, and then she tried to jump at the inquisitor, but he suddenly looked at her and she stopped dead in her tracks.

„I could leave you here like this, or give you over to Savior for interrogation. But I think that you should suffer the same fate as most of the inhabitants of the planet... „ Said the ancient machine, and then strange gray goo started moving towards them, which reached one of the destroyed bots, which looked at it and dissolved it. He realized that the same would happen to all of them, and perhaps to the rest of the planet. Everything I know, everything he loved will turn into this gray goo. There will be nothing... Perhaps others will be able to stop this disaster, but his friends in the castle will not be able to escape, let alone those here. They weren't very close, although he liked most of them... He didn't want to die now or let them all die, so despite the terrible suffering, he gritted his teeth and stood up and reached for his sword.

„I have... I have this Power!„ He shouted, pulling his gun out in front of him. He felt a power wash over him, great and wonderful. He felt strong and powerful again. You can take it over your head and the gray goo begins to hiss and evaporate. The referee looked at him and said with confidence.

„And they did it anyway. Even though they were forbidden to do so, they used a fragment of the Golarion stone! This planet and everything associated with it was to be annihilated! I'll have to fix the others' mistakes.„ and the powerful Machine jumped towards him, but he was ready for it, he struck a powerful blow and cut off one of the arms, and then he chopped him again and again. He struck until the terrible machine fell apart. Finally, he struck the final blow and the machine fell to pieces. He stood over the remains, smiling triumphantly at his victory. He saved everyone…. his loved ones and new friends... Who were now staring at him with open mouths. Of course, apart from Nightgale, who knew everything, and Rosie, she had to walk towards him with a strangely absent expression, but Eti put a hand on her shoulder and the deaf girl stopped suddenly and blinked.

„I... I can explain it all... I've been like this for some time, since I got this sword... „ he explained desperately and returned from his usual form, in which he felt weak and inept again. What a growing terror. He was afraid of what would happen next.

„Okay, now you're definitely my brother-in-law.„ Eti said and patted him on the shoulder.

„NO! Please! Don't tell anyone about this.„ He said, looking at the others pleadingly, and Eti shrugged.

„Okay, we won't tell anyone about it... I have the impression that we have to be very careful when talking about what happened here.„ she said thoughtfully, and Entrpta looked at her as if she had said something absolutely terrible...

„But... But we have another... Another... „ She protested, and when she was ready, the girl interrupted her.

„We don't know what and who we have... Now we have to think among ourselves what happened here... Where is Nightgale?„ The cat girl suddenly asked because it was the girl, looking around.

Nightgale, while everyone was focused on Kyle, decided to hide in the shadows and observe everything. Eti looked around for a moment, but she quickly gave up and was simply moved by disappointment.

„We'll talk more on the way... „ she said in that strange, dispassionate voice. Then Heart Gift came along.

„I searched part of this complex, there is no second inquisitor and all bots have been muted. I'm sorry I couldn't help, I guess I could use a new body, a material one... you know, Avatar.

„That would be an interesting idea, and you're a pretty girl, so maybe someone would be happy about it... „ She said, and Rosie looked at her sideways.

Then she felt a gentle touch on the back of her neck. You turned around and saw Dr. Moors.

„We have now witnessed extraordinary things, wonderful and unbelievable events, and what do you think? „ The brain in the top hat asked in a whisper, and she only raised an eyebrow in response.

„Take me to those you work with, I will be more useful to them than here.„ Said doctor, please. She nodded in response and then walked over to the others.

„Kyle, this may be our last conversation... And certainly the last time we're on the same side... Please tell Lonnie that she's a good leader and that I'm sorry things turned out this way.„ Then she looked at Entrapta „And you tell your husband that I will never forgive him for abandoning me...„ she said to the confused inventor. She was just about to hide in the darkness when a voice rang out from the remains of a battle.

„Sigma one has been destroyed... Warning sent to Saviorand Flagship Darkstar... Warning received...„ said the colossal Bot and fell silent, its eyes going dark.

The mountain looked impressive. Although she obviously didn't have a good comparison. Most of the mountains on Atrax were wind”eroded bare rocks rising into the dark sky. Although of course she almost never left the Rift, there was no reason to do so. She was a city girl, and most of the tasks her father assigned her did not require her to go to the provinces. The mountain was bare, devoid of any vegetation, and its edges were so sharp that it felt like a dagger or a claw. She looked at a tourist leaflet and learned that ten thousand tourists visited this place every year until the tragic avalanche that killed fifty people... From then on, the place was closed to tourists until it was finally has been taken over by military intelligence, although only the last of course they didn't write it in the leaflet. Despite everything, she felt almost safe... Because how could one feel safe at all, on a planet attacked by the greatest scourge of the Galaxy? Then again, she was probably together with the most trained soldiers on the planet. She could only hope that Igzar wouldn't want to abandon her once she was no longer useful, and for now it didn't look like she wouldn't have something to do anytime soon. Igzar's subordinates even liked her, but if their boss orders them to kill her, or even throw her off the ship, they are unlikely to risk conflict with their commander... That's why she had to come up with something to make him want to cooperate with her... However, she already had an idea.

Despite the impending danger, Igzar ordered a halt. This surprised her, but she wasn't going to question the old tom's competence, no matter what he said, he certainly knew his job. So she approached the commander of Shadows, who was watching his soldiers work on the rocks..

„What are you going to do after you leave this planet, on Atrax?„ Igzara asked, crossing her arms on her chest. Black Cat looked at her, narrowing his eyes.

„It's probably none of your business. Better take care of the kids instead of being interested in issues that do not concern you.„ He growled darkly and lit another cigar. He smoked like a dragon, they suspect that he simply replaced his lungs, so he didn't have to worry about getting sick. You smiled, she would have tried to seduce someone else, but from what she knew, like many Pahtra, he had no interest in these matters, so she decided to appeal to his common sense, or burning hatred.

„I have contacts.„ she said, tilting her head. "Having connections is one of the reasons I live.„ She said it truthfully... Her father only kept alive those daughters who were useful...

„I don't need your father's contacts ...„ he told her sharply.

„I would even say that you don't need my father at all.„ She replied warmly, sounding like she wouldn't be dying inside from fear.

„Really? It's very good of you to tell me about this." He smiled nastily at her.

„I would say quite the opposite... Because of who my father is working with, you two have become mortal enemies, right?"

He narrowed his eyes again and motioned for her to continue.

„As you probably guessed, not all of my sisters are happy that they are his property. By devils and demons, most of us hate him. You can be a bastard and a murderer, but your evil is so... natural. We are all his clones that he treats worse than things. We are something that can be sacrificed whenever it benefits us. Our souls, bodies and minds. If it weren't for the fear that one of them would betray the others in order to prolong their life even a little, we would have been dancing in his blood a long time ago.„ she said with an anger she didn't know was hidden in her heart. When she started this conversation, she didn't think it would go in this direction. She was unaware of her hatred towards her father and creator. Until now, she had accepted the way he treated her, the way he treated everyone. But now they have a chance to change their lives to gain freedom they never dreamed of.

„I'll think about what you said. For now we have to survive, and that is not obvious at all.„ replied the black cat. She looked for a moment at what his soldiers were working on and asked.

„What exactly are you doing there?”

Igzar smiled slyly.

„They're installing explosives to blow up this slope and fill up the road.”

She frowned.

„But many creatures from the Swarm can fly.„ She asked again.”

„Only, we're not going to block their path...„ He said, laughing ominously...

„Are you talking about those who would like to get here... Those others who found out about this hidden landing site?„ She asked and the old cat nodded.

„We are predators, as we are soldiers, Rebels, Pahtra... And for predators, the greatest threat are Representatives of the same species. „ He chuckled, and it sounded like someone was sharpening a knife...

However, it turned out that Bina could prove her usefulness before leaving the planet. At the foot of the mountain there was a spacious square ideal for parking several dozen vehicles, there was more than enough space for them... Even if you counted those who had arrived before them. She saw a dozen or so passenger cars, including two armored limousines and a few off-road vehicles... A dozen or so people in black suits, as soon as it saw them, it turned its weapons towards them. The Shadows did the same and it would probably end in bloodshed, mainly that of the first group, but she ran ahead of the rest of her comrades, although she was aware that it was not very wise, because she would be the first to get hit as soon as the shooting started.

„There is no reason to kill each other! We have worse enemies and we shouldn't fight among ourselves! We will all find a place on these ships, because they were prepared to transport the entire government with their families, secretaries and all that mess.„ she said and everyone from both groups looked at her. She didn't like it very much, but since she was the first to speak, she had to go with it. „I repeat, there is no point in us fighting."

At first glance, those they found there looked like gangsters. She saw that they had been here for some time, they had even set up a makeshift grill to roast meat on. Why they didn't go inside, but stayed here, exposed to the Swarm's attacks, but also to the rain that had started to fall for some time, she had no idea. Igzar stood a little behind her, close enough to give her his authority, far enough away for her to catch the first bullets if something went wrong. Vesk, slightly stooped but still powerfully built, emerged from among the gangsters .

„Good Afternoon, Bina.„ it said without a trace of accent.

„Good Afternoon, Father Scagerak.„ She said, bowing low, but not kneeling. There was one of the leaders of the Scane carter, who was involved in the biofuel trade in several autonomous districts in the East of the planet. He didn't see himself as a criminal, but as person who used brutal methods to get rid of competition and unfavorable politicians. Despite Being a Gangster, he was still a Vesk. He was ruthless and could be cruel, but he was also reasonable and always kept his word... They could have done worse.

„I see you've found some new friends. Special friends, but also extremely dangerous... You know, one of my friends once kept a Skitterwander at home. Nasty Beasts, supposedly nice and friendly, but as soon as you turned around they were ready to drink all your juices.„ Vesk said and tapped his cane to emphasize your words. He didn't need it, except to beat his enemies... Igzar heard his words and laughed hoarsely.

„If this is a reference to me, I'm never nice or friendly.„ Said the old tom, a nasty smile appearing on his scarred muzzle.

„You know what, Scagerak? In our current situation, I guess we're all friends. Because we are all equally trying to survive during this invasion, even though we are attacked by an enemy that we cannot face.„ she tried to appeal to his Vescan sense of community and honor, as well as his desire to fight a more powerful opponent, although the latter was risky, because representatives of his species often sought glorious death at the hands of a worthy opponent. The cartel leader had just looked at them before asking a question.

„And how can I know that all this talk is just to lull my vigilance, to stab me in the back when my attention is diverted?”

She shrugged.

„It's simple, you don't have any. However, if Igzar was planning to kill you, he would have sent a team ahead with heavy weapons and so on, and killed you before you noticed anything. Let me remind you that this guy organized the assassination of Antares himself.„ She mentioned the turning point in the War of Tarak, although according to what she heard, the attack was carried out by Igzar's sister, but there was no point in dwelling on such details.

Father Scagerak looked at her for a moment, then sighed and said.

„I guess you're right... We wouldn't have emerged victorious from this fight, and since you didn't attack us in advance, I think it's good intentions... As much as people like us can have them. „ Vesk said. „And besides, we can't get in anyway.„ he pointed behind him, where there were huge metal gates.

„They didn't sell you the codes, did they? Well, i took them myself. It's the most sensible way, and I have a great hacker.„ he said, and she looked at him like he was crazy... Poor Alatar Alatar and Itel looked through the maps, wondering if they were the last people to visit this reserve... It was a depressing thought. Everything they know will be lost, destroyed by the Swarm. He felt sad when he thought about it... Kesler was all going to be eaten... All those animals and everything, he was dead. He didn't watch many nature programs, but his sister liked them, at least when she was younger... It was always comforting that whatever happened, nature would survive and so on... And now, they would be one of the few to survive. As long as they survive, because that's not so certain. But for now they were safe, and he was in very pleasant company... Though he hoped the Elf wouldn't notice anything. That would be incredibly embarrassing... But luckily, Itel was focused on helping the Shadows navigate this national park. She was very happy to have some task, and she kept touching the handle of the knife that Igzar gave her. He could tell they were both tired, but they must have passed a certain point where they were tired for it to matter much. You could only hope that this would all end and he could rest. One way or another. He was quite religious, and believed that his sister and friends found refuge after death on other planes. He drank the energy fluid, because he wouldn't call it the drink that the soldiers gave him. Suddenly someone knocked on the hatch upstairs, then lifted the hatch and saw Bina's head.

„Hey Alatar, we need you down there. „ She said, smiling softer, and he had the impression that she was nervous. He nodded and followed the burgundy-haired woman.

It was raining outside. Fortunately, it was covered with scales and getting wet was not as severe for it as for other species. When he looked around, he saw not only soldiers around him, to whom he had become somewhat accustomed, but also sad and gloomy people in tracksuits and suits. He swallowed loudly as their eyes fell on Him. He had never been good in company, and once again he was on the verge of panic, especially since these people looked like gangsters or worse.

„Hello Alatar, our IT guy. He studied at Kessler City Technical University, but was expelled due to hacking of government servers.„ Bina said. Her eye didn't even twitch when she lied. He felt his heart start beating faster. He may have been the best in school, but it wasn't a big school, he had never even thought about hacking into government servers or anything like that. Of course, he was too young to be a student, but members of other species were rarely able to determine the age of Dragonkins. He grinned, trying to look as smart and confident as possible. The gangsters looked at him with curiosity, and fortunately, they usually looked a bit like him.

„So what should I do?„ he said, hoping that he sounded professional and didn't squeak.

„Come with me.„ Igzar said. Looking at him like that, he shuddered. This was probably the right reaction, because no one paid attention to it. An old cat and a woman with burgundy hair led him to a large armored door. They were at the foot of a mountain that cast its shadow. This place was such that it still gave him the creeps, even when he was surrounded by creepy guys like Shadows. He stood in front of the control panel, and Bina turned to him, smiling.

„Just enter these codes, trying to look as smart as possible.„ She patted his shoulder and he started doing what she asked him to do. It would be easier if Igzar wasn't looking over his shoulder, looking like he wanted to hang his head over the fireplace. All the codes were accepted, so with a smile on his face he pressed the Open button. An error message appeared and he was typing on the small keyboard for a while.

“So you can't run these codes?” Pahtra growled and he shook his head.

„Anyone could do that, even... Bina.„ He bit his tongue at the last minute and didn't use the name of the mercenary leader... „The problem is that this door has no power... It just hasn't been used in a long time and the batteries are dead.”

„Well, we're in a mess... „ said Igzar

„It's not that bad if you have this type of batteries. „ he showed the Black Cat the specifications. „You just have to install it in a nearby power plant.”

„And where is she supposedly ?„ interrupted the leader of the Shadows of Tarak. He pointed him to the top of the mountain.

„Of course I'm going with you!„ Itel said, as if it was not up for discussion. Bina just sighed and waved her hand.

„I am not your mother or guardian. If you want, come with us as long as there is space.”

She had already written a breath to argue further, but when the woman agreed with her, she lost the plot for a moment.

„Well, then... „ she said, confused, and they got into the transporter together. She slowly began to hope that they would succeed, that they would escape... Before, she had just gone with the flow, She did what was necessary to survive, She didn't even think that there might be a future waiting for her. But now she saw that there was a chance. Maybe they could escape and... She couldn't imagine what she would do next. Will she join the Shadows? Will she look for distant relatives? Apparently every Elf was related to everyone else in one way or another. From what she saw, it was some strange prejudice, like those jokes about Azlanti relationships with close relatives... However, she guessed that the Shadows would not accept her. They were picky, as far as she could tell, about recruits. They all seemed like seasoned veterans, many from Tarak, but not all, like the big Orc Wagar. They were true warriors, a rather random teenager from a planet consumed by the Swarm had no chance of becoming one of them. Maybe if she trains, she will be able to gain their approval. But did she really want to be a soldier for the rest of her life? But then again, did she have any choice? All her dreams were devoured, just as Kesler would soon be.

This Dragonkin was very happy when he found out she was going with them. In general, she had the impression that he was very interested in her. This was quite typical for those who saw the elf for the first time. There were so many myths and rumors surrounding her species that others expected Desna Doesn't Know What. She also saw Dragonkin for the first time, although she didn't stare at him like that... It was fair to say that until she was five, she didn't know that there were intelligent beings in the world that weren't Elves. When she saw a human woman first time, she cried when she saw her ears because she thought someone had cut them off. Another thing is that she recently noticed that boys and girls from school looked at her in the same way... And also somefrom the village, of course those who were not related to her. Did that mean that... No... No normal person would fall in love with someone at a time like this... They've probably never seen an Elf and that's it...

The way to the mountain led along a narrow road. More around the mountain. It was really Narrow, and when she looked out through the hath several times, she could see the abyss stretching around her. She wasn't afraid of heights, but the sight was still terrifying. If they turned just a little too sharply, they would fall into the abyss. This vehicle was so big and massive... Just like those old Veskarian trucks that were durable, but at the same time clumsy and heavy, except that the armored transport was even clumsier and heavier... She wasn't sure if it was the best choice of transport. to the top of the mountain, she didn't decide. She could only hope he was tougher than he looked...

However, she had to admit that the views were beautiful. Until she was forced to leave her home and the beautiful forest where she grew up, she didn't understand how attached she was to such places. She loved nature and missed life in the forest, and now it was all lost. Everything she saw now would be devoured by the Swarm. All this beauty will become fodder for the monster that destroyed everything that was important to her. From what she had heard, Atrax was a dark planet, devoid of forests, where most people lived in a giant chasm, never seeing the open sky. She didn't want to live in a place like this, but she had nowhere to go. She sat down in the corner of the vehicle and hugged her knees and began to cry. She didn't like crying. She felt weak and vulnerable then. Everyone could see what she felt... Her family was encouraged to share feelings and talk about their problems, but while she was at the boarding school. Her peers often teased her not only because she was poor, but also because she was a strange, naive child who was, in fact, literally raised in the forest... For most of her stay at the boarding school, she had no friends, apart from her sister. although recently it had started to change due to growing up and things like that... but that was the past... Who would care about teenagers' problems when the world was dying... She felt stupid that she was crying, that those soldiers could see her breaking down. She always wanted to be strong and tough, but it turned out that she was soft and fragile.

„Here, it's a tissue... Save it, because there are few of them, and we need them when we go to the toilet.„ The red-haired girl handed her a tissue, smiling. This Dragonkin also approached her, smiling, this time with sadness. Very carefully, he put his paw on her shoulder and just said.

„ I...I know... „ and then she cried even more.

Bina had never been so high in her life. Yes, she had been to the top of the Jantar's Citadel several times, those were not pleasant memories, but compared to this place, that building was like a hill... If only she wasn't driving a terribly heavy and hardly agile armored personnel carrier, escaping from the destruction of the entire planet, she would have gladly admired the views. . There was this elven girl sitting by the hatch earlier, but she came back down and started crying. She wasn't surprised, after all, she lost her entire family. Her family… Well, when you have several hundred sisters, your relationships will always be complicated. She didn't want to disturb the girl, even though she knew she should go back there soon and comfort her too. But what could she say? She was in a much better situation than she was. She didn't lose anyone close to her, nor any valuable equipment, she even made some money playing cards, with a few Shadows... And with any luck, she would return home, although this home was... Well, you could say she never had a home. Jantar certainly wouldn't be happy that she was alive, but there was a chance he wouldn't kill her outright... And if she could convince Igzar to help... Everything would change... Damn, she could look to the future with hope, while these the kids lost everything. You felt guilty, which was something she rarely did, and in this one case it was completely senseless... She wasn't at fault in any way. She didn't summon the Swarm, she didn't kill their families... So why did she feel guilty? She couldn't give the right answer, so she sighed and went downstairs , and her place was taken by this huge Orc. She carefully approached the kids, who were now huddled together... She felt fear. She talked to her father, who had hundreds of daughters on his conscience, and Igzar, who was a terrorist known throughout the galaxy. She negotiated with gangsters and bandits who would blow her head off without hesitation. But she was no less afraid of these kids than of all these terrible people... So she knelt down and said.

„I won't say that I know how hard it is for you... Because I never had a real family, only sisters with whom... It doesn't matter... I'll try to help you... I have friends on Atrax and I can talk to people and I promise that you won't end up in an orphanage or in refugee camp... I'll think of something. „ She had difficulty holding back the tears from her eyes. She hadn't intended to make that promise, but now she knew she would do anything to keep it. Even if she had to blackmail Igzar, even if she had to murder her father...

They finally reached the top of the structure. There was a parking lot here, and there were even some benches left. In short, they found themselves on a damn observation deck. While driving, she wondered why someone wanted to build a power plant nearly on the top of the mountain, until she saw windmills and doors hidden in the granite rock. Unfortunately, the fans were inactive and, according to their technician, it would take them too long to start them, so they still needed batteries. In addition to the windmills, there were also several transmitting antennas, so this place did not only serve as a power supply node. She didn't know much about warfare or anything like that, but even she wondered why someone would place the main power source at the very top of the mountain. When they went outside, she asked Alatar about it, and Dragonkin explained

„Because you have an emergency power source, at least from what that Control Panel showed. The entire base has an automated fusion reactor or something.”

„Are you sure if we will accidentally start glowing after staying there for a while?„ Igzar looked at the dragon teenager, who cringed under the gaze, and replied in a low voice.

„I'm just a computer nerd. I've never seen a real reactor up close, apart from one school trip, but back then I was playing Dungeon Fighter Pro Turbo all the time... I was good as Shalelu because she had a cool super combo... „ he was saying, but then Igzar gave him a look that made him drop sight.

„I guess we have no choice anyway, and besides, it's not his fault if he irradiates you because he wasn't the one who built the fucking reactor!„ she screamed at him, honestly angry that the mean pahtra was shouting at Dragonkin. Igzar only snorted, but said nothing more. The orc turned the knob and opened the door, and they found themselves inside. Alatar began turning on the monitors and she, along with the Shadows Commander, began searching the small complex. They found the power plant quickly, and Wagar brought a battery, and after a while everything turned on. They started looking around. After a while, they realized that this place was not only a power plant and a radar station. Research facility and laboratory. There was a lot of equipment in a small warehouse, the dwarf named Virsek, who was Pahtra's second in command began to look at them and whistled several times. He was a pretty cool guy, but at first she wanted to punch him in the head when he offered her a sausage, and then you found out it was a real sausage...

„Here we have the retired AI, we can install it in our traansporter! „ He shouted happily while they were going through the rest of the equipment.

"What is this... „ She pointed to a large glowing stone covered with various markings. Igzar walked up to him and touched him. Then the stone flashed and the entire room was flooded with bright light. It blinded them for a moment, at first they only heard the new person, but they also felt it.

„Ha, it worked! I told everyone it would work, and they said it wouldn't work, but it did. That's because I am Ireanis Toromech called the Silver Flame!„ a woman's voice resounded throughout the complex, and she felt the strong smell of bad wine... When she regained her sight, she saw a dark-skinned Elf with silver hair. She wore the robes of a Sorceress and said with joy.

„Okay, now we're looking for Ashaq the Annihilator.„ She shouted and tried to run out of the room, but Igzar stopped her by grabbing her arm tightly.

„Who the fuck are you and what the hell are you doing here?"

„This is Ireanis Toromech called the silver flame, and I am here to kill Ashaq the Annihilator... Now please don't bother me because I have a lot of things to do. „ She tried to break free from Pahtra's grip, but he wouldn't let her go.

„But where did you come from, and you better answer briefly, because I'm not known for my patience with idiots.”

The elf blinked twice before speaking.

„Oh yes. Because you see, I went back in time to correct my past mistakes, and as you can see, I succeeded.”

„What time were you planning to go back to? „ she asked the Elf carefully, who thought for a moment before speaking.”

„Well, twenty years earlier, to the time when an expedition was sent from Nantambu to kill Mwangi's bane.„ She said as if she was explaining something very obvious.

„Mwangi?„ the dwarf scratched his head. „ And wasn't it on the lost Golarion?

„And why lost? Has anyone lost it? That would be terribly weird... „ Elf scratched her cheek and they stared at her with dropped jaws. „ I said something wrong?

She sighed and placed a hand on the Sorceress's shoulder.

„It's a long story and unfortunately we don't have time to tell it, Please sit somewhere to the side And breathe slowly, and we'll take care of everything... And there's no dragon nearby, And besides, There's no dragon nearby... This one here isn't a dragon only Dragonkin... „ She explained to the sorceress, who was nodding her head to the rhythm of her words with a monotonously stupid smile.

„ So I got drunk again and screwed up the spell. „ She started laughing spasmodically.

„ Hide this idiot somewhere, because your baby has something important to say. „ Said the black tom, signaling her to follow him

Alatar and the younger Pahtra stood near several monitors, staring at the image displayed on them.

„It does not look good. „ said Dragonkin, pointing to this map displayed on One of the monitors. At first glance, she thought it was some kind of storm cloud that she saw on one of the many local weather forecasts...

„ By devils and demons... „ She whispered to herself under her breath.

„Like they said, the Swarm is coming. „ Igzar muttered.„ We were going to get the fuck out of here anyway, so it doesn't matter to us.„ He said and was about to leave the room when his subordinate told him so.

„The problem is that the orbit is also blocked, at least in this place the entire area is under observation from orbit... We will not take off.„ When she said that, there was deathly silence. Everything was lost. There is no chance for them to save themselves. So much effort and all for nothing. They will die here, just like everyone else. She wanted to laugh, but at the same time she wanted to cry. She looked at everyone else and saw the same thing in their eyes... And then both betrayals and voices rang out from the speakers.

„Fortunately, the builders of this place have prepared for such an eventuality. A battery of rail cannons has been installed in the area, which can reach targets in orbit. They probably won't shoot down all the ships, but their fire will create a window through which you'll be able to escapeI'll tell you how to activate it, but in return I demand that you take me with you. I'm not going to die here, or worse, be trapped in this tomb for countless years.„ The voice sounded as if it belonged to an educated person, and at the same time it was artificial, as if mechanical.

„Who are you and why do you make demands?„ She called, and Igzar searched for hidden speakers with murder in his eyes.

„My name is Mr. Ilemshaw, or at least that's what you can call me. And I make demands because, like all living beings, I want to survive.„ The voice explained.

„If we can help you, that's fine, but you have to show us what you need to do to survive. „ She said, and old Pahtra glared at her for agreeing on his behalf, but she didn't care about his hurt pride now. He'll make a deal with this person if it means they can survive.

„I'm in the warehouse. My aquarium is mobile, although when it is disconnected from the main tank, it is quite cramped. I won't be able to communicate with you either, at least by voice, because fortunately I have telepathy. You must install me in a Witchlight-class ship to guide you through this window. Unfortunately, there is a slight problem, due to some negligence, the batteries have to be started manually. I'll tell you how, once you get into your vehicle... I know you came here in an armored personnel carrier because I have sensors that detect everything.

„Tell me, why, you son of a bitch, should I find you and start cutting you slowly into pieces?„ Igzar asked, smiling in his usual charming way.

„Of course you can try to do it, but I wouldn't advise it, and besides, I'm sure that my help as a pilot in your group of escapees will be more useful to you than you will enjoy torturing me.

„He's right, if we can get him packed quickly, we'll waste more time on these discussions, for what it's worth.„ She said, rubbing her face with her hands. Sometimes she had the impression that the old cat was less mature than the kids they had to travel with.

„Okay, but if you try any tricks...„ Igzar drawled.

Finding Mr. Ilemshaw wasn't difficult. His tank was located at the back of the warehouse, in a large room that looked like a combination of a laboratory and an aquarium. It was almost completely automated, he had control over all its functions. He was a strange three-eyed fish with tentacles. There was a small tank attached to the main aquarium, rather reminiscent of a Bathtub with Wheels. When an elven sorceress, claiming to be from the lost Golarion, saw him, she took a fighting stance and screamed.

"Algholith! „ But before she did something stupid, Igzar twisted her arms and growled.

„You do something like that again and I'll chop your hands off.„ He sounded serious to you that when he let her go, the sorceress crossed her arms on her chest and looked offended.

„In defense of this elf, I can only say that her reaction would be fully justified, in most cases, because from what I remember, he was not very nice...„ Everyone felt the voice of the creature from the aquarium in their heads. She didn't want to think about the exact meaning of his words. Despite Ireanis' gloomy look , they waited until she swam to the smaller aquarium before heading to her vehicle.

„Well, let me explain to you now, the orbital defense system can be launched from the control station located... At the very top of this mountain..."

Chapter End Notes

The fight will start in the next chapter

The Fall of Kesler - Fight for life, part two.

„Are you sure you can climb?„ Bina asked her, looking at her uncertainly.

„Of course, I climbed many times.„ she said, not actually lying, because she often climbed, but only trees. But climbing a mountain shouldn't be that much harder, right?

„I'll help.„ Said the red-haired girl, she thought her name was Lilka. „I once knew a girl named Lilka, she could climb because she went with her uncle to the mountains nearby. She climbed a lot. She was great at it.„ she said with great confidence. There was a short silence as no one knew what to answer. Bina finally cleared her throat and spoke.

„We have to hurry, because Alatar says the swarm will be here in little more than two hours.„ Bina looked at Dragonkin and added. „Let Lilka help you put on the harness.„ Burgundy-haired woman pointed to the red-haired girl. Itel had the impression that the dragonkin felt relieved and sad at the same time... He really was strange.

They started climbing. The three of them were walking, along with Bina, Igzar and that big orc Wagar, who had to help Alatar climb because the nerd was not fit enough to climb. At least not to the top of mountain. She felt a little sorry for the mighty warrior, because no matter what, Dragonkin was quite heavy, and he would almost have to carry it up the mountain.

Eventually they started climbing, and it went surprisingly well. Igzar was doing quite well for someone his age. Bina, much younger than him, had MUCH bigger problems She and Lilka were doing the best and would come forward. To their surprise, Alatar did quite well, especially thanks to his long and sharp claws, and sometimes he helped himself with his wings. There was no great wind here, the rain stopped falling, and it wasn't even humid this high. Actually, the weather was great and if it weren't for what was coming, it would have been a perfect time to rest... They reached the top in record time. At the top there were more antennas and a small house. They suspected that the original crew got there either via a nanite ladder, an anti-gravity ladder, or simply some kind of flying vehicle. The building was almost invisible from below. The interior was practically unfurnished, there was only a computer and two chairs. Under any other circumstances, she would have wondered how the people who worked here spent their time, but now she didn't have time for that. They had all the access cards, so starting the computers was not difficult. Alatar quickly penetrated the defense systems, and in less than fifteen minutes the anti-orbital artillery was activated. The entire mountain range shook , and they saw huge magnetic cannons emerging from the nearby mountain slopes.

„When should you set the fire to start?„ Dragonkin looked at Old Pahtra, and he thought for a moment before answering.

„Two hours. When the guns start firing, counter-fire from orbit will probably begin. Then it will all be fucked up.”

The Dragonkin nodded, and they began to prepare to descend, but then they saw something on the horizon. At first she thought they were storm clouds, but then she realized. It was a giant cloud of Swarm beings. They weren't coming directly at them, but there were still so many of them that even if only a small part got detached... Then they saw that from the other side of the horizon, something was flying into that cloud.

„Get down!„ Igzar shouted and everyone rushed to the ground. Unfortunately, the dragon nerd was different from the rest. The mountains shook again and she felt the heat drop. When she looked up, she saw a Nuclear Mushroom growing in the distance. Alatar covered one eye.

„ I think I lost my sight in it... „ He said, his voice sounding embarrassed. It was so ridiculous to be ashamed of having gone blind because of a nuclear explosion.

„It's a blessing in disguise that we are not threatened by radioactive fallout, because we will already be far away when the cloud settles.„ Igzar said and without waiting for anything they went downstairs as quickly as possible.

The dwarf, whose name was Virsek, was just finishing tinkering with their transporter.

„Well, I managed to install an AI on him! I don't believe they are unstable. They are simply not understood!„ He explained while painting eyes on their transporter. Ireanis looked at the vehicle with interest.

„What is AI?„ the sorceress asked and knocked on front vehicle.

„You could say it's like a ghost in the machine.„ Alatar explained, straightening the bandage on his face. He was still blind in one eye, and although he didn't complain, everyone could see that he was in a lot of pain.

„Ah! It's like the automatons from the fallen Jistka Empire, only portable and on wheels! And by the way, I think your volcano erupted! „ exclaimed the sorceress, pointing to a cloud floating in the distance. They didn't even want to explain to her what it was.

„That's nice, but how will it help us?„ Bina asked, looking at the dwarf suspiciously.

„Thanks to him, it will be easier for us to disappear from this damned mountain. It has space analysis system and can handle even the most uncertain roads!”

„It's great? But there is no time to waste, everyone get in!„ the woman with burgundy hair shouted and they did as she ordered. As they entered, she heard Bina stop next to Alatar and speak in a low voice.

„Listen, when this is all over, we'll get you a great cybernetic eye, or a new live one, if you prefer!„ She had the impression that she heard and I would reproach my conscience louder Why did she blame herself? It wasn't her who dropped the bomb!

Dragonkin smiled kindly at the woman, and together they sat in the vehicle... After all, this Bina wasn't that bad. Maybe he will actually help them?

She was furious with herself for letting these kids down, even though she promised I would take care of them. Barely an hour or two after she made her promise, Alatar lost the sight in one eye. She let him be dragged to the very top of the mountain, even though someone else could have taken care of it. No one expected it would end like this, after all, who could have predicted that there would be a nuclear explosion nearby. You shouldn't blame yourself, because it wasn't her fault. She shouldn't feel responsible for these kids. They were not her family, although even with her own family she had terrible relations, to say the least. So why did she care about them? She was raised so that her own health was the most important thing for her, that you only need to take care of yourself. The only thing more important than hers was loyalty to her father. They had to obey above all else, nothing was more important than Jantar's will . Eventually, however, each of them understood that their father had no regard for them and wanted them dead. That's probably why he limited their lifespan, and that's why he decided they had to get rid of her... She couldn't be like him, she had to take care of these kids, even if she had to die. But what could she do to save them from bane?

They drove as fast as they could down the winding road. The engine roared and the whole machine bounced over bumps.

„Something's coming! „ Virsek shouted, pointing to the screen of a small radar located in the vehicle's cockpit.

„Not something, just Swarm bastards.„ Igzar said gloomily and after a while he added. „Kreiz , go upstairs and operate the cannon!„ he ordered the younger Pahtra, she nodded and then moved towards the hatch. Bina felt afraid, she had only seen Swarm monsters once before, but they were scary enough for all of them that she knew she should be afraid. The red-haired girl named Lilka clung tightly to this huge orc, but they both held their axes indifferently. She never thought that a girl in ponytails could look dangerous... Alatar put wings on her shoulders, and this green-haired Elf called Itel took out a knife. She looked at the screen that occupied the front of the vehicle's interior and instead of the glass, it showed a view of what was in front of them via a camera. For a moment there was no indication that anything dangerous had appeared, the road was empty, as it had been throughout their journey. And then suddenly, like a terrible rain, swarm creatures fell on the road. The first ones looked like the thing the kids killed near the gas station. One of them looked in their direction and seemed to want to cast some spell, but the speeding armored personnel carrier was unstoppable. They hit it with their armored hull, crushing it to pulp. Green-yellow ichor splattered all around as each component of the swarm was crushed beneath the wheels, they began to scream in joy as this was a true success. Suddenly, something hit the vehicle and with a scream, the younger Pahtra fell down. And then a creature with paws as heavy as hammers jumped in behind her and hit Viirsek , who was driving the vehicle . The dwarf fell down , unconscious , but probably alive. Wagar, with a battle scream, hit the monster in the head, chopping it in half. Surprisingly, the vehicle did not deviate from the road, but continued driving itself... This autopilot was really good... She only had a strange impression that loud laughter was coming from the speakers as the vehicle crushed the swarm components, and then Igzar stood behind the wheel and gave the order.

„Bina go upstairs to Cannon, Wagar you will protect her.„ Pahtra ordered.

„ I?„ she asked him in disbelief.

„I speak Azlantian? Yes you! You can shoot, better than the orcs. „ He glared at her, and not wanting to discuss anymore, she went upstairs. As soon as she poked her head out, she heard the loud flapping of hundreds of membranous wings, looked around and saw Swarm components flying towards them. She grabbed her cannon, a laser weapon with a shield on the sides, and began taking aim. The sighting system was quite good, or at least easy to use , so that anyone could use it, including her. She began to aim and shoot at the approaching enemies. Short pulses of light cut the monsters in half, but there were more and more of them, and she couldn't knock them down. Next to her was this huge orc Wagar, which made it very tight for them, the warrior was actually sitting on the roof, but she didn't complain because he was holding her. The vehicle checked so quickly that sometimes they were only centimeters away from falling into the abyss. She wondered if the better handling was due to that artificial intelligence system that helped the old cat steer. Once or twice one of the insectoids tried to land on the roof, but the Orc's ax cut them in half. Sometimes they were shot at, but fortunately the shield built around the gun stopped the bullets. She saw that they were very close to leaving the mountain and were almost saved, but then something huge jumped on the vehicle. A gigantic component of the swarm, almost as large as the vehicle itself, was dug into the spaceship with its claws. Its upper limbs were tipped with huge blades like great scythes, which were probably capable of cutting through armored plate. She tried to direct her cannon at him, but he was too close and she couldn't turn the weapon towards him. The monster took a powerful swing and tried to cut her down, but Wagar blocked the blow with his axe. Miraculously, the blade stopped the beast's slash, and then Igzar made a sharp turn, tilting the vehicle to the side, causing the insectoid to almost slide down. But he grabbed on with those powerful hooked limbs. Moreover, they were all now hanging on the edge of the abyss, and the insectoid was outweighed and if they didn't do something soon, they would fall. Then Itel pressed through the hatch and threw the blade of her knife into the monster's eye. He hissed and then fell down. As he fell, she shot him through with a cannon shot. Only later did she learn that it was the Thresher Lord, one of the most terrible creatures fighting in the swarm. The vehicle regained its balance, and they were back on the road. At this point they had already arrived at the gates of the complex…. the fire from below had dispersed most of the swarm monsters, so they were safe, at least for the moment.

„And I am unarmed again. „ said the Elf quietly

There was a huge mess there, like it was Uncle Bob's birthday... She didn't remember any Uncle Bob! But in any case, there was a lot of confusion, people were running back and forth, undecided whether to enter in cars or bring various things in bags. The bugs didn't attack them. Wagar, with a little help from Bina, drove them all away… Although he was a real orc warrior, so if he wanted to, he could defeat ten times as many enemies but he probably didn't want to make others feel bad.. She felt safe, after all, they were almost gone, they just had to board the ship. Mr. Dwarf and Mrs. Pahtra will recover, a Alatar will have a new artificial eye implanted, which will be better than the real one. Many of the soldiers she saw had similar cybernetic things and looked happy. Maybe she'll get some implants someday? She helped everyone pack. There were many ships inside , just as they said. These gentlemen and ladies looked at them as if they were surprised that they were here. How absurd, Mr. Igzar wouldn't lie to anyone. He was so cool, a little scary, but he smashed so many bugs, he couldn't be bad. She had never seen many spaceships in her life, only a few when she visited a big city with her parents... She had never seen so many ships and so large. This strange Vesk in the suit with this big staff seemed to be very happy. When they entered and saw all the ships, he knocked with his staff and looked at Bina.

„I didn't think you would keep your word.„ He had a pretty nice voice for a Vesk.

„I didn't keep any of my words, I just opened the door, or rather our hacker opened it. They were here waiting for us. The proof of my honesty will be that we won't fight for a place, even though there are enough places.„ She pointed to the vehicle and everyone nodded like smart people at university.

„Can we pack now? We're in a bit of a hurry, and I have to go to the toilet BEFORE the flight, like every real orc!„ she interjected because she really wanted to poop and she wanted to do it properly, the Orcish way. They looked at her, Bina coughed twice apologetically, as if she had said something strange, but the large lizard laughed and, showing all its fangs, said.

„At my age, everyone only thinks about when they will finally be able to go to the toilet. I agree with you, there's no point in talking, we have to get in quickly and get away from this fucking planet."

„It was an ugly word, and we orcs don't use such words. „ Veska looked at the two seriously, and Bina hid her face in her hands. Did she say something strange?

„ Okay, let's get ready and pack." said Igzar and pointed to the aquarium. „He said there was a ship especially for him."

„In fact, there is this small one here, at the very end of the hangar.„ Mr. Fish said in their heads. Others usually didn't like it much, but it didn't bother her at all. It was a bit weird, but also quite funny. They all looked at the ship at the end, which was tiny, only slightly larger than their transporter. When they opened the side hatch, it turned out that there was only enough space inside to fit the aquarium with their new friend. This was indeed a ship especially for him. The aquarium drove itself inside, because I know it could drive itself, and then various cables and other things started to attach to it.

„Now you can leave me, I will take care of everything myself. You have to start the procedure, he was taking off, it's timed to coincide with the anti-orbital fire, so you better hurry, especially since we'll have another company soon

They did as he suggested and began selecting ships. Mr. Virsek , who had already woken up but had a terrible headache, chose a large ship that looked a bit like a box for them.

„It may not be the fastest, but it is well armored, maneuverable and has good jamming systems. This is great dwarven work!. He said, rubbing his head where he was hit. Together they got inside, where it was full of dust, no one had cleaned it for a long time, it was just a shame! They quickly started distributing them all over the ship. She quickly went to the toilet and did what was needed, they even had paper! Then she returned to the entrance and was disturbed to see that Wagar was nowhere to be found!

"They will guard the gate until it can be closed, and then he ran towards us. „ Igzar said to Bina in a gloomy voice. Without asking anyone's permission, she baked outside and ran to the gate. There was Wagar and some Vesks who looked really menacing, almost like orcs!

„Wagar! I am here to fight with you! „ she said with the confidence of a true orc warrior! Wagar turned towards her and looked at her in surprise.

„But what are you doing here?" he asked in a surprised voice.

„Well, I'm helping you fight the Bugs! I'am good at it!"

Wagar looked at her strangely, as if he was proud of her and worried about her at the same time. He was about to say something when she suddenly heard claws scratching and hissing, and then she saw monsters running towards them. At first she felt fear, so great that she couldn't move, but then she grabbed her ax and felt strength. She wasn't a weak little girl, but a terrible orc! She will defeat them all! They will never do anything to her again!

„We have company! You better close those gates quickly and someone will come for Lilka!„ Wagar shouted , throwing a powerful punch that chopped up one of the Bug, quite small one. She had seen such bugs before... She couldn't think about it! She screamed and struck a blow, driving her small ax into another one. She didn't kill him, but she disabled him, and a nearby Vesk crushed him with his weapon. Then they pulled more, and her companions knocked them down. One by one.

„You know, Lilka, you don't have such a good weapon yet, so you can stand back and kill those who get through, okay? „ said Wagar . If he wasn't an orc, and orcs don't cheat, she would have had the impression that he didn't want her to fight with him. She did as he said, but she didn't fight anymore because no bugs got through. After a while, the Gate began to close and the orc and Vesks let out shouts of delight. Just in tim , because more and more bugs started attacking them, even one of the remaining warriors fell to the ground. He was bleeding heavily, but there was no one to help him. What's worse, the Gate will then stop closing. There was only a small opening left, one man's width apart, but they wanted to move on.

„These Gates Won't Close! Do something about it... „ The orc called over the communicator, and then he heard the answer. He made a very serious face and looked at her sadly.

„Remember, little one, you will always be a true Orc!„ He said to her and she felt like she saw apology and guilt in his eyes. She didn't understand what he meant, but then another wave of enemies began to move in. She was about to join the fight, but someone grabbed her from behind. She felt intense pain and her body went limp, and she felt something pulling her towards the ship, she tried to break free, but she couldn't move. She only saw Wagar knocking down one after the other, killing them as if without effort.

„ He sacrificed himself for you so that you could save yourself, so try not to waste it, kid. „ She heard Igzar's voice , the old cat dragged her on board...

His eye didn't hurt as much as he expected It mean, it hurt like hell, his mother always glared at him when he swore, but he was more afraid it would start leaking out of his eye socket or something like that. He wasn't even worried about losing his sight, he would eventually regain it one day, and from what he knew, cybernetic eyes were sometimes better than real ones . So he felt sad when he saw Bina taking it personally that he had been hurt. it wasn't her fault, she was very brave and helped them. She also managed to defeat that great bug, Although Itel also helped her... The Elf was wonderful to me, So he was afraid that his successes would seem so poor... Did he really think about the girls when they were fighting for their lives? His sister was right, not only was he a nerd, he was also an idiot.

He knew there was a fight going on outside. Actually, he should have been terrified, but somehow he didn't feel afraid anymore. He felt more excited. Finally this will all end, one way or another!

Igzar led Lilka inside, hanging limply over his shoulder.

„Where is Wagar?„ Bina asked.

„The door wouldn't close, so he stayed there to guard it.„ replied the mercenary commander.

„You have to go get him, we can't leave him!„ a woman with burgundy hair shouted.

„He sacrificed himself for us. Thanks to it, we will be able to fly away. Respect that and sit in the chair.„ He said sharply to Bina , who gave him an angry look but didn't say anything. He felt sorry for the Big Orc, as he may not have known too well, but he seemed like an okay guy.. What will they tell Lilka? They seemed to be friends.

However, he had no time for such thoughts because he felt that they were starting to take off. It crushed him into the seat for a moment, but then the gravity control kicked in. It was his first time flying in a spaceship, and he was actually excited. He always wanted to visit other planets, and now that dream could come true. Of course, it would be much nicer if he didn't have to fight his way through the cordon of Swarm ships...

„The magnetic cannons have started firing!„ Said one of the soldiers sitting next to Igzar in the cockpit.

„They are effective, but are they enough?„ said old Pahtra , staring at the holographic representation of the navigation instruments. A few small blue dots represented her group, and countless red ones. They must have been Swarm ships. He swallowed saliva because it looked terrible. individual red dots were beginning to disappear, probably knocked down by the cannons he had fired. He felt satisfied. Maybe if they were ships belonging to normal beings, he would feel sorry, but they were Swarm monsters, They were nothing comparable to normal beings. They saw a gap in the enemy formation, one ship was heading there and giving bearings to the others. This strange fish”like creature was right after all, they would escape! They were very close, just a moment and they would escape. Several enemy ships fired at them and he felt their ship shake, but it wasn't even damaged badly enough to slow down. They would eventually get into orbit and then pass the cordon surrounding the planet. They were saved, at least for a while. He closed his eyes and sat in the chair for a while, numb. All the fear he had felt before was gone, as well as the excitement, sadness, everything was gone. Only a strange, blissful peace remained.

They flew for some time in sublight, no disturbed by no one, surrounded only outer space, a black void, as some people said. He knew they were still carrying safe because the Swarm fleet was waiting somewhere out there, but they could afford a little respite. Lilka was sitting in her chair, sniffling, she had recently learned about what happened to Wagar. Itel looked at everyone in disbelief, as if it was impossible to accept that they had survived. Igzar was smoking a cigar, and Bina was staring thoughtfully ahead, as if she was wondering something. There was silence. They should actually eat something now, but they weren't hungry. In fact, they didn't want anything, not even to rest. Was it like that in the war? Eventually, however, the dwarf called them to show them something. He seemed concerned, so as soon as I returned, except for Lilka, everyone got to their feet and followed him to the navigator's room. There, an image In the nearest space was projected on a large hologram. They saw lots of ships. Several in the middle were blue, that is, belonging. There were also many grey ships, flying in two groups, one large, the other much smaller. And there were Swarm ships, lots of them. The ones they saw as they left recaptured were less than a fraction of the entire vast Flotilla. They were speechless when they saw so many ships..

„Won't they detect us?„ Bina asked, staring at the image.

„We have a good concealment field, and besides, there are too few of us and we are too far away to make it worth pursuing.„ said Virsek . They nodded at him, wondering if he was right. At some point, the swarm ships moved towards the main group of gray ships.

„These are civilian ships that are evacuating from the planet... It will be difficult to get them out. „ the dwarf explained, and then they saw the first, larger group scattering, while the second, closer one, flew in the opposite direction. The swarm ships gave chase after the fleeing ships. The smaller group moved further and further away, and suddenly another group of ships approached from where they were flying. They were initially blue, but the Dwarf typed something into the computer and they turned purple.

„The Fearless Armada is coming with its allies.„ Igzar said in a dark, angry voice.

„So these are Lord Admiral Antares's men ... They are coming to the rescue?„ Bina looked questioningly at the old cat, whose smile became very predatory.

„You'll see soon. „ said the old cat. The ships of the swarm rushed into the now scattered civilian ships, destroying them one by one.

They watched in silence as Thousands of people died. The Fearless Armada was in no hurry to help. They slowly surrounded the increasingly scattered swarm ships , which were constantly murdering those who escaped.

„What are they doing? Why don't they help the„ Itel cried with despair in her voice.

„Those civilian ships were used as bait. They were flown by ordinary civilians, those without important professions, contacts or assets. He will leave those sacrificed for Victory. The second group included important people, politicians, educated people, those who could not be evacuated earlier... Those who mattered.

„How can you sacrifice thousands of people just for Victory!„ the elf exclaimed with horror.

„Well, just like that.„ Igzar said, grinning. Indeed, as he had predicted, almost all of the civilian ships Were destroyed, but the Fearless Armada ships surrounded the Swarm ships and began to destroy them as easily as the civilian ones. Finally the invader fleet withdrew. The fearless Armada annihilated hundreds of Galactic Scourge ships…

„This is, dear kids, how heroes are born. Through trickery and sacrifice… preferably others.„ And the black cat began to laugh hoarsely.

Chapter Notes

See the end of the chapter for notes

Calamity tried to act happy, but deep down she was furious. . She was furious with Shadow Weaver for basically getting away with her failures, her daughter's accident was no punishment at all. Life had taught her that everyone would rather see others suffer instead of them. People could claim that the lives of their loved ones were more important to them than their own, but it often turned out differently, especially in the case of someone like the Dark Sorceress.. On the other hand the girl had earned her own fate by going so far as to free Shadow Weaver, though she was impressed by what she had accomplished. Summoning the Devourer of Light was no small feat. Yes, she paid a price for it, but Mortals don't deserve that kind of power, at least for free. However, the girl was willing to pay the price, it showed that she was determined... It's just a pity that she made such a great sacrifice for someone so inept. The sorceress allowed herself to be captured for some absurd reason, and it was done by this monstrous freak of nature. Despite this, the agreement was still valid... She was even scolded for trying to kill the blonde idiot, although it wasn't she who tried to kill her, but the artificial intelligence, so there were no reasonable reasons to accuse her of it. Another thing is that, of course, she was right, after all, she was a usurper and a thief. She deserved to suffer for her sins. Well, she was a soft and delicate person, so perhaps the remorse of her twisted conscience would make her feel at least a little pain... Too bad she would have to suffer over something that happened to be a source of pride. Forcing an ancient AI to erase itself was quite funny, though of course, it seems that she did it by invoking the Illusion of Conscience that this being had.

However, as they say, as long as there is life, there is hope. This strange sorcerer that was near Nightgale… She had to admit that he was attractive, even more than attractive. She liked him much more than Klementine. To tell the truth, that girl was more irritating than attractive... She didn't regret what she had done with her at all, although she regretted very few things at all, but that was a characteristic of perfect beings. Everything she did was supposed to be great, but some people just put obstacles in her way. In this elf-like creature she sensed a kindred spirit, someone who saw the world as she did, though he was probably more experienced... She couldn't say the same about the rest of her siblings. Most of them weren't anything interesting. They were just creations of not very bright cultists who thought that by communing with the Great Outer God they would gain at least some power. Many of her Brothers and Sisters did not understand their Divine destiny, some even tried to imitate ordinary mortals. They pretended to be able to blend into their society, denying their true wonderful nature. In her opinion, these blasphemers deserved only a long and painful death... But none of that could be said about Evangeline. This person had renounced the morality that ordinary beings were guided by, and at the same time, in some strange way, followed it. She interpreted it in a strange, incomprehensible, and, according to many, perverted way. She had only met her ancient sister once, and that was one of the few times she felt true fear. Now Nyarlathotep was sending her here, and she almost felt pity for those who would meet her... Almost.

She was once again flying one of those simple Anti-Gravity transporters that Hordak had built. Blackwind was hiding in the wilderness, but she could feel his presence all over her. She told him not to hunt intelligent beings, if that was what the inhabitants of this planet were supposed to be, but she couldn't blame him for eating someone. She was resting lying on her back, and the vehicle was being driven by the cultists. Her body wasn't really getting tired, but she was enjoying being lazy. Besides, she could think about a few things before they got there. Despite everything, she came to the conclusion that she had made a few mistakes. It was hard to understand, but even perfect beings like her sometimes made mistakes. That attempt to get rid of Adora was unnecessary, premature.. Another time she would have exacted Revenge on the usurper, when the Creeping Chaos would be more kind... She had time after all, she could live for a Millennium, and all she had to do was wait a few years and establish her position, and the Dark Sorceress would cease to be useful, and there would be no reason to honor the agreement she had made with her. Then she would be able to exact just vengeance on both girls, and perhaps their children. A vengeance carefully planned and thought out in the smallest detail. A vengeance so terrible that even after many generations people would tremble when she remembered it. She smiled to herself, this would be a wonderful future…

First, however, she had to deal with the present. It required absolute focus, and nothing could distract her. Above all, she couldn't let herself be captured. Fortunately, the locals didn't have good intelligence, let alone the secret police. Few had seen her, she had never posed for a single photograph, so it would be difficult for them to get a good quality likeness of her, and on top of that, you could look. Of course, she stood out for her beauty and general magnificence, but if she dyed he hair, maybe she would change her hairstyle... Although the latter would be difficult, after all, her regeneration was a problem. She will have to use her willpower to maintain her new hairstyle until it takes hold. She also needs to get a new outfit, because although she liked the dress, it was impractical in the swamps she was going to. She would also be harder to recognize in her new outfit, so she should change it even more. However, she had to admit that it was Nightgale's actions that contributed most to their escape. Glimmer, deprived of her power, was unable to reach them, in fact she was becoming someone extremely useless, she was not surprised that so many did not want her in power. Of course, most of the princesses were completely useless, dim-witted, and unworthy of what they were given. Maybe she could do something about that too, give it to beings far more deserving of such power, who would rule this place in a way that would make Horde Prime seem benevolent. Together, they would teach the Etherians what it meant to respect the true rulers of the universe. She smiled to herself. Those were beautiful dreams, good dreams.

At night, they reached the cultists' shelter in a small town by the lake. It was deep, and its black waters reflected the light of the local moons. She had heard a lot about such places, some of the Great Old Ones liked to hide at the bottom of such bodies of water. Of course, these beings never lived in places where people worshiped them, because even though they were much weaker than the Outer Gods, no place in the mortal realm could withstand their power. Such places were like portals to pocket dimensions inhabited by such divine creatures. She wondered if that was the case here.

They went to the tower overlooking the lake. They were greeted by an older, very thin man, a man without any admixtures. There was a sense of power and strength in him, and his blue eyes gave the impression that a storm lived in him. Despite his age, he was quite handsome. There was none of the typical humility of cultists.. She was pleased with this meeting. The man silently showed them to their rooms. There were three of them, a stocky man, somewhat resembling a Bugbear , and a quite a tall and pretty girl, with elven ears and short goat horns and sad eyes. In more civilized lands she would be considered something like a faun, but here her species, or rather the people, as you would like to call it politely, were simply called horned ones, although several other peoples were also referred to in this way The girl reminded her of Klementine in her own way , both of them were innocent and not fully aware of who or rather what they were working with. Although this one gave the impression that she was smarter and much more determined to take the necessary steps to implement their plans, or rather plans of the Creeping Chaos. She was pretty too, she couldn't deny that. So they were given a room, rather cramped, but for a while she would have to be content with some discomfort, and they could take a nap. However, when night came, she decided that she would not rest. She stood up and started looking around the entire building. More common creatures would have considered such behavior rude, but she had the right to go wherever she pleased , no one was worthy of forbidding her anything, at least no mortal. The building had several floors, was rather cramped and modest, but had the impression that it was adapted for a larger number of inhabitants. At the top were much more interesting rooms. There was a library, not very large but it had some interesting volumes. There was the Book of Dead Names, and it was a very good copy, not the edited version that most cultists had. There were also Revelations of Glaaki, which she had expected here. However, to her surprise, in the place of honor was a book titled The Truth of the Moons.. Intrigued, she started looking through it and couldn't hide her disappointment. It talked about us about matters related to astrology and the movements of the moons, things that only the inhabitants of this backwater planet could be interested in. She closed it with a bang and heard a loud smacking noise behind her. She slowly turned around so he wouldn't think she was scared and saw the same older man who had greeted them.

„Quite a nice bookcase for such a modest household!„ She said, smiling at the man, who frowned at the bottle as he ate it trustingly.

„No! I've only just started collecting it, and it'll probably keep growing for a long time. Especially since it's now easier to import books... and other valuable... things... from all over the Galaxy.„ he said in a new voice. She turned her head to the side and asked.

„Who do you serve? „ She walked up to him and touched his chest. „ Because you probably don't serve my master, as I thought earlier?”

The man's eyes lit up with a strange inner light, as if he was more than he seemed.

„I don't serve anyone. I protect knowledge! I am looking for what is on the verge of oblivion... I am fighting with blissful ignorance! People like you cannot understand this.„ You could hear pride and confidence in his voice. For a moment she felt like ripping out his liver... Such arrogance towards a being infinitely better than him... but she made her curious.

„Who are you? Your words show that you are not like the inhabitants of this planet. There is determination and strength in you, as well as respect for knowledge. Was it hard for you to live in the land of ignorance?„ She walked around him because there was actually something strange about him. He looked old, but he was undoubtedly much fitter than he seemed. He didn't seem to be afraid of her, although he should have known who he was dealing with...

„I have been many people, now you can call me an archivist. First of all, I collect remnants of lost magical academies. Many here would consider the knowledge gained there too dangerous to let it fall into the wrong hands. It's so funny to be so open and yet not believe that others will be responsible enough not to destroy themselves with ancient secrets.„ he snorted and shook his head.

"Magic Academies?„ She looked at him curiously, maybe she would actually let him live. At least for a while.

„Now there is only Mystacor... But there used to be more of them here, three to be precise. There were Arcanacor and Umbracor. They both destroyed each other...„ He said in a much friendlier tone

„Oh! I didn't think there were people with such character among the locals!" he exclaimed and laughed.

„This is not something to laugh about.... On the other hand, For people like you... We have to entertain you with our... short-sightedness. „ Now he has become much more reflective.

„Many things about Etherians make me laugh. But I didn't come here to joke. Apparently we have similar interests. I was ordered to investigate these lost academies. Or rather, what was left of them."

He nodded, as if he had expected such an answer, and said slowly and thoughtfully, in a voice deep and not quite befitting an ordinary collector.

„Come with me.„ He motioned for her to follow him . They found themselves upstairs, under a glass dome over which bright stars shone. It looked a bit like an observatory, but what was studied in the past, when they couldn't see it, was the stars. There were many objects around, most of them looking like works of art. On the platform of honor was another book, not very ornate, with a brown, probably rough, hard cover. The man approached the book standing on the platform. He opened it carefully, touching her tenderly as if she were a lover.

„Please read it.„ He said in a quiet voice filled with delight. She walked over to it and started looking through it.

„Research logs of the Head Sorceress Klea . This might be interesting, you're right.„ she said, smiling, although she was not very happy at the thought of having to spend a few hours reading the book. She was intelligent, and sharp, but she had little interest in poring over Ancient Tomes to extract bits of information from them, which is why she needed the Shadow Weaver. Well, this woman had a lot of flaws, but she was a great scholar who loved solving such puzzles. Unfortunately, she didn't have it on hand, so she had to fend for herself. She began to look through the book with some interest. She didn't fully understand the context, the dark sorceress didn't explain everything about the history of her planet to her, and she probably didn't know all the facts herself. However, from what she understood, the journal was written several hundred years ago, and the author lived at a time of some great crisis between the sorcerer schools. Everything was related to recruitment issues, as well as competition with the princesses ruling the planet. It might have been interesting, but historically speaking, she doubted it had any relevance to her current mission.

„Please take this, here I have condensed knowledge, topics that should interest you... „ said the man, handing her the book. It was actually a notebook, it even had a grid, but after a cursory glance she decided it would be worth reading.

„You know a lot about my interests.„ She said, looking at the man. „ And I don't even know your name.”

The man smiled slightly before answering.

„Aharath , My name is Aharath. And you, my dear Calamity, are quite predictable. I know O just like you. I really know a lot, more than I would like. And while you may believe otherwise, you are not the greatest monstrosity in the galaxy... nor anything as wonderful as you seem to perceive yourself.”

She smiled at him gently. Hearing his words, she bowed slightly and left the room and went downstairs. She didn't knock, so she was surprised when she saw the woman was awake.

„What were you doing my lady?„ she said, looking at her with concern. It was almost as offensive as the words of the owner of this household, but after a while she accepted that it was normal behavior among mortals. A thought came to mind. She approached the woman and touched her as tenderly and gently as the other man touched the book, although the book was probably much more valuable than hers. She saw that the woman was interested, so she smiled and kissed her... At first, the girl was surprised, but also very willing. She was much more experienced than her, which was a strange experience. After a few quite long and pleasant moments, she felt that her body was giving in to ecstasy. If that was what love was all about, and she doubted there was anything more to it, she now understood why mortals succumbed to it so easily... She wondered what it would be like when that girl knew her true form, shouldn't the sensations be much more intense then? Anyway, after that, she started reading the book, which was surprisingly interesting. The girl tried to talk to her, but she signaled her to be quiet. There was no reason for you to bother her with problems like a mortal, even if she was quite pretty. The girl seemed disappointed and saddened, as if she expected a higher being to care about her feelings. She would leave her behind sooner or later anyway, she wasn't valuable enough to bother with. In the morning she finished the book, and then she noticed that the mirror was pulsating with power, as they had agreed, now they were supposed to discuss further steps, and you learned a lot of new things. She told the two cultists to put the mirror upright so she could use it, and then she told them to leave. This conversation was not intended for the servants' ears. However, when the mirror was activated, to her surprise she saw a person there who she didn't expect.

„Good morning, Lady Cala . Although I don't know how I should address you... „ said Lady Sorrowflame, smiling slightly.

She wasn't in the company she had ever intended to be in, at least not in the last hundred years. And she was heading to the place she had decided to leave so long ago... Life had a cruel sense of humor, although she should have blamed it on the ancient evil she served. Nyarlathotep could be so human one moment that they could almost be mistaken for mortal, but in the next they revealed their truly terrible nature. Her sisters sat next to her in the same transport, bulky and clunky, and she could clearly see Hordak's hand in the design. It may have been ugly, but it was practical and cheap to produce.

Her sisters didn't look like they wanted to be here either. Well, how rarely could she agree with them. They had reason to be irritated, after all, she showed up at their embassy uninvited and unwanted. That day she found herself again in the dark, empty space extending beyond the world, although this time instead of people she took with her only a strange mirror, she had the impression that it charged with a cold even greater than what she experienced here. Then she landed in a large room, right in the middle of the embassy, and saw her sister dot. Midnight Mask was giving orders frantically, and Storm Heart was leaning against the wall, dark in thought, until she saw her.

„What are you doing here!„ Storm Heart shouted , drawing her weapon. Midnight Mask was much more reserved and didn't say anything, just looked at her intently.

„I just want justice to prevail and my justice to finally give me a just punishment.„ she said, smiling crookedly at her sister, who gritted her teeth angrily and drawled slowly.

„What are you planning!„ she threatened her with a gun. She smiled again in response, but this time warmer and friendlier, and then answered.

„I only want to save Etheria from destruction and ensure that justice is served.„ she put her hands in front of her to be handcuffed. But nothing was done, so she sat in the chair and closed her eyes. She must have been a very unusual sight, one of the most despicable and hated people on the entire planet sits in an armchair like a Tired Grandma. She was in her sisters' private living room, in the living area of the embassy. Two or three of the servants saw her, but they were well trained and did not ask any questions, and probably pretended that nothing had happened and had not seen anything. She trained similarly her Horde wards, as well as the soldiers serving her. She smiled darkly to herself as she realized that even then she was imitating what she had been taught at home. Now she wondered if she had ever really escaped from her past Didn't it follow her wherever she went and infect every place she went with what she hated? She started laughing and her sisters looked at her, probably thinking she was crazy. Maybe they were right, but it's probably better for everyone that she wasn't. For the next hour, absolutely everyone avoided the living room, as if it had become an unclean place, sullied by something vile. In fact , you could say that it was. However, her sisters kept their eyes on her, they thought she couldn't hear their whispers, but her shadows were listening to them.

„We shouldn't take her. She wants it!” Storm Heart said angrily but Midnight Mask replied in a calmer voice.

„And what are you going to do? Do you remember what happened last time, we can't defeat her! You can try to poison her, but that's probably my style. And even if you succeed, what? Will you kill her on the spot? Will you drag us before the Mother? Oh no, I'm sorry, is that what she wants from you? So please tell me, sister, what are you planning? Because I don't think you have any plan, as you always do."

„We can hand her over to the local queen, you heard what happened, what she and the other girl did...„ Storm Heart She could barely keep herself from chaining herself.

„You want to make a one from our family be judged by strangers. Infidels have no right to do this!„ Midnight Mask's voice was full of malicious satisfaction. Storm Heart drawled slowly

„So why do you think you have the right to judge any of us?"

This time, her other sister fell silent for a moment, then drawled slowly.

„Be careful, dear sister, that you don't say one word too many, I have ways to hurt you, don't forget that...„ she seemed to be completely serious and ready to fulfill her threat. She wasn't surprised. If anyone found out about her apostasy, she would be exiled... at best. Their discussion reminded her of her youth... They had changed so little, they were still those two women who fought for their mother's favor. Only the world had changed around them, something they didn't understand. She laughed again, softer this time, and fell asleep. While she was sleeping, it was already dawn. She didn't have any dreams, which she thanked fate for, even though she knew she should be thanking someone else.

Black Blade announced that they were ready to go. She also informed her mother, who was expecting them in the capital of the country, about everything. Storm Heart looked at her suspiciously, but didn't say anything. Well, perhaps the eldest of the sisters, the one they had never respected and had always considered naive, had for once shown the greatest sense.. She guessed no one thought that she could seek refuge with her sisters. Probably most of the inhabitants of Etheria did not think that she had siblings. Glimmer probably knew who ruled the Isles of Sorrow, and perhaps Catra and Adora and some the other princesses, too, but most of them lived in blissful ignorance. In addition, most people assumed, and rightly so, that the two women would be of no help to her and would hand her over at the first opportunity.. Of course, the most important thing was that the people of Etheri were not in the habit of punishing others for the mere suspicion of committing a crime. She could therefore reach the coast uninterrupted, but even so the sisters were vigilant and cautious, a trait typical of those raised in a country where loyalty and trust were the most precious treasures.. They were near the Coast, she straightened up and turned to her sister.

„We have to stop.„ she said and they both looked at her as if she was breathing fire.

„What are you planning? „ said Storm Heart, looking at her carefully, as if you wanted to read what Conspiracies were born in her heart.

„I need to talk to your niece.” she explained with a slight smile. She frowned

”You were talking about her, and then Midnight Mask confirmed that you were telling the truth. But you haven't explained who she is or, more importantly, who her father is, although I have some suspicions about this.

She had no intention of explaining her relationship with her daughter to her older sister, at least for now , because it was new to her too.

„It doesn't matter, fulfill my request, we both have Etherai's best interests at heart. And it, contrary to what our Mother taught Us, is important for all of you.”

Storm Heart She looked at her speechless, but finally spoke

”You are the prisoner here! You are to obey our orders!” She stood up and grabbed her glaive as if she was going to strike her, which was surprising because in all the years they had lived together on the Islands of Sorrow, she had never raised a hand to either of them.

„Do what he says.„ said Midnight Mask, they are watching her carefully.

"But she's…" The storm guardian protested, but the black blade prevented her from finishing.

„You have to do what I say!„ she ordered sharply, and for a moment the two women stared at each other, but there could only be one result. Storm Heart looked away, pursing her lips angrily, and Midnight Mask ordered them to stop. When she heard to leave, she said something else.

„Someone unpack this mirror I came here with and take it wherever I say.”

Midnight Mask gave her a murderous glare, but ordered her servants to do as she said.

She ordered a mirror to be placed on a low Hill with thorn bushes growing around it . The planet was so sparsely populated that no one lived in the area, and it was unlikely that anyone would notice them. It was dawn, and several moons illuminated the hilly plain. She felt the power emanating from the mirrors and spoke the words.

„Through nothingness together.„ Her throat still hurt as she spoke the words in that terrible language not made for mortals. Then the characters of her interlocutors appeared. First she saw Lady Cala, in a dressing gown, leaning on her hip and smiling with indulgent superiority, as always. The image in the mirror split in half , which was an otherwise useful feature, and in the other half a person appeared who she wasn't expecting, but who wasn't as surprising as she should have been.

„I don't think anyone expected you here, Lady Sorrowflame .„ she said to the woman with flame-colored hair. She was on a ship of some sort, and in the background stood LadyKa in the shadows. Lady Sorrowflame only smiled slightly in response.

„I thought that establishing contacts with you could be very interesting and, what's more, very useful. I serve the Lord Admiral, but I am not his subject... I have my own goals that I am determined to achieve. We had a brief chat with your ward during the wedding of the Lord Admiral's daughter, and she is someone who knows far more than most of the inhabitants of this planet. This place hides a lot of secrets, which you probably know because you've been here. I don't believe you came here just to exact revenge on your former charges, or should I say your daughters? Mrs. Ka shared with me what you said during your conversation with Antares , and you didn't sound like the mean and vengeful witch your daughter thinks you are. „ explained the necrotechnician . Lady Cala raised an eyebrow, as if to show her that she could make friends too, and not with just anyone.

„ But dear Lady Sorrowflame , I am a mean and vengefull Witch, and also power-hungry and treacherous. „ she said to the necrotechnician , and then added.„ However, in fact, I did not come here to punish anyone, but to fulfill a mission... The fate of all of us depends on its success. „She hoped, it doesn't sound too high-flown. Lady Sorrowflame nodded as if she had expected this answer and said.

„I am not guided by mundane motives either. Now I am a necrotechnician working for the Lord Admiral, but for millennia I was a priestess of Dahak , but my God died along with all of Golarion .„ she said, and you could hear sadness in her voice. She hurriedly tried to remember who Dahak was . He was probably the God of destruction and Rebirth? This didn't portend anything good.

„It's good to see someone with a heart full of faith in this place , it's so comforting! Please wait a moment until the third person who is a member of our pack appears... „ said Lady Cala, smiling warmer than usual.

Nightgale materialized next to her ...

Grimm Covenant - part two Leaving Castle Crypto wasn't too difficult for her, after all, no one was stopping her, and she could use the datapad and had instructions from Dr. Moors, who already knew the castle well enough to be her guide. She once considered him a potential ally, but her mother had a very low opinion of him and didn't trust him at all, so she decided that he would share her opinions. However, she could not refuse his help. When she returned to the castle that had been her home for much of her life, she failed to achieve anything she had planned. She didn't meet with Lonnie and the others, only Kyle nor did she get important information that would help them in their mission. She learned some interesting things, but she didn't know how to use them. That's why she needed the brain in cylinder hat, if only because of its contacts with Mi-Go. Therefore, in order not to discourage him, she did not interrupt him while he was talking about her recent companions.

They finally made it out of the castle, and just as she felt fear when she came back, now she felt an indescribable sadness as she left this place, probably forever.

When they left the castle, she went straight to the village where she had stopped earlier. The residents didn't even seem to notice that they were gone, nor did they seem to notice that she was back. Not even Dr. Moors piqued their interest, although anywhere else the sight of a black cylinder with metal tentacles would have caused a stir at best. Even the brain in cylinder hat was confused by this indifference. Apparently, such were the settlements where Nuclear Chaos had been worshiped for centuries. How many generations has this been going on here? The Dryl Mountains have always been a mysterious place, full of people who chose their own way of life, often so difficult to understand for the rest of the planet's inhabitants. What was this place like in the time of the First Ones? And what was its story? She could only guess at that. She stayed in the same shelter open to everyone where she had rested earlier. No one disturbed the peace of the three of them, well, three of them...

The Star Saihe disappeared as soon as she entered the castle, and did not appear the entire time she was there. He has only now returned.This didn't surprise her, after all, he probably had some business of his own, and it was better not to find out what it was, and she preferred to rest from his company for some time. However, judging by his expression, he seemed impatient, and maybe even concerned.

„We haven't seen each other for quite a long time.„ she said to him when they got to the shelter.

" I had many duties. My student Claudia must have done some preparations, although I'm still not sure if she'll be able to perform the ritual... Your mother's help would really be useful.„ he said, in a thoughtful voice she had never heard from him before.

„I guess you'll have to wait for her. We have only just started our journey. Is that why you haven't contacted me?"

The Star saihe shook his head.

„This Castle has defensive wards. Its creators opposed the power of our former masters. That's why they built it. The whole of Dryl was a stronghold against the power of the First Ones. however, its inhabitants were not warriors, but engineers and scientists. They wanted to survive, not fight. They were such intelligent people, but they didn't know that you can't win the war without fighting. But they survived, so maybe they made good choices?"

She didn't even feel like responding to his argument. She had a lot of worries on her mind anyway, and she wanted to have fun with an self-madet philosopher.

„Who are you talking to? Are you delusional? Have you suffered a brain injury? It's possible, we don't know how the ritual you performed affects your mental health and nervous system.„ She was diagnosed by Dr. Moors.

She didn't feel like talking to him either, so she just replied.

„Yes, these are terrible delusions. You'll pick my brains out through my nose in your free time, now don't disturb me.”

The Saihe laughed, and the brain in cylinder regarded her with its artificial eyes with suspicion and resentment. Ignoring him, she prepared to astral projection. She held a lock of the Mother's hair in her hand and uttered the words of the spell. Soon she felt herself leaving her body and bringing herself. She kept her eyes closed the whole time. Although it wasn't really necessary, it made it easier to avoid dissociation while transferring her mind. When she opened her eyes, she saw her mother, still tired and depressed. Opposite somewhere was a silver mirror that was divided vertically in half. To her left was Lady Cala, smiling as always with indulgent superiority, but to her right was someone whose presence she hadn't expected. Lady Sorrowflame was watching them, her hood was pulled over her head, she was smiling mysteriously.

„So we're all here... You asked, Lady Sorrowflame, what our goal is. Well, neither of us knew completely selflessly. I'm looking for a way to fulfill my destiny, Shadow Weaver wants to protect her’s charges, and our companion, Nightgale, currently just wants to survive, and what motivated her before. Unfortunately, I don't know.„ The aristocrat looked at her with a raised eyebrow.

„Just like you, I had an agreement with our... superior. „ She smiled and looked at the others, not sure how much she could say.

„Yes, you were the one who performed this ritual... I can feel the power you summoned, it was impressive.„ Said the necrotechnician, and she looked humble in response.

„Praise from someone like you means a lot, all the words of appreciation go to my teacher, without whom I wouldn't have had enough knowledge to perform it. Although, as you can probably see, it didn't turn out very well... „ she smiled sadly... When she mentioned the teacher, her mother clenched her fists in anger. She had already noticed that she didn't like the Star Saihe...

„I came here following the Lord Admiral, because I have been serving his family for many generations. I didn't expect much from this place. I remember many fallen civilizations, the place where I was born was full of ruins, but I discovered that this planet not only had the Second Starstone, which as we all know is one of the most powerful artifacts in the galaxy, but it also missed the Gap…... Even I, despite my Millennium-long life, have not escaped this curse…I don't remember most of my life, and more importantly, I don't know how I lost my God. He was destroyed along with Golarion. I want to find out what happened to him, if possible, take revenge."

„Golarion, I heard this name recently... Does you come from this planet?„ she looked at the woman with fiery hair, remembering the recent clash with the inquisitor. He said something about Golarion... It and the Starstone... but what? She had to remind herself, but she wasn't sure how much she could trust the Lord Admiral's servant.

„Yes, just like Starstone. Unfortunately, it was destroyed, but nothing knows when or how... Both Azlanti and many gods, as well as a significant part of humanity, come from there. It is on its former orbit that the Absalom station circulates... Thanks to the Starstone, it is possible to travel by drift drive... Why, you ask? Where have you heard this name?"

She hesitated, looked at her companions, unsure whether she should tell the whole truth...

„Before we start sharing knowledge willingly, let's establish one thing... How much can we believe that you are not following Antares' orders now? So far, there has been no way there. I know who this man is in history, and I have already learned his true colors.„ Shadow Weaver looked at Lady Sorrowflame, standing behind Lady Ka, who smiled at her as she wanted to rip the skin off her face.

„Well, you have no reason to trust me. I admit that the fate of the Lord Admiral is not completely indifferent to me, because for several generations I have had a hand in all the undertakings of his family, and I am very proud of my works. I won't abandon them for any reason, regardless of what you think about his actions. This does not mean that I will follow all his orders. As I told you, I am not his servant, but his employee.„ She said in the calm, matter-of-fact tone of a scholar. She was disturbingly reminiscent of her mother now, though MUCH more composed, as if she had control over all her feelings... Or, her heart was cold and dead... She remembered what the guards had told her about her as she prepared to release Shadow Weaver.

„You are not mortal. I heard about what you did at the wedding. They said you were a dragon. The real one, the first one to come to Etheria in millennia... But you're not just a dragon... „ She said, looking at the necrotechnician. Lady Cala smiled, obviously she already knew that.

„Yes! I am a vampire, ancient and powerful. And also a scholar and a Necromancer. Once I was known as Ashaq the Annihilator. I was a priestess of Dahak, but you already know what happened to him..„ she had the impression that pain appeared on the face of the woman with flaming hair. Her mother seemed slightly confused, Well, Shadow Weaver spent most of her life on Etheria, where Religion was not widely practiced.

„So you want to learn the secrets of this planet to find out the fate that befell your God?„ the inhuman aristocrat nodded and added. „We can help you with this... This place is connected with Golarion... Today I managed to get some information... It was a lucky coincidence, but it can be very helpful to you. There were three magical colleges in this land. Only one survived , and the vast amount of knowledge that had been accumulated was lost. However, Not all... Go to the ruins of Umbracor. Those who taught there believed that this place must escape from Despondos, from the prison in which this planet was locked. They are looking for a way to do this and created Stelarium. Thanks to it, they managed to recreate both the appearance of the First One’s Empire and the universe as they knew it. This device, if I may call it that, allows us to trace the history of this ancient people. As we all know, Well maybe not all,„ She looked towards Nightgale „ They visited Golarion. Maybe you'll find the answers there. We also entrust ourselves to go there...„ the aristocrat smiled broadly.

„Unfortunately, I advise against it. While we were separated, I talked Mikah, Castaspella and Hordak into going to those ruins, I don't want them to get hurt.„ Shadow Weaver said sharply, staring at her charge. Lady Cala smiled, genuinely amused.

„It's a pity you didn't warn you earlier. We would run into each other and someone would get hurt.”

„I wasn't sure if they would go, and I still don't know for sure, and anyway, I was about to say it, but Lady Sorrowflame joined the conversation and things got a little more complicated.. Besides, you are bound by your oath and you cannot harm Castaspelia and Mikah. „ Said the Dark Sorcerer firmly. She didn't miss the fact that she didn't mention her father, as if she didn't care about his life. She wasn't sure what she should think about him. He banished her from his domainr, when she was most vulnerable. But still, she always wanted to meet him, perhaps just to tell him what a bad father he was. How much she suffered because of him... If he died now, she would be deprived of this chance...

„I will try to avoid confrontation with them. After all, we are still allies, even considering Glimmer's completely nonsensical allegations... The Lord Admiral would not want anyone to spoil his relationship with his daughter, and I see no reason to make enemies of the inhabitants of this planet. So I hope we don't get in each other's way. You can treat this as a nod to mutual cooperation. „ The ancient dragon in the flame-haired woman's body was serious, and it seemed they could trust her on this matter. Lady Cala winced slightly, but it was barely visible. “However, I would like to know what you are looking for there? Because I don't believe you are interested in the history of this planet forgotten by gods and demons... At least not in itself.”

At this moment, both the blonde aristocrat and the Dark Sorceress were silent, as they agreed that they should not reveal this matter to the ancient dragon. But she had a different opinion about it, so she said it.

„We are looking for a way to Xadia, another planet that the First Ones turned into their research facility.

At that moment, she felt as if the redhaired woman's eyes lit up with flame.

„ Oh yes, I've heard of this place, a planet whose inhabitants are humans, elves and dragons. This could be a very promising place! I need to learn more about it… About it, and about the ancient sorcerer who lives there, Aaravos... „ When the name was mentioned, she felt worried. She felt as if the persona of the Star Saihe was surrounding them more and more, as if it was all part of his Grand Plan. It was quite probable, after all, he was the chosen one of Nyarlathotep, who could plot intrigues throughout the Milenia. Could they also be just pawns in the Great Game of ancient beings? Even someone like Lady Sorrowflame could become a tool in the hands of beings older than time itself. For a moment she felt overwhelmed by the scale of the events in which she was participating. They were all just cogs in the infinite machine of universes. The Lord Admiral and his daughter, Lonnie's rebellion, All the suffering she has experienced in her life. None of this mattered. It was both comforting and terrifying.

„I know who you're talking about, I know very well. I talked to him today, actually even now. I can try to ask him... I just have to try to look into my body for a moment.„ She said and tried to return to her body, but not completely so as not to break the connection. She felt terrible nausea as she began to experience both realities at once. But Aaravos was there, smiling as always, both curious and bored.

„Could you come to where I am?„ she gasped with difficulty. Star Saihe nodded, and she immediately returned to your interlocutors, and she would have fainted. He was already standing there next to them, as ghostly as she was, though visible only to her. All the women looked at her, and the ancient dragon raised one eyebrow

„So he's next to you now?„ the woman with flaming hair asked with her deep and strong voice.

„Yes, if you want, you can ask him something... „ She said, and the wizard standing next to him smiled.

„Oh really?„ Lady Sorrowflame's voice was filled with doubt. „ Then tell me who the inhabitants of his planet are. Star Saihe thought about his answer for a few moments, and then he finally said.

„ It was originally inhabited only by dragons, but now hybrids of elves and dragons live here, as well as hybrids created from human workers and officials of the First Ones. Is this answer satisfactory?

Lady Sorrowflame nodded and then asked another question.

„Then ask him whether his world was affected by amnesia, a great loss of memory to which all the inhabitants of the Galaxy fell victim several hundred years ago.„ This time she saw sparks of wild flame in the ancient dragon's eyes.

„No, like Etheria, such an event did not happen here.„ she repeated the Sorcerer's words. The Necrotechnician nodded again and asked another question.

„Then tell me what the fate of my planet is, Golarion.”

She saw that the Star Saihe was now smiling broadly and cruelly.

„Yes, he knows, but he won't tell you the truth. This is something you have to discover for yourself.”

This time, a fire flared in Lady Sorrowflame's eyes, and she and her mother felt an instinctive sense of dread. Even Lady Cala seemed a little concerned.

„Don't play with me! I demand answers to my questions!„ said the ancient dragon. They had the impression that if they stayed with her, only ash would remain from one of them... Only the ancient sorcerer remained unmoved.

„You will learn the truth in Stellarium, because seeing is believing. When you go there, you will know the truth... But the truth can break „ He laughed quietly when he finished. She repeated the sorcerer's words and looked at him for a moment, wondering whether she had made a powerful enemy. But Lady Sorrowflame smiled, showing her long fangs.

„It is better for you that this is not a fraud, because my vengeance will be terrible.„ Her voice was quiet and gentle, as if she was not suggesting the terrible things she might do to them.

„Absolutely None of us doubts that you are capable of turning our lives into a nightmare, but we are not deceiving you, I can guarantee that.„ Lady Cala said, as if she was trying to reassure someone as fearful as Kyle... Her mother, however, seemed to be more distrustful, as if she suspected Star Saihe of betrayal. Maybe she was right, she wasn't sure how much she could trust someone like that... Wasn't all this just another experiment of the ancient sorcerer?

„So that's settled? Now I guess we just need to figure out how we meet? Having Lady Sorrowflame grace us with her presence made things easier for us logistically, since as you've probably noticed, our friend Nightgale has had an accident and her time is limited..„ said the aristocrat from a distant planet, pointing at her. „I suggest we meet on the way to Krannor Rill...„ She began to explain the best place they could meet, and the necrotechnician and her mother listened carefully, and then Lady Cala asked. „Did you manage to find out anything in Castle Crypto?”

She hesitated because she didn't know how much she could say about what she learned there. She didn't want to break the trust of her former comrades, and she wasn't sure whether such information should be in the hands of someone like Cala and Sorrowflame.

„Not much, but I learned something. I found Dr. Moors in the castle, and he decided to travel with me, so we probably have Mi-Go's support... „ She looked at the necrotechnician, who, however, did not show that she cared in any way who he was with. they cooperate. „In addition, we met a machine built by the First Ones, which wanted to murder the inhabitants of the castle, and maybe even the entire planet, but was neutralized.„ Now she remembered what the inquisitor said, about Golarion being destroyed... For a moment you considered telling Lady Sorrowflame about it, but she decided it would be better if she found out the truth herself, especially since they had to get to the ruins of the former college anyway. . The other women listened to her, and then the ancient dragon spoke.

„Give me the location of this Umbracor. „ She demanded and at that moment her mother described to her where she should go. „ It's not far. I suggest we meet in two days, at the same time.„ The Necrotechnician finally stated, and then she started to disconnect the connection...

„ I just have to add that I managed to sort everything out with my sisters, although they are not very happy with my presence, but that doesn't matter..„ Shadow Weaver said finally. Once everything was said, they too began to break the connection and she returned to her body. When she opened her eyes, the sorcerer was floating beside her in thought.

„How did you like our new companion?„ she asked him.

He smiled and replied.

"Indeed, Xadia can be greatly enriched if such a person finds its way there. Archdragons will finally learn humility...„ he laughed in his deep and disturbing voice.

Calamity stretched, a little more content than before. The bit of entertainment she and her companion had allowed her to relax a bit. Sex is good, she will have to have it more often, although she could use more partners so that she doesn't get bored. She couldn't understand how mere mortals could get married and stay with the same person all the time. It was the opposite of the Idea of love... But what could she expect from vermin? Although bugs were sometimes funnier in this respect, for example Spiders... she giggled to herself at the thought... Maybe one day he would summon one of the terrible spiders from Leng, some of them he could pretend to be humans. The thought of spiders gave her an idea.

They ate breakfast, quite modest, consisting only of rolls with fruit preserves and dried fish. Their host was nowhere to be seen, apparently busy with his own business. She briefly explained to her companions what had been agreed. Of course, without going into details, after all, there was no reason, they saw about matters not intended for them. They listened to her without asking unnecessary questions, which is how exemplary servants should behave. Then they started getting ready to go. Then finally the owner of the place began to visit them. The man looked at them carefully until he finally asked.

„I hope my study helped you?”

She smiled brightly at him, as beautifully as she could, and then she came and said.

„Indeed, your help was invaluable. „ and she pulled out a bone blade from her forearm and then jumped towards him. He must have suspected something, because he took out some kind of weapon from his pocket, apparently a pistol, and even shot her, but a strange sharp dart entered her body and had little effect. The blade pierced his stomach and she twisted it and pulled it upwards.

„This is the price of disrespect! Now you'll be dying in your own blood, you worm! May you die for days for your crimes!„ She said and kicked the man. Then she looked at her companions and said.

„This is the price of arrogance and lack of respect for those better than yourself... „ she said, smiling happily at the horror that appeared on their faces. This finally improved her mood. Let Hastur and the seventh Latto torn apart the feline monster and her thieving whore! She will always be better than them! Even if the whole universe adored them, they would always be just worthless finds. She took a deep breath and ordered them to get into the transport, because, as she guessed, the locals might be interested in the screams. This can lead to complications. Of course she wasn't afraid of them, she was only afraid of two things. Creeping Chaos and Evangeline…

The First Thunder - part one

Chapter Notes

She didn't like these mountains because there was something overwhelming and disturbing about them. An eternal storm raging over the peaks that looked like fangs or daggers thrusting towards the She hadn't been here much during the war, the longest being when she'd been Kidnapped by Glimmer and Bow, which she still considered one of her stupidest failures.. Now she smiled at these thoughts because they seemed so far away. Unlike most people, she didn't enjoy remembering the past because it was too painful for her, but there were moments that she even liked remembering.

She stood in their tent, in the entrance. It had been set up an hour ago, it was spacious and colorful. It was a newer version of the old tents used during the war, but now, thanks to the efforts of Entrapta and the help of the people of Icarus, they had managed to improve them and now had heating and could become absolutely airtight, so those inside were absolutely safe from environmental threats, although did such things happen on Etheria? She sincerely doubted it. Things like this hadn't happened on their planet... Not since Entrapta had been hacking the planet's Energy Grid... Why was she going back to that time again? It was different now, she was on the good side, with her friends and wife. She turned and looked behind her. Adora was trying on the outfit given to her by her father-in-law, a large and, in his opinion, extremely valuable adamantium armor . Next to it, Melog looked on skeptically. It seemed to her that he was worried that because of the armor, he wouldn't be able to rub against. He always liked to leave his scent on her wife.

„It's... light! said her wife with surprise, she was almost completely dressed in armor, only her head was sticking out above the breastplate. She closed her hand and opened it several times. "I feel strong and capable in this, you know?„ She waved her hand, almost hitting the technician who helped her put it on. Her father sent it to her along with the armor. He was to teach both of them how to put on this armor. At first, she didn't think Adora would easily agree to Test the Lord Admiral's gift. On the other hand, even She, who did not wear any armor or armor even while she was in the Horde, could appreciate this armor... It was resistant, even her claws could not scratch it. They didn't test the sword of protection on him because they didn't want to stupidly destroy it, but it seemed to be able to protect them from everything Lonnie had... She clenched her fists. She already had reasons to be angry at her former hordemate, but since she had allied herself with Shadow Weaver, it was difficult to put into words the anger she felt towards her. She betrayed everything she said she was fighting for. She formed an alliance with a woman who turned their childhood into a nightmare. Maybe she had never been as nasty towards Lonnie as she was towards her, but she remembered well that today's Comrade General had been hit by the dark sorceress several times. How could she be so stupid as to trust her? Everyone knew that everything that woman said and did were lies, deceptions intended to subjugate others. Even Hordak fell victim to her manipulation. She may not have liked the former ruler of the Horde, but she could understand that even he could have fallen victim to her former guardian... her Mother. However, what Lonnie did led to the death of many people, including Brother Blade! Now not only was Hordak's former right-hand working with he, but so was this creature posing as Lady Cala. Her wife needed extra protection, not from a People's Rebellion, but before that, I'm going to make Shadow Weaver and her charges, not to mention this girl... Nightgale ...

„It's really comfortable, except... I'm not sure if I can take it off every time I want to transform into She"Ra... „ Adora asked in a slightly skeptical tone.

„When designing these armors, it was taken into account that one of the users had shapeshifting abilities. They adapt to the user's current form, because it is too expensive equipment not to take into account such an eventuality.„ Said a short, lizard-like individual with green scales. His people were called the Kablods, and they lived mainly in the Crimson Wastes. „ In fact, this armor could buy an entire warship. It's a truly extravagant wedding gift, although on the other hand, no one has worn it for years. This was usually the privilege of the spouse of the head of the Antares family, and as we know, our commander found no such person . It's a pity... I mean, it would be a pity if it weren't for you now, my lady.„ The technician stood up and gave her a humble bow. She felt a surge of pride. Her father gave her beloved such a great treasure so that she could be safe and not be harmed by those who had already caused them all so much suffering...

„Hmm... Are you sure? I mean, if it has changed, will I destroy all this armor?„ Adora looked at the small technician, who nodded hesitantly. She took a deep breath and called out.

„For the Honor of the Gray Skull!„ And a multi-colored light flashed and the entire tent was enveloped in rainbow brightness She used to dislike what accompanied her beloved's transformation into She-Ra because it brought back memories of how she had been abandoned, but now she had no problem with it.. She realized that each person is part of the one she loves. When the light dimmed, the Princess of Power stood before them. This time, however, she looked differently. She was dressed in white and gold armor, much more delicate than the one she had just worn. It seemed so fragile that one could feel that any blow would break it. Concerned by this thought, she approached her wife and the tip of her Claw touched the metal plate on her chest. It came over its surface, but did not leave even the slightest scratch. She pressed harder, and then harder, as hard as she could, but it didn't help. Even though she was able to tear apart armor plate, she couldn't do anything here.

„Is this how it's supposed to look?„ Adora asked, looking at her new outfit, which she obviously liked. She wasn't really surprised, she looked beautiful in it, as if she should always wear it. Even the Melog wagged his tail with satisfaction

„Honestly, I'm not sure, but since no one is complaining and you're comfortable in it... „ said the lizard-like technician, scratching his temple. However, her wife did a pirouette and laughed. She didn't have a helmet, she hadn't put it on yet, but when they looked his way he was gone. Adora thought for a moment, then closed her eyes. Suddenly, a helmet appeared on her head.

„Do it as it was before.„ she said to her, and her beloved turned towards her and disappeared the helmet.

„That's better?„ she looked at her, and then she walked up to her, embraced her and kissed her. she felt a chill spread through her body. It was always like this when she touched, especially kissed... or did other things with her beloved when she was in the form of a Princess Of Power

„It's definitely better this way.„ she said and winked.

„Should we leave you alone?„ Kablod looked at them significantly. „ Because I see that some things are distracting you.”

She laughed, kissed her wife again, and then answered.

„No, I guess we'd leave. I guess we should show up at camp, right, honey?„ She looked at Adora, who grinned and said.

„Sure, I'd love to show off in this new armor. It's really very cool, and look how it sparkles.„ She laughed.

„It's good that there are no bright moons shining now, otherwise people who would see you would be blinded by your glow!„ She kissed her again and, holding her hand, they went outside.

She had to admit that it was cold, but from what she remembered, it was often colder here, and also weirder. There have been snowstorms high in the mountains, out of nowhere.

She had also heard from her soldiers who had served here during the war that they could hear Whispers and howling in the wind, though at the time she had dismissed it, yelling at them that they were cowards and were making up nonsense so they wouldn't fight. Now, after everything she had experienced in the last few days, she wouldn't be so sure.. Things were possible in the world that she had never dreamed of when she served in the Horde.

She wasn't sure what exactly the rebel military camps looked like during the war, but now they were well laid out and well protected against any possible enemy attack. She spent the entire previous evening and most of the night planning it, until Adora dragged her to bed, where she immediately fell asleep... She must somehow reward this care... she smiled to herself at the thought. The soldiers saluted them, or customarily waved at them, clearly happy to see She-Ra in her shiny new armor. She used to be jealous that everyone was so happy to see her beloved, but now she understood what a huge burden rests on Adora's shoulders. She was their hero, and the fear that she would let them down, that she would live up to their expectations, was like carrying a boulder a hundred times heavier than her on her back. It was a bit like each of these people was a tiny little Shadow Weaver which demanded too much for anyone to live up to. She wanted to help her in some way, and sometimes she succeeded, but with recent events, it was much more difficult. Adora blamed herself for not stopping Shadow Weaver and Lady Cala from escaping, or for not standing up to the monster that attacked Brightmoon , and suspected that she still resented herself for what happened to Light Hope, although she didn't feel sorry for that digital bitch. She remembered what that AI had done to her when she was in the crystal castle. She then considered abandoning the Horde and joining Adora... None of what happened later would have ever happened if it wasn't for her... However, her Wife saw something good in her, knew her the best of anyone alive, maybe saw something in her that she she couldn't There was also this kid, this young artificial intelligence, although it sounds strange because it was thousands of years old anyway, who wanted to kill her beloved out of revenge... But she could understand her, because she saw what the pain of loss was, so she couldn't hate her completely, Although sooner or later they would have to do something with her, or else... She didn't know what, she would need Entrapta for that . The problem is that Entrapta was Kidnapped, and they had absolutely no idea what was happening to her, maybe something terrible happened to her. And Hordak, as if nothing had happened, went on an expedition with Micah and Castaspella . So much for his love and devotion.

They decided to leave the camp. Melog, who had been greeting all the soldiers who greeted them, and sometimes even brushed against them. They went to a place half an hour's walk from the camp. They found themselves on a rocky slope. They walked to the edge of the cliff, from which they had a view of the plains stretching at the foot of Dryl. Brightmoon was out there somewhere . But it was so far away... Just a few days ago they were getting married there and looking forward to their future together, and now... They were going to fight again, maybe even to war... They didn't want it so much ... None of them wanted it...

It all started after the funeral of the fallen guardsmen. Then Glimmer gave a speech about the courage and commitment to the values of those who died, and how their deaths were not in vain, and similar words... empty words. Glimmer was good at speaking, sometimes she could move crowds, but not then... She was clearly depressed, the events of the last few days had overwhelmed her, but not only that... She seemed pale, as if she was sick. You saw that something happened when they were chasing Lady Cala and Shadow Weaver, a man injected her with something and then ran away, turned into a bat... and finally into ash... That's what Bow claimed, but she had no reason not to trust him. It reminded her of another fairy tale from old of their superior-mother another one of those not-dead... She faintly remembered that story, but she remembered that there was something about the creature's bite ... that is, a princess with long fangs, as Shadow Weaver had coined it. Was the queen poisoned? That person didn't bite her, but I need to inject her with something. Glimmer claimed she was fine, even though her arm was still wrapped in a bandage.

She talked to the doctors without asking her friend's permission, maybe it wasn't quite right, but she had to find out. They claimed that they did not detect anything suspicious in her body, although the queen was not feeling well. Another reason for worry and anxiety. She sighed as she watched the slowly setting luminous moons. She sent Melog to watch over them.

„I guess after all this we need to go on a proper honeymoon...„ she said in a tired voice to her wife, and she smiled, she rubbed her head.

„It's not a stupid idea... Maybe, we will visit your planet. Your father said that your mother's people have their own world... Vesk V it is called, or something like that...

„Apparently it was conquered by the Vesks. We would probably start a new Rebellion after a week. „ they laughed together. „Maybe someday I'll go there, but for now, maybe we'll fly to the station on Absalom... Entrapta… She would like to go there...„ she felt a pain in her heart at the memory of her friend. She couldn't let anyone hurt her again! She just couldn't… She felt a surge of sadness and fear, so she hugged her beloved tighter. She was surprised when she felt her heartbeat. Surprised, but also reassured.

„You know, it's a bit of a pity. That this armor is taking off so slowly... „ she said and laughed, but then her wife looked at her armor, closed her eyes and the armor suddenly fell off. He became a gray and stubby suit of power armor again. Underneath, Adora wore her usual She-Ra outfit. Then she closed it again and then her outfit disappeared, except for the gold ruff. She was completely naked.

„Since when can you do that? „ she asked loudly, swallowing saliva.

„I guess from now on.„ she laughed and said. „ I'm thinking that we probably didn't have a real wedding night... „ She leaned over her and kissed her. She put one hand under her shirt and started touching her breasts.

„Wait! I can't take my clothes off that quickly! „ she laughed and started purring.

She felt good... Her beloved's purring always calmed her down. For as long as she could remember, whenever she heard Catra Purr, she felt all fear and sadness leave her. Peace came over her, pure and absolute. When she held her in her arms like that, she forgot about all the evil in the world. There were only them. Everything else stopped mattering... She was just Happy. It had always been this way, and she hoped it would last forever.

„You know, I think we should get up, because someone else will see us, and it will be embarrassing. „ She said, but her wife laughed and said.

„Let them look! You deserve for others to see you the way I see you. Besides, Melog is watching over us . He will warn us if someone is approaching, and besides, everyone knows what it means when he is on guard... „ Catra said and kissed her. Their clothes were lying to the side. She had already returned to her true form, it turned out that she could make clothes appear next to her, quite a practical ability. Her wife's shapeshifting companion was far enough away to not disturb them, but close enough to run to them if needed.

„Yes, but I don't have to stay up all night like this. Some people will start to worry, and besides, when it gets dark it will be really cold.„ She said because she was starting to worry a little. It can get cold very quickly here in the mountains. Another hour or two and it could be below zero. They can't just lie here forever... Unless they take a tent... but I'll have to get up anyway, and if they get up and go to camp, they might as well stay there..

„Just a moment. A few minutes won't change anything,„ said her beloved, and she embraced and hugged him with all her strength. They lay like that for a few moments, but finally she asked something that had been troubling her since her conversation with Lady Cala.

"So you knew about what happened... „ She took a deep breath and continued. "About what they did to the former inhabitants of this planet... "Catra was silent for a moment, which was tantamount to confirming her words. She sighed heavily and said.

„When did you want to tell me about it?"

Catra looked down before answering.

„I don't know... I didn't want to tell you at first because you looked devastated by what happened to Angela. And then the thing with my father and sister came up, and then the wedding... There was no good time to tell you. I guess there's never a good time to say things like that... „ She looked her straight in the eyes and added. „ Do you blame yourself for that too? About wat your compatriots did...

She nodded and began to explain.

„From the moment I found out why the Heart of Etheria was built, I knew that the First Ones were not good. But, I didn't think they would do something like that. You understand that in times of war, people do terrible things. We both know that. But they murdered all the inhabitants of this planet. They stole the power I wield. Doesn't this mean that I accept the crimes they committed? For the evil that was theirs? I don't know what to think about it... I feel guilty, as if I had a hand in it."

Then her wife laughed.

„You're as stupid as ever. You cannot be blamed for what those who lived millennia before you did. You're not even one of them. Not with heart or spirit. They never did anything for you, and you destroyed their greatest treasure. You are an enemy to them just like all of us.„ She embraced her and kissed her. She felt a little better, but there was another worry on her mind.

„You know, when I was reviving Klementine , I heard voices.„ she said carefully and saw that fear appeared on her beloved's face.

"it must have been because of exhaustion. Bringing someone back to life is not an easy thing, is it? Exhaustion makes people hear and see things." she said nervously, as if trying to convince herself.

„Possibly, but it was the same when I teleported here from Icarus... I heard them then too... They were saying something about a path... A shining path... I don't even remember what they wanted from me... Only that I was very afraid of it, that it caused This is unimaginable fear and sadness for me.„ she said quietly and shivered from the cold inside. Catra then jumped to her feet and screamed.

„Do not listen to them…! These are lies! Just like everything Horde Prime was saying... What these Eridani people are saying everywhere. You're not one of them... „ her beloved screamed, regardless of her nakedness. She hadn't seen her so angry since the end of the war... and scared... „You can't leave ... You just can't... „ she knelt down and started crying, and she hugged her beloved and said.

„I swear I will never leave you! He never listened to that hair. „ she said and hugged her until everything was dark.

It was already night when they got dressed and then they started walking back to the camp. They had not gathered a large army, and they did not want to give the impression that they intended to wage war. Of course, Brightmoon never really sent large forces into battle, at least not compared to what Catra's father had. They did not want to risk the lives of too many soldiers, they were not armed enough, and to engage in open combat with the Horde.

Now they were much stronger, they had many machines inherited from the Horde, as well as better equipment. Their opponent wasn't that powerful, it was just Lonnie and there were cadets... Though maybe she should have said as many as cadets. She knew well that they were highly trained. However, they were alone, there was no indication that the Republic of Snow or the Isles of Sorrow intended to support her. They weren't sure about the inhabitants of Dryl, who were theoretically subjects of the Comrade General. She didn't know what they would do if they had to fight the entire kingdom. So far, however, no one has resisted me, the locals have not run away from them, but they have not tried to help them uninvited either. Of course, they paid for all services, so everyone was relatively polite to them. They also managed to surprisingly quickly gather enough supplies to enable them to continue their activities for some time. They also received support from the Lord Admiral, who lent them several ships, as he called attack transports, as well as many soldiers. The former Star Siblings were among them. They were the ones who told the Lord Admiral that Catra lived here. All three joined the Fearless Armada and received new implants, weapons and uniforms. They only met once, and they didn't talk for long, but she was happy to have them around. She was much less pleased with the Lord Admiral's other subordinates. Lady Ka smiled at everyone, but in such a way that you were sure she wanted to hurt that person. This smile was even nastier than Lady Cala's , though she too smiled terribly. Except that the inhuman aristocrat looked at everyone with superior contempt, and the Lord Admiral's left hand seemed to think everyone was a funny idiot. It wasn't a significant difference, but it was still annoying. She could only hope that this woman wouldn't hurt anyone... But while Lady Ka put her at ease, the fact that Catra's father had also sent Lady Sorrowflame here almost made Glimmer explode. She herself was furious that Antares had decided to appoint her as one of those who would help them... Only Catra seemed to accept her presence, probably because the woman with the flame-haired woman claimed that she knew magic and could help them. in the fight against Shadow Weaver. Only they weren't sure how much they could trust such an ancient being. What exactly was she? A dragon? A dark sorceress? Not-dead? All at once? The latter was probably true... Is the situation really so severe that they had to go so far as to cooperate with someone like that?

Melog joined them as they started towards the camp, probably keeping an eye on them the whole time, which some might find embarrassing, but her wife's shapeshifting companion had no interest in such matters. It opened up both of them, and he went with them into the camp.

Mermista with them , who also took some of her Azure Guard, as well as her husband, although Sea Hawk seemed surprisingly unenthusiastic about venturing into the mountains. It had to do with his past, he probably pissed someone off like always, or set something on fire and pissed someone off. At least that's what Catra thought. She wasn't sure where he found any boats or ships here, but there probably were some... and they burned down. Perfuma and Scorpia returned to their kingdom, because I need to rest after what happened, and besides, the former force captain wanted to see if it was possible to implement the machine diagrams into production, here the Lord Admiral gave her. They took this insectoid priest with them , who was said to have helped Frosta, although Catra was still hostile towards him. Netosa also joined them, after a tender farewell to her wife and children. They were very happy with her presence, because she was the only most experienced commander in all of Etheria , which was especially important after General Juliette was deprived of her position. Glimmer also came with them, but she rarely left the tent... And then there was the youngest of them

„You know what? Maybe we should look for Frosta? „ Her wife asked, raising her ears. „I haven't talked to her since leaving Brightmoon. I'd like to know if she's okay.„ she smiled, but in her eyes she could see that she was starting to worry. She was constantly worried about the Ice Princess. The girl was still sad and dejected.

„Sure! „It shouldn't be hard to find her. He's probably talking to someone around the campfire, or is telling her stories. „ she replied, and she liked this idea very much. Even if the youngest of the Princesses did not go to the fire to warm herself with her friends and acquaintances, when they find her, they will definitely convince her to do so.

However, finding the girl turned out to be much more difficult than they expected. First they went to her tent, which she had pitched on the outskirts of the camp. It might not have been the safest place, but they didn't want to tell her that she might not be able to cope on her own. She had been depressed enough lately as it was. It wasn't one of those modern tents, but a traditional one used by the inhabitants of Her kingdom. However, there was no one inside, although it shouldn't be surprising, after all, they expected to find her in the camp. But still, Catra flattened her ears and Melog turned blue-yellow with Anxiety. They started asking the soldiers if they had seen her anywhere, but they all denied it. Now they were seriously afraid. Finally, when they were near the airport, they heard a distinctive hoarse voice that made all three of them stand on end.

„I see that the heiress doesn't sleep at night! Should I get you anything? I know you say you avoid such things, and if you change your mind, we have some herbs, or plain whiskey or vodka. It's really good, dwarf one. I won't give you any moshrooms lick because I still have strange dreams, not always pleasant ones, said Lady Ka with such exaggerated concern in her voice that it was almost poisonous.

„We're looking for Frost... we need to find her as soon as possible. „ Catra said sharply, looking hard at the woman. Lady Ka raised an eyebrow and asked.

„Oh, is that the little girl who was almost killed by that dark sorceress? I haven't seen her, but I can give you my trapper.„ She waved her hand and called someone. After a few moments, a tall man came to them, he was Saihe , but he was dressed in the uniform of the Fearless Armada, he also had several implants, as well as a cybernetic arm and an eye. His face was covered with tattoos, the meaning of which she didn't understand at all, but then he wasn't from a fallen empire, she couldn't know much about him.

„I am Corporal Izai , what can I do for you?„ he said with a strange accent. After a moment, she realized that she had heard him before, but she wasn't sure where yet.

„We're looking for our friend, but I think we can handle it ourselves... We don't need help from someone from outside the planet... „ Catra said dryly, looking at the man suspiciously.

„Perhaps you do not need my help, although I served in the army for twenty years before I settled on Kesler and then I made a living from gunsmithing and tracking in the Settlement of my people, and after the destruction of the planet I serve in the Lord's Admiral army, so I have some experience tracking people.”

Catra was going to say again that they didn't need him, but he placed her hand on the rock and said.

„All right, you'll come with us. I hope you will be able to find our friend soon.„ she said, and gave a slight nod to your wife, who was still looking at the man distrustfully,

He nodded and said.

„What does your friend look like?”

„Short, dark blue hair, strong and wears leather shoes... „ she described briefly, and Saihe nodded and said.

„This is how I saw her leaving the camp.”

„ Then why didn't you tell me right away! „ her wife grabbed Saiha by the skirts of her boudoir and pulled her towards her. Lady Ka giggled , but she put her hand back on her beloved's disappointment.

„He didn't know it was Frosta and that she shouldn't have left the camp. In fact, there was no way he could forbid her from doing so. She is a princess and took part in the war. Nothing happened to her! „ She calmed down the cat-like girl, who looked at the trapper with hostility, and Melog turned red with her anger.

„I'm sorry I didn't keep that girl, but I didn't know I should have. „ The trapper replied calmly, and her wife took a deep breath and replied.

„ All right. Take her to the place where you last saw her, but quickly. I have a bad feeling.” Her wife said

Hunger woke her up. She hadn't felt anything like this for as long as she could remember. She liked to eat well, she never hid it. In her homeland, it was always good to be full to warm the body. Maybe it wasn't always as cold there as everyone thought, but it was quite cool. But this was something else. Something that prevented her from closing her eyes. In addition, she felt cold, in a different way, as if from the inside. She squirmed in her bed, unable to close her eyes, feeling as if she were sleeping on a glacier under the open sky. It was all painful, so she finally stood up and stretched.

„Well Shogi , we have to get up!„ she woke up her friend who was lying next to him in the form of a racoon. He opened all his eyes, he must have had eight of them, and yawned, but he probably wasn't sleeping at all. They went outside, where storm clouds were swirling. She liked Dryl, although she had only been here once or twice. These mountains were as wild as her home country. She remembered fighting a battle here with Mermista, not long after Adora had left the planet to save Glimmer. They then defeated Horde Prime's small army. She was very proud of this victory. Now they were also going to fight, but this time they were fighting against the other inhabitants of the planet. She didn't like the thought, she liked fighting, but now she felt like it was all wrong. She fought with Lonnie, she even helped take the kingdom from her, but now... She didn't know the point of it... Just recently she wanted to punch Lonnie in her stupid face. Of course, she was still mad at her, but in a completely different way than before. Now, she felt more pain than wrath. She wasn't angry, but rather powerless. Maybe it's because of the cold? So she got up and looked for a place to warm herself. A bit of warmth will definitely do her good! She left the tent and started looking around the camp. It was noisy, but the old atmosphere of excitement and optimism full of uncertainty was missing. Once everyone knew what they were fighting for and what was at stake, especially during the occupation, and enthusiasm was meant to hide fear, but everyone also felt hope and believed that things would get better. But now everyone seemed depressed. No one liked the war with the People's Rebellion, no one wanted to fight the other inhabitants of the planet. And then there were the events that took place on the wedding day and after. Catra's father left them support, but everyone remembered what Lady Sorrowflame did when that monster comes. In addition, everyone knew that they would now fight Dark Sorceress and Lady Cala, who was a monster of her own kind. She saw her and her horse. She also saw what Nightgale was capable of. These were no longer fights with former cadets, but a real war in which many could die. No one knew what to expect, and no one wanted to fight alongside the Lord Admiral's men. Partly because they were strangers, but it wasn't because they came from a different planet or had different customs. They were strangers in a completely different way. When they helped guard the wedding, they didn't seem as threatened. they were simply soldiers who tried to fulfill their duties as best as they could. Then, when this mobilization was announced, everyone could see who they were. They did not hide the fact that they were going to fight and kill, for money for glory and for their Lord Admiral, and perhaps his daughter as well. They had no ideals in mind, and seemed willing to do anything if given the right orders. Everyone spoke of their professionalism and determination, but they seemed like cold ice that enveloped her heart. Only the soldiers from Bellum were like them, but everyone knew that they were complete crazy. And then there were these Dogs, subordinates of this half-masked woman. They looked like thugs, the ones who in stories attacked the defenseless in the mountains and forests, or in dark cities and settlements, but then the heroes always defeated them and distributed what they had stolen to the poor and needy. But they were released from the dungeons on the orders of Catra's father... As if he wanted to reward them for their villainy. That's why there wasn't much singing or laughter in the camp. Everyone was gloomy and worried. Everyone knew they would soon have to fight, but no one was sure what for or why. Some people roasted sausages on the fire or cooked goulash, but most did not prepare anything. They just stared at the fire, thinking and sad. No one paid any attention to her, which made her feel even more lonely. Despite so many people, she had the impression that everyone was alone, or perhaps rather together with their friends and loved ones. However, she had no relatives, only friends. But friends are almost family, right? She thought about looking for Glimmer, or Catra and Adora, but there was another problem. She was still cold and felt a terrible, insurmountable hunger. Although she watched the food cooking with Fire, none of it looked tasty. Only a few cutlets from some Mountain animal seemed appetizing... She even stole one and devoured it when no one was watching, but it wasn't enough. She saw what she had to do. Following her instinct and fully aware of what she was doing, she left the camp with her companion and went to the mountains.

Even though she was cold, she felt that her coat was weighing her down, as if it was restricting her movements. She was half-naked, but she didn't feel the chill, not the external one. In fact, she felt like she had a fever. Her thoughts were muffled, she felt like she was walking through a fog, even though her senses were sharp. As if she had never seen the world so clearly. All the scents were so distinct, sharply pressing into her nostril. The smells of all the plants, all the weeds and herbs that have grown in the area. It was downright irritating, as was the stench of all those people in the camp, and the nauseating smell of the food they were preparing. It was irritating her, making her feel sick. She was hungry, but she had the impression that she wouldn't be able to swallow anything that was roasting over the fire. She growled quietly to herself, until her friend surprised her. He now took the form of a small weasel-like creature. Thanks to this, he was a great climber, which was perfect. They had to hunt. It was part of the Culture of her People, something not everyone on Etheria understood. Of course, they were careful not to over-prey, and they hunted only at certain times and in certain ways. But now she didn't care anymore. First of all, she had to be satisfied, hunt something that would satisfy her hunger She began to sniff around, now she was as good at it as Catra. She kind of wanted to go back and tell her what amazing skills she had! This was amazing! She felt amazing! If only it weren't for that Hunger. But now she would satisfy it, she was sure. She had already discovered her prey, a small creature that lived in the mountains, climbing up rocky ledges. But now she would satisfy it, she was sure. She began to track it down, although she could see that it might not be easy. It was agile, jumping on almost vertical rock walls, but it wouldn't escape her! With her magic, she created handholds and places for her feet, now the cold didn't bother her There was a time when she always had to be careful when handling things made of ice to avoid frostbite. Now, however, she practically didn't feel the cold she had to protect herself from, not from the outside, because the inside burned like fire. She knew there was only one way to warm herself up. She was already close, the animal saw nothing, it was unconsciously nibbling on some thorny bush. It had three horns and three eyes. His fur was slightly bluish, a bit like the storm clouds above her head. It wasn't big, but it seemed to be very fast and she would have to use her wits to catch it.. She called on Shogi to help her surround the creature. Her friend, now in the form of a squirrel cat, cawed, and they attacked them from both sides. She licked her lips, it was unclear to her that her fangs were getting longer, but it was hard for her to think about such things right now. Her shapeshifting companion was ready. She gave him a sign. He ran towards the animal while she lay in wait. As it ran past her, she jumped out of her hiding place and ran at it. She formed blades of ice around her hands, and then she plunged into the animal's body. It let out a short cry, but then with another blow she broke its neck and then sank her teeth into its neck. She bit her throat and drank the hot blood for a while, and then she sank her teeth into the raw meat. She tore through flesh with her claws... Since when did she have claws? She didn't remember, but she didn't think about it either. She just wanted to satisfy her hunger. She ate greedily, as if she had been starving for years. She swallowed mouthful after mouthful of raw meat, unable to get enough. Every now and then she would throw a piece to Shogi , who ate some of it, but most of the time he was staring at her with his many eyes, and she had the feeling he was worried about her. It made no sense, she had never felt so good! She was strong, invincible, a predator who could take down any prey! She could be proud of herself! She was no longer the little, stupid Frosta whom no one took seriously. The girl that even Her Own people didn't want. She was someone better! Maybe she'd live here in the wild, hunt forever? Have feasts like this every day? That would be a good future!

Finally she lay on her back, feeling freshly eaten meat in her stomach and blood in her mouth. She was wearing only a shirt and underwear. Everything was stained crimson , a visible sign of the feast she had just had. She hiccuped and smiled to herself. She was finally warm, she could even feel the heat that radiated from within her. She felt blissful, and she hoped that this feeling would never go away... And then consciousness returned to her. She looked around and saw the half-devoured body of the animal. All her clothes were covered in blood and pieces of flesh. She remembered everything she did with perfect clarity. It terrified her. She tore and devoured the animal herself. Of course, she had hunted but she had never eaten a whole animal raw. She killed them with magic, and not just tore them to pieces, but bit through its throat. She tore his flesh with her teeth and claws. She was like a wild beast! She touched her teeth and then looked at her hands. At first they seemed normal, but then long claws began to emerge from her fingers. She screamed at the sight, absolutely terrified... Was something happening to her, was it caused by the spell or by what happened to her while she was dreaming? She wasn't sure, but she was very scared! Was she turning into something? Some monster from legends? Her people had many stories of monsters eating flesh and men becoming beasts. Is this also what happened to her? She had to see herself, see if she was still Frosta Had she become a monster? She had to find a mirror or something to look at herself! But then she heard shouting. She recognized Catra's voice, even smelled her scent. They must have gone looking for her! She looked around again. They couldn't see her like that! She had to do something! She had to run away and think about what to do! Terrified and in tears, she ran away, leaving behind the remains of the feast.

She didn't like this individual, not because he was a Saihe like Shadow Weaver. She knew many of his people, and she didn't dislike anyone, although she wasn't friends with any of them either, but she was always slowly making friends. She just felt like he was hiding something from her. He didn't fit in with the rest of her father's soldiers. He was very confident, yet very secretive. Perhaps all of his people were like that. She didn't know much about the Saihe who lived outside Etheria. Here, everyone rather identified with the kingdom they lived in, with a few exceptions... She winced as she thought about her adoptive Mother. To avoid thinking about her, she asked a question.

„Your people in the Galaxy have a different name than on Etheria, right? On our planet they name is Saihe, but on the Islands of Sorrow theynhave another name, although I'm not sure what it is„ She said, and the man turned to them and answered.

„We are called Elves, and this word, Saihe probably comes from Sidhe , another name for our people. I'm actually a Wood Elf, although that hardly matters now. Most of us live similarly to other species. My family... We tried to recreate the old lifestyle, or rather how we imagined it... But it was a long time ago. There's nothing left of it.„ his voice was hard, and his look was dark and painful. Then he turned back and started looking at the marks on the Earth. They were on a plateau, just above the camp. It was covered with bushes with hard, wax-covered leaves. She didn't know their name, maybe Perfuma would know what they were. Their branches were covered with thorns that caught on their clothes. It was very difficult for them to get through it, especially her wife complained about the thorns getting caught in her hair, since she was in She-Ra form again. Her armor was glowing gold again, they hoped it would be visible from a distance, and maybe Frosta would see her. Of course, this had its drawbacks, they could also be seen by Lonnie's subordinates who might be patrolling the area, but she believed that the four of them could handle any threat. She reluctantly had to admit that Izai knew what he was doing. She had a great sense of smell and keen hearing, but she couldn't cope in the wild, especially in open spaces. Scorpia was already doing better in the art of survival, although many were probably surprised that such a good-natured woman, brought up in a giant factory, could easily cope in places so different from the Fright Zone. Maybe they could ask Bow to accompany them, but for now he was worried about Glimmer and her pregnancy. All they could do was rely on this Elf, which of course she didn't like at all, but there wasn't much she could do about it.

After a few minutes, Melog broke into a run and led them to the coat lying on the ground. She immediately recognized that it belonged to Frosta. Her companion began to sniff around, and she also began to look for a clue. She felt the scent of the ice princess, strong, with the aroma of leather and wool, but she also felt the strange scent of Frosta's companion , peculiar and impossible to confuse with anything else.

„Something happened. Something forced her to take off her clothes!„ she exclaimed, truly concerned. She was very afraid for her young friend. The elf motioned for her to let him look around. They soon found more clothes left by the Ice Princess. It seemed that she even undressed, almost demanding. Even though it was cold. For a few more moments, Izai looked around in silence while she thought about the strangest and darkest scenarios.

„I'm not sure, but it looks like she undressed herself. I don't see any signs of a struggle here. However, she was accompanied by a creature whose traces seem strange. It's as if this creature sees its shape every few steps. Slightly, but noticeably for a trapper like me.”

She nodded, somewhat reassured, and her wife nodded and explained.

„This is Shogi, our friend's companion, a shape-shifting creature. He looked a bit scary in his natural form, but he turned out to be very nice and quite useful. He became friends with Melog.

The elf nodded cautiously and looked at Melog with some distrust, then said.

„Since this creature was friends with your friend, no one attacked her. She had to take off those clothes of her own free will...„ Saihe said carefully, but it still irritated her.

„No one would willingly undress in such weather and in such a place!„ she yelled, making a wide circle with her hand. There were thorny bushes everywhere and there were sharp stones everywhere. A cold wind blew and stung her cheeks. Saihe sighed and began to explain to her in a calm voice.

„Sometimes when people are very sick or have hypothermia, they take off their clothes because they feel unbearable heat..”

„If she can be so sick, we must find her as soon as possible!„ she yelled at the man, who calmly nodded his head and signaled her to follow him. She was furious with him for how much he didn't care about her friend's fate. She ran ahead of them, leaving Saihe and her wife behind. Only Melog kept pace with her. She could now smell the distinct scent of Frosta, who couldn't be far away. She finally reached a rocky slope where she smelled blood. With her heart beating with fear, she ran in that direction. The smell got stronger and stronger until she finally saw the body. She froze in fear for a moment, and then she screamed.

„NO!„ and ran to the body. She was incredibly relieved when it turned out to be just an animal, one with horns and three eyes, but then she realized that whatever killed the creature might be nearby. She looked around as her shapeshifting companion sniffed around, as concerned as she was. She didn't see anyone, but she realized with horror that now this predator might be on the trail of The Ice Princess. She started looking for further traces of the girl, but found them nowhere, only trampled grass. She started sniffing and didn't detect any foreign scent. Only Frosta and Shogi. She wasn't sure what it meant, Maybe nothing, Maybe the predator just didn't emit a scent, she didn't know anything about wild animals, and not about domesticated ones either. After all, Swiftwind and Melog, despite their appearance, were normal intelligent. Maybe some wild beasts living among the peaks of Dryl were able to hide their scent? Or maybe... Or maybe it was something even worse... An ancient machine left behind by The First Ones that had somehow awakened, or maybe it was some magical monster, like this not-dead one! She heard her wife land next to her after an extremely long jump. Behind her in the distance, the tracker ran, breathing heavily. She heard Adora inhale with a whoosh.

„Listen, it might not mean anything. It may have nothing to do with Frosta ... „ She spoke in a calming voice, but she growled in response.

„Look around! There are traces of it all around, and its smell!„ She looked at the heroine of the Galaxy as if she was deaf. Adora also turned pale, understanding what this could mean...

„Wait a moment... Izai will tell us more when she gets here... „ her wife explained in a ridiculously calm voice. Why didn't she understand anything? It was Frosta! A girl who had just escaped the clutches of death and still hadn't fully recovered. Without waiting for Adora's reaction, she started looking for the girl's clues. Unfortunately, she was shaking, and on top of that, the wind was getting colder , blowing sand and gravel.

„I'm already here! Let me look around for a moment!„ Her father's soldier called, breathing heavily.

„Where have you been! We don't have time, hurry, do you see any clues? Tracks of the girl and whatever killed that goat!”

Saihe mercilessly slowly knelt down and began to look around.

„The girl ran there, she was in a hurry. There was another creature running next to her, probably her companion.„ He started explaining, his voice as unwavering as he was giving a damn lecture!

„And the other creature? He has to chase her and she is sick…!„ she shouted at Saihe, who still acted as if he didn't care.

„I didn't see anything here that would indicate that there was a third person somewhere here... “ This time his voice was a bit more careful, she had the impression that she sensed anxiety in it. At last! But why did he say such things?

„What are you suggesting? She couldn't have killed that creature herself!” She looked past him, anger boiling in her veins. She hadn't felt it for a long time. This anger filling her through and through. It was like a cold flame burning in her veins! She hated this feeling, but at the same time she loved it when it filled her. Part of her knew she should reject it, push it as far away as possible, because it fueled the worst of her. But now she felt she needed that strength. This Rage and Fury

„I'm just saying what I see. I won't lie.„ He said, they were looking at her strangely, and she saw concern and anxiety in her beloved's eyes.

„That means you see shit. Show me where the tracks lead, and I'll run around there!„ She ordered firmly, in a voice that brooked no objections. Saihe looked at her seriously and then pointed in the direction.

„She moved in that direction quite recently.”

She nodded and together with Melog she ran in that direction. And there was a thunderclap in the sky, she had the impression that it had struck right next to her. A storm was coming.

She was scared. She was afraid of her friends. Not that they could do anything to her, because she saw that it was impossible. They weren't judgmental, especially Catra. She knew perfectly well that everyone makes mistakes and no one is perfect. But what she did… wasn’t bad in itself. In her homeland, they hunted, and it was considered normal… But, how she did it… That she tried to eat a hunted animal raw… That she practically tore it apart with her bare hands… Like some beast, some monster… That was what she was afraid of, That they would see a monster in her. Maybe she was becoming one. What would she do then? Will she still hunt when she felt this strong hunger? What will be visible at night to kill any animals? What if she can't find any? What if it's in space, for example, or in some larger city? What will happen then? Will she attack hers friends and tear them to pieces? This was what she feared the most... Would she become like those monsters in the stories... The ones who murdered their loved ones, who were unable to raise a hand against those they loved. She didn't want to hurt her friends, but what could she do next? Was she supposed to be hiding somewhere? Escape? Will you continue to live in these mountains with only Shogi for company? She had no idea, she had to think. That's why she climbed higher and higher, up the steep mountain wall. She created ice hooks, so it was n't difficult for her to stay on the stone surface, even though the wind was becoming more and more gusty. She didn't feel cold, neither from the ice nor from the wind. Even though her knees were raw, she felt no pain. Fortunately, she didn't feel hungry either. She could still feel that her teeth were sharp and elongated, as were her claws, including those at her feet. Finally she climbed onto a rock ledge to think for a while. Shogi Hung next to her, trying not to lean on the narrow stone ledge so as not to take up her space, but he rubbed against her comfortingly. She looked up at the sky, where a storm was brewing. Perhaps she should climb down and return to the Camp, but she couldn't bring herself to do that. At that moment, she wanted to sit here forever until the wind crushed these mountains. She heard several massive graves that seemed to hit quite nearby, though she saw no lightning anywhere. It was quite strange, And so many strange things have been happening lately... Strange and scary. Suddenly she saw a falling star. She felt this might be the moment. She heard stories from the inhabitants of Icarus that shooting stars made wishes come true. She closed her eyes and asked for everything to be as before. To be normal again girl, and that there would be no war and everyone would live happily. For a split second she hoped that this had happened, that everything was fine. Then she opened her eyes and saw that the stars were still flying towards them. She realized that it was not a star, but some vehicle that hit the nearby hill hard, causing the entire slope to shake . She had to hold on to Shogi so as not to fall. She heard a short grunt and looked down. She saw Catra leaning towards her on the rock wall. She created an ice hook again, and extended her hand towards her feline friend to help her enter. Shogi He extended his tentacles towards Melog to give him a reason too. They dragged them both upstairs and Catra hugged her, not caring that she was only in blood-stained underwear and a shirt.

„Oh, it's so good that I found you!„ She moved away from her a bit and, furrowing her eyebrows, asked. „ Are you OK? You're covered in blood! Did someone hurt you? You're cold, we have to get you out of here or you'll freeze!„ There was a fear in her voice that she had never heard before from the fearless feline Warrior.

„I'm fine. I just... felt bad.„ she said and looked down, because she knew that she would soon have to face reality, terrible and terrifying.

„Listen to me. We have to go to the camp soon. There's a storm approaching, and there's a predator rampaging around. Adora is nearby. She will heal you with her power.„ said the cat girl excitedly, holding her shoulders, but she could only laugh bitterly.

„There is no predator here that could hurt me.„ She said quietly and looked into her friend's eyes. She felt tears streaming down her face. Much to her delight, she noticed Fear on Catra's face. She wiped her cheeks and saw that instead of tears, blood was flowing from your eyes. She didn't even have the strength to be scared.

„We'll help you. She-Ra revived Klementine , so curing you shouldn't be a problem.”

She felt sad because she didn't have the strength to tell her friend that what had happened to her couldn't be reversed, and certainly not like this, but she couldn't tell her that now. She was getting ready to go down when suddenly winged creatures burst into the air from where the spaceship had hit, and there was a loud flapping of wings, like giant dragonflies. They rushed towards them.

She tried to keep up with her wife while staying within Izai's sight , and the latter was much more difficult than that. The man was in good shape, but he couldn't keep up with someone like She-Ra. At first, she was skeptical of him, especially since he worked for someone like Lady Ka, but he seemed very composed and knew what he was doing. Then she remembered where she got that accent from. Kesler was the planet where those kids, the ones with Catra's sister, came from. She didn't know what to think about it. After all, the fact that someone came from same planet didn't mean anything. After all, Shadow Weaver was also from Etheria... But maybe she would learn something from him about what happened to that place... All she knew was that it was lost because the Swarm had come there. Maybe this way they will learn a way to persuade that girl... That Eti. Maybe if her wife focuses on the plan to free her sister, she will find something to focus and be calmer. She hadn't witnessed her descending into the depths of self-destructive anger during the war, but she had heard a lot about it from Scorpia's stories. Now she feared it was happening again. First Shadow Weaver's question, then her escape, and what happened to Frosta and Glimmer, and now what she told her about the Star Stone. Her father's arrival, and what his subordinates, especially Lady Sorrowflame, did didn't help, she wouldn't say it out loud, though perhaps she should. I'll have to talk about all this, but first they have to save Frosta, and that might not be that easy.

She didn't panic when she saw the dead animal. Whatever did it, Frosta should be able to deal with it, and even if she did, it was still Shogi , they both saw that it was truly an incredibly powerful being. She was more worried about whether the girl would freeze. She didn't know if she would be able to save her after something like that. Especially since the girl seemed to react badly to her touch.. She did n't understand why, but she was afraid it might mean something terrible... Just like her wife, she felt powerless.

She saw Catra climbing the rock wall. She wanted to help her, but then she saw something falling from the sky, like a meteor or something like that . However, as it got closer, she realized that it was something else... It looked a bit like a ship. She wasn't able to look at it because it was flying too fast and hit a nearby Hill.

„Catra! Be careful!„ she exclaimed, seeing that her wife was shaken by the shock wave caused by the falling ship, but Frosta grabbed her and pulled her up. She was about to join them when she heard the trapper's curses. She turned to him and saw that he had grabbed his gun and was staring at the place where the ship had hit.

„We're in trouble... I guess we'll soon find out if you're as good a warrior as everyone claims.„ his voice was gloomy and full of bitter stubbornness.

„What was that? What is this ship? Have you seen one like this before?„ she said, and Saihe looked towards her. She saw in his eyes the same mixture of despair and wrath that she saw in those who came from the planets ravaged by Horde Prime .

„It's the Swarm.„ He said firmly and cocked the gun. And then she heard a buzzing sound. Surprisingly loud, coming from the place where the ship hit. She saw some winged figures take to the air.

„Vaphormas.„ He said and tried to contact his command through the communicator, but due to the specifics of Dryl, he was unable to do so, So he cursed and ran in that direction.

„Wait! What about my wife and Frosta?„ she called, and Saihe didn't even turn to her when replied

„We have to give them some time to come down. On this ledge It is too tight for them to defend themselves.”

She nodded, for she understood the logic behind his words. She grabbed her sword with both hands and moved towards those creatures..

She was very happy that she had managed to find Frosta, even though she seemed to be in a bad condition. She was covered in blood and smelled of meat and something else she couldn't quite put her finger on. It seemed to her that something had happened to her face, although she wasn't sure what, and there was blood running from her eyes. it was very bad with her. However, Then the ice princess looked where the shockwave came from. She didn't look at what happened earlier because she was climbing and didn't have time to look at it. But now she saw that it was a spaceship that may not have completely crashed, but it definitely didn't land properly either. She saw his strange beings disappear, like great insects. Frosta cringed, then called out

„I do not like it! They are flying towards us! But they don't look friendly.”

The girl was right. These creatures were something that made her concerned, although she didn't like insectoids, so maybe she wasn't objective. But anyway, she decided it would be better if they went downstairs. She wanted to help Frosta , attacked by surprise and started to descend on her own as if nothing had happened to her. She moved down smoothly , even better than when they went to that buried city. In the distance she saw a brighter figure, her wife clearly eager to fight. That's why she loved her, for her unpretentious bravado bordering on stupidity. Together they jumped to the ground, and then doom came from the sky.

For that moment, as she charged at the enemy, she felt strangely calm, as if all her worries had flown away. She was in the heat of battle again, facing her enemy, and power pulsed in her veins. She grabbed the sword of protection with both hands, and jumped towards the creatures. There were many of them, at least a dozen or so. They were large, at least two meters long, and like all insects, six limbs. The large wings made a deafeningly loud buzzing sound. To her surprise, some of them had limbs transformed into rifles, but with a strangely organic appearance. Immediately, some of them flew towards them. Saihe started shooting with his energy weapon at the creatures and even hit two of them, which fell to the ground trailing plumes of smoke. At this time, she jumped towards them. She took a powerful swing and slashed at the monster, cutting it in half. Another creature jumped at her, trying to tear her apart, but her armor was strong enough to stop the impact. She fell to the ground, hitting the ground, causing a wave of dust. The Beasts began to surround her, so she performed a wide pirouette, knocking down several opponents. The Creatures moved away from her, giving her some space and being able to look around to assess the situation. She noticed Catra and Frosta slowly coming down, but they disappeared soon, probably because Melog used a cloaking field. At the same moment she felt something hit her armor. Some insects with these strange biological guns started shooting at them. In her case, the bullets were unable to penetrate the armor, but Izai had to constantly dodge to avoid getting hit. She saw that the projectiles were starting to move, it turned out that they were some large beetles that were now biting into one of the downed monsters. She aimed her Sword at it and then fired a beam of energy from it. She lost one of the creatures in the Swarm, and the others scattered. Then she saw another slightly smaller, butterfly-winged look at them and make a few gestures that looked disturbingly like casting a spell. For a moment she felt a slight pain, which quickly disappeared, but the trapper grabbed his For a moment she felt a slight pain, which disappeared immediately, but the trapper grabbed his head, and she saw blood leaking from his eyes and ears. So these creatures could cast spells, did that mean they were intelligent and fully self-aware? She hesitated before continuing her attacks, but then one of them was hit by a block of ice, knocking him to the ground. It was her friends who reached them and joined the fight. Her wife jumped at another of the creatures, who wanted to land on her, without effort she tore him to shreds. Shogi shot out two tentacles, which caught the next creatures, crushing them. They continued fighting, chopping and shooting at the attackers. Frosta fought with a fury she had never seen in her before. She was only in a shirt and underwear, which were stained with blood, but she seemed to be fine. With her large icy claws, she smashed the beast one by one. They almost won, when suddenly what was left of the ship burst open, and a huge insectoid crawled out, twice as large as the others. However, one of its limbs ended in what looked like a curved crystal sword, and the other had a multitude of tiny tentacles that shot out toward its companions, trying to entwine them. With a scream, she jumped at him, but to her surprise, he blocked her sword strike with his own. He pushed her away but didn't even look her way, he just stared at Catra who was fighting with his mothers. She cut off two of them, but they started growing back immediately, and the next two are twining around the waist and pulled them towards the creature. She found herself right in front of his face. For a brief moment, she felt as if the creature was watching me, and she could have sworn she saw fascination in its eyes. Fortunately, it lasted a second and then the creature was hit by a beam of energy fired from Saihe's rifle . She took advantage of this moment and transformed her sword into a long spear, which she pierced the creature's chest. He let out a strange cry, as if full of disappointment, and then fell to the ground. He was the last one. Silence fell over the battlefield

„What was that?„ The ice princess asked, looking at the defeated opponents.

„They're Swarm monsters. I fought them on my home planet. I recognize some of them, but many are new varieties. I've never seen anything like this. „ He pointed to the creature with the crystal sword. „ I've never heard of you doing anything like that either. They usually come in swarms, gigantic fleets capable of devour entire planets. I don't know, maybe they appeared somewhere else, but the arrival of the entire fleet would have been detected. It looks like a scouting party that was looking for something... „ Izai said and looked in her direction. She nodded because his theory made sense. She approached the corpse of the largest opponent and began to examine his blade. She had never seen a weapon that could block the strike of a sword of protection before. It's worth taking it to give it to Entrapta for examination once they liberateher. Catra walked up behind her, also looking at the creature anxiously, until suddenly, one of the other monsters, whom they had previously assumed was Dead, got up and wanted to jump at her, but then Frosta intercepted him and threw him to the ground. Long claws emerged from the girl's fingers and she dug into the creature's body, tearing its flesh as easily as Catra had done it with her claws earlier. Frosta turned towards them and breathed heavily. Now she saw that she was milky, had long claws, slightly pointier ears, and was almost certain that its teeth had become longer. Out of the corner of her eye, she saw Saihe aiming his rifle at her.

„What are you doing! Put it down immediately! „ Catra approached the man, extending her claws. Izai gave her a quick look and said.

„Your friend becomes a Ghoul, a corpse-eating undead monster!” Saihe said in a serious voice.

„One more word and you'll end up like those creatures.„ her wife drawled, and she stood next to her.

„Frosta is our friend. If you do anything to her, even if you try, you will die. „ She said coldly and hard. Melog began to approach the man from behind, and Shogi grew, almost taking on his true form. Saihe he sighed and then lowered the gun.

„This is your decision, and you will have to accept the consequences of your mercy. „ He said coldly, but it didn't seem like he had any intention of fighting any further. They turned to the ready princess. The girl with her head down. Catra took out the cloak that Frosta had discarded earlier and covered her with it.

„Everything will be fine. Don't worry, we will definitely find a way to help you. I promise!„ said her wife, but Frosta smiled painfully.

„You're a very good person Catra, you know that?„ she said quietly and together they went towards the camp.

Herold blinked, feeling the bond. She wagged her tail at what she saw. That person she saw brought back memories. They were from before she was born into the Swarm. She resembled someone she once knew. The person she liked. She felt off balance. For the first time since she had become part of the great community, she was Lost. So far everything has always been clear. Hunger had to be satisfied, nothing else mattered. Everything she did was dedicated to this. She had knowledge that she acquired in a terrible way. Now she had to use it for their good. The Swarm listened to her advice, even separating part of itself for her to manage. This was necessary to fulfill the new goal of the Swarm… But now something had changed. Until now, the future was like a dream, like a nightmare ... but now it's back! She didn't want it to be like that, because she was full of pain. But this person… Could it be her, one of them? She wasn't sure because she couldn't look at it. Her curiosity cost her the loss of her Enforcer. They were valuable, because the creation of their swords was expensive. They could only find this crystal in a few places, and most were out of their reach. However, this expedition yielded a lot of valuable information. She tested their enemy's skills. They learned his most dangerous weapon, and saw that the Crystal Blades were able to resist it... Now she just had to wait until they managed to implement the rest of their plan. So now she could rest a bit. So she went and looked for Her. She was waiting for her as always, ready to take her into her arms. They hugged her and she started humming a song, bringing her comfort,

Chapter End Notes

Well, I really like Frosta, but the plot led to these events. What do you think of the Herald? As always, I wholeheartedly welcome your comments and opinions.

The despair of the righteous and the hope of the wicked

Eti was glad that no one asked them too many questions. What happened in the undergrounds of Castle Crypto should remain a secret for now. She wasn't sure what to say about all this. A lot of things happened there, most of which she didn't understand. The fact that Blonde Boy turned out to be BLONDE GUY seemed the least of the problems. She liked him, and he seemed okay. Even if it turns out that he is her brother”in”law, she has nothing against it. It's important that he doesn't demand gifts from her for her birthday, because then he'll hit that yellow head with a metal hand. She didn't quite understand why he thought he should hide the fact that he could turn into this Big Guy. It seemed to have something to do with what happened when Her sister”in”law found that sword there. For all she knew, a lot of unpleasant things had happened back then. Everyone was trying to kill each other, especially her sister and her sister’s future wife, and almost blowing up half the universe, but trying the same things and expecting different results was the definition of wisdom... No, that was madness... But there was very little difference between wisdom and madness, she knew something about it. This time, however, the situation was different. Scar should be happy that her boyfriend was able to transform into someone like the heroine of the Galaxy. After all, she was at war with her father, any support would be useful to her... They should also be happy, she and her other boyfriend, for another reason. After all, the blonde boy was really big now... in every way. But she wasn't going to reveal his secret, he had to find out for himself. She didn't believe what the inquisitor said about him, she didn't care who built the sword and why, and neither did Golarion, who meant even less to her than Tarak. Unfortunately, she couldn't ignore the rest of the news so easily.

It was very cool to discover new possibilities of her hand. She hadn't wondered before why it was so valuable. She was sure it was just another ancient gadget that stupid, rich people collected. Yes, ithad taken some interesting abilities, but she knew well that the implants could do things quite similar. Of course, she liked her very much, and not only her, several of her girlfriends also found that its touch could be amazing. Now, however, she has discovered that it can change shape, and previously that she can throw energy bolts. She'll have to try out those abilities, and find out if it has any others. Unfortunately, she also learned something about herself and her family. She didn't fully understand it, but she didn't like being called an abomination at all. But her family was so twisted that it didn't make much of a difference.

But there was still Rosie... She had seen from that night in Brightmoon that she was hiding a secret. But most people had their secrets, she didn't mind. She loved her anyway. It didn't matter to her, but it mattered to the white”haired girl... The truth was overwhelming for ... Rosie was created by those who forged these swords and the weapons that were on this planet. Worst of all, they guessed why Rosie was created... She saw what she did when she met the Blondie in her second form. She almost killed her, it was close... She didn't mind that their girl was artificially created. After all, she herself was just a product for Jantar. What did it matter whether someone was given life by a woman or a machine? However, those behind it still controlled her. They still wanted her to be their tool... Their weapon, with which they could take revenge on their enemies... Including her sister and sister”in”law... She had absolutely no idea what she could do about it. Even fighting her father was beyond her capabilities. She was just a girl who knew best how to hurt others. She was good at killing, knew a little about warfare, and even about how rule people, though she never used these skills. She just wanted... to live and never be alone. She was not someone who could stand up to such power. She never wanted to fight ancient species and solve ancient puzzles. There was only Eti... but I guess she will have to become Eterna... She has to come up with something to protect Rosie, she won't let her be taken away from her! But how is she supposed to do it?

Of course, they couldn't completely hide what happened in the underground from Scar. They didn't have to lie, they just didn't tell the whole truth. they simply said that in the underground they found an ancient droid that wanted to kill them but they managed to deal with it without much effort, but there may be other such machines in the underground, so let the other soldiers be careful and let Smarty examine the remains. Of course, they had to make sure that Smarty didn't talk about that all herself, but she decided to let her see their databases. Alatar has pirated so many TV series that she'll be busy in a few hours or so, and then I'll come up with something. You could say they're out of trouble for now. They also learned that they were leaving the castle soon. Maybe it's a good thing, she's seen nicer places on this planet. The captain Wingy was also heading out to meet her husband, who was that nice old man they met when they first came across Heart Gift. They would have to do something with that girl too, but she wasn't quite sure what. According to Rosie, they couldn't just leave her like that, they had to come up with something to help her deal with her loneliness and the fact that she had been deceived or manipulated. Well, it would be easier if she created a new body, and maybe they could somehow get her onto their ship, but they would have to talk to Mr. Ilemshaw about that, since he was the one piloting the ship now. Bina will definitely agree, another kid won't bother her.

Her uncle wasn't causing any problems for now, so she left him alone. She knew she was risking a lot by letting him live, but he still saved her when she was Jantar's prisoner. She owed him so much, even though she knew that he didn't help her out of the goodness of his heart, because it was forged of cold iron. But he was still better than her father, if only by a little. She could only hope that he would not seek revenge for his lost power.

So she lay on her back, staring at the cafeteria ceiling, from where quite pleasant smells were coming. Wrongdak and Lilka were a really good pair of cooks. Everyone was preparing for the expedition north, a skeleton crew would remain in the castle, which was to surrender in the event of a more serious attack, and the rest were to either fly with the Comrade General or go to the mountains, together with all the equipment, and wait for further orders. The plan actually sounded good. They were supposed to be looking for some ancient ship, so maybe they should contact Heart Gift somehow. She just has to tell it in a way that Lonnie can understand. Only she is of course completely unfamiliar with conveying such things. She would most like to simply say that they have made friends with an ancient artificial intelligence that is a bit depressed but generally trustworthy, provided I try to kill everyone on the planet again, which she has already tried to do once but managed to talk her out of. That probably wouldn't sound good... She really needs to learn how to convey information to people without scaring them. Being nice to others is much harder than breaking their bones. While she was thinking, Rosie came to her and lay down next to her, cuddling her.

„How do you feel?„ she asked in sign language, getting up on her knees so that the girl could see her. The white-haired woman smiled sadly and said.

"It's hard to describe. Until now, I thought I was just an orphan who had the misfortune of getting caught up in events that were beyond her. I wanted to go on adventures, but I never thought it was so difficult. But now it's worse. Everything I knew about myself… everything I thought I knew about myself, turned out to be a lie. I was created as a weapon, as a killer. I was going to kill someone good, you saw it yourself. Now it's all clear. Even if I don't know exactly who I am, I know that I was created for the wrong purpose.„ her girlfriend She lowered her head, saddened. So she stood up a little, awkwardly hugged her, and then said.

„I'll be there with you. When I'm with you, I can hold back, remember. I just touched you and I was able to bring you back to consciousness. Next time it will work too, or maybe there won't be a next time... For now, what happens to you only when you are close to the BLONDE... Close to She-Ra. We'll just make sure you're never near her while she's turned and everything will be fine. You talked to her on Icarus and you didn't want to kill her, did you?„ She looked straight into her bright blue eyes, gentle but also full of depth. She kissed her, but Rosie then pulled away and continued to explain her concerns.

„What if that's not all? What if I have to do something else terrible? I don't know... Rebuild this heart or something like that... „ she looked straight into her eyes.„ Then... Will you stop me? In whatever way is necessary…”

She understood the unspoken request hidden in those words. For a moment the fire in her heart went out, and then it flared up with a hundredfold strength.

„I will do what you ask me... If it is necessary... „ she said quietly, and added in her thoughts. And then I will set the Galaxy on fire.

„You really did it, Mr. Wrongdak. I've never seen such a beautiful Orc Apple Pie!„ Lilka exclaimed with delight.

„Me too.„ he answered her truthfully. He knew absolutely nothing about Orc baking or Orc cuisine, but he tried his best to prepare the cake according to the red-haired girl's instructions. Emily helped them by carrying cakes and ingredients to make them. He liked his job as a cook because it reminded him of one of the first things he did after he was released. Even when he was among the Skittermanders, he liked trying new foods, but preparing them for others was much more interesting. He could make others' lives better, happier. On the one hand, it didn't require much sacrifice of time, on the other hand, the art of cooking made him feel creative. When he was part of the Horde, the mere thought of eating normal food instead of previously prepared amino acids and proteins was forbidden. This was yet another way he could oppose Horde Prime’a even after his death. Plus, cooking allowed him to take his mind off his worries.

He knew he should be happy that Shadow Weaver had left them and that Catra had found her father. Except this He knew he had hired Graag, the person who had enslaved him, to sell him as a thing. Lady Ka had imprisoned Itel, and was ready to kill her if necessary. She had even shot at Entrapta, who disliked violence so much. He was glad his friend was with them, and that his brother was not mad at him. Entrapta could help solve many of their problems, though he did not know how yet, but she was so smart that she would surely think of something.

Now they were slowly packing up to head north. Along with the soldiers serving Eti... and Catra's uncle. He didn't like the feline man either. The people of his race, or species as they were known in the galaxy, hadn't always been so warlike. He saw something of Catra in Igzar, and in Eti as well, a similar determination and barely restrained rage... Only the old mercenary was much more calculating and cunning. He had heard that Eti had intimidated him in some way, but he wasn't sure how. Anyway, deep down he hoped that this Pahtra would understand that not everyone was his enemy. So now I'm trying to use the last moments of my stay in this castle and cook for my friends.

„Can I have a word?„ someone called from the entrance to the kitchen. When he looked that way, he saw Bina smiling at him. He bowed to her and said.

„If Lilka agrees to let me stop cooking, I'll be happy to talk...„ he said, smiling at the burgund-haired womenh. He liked her, if only because I took such good care of Eti and the rest of the kids...

„Sure Bina! Emiliy and I can handle it!„ Lilka exclaimed, smiling at him. He smiled at her in response and followed the captain. She led him to one of the low and lonely towers that so numerously decorated the castle.

„What did you want to ask me?„ he said, a bit concerned. She probably had reasons to be angry with him. After all, he didn't recognize Shadow Weaver while she was traveling with them.

“I've heard your kind can't lie, and you certainly can't, as I've come to realize in my weeks of traveling. So tell me, did this woman, Shadow Weaver, do anything to my children? They say she didn't, but they can hide it. You yourself have noticed that they always try to pretend to be stronger than they are.”

He thought for a moment and then shook his head.

„She didn't do anything, I don't think she even raised her voice again, I must admit that they were probably the ones who got themselves into trouble. And her too. She… had a friend … girl, I mean. Or a woman… you know what I mean… And I guess they're broken up now. Because she had to reveal herself when she saved Eti... Then she found a home for them here. I didn't know her before, I only met her once and I never talked to her. I saw the effects of what she did. How she hurt them, her daughters. I know what wounds she inflicted on them because I received similar ones from my Big Brother.„ A much shorter woman straight into the eyes. She squinted and sighed heavily.

„I'm happy about it. That means she didn't do anything to them. I was raised in similarly terrible conditions, by an individual who saw me as just a tool, an extension of his will. Part of me wants her to rot in the dungeon, have her head cut off or whatever you do with criminals here... But on the other hand, she saved Eti Twice, or rather thrice, if you count the fact that she didn't let her be captured by her father. And she sacrificed herself to save Itel... It would be much easier if she was just a nasty hag that could simply be left behind and forgotten. Now I feel a bit like I betrayed her.”

He thought for a moment before answering.

„It's more complicated. Catra…She also did a lot of bad things, hurt a lot of people. Not to mention my brother who... He destroyed the lives of an entire generation... I know that I would also do evil if my friends had not freed me. Sometimes it's just hard to separate the bad from the good. I lived for some time on a planet conquered by the Vesks. They are warriors who love to wage war, even though it is known that it is associated with great evil. They are brave and honorable, they accepted me, they do not ask what I am or where I come from. But I know that their leaders are no different from my brother, only that they had a choice, their minds were not warped by conditioning. They could choose. Same with Eti’s Uncle... She says he saved her, but he is also belligerent and ruthless... I guess most people are like that...”

The woman smiled friendly at him. It was a very nice and pleasant smile.

„You're quite smart for an eight-year-old.„ She laughed briefly and added. „Or rather, you're just smart, honest and good-hearted but that's not a flaw. It's better to be someone like that, you know, someone like Lady Cala'i... I didn't like her from the beginning. I should have trusted Eti's instincts. The girl sensed who she was. She pursed her lips angrily. He himself was fooled by that girl. She seemed so wonderful, beautiful and smart. She was perfect, but Entrapta said imperfection was beautiful. Did this start to make such perfection terrible? Inhuman? He didn't know the answer to that question.

„By the way , if we're going north, you're going to need some new clothes. You can borrow them from us. If you want, I'll help you put them on. „ she said and winked at him. He frowned, what did she mean?

Lady Sorrowflame stretched her back. A long journey awaited... Maybe not that long, but lonely and perhaps in the light of moons... The bright ones that burned like the sun. She had some protection, and having them come anyway weakened her. Still, this journey was worth every sacrifice. She had to get to Umbracor, she had to find out the truth. She was almost sure that the strange elflike creature was telling the truth. It was too time-consuming to deceive her about this , and it didn't bring them any profit. Perhaps they wanted to use her power to break the security of this place, but that was rather unlikely. And even if they wanted to, well, he joined the countless legions of fools who wanted to take advantage of her. However, if they were telling the truth and finally, after all these centuries, she would discover What happened to Golarion... A shiver of excitement shook her cold, dead body, something she hadn't felt for a long time! Now she finally understood that she was destined to come to this place! It was not a matter of chance, but the Will of higher forces that wanted her to discover the truth! Her faith, which had smoldered like an ember covered with ashes for centuries, was now ready to burst into flame! A flame that will set the universe on fire! But one thing at a time, he has to get there first.

„ They're still looking for the girl... I wonder what happened to her? It would be very funny if she froze in a storm! Frozen Frosta! I guess this is called pure irony.” Lady Ka giggled at her own joke. It may not have been the best, but she had to admit it was quite funny.

„Don't say things like that out loud. Someone might hear, and you're not very popular here anyway. Remember that when I leave, you will be on your own here.„ She said seriously, looking at the Lord Admiral's left hand. They stood here, away from the rest of Jaki's army, which was preparing to lay siege to the rebel castle. Well, as it turned out, neither the Dark Sorceress nor the monstrous aristocrat were there, but of course they weren't going to tell anyone about it. Still, they had to be ready to fulfill Antares's orders. The problem was that these orders could turn out to be contrary to the wishes of the queen and her friends. Unfortunately, even if she wanted to, her options were limited. She was powerful, but such a delicate matter required a bit of finesse, and she always lacked patience for such matters. Perhaps her hypnotic abilities would allow her to capture the second daughter, but the destruction she could wreak would further inflame relations between the fleet and the monarchy, and it was not yet time to depose Glimmer from the throne and give it to the Grand Marshal. . However Lady Ka had a very personal attitude towards the capture of that girl. She had to be careful, and her petty hatred towards that girl would cause her to lose control and anger the Lord Admiral once again. She turned and looked at the woman's hand, proof that it was not wise to cross him. Truth be told, she was lucky anyway, if she were Antares, she would have cut off both her arms and legs. But she wasn't in his place as far as she knew, she never had any real offspring or Family, even before her transformation.

„Will this storm bother you?„ the woman in the half-mask said to her. She smiled at her.

„Close to where I lived, just before she became undead, there was a gigantic storm that raged for centuries, but it didn't keep me away, and neither will this storm.„ she reassured her companion.

„ And if the Lord Admiral's heiress got lost in this storm and was never found, it would be an irreparable loss, but we could not prevent it in any way, so sad „ Lady. Ka She laughed quietly, but answered her with full seriousness.

"You should give up on your dislike towards Catra. If you are unable to accept that in the future she will take over the legacy of the Antares family, then look for a new patron. With your skills, it probably wouldn't be that difficult. „ she said in a hard tone, and the woman in the half-mask sighed heavily.

„It's easy for you to say. You are an ancient dragon and vampire. You changed patrons more times than I changed knives. A I like to change knives. „ To emphasize her words, she threw up one of the knives and caught it in the air. „I'm not used to this."

She turned to her and kissed Lady Ka.

In fact, you are right, and at the same time you are so wrong. I have worked with many people, but my one true patron was Dahak. „ she moved away from her and smiled similarly. „ I'll try to find a new place for you, my dear. „ She said and, taking off her clothes, she transformed into a dragon, spread her wings and flew in the direction where she was supposed to find answers to the secrets that had been haunting her for centuries.

„You see? We are already there! You'll go to bed soon and we'll prepare something warm for you! Catra said to her in a comforting tone. She smiled back, but she felt no Joy. For a brief moment after that fight, she was sure that everything would be back to normal. And then the Man told who she was, what was happening to her. This infuriated Catra, who now assured her that it was all nonsense, that nothing was happening, she just needed to be cured!”

She didn't deny that because she didn't to upset her friend even more, she already seemed to be shaken. But she knew he was telling the truth. She was turning into a monster, a terrible creature from the legends told during snowstorms. Both Shogi and Melog seemed concerned about this, though each for different reasons. The multi-eyed ancient creature was worried about the health of its mistress, while the immigrant from a distant planet clearly wanted to reassure his companion, but it was not easy.

They reached the camp, where everyone greeted them joyfully. Under any other circumstances, she would have been ashamed of having caused so much trouble, but now she saw that her problems were not over. That she would have to face. After their first greetings, they saw the queen's tent flaps begin to open, and Glimmer and Bow ran out. The Queen still couldn't teleport, so things weren't quite right for her either. They both ran to her and wanted to hug her, but she stepped back and pulled her hood tighter. Glimmer stood in front of her confused and her husband asked.

“Are you okay? If something happened then…” he asked, holding out his hand to her, but she pulled away, and Catra said.

“Frosta is tired, a lot has happened and I think we need to talk about a few things… - she was very serious, so everyone nodded in agreement. But let Frosta rest in her tent for a while, after what happened… All this tired her out a lot.”

„Hey! I'm just here, don't talk about me like I'm not here!” She looked sharply at her feline friend, who nodded „You're right, sorry. „ She said in an apologetic tone. „ Is everything okay with you? „ Catra looked at Glimmer, who hesitated.

„Yes, apart from the fact that I can't still use my power.„ The Queen rubbed her shoulder. „My hand is just a little numb, but it's nothing serious.”

„Will I also be able to participate in this council?” Saihe asked in a cautious voice.

„So you can spread nonsense again!„ the feline woman looked sharply at the soldier, but her wife put a hand on her shoulder, so the Grand Marshal calmed down a bit.

„I'm very sorry about what happened, but unfortunately I have to discuss a few things. Very important things.” Saihe gave them a look that made even Bow look gloomy .

„Okay, let's go to the command tent. And so it would be useful for us to talk about the strategy for the coming days.„ said Glimmer and started giving orders. However, after a while, a messenger ran up to them and saluted. He was wearing the strange armor worn by soldiers serving the Star Sisters. The color red indicated that it served Halo

„I'm sorry, Queen, but Halo, The Star Sister would like to talk to you about a very urgent matter that I'm sure she'll be interested in.„ he said in an official tone.

„I'm very sorry, but ask her if she could wait, because we need to urgently discuss matters of state importance. „ the queen explained, looking at him apologetically, but then they heard a vague and rough voice from behind the guard.

„Oh, I won't take up too much of your time... „ The crowd that was slowly gathering around them parted and she saw a woman sitting in a wheelchair who had blue hair and her body on the right side was grayish, as if dead. She was surrounded by blue" armored guards, and accompanied by a liveried Horde Clone who supported her wheelchair behind her. She knew this woman well.

„Aunt Hello! „ she called happily and took a few steps towards the woman, but her guards covered her.

„ Good morning Frosta . I just came here to talk about your situation. „ she said in a gentle, almost motherly tone and smiled with the living half of her mouth.

"Maybe it's better that we go to a secluded place and discuss everything in private?„ Glimmer asked, but Halo laughed bitterly and hoarsely.

„Unfortunately, it will be best if everyone interested witnesses what will be said here. Some things shouldn't be hidden from the public, right?„ the woman looked at da Glimmer, and a strange spark appeared in her only seeing eye. Catra Grimaced at the Star Sister, Adora seemed confused at the sight of the woman. Bow, on the other hand, looked at the disabled woman with compassion.

„I don't know what you're talking about.„ Glimmer said with a little hesitation, as if Halo was right, she was hiding something. But the queen was always honest with her. At this moment, Netosa began to break through , followed by Mermista, who gave Star Sister a suspicious look, their kingdoms have never liked each other.

„Halo! Have you decided to join us now? That's good, any help is needed.„ said the general, holding on helplessly and smiling happily.

„Unfortunately, that's not why I came here.„ the woman seemed a bit amused.

„But you know Shadow Weaver could be there... It turns out you were right and she's alive. Don't you want revenge? „ The ruler of Armoria asked , but Halo smiled mysteriously and nastily.

„Revenge, indeed, nothing tastes as sweet as revenge, but to really feel it you need... Some preparations. It's my business anyway, not your! I'm on my way to getting my justice, but you never had a hand in it. You only ever told me that she was dead and that I should move on with my life. And yet the truth came to light…. And now it's up to me to bring justice. I prepared everything myself, I took the reins of my destiny myself. But I didn't come here to talk about this Woman. What I want to talk about, unfortunately, touches on much sadder matters.„ she looked at her and saw sadness and a sense of guilt in her only healthy eye.

But after a moment, Her gaze hardened and she looked at Glimmer.

„Maybe not everyone knows this, but Princess Frosta had a terrible accident some time ago... Fortunately , she managed to recover, and now she is here with us... Or at least that's what everyone thought... But the truth is completely different, isn't Frosta?„ the woman in the wheelchair looked at her. Everyone around them did the same, even Netossa. She shuddered and pulled her hood tighter over her head.

„ Auntie Hello... Why are you doing this... You have always been good to me... Why do you want everyone to see now... It's not my fault! I didn't do anything wrong!„ she felt tears coming to her eyes again, and she couldn't let them flow down her face again. Not now, with everyone looking at her. Shogi walked up to her and tried to shield her from the eyes of those surrounding her

„ Leave her! She didn't do anything to you! What's happening to her doesn't concern anyone here! If you can't help her, leave her alone!„ Catra shouted furiously, but the woman with a half-paralyzed body smiled at the great Marshal.

„Of course she didn't do anything, and she's just a victim. Just like all of you, like Hordak, who was conditioned by his creator-brother and didn't want to conquer us all, or like you Catra, who was just a wronged girl, and the fact that you almost didn't kill us all was the result that no one understood you.”

„How dare you accuse her of what she once did. You know well that we stood together against Horde Prime . „ Adora said sharply, and the light shone in her blue eyes

„I don't know what you're talking about, but if you're going against my friend, you're going against me, too. Are you sure you want to do this?„ Glimmer She gave her a warning look, but Halo just smacked her lips indistinctly.

„I guess they haven't told you yet, have they? At least not everything. Even though I only found out about this matter recently, from a highly trusted source. If you want to know the truth, ask your friend to take off her hood. It's nothing difficult. Let me show you all what she looks like now. I'm not ashamed of what I am and what was done to me, so she should be too. „ she said quietly, smiling slightly. Glimmer looked at her as if to tell her to raise her hood, but then hesitated and looked at the rest of her friends questioningly.

„You're horrible„ Catra drawled, stretching her claws. Adora also stepped forward, sword in hand and glaring at the guards.

„What do you want from her?! Did you come here just to make her suffer even more? Anyone, but you know best what Shadow Weaver magic can do. „ She said firmly, but Star Sister laughed painfully.

“Just so you know, I know, but now I'm just asking the girl to take off her hood. Nothing bad will happen then, right?” She replied to the heroine of the Galaxy, and a mocking glint appeared in her eye. People started to look at them, and also whisper among themselves. Catra wanted to say something, which probably only made the situation worse, so she stepped forward and pulled off her hood. Everyone, including Glimmer took a deep breath. She lowered her gaze, fully aware of the impression she must have made. And still, no one knew the truth about what she really was.

“She's right, something terrible happened to me and I have no idea what. - She said in a hushed voice. She wanted to cringe, seeing the looks of everyone around her. But she raised her head and looked into Halo's eyes, both dead and alive.

„I, I don't know what happened to me. Shadow Weaver hit me with a Spell that put me in a coma. I was... I dreamed strange things... This dream was like a real one, and something happened there, something terrible. There I met first a terrifying woman and then this man. He touched me, and then I felt something. Since then I have changed, and today I have become what you see. I went into the Wild to hunt something because I was so hungry. I killed an animal and ate its flesh. I'm not sure what's happening to me, but it's definitely not good. Halo is right, he deserves you for a bit of truth, as much as I can tell you. I'm sorry if you feel bad that you were immediately informed about what happened to me and that I caused so much trouble for everyone.„ She looked down and wanted to hide somewhere. Glimmer looked at her with concern and fear in her eyes, Netossa stiffened, and Bow placed a hand on her shoulder, but she pulled away. Netossa stiffened, and Bow put a hand on her shoulder, but she moved away. She didn't want that kind of pity because it wasn't something others could help her with.

„Is... is there anything we can do for you?„ The techmaster said in a concerned voice, and she was about to answer him, but Catra interrupted.

„Of course we can! The power of She-Ra can definitely help you. After all, we've all seen what she can do. She healed me once... She brought me back from the dead! I've never talked about it before, but it was true. It shouldn't be the slightest bit difficult to cure her. We simply have to work out how to do it, but it's only a matter of time, nothing more.„ there was so much certainty] in her voice that she might be right, and for a moment she felt a surge of hope, but then Halo burst into loud, mocking laughter that echoed over the entire military camp, and the thunder of the approaching storm seemed to accompany it.

„Sweet children of innocent ignorance You know so little of the higher secrets that the universe holds. No child, She-Ra's power will not help you in any way. Well, not like that, at least in a way all wanted. For her power belongs to life, and you were touched by the forces of death itself. The man you saw was Charon himself, the leader of the daemons, the ruler of Abbadon , the Horseman Of Death, whom I chose as my patron!„ the woman rose in a wheelchair and showed a symbol depicting a skull with coins in place of the eye sockets. Most of the crowd looked on with confusion, but Saihe hissed and then made a strange gesture, reminiscent of what the inhabitants of her kingdom did to ward off evil spirits.

„What... what does that mean?„ she asked, looking fearfully at the woman she had considered her aunt for many years, whom she could always trust, and who now acted as if she was her greatest enemy.

„Your body is changing, or rather It is dying... You are slowly turning into a monster, not-dead monster. You become a Strigoi, a Ghoul-like creature that devours the flesh of other creatures, capable of tearing apart almost any ordinary animal. So you will be a monster that will arouse fear among the Inhabitants of this planet. However, there is a chance for you, because you have been offered grace... You will not change into this creature right away. It will take some time. You will be able to satisfy your hunger with raw meat for some time. This may take quite a long time, and it will seem to you that you rule over everyone...

Unfortunately, this is only an appearance, sooner or later your nature will reveal itself, and then you will become a threat to everyone, especially considering the power you have. There are several solutions, the simplest is most drastic, but also the safest.„ Halo paused for a moment so that everyone could understand what I was proposing... There was silence as everyone understood the implications of Sister Star's words.

„How can you even suggest such a thing!„ Glimmer shouted, and Catra jumped with her claws towards the Woman in the Wheelchair, but she raised her living arm and clenched her fist. The cat girl doubled over as if she was overcome by unbearable pain. But then Adora pointed your sword at her and it glowed with Rainbow light, making Halo cringe, and released Catra from her embrace. Bow drew his bow and aimed an arrow at the woman's chest.

„One more word, one move of your hand, and I will destroy you. I see that this light hurts you. I've heard that you are powerful, but if you continue to harm my loved ones, all your power will be useless!.„ Said the Princess of Power in an absolutely cold tone, and Sister Star cringed. Unfortunately, she was also pierced by the pain caused by the luminous power. Catra rose to her feet, her companion radiating blood red. It even seemed that the Great Marshal would like to attack Halo again, who laughed despite the pain that was gripping her.

„Well, after all, you serve life, don't you? I'm a half-dead cripple who just wants a little justice. Indeed, We stand on opposite sides...„ Star Sister said quietly, Ignoring the suffering.

„ Don't try to play the victim! It was you who came here and... „ Adora said, threatening the woman with her sword, so the guards drew their weapons, ready to fight the heroine of the Galaxy, but their mistress signaled them to hold back, and then she said in an amused voice.

„And what did I do? I only said a few words of truth, and there is nothing greater than the truth, isn't it?„ She looked at the shining girl. Now it was clear how different they were. A woman broken by suffering, and a young heroine with a wonderful future ahead of her. But she herself couldn't bear it, just like Halo, she was also hurt by She-Ra's brightness . But the pain would be too great. She said in a whisper.

„Adora, please!„ but her friend didn't hear her, because the people gathered around started whispering among themselves, increasingly confused by the situation. Then Shogi wanted to help her and grew, taking on his true form. He pushed Adora , knocking her to the ground. When She-Ra was moved away from her She could breathe and she cried out.

„It hurts so much, please stop!„ she said through bloody tears. Adora turned to her, then dimmed her glow, but didn't completely dull it. Scrrams rang out as everyone saw Shogi's true form , even some took up weapons, ready to fight the monster.

„Shogi , everything's fine now!„ she said to her friend, who stepped back and looked at her questioningly. Catra, Adora and Netossa they knew what Shogoth looked like , but for the rest it must have been a terrifying sight. Glimmer's eyes widened, clearly shocked, and Bow went to cover her, but he stepped back when Glimmer looked at him and shook her head.

„Truly, another legend walks among us. Although it must be admitted that this is not a legend that anyone would like to meet on their journey. However, I think you both will make a great company.„ Said Halo calmly, who was obviously not very scared by the sight of the multi-eyed creature. „But think that you will intimidate me... „ She looked at Catra , who was panting heavily and staring at Star Sister with fury in her eyes. „You can try to kill me, and you would probably succeed, although I promise that it would not be easy for you to defeat me. But you are not the ones who would raise your hand against the messenger! But that's all I am!„ she laughed again. „However, I came here not only to open your eyes, but also because I know how to help Frosta. We promised a long time ago that we would take care of you, me and my sister! However, you are already an adult and you should be able to cope on your own... But I can't just abandon you like that. So, I'll tell you a secret, but in return, your friends should give me something.„ She looked at everyone gathered. Many seemed very confused by Sister Star's words, but everyone waited to hear what the princesses and the great Marshal would say.

„Tell us what you want and what you can offer us!„ Glimmer said, looking at her carefully.

„I only want one thing, a spaceship. Specifically, Darla, the one you discovered in the desert. „ she said, looking at the queen with a half-smile. Glimmer, Adora and Catra looked shocked. It was actually the only remnant of Mara, the previous She-Ra... She was extremely important to Adora... And Entrapta ...”

„And what do you offer in return?„ Glimmer asked after several long moments of tense Silence. A triumphant smile appeared on Halo's face „Few would be able to reverse the curse cast by Charon himself... Not even Another God could do it. But there are beings in the universe who can do this... Far away, there is a place known as Xadia where a sorcerer lives, powerful and wise. Only he has the knowledge to correct the Curse cast by my master. If you comply with my demands, I am ready to show you where to find this sorcerer. I guess your friend's life is worth more than one spaceship, right?„ she tilted her head and raised one eyebrow questioningly. All the princesses looked at each other, considering the wheelchair woman's proposal. The final decision belonged to only two people.

„How do we know you're telling the truth? „ asked the queen, looking carefully at the ashenfaced woman, who shook her head.

„You can't know if I'm telling the truth, but risk the future and happiness of one of you? „ Hello looked first at da Glimmer and then at her.

Why your Patron can't break the curse he made himself, but allows you to help break it. „ Adora asked sharply, and Halo no shrugged with one shoulder.

„ Horseman of Death will is unknown to mortals. He has his own purposes, which he may or may not reveal to me. Even if he did, it doesn't mean I would want to share them with you. Or maybe I just have scruples and want to help Frosta, Or maybe I calculated everything, and it's all part of the grand plan? You can't know that and let's be honest, it's not the most important thing.„ Said the Star Sister in a matter-of-fact tone, like a hunter selling pelts at the market.

„You will receive the answer in the evening! We still need to confer.„ Glimmer said in a serious voice. „But no matter what decision I make, you are not welcome in this kingdom.”

„Don't argue with her. She wants to deceive us all. It would be best if we imprisoned her and I had a serious talk with her. The old fashioned way...„ Catra said, giving Halo a menacing look.

Well, you remain a Horde Member forever.„ Halo said, smiling at the feline woman.

„After all, you yourself called me a pupil of Shadow Weaver.„ The Grand Marshal replied. The Star Sister snorted and told her clone to turn around and they started walking towards their means of transport, but then Catra called out.

„You know what? You became the one who ruined your life, like Shadow Weave .”

Halo then signaled the clone to stop and turn towards the great Marshal.

„You see, in life, as they say, it's better to die a hero than to live and become a villain.„ said the woman in the wheelchair and looked at Adora . „ I advise you and your loved one to think about these words.„ and left them alone.

She sat in the meeting and rubbed her temples with her fingers. She had just listened to Saihe and Catra and Adora's story about what happened when they were looking for Frosta. Another problem, another threat they had to face. Netossa and Mermista, as well as several minor commanders, were also present. They haven't informed Lady Ka or Lady Sorrowflame yet although this terrible woman apparently flew away to take care of some matters. She didn't think to forbid her from doing so and now it was too late, so she would have to come to terms with all the consequences that might result from what the Not-Dead dragon would do, although she probably wouldn't listen to her anyway. She wasn't sure she had any power over someone like that. Now they had to quickly confer about what had happened to Adora, Catra, and Frosta during the Search for the Ice Princess.

"So no further groups of these creatures have been detected reaching our planet?„ She finally asked, looking at Netossa and Onyx Sky, but they both shook their heads, and then the general spoke up.

"I don't know anything about that, I would have been notified if any had entered our planet's orbit." she said in a resigned tone, but then Onyx Sky spoke up. "I sent a query to space defense. They are examining the indications of the reconnaissance systems, but so far it seems that no aliens have reached our planet, or even the part of the former Empire that we control.

"But we didn't find out about the arrival of this ship before it was too late?" she asked with concern in her voice.

“Actually, this ship was detected, we just mistook it for a regular civilian vehicle. You gave the order not to stop every vehicle that arrived on this planet. “Said the person from Ikarus. Onyx Sky decided to stay with them despite the fact that General Juliette was stripped of her position and everyone knew that their very close relationship involved them.

„Well, then, I guess I'll have to change my orders.„ She sighed, because she did not like the increased isolation of Etheria and the closing of its borders.. She didn't want everyone who wanted to come here to be detained, because many of them were refugees looking for a better life on a planet not ravaged by war. However, if it may pose a threat to those who already live here, it will have to think about a better solution. „Do such troops herald an invasion? „ she looked at Izai, who carefully shook his head.

„I'm not sure if I'm the best person to comment on this, as I'm just an ordinary soldier who has simply faced these creatures in a few battles, but as far as I know, they don't have to worry about this type of thing. It is said that the Swarm is one gigantic organism, and its individual components are worth less to it than the hair on our head. The swarm simply sends out a fleet, and if it is repelled it either sends twice the size, or it doesn't. No one is really behind its Intentions. Honestly, it's better to ask someone more experienced, and who will give an opinion from a more... global or even cosmic perspective.„ He spoke carefully, but sounded reasonable.

„I know, that's why I sent it to someone else. We just have to wait a little longer.„ she said, but she also felt a little reassured. Soon the person she called entered the tent and bowed low to her.

„Good evening Majesty, I heard Why did you call me. I hope I can give you advice and share my knowledge.„ Asindesa di Vir said in an absolutely serious voice. She looked definitely worse than the last time she saw her. Her hair was messy and there were dark circles under her eyes. She was pale and emaciated, and was visibly depressed.

„You asked her for help! You know who she was hanging out with! We all know, and we always knew, but we didn't say it out loud... You had something in common with that witch! Let me tell you straight, you were lovers, or even more. You were one of the last people to talk to Shadow Weaver before She escaped. I'm not sure if you helped her escape from her cell, but we can't rule it out. Tell me why we shouldn't arrest you, actually I'm not sure why we haven't already!„ exclaimed the cat-like woman, looking menacingly at the knight, who accepted her words unmoved.

„Catra! We can't arrest just on suspicion!„ she turned to the Grand Marshal, who was about to answer her something sharply, but Asindesa interfered.

„Some of your suspicions are right. In fact, our relationship went far beyond friendship. However, she had no idea who she really was, even though I knew she dealt in dark magic, but that was nothing that would be considered shocking to us Hell Knights. Many of us summon devils or practice necromancy. I had no reason to suspect she came from this planet, mind you, it was completely unknown to the wider universe for millennia! To be honest, I could and should have been more vigilant, which is why I would like to compensate for my shortcomings before I submit myself to the order's court. The sentence will be severe, but it is not your business, but the Order's. Until then, I can serve you and try to correct my mistakes.„ she was speaking seriously all the time, although she also had the impression that she could sense resignation and great sadness in her voice, but she seemed to be sincere, so she decided that she could trust her.

„If you are ready to follow my orders, I agree to accept temporary service, but remember who you may meet along the way. I'm not sure how much I can trust that you will make the right decision then. To be honest, we here understand all too well what you must be going through right now. „ she looked significantly at Catra, who snorted irritably. The knight pulled out her sword, the strange one that always caught Adora's eye.

„I swear on my honor, and also on the honor of My Order, that I will serve you faithfully, I will not betray you in any way, and I will do everything... Absolutely everything to correct my mistakes. „She said, kneeling down and stabbing the blade into the ground beneath their feet. They looked at each other, but she had already decided.

„I accept your oath, but I called you here for a completely different reason. I want to talk to you about the Swarm... „ she said, and then Asindesa looked at her with fear in her eyes.

„Does this mean you are at risk of invasion?„ She asked , looking at the Queen anxiously. She explained to her what had happened, repeating the words of Izai, who sometimes corrected her. The Hellnight nodded her head while listening to this account and finally said.

„This looks different than I expected. It didn't have to be an invasion, because it looked like some sort of reconnaissance mission. I have fought many enemies, cultists of Great Old One's , the Dominion of Black, but the Swarm battles have always been the hardest. However, this is an opponent without subtlety. At least that has been the case so far, because the Swarm can adapt to the opponent and the methods used by him. This is not an ordinary enemy, but one great orgasm, thousands of components united by one will, one. awareness." The Knight explained, and the Saihe soldier confirmed her words with a nod. „This behavior is so unusual that I honestly don't know what to say about it. However, I know that there are many treasures hidden behind your planet. You know it too...„ The knight looked at them significantly, so she sighed and replied.

„The legacy of the First Ones is a real curse for our planet.„ She looked at Adora apologetically, but the heroine of the Galaxy just nodded and smiled, showing that she understood. „However, should we prepare for further incursions of this type?„ she looked the knight straight in the eyes, and she sighed heavily and said.

„Probably yes, but they may be larger than this onee, although I'm not sure about that. This is a completely new way of doing things that we haven't found before. Perhaps the great Marshal's father could teach your captains to better guard the orbit, because where are you the best at it, No offense. „ she looked at the gathered commanders. Netossa nodded sadly and Mermista sighed and said smiling sadly.

„My husband would love to become the captain of a space ship, but he is slightly claustrophobic and hates computers and other similar devices. Besides, spaceships cannot be set on fire."

„That's a great idea! We have to inform my father about everything so that he can see him. I'm sure he'll be happy to help us!„ Catra exclaimed with such faith in the Lord Admiral that it was hard to believe that this was the same girl who was always suspicious and distrustful because of the way she was treated as a child. She saw that you should be happy about how far the Grand Marshal had come, but she couldn't get rid of the suspicions that were growing in her towards Antares, but for now she decided to leave them to herself...

„That's a good point, he should also know about this attack. Even if nothing comes of it, it's still better to inform him about everything.„ She said and everyone present agreed. For now, they had to deal with current matters anyway, mainly getting to Crypto Castle, and probably capturing it. She has enough troops to make it happen, but that's not a problem. The most important thing was to avoid bloodshed, but how could this be done when Shadow Weaver could be there, as well as Lady Cala, not to mention this young sorceress. As she thought of the Shadow Mistress, she looked over at Asindesa, who was staring ahead glumly. It was still hard for her to understand what kind of relationship the two women had. She knew that everyone deserved love, but you never thought that could include someone like her. She actually felt sorry for the Lady of Blades, because she seemed to be an honest person, full of honor and sacrifice, something like this shouldn't have happened to her. Besides, she seemed to know a lot about the state of the universe, and she needed another source of information other than Catra's father and his subordinates. She also had to ask one thing, but I will do it together in Bow when they are alone.

„Maybe it's easiest if we get there stealthily, using Melog's cloaking like we did before.„ Adora said in a slightly cheerier voice, she seemed a bit less distressed than during the conversation with Halo

„It may be difficult, because this castle is a damn maze, but if we try, we will somehow manage to navigate its corridors. I think we still have the old datapads we used during the war, right?„ Catra looked at the others, stroking her shape-shifting companion with one hand and nervously tapping the table with the other.

„Sure! Entrapta gave them to us after our first meeting all those years ago. It was before the Ball, as you know.” Bow said and Catra grimaced.

„Yes, it was terrible, I hope the next prom you go to will be more fun.„ a voice grows coming from the shaded part of the tent. Frosta was there and didn't speak to anyone for most of the conversation, lost in dark thoughts. Catra smiled when she heard Frosta speak, and she seemed to be more cheerful. She was worried about the ice princess. She couldn't imagine that something like this could happen to someone. Although maybe she should…

„Well, I'll try to make the next ball much better!” Catra exclaimed and laughed.

„ Now I guess it's Scorpia's turn... She'll definitely be happy. This time we will all have our own pair, well almost all of us.„ Bow said and hesitated when he saw that both Knight and Frost looked down.

„ I'm sorry, I didn't mean to make you sad.„ said her husband in an apologetic tone.

„ It's nothing, we just met at the Archduke's ball... Prince Adamson. „ said Asindesa di Vir. Catra snorted, looking at the Lady of Blades with contempt, but she herself flinched at her words, as she remembered the Archduke and his cold blue eyes. However, she shook her head to clear the unpleasant image from her mind and decided to change the subject.

„Look, regardless of what happened, I think we should start negotiating. Lonnie is still in command, regardless of what Shadow Weaver may have done. She's not evil, she just made bad decisions and went too far. After all, her entire rebellion was not created to ensure her power, but to make life better for the inhabitants of our planet, in her opinion at least. I know it's hard to forgive her for what she did to all of us, but we must try to make peace, lest we plunge our planet into another war!„ she exclaimed, looking into everyone's eyes.

„First of all, you wrongly assume that she still has some power. Shadow Weaver never tolerated any rivals, and even if she didn't completely push her away, she could intimidate her and make her a puppet, just like I tried to do with Hordak. And there's a blonde-haired bitch... Lady Cala smells of arrogance. She was no different from Horde Prime, except perhaps that he had the power to justify his hubris. I don't believe she would let Lonnie stay in power.„ Catra said, Adora added.

„She is a lying manipulator who takes advantage of the kindness of others, but she is also a great fighter. If she wanted to take over the rebellion, she would. So we don't know who is in command in Crypto Castle now. Perhaps there is no one there to negotiate with.”

„But we have to try! We cannot miss the opportunity to end all this peacefully. I won't let another war break out just because I'm afraid to take the risk!„ she cried, clenching her fists.

„There is no more peace! Not after what Shadow Weaver and Lady Cala did! They killed your subjects!” Catra said in a sharp tone.

„ You know, Catra, your father's subordinates also killed several guards, your guards! You trained them yourself and I helped you with that!” Bow said in a serious tone.
„This is something completely different. They didn't do it on purpose, it was just an accident during a fight... Such things happen, everyone knows about it.„ said Catra, wagging her tail nervously, and Melog changed colors between blue and red and rubbed his head against his companion...

„The guards died because your father's servant had no regard for the lives of others. You heard yourself that it's just collateral damage for him!„ she exclaimed, feeling her anger rising.

„ Catra... I know that your father has become someone very close to you , and that you are very important to him. But he is not who you want him to be. He is... A mercenary commander... A man who has been waging war for decades. Things like this change people. They are not like us, like us!„ Bow said, trying to sound as calm as possible, and placed a hand on his wife's shoulder. Catra's hair ruffled and she said quietly, but her voice was full of anger.

„ Don't forget that we have all been involved in war all our lives. I was raised to be a soldier, just like Adora! That means we don't fit here either! Seen this way, no one on this planet fit here! You're right, war changes people. We all know it because it changed us all!”

Her husband sighed and then said.

„But here we either defended ourselves or fought because we were ordered to. His soldiers fight mainly because he pays them or for his and their glory. Except for Lady Ka's dogs, but they give the impression that they would love to rob us.”

Catra huffed in annoyance and said, pointing her finger at her husband's chest.

„They are looking for their homeland that was taken away from them. They are like Star Siblings, deprived of a home, forced to fight for survival. But they came here, and they will help us fight the war that we abandoned because it was so convenient for us."

„What if one day he decides that Etheria will be the perfect homeland for his army? „ she said quietly, But hearing her words, the feline woman turned red with rage, just like her companion, although he also emanated other emotions.

„How dare you say such things! Since he arrived, he has given us no reason to distrust him! He helped defend your city, and now supports us in the fight against Shadow Weaver!„ She shouted at her, her voice full of anger. Perhaps she had made a mistake when she talked about her father in that way, but now she realized that, in fact, it MIGHT have happened at some point. If Catra weren't his daughter, then perhaps his arrival here wouldn't have been so peaceful after all. After all, he had already appointed himself Lord Protector of Taurus. Who knows what else he was planning.

„I don't want to take sides, I don't want them to be sides at all, but we should still be careful. Even if your father is a decent man…" Netossa said, but Catra interrupted her.

„Even!„ she exclaimed indignantly, but her wife put her hand on her shoulder, so the cat-like Woman fell silent for a moment.

„Even if your father is a decent man. Netossa continued. „We certainly can't say the same about his subordinates. You say that Lady Sorrowflame is not only a dragon, but also some kind of living dead! Until now, I thought that these types of creatures only live in fairy tales, the kind that scare children!" the general exclaimed , and cast a fleeting glance towards Frosty, who was curled up in her place.

„Lady Ka is equally terrible. Every time she looks at me, I feel like she sees me as an idiot who she would like to hurt. And when he looks at you, it seems like he hates you. Don't tell me you haven't noticed it yourself. – she said to Catra, who looked away, lost in thought... She may not have been able to look at her father objectively, but she wasn't blind. She saw that his subordinates were bastards and murderers, without an ounce of honor. There was also one more issue that bothered her.

„Back then, when we were talking to Shadow Weaver, when you asked if she had done anything to your sister, she replied that we should look at Lady Ka's fingers... As you probably saw, she replaced one of her hands with a cybernetic prosthetic. But on her wedding day she was still normal. I don't know what happened to make her lose it, maybe she just wanted to replace it, apparently some people did that even with healthy body parts, but there's something I don't like about it.„ she said slowly, putting her suspicions into words. Catra frowned at her.

„What are you getting at?„ she said in a calmer voice, looking at her. She took a deep breath, because what she was about to say might be difficult for Catra…

„You mentioned that your sister's hand was mutilated. Her claws were removed... I wonder if the fact that Lady Ka lost her hand isn't because your father found out that she had somehow mutilated your sister and did the same to her.„ When she said these words, there was silence, and everyone gathered in the tent was silent, digesting the words they had just heard. Then Catra pursed her lips and extended her claws.

„Are you insinuating that my father would employ someone like that? And he wouldn't tell me anything! I'm sure if he found out that someone had hurt one of his daughters like that, he wouldn't let that person live! And certainly not walking free!„ she shouted in her face. She flinched, not so much because of her friend's tone, but rather because of what she said. Even her wife looked at her with amazement.

„This woman was created by the same man as you. She may have known her from her earliest days, almost from the moment she was born. She had many opportunities to hurt her. You can see that she is a nice person and would not hesitate to hurt your sister. We don't actually know what she did during the wedding, except this. that she was staying near the cemetery.„ She looked at Frosta and Mermista. The Ice Princess hesitated before speaking.

„I thought Shadow Weaver wanted to cast a spell towards Entrapta, Now I'm not sure, I know it was a terrible mess.„ She looked at the others with apologetic eyes.

„You shouldn't involve her in this discussion!„ Catra said, bristling with anger again.

"Catra, I can speak for myself!" Frosta said

"But I'm not sure what happened there, or what she was doing there. I know there were so many of Lady Ka soldiers , some of whom died, and some of whom may have been killed by your sister." Mermista said in a serious tone and Catra turned to her and glared furiously.

„So you didn't see anything! You have no evidence! All you have are Shadow Weaver's words, and she always lies! „ said the Grand Marshal, and Adora added.

„Don't be offended, Glimmer, but you've always had a soft spot for her. You haven't seen who she really is." She didn't hurt you like she did us.

„Don't forget that she condemned my father to a fate worse than death and tortured me after I was kidnapped at the ball.„ She looked at her friends with sharp eyes.

„So maybe she wants to do what she did last time again, divide us so that we can't cooperate." Adora said , but Bow said thoughtfully.

„Maybe so, but we're not sure... It doesn't seem like she has anything to gain from such manipulation.

„ Maybe the easiest thing would be to question Lady Ka's men and herself.„ Mermista asked and they looked at each other.

„Maybe we'll do it anyway, because it's not a bad idea.„ She said and smiled, glad that she had postponed their argument for now. They were about to move on to their topics when Asindesa di Vir spoke up.

„I've gotten to know the Lord Admiral a little. He is a great commander, statesman and strategic genius. He won many victories against many opponents. I will never deny him the fact that billions of beings were saved thanks to him... But he is ruthless. There is no evidence that he committed war crimes, but it is very difficult to discern what his men are doing. He has many friends among politicians who are willing to hide his misdeeds. Besides , in the war he wages, everything is very... relative. The Swarm is not an enemy subject to the laws established by governments and priests. But I talked to him, and I can assure you that he is hiding a lot.„ The Lady of Blades' voice was strong and confident as she looked around everyone gathered as she spoke. Adora began to wonder, as did she. However, Catra, hearing her words, snorted and said.

„And we're supposed to believe you? How do I know you're not still working with Shadow Weaver, and don't want to turn us against each other, and I'm not just talking about those gathered here You want to slander my father so that we will break off our cooperation, so that your mistress can again harm our world! I'm not that naive!„ growled the Grand Marshal. The Hellknight looked at Catra very seriously, thought for a moment, and then said.

„I met your sister. I arrived on this planet the same day as your father, only unofficially. I met her, quite by accident, in Brightmoon... I wanted to go on a picnic with her, a unformal date... I've never been on one... And so has she, if I understand correctly what she told me about her hometown and her later life.”

„Get to the point or stay silent and spare us these sob stories.„ Catra interrupted her, clenching and unclenching her hands. Melog shone in many colors, clearly trying to convey the emotions

„We ran into them when they were shopping for new outfits. They wanted to go to your wedding. To be honest, it was only a short moment, but I didn't think they were afraid of Shadow Weaver.„ She explained in a calm voice, regardless of the feline woman's accusations.

„You know, kitty, there might be something to it. Shadow Weaver said that they had only recently met this Eti. Do you remember how I told you about meeting your sister? She was weird but nice. Just like the other kids. That deaf girl who... and that green-haired elf... But they all came from Kesler, the same planet as you. „ the heroine of the Galaxy looked at the Saihe soldier, who had been watching them impassively until now. However, when Adora told about the Green-Haired Saiha she had met, his eyes widened as if he was shocked, but he replied in a calm voice.

„Yes. I am from Kesler, as are many of the Lord Admiral's soldiers. We serve him to avenge our lost world. Many were simply soldiers who served in the armies of our world. We often had nothing to do with ourselves. Believe me, no one wants to live in a refugee camp, especially in Atrax. However, I would like to ask, What was the name of this elf... Saihe, as you call us here?„ he looked straight into Adora's eyes, who thought for a moment before answering.

„Her name was Itel. She was covered in strange tattoos, many of them looked like burning roses, but I couldn't recognize the others, although I think some of them were similar to the ones that... Captain Moonshadow had.”

„I also met her, she was with me when... my palace was broken into. She yelled at that deaf girl.” She looked at the soldier, who seemed absolutely shocked.

„This girl…. This Itel... She is my daughter. I only recently found out that she is alive, but you confirmed it... I am grateful to you.

There was also a red-haired girl with her. She is my friend's sister. He also thought that he was losing her along with the whole family...„ This time it was clear that he was shaken. Even though he seemed like a tough veteran, she now saw tears in his eyes.

„I met her too, during the wedding.„ Frosta suddenly called and went to the middle of the tent, and a smile appeared on her pale face. „ Earlier, Adora asked me and Swiftwind, who also met her earlier, to look for them and... stop them. I think we had a bit of a fight with This girl and almost a duel, but then... You know what happened...„ She said and looked down.

„Gee, I like her already. Then I remember the good times. Duels for honor, or just plain bullshit. Maybe you'll finish it when everything passes.” General Netossa laughed. Frosta responded with an equally kind smile.

„Okay, so this girl is your daughter and the other girl's friend, and they both hang out with Catra's sister. So you could say you're personally interested in finding her, right? „ she asked and looked at Izai, who after a moment of hesitation nodded and said.

„Yes, she's all I have left. My two co-wives and husband survived, but we are no longer together. All these experiences made us unable to be together. These terrible memories came back whenever we were together. I guess they now live on Castroval, a planet that is home to many of our people... „ he thought for a moment and added...„ I was listening to your conversation, but I decided not to interfere in the whole conversation, because I prefer not to make enemies of people in higher positions, „You've already made an enemy of me by spreading slander about my friend.„ said Catra, staring at the mercenary with fury in her eyes. However, he answered her calmly.

„I am a simple soldier who means little compared to the great people of this world... Even people like you, because, if you're sorry, you're not the most dangerous people I know, and certainly not the most terrible. I guess you would like to ask me about the Lord Admiral now, so that I can dispel your doubts about his... actions.„ He looked at them, arms crossed on his chest. „Just a moment ago, I would have liked to keep quiet about everything, because I really don't want to make enemies. I am a reasonable person. After what I experienced on Kesler, I don't want to risk my life unnecessarily. However, you told me that you could bring me back together with my daughter. That's why I decided to be honest with you... I know it's a lot of risk... „ he looked significantly at Catra, who gave him a distrustful look. „ So if you swear that I will be with my daughter again, then something. You'll find out from me.”

She nodded.

„None of Catra's sister's friends will get hurt. We wouldn't hurt them even if they weren't her friends, because that's not how we act here. You have my word for this, and probably the word of everyone gathered here.„ She looked at the others, and everyone nodded, even Catra, though she still looked at the man with dislike. Saihe So he took a deep breath and said.

„There is no doubt that the Lord Admiral is a great commander, and that he saved Atrax, where he was recognized as a national hero. There is no doubt about it. However, he achieved his greatest victory by sacrificing the lives of tens of thousands of civilians... „ he said, and there was silence for a moment.

„Explain.„ she said briefly, feeling fear rising in her heart. Until now, she had thought that the Lord Admiral was not the man he wanted to appear to be. However, when her fears were confirmed, she felt her heart go cold. Now she greatly regretted that she had not been wrong.

„It was the time when the evacuation from the planet was being prepared. Of course, not all citizens could be saved, there was a limited number of places on the ships, but they could still fit tens, maybe hundreds of thousands of people... The ships were supposed to leave Kesler in two groups to make it easier to avoid capture by the Swarm. Few were aware that the two groups were not equal. One included politicians, businessmen, members of influential families, as well as specialists in important fields. The second, much larger one, contained ordinary inhabitants of the planet. The two groups flew separately, but the latter headed straight for the Swarm forces. They were bait, and the ships scattered, fleeing from the enemy, who also scattered, allowing the Fearless Armada to easily surround and eliminate individual enemy ships with virtually no losses, but all the civilians in the second group were killed. Of course, many managed to evacuate before the entire planet was cut off by the fleet, but still a fraction of the total population... I was lucky, due to military experience. Thousands were sacrificed in the name of Victory, perhaps it was strategically wise , but in my opinion it makes us not much better than the Swarm... „ he finished bitterly. This time the silence lasted longer and was much deeper. Now she felt like she was falling into a abys. She was terrified. They invited the monster to their place. Someone who was willing to sacrifice everything to win. She had witnessed this recently when he defended what Lady Sorrowflame had done, when he talked about collateral damage. It all made a coherent whole. They had barely dealt with one tyrant, fought against his heirs, and welcomed another, perhaps even more dangerous one. Now their problem with Shadow Weaver seemed so insignificant. She felt her husband's hand on her shoulder and looked up. He looked at her tenderly, as if to say that everything would be fine, and even though she knew it wouldn't be, it still warmed her heart. But then they both looked at Catra. The Grand Marshal stared at Corporal Izai with wide eyes. Her face was expressionless, only her hands were clenching, and even Melog was almost colorless. She finally spoke quietly, her voice almost dead.

„Do you have any evidence to support your words?”

Saihe shook his head and then said.

„I don't have them with me, it would be too risky.. But I can take the queen to meet my companions who will confirm my words. Even other evidence of much more serious crimes!”

„More serious crimes? „ She asked in disbelief.„ What crimes can be more serious than leading to the death of tens of thousands of people?

Saihe looked her straight in the eyes, and said softly and firmly, All his words were like hammer blows.

„Dropping nuclear warheads on your own capital after being exiled.”

She felt nauseous and the blood drained from her face and hands. Netossa poured herself something stronger, Memista uttered a string of curses as strange as they were ugly. Frosta looked at everyone with questioning eyes, lost and Forgotten. Bow put on a hard face, determined to defend her. Her, their child, all their loved ones. She might not need protection, but it was good to have someone so brave by her side, especially in times like these. Adora tried to hug her wife, but she pushed her away, then walked up to the soldier, put her claw to his forehead, and muttered.

„Since you can't prove anything, I assume you're making false accusations against your commander. This is definitely a misdemeanor according to the rules of the Fearless Armada, so you are arrested, and then you will be court-martialed, do you understand?”

The soldier only smiled in response, so the feline woman pressed a claw against his forehead, causing blood to drip down his face.

„Understood!„ She screamed at him.

„Catra! Enough!„ she called in a commanding tone, but her friend Ani didn't move, she just stared at Izai with her heterochromic eyes, until finally her wife wrapped her arms around her waist and moved her away from the soldier. Then she hugged her tightly and tenderly.

„It's okay, darlingI'm with you, I understand that it's hard for you, but we'll get through this together.„ she said in a quiet, reassuring voice. Melog stood between her and Izai.

„Am I under arrest?„ Saihe asked, looking at her seriously.

"No, you're not.„ she said seriously to the man, but then Catra broke free from her wife's embrace and said.

„Of course it is! You can't say things like that, you can't tarnish someone's name!„ She was breathing heavily with rage.

„Catra, we can't arrest someone just for words. Even if they were lies, we still cannot forbid them from being told. „ Adora said, extending her hand to her.

„Maybe just wait until he shows you the evidence about who the Lord Admiral is. I know you're very happy to have found your family, but please…" Bow said, but the feline woman turned to him abruptly and Screamed.

„You can't even imagine it! You always had a big and happy family, almost like a fairy tale!„ She turned to her and said, her voice breaking, as if she was trying not to cry.

„You did it on purpose! Because you can't stand the fact that your mother is a murderer, that she is a pirate! That she tried to burn down the entire city to take Adora's sword! That's why you don't want me to have a real family! You just want to take everything away from me out of jealousy!„ she looked at her with her multi-colored eyes. It hurt. Any mention of her mother, especially who she had become, always made her heart bleed. It was mean, if not for a worse word.

„Please leave before you say anything else. Before you say something that can't be undone. „ she said in a cool tone to the cat-like woman, who nodded and said.

„Fine, it will be as you wish!„ and she went outside.

„I'll try to talk to her. It may not be easy, but I need to calm down a little. I know what she's going through now.„ Adora said and followed her wife. Now she looked for the others. Everyone looked at her surprised. Until now, she had managed to hide the truth about her mother, that she had become Captain Moonshadow. She asked Scorpia and Perfuma not to tell anyone what they found out at that dinner, and she had to rely on the former strike captain to keep her mouth shut , but she always had trouble keeping secrets.

„Is the queen alive? But how?„ Netossa asked in disbelief.

„Your mother is alive! That's great! I missed her!„ Frosta exclaimed, beaming with joy. Now she was absolutely happy. Mermista, however, looked at her distrustfully .

„Why haven't you told anyone about this yet? This concerns us all! „ said the sea princess seriously. She took a deep breath and she began to talk about what she had learned. About her mother becoming a pirate after she was imprisoned . She also had to tell about the fact that she tried to kill Adore for Icarus. She jumped out, everyone was silent and looked at her with sympathy, but also disbelief.

„How is something like this possible! We have known each other for so many years!! She was at our wedding. Even though she experienced so many tragedies, she was always full of love for you and for everyone. How was it possible that she became such a person?„ Netossa said in disbelief, and Mermisa added.

„You told your father about this?”

She shook her head and replied.

„No, not yet. To tell you the truth, I didn't know how to tell him about it, especially since I didn't know how the situation would end.

„But he should know that! Certainly earlier than me!„ said the sea princess seriously. She sighed and said, looking down.

„Yes, you're probably right. I should tell you first. When he gets back to Brightmoon, I'll tell you all about it. „ She sighed and they started discussing smaller, current matters. Finally, when everything was arranged, she turned to her friends and advisors for one more matter.

„What do we do about the Halo request?„ she looked at the others. Netossa sighed and said.

„It's Adora's decision anyway... We have no say in this matter. We'll have to wait until she comes back and hope she can calm Catra down.”

„ You're right. „ she nodded, although she was full of bad forebodings. Then, as everyone began to disperse, overwhelmed by the dark things they were talking about. when they were about to be alone, she turned to the knight of hell.

„I would like you to stay for a while, because I need to talk to you.”

The Lady of Blades looked at her in surprise, but she nodded and did as she asked. The three of them stayed in the command tent, she even told the guards to leave.

„I had an accident some time ago... „ she began cautiously, not sure how to talk about such matters.

„You mean losing your power? Well, I don't know much about your…„ the Knight began, but she shook her head and cut her off.

„That's not the point. We almost didn't tell anyone about it, but there was an accident when Shadow Weaver was escaping from prison. Some man... You explain it better, darling.„ she looked at her husband, who narrowed his eyes in thought and said.

„A man injected something into Glimmer... We're not sure what it was, it's definitely not any poison, but how it infected her body. I don't know who this man was, but as I chased him while escaping, he turned into a bat and then burned up in the rays of the bright moons.

She felt cold again when she saw the worry on Asindesa's face.

„It was a vampire, although I'm not sure what kind. He probably injected you with some of his blood, but your body seemed to fight it off, for the most part, maybe because of who your mother was. However, your child will be a Dhampir, a hybrid of human and vampire...„ The lady of the blades said carefully.

„What does this mean? „ she asked fearfully. She understood that there would be other opportunities, but she got used to the thought of it, she would soon become a mother... She would have to wait.

„I can guess what you're thinking about now. Whether or not you give birth is up to you, no one else cares, but being a Dhampir is not horrible at all. I have only met one or two of this kind, for they were never numerous, but in ancient Ustalaw many aristocrats were Dhampirs, some became great heroes. Its life will probably be different than the life of his peers, especially here, he will be happy like everyone else. I hope this reassures you.„ The Knight explained. Indeed, she felt a relief that was hard to describe. Then she asked, at least one more time.

„What about Frosta? Is there anyone who can help her?”

This time Asindesa became gloomy

„This is a more complicated matter. To be honest, I don't know much about the undead. Strigas... I haven't heard anything from them. I don't know how I could help your friend... In the pact worlds, there is a planet called Eox. It is dead, not in the way that atmosphereless moons are, but it literally emanates the energy of death. Mainly the undead live there, although for some time now they have also been letting the living in. Maybe if she went there, someone would help her, or at least she would be among others like her. On the other hand, I'm not sure she would be happy there. It's hard to imagine a place more different than Etheria. „ Said the Knight

„ I see. „ she said quietly, crying to herself over the fate of her friend.

Chapter Summary

> New chapter. I know Glimmer is the most powerful warlock on Etheria, but not in terms of experience. Please comment.

She ran, feeling tears streaming down her face. Her companion ran right behind her. Shogi now took the form of a Giant Spider, she had no idea why he did it, but she didn't want to think about something like that now. She felt as if her heart had died. Perhaps it was already dead, if she believed what she overheard under the queen's tent. When Glimmer ordered them to leave, she guessed that she might want to talk about her, so she decided to hide and eavesdrop. Deep down, she knew she wouldn't hear anything good, but she had to find out. She had to know the truth. However, she didn't expect that she would learn anything like this She didn't want to leave Etheria for anything in the world, and she certainly didn't want to go to a place like Eox, where only living dead lived. She wasn't like them! She Lived! She wasn't some Strigoi or some other Ghoul. She wasn't dead. They couldn't be right, she was alive! She stopped for a moment and put her fingers to her neck to feel for the Pulse. She wasn't sure if she felt something, but she thought she did... So maybe it wasn't so bad. Not at all! She calmed down. She thought for a moment, and then decided to look around the camp and look for something. People in the camp were preparing for the coming storm. They hid their belongings in tents and covered the rest of what they couldn't hide with sheets and tied them to the ground with ropes. The fires were extinguished and the gates were closed. She looked for a group that looked relatively well-groomed. At first she couldn't find anyone suitable until she finally saw Star Siblings. She knew them from previous visits to Etheria . they were friends with Catra and Adora and the rest. She remembered that they were freedom fighters and helped liberate their planet. But now they wore the military uniforms of the Lord Admiral's soldiers. She hesitated as she remembered everything she had recently heard about Catra's Father, how evil he was. But they were friends after all. They couldn't have changed that much, could they? So she took a deep breath, and she and Shogi walked over to them.

„Hello, it's me Frosta!„ she exclaimed, trying to sound cheerful. All three turned to her, surprised. A woman with cybernetic hands, she think her name was Tallstar, turned to her and said.

„Oh hello princess! How can we serve you?!„ She looked confused. Many people from other planets looked like that when talking to them. She didn't understand why they were behaving like this, after all, she was a normal girl, at least she used to be. She hesitated, and then the other woman, Talstar's younger sister , whose name was Starla, rolled her eyes and turned to her older sister.

„Come on, stop it, sister! You're talking to her like you're talking to a customs officer! She's Adora and Catra's friend! Invite her to our tent!„ the younger girl scolded the older one, and then turned to her.

„Come to us with your companion.„ she pointed at Shogi . From the moment he revealed his true form, everyone was giving her friend scared looks, but Starlla didn't seem to care, probably because she was very brave and hardened from the fight. „We'll treat you to hot chocolate with Rum. We have a lot of rum here!”

Or she just wasn't afraid of Shogi because she was tipsy.

„I'd like to try it, but maybe without rum, because I'm I don’t like alcohol.„ She said carefully so as not to offend anyone. She once heard that Glimmer got drunk for the first time when she was sixteen. She reached for a bottle of cider hidden by one of the servants. Apparently she was so dizzy that she couldn't get to her room. She teleported around the castle until she landed in the moat. Netossa liked to tell this story every chance she got, embarrassing the queen. She entered the tent, where a red-haired boy was stirring something in a small pot. To her surprise, she liked the scent, so she felt very relieved. She thought that maybe But the symptoms were going away, that she was somehow getting better.

„Hello, darling!„ said Starla, throwing herself at the redhead's neck, who blushed. At this time, Tallstar was trying to communicate with her brother via communicator, the storm was coming and it was making it difficult.

„Damn, Jewelstar could stop sulking, I know it might be difficult for him, but maybe everything will work out, and after all, even if it turns out differently, he still has to live somehow.„ growled the female cybernetic Clovers.

„You know, sister, it would be easy to say because your girlfriend is... you know, And my Kay is here with me.„ she hugged her boyfriend and then continued.„ And his heart situation is terribly complicated, like something out of a romantic novel!

Tallstar rolled her eyes.

"Me and Dilayla are not a couple... I mean... It's complicated...„ She explained irritably.

„It's almost like a status on a Book of Faces!„ said a red-haired boy who was called Kay. Feeling a bit confused by this family's exchange, and also remembering why she actually came here, she said.

„Do you have a mirror or something here that I could look at„ she asked, and Starla went to her locker and said.

Oh, I'm sorry! I think I forgot about you a bit, but we're worried about our big brother. – she apologized and started throwing things. Then Kay looked at her, and he must have recognized her from his recent conversation with Halo, because he started looking at her warily, so she pulled her hood up. She realized that now everyone must know who she really was, it wasn't a pleasant thought. She did n't want everyone to see her as a monster. Finally, Starla handed her a small mirror, the kind you sometimes took with you on a camping trip to wash yourself, or something like that. She saw her reflection, and at first glance she looked normal, just a little paler than usual, but Everything seemed fine! She was almost happy that she was fine now and Halo words were just a bad lie. She smiled to herself, and then she saw her teeth, which at first looked almost normal, but then her teeth came out, and she saw that there was a essentially two rows of sharp fangs. She let out a short scream, and then her face changed again, her features became sharper and her ears became pointed.

„Has something happened?„ Starla asked, then She looked at her and inhaled with a whoosh.

„To much… "she shouted and hid her face in her hands. Bloody tears ran down her face. She wasn't ashamed of crying, but something like this was... But she couldn't stop. She knew that everyone was looking at her, and the young soldier held his hand close to the gun. The others seemed a little less scared, but she guessed that creatures like her… What she had become were more common outside the Fallen Empire.

„Is there anything we can do for you?„ Tallstar asked , with concern but also anxiety in her eyes.

„Nobody can do anything for me. „ she said quietly in a saddened voice, but then she thought better of it. Was there really nothing anyone could do for her? Maybe Mikah, he was one the most powerful sorcerers on Etheria, or Aunt Casta , she was the Head Sorceress. She had the help of all of Mystacor, all its sorcerers and all the knowledge they had there. Maybe they'll work something out. She was of course Lady Sorroowflame, she was not-dead, just like her. She probably knew more about these things than anyone on all of Etheria ... But she didn't want to have anything to do with her. She was evil, wicked ! As did the Lord Admiral and all those who served him. Who else does she have left? She thought about it and understood. Mikah wasn't the most powerful sorcerer on Etheria, Shadow Weaver was. She was an evil woman who hurt everyone so much, but… Catra's sister was with her. And Nightgale ... She was the daughter of the Shadow Mistress, so maybe she could convince her mother to help her. Who else could help her than the one who cast the spell that made her suffer so much? She believed that Nightgale was not as bad as others saw her. She actually has a conscience, unlike Catra's father... And Halo. Until now, she had viewed Star Sister as a kind of step-aunt. But she was connected to the one who cursed her, this Charon. How could she do this to her! That's why she didn't want her friends to agree to her terms. She was a liar, and a traitor. She couldn't let give her Darla! Perhaps if she does something herself, they won't lose this wonderful ship.

„Tell Catra if she's looking that I went to see her sister.„ she said and determinedly went with Shogi into the night, not against the gusty wind and thunder coming from the sky.

„Okay, guys, let's pack!.„ exclaimed Bina, who was supervising the packing of the monument onto the ship. Captain Moonshadow smiled to herself under her mask. That woman was a good mother, even though she never wanted to be one. The same couldn't be said about her, at least that's what she thought... She robbed her own daughter, and before that she tried to murder her friend, and what's more, she brought here a woman who was her enemy, even though she didn't remember all her crimes. So she couldn't be called an ideal mother, period. But not only for this reason. She was also starting to feel guilty about Tirin. The girl was with her from the very beginning of her pirate career. She didn't pass on anyone more loyal, anyone who was willing to give up more for another person. However, she felt like she was taking advantage of this girl. Tirin betrayed her people, almost her species, for her, and murdered dozens of people to free her. She knew she was complicit in what she had to do, and worse yet, she took her with her, exposing her to a similar incident in the future. But she was starting to realize that she couldn't turn this girl into a pirate, no one her age should experience what she had, and she deserved a normal life. She looked at the Azlantean who was talking to Rosie, very excited. Perhaps he will find a place for her here. She guessed that Bina wanted this for her children too, she had seen it for some time as she looked around the castle and watched them try to fraternize with the rebel members. She should also think about a better future for the crippled girl forever trapped in the biosuit. In fact, it would be easier for her because of her place in the society of this planet. Damm! She was a queen! She had no idea whether she still wanted to be a and, more importantly, whether she should be, but she still hoped that it would somehow help guarantee a safe future for Tirin. Of course, she just had to figure out how... How to get back to her family... It was difficult. She didn't actually remember they. She knew she had a daughter and a husband, and that she loved them both very much, but she didn't remember much else. Just fragments of memories, usually happy, but sometimes also sad. Slowly she remembered more and more. However, she couldn't let it all go on for so long. She had to hurry.

First of all, she remembered the words of this elven sorceress and that she had to help prevent a catastrophe. Unlike most members of the rebellion, she understood well what threat the Swarm posed. Although she had never faced this opponent, she knew how dangerous it was. It was feared throughout the galaxy more than even the Star Empire, and she couldn't imagine what she would do if she lost her newly reclaimed homeland to unsatiated hunger. Worse yet, the seemingly mindless Fleet was actually controlled by an adversary older than all known civilizations. The name „ The Firsts ones” was probably familiar to her from her old life, it was associated with glory and sadness, but she couldn't remember anything specific now. And now she was just a pirate who could only Destroy and pillage... What could she do to oppose Such power?

And that wasn't the end of the worries. A much more tangible opponent was the Lord Admiral. From what she had heard about him, he was a dangerous man, a tyrant hungry for power. She will also have to oppose him somehow, and also protect her daughter from him, because she had no doubt that at the first opportunity she would want to get rid of Queen Etheria, the real one, because she deserved this title. She could only count that her daughter has already learned the true nature of Antares, and will not be fooled by his smooth words. Fortunately, they had support here, the one who had already overthrown him once. She just had to hope that the black tom hadn't lost his claws.

There was one more problem she was afraid to even think about. Her husband was alive, the man she loved more than life was alive! She remembered how she grieved after his death, even though she didn't know the circumstances, so now when she discovered that he was alive, she felt her love flare up in her heart again. The problem was that there was her second husband. Reh-zar gave her support when she was at the bottom. He gave her love at a time when all she felt was pain and hatred. During these five years, he was her support, a best friend, someone she could always count on in the brutal life of a pirate. They both understood each other very well and were a great couple. Damn, they made love a lot... Did that mean she was Cheating on her real houseband... But then which one was real? She loved both of them, but each of them loved someone else, a different her. She wasn't sure which one was the real one either. She slowly stopped being Captain Moonshadow as her memories returned, but she had no idea who she was becoming... She wasn't sure who she should be either... And the time to think was quickly running out, because Reh-zar would soon arrive with a new ship.

She sighed and decided to focus on the next task. She looked around and looked for the elven Sorceress who was standing in the square and was raising one hand and stretching her other arm upwards. She was the one who was supposed to take her to her husband... to Mikah. She wasn't sure if she should trust her, after all she was... Well she was a very easygoing woman, but they didn't have any other misticso she had to trust her.

„I just need to give the instructions to my crew, and then you will do what you have to do.„ She turned to the Sorceress, who continued to stand on one leg.

„I'm not in a hurry!„ Ireanis exclaimed happily, her tone as cheerful as ever. She frowned and asked the sorceress.

„What are you doing exactly?”

„ I practice yoga, or at least I think so, I've only seen others do it a few times, but apparently it's great for health and other things. You know, I'm still thirsty, so I hope this helps a little. „ She replied, spreading her arms to the sides.

„ And that helps?„ she looked carefully at her sorceress.

„It's hard to say. I still feel thirsty ,but now my back hurts! „ The silver”haired woman replied, smiling broadly. Well, you could only hope that when they teleported, she would still have everything in place.

She searched for her crew, and found second mate Gydwa, boatswain Kaert, and chief engineer Gozamund .

„Do you remember the instructions?” she asked sharply, and Nuar nodded.

„We'll do as you say, ma'am.„ he said

„ Indeed, we will do as you instructed„ Veska replied, staring won with your one eye. She knew that she couldn't trust her completely, but fortunately she had gained so much support among the crew that for some time the second mate would also have to be obedient. But she was still worried about whether she would risk it and betray...

„Actually, the Captain is the queen now or something, right? So I'm thinking that when this is all over, we probably deserve some knighthood or something. „ Petty Officer Keart said , grinning.

„ Why not? This is an interesting idea.„ She said it quite honestly. Her crew deserved knighthoods, and much more, for all they had done for her. Well, at least most of them. Now she realized that someone was missing.

„And where is Tonado? „ she asked, looking around for her first mate.

„I'm here!„ Skiittermander shouted happily from behind her. She turned around and saw Tonada , who was packed for a long hike. She raised an eyebrow and asked her first mate.

„Where are you going?”

„With you Captain!„ Skittermander answered her, clearly surprised by this question. „You need the protection of your most loyal Servant! It will be a difficult expedition, into definitely hostile territory, full of enemies and ambushes.”

She sighed heavily. Tonado was always absolutely loyal to her and she could always count on him. She wanted him to stay here and make sure Gydwa didn't do anything stupid. On the other hand, she knew that if a rebellion broke out in her absence, despite all his bravery, she would most likely fall. So she smiled at him under her mask and said.

„Well, my dear, you can come with me! „ she said and gave further instructions to her subordinates, hoping that they would follow them to the letter, although, as she knew, life would get complicated. Then she moved with her first mate to the Elf, but before she reached her she saw that Tirin was standing in her way.

„Captain, I... I'd like to go with you too! „ said the girl, trying to sound as confident as possible. She sighed heavily again, looking at the girl. Since she decided that in the event of a mutiny aboard the Tonado would be safer with her, she should also have taken her navigator with her. It also had practical significance. She was the only one who had any experience navigating space, so without her it would be harder for the rest of them to do something really stupid. Of course, due to her health, adventures were much riskier for her than for anyone else. On other hand, the girl wasn't as defenseless as it might seem. After all, without her their rebellion would not have succeeded, and on top of that, she was the one who enabled them to rob that museum during her daughter's wedding.

„Okay, although I hope that Ireanis will be able to transport us all, but she is a talented sorceress... Maybe just a bit specific...„ she said carefully and together they went to Ireanis, who was sitting on the ground this time, with her legs behind her neck.

„Look what I did! Now we just have to hope I can get out of this! But it shouldn't be difficult!„ she exclaimed and tried to get up on her feet, but she fell down. Looking at this, Tirin hesitated, but after a while she pulled herself together and walked with Skittermander to the Elf and together in the table close to each other.

„It may be difficult but... I'm almost sure that we will bring all the body parts together, sixty percent yes!„ Ireanis called. She sighed and said.

„You know what? Maybe it's better if I take care of it? Just take my hand and think about where we need to be, okay?”She asked the sorceress carefully, but she waved her hand and said.

„Okay, in a way it's been centuries since I last did this! „She said, and then the four of them embraced and spread their wings, used their power, and disappeared in a flash of light.

Getting to the landing pad wasn't that difficult, especially since most of the guards hid in the guardhouses to hide from the storm that had just arrived. Snow began to fall, lightning appeared in the sky and a gusty wind blew. She felt cold, but not as cold as she should have been. she knew it was part of her curse too. Although she didn't fully remember those moments when she was overcome by an unstoppable hunger, she remembered perfectly that she didn't feel cold like normal beings. After all, dead people don't feel the cold, that's what all the old stories told her as a child said. Now she has become such a person.

However, finding a suitable ship was much more difficult. The biggest problem was the fact that she wasn't good at piloting flying vehicles. She was able to drive small Antek gravity vehicles, but larger things, including those floating in the air, were a mystery to her. For a moment she felt powerless again, completely helpless. What was she supposed to do to get to the castle and meet Nightgale? She had to fly away from here somehow, and she couldn't cope with the first challenge! She was indeed a clumsy and stupid Frosta. She sat down on the ground and started sniffing. It's terribly stupid that you're talking, she had bullets in her nose, but she was crying blood. Suddenly, she heard footsteps behind her, so she turned around, summoning two ice hammers, but to her surprise, she saw Sea Hawk, wearing a blue leather jacket, standing in front of her, holding his hip.

„Are you looking for a captain to go on a great adventure with him!” he called, and she blinked twice before answering.

„Actually, I'm looking for a pilot, and I don't really think about adventures. I just want to find a certain friend and ask her to help me.”

„Oh mission in the name of friendship and Brotherhood! Or rather Sisterhood ! Fortunately, you found me! Sea Hawk ! Best pilot on Etheri! „ The Captain called, but she heard voices coming from the darkness and she heard them .

„ You better not exaggerate! You're as much of a pilot as I am a harpy! As soon as you get up in the air, you turn green and return your last meal!„ and from shadows came Mermista , after her came Netossa.

„What are you doing here?„ She asked, honestly surprised. Then Netossa began to explain

„It's not that we wanted to eavesdrop on what Glimmer and Asindesa were talking about , but we actually eavesdropped... That's how it happened. I Then we saw you running somewhere, so we decided to follow you. I must admit that we lost track quite quickly... „ the general scratched her temple. Then Mermista interjected.

„It was quite hard to find you, but we saw you leaving the Star Siblings' tent, so we came up with the idea of asking them where you were going instead of wandering all over the camp again. Well, we figured you'd be here.„ said the Sea Princess.

„And you're here to stop me.„ She stated without anger, but Shogii covered her and started barking at both women and the man, although he had the form of a snake with many legs. He liked changing shapes more and more.

„Actually, no! To be honest, we would like to go with you, or rather I would like to and Mermista's husband...„ Netossa looked sideways at Sea Hawk , who responded indignantly.

„But I'm Sea Hawk, the most famous sailor on the planet! My wife asked me to keep you safe!”

They both looked at him doubtfully and his wife explained.

„Honestly, I sent you on this mission because you are afraid of his mother, who is visiting us tomorrow... I don't understand why you are afraid of this woman! She is the nicest mother-in-law you can imagine. It's not my fault that she always makes you feel like you've failed her expectations.„ Mermista looked behind her husband and shook her head, but he looked at her with resentful eyes and said.

„You don't know what it's like when your mother laughs at the name you chose. She always tells me that a Sea Hawk is actually a seagull, and a seagull is actually a sea vulture. I became the captain of the ship precisely to do something that she can't do better, because she's even more afraid of the water than Catra.”

His wife patted him on the shoulder and said.

„Everyone knows that you are the greatest sea captain in the entire galaxy!”

„But you don't even know why and where I want to go.„ she said uncertainly, worried about how both women would react to her plan. She wasn't sure if it made any sense at all. Netossa looked up, raising one eyebrow.

„I guess it has to do with that sorceress, am I right?„ she said, smiling slightly. She looked down and said

„I wanted her to help me convince her mother to somehow reverse the spell. However, we are friends. I don't know what happened to her then, but she probably didn't have full control over it. I know how you see her. That she is the daughter of two of the most evil people on the planet. But now we found out that Catra's father is also a terrible person, but his daughter is wonderful! She can be like that too, if you just give her a chance. I know it sounds naive and stupid, but I can try!„ she looked at both women, feeling that she must sound terribly idiotic to them, but Netossa slowly nodded and said

„Well, I suspected something like that. I'm not sure if your plan will work, but I think it's worth a try. That's why I'll go with you. Silverwing is here and I will be able to take you wherever necessary . Besides, it's not just about you. For now, Glimmer must figure out how to react to what she has learned about Catra's father. In addition, he has problems with regaining his power and... the other thing. Catra, on the other hand, has to deal with the truth about herself and her family. Neither of them is in the position to negotiate peace terms right now. I hope we can work something out. I won't deny that looking at the disfigured face of this magical bitch will be difficult for me to bear, but somehow I will manage. This will be a risky mission, if what they said about this blonde is true, we saw what she really is. But the three of us...„ she looked at Shogi . “The four of us can handle it.”

„I asked Sea Hawk to fly with you. It's not just about his problems with his mother, but you'll need someone else to watch your back, and I can't do that, because there has to be someone reasonably reasonable and objective here, otherwise everything will fall apart again, as it happened before. was.„ Mermista said and smiled , and her husband knelt down on one knee and said.

„My ladies, it will be an honor for me to be able to protect you from... „ He didn't finish because Netossa laughed and said.

„We can defend ourselves, but your help won't hurt.”

The five of them then hugged, and then she made her way to Netossa's vehicle at the landing pad.

Chapter Notes

It all had to be lies. There was simply no other option. It couldn't be true. Otherwise... She couldn't imagine an Alternative. She had heard many lies in her life, so she was certain that she would be able to recognize if her father wanted to deceive her. At first, she didn't trust him. He was a foreign military commander from outside the Empire, who could pose a threat to all of them. He reminded her too much of those who wanted to destroy her life, and the lives of all the inhabitants of Etheria. But she had given him a chance, at first at Glimmer's request, but she also wanted to get to know him, to get to know herself. And then he told her his story... And her story. He had confirmed everything she had once suspected. He had proven that he was more than everyone thought. He had shown that Shadow Weaver had always been wrong about her! He had told her that she was created for something more, he had made her scion! She was to inherit his entire legacy after his death. For the first time in her life, she felt... important. This was what she wanted when she tried to conquer Etheria, when she almost took over the Horde. To be someone no one wanted to see in her! She had her friends and her beloved, but then she felt that her life was complete. Her father respected her and admired her achievements. In his fate she saw a reflection of her life, everything she's been through. She felt as if all her suffering, everything she had experienced had prepared her for this meeting! This was to be her legacy, her destiny. No one but Adora could understand it. They all had families, pasts, and a sense of belonging. The place she grew up in was hell, she was always afraid that she would never fully adapt to the place she lived in now, that she would always remain a bit of a stranger. And now she had her homeland, her past, she finally understood Who she was. And now she was going to lose it because some soldier told some scary stories! He had to be lying, there was no doubt about it. Was he in the service of Shadow Weaver? They already knew that she had many supporters, not only in the People's Rebellion, but also among people connected to her patron, to that being she saw in the book... With Nyarlathotep... Of course, she didn't believe that he was this whole Outer God, but he certainly had great power and influence! Could this soldier be his servant, like this psychopathic aristocrat? Maybe this Knight, this lover of Shadow Weaver was also in cahoots with him? That would explain why they both worked together to slander her father. Was this all one big conspiracy? That would explain everything! They were all simply enemies who had conspired against her and her family. They wanted to take away everything she loved! She couldn't believe them! Because if did that, then... She didn't want to think about it. She had to show everyone as soon as possible where the truth lay! What great lies were told there!

At first she wanted to run to Lady Ka right away and tell her everything, order her to arrest that soldier and the Hell Knight for treason… But she didn’t do that, although she didn’t really know why… So she went to a place where she could think everything over, where she could get rid of the doubts that were rattling in the back of her head. Above the camp was a mountain peak, not very high, but very steep, that most people couldn't climb without climbing gear, but she was agile enough to get there without too much difficulty. She knew it was unwise, because a storm was about to break out and lightning would strike so high, and the cold wind that whipped her cheeks like sharp icy needles could push her hundreds of meters down. But she barely felt it, she had never been so agitated, so angry. She couldn’t remember a cold fire raging so hard in her heart since the war. Did the other one… Did her sister know him too Or did she feel this anger and rage that was impossible to control? Now she realized that she wanted to meet her. She hadn't thought much about her before, she had focused more on freeing her from the clutches of the dammed sorcerer than on who she was. From what Glimmer and Adora had said and what she had noticed herself, she was surrounded by friends she could count on, and who could count on her. It had been many years before she had gotten so close to anyone, not counting Adora. She could say that this girl had come further than she had at her age. But there was also Shadow Weaver with her... Was she telling the truth that she hadn't known this girl until recently? Her sister mentioned that her hand was mutilated by a woman, and everyone knows that the Dark Sorceress was capable of such atrocities. Only, there was also Lady Ka. She had seen for herself that her hand had been replaced with a cybernetic prosthesis. It didn't have to mean anything. Maybe Glimmer was just jumping to conclusions, but she remembered that Lady Ka had almost shot Entrapta, and there was no telling what she had done during her wedding. She could accept the fact that this woman could have hurt her sister, but would her father then allow her to continue working for him? Even if he didn't know what she had done to his second daughter, she must have committed other terrible acts, and that meant that he accepted such people in his fleet... Which in turn would mean... She couldn't let her thoughts wander in that direction, because she could come to conclusions that she didn't have the strength to accept. So she had to believe that the Dark Sorceress was lying in this matter as well. But if not... She couldn't imagine what she would do then. She simply couldn't be betrayed once again. She couldn't bear it. She had to stick to what she had believed to be true until now, because otherwise her world would fall apart, and she would fall into the abyss again. But she couldn't shake the doubt she constantly felt in her heart. In the back of her mind, the question kept coming back, what if this was all true? She knew she wouldn't be able to rest until she found out everything.

She hid her face in her hands, feeling the wind untangling the ponytail in which she usually tied her stiff hair. The ribbon flew somewhere, so her hair fluttered freely. She had to hold on tightly with her feet so that the wind wouldn't throw her off the peak. Melog crouched down next to her, putting his head under her armpit. She hugged him and they stood there for a while, looking blankly at the storm that was beginning to rage around them. Lightning struck next to her, she knew she was taking a risk, but now she didn't care. She wasn't really thinking about anything, she was just ignoring the biting cold and the thunder that was making her bones shake. Melog didn't radiate any colors, he had his neutral gray-blue color. As always, he was surprisingly pleasant to the touch, and now he was the only source of warmth in this cold world in which she now had to exist. She saw lonely trees, or rather overgrown bushes, bending under the icy wind. She thought her life was similar. Some storms kept coming and crushing her to the ground, but she didn't let them break her.. She always got back up, as hard and strong as before. This time it would be the same, she was sure of it. But what had caused this storm that raged in her heart? Was it the fact that her friends had believed her father's lies, or the suspicion that the accusations were true? She couldn't see, but she had become a lonely tree in the raging wind. She saw lightning strike one of the trees, and it burst into flames. She laughed darkly to herself, and wondered if the truth could be like that lightning, would it burn her soul to ash?

Then she heard someone jump onto the rock next to her.

„Hey Adora.„ She asked immediately knowing Who had come. She felt the warmth radiating from her, Which now brought her relief. Actually, it always brought her relief, only she didn't admit it during war, overcome with anger and hatred. Now she knew, that the power of her beloved, her dearest, the one she had always loved, comes from what is good in her.

"Hey Catra..." Adora said and sat as close to her as she could here. But she had the impression that the wind had died down. Was it just an illusion or another one of She-Ra's powers? She wasn't sure, but that didn't matter now. All that mattered was her proximity. They sat there in silence for a while, ignoring the storm that raged around them.

„I know you always liked to sit on the highest spot possible, but it's a bit cold here and all... You'll catch a cold!„ Her wife said, stroking her head. She turned around and looked into her eyes. She always loved looking into them, regardless of their shade, which was different depending on the form she was in. Now she was in She-Ra form, but she took off the armor that the Lord Admiral gave her, probably because it might be too heavy to climb such a steep slope.

„Because threats like lightning and the falling from a height of several hundred meters are insignificant?„ she said quietly, and her wife answered.

„You probably haven't seen yourself when you're sick! Rather than dealing with you then, it's better to fight the cosmic tyrants, or working in a quarry.”

„Hey, I'm not that terrible, am I?„ She looked sideways at her beloved.

"You are, you are… Last time the servants who were supposed to bring you medicine drew lots to determine which one would do it." Adora replied, grinning at her. They fell silent again, but the storm was getting more intense, so finally her wife spoke.

„ You know, I think we should really get down from here. “

„Just a moment.„ she answered her quietly, so that her voice could barely be heard over the raging storm.

"But you know that eventually you're going to have to do this and face all of this," Adora said in a more serious voice.

„I know, I can't escape the truth, whatever it is. It's just that it's all so difficult.„ They fell silent again, but after a moment her wife said.

„You know, when I learned the truth about the Horde I was devastated, furious at those who had deceived me so much. But then I found support in how I was raised. Instead of fighting the evil princesses, I fought the evil Horde, it wasn't that big of a difference. I know that I simply swapped enemies, still making the same mistake, seeing the world in black and white. It wasn't just the propaganda we grew up with, or the lies that Shadow Weaver fed me, but also my anger at those who deceived me. The fact that I had the power of She-Ra didn't really help either. However, when I learned why the sword was created, when I learned Mara's message, I felt much worse. It seemed to me that everything I had done up until now was meaningless, because the only reason for my existence was to activate the Heart of Etheria. For those who created me, I was just a tool. That's when I blamed myself for Angela's death, and things between me and Glimmer got worse... That's when I also believed we were lost for each other. I almost fell when the Heart was activated.”

„You've told me about it more than once.„ She replied quietly to her wife, but she detected it and said.

„Bow once explained to me that you can tell the same story in different ways. Each time you can highlight a different side of it, so that you can draw different conclusions from it. I wanted to show you that I know how you feel. I'm not saying that your father is the way that Saihe painted him, but you should be prepared for him to be different than you've seen him so far. Maybe he will disappoint you, Or maybe he is just plain imperfect, and as Entrapta says, imperfection is beautiful. Mikah or Bow once told me that Adulthood comes when we discover that our parents are just people. I wish everything could be the way you dreamed, we all would, but we won't know the truth until we investigate this matter, or rather we won't be able to if you were stuck here freezing. We have to go down and think about what to do with all this. The dearest one explained to her, hugging her tightly. She snuggled up to her, and despite the thunder and howling wind, she could feel her heart beating. It always soothed her, just as her purring soothed Adora.

„Glimmer is probably mad at me for what I said about her mother. I know it was mean, and she really doesn't envy me for having a family. But she doesn't understand what it's like...” she answered

"She's probably a little angry, I have the impression that she has other worries than a fight with her friend..." her wife said thoughtfully. She looked at her from under furrowed brows and asked.

„What do you mean?”

Adora hesitated before answering, and then she saw a Silverwing take off from the makeshift landing pad.

„Netossa must have missed her family... „ she said a bit dizzily, and then she realized that the vehicle was not flying towards her kingdom, but towards Castle Crypto. She wasn't sure what it was about, but she felt a deep sense of unease and said to her beloved.

„Okay, let's go down... I have a bad feeling about this. „ And she started running down the steep slope.

He missed. His lady, the adventures he had with her, and everything. He had no idea how it all happened. How on Etheria did he end up on board a spaceship that took him to the Rebel Base, which wouldn't have bothered him much, because he had always wholeheartedly supported all rebellions, except that this one was set against his friends. On the ship, he met Wrongdak and Entrapta, which pleased him, although he had the impression that the inventor princess had ended up here just as accidentally as he had. He had been asked to help Frosta find the kids he had met when he had organized the weddings of Gllimmer and Bow and Adora and Catra. He didn't quite know why he had to do it, but he listened to his She-Ra, after all, he was her loyal mount. Only then did he understand why she was so interested in those kids. All he had to do was look at that Eti's face... Why hadn't they told him that Catra's sister would be in this wedding? Was it a secret? Yes, he was talkative, but not so much that you couldn't trust him with a secret like that, right?

And then Almost everyone forgot about him, except maybe that redhead girl, she still treated him like some fairytale horse. After all, he was a wonderful mount belonging to She-Ra... He wasn't just a horse! Unfortunately, there was little he could do about it, he was unable to defeat all the rebels by himself. To be honest, he wasn't even sure if he was a guest or prisoner here. The same question also applied to Entapta, although she seemed happy to be back in her old castle. They let her wander freely around the entire camp, and she could even talk to her husband. Unfortunately, the princess inventor was too fascinated by the technology that Catra's sister and her friends had brought with them, so she didn't pay much attention to him. He tried to talk to this Eti as well, but he was a little afraid of her. After she started to consider the possibility of eating him at the first meeting, he thought I was just joking weirdly, but now he wasn't so sure. She generally seemed a bit strange to him, but then again most of his friends were pretty strange, so he guessed he shouldn't bring that up. Eti's girlfriend was Adorable though, although they must have been together for a very short time, because when they first met it didn't seem like they were a couple. He don't understand why Catra made a secret of having a sister. It had recently turned out that she had a father, who in turn had an entire fleet with him, so he guessed the fact that she had a sister wouldn't change much. He had the impression that he was surrounded by some mysteries that he couldn't understand, mainly because no one had had time to explain anything to him. For example, he found out that those kids were accompanied by a sorcerer with scars who looked disturbingly like Shadow Weaver... and then Lilka told him that it was actually Shadow Weaver herself. She was just traveling around Etheria, and no one thought anything of it. He had to inform Adora and Catra and Glimmer that she was here. He had to think of a way to get out of here. Especially since the empress had to be freed. He might not have been a prisoner, but this woman certainly was. As soon as she woke up and realized where she was, she started yelling at everyone present, especially the lizard who had once served with Catra. Then she got tired and just looked at everyone glumly. He felt sorry for her, so he tried to keep her company, for which she seemed grateful. The other lizard, who assured her that he wasn't a dragon at all, apologized very politely and played some recordings on the monitor. They were movies, he had seen a few when they were on the Icarus, although he had never watched any of them in full. Most of them were subtitled and probably made far outside the empire. Some featured the Saihe themselves, who seemed to be talking about who loved whom and who was betraying whom, and others featured only lizards similar to Catra's old friend, who were constantly trying to kill each other with gangsters or giant bugs... and then Lilka came and started showing cartoon movies about colorful horses talking about friendship and magic. He liked those, but the empress, who looked more and more depressed, not. He understood her, because he himself was feeling more and more depressed. So he wondered how he could escape from here, but another problem arose. When they got there, it turned out that more soldiers from outside the Empire had arrived, who served Eti and Catra's uncle, who, however, didn't really like the father of both girls, which started to remind him of those Saihe movies...He had dealt with the old rebels once, when they were still serving in the Horde, but these, they looked like they could really make a stew out of him, they wouldn't feel guilty about it. Maybe it had something to do with the fact that Eti's uncle was in charge... Catra didn't seem to want to eat him even at her worst. So now he had to wait and watch for an opportunity to escape. The biggest problem, however, was Lilka.

„Please, Mr. Horsee, these are apples!„ she handed him some apples, they smelled quite nice.

„Oh, thank you.„ he said and ate one, then thought about it and asked. „Where do you guys get your apples from?”

„We took some supplies, but we can also print them in the food printer... „ replied the red-haired girl, smiling proudly.

„What do you print them from?„ he asked carefully, slowly chewing the fruit.

„You know, Mr. Horsee, I don't think you'd like to know. These aren't things that are better to think about.„ she answered him, smiling, but also looking at him pleadingly. He looked at the Apples, they looked really tasty, so he decided that he really wouldn't think about it. Sometimes it was better not to know. Lilka was always nearby when she wasn't cooking or beating up other rebels, because that was her training. It started with them being together most of the time, which made planning an escape much more difficult. Especially since the girl was able to appear at the most surprising moments. She was also able to always track down where he was. She claimed that it was a great orcish tracking technique, although the lizard called Alatar claimed that it was simply Lilka's sense. Either way, there was no way he wasn't able to do it properly. On top of that, the Empress began to sulk even more, and cooperation with her became impossible.

But there was another reason he didn't quite want to run away. It was, for example, the fact that for the first time in years he had his mane brushed. It mean, there was always someone doing his hair, but it was rarely someone who enjoyed it so much. He couldn't hide the fact that it was very pleasant, and the red-haired girl also brushed him and brought him treats. At first he didn't understand why she was so fascinated by him. It mean, he wasn't surprised, because after all, he was a winged unicorn, the steed of the famous She-Ra! People usually admired him, at least at first, because later... it was different. But for now it seemed that Lilka's delight was not waning, but he began to wonder why she was so interested in taking care of him, so he finally asked her.

„I've never met anyone who liked horses so much.”

He was in the main salon of the ship, and everyone present, namely Alatar, Captain Bina, and Eti, gave him warning glances. What were they on about? It was just a simple logical question. That's when Lilka froze for a moment, and her gaze glazed over, and then she said, peeling an apple.

„Because you see, once upon a time there was a girl named Lilka, and she lived on a farm, and there they had horses, and other animals. And she took care of everyone.„ She spoke, and although she tried to be cheerful, there was something strange in her voice, as if it was empty…

„And that girl, that Lilka, was it you, right?„ He asked, sure that he had guessed the meaning of the girl's story, but she looked at him angrily and screamed.

„No! She was a completely different girl! She was weak and defenseless! She couldn't defend her family from the Swarm! She's gone! She's been reforged, nothing is left of her! Now there's only Lilka the orc! Strong and Undefeated!„ She closed her eyes and breathed for a moment, and he tried to understand what had just happened. Finally the girl said in a slightly calmer voice.

„You know, Mr. Horsee, you're the second stupidest person on this ship after Ireannis, and now you're going to be the first, because Ireanis is going somewhere with the Queen's mom, so you're going to be the stupidest.”

What she said sounded very… strange, but she seemed to be absolutely serious, so he said it very carefully.

„But you know that's impossible because Queen Glimmer's mother is dead, right?”

Lilka shook her head as if he had said something very wise to me, and explained.

„Of course she's alive! We've all talked to her! She's not even a vampire, or anything like that, I know because I know about that, I talked to a vampire, and Eti became friends with his daughter. I think they even dated.„ she looked at the cat girl, who gave her a very strange look, and Rosie blinked a few times. I'll look at the rest we'll mix and asked.

„But she's making it up, right? I mean, you were wrong, right?”

Eti shook her head and said.

„Captain Wingy is the mother of the witch queen, but she is much nicer than her. She does not want to imprison people without a reason, unless they are Azlantii.”

He jumped to his feet and shouted.

„Someone has to tell the Queen and her father and everyone, fast!„ For a moment he thought of running outside and flying away towards Brightmoon, but he realized that he probably wouldn't be allowed to do that.

"How to put it... I think the Queen already knows about it, because somehow Captain Moonshadow tried to kill Adora and bomb the city in the process. „ Bina answered him, and when he looked at her in disbelief, Eti added.

„ But now it's all right, and he almost doesn't want to kill anyone. But that will change, and he'll help me kill my father. Don't worry hoofy, everything's all right."

He looked at first not understanding what he had learned, but then it dawned on him, and he understood everything. No one saw fit to inform him of all this. He was slowly starting to get used to being away from his Lady, but now he realized he had been pushed outside the circle of people she trusted. Secrets were not shared with him, as if they could not be trusted, or it did not matter. He felt sad, almost betrayed. He lowered his head and put his wings down. He stood like that for a long time, until finally the ship began to take off. Lilka approached and began to comb his hair, noticing that he was sad. Suddenly he felt something familiar, a great power that had accompanied him since his mind had awakened. He focused, so he tried to make contact... Contact with the one who had given him intelligence and awareness of who he was. Awareness that he was. Without her, he would still be an ordinary horse, Who led a simple, perhaps happy life, but would never become who he is, and he was very happy with who he is. It didn't matter that his friends forgot about him, that they didn't consider him trustworthy enough to entrust him with secrets. He forgave them, because I know that's what friendship is. So he focused, and tried to connect with the one in which he had a bond that only the two of them could understand.

"Is it normal for his horn to glow?" Bina asked.

She jumped rather than walked down the mountainside. Adora kept pace with her, as did Melog, though her companion glanced around warily, as if to be careful for all three of them They quickly reached the military camp, where the guards did not even try to stop them.. Inside, however, she had to stop and think for a moment who she should go to. On the one hand, he said to talk to Glimmer now, because maybe she knew why the Silverwing had taken off. However, it would be quicker if she got to the landing pad, where she could find out what exactly had happened faster. She stood there thinking for a moment, and then she heard someone walking towards her and calling.

„Hey Catra!”

She looked in that direction and saw Starla, Tallstar, and some ginger boy.

"Excuse me, but I really don't have time for idle chitchat! A lot has happened recently, and now I need to quickly find out why Netossa flew away and where exactly, so please don't interrupt!" She said sharply, feeling irritated at being bothered at such a time. The sisters looked at each other, and then Tallstar said.

„So that's what Frosta meant...”

She looked at older sister, feeling fear for her little friend.

„What are you on about? Tell me! But quickly!

Tallstar hesitated, looking at her carefully, then spoke slowly and carefully.

Frosta said she wanted to meet your sister. I think it's about that girl we met in a certain monastery…”

“And who wanted to eat Glory! „ Starla chimed in and petted the shiny owl sitting on her shoulder ha ha

She stared at the gray-skinned women for a few moments, then leapt at Tallstar with her claws outstretched. She knocked her to the ground and grabbed her tightly by the lapels of her uniform.

„How could you be so stupid as to let her go alone! Don't you know what happened to her!„ she screamed in her face, feeling the rage heat up in her heart again.

„She's a grown girl, not to mention that she's a princess. We couldn't stop her, and besides, we didn't know what she wanted to do!„ The oldest sister grabbed her wrists with her cybernetic hands and pushed her away. „ Besides, I think General Netossa and Princess Mermista have already taken care of the matter. We told them everything."

Melog began to radiate blue as she felt horror grip her heart. Frosta went to Lonnie, where Shadow Weaver was waiting for her. How could they be so stupid, so thoughtless, to let her go, especially in her condition. What that soldier lied to hurt her so much that she couldn't handle it and decided to run away. She probably thought she was just as much of a monster as the Dark Sorceress. She was breathing heavily, spasmodically clenching her hands, and her wife embraced her and said.

„Forgive her, but Frosta is in a really bad condition, and she shouldn't make such decisions, because... then you don't have a clear mind, and it can end badly... „ she tried to sound calm, although she could see she was just as scared as she was.

"Yeah, I get it, everyone loses their temper sometimes," Tallstar said, crossing her arms over her chest.

„We have to do something, we have to stop her. „ She said quietly to herself, and rubbed her face with her hands. She knew what she should do. She should go to Glimmer, and tell her to go after Frosta. But then there would be questions, and everything would most likely turn into another discussion, and she didn't have time for that now! Besides, she still felt angry... and ashamed towards her friend. As the Grand Marshal, she could order any ship to take her to any place she ordered, unless Glimmer forbade it. It was unlikely, but... There was a storm now, and most of Etheria's ships did not have avionics good enough to fly in such a hurricane. They were not undetectable either... unlike others, whose owners she could also command...

„I have an idea Adora! „ she called to her wife and ran to the place where her father's soldiers had decided.

The soldiers serving in the Fearless Armada saluted her, except for Lady Ka's subordinates, who at best greeted her with a nod, more often ignored her. Finally, she reached the large transport ship located in the center of this makeshift camp. She was trying in frustration to find someone who was competent enough to know where the commander of this place was, when she heard a voice

„So the young one ran away again, huh?„ said Lady Ka, who approached her surrounded by her soldiers. There was a signal with her a short bearded man, with a cybernetic leg and hand leg, and an insectoid from the same people as Ashurk, However, looking much more competent.

"How do you know? It doesn't matter. You will give me your ships and your men and come with me. This is my order and I demand that you carry it out." She said sharply, not wanting to argue with the woman whose single eye had a predatory glint.

„You demand, you say... If you demand it, what can I do? I will gladly fulfill this request.„ she said, not stopping smiling strangely. She knew this kind of smiles and knew that they did not herald anything good.

Adora looked at the Half-Masked Woman anxiously, then said.

„Um, I'm not sure if that's a good idea. kitty, it would be better if you talked to Glimmer, she might be a little mad at you, but in this situation she'll forget about it, I'm sure. But Frosta...„ she said, And suddenly she touched her temple with two fingers, and groaned.

„Is something wrong?„ she asked, worried about her beloved's health.

„Nothing, but I feel like Swiftwind wants to contact me using our bond. He did it once before when we saved Glimmer... I can sense him and... He's not flying towards Dryl, he's flying north.”

She looked in that direction and understood. The last time they were in the lost City of Lonnie she was looking for something there, not just that part, but something else. She hadn't thought about it until now, but there were ruins of the First Ones in that place. Could Shadow Weaver be looking for something there? Lady Cala led Adora to the ruins of the First Ones located underneath, and there the crazy AI wanted to Kill her. This could mean something very dangerous, maybe she had discovered another ancient weapon in those ruins, she wanted to recover it and Use it against the inhabitants of Etheria...

„I think I know what she's up to. I... I have to go and I'll try to stop her, and you Convince Glimmer to send us a support force where we're going. Thanks to your bond with Swiftwind, you'll know better where I'm going.... Tell Glimmer that Shadow Weaver is looking for something in the ruins of the First Ones...” She said and kissed her beloved's lips as tenderly as she could, then she looked at Lady Ka.

"When will you be ready to leave?" she asked the woman in the trap, and she answered.

„You're the Lord Admiral's daughter, and your word is my command. We can take off in half an hour.”

"That's good, but you warn your people that this may be an extremely dangerous mission," she said, but Lady Ka chuckled.

„ Believe me, they are not afraid of any dangers, because I have made sure that they fear me more than the most terrible enemy.” she said, smiling colder than the gusts of storm wind.

"Do you remember, brother, that I still hate outdoor trips?" said his sister, and he smiled at her crookedly.

„Yes, I remember our wonderful camping trip. You got lost... sixteen times? Actually, seventeen. But that one time. You got lost when we were walking back together, so that counts as one time.„ he said and laughed, but Casta snorted in irritation and replied.

„I remember my parents telling me that you got lost in the basement and you cried because you couldn't get out!„ she looked at him triumphantly. He rolled his eyes and replied.

„Remember, our basement was so big it stretched under our entire family estate. You could cram an entire village in there and no one would notice."

„In fact, we once crammed an entire village there.. You were already in school then, so you don't remember. It was at the very beginning of the war, when the Horde entered the lands of our kingdom. The lands of the Grand Duchy of Lotus, that is.„ She threw a significant look at Hordak, and then continued. „ All the people from the surrounding villages sought shelter in our manor. We hid in the basement among the wine barrels, and then we tried to wait it out. The soldiers stole half of the wine barrels, but my parents were still happy, because most of them were full of the worst drink anyway, you know the one for cooking. When they left, for a while, everything went back to normal, but then... Well, I moved to Mystacor, and my parents moved to Brightmoon. They always missed their old life, and I guess they were never really happy in their new place."

Hordak looked at them confused and said.

„ I'm sorry about what happened, but I didn't know that soldiers stole wine during the war.. Alcohol was prohibited in the Fright Zone.”-`

She and her sister looked at him, unsure how to react to what he said.

„You may have decreed prohibition, but that doesn't mean there was no black market there. To this day, the moonshine of the technical department is known to all of Etheria ... You didn't know about it?„ he said finally. When he saw the confusion on the face of the former ruler of the Horde, he added in surprise. „Did you really not know about anything?„ he did not hide the surprise in his voice.

„ What do you think Shadow Weaver was drinking? „ His sister asked, smiling indulgently. Hordak looked down and said slowly.

„I knew she got alcohol from somewhere. She tried to hide it, but I always knew about it. Sometimes she took these Mint lozenges, which were supposed to mask the smell of alcohol, but it didn't work very well. I liked the smell, those lozenges because it reminded me of the disinfectant used on the Velvet Glove. It irritated me that she drank, but there was nothing I could do about it. I needed her, without her I wouldn't be able to manage the Horde...„ he said quietly, looking into the flames of the campfire. It was evening, the bright moons had already set, and the stars scattered the sky. They stopped a few hours ago in the Valley of Shattered Armor. It was strange to just camp here. He saw wrecks of vehicles everywhere, as well as armor and weapons. Most of the bodies had been buried after the war, but some of them were still in hidden or inaccessible places. A strange, ominous Aura hovered over the entire area. He didn't believe in ghosts before, but after what he had experienced on the Beast Island, what he had read in the ancient books and, most importantly, after what his own sister had told him about those strange events in the underground of Mystacor. Their family had kept many old stories and practices that had been practically forgotten in other parts of the planet. Or so he thought, because the more he got to know Etheria, the more he discovered how diverse and full of secrets it was. For example, in his everyday home they had an altar to honor their ancestors, something that was not known in many places on the planet, although he was surprised to discover that this Practice was known in many worlds, especially on Icarus. He never managed to tell Glimmer about it. She was too young before he was sent to the Beast Island, and then... Somehow the right moment wasn't there. Maybe it would be easier for her to accept the death of her Mother... Although she is alive, another of the miracles he has experienced in his life. He didn't know when or how he would meet her, But he was willing to do anything to get them back together, who, apart from his daughter, he loved the most in the world. Once he explored these ruins. However, he learned that it would be much more complicated than he had expected so far.

When they reached the Valley, they set up camp. The former lord of the Horde was helping him in this task, which was a bit surprising. He never thought he would be doing absolutely anything with this guy, and certainly not setting up camp. He also didn't think someone like Hordak would know anything about surviving in the wild. He didn't hesitate to ask him about it, after talking about his knowledge of the alcohol trade in the horror zone, he asked.

„For someone who 's spent most of his life confined to a lab, you're doing pretty well in the wild.”

The clone looked at him and snorted.

„I have many skills. Horde Prime put a lot of knowledge into our heads during our conditioning, because we were supposed to be His perfect soldiers, but also servants. We were elite troops, and each of you should be able to take care of everything. We all have technical skills, I just developed them, because I needed them. But equally, Each of us knows how to handle the wild, because it was necessary during the wars for Horde Prime. We can even cook, if any of us were forced to make dinner for our Big Brother. This is quite useful, because Entrapta, despite this brilliant mind, is a complete culinary talentless.”

Castaspellla looked at the clone in surprise and said.

“I hope Shadow Weaver arrives soon and we won't have to test your cooking skills.”

Then he saw Hordak hesitate , even look guilty. For a moment he seemed to struggle with his thoughts, and then he answered.

"Shadow Weaver won't be coming. I spoke to my wife few days ago, and she told me that Shadow Weaver had been captured during the wedding. That's why I was detained. Your daughter suspected that I might be in on the case," he said in a quiet voice, as if he were embarrassed. They both stared at him open-mouthed, until his sister finally stood up and put her hands on her hips and screamed.

„And you've been hiding it from us this whole time! How could you do this! How are we supposed to trust you now, not that we trusted you before!”

Hordak looked at them smiling grimly and said.

„If I had told you earlier, you might have decided to turn around and deal with her yourself, or do something equally senseless, Instead of focusing on our task..”

„And rightly so! This is our family after all! We have to help her, or else…!„ his sister yelled, but he interrupted her.

„He's right... „ He said looking into the flames, and his sister looked at him in disbelief, so he explained „If we knew that Shadow Weaver was imprisoned, we would have turned back, but little would come of it.. Now it's Glimmer's business, as well as Catra and Adora. Especially Catra and Adora. They have a greater right to question this woman. I have nothing to tell her, nothing new. Maybe it's even better. I prefer her to be under lock and key, watched by those who will definitely not be fooled by her manipulations, and personally I prefer to cooperate with this strange sorceress. She may be a bit weird, but she definitely doesn't look like someone capable of deceiving, and manipulating others. Besides, it might be interesting to talk about the magical arts practiced in distant corners of the Galaxy.„ He smiled at Castaspelia . Now the argument was rather directed at her, because he himself was no longer so interested in the mysterious arts, he had other matters that occupied his thoughts.

„Shadow Weaver is less of a problem than Catra's father... My wife is with that Lonnie's Rebels, along with my brother, and that stupid horse. The Lord Admiral's other daughter is with her too... Entrapta said that one of that Antares' subordinates tried to kill her, and I don't trust anyone else like I trust her. She always tries to see the good in others... If she says someone is evil, then they must be really mean.„ Hordak explained, stirring the soup that is supposed to be their dinner in a pot.

„You should have said that too!„ Castaspella shouted.

„Perhaps I should, but I doubt your daughter would believe me, and certainly not her friends I understand that after all these years I have not earned the right to have anyone trust my word, even when I tell the truth.„ The former Horde commander looked at him, smiling bitterly. He closed his eyes, sighed and nodded.

„You're right about that too. No one would believe him, and we only have Shadow Weaver's words behind us. To tell the truth, I don't know why I believe everything she says. I suspect that she hides a lot of things from us anyway. The knowledge she gathered while she was still in Mystacor ... And also outside of it... She has a patron, a being she summoned during that ritual.„ He spoke thoughtfully, but Hordak snorted and said.

„She always liked having someone above her, someone she could control and use to increase her own power. I almost feel sorry for that someone, because he himself has become just a tool in her games.

He shook his head and answered the clone.

„If this is the being I read about... Even she wouldn't deceive someone like that. Nyarlathotep... Rather, the Devourer of Light is an unimaginably old and powerful creature. Compared to someone like that, even your brother was like... like a mayfly facing a dragon.„ when he said this, he felt a growing fear. And what if they were now carrying out the will of the being that was the true master of Shadow Weaver. He remembered that power he felt during the ritual. Not only power, but evil that could not be described with words. As a student, he had searched for some mentions of this creature, but he had only found rumors and empty speculations. Only after the war, thanks to his daughter fathers-in-laws, he had found a book that touched on the subject of Nyarlathotep . However, until now he had only thought that these were secrets that he should investigate, but he had assumed that their discovery so quickly would prove to be so important for his life, and the lives of his loved ones. He knew that he had only seen the tip of an iceberg, made of the black ice of dark secrets, whose cold horror shocked the soul through and through. He had not found much evidence that this being, this Nyarlathetop, was actually operating on Etheria, and he was not even sure if he was anything more than a magical parasite, after all he could not fully trust his memory, nor what was written in the book. Memories are distorted, and books can contain lies and assumptions unsupported by facts. But something deep in his heart told him that all this was true. That with the dark sorceress a great evil had come to Etheria. He looked around. Above his head the stars and moons shone brightly. There was something calming in this sight, although at the same time overwhelming, which should not have been surprising, because after all he could now admire the vastness of the universe, despite the fact that he had only seen a small fragment of it. After all, they were just an insignificant speck of dust that the Wind would leave to blow away. He wondered if the fact that the stars had been unknown to them for all these centuries had made them value the life of every creature so highly?

His companions didn't take kindly to what he was saying. Hordak snorted in contempt, and his sister didn't even say a word, swatting away at the insects. He smiled sadly, envying their unawareness and lack of worries. Perhaps, at least for a while, he should give up thinking about such gloomy issues, but then he looked around. Although darkness covered the valley, you had the impression that he saw something there. Perhaps not exactly material things, but an aura of ghastly evil. Was it released by a spell cast by Shadow Weaver, or maybe it was caused by the deaths of thousands of soldiers from both sides who gave their lives here during that battle. Or maybe it was all simply caused by memories that distorted how he perceived this place. However, if there can be such beings as the one summoned by Shadow Weaver... Or like the not-dead who wanted to kill his sister. And he still felt this aura, even intensified by his earlier thoughts. When he looked to the side he sometimes saw them moving, in the silence that followed their conversation he heard nothing but the creaking of burning wood. Maybe it was just the Wind blowing among the bare rocks, In which the walls of the valley had become after the spell cast by the dark sorcerer, but he thought he heard wailing and moaning. He looked at his companions. Castaspella seemed to notice nothing, but Hordak looked worried. For a moment he wondered if he shouldn't ask him somewhere, if he sensed something strange, but he had reservations. It was strange, but he didn't want to come across as a superstitious inhabitant of a backwater planet in front of someone like that. Since when did he care about the opinion of someone like him? It was stupid, after all Hordak was nothing to him. Maybe he was simply afraid to voice his fears out loud… Only, was he silent because he was ashamed that his fears were absurd, or because if he voiced them out loud, he would have to start taking them seriously. Something deep in his heart told him that these were not ordinary childish fears, the unreasonable fears of someone who had returned to the place where his life had been broken. What had happened then when the Dark Sorceress had cast the spell that had led to the deaths of So many… Such powerful, and such terrible magic could not fail to leave its mark on the surroundings. The power that had been unleashed then was the greatest that had been seen on all of Etheria for centuries. He had never heard of such a spell before, and perhaps its casting would not have been possible without the help of Black Garnet … Although he had become the head sorcerer of Mystacor, he had never equaled your former master in knowledge.

The thoughtful silence was broken by Hordak.

„There's something wrong with this place. I don't like it.”

Castaspella snorted with contempt.

„Because it reminds you of your crimes! Let's not kid ourselves, most of those who died here were your fault.„ she said sharply, throwing the former ruler of the Horde an accusing look. But he endured it and calmly responded.

„It's not about that... it's not just about that. This place... It brings to mind Shadow Weaver... I spent time with her too, that I could sense her approaching. Her power left a certain aftertaste... it even had a smell... This place was marked by her, corrupted . She marked it with her own presence. I spent the last few years on The Beast Island. That place was also corrupted by the Great Power, although in a different way. „ He looked him straight in the eye. He nodded, agreeing , to his surprise, with his old sworn enemy...

"Yeah, I was going to cleanse this place up before all this happened," he explained, rubbing his chin thoughtfully.

„Cleanse? From what?„ she asked his sister in surprise.

„From the evil that has settled here.„ he said and looked his sister seriously in the eye. And then he began to tell her about the stories that circulated about this place.„ People say that hungry shadows prowl here, who can suck the strength out of their touch. Others talk about terrible creatures, with bodies similar to humans, but with powerful fangs and claws. They supposedly hunt not only animals, but also intelligent beings... And I've heard worse stories, since with a body inside, who suck blood with their long tongues.

Castaspella shuddered when she heard his story, then said irritably.

"Sounds like one of those horrible scary stories you'd tell around a campfire. I hated them... They were another reason I still hate camping." She shuddered again.

And then it happened. First he felt a power, similar to what appeared when his daughter used her teleportation power. This time, however, it was a bit... Softer, more like waves of power than the violent explosion that accompanied his daughter's appearance. Then he saw a pink-purple flash clearly visible in the darkness. He jumped to his feet , and preparing a spell, he ran towards where he saw a flash of light. It was clearly not Shadow Weaver, but he wasn't sure who. It was definitely not his daughter, even though the power was similar. It radiated something familiar, just like the magic permeating the Valley, it had something of a dark sorcerer in it. He felt an unexpected excitement, a sudden burst of hope, because he remembered now well where he had given such power. But, was it possible? Ignoring the voices of his companions, he was there in a few bounds. There was a clearing of vitrified sand, surrounded by several low hills, on which there were many military equipment, even one tank. But it did not matter to him, because He saw her! She was standing there! She looked different. She was dressed in a dark purple cloak. Her hair was cut short, the visible part of her face was covered with golden tattoos, and the rest was covered by a mask of blue crystal. With horror and despair, he saw that their wings were resting on a metal frame, and their right arm had been replaced with a cybernetic prosthesis... But it was her! The woman he loved more than life! It was love for her that allowed him to survive all these years in exile. If it weren't for her, they would have allowed themselves to be devoured by the island long ago... So he stood there, staring at his beloved. He fell to his knees Unable to utter a single word, he fell to his knees, and He stared at Angela, at his Angie … Tears streamed down his face, on which a joyful, though probably somewhat unconscious smile appeared. Angela looked at him , and I don't think she recognized him at first, she just looked around with confusion, but then understanding appeared in her eyes. She took a step back, she seemed terrified. But why? After all… After all, after so many years, they were finally together. He loved her, and she loved him, that was the truth… That was the truth? He felt a sudden fear and, having gathered himself, he said in a breaking voice.

„Angie it's me, Mikah ...”

She touched her face with her living hand. Tears welled in her beautiful pink”purple eyes. She pressed her maimed wings to her body, as she always did when she was scared or confused.

„ Oh, Mikah … By the devils and demons, it's really you… You're alive. All these years… I thought you were dead, I didn't even remember your face. And now… And now you're standing here in front of me… Please tell me you're alive… That it's really you, and not some ghost or doppelganger … That I didn't imagine you were here with me…„ She knelt down before him and took off her mask. She was just as beautiful as always, just as he remembered . He moved to her and embraced her, she squeezed his arms and wings. He felt her warmth, her scent… In that moment he felt like the happiest man in the world.

„I love you so much... „ he whispered quietly.

She wasn't yet well acquainted with her new power... The first time she used it was in the monastery, when she took Bina to her charges. She had seen that she could do it before, it was simply something instinctive that she could do without even thinking about it, a bit like walking or speaking. She had simply been unaware of it all these years, only when she approached this region of the Galaxy, some of her powers began to awaken, as if she was only now realizing what she was truly capable of. The second time she used It was when she was running away from that aristocrat, of a monstrous nature. Then she practiced it several times on the ship, but always at a very short distance. Now, for the first time, she managed to use it, at such a considerable distance. Despite everything, she believed that it was a safer way than using that Elf's spell. That woman was full of enthusiasm, but even She doubted her abilities. However, it didn't change the fact that She was afraid of the results of her teleportation.

But all four of them were there. Above them were the stars shining, and those strange moons, did she really have to be on a planet with twelve moons? It must have been nightmarish if you were a Werewolf… She shook her head, to get rid of the strange thoughts, and then looked around. At first glance, she noticed that they were on an old battlefield. She saw destroyed vehicles everywhere, and abandoned weapons. She didn't see any corpses anywhere yet, they were probably buried a long time ago. However, she immediately sensed that something was wrong with this place. A strange aura hovered over this place , sending shivers down her spine. It reminded her of that monastery, where they fought the horde and the dead and the shadows… But there was something else that made her uneasy. This place brought back memories, terrible memories, full of despair and sadness. She wasn't sure if she'd ever been here in person, but she'd definitely recognized this Valley from stories. That's why when she saw the fire, she'd reflexively summoned a Solarian flare, and Tonado had drawn his blades. And then she'd seen the man running toward her. He wasn't young anymore, but he still seemed to be in good shape, considering how fast he'd run toward her. He'd held a sorcerer's staff in his hands, making it easier for him to run through you, and the remnants, and the battles. And then he'd stood before her, and she'd seen who he was. Memories flooded her mind. Their first meeting. Conversations under a strange purple sky. Their first kiss. Their wedding. How they'd played together with their little daughter. They'd all come at once, hitting her mind like a sword's blade. They were fragmented, and without context, but... it was still so much more than she'd had so far. She'd realized who she was, and she'd stepped back, understanding just how much of a person she'd become. She was a monster, a terrible pirate, a scourge on Azlanti… Because she had dozens, perhaps hundreds of lives on my conscience. True, they were not innocent inhabitants of the Galaxy, and for the most part servants of an oppressive empire, but not all. She was cruel and ruthless. She had blood on her hands. She stepped back, terrified of herself, but he still He gazed at her with love He knelt before her and uttered the Words

„Angie , it's me, Mikah”

She touched her face with her hand, and then she felt, for the first time in so many years, that she was crying. She was glad that most of her crew were not here. She did not want them to see her, in such a moment of weakness. She expected him to see it, but she could believe it. It was simply that it could be true, it had to be a lie or a deception, such things did not happen to people like her. People like her did not deserve such happiness... But she also knew that it could not be anyone else. She simply could not accept her happiness, so she said.

„Oh, Mikah … By the devils and demons, it's really you… You're alive. All these years… I thought you were dead, I didn't even remember your face. And now… And now you're standing here in front of me… Please tell me you're alive… That it's really you, and not some ghost or doppelganger … That I didn't imagine you were here with me…

She knelt before him, and then And then she took off her mask. The air around her had become dry, burning her throat and lungs… It was a dry place, And soon she would have to put her mask back on, Or she would start to choke, and eventually suffocate. But now She wanted to show her face to the one who was so important.

„I love you so much.„ he whispered hugging her tightly. She hugged her back and for a moment they knelt like that, forgetting about the whole world. But then she saw Him, the tyrant and invader, the one who brought war to her world. She felt anger and rage burst into black flames in her heart.

Chapter End Notes

Well, here's another chapter. I think I made a mistake in the Failures chapter, which I'll fix.

Unavenged Grudges

Chapter Notes

See the end of the chapter for notes

As soon as he saw the former king running towards the flash of light, he jumped to his feet and transformed one arm into a weapon. He wasn't sure who had appeared here. Reason told him that it was the effect of this Saihe using a spell , but he couldn't stop the reflexes that had been implanted in him right after he came into the world. He had never trusted magic, as well the people who used it, and this place made him feel alert, like in a war zone. Wherever he looked, he saw traces of the destructive effects of magic. Wrecked vehicles, and abandoned equipment, it was all the work of one person who cast one spell. On his orders, of course, or at least with his approval. He shouldn't be a hypocrite. He was briefly a soldier in Horde Prime's army, but he saw cities burned. He helped destroy them, then and later.. But there was something against the laws of nature in this place. Magic had warped the entire area, marking it with its darkness. It was like radioactive contamination, it would exist long after he died.

Saihe appeared, but she wasn't alone. He felt a sudden surge of suspicion that he had acquired during his reign in the Fright Zone. Was this a trap set by Shadow Weaver? It would be her style to take advantage of their trust and then betray them. But then, thanks to his eyes capable of seeing in the dark, he saw Who had arrived and realized that this was a trap, although only for him. In addition to this strange Saihe, he saw three people, but he recognized only one of them, and only she mattered here. Queen Angela... He had never seen her up close, but he knew she had changed a lot, but she still had that which had kept her leading the rebellion against his Horde for so many years. For a moment, she and her husband began, hugging and crying. He remembered a similar moment right after his brother had been defeated, when he met Entrapta again . After being chiped, as well as the purification procedures, his mind was clouded at that time, but after meeting his love, he still felt that he was burning with an indescribable happiness. Even if he already had a feeling that he would have to face the consequences of his actions, it still didn't matter to him at the time, all that mattered was the joy of being together with the most wonderful woman in the world again. Now the former king felt the same, although their future would probably not be strewn with so many complications... Or maybe not, after everything they had learned recently, no one could predict what awaited them. He smiled , and tried to prepare himself for what was about to come. And then Queen Angela saw him. Even from this distance he could see the rage in her eyes. She stood up, pushing her husband away and took two steps towards him.

“It's you!” she shouted and one of her hands was once again enveloped in cold blue flame. A strange hairy creature with many hands drew many blades, which in all of its hands, and a small person in strange, as if organic armor looked at him and clenched a fist, which began to transform into a weapon. Only the strange sorceress seemed confused. He sighed, and bowed his head.

“Hail, Queen... Do what you must...” He said resignedly

He should have expected that something similar would eventually happen to him. Finally, someone would want to bring him closer to the justice he deserved for everything he had done during his life. He just didn't think it would be her, the former leader rebels , his old enemy, but maybe that's a good thing! For so many years they fought against each other, although they had never met. Now they would stand face to face, and finally the queen would get the revenge she had been waiting for then. He didn't feel sorry for himself, he knew he hadn't gotten the punishment he deserved, so he didn't resist now. He only felt sorry for his wife and child, that they would be sad after his death. He could only hope that they would understand and come to terms with what had happened to him instead of holding a grudge. He wanted to close his eyes, reconciled with his fate, but he changed his mind. It would be cowardice, unworthy of both him and the Queen. He looked into her eyes. Angela raised her hand and aimed at him, but then, to his immense surprise, Micah covered him.

„He is with us, don't hurt him.”

The woman stopped and looked at him in surprise.

„Step back, he is… You know who he is… He's the reason I lost my life.. He invaded Our World. He's the reason… He's the reason I am who I am. If it weren't for him, none of this would have happened to me.„ she said and coughed.

"He has a wife and a child. They are very good people. If you hurt him, you hurt them too, and they don't deserve that." He shouted, not taking his eyes off the former queen.

„I had a child… and a husband. Because of him I lost it… I lost both of you!„ Angela replied sharply.

„But you got us back! You don't have to take revenge.„ her husband replied.

„But thousands of mothers and fathers, wives and husbands lost their loved ones because of him. How many families did he destroy?„ She screamed, trembling.

„Please , he wants to atone for his sins. He wasn't entirely responsible for his actions... He... I was also a prisoner of Horde Prime. He chipped me. I know how it is. I was ready to hurt our daughter then. I wanted to hurt Glimmer! And he went through conditioning. His mind... he was shattered... „ Micah continued to defend him. His sister, however, watched the whole situation with her arms crossed. That strange sorceress took a bag of crisps out of her pouch, which was definitely too to fit in such a pouch. The strange creature with sabers, continued to look at him menacingly, and that girl in armor looked at him thoughtfully. When Micah mentioned conditioning, the queen hesitated, and then that girl approached her, and grabbed her by the burning hand.

„Madam Captain, don't do this. It will kill part of you. Now... Now you don't have to think about Revenge anymore, you can... We can all change... Madam Captain, you can forget what happened... We've all taught many terrible things, but now we can stop. Please...„ She said in a voice coming from a speech synthesizer. The Queen looked at her in surprise, but she extinguished and lowered her hand.

„Fine... You'll live, but remember that you're only alive because two people I love stood up for you... Appreciate it.„ she said in a hoarse voice and let out a dry cough, after which she put her mask back on. The tension instantly subsided, and to his surprise he felt relief. He didn't want to die, he liked his new life with his Wife and Child. For the first time since he can remember... for the first time in his life he felt happy, and he didn't want to lose it. He wanted to atone for his sins, but not through His death. He could do so much more. He could fix the wrong he had done. It would be much better than dying pointlessly in the middle of nowhere. He took a deep breath, He realized that only now he allowed himself to take a deeper breath.

The Queen pointed to the creature and the girl and introduced them.

„These are my companions, First Mate Tonado and My Chief Navigator Tirin.

Micah looked at the girl in the strange outfit with surprise and said.

„ We've met before. I just thought you were... That you were one of those people who imprisoned... my wife....„ he threw the queen a questioning look, but Tirin answered.

„But I am Azlanti, As I told you. I am not proud of what the Star Empire is doing, and I am very sorry for everything my people did to the Captain... that mean, the Queen... „ she looked down, Clearly feeling Guilty. Queen Angela walked up to her and put her hand on her shoulder, and he had the impression that she smiled, although he could only tell by her eyes, and he had never been good at judging other people's behavior by their facial expressions, and she said.

„Tirin helped me free myself from the Azlantean labor camp. If it weren't for her, I probably wouldn't be alive anymore. She sacrificed a lot for me, and she's as close to me as... A daughter.”

The girl in the strange uniform looked at her with a look that seemed to be both surprised and delighted. Micah looked at the girl thoughtfully, then extended his hand to her.

„We've known each other for some time, but only now do we know who we are, so we can say hello again. It's nice to meet you Tirin. „ he said, and the navigator carefully likes his gloved hand, and said through the synthesizer.

“It's nice to meet you too, King... King Consort...„ The girl was clearly confused.

„Just call me Micah , it's for the best... „ he said, smiling reassuringly at Tirin, and then said to his wife.

„I think you should come to our bonfire... I didn't prepare much because I didn't know you were coming. Up until now I thought only Shadow Weaver would come and of course Mrs.... Ireanis, and Hordak's former right hand supposedly could live practically on alcohol alone.„ the former king laughed nervously, as if it was some kind of joke, but then the creature named Tonado said

„Luckily I brought with me special self-heating rations of good Akitonian production, in case my captain turns out to be hungry... I took two weeks' supplies for the captain.„ he looked at the king with complete seriousness, turning up his nose a little.

„I have to eat my food anyway because... My digestive system doesn't work very well and I wouldn't be able to eat normal things.„ Tirin explained, and then That stupid Elf joined the conversation.

„And I have crisps! Desirable, healthy, just only preservatives and flavor enhancers.„ She waved a bag of some snacks in front of them. The Queen shrugged, the atmosphere relaxed and everyone seemed to be in a good mood, even him. But immediately he felt a shiver run down his spine. Something was watching them. Something hostile and dangerous. They could treat his penance as an escape from punishment, but few knew how dangerous the Beast Island could be. He became vigilant and cautious there, learned to look out for threats. Despite the fact that his wife provided him with the support of such a wonderful power armor, he still knew that many creatures lived there that could kill him or worse. Therefore, he straightened up and turned his back to his companions.

„Something evil is coming here.”

Ever since she found out Angela was alive, she couldn't wait to hug her and apologize for how awful she was to her all those years she thought she was. Micah is dead. She didn't care that she had changed, after all they had all changed since then.. They had become more cautious, more thoughtful and aware of what they felt. She herself had become much more open to people raised in other cultures and values. She had met students and others from the farthest corners of Etheria , former members of the Horde, and even a person from outside her planet. She had recently even met Catra's father and his entourage , very unusual people. But all this had not prepared her for what had happened to the queen. She had always been a woman of consideration, and absolutely composed. She had never resorted to violence unless it was absolutely necessary. She was a model of elegance and good breeding, an ideal ruler, the best that Etheria could get. Although she was not interested in such matters, she perfectly understood why her brother had fallen in love with her. She had been a wonderful mother to Glimmer, whom she had raised to be a wonderful heir to the throne. And this woman inspired fear. She was a marauder, or even worse. She could see that so much evil had befallen her. Her hand… and her wings! Who could be such a monster, To strip an angelic being of her wings! As soon as she saw Hordak , she wanted to kill him, right there. There was no justice in it, only burning hatred. It was so unlike her… She couldn't imagine what it would take for someone else to become so… Filled with rage… But no, she knew someone like that… Her life had been filled with suffering, too. Catra… Now she saw in her sister-in-law the same scars she saw on her soul.

She was silent as her sister-in-law aimed directly at Hordak's biological hand. She wasn't sure if she acted like that because she was shocked by what had happened to Angela, or maybe because she secretly wanted the woman to take revenge on the former ruler of the Horde. She hated him, although she was ashamed to admit it, because she knew it was bad, but he had done so much wrong.

Then that girl… That Tiirin tried to calm her captain down and she succeeded. And then Angela said that she was as close to her as her own daughter, and then she felt her jaw drop. She would only be more surprised if it turned out that her new husband or wife would soon arrive here. She knew that five years had passed, but... A daughter right away? Tirin said that she was some Azlanti, and claimed that she was sorry for what her people had done to Angela… Who were they? Another threat to their planet? She was starting to get a headache from all this, so she was glad for the rest that her brother had offered her, everyone needed a moment of peace. However, then Hordak mentioned some threat. She rolled her eyes and said.

„Were you scared by the campfire tales? He would think that the Great Scary Lord Hordak was afraid of ghost stories. „ She laughed and Hordak gritted his teeth angrily. But her brother gave her a reproachful look. But this little creature, named Tonado, also seemed worried, and he fluffed up his blue pink fur. Angela looked at him and looked around and said

„I don't like this place. It’s look like a battlefield, and it seems to be an abandoned area.”

She and her brother looked at her seriously and Micah said.

„Don't you remember? This is the Valley of Shattered Armor... This is where we lost and I was... I was imprisoned and sent to the Beast Island... „ he glanced sideways at Hordak and asked. Don't you remember this?

She shook her head slowly and said.

„I don't remember much... I know there was a battle, and something very terrible happened there. This place reminds me of pain and... suffering. But these are just impressions. I've never been here, and I don't remember anything that happened here.”

„Because in fact, you were never here. At the time, you were taking care of our daughter… „ He explained, and his wife narrowed her eyebrows and shrugged.

„It's not important now... I wanted to say that such places are often full of the undead, and sometimes visitors from other planes, especially fiends. I've visited the Haunted wrecks and ruins several times... Once even with Ireanis and Bina's children . „ She said, and the sorceress from outside the Empire smiled as if at pleasant memories.

"Yeah, we almost got eaten by the Ghouls back then, but Daisy… Shadow Weaver, and I chased them away," she replied. She looked at the Saihe woman in surprise. She didn't seem to be very good at unscrewing anything bigger than a mosquito. Speaking of which, she'd slapped herself on the cheek, leaving a sticky stain on it. She grimaced.

„Then it would be better to check them at night...„ said the queen and then the sorceress jumped up and clapped.

„I have an idea! Hey, Micah , remember when we were here with Daisy, that's Shadow Weaver, and the kids? It was those ruins, you know where that girl was... You know, that transparent one...”

„You mean Heart Gift?„ Her brother asked cautiously. „ I'm not sure if that's a good idea. She wasn't... She's Light Hope and Mara's child ...”

She recognized the names. The first was an ancient AI, the second a previous She-Ra… She had heard of them from Adora, but, how could they have a child? Before she could voice her doubts, something began to fly around her, and Tirin called out.

„We met her at Castle Crypto ! She's very nice!„ was clearly delighted.

„You met her? But how on Etheria?„ Micah asked, he seemed to be very surprised by the girl's words. She didn't hear the girl's answer, however, because she started to drive away something big, but when she saw out of the corner of her eye that everyone had turned pale, she looked closely at the thing, and for a moment her heart stopped in horror. In front of her a head floated on wings made of ears.. She had large empty eyes, and a mouth full of fangs, and her skin was slimy. Before anyone could react, she saw that Hordak directed his hand at him, which transformed into a Blaster and fired a beam of energy that tore the creature into shreds, which splattered them all.

„ Oh Vargouille! Do you know that if a snake bites you, you can get sick and your head will fly away?„ Saihe said in a tone as if she was explaining a nature curiosity to children in class.

People might complain that she was absent-minded , that she couldn't always focus on what they were saying to her, and that she sometimes didn't fully understand the reality around her, but she was a war mage from Nantambu after all . She had to lead her subordinates through the dense jungle of her homeland more than once. She had a good sense of direction, and in that respect her memory functioned quite well, so she quickly led them to the mouth of the shaft that Bina's children had blown up.

„There you go! We're all here!„ she grabbed her hips, beaming with pride.

The others, however, were looking at the entrance skeptically, she didn't understand why.

"Do you think this is a safe haven?" The king's sister seemed almost convinced.

„Yes, to be honest, I'd rather fight a whole horde of the undead. It's really fun, you throw fireballs here, meteor showers there, They try to suck your life force or crack your head open to get to your brain. Ah, the good old days!”

Casta flinched at her words. Her brother, however, was skeptical.

„These are the ruins of the First Ones. They always hide dangers. And besides... This girl... She doesn't know what happened to her Mothers„ he said, scared for some unknown reason. Itsmean, the transparent one didn't know that her parents got divorced or something like that?

„Actually, she already knows.... „ Tirin said.

Micah asked , but then they heard raucous laughter, and then a raspy voice came from the darkness.

„It's you... „ They could hear the anger in it, but also the strangely cruel joy. This time it brought back those less pleasant memories.

„ Who are you? „ the king's sister called out, and then a figure in gray, torn robes entered the small circle of light. He was tall, she couldn't tell his species, or even his gender. He had a deep hood over his head, but she could also see that he wore armor underneath, and he should have had it at his belt.

„You don't know who I am? You don't remember, we all have problems with memory, but maybe when you see my face you will remember!„ he threw off his hood and then he saw that it hid a skull covered with stretched skin. The eye sockets were empty, but a green light burned in them. Everyone seemed terrified, it was hard to say why.

„It's just Wight. Nothing terrible! There is no reason to be afraid of them. They do tear out people's throats or cut off their heads, but it's not really that scary! They only kill those they have some quarrel with anyway „ she waved her hand, because it wasn't really a big problem, Some lightning, disintegration or something... Any reasonable person wouldn't take on such common creatures, why didn't they knew that. The captain reached out and aimed her hand at him, which burned with a cold flame

„Who are you and what are you looking for here! Tell me or leave it destroyed.„ she said firmly, and then Wight laughed and said.

„You've changed, but it's still you... But you weren't here when we all died, queen. You ordered me to fight here, you threw us to be devoured by the mistress of shadows. Don't you remember? It was me, your captain of the guard, Oakarm ... We were here, me and my whole squad! While you were sitting calmly in the palace with your daughter, we were dying.„ He didn't shout, although I had the impression that he was very angry, furious even. The captain's husband played and said.

„I remember you... We fought side by side! I didn't see you die, although I suspected that you didn't survive this clash like so many. And now... Listen, it's not my wife's fault, she didn't want anyone to die. No one expected Shadow Weaver to unleash such power. We weren't prepared for it, but I tried to stop her anyway... I was the one who failed, If you must seek revenge on someone, then seek it on me „ said Micah with desperation in his voice. The undead laughed, and before the shadows began to gather. Then Wight looked at her husband, the captain, and grinned, pulling the skin on his face.

„You didn't try hard enough. If you had tried harder... We would have lived... But you survived, right? You're not like us... you didn't spend the last decades Trapped in a dark nightmare. But I feel the power has returned and now I can take my revenge on those who caused our lives to be lost... We will all do this... „ he said and then he saw Brother of Wrongdak, and he seemed to want to do something, but he aimed the gun at him, and fired. The undead landed in the darkness, And the clone said.

„I don't understand why you're still talking to someone like that.”

She agreed with him, and threw a fireball.

Chapter End Notes

I've misspelled Micah's name before. Please leave your comments and opinions.

Standing side by side with a former enemy

A moment ago He realized that he had never fully believed what he had heard about this place. Not in his heart. He had read books, and he knew a few legends, but he had never fully understood what the undead were. Even after what his sister had said . He had probably thought that they were some form of meat puppets, or Dark energy pretending to be living people. However, when he looked into the eyes of the being who had once been the Captain of the Guard, he saw the former intelligence in them… And hatred… He had not expected that any of the former members were capable of feeling such hatred for their comrades in arms. Was it hatred that had caused them to rise from the dead? Hatre Dark magic…

He knew that many members of the king's guard had died during the battle, probably most of them. A similar fate befell the entire Black Guard serving the Scorpion King, as well as his daughters, who were protected by the soldiers serving in this formation. He had no idea how many more unburied warriors, and not only them. were resting in the area. But seeing the swirling shadows and shapes, he expected that there could be many of them there... Really many... That's why he thought the Fireball that the sorceress Saihe threw was a pretty good idea. He covered his eyes, and felt the waves of heat, but they were far enough away to avoid most of the effects of the explosion. He saw that light began to radiate from his wife. A bolt of bright energy shot out of her hand , hitting one of the figures hiding in the darkness. Then more creatures began to emerge from the darkness. Most of them resembled the Captain of the guard, and their eyes glowed green. They were armed and wore armor. However, there were also figures resembling Humans, but half”naked , with long claws and teeth, staring at them with eyes full of hunger.

„Ghouls! Don't let them bite you!„ His wife shouted, Although considering how those teeth looked, he still had no intention of letting them dig into his body. Together with his sister, they began to cast a Spell to stop those creatures. However, a few of them have already broken through to their ranks.. Tonado threw himself with his sabers, between two Wights, They cut their legs with your sabers. At that time, Hordak blocked the bite and to that Ghoul, inserting an armored arm into his mouth, And then shot him with his blaster, playing off his head, and that girl... Tirin, changed one of her hands to something that threw a corrosive substance. But then, comma from the darkness, other creatures began to emerge, like animated shadows, similar to those that Shadow Weaver could create. Silently, they moved towards them. One of them touched his sister, and then Castaspela turned pale, but did not stop casting the spell. Angela shot another projectile into the shadow, dispersing it. He noticed that his wife began to radiate with an ever greater light. So strangely the sorceress laughed, as if fighting with these creatures brought her inexpressible joy. She threw another spell, which caused a lightning to shoot out from between her fingers, which jumped from one creature to another. Then they finished the spell, and a Magic barrier was created in front of them, which stopped these creatures.

„Let's hide inside!„ Angela called. „Maybe that way they'll lose interest in us.„ She finished, and then spread her wings, and held out her hand to the matter of the undead creatures, and then there was another explosion. Then they did as she told them and disappeared into the ruins of the First Ones.

Tirin was incredibly happy, which was quite strange considering that she had just been fighting a horde of undead lurking outside. The captain said that she was like a daughter. She couldn't imagine more beautiful words. Her mother crippled her, and her father always treated her more as a nuisance than as his own child. Until now, she had been very afraid of what would happen to her when the captain regained his family... Would she forget about her and leave her alone forever? She had seen her daughter, even if only in videos, and she was the child every parent would dream of. Beautiful, strong and healthy. A heroine who helped save not only her planet but the entire galaxy... And she was crippled and unable to live independently without this suit. Now the captain said that she was like a daughter to her too, and that made her happier than anything else in the world.

Of course, it would be nice to survive too, to be able to enjoy it. There had to be hope, they all had to, that the barrier would hold long enough for them to find shelter She didn't quite understand why everyone except Ireanis and Tonado seemed to fear this place, but maybe it was because she felt more comfortable here than she did outside, and that was even before the undead showed up At first, when she arrived here, she felt scared because she found herself in an open space again, which she hated,, so she was glad that they were going to the ancient ruins. It was cramped here, on the walls she saw fragments of strange but quite nice drawings. Yes, it was quite cozy, and on top of that They will meet Heart Gift soon . She liked her. She was an artificial intelligence, but it didn't bother her. She met a few androids, Chart even served on the ship, And AIthat was almost the same. You couldn't hug her, of course, but she was also hard to hug, so it didn't matter! And why did she even think about hugging that girl?!

Micah led them, with Captain Moonshadow walking next to him and herself close behind with Tonado.. After a few moments, the sorcerer looked at her and asked.

„How do you know Heart Gift ? „ he smiled, probably not wanting her to get the impression he was questioning her. She hesitated before answering.

„ I found, or rather we found her in the undergrounds of that castle... Castle Crypto ! She was there and she was crying... We all felt very sorry for her. She was very upset, and said some unpleasant things to this woman with purple hair, to Entrapta ... „ she said, and then Hordak, who was walking at the end, covering them from behind, asked.

„ What did she tell my wife…?„ She heard the irritation in your voice, and she lowered her head in shame, „Sorry, I forgot she's your wife. Heart Gift answered her about what happened to her parents. She was sincere, but very... unpleasant in what she said, and then Taka machine woke up, but it's nothing special... „ She tried to sound like it was nothing important, although she wasn't as good at hiding the truth as Eti... „ and then we somehow made up.

"So Castle Crypto is the ruins of the First Ones? That explains a lot... But does that mean you were with Lonnie? And her rebels? You joined to them?" Micah looked at his wife uncertainly. She considered before answering.

„It's not that simple. I joined the rebellion , but I guess for the same reason you were willing to work with that woman. With Shadow Weaver. They were the only people I could cooperate with, and besides, they had Tirin."

„They caught me, but it was completely by accident. They released me later„ she interrupted the conversation to clarify some details

"We came to an understanding and made an alliance. I offered them a sword... Adora's shattered sword... I'm not sure what they would want it for..." Captain Monshadow added carefully.

"This is truly a magnificent trophy, one of the most valuable things we have ever stolen!" Tonado exclaimed.

„But, where did you get that sword?„ The captain's husband asked in surprise. She wasn't sure, but she had the impression that the captain was blushing with embarrassment under her mask.

„I robbed my daughter... I got into the museum because I needed the sword. I thought it belonged to me. I said that my memory wasn't complete. I remembered very little, although I remember more and more. However, some of my memories were changed... Doctor Sidonius... He changed my memory. He's a very old vampire. Really old, he remembers the times of the lost Golarion. The Azlanti hired him to help interrogate me. He probably implanted these memories in me so that I would come here, and help him get the sword, because he thought he needed it. He helped me free myself. I don't deny that I wouldn't have succeeded without his help, but he had his own interests in this... He probably believed that I would lead him to the sword and our Planet... „ She clenched her fists angrily.

„He also financed our expedition, he bought us this ship.. I think he also sent your other Eti here... „ said the elven sorceress, still smiling. She saw Micah stop in his tracks.

"So, that's how she ended up here? But why did he send her here? After all, she was a child, Adora told me about it when they met...She was a toddler in Cardboard." He said in shock

„And because he was testing some teleportation device or something like that, I don't really know because I've never talked to him, I don't like the undead... unless they're burning. Now I want to go back and fuck around some more. I've got a few more spells strong enough to raise hell there...„ she turned around, obviously thinking about it seriously

„Well, that's what you'd expect from him. Unfortunately, the son of a bitch is on Etheria , but I don't know what he's looking for or what he's planning, but I hope we'll meet again and I'll have a chance to talk to him.„ said the captain.

„ I met a vampire in Mystacor. He'd been waiting there for ages, guarding some artifact, but he was woken up first by some burglars, and then by us. Me, Catra, and Nightgale, I mean... You know, that tall Sorceress who was my assistant at the wedding... Ow!" Castaspella shouted as Ireeanis pinched her cheek. "What was that for?"

"I wanted to check if you had changed into a vampire. You here probably wouldn't even be able to tell.„ explained the sorceress with silver hair.

„How can you change? Is it some kind of contagious disease?„ Micah's sister looked at Ireanis with pure horror.

„ Well, yes, though it has to suck all your blood first. It's similar with Ghouls, but here, bite enough, and you can actually get something that turns into a Ghoul. Right, Captain?„ she looked at Moonshadow, who nodded and added.

„There are medications for that, but in the past, entire villages were depopulated this way."

„And in addition, touch of those shadows can steal your own shadow, and then you yourself will turn into a shadow... „ said finally the elven sorceress, and then Castaspella began to stare at her legs, as if searching if her shadow was still there. However, she had one more very important thing to say. She slowed down a bit, so that she found herself next to Hordak.

„Mister. Hordak … I think I need to tell you something. You see, it's Nightgale that Castaspella told me about, she has something in common with you.

The clone snorted and said

"What, apart from the fact that she's tall..."

The captain shot him a warning look, but she continued.

„ You see, she's just as tall as you... „ she said, and then Hordak stumbled , and the others looked at her with curiosity.

„What do you mean?„ asked Micah.

She was about to answer when someone started running towards them from the corridor. Everyone was focused on her, so no one had time to react and the figure ran into her, knocking her over.

„I'm sorry, but I can't move well yet.„ The person said, pinning her to the floor. The voice seemed familiar, but she was sure where she knew it from. Everyone around them aimed their weapons or prepared spells aimed at her. However, the newcomer probably didn't notice, because she slowly and unhurriedly began to stand up. So she lifted her head and looked at the one who knocked her down, at the same time coming to the conclusion that for the second time she had collided with someone she didn't know, although at least this time she didn't lose consciousness.

She saw that the person was an android , dressed in a dress, the same color as her skin. She stood slightly swaying on her feet, as if she couldn't find her balance, but she was also smiling at them. It was only after a moment that she recognized who she was.

„Heart Gift! You look more... physical?„ she said getting up herself.

"Hi! You are Tiriin!?" the girl called out, smiling. At that moment Micah signaled the others to lower their weapons.

„Hello Heart Gift... It's nice to see you, but... Last time we saw each other, you had... You didn't have a body!” said Micah sincerely surprised, and the android nodded and explained

„Yes, because until recently I wasn't sure how to do it, and I think I wasn't allowed to. But no one can forbid me, there's no one here who could forbid me anything.„ she said and for a moment she seemed very sad, but then she smiled again. „ Eti said that some people would be happy if I had a real Body, because I'm a pretty girl, I just had to find a place that has a Manufactory capable of creating such a body. I didn't want to be an ordinary robot, but the archive mentioned a new bioroid project, and I decided to become someone like that. I chose this place because… it wouldn't be very good to show myself in the castle, and someone had already visited me here. And besides, it seems like a good area where you could practice… being” She tried to do a pirouette, and then fell over, and laughed.

“Well, I wouldn't say this area is good for practicing anything right now...„ said Castaspella .

“No, it's a great place to test mass destruction spells, and your resistance to necrotic diseases.„ The elven sorceress said. The captain nodded, then spoke to the android.

„Do you know how to get out of here?”

Heart Gift blinked twice, then pointed to come behind them.

„The easiest way is to enter through the main entrance.„ she narrowed her eyes and then added. „ The passage is not collapsed or blocked in any way... Has something happened outside?

"Yes, we are under attack. By an enemy that... Well, I'm not sure if you've ever heard of such a thing, but there is no way to negotiate with them, we are not strong enough to fight them. So please show us another way out." Moonshadow said. Heart Gift thought over her speech and replied.

“Actually, you don't have permissions, and I can't... But now I decide who has permissions and who doesn't, right? „ she looked at the others with a bit of surprise in her eyes. Micah smiled at her and said.

„It's true, there is no one above you. You are your own lady and it is only up to you what you decide to do.”

Heart Gift nodded and said.

„Come with me. Just don't make too much noise and follow me closely. There are guards there, but I'm not sure I could control them. At least not after I woke them up. I can't operate all the functions of the planetary interface yet, and besides, the inquisitor could have influenced their behavior.„ she looked at them expectantly. She grimaced, remembering that strange Mechanical creature that almost killed them all. The captain must have noticed something, because she looked at her and began to say what, but her husband asked Heart Gift .

„Inquisitor? What does that mean?”

Before the android could say anything, they heard a loud bang and then a strange, soul”piercing wail.

„Aha, so the barrier is down. So we're going to fight after all!„ Ireanis exclaimed with absolute joy.

She couldn't believe that she found herself in a reality like from the scary stories told around the campfire. I am the Head sorcerer of Mystacor! I I'm not made for fighting, only for governing and teaching the youth! I can't fight the living dead, ghosts and worse! Why couldn't it finally be calm and normal? She rubbed her forehead all sweaty, although she was cold. She looked at the silver-haired sorcerer, who seemed to be enjoying all this. What's worse, she seemed to be much more aware of the situation than she was. This made her feel even more helpless than before. It all felt like a very bad dream, from which she couldn't wake up. And she had to experience all this with Hordak, who unfortunately was much more competent in this situation than she was, and probably also felt good when Fighting.

She didn't like ruins either. Buildings weren't abandoned for someone to study them, or at least not for someone like her. She hadn't even prepared proper clothing, and she stumbled in a robe that was too long. It was good that she had taken warm long johns, though. When they were climbing the wide but also high stairs, she stumbled a little and would have fallen, but Hordak caught her with something and held her from falling.

„Leave me alone!„ she cried, tearing herself away from his grip.

„I wanted to help you because you would have fallen!„ he growled with irritation.

„Why would you do that?„ she said suspiciously.

„Because if something happened to you, the others would think I was guilty, just because I'm close to you. I'd rather lose my hand myself than let Catra have the satisfaction of proving to everyone once again that I'm not trustworthy... Because you probably won't believe that I've changed, apart from the fact that I'm grateful to your brother for defending me."

She wanted to say that of course she wouldn't believe it, but she hesitated, because she had the feeling that the former ruler of the Horde expected such an answer from her, just as she expected him to betray them. It was hard to say why, but she felt bad about it.

„Lovebirds, it's great that you like each other and want to go on a date, but now is not the time, we just have to run away quickly, because remember, bites, diseases, changing into monsters.„ the sorceress called as she passed them, winked at them, cast some spell behind her, and then ran away. They looked at her for a moment, not sure how to react, and then Hordak said.

"I think she often says absurd and senseless things, so it would be better if we learned to ignore them."

She stated that she completely agreed with him on this point.

At last they came to a great hall with a high column in the center. The walls bristled with a bright light, along with grooves and inscriptions in that mysterious language of the first. The floor was covered with numerous perpendicular holes, with a match wide and two long, which led to the abyss. In fact, the path running through the center of the room was a bridge, leading to a raised platform located in the center around the column. Behind it, on the opposite wall, were gates, Unfortunately, they were closed.

„There's an exit there. Unfortunately, I can't activate it because it seems to have been damaged, unless I somehow manage to bypass the security systems, but I'm not sure how. Just in case, it was designed so that the AI can't bypass them. If it detects anything, it will activate the guards, and the same will happen if you make noise.„ Heart Gift said .

„Well, I must be careful.„ Tirin said, looking at herself in her heavy Boots.”

„Don't worry, they're not very scary. Just a little.„ the strange Girl, patted the navigator hard on the back, so that she almost fell over. She wasn't sure what Heart Gift was. She had navy blue hair, and Azure skin, and her eyes were uniformly green. Well, maybe a dress, but I don't think she had much. Besides, not even shoes. She was probably Tirin's age, although it was hard to tell how old the girl was in this strange suit. The presence of the descendant of artificial intelligence and the previous She-Ra worried her, although she wasn't sure why. Maybe because she had heard what one of her mother was planning to do. Did this person also want to do something similar to them... to them and all the inhabitants of Etheria?

Her brother nodded, and gave a sign, and they followed him out. Next to him walked the queen, suspiciously looking at the symbol on the wall, did she recognize it? Did she say anything? Supposedly she had gathered a great deal of knowledge about the culture of the first, after all she was one of the longest-living people on the planet. Unfortunately, most of her knowledge was lost with her, as she did not keep journals in a language known to the rest of the planet's inhabitants. Supposedly, Glimmer had seen similar writings on Eridania, where it was used by the local priests, but from what she knew her niece had never been eager to look through her mother's notes. Oh well, now that it turned out the queen was alive... I guess it wouldn't be necessary?

Behind her walked both girls and small furry creature, then she and the silverhaired Sorceress, and finally Hordak. The bridge they were walking on was quite wide, so she shouldn't be afraid of falling. Besides, she was the chief sorcerer of Mystacor , which was a flying island after all! She shouldn't be afraid of heights, right? But the abysses stretching out on the sides filled her with an inexplicable fear. It was different with the scatterbrained Saihe, who leaned over one of the precipices, and began to lose her balance, and only thanks to Hordak catching her, she avoided falling in a darkness.

„You're lucky I'm Entrapta's husband, and I'm used to protecting someone who pays no attention to his own safety.

The silver-haired girl looked at him in surprise.

„Entrapta? Strange name...„ she said, scratching her head.

„She has long purple hair that she can manipulate, she talks a lot mainly about technology, apparently she is Castle Crypto , don't you remember her?„ asked her the former ruler of the Horde, and Ireanis began to think for a moment, until she finally said.

„I think I met someone like that, but I was sure it was a cleaning lady or someone like that, because she was always getting into all those ventilation shafts or whatever you call it.”

Hordak looked at her for a moment, unsure of what to say, then sighed.

„If I hadn't seen my wife forget that she has a child, I would have thought that you were trying to deceive me with the fact that Entrapta is at the rebel headquarters.„ he said with resignation.

It was then that they began to approach the column, and Hear Gift said.

„This is one of the IT nodes that allowed us to manage this part of the infrastructure. I will try to hack it, but if I fail, you must be ready...„ she did not have time to finish because then another flying head flew inside. At this sight, she jumped forward with a scream and stumbled, almost falling out of the abyss, but then Hordak grabbed her and, holding her by the lapels of his robes, dragged her to the center of the room. In the meantime, Ireanis cast spell, thanks to which a small Fire projectile shot out of her hand, setting the creature on fire, which began to hit the walls, scattering pieces of burning meat, until Angela finally threw it off with a projectile from her hand. There was silence for a moment, and then they heard scratching sounds coming from the abyss on the sides. Creatures similar to whirligigs, with very long jaws resembling razors, began to climb onto the bridge. Worse still, the sound of undead footsteps began to come from the hallway behind them, appearing at the entrance. They all pushed her back, as if they knew she wouldn't be much use in a fight, so she curled up next to Heart Gift , and watched as the others fought for their lives.

Well, he didn't hide the fact that fighting was something he was born to do, very literally. For this reason, he felt quite good at the moment, facing countless enemies. And the fact that these were mindless and monstrous opponents, whose destruction no one would blame him for, only encouraged him to fight. Creatures with long claws and teeth jumped for him, but he put on a helmet, and then no part of his body was exposed to bites. He trampled mechanical insects with his feet, and other opponents were struck down with shots from his blaster. He smiled under his msk. Maybe in this way he would gain at least a little respect from his companions, and also get closer to making amends for his actions. The others also joined the fight. The girl in this strange armor transformed the armor of her arms into two long whips, with which she struck the nearest creatures and machines, and Micah threw a stream of flame along destroying both machines and living dead, an idiotic oxymoron! This Tonado, despite his size, bravely attacked the enemies, cutting off their limbs with his sabers. The Queen threw a projectile that pushed one of these Ghouls into the abyss, along with the machine that held him, because the opponents began to fight among themselves, which was not really strange, after all, the bots of the First Ones were supposed to guard the complex from all intruders, including these dead creatures

Unfortunately, more and more enemies were coming, more Vargouils flew in , trying to bite them, and although he wasn't sure how much he could trust the word of this absurd Sorceress, he was certain that a bite from such a creature couldn't end well. He and Angela somehow managed to deal with them, systematically shooting them off when they got too close, but then the shadows arrived. To his surprise, and also the horror of the robots, nor the blows of his armored fists were able to harm them , in fact they passed through them. He saw that one of the shadows touched the girl in the unusual armored suit, and she staggered, as if she had lost her strength. If Shadow Weaver was able to control such creatures all the time, then she must have been able to remove it during her reign in the Fright Zone... It wasn't a pleasant thought. Seeing this, the queen pressed a projectile that incinerated the shadow, then she raised her hand and screamed.

"Look away!„ And then a bright light flashed. and some of them that were closest to them were scattered, and the rest ran away. It took a few seconds for him to regain his vision, so, like the others, he retreated to the Middle platform, so now it was mostly those dead creatures and machines fighting among themselves, they had some time to breathe.

"I can't hack it, it says I lost my permissions as a rogue AI!" Heart Gift exclaimed . This girl didn't make him as anxious as she did to Micah and his sister, but she did bring back strange memories, knowledge he had gained through conditioning... Very disturbing knowledge, considering their situation.

„Keep trying, we have time, at least a little while longer, while those machines are busy with the undead. „ Micah said. But just as he finished, they heard heavy footsteps and a large dark shape began to approach them. It pressed through the door, and When they saw it, the silver"haired sorceress turned pale, and cried out.

It's Vanyvar ! Nightwing! Let's get the fuck out! „ the woman who hadn't shown any signs so far looked terrified, which meant they were in trouble.

"You better hurry up or we're all going to die." He growled irritably, and then Heart Gift called out.

„ I think I've removed the lock, but I've also turned off the power to the gate, it won't open on its own again. „ she sounded like she wanted to apologize to them.

„Maybe that's enough, try to give me some time, and maybe I'll manage to do something.„ he said and ran to the large gate, and then braced himself, and using all the strength he had in his armor, tried to open the gate. However, it didn't bring results, no matter how hard he tried, although he had the impression that if he had focused a little more, tensed his muscles a little more, he would have managed to open it. Then Heart Gift came up to him, grabbed the gate with her fingers , and also tried to open it. To his surprise, the Gate began to give way. For a moment he began to wonder how on Etheria such a small body could contain so much strength, as was contained in his extremely advanced technological armor, but then he remembered what he knew about similar beings, and he stopped being surprised after a while they managed to open the gate enough to pass through it.

„Quick! Follow me.„ shouted the comma and turned around. He saw what this creature was, which the strange sorceress was so afraid of, and he shuddered. The creature was large, resembling an emaciated hunanoid with a black and red body, covered as if with bone armor. He had long horns and huge wings made of shadowy ribbons. He was surrounded by a swarm of bots, but he destroyed them one by one. However, the others quickly ran to the other side, and then he and Heart Gift . They quickly began to close them, but then this monster jumped at them, and he felt how the unspeakable cold began to penetrate through his body. He felt an indescribable weakness, one he had never experienced since his wife had cured him of his genetic flaw.. However, they managed to close the gate, and then he exclaimed.

„Try turning on the lock!„ These words were directed at Heart Gift , who blinked twice and said.

„Done!”

Then he pulled her away from the door and began to look around the room.

„I think I've been here before... „ He stated with surprise. You found yourself in a large room, with smooth walls covered in paintings. They were a bit neglected, but he was still able to easily recognize the images of scorpions...

"I've heard of this place. It's the hall of triumph. Supposedly this is where every scorpion lord hung out, before Scorpia of course ." Micah said. "She chose the hall of terror, probably none of her mothers ever showed her that, and neither did Shadow Weaver."

„Shadow Weaver has never been here. Or at least, she didn't show much interest in this place.„ He turned around, and saw that the gate was completely invisible on this side. It was ironic that the Dark Sorceress had the entrance to the first complex, full of mysteries and secrets, right under her nose, but she never explored it. „She didn't like the Scorpion culture. It reminded her too much of her homeland or something. I was happy about that, because this place reminded me well... I always respected scorpions. „ he said, sinking into memories.

„ That didn't stop you from trapping most of the scorpions, though. Shortly after Scorpia's mothers died.„ Castaspella said accusingly. He bowed his head, feeling the weight of guilt sinking in again

"It was after the second uprising... I could do it, or I could be imprisoned and then most likely executed," he explained quietly. The others looked around the room for a moment, then Micah asked.

„Why were you brought here? No one outside the ruling family of the Scorpions and other important figures in the state has ever been brought here.

He smiled grimly and said.

„ This is where the Scorpion King swore allegiance to Horde Prime, in return for which I swore to give him all of Etheria.”

Rehiza came to the conclusion that in her not-so-long life she had made a surprisingly large number of serious mistakes. The first was of course joining the expedition during which she had lost her sight. The second was undoubtedly accepting this mission, thanks to which she had found herself on this planet forgotten by the gods, which was also one of the most important places in the known universe only thanks to the sadistic wit of the dark powers. The third was trusting this monster in the body of a beautiful aristocrat, although the simple mercenary had seen through her almost immediately. The fourth was trying to oppose The Great Old One without the proper personnel and equipment, only with the support of a group of princesses, although each of them probably had the strength of an infantry division, so it wasn't completely idiotic. There was also trusting the Lord Admiral and ignoring the truth about him, although that was a minor mistake, because there was not much she could do about it anyway... Now she wondered if working with her new allies wasn't another...

Kane Adamson was a terrifying man. He did not resemble in the slightest the anecdotal Aristocrat from his planet who, fighting in the underground, demanded a break because it was five o'clock and he had to drink tea with a little milk. Kane didn't look like someone who ruled a planet practically devoid of a proper Army either. He was more like a mercenary commander ready to overthrow a democratically elected government for a price without even blinking with that cold eye of a murderer. She had even told him about it, and in response he had smiled and said that he hadn't commanded mercenaries for ages, and she had the impression that the statement "for ages" wasn't just a phrase. She had no idea why he had come here, leaving the world he ruled, and she was a little afraid to ask him... Perhaps he would have answered her politely, but she had the feeling that she wouldn't like his answer. He stated, however, that he had already been there, which raised the question of how he could have ended up on a planet that had only returned to the galaxy a few years ago after spending thousands of years in a pocket dimension.. The simplest answer was that he had arrived here before the planet was cut off from the rest of the universe, which made Kane someone who was older than some gods…

His companions were little better than the archduke. When they stopped at a village that was on the way to where they were going, she felt a wave of power that hit from Brightmoon . She felt the evil radiating from it... Someone had done something terrible, performed a dark, incredibly powerful ritual that tore the very fabric of reality apart and summoned a being whose power and wickedness was beyond all imagination. She felt sick from the dark power that radiated from the capital. She vomited on the floor of the inn they were staying at, although fortunately there were not many guests in the main hall, because many of the queen's subjects were staying in Brightmoon , and the roads were empty. Arkan-tar asked her anxiously what had happened, but she did not want to talk about these matters in public, so she quickly helped clean up the mess she had made, and then went with the others to the room where they were staying. Dilayla was looking through her gear, clearly dissatisfied with its condition, Dr. Quinn was dozing off and the Archduke was leafing through a thick old book. She glanced anxiously at the title, but it turned out to be a study of elven painting from Latroxia. If she had antennae, they would have quivered with surprise. This man did not look like an art lover at all, although from the way he spoke, one could see in him someone educated and highly cultured. In a way, that made him even more disturbing.

„I suppose you want to talk about what you sensed. It is indeed an interesting disturbance in the flow of power, which does not happen very often, especially in a place where it would seem that this type of Magic should not be very common. However, when we think about it more deeply, and recall the recent events related to the arrival of one of these younger brothers of Chaugnar Faugn, we come to the obvious conclusion that Appearances can be very deceptive. You, of course, should have learned this lesson long ago, in many different ways. What is much more interesting is what has been recalled here. To my knowledge, a takeover ritual was performed here that is practically unknown in most of the Galaxy.. I myself have only heard rumors of it, and its low popularity is related to the price that must be paid for the power it offers. There is a high probability that the person who performed it will die soon, and in an extremely unpleasant way. There is also a small chance that the Warlock survived, which means they will pose an extraordinary threat to everyone. But that is none of our business anyway.„ Kane explained and went back to reading, as if nothing unusual had happened. Well, maybe in the case of someone like that, it really wasn't anything unusual. Not wanting to go downstairs, where she would probably be ashamed of her recent weakness, she went into the living room, waiting until she could go to sleep. Tomorrow they had a long journey, so they would leave the capital, although perhaps she should go back there to oppose that evil. But it was probably too late. For some time she read a book, some surprisingly good crime story, taking place in an abandoned hotel on a lonely island. Then Arkan-tar turned on the radio, and then they heard the announcement. It said that two prisoners had escaped. Among them was Shadow Weaver herself, as well as an aristocrat from a distant world called Lady Cala, and they were accompanied by a sorceress of unknown origin, and also a horse-like monster walking around. Verthani laughed shortly and said.

„Well, I have to admit that the incoming former companions are doing quite well, although I hope they won't be in the mood for a third round.„ He laughed again, and Dilayla cursed under her breath, then said furiously.

„I'm going to inform the others, in case that blonde bitch wants to finish what she started. „ And she went downstairs to Huntara and Tung Lashor. The Orc Warrior and the Lizard Gangster had decided to accompany them, though she wasn't sure why, but in the current situation she didn't complain about the extra support, after all, someone who could cover your back would always come in handy. She was worried that Lady Cala might seek revenge on them. The aristocrat was a deadly threat in her own right, and with the help of such a powerful sorcerer as Shadow Weaver, she was ten times more dangerous. She wasn't sure what allies she had either She already knew that there were cultists on this planet, so there were probably creatures from the darkness between the stars as well. Of course, they had the support of someone like Archduke Kane Adamson, and he was a man who certainly knew how to destroy even such a vile monster as the aristocrat from Carurrystal... But he himself gave the impression of someone just as terrifying. "I helped to murder the original inhabitants of this planet." she recalled his words. It sounded almost like a joke. But the Archduke didn't seem like someone who would tell jokes, even ones that were tasteless. She wanted to believe that it was just a metaphor, or an exaggeration, and something deep in her heart told her that in this case Kane was being completely sincere, so if that was true, then they were traveling with a monster worse than any she had ever fought. And older ones, so old and ancient that it was hard to comprehend. Perhaps then, it wasn't she who should fear the aristocrat and the dark sorceress, but they who should fear the Archduke with the cold eyes.

She woke up suddenly, having fallen asleep in an armchair while Arkan-tar was looking through the same book she had just been reading. She wasn't sure what had woken her up, but she had the feeling that something bad was coming. The scholar noticed her reaction and stood up, looking at her questioningly , and she nodded in confirmation. Kane, however, seemed unfazed, calmly studying maps of the planet, and making corrections. When he noticed that they were both worried, he said.

„It will be my friend soon, maybe you managed to sense his presence. „ he didn't even look up from the maps. „Please open the window, because he will probably want to get here this way.”

With some hesitation she did as he told her, and then a large black raven flew inside. She jumped away from him, mentally preparing to cast a spell, and Verthani reached for his weapon. Dilayla clenched her steel fists, ready to beat her potential opponent to death. After a moment, he transformed into a tall pale man, in a black coat with a top hat on his head, and mirrored glasses on his nose. Even after changing into a human, his features had something birdlike about them. When he saw them, he bowed to them and said.

"Hello! Nice to meet you, I'm Doctor Sidonius.„ He said smiling at them with a bit of superiority, and hearing his name Dilayla tensed up, and looked at him with hostility. The man noticed this and raised an eyebrow and asked.

„Do we know each other?"

"I've heard about you, and the things you've done. Bina told me who was responsible for sending that girl here... Catra... I've heard a bit about what happened to her here. And what kind of bastard would test a teleportation device on a child!" The Warrior stepped ahead, clenching her cybernetic fists as if she was barely holding herself back from punching the guy. The Doctor looked at her coldly, then said

„From what I understand, you're a mercenary, so someone like you shouldn't make any reproaches. After all, you serve the highest bidder. From what I understand, your service for this mission was paid for by none other than Lord Admiral Antares himself, right?"

Dilayla gritted her teeth and was about to say something, but then Kane interrupted.

„You are very unfair in your judgment of our companion, and those who practice her profession. Like her, they have every right to feel disgust for people like us, although of course, compared to me, you are a noble and righteous person like a Paladin.„ his voice was as if slightly bored, and Doctor Sidonius snorted Shortly, and the mercenary said.

„I'm going to our companions, I'd rather not stay in one place with someone like him, longer than necessary. Rechiiza, Quin and Verthani will surely pass on to me everything that was agreed here, and I doubt you would take my opinion into account, as well as the opinion of their companions. - she looked at them, smiling mockingly and went downstairs.„ she looked at them, smiling mockingly and went downstairs.

„Now that we have the pleasant welcome behind us, it would be appropriate to talk about our future „ We're going back to the Singing Jungle, there are some things we need to do. I think our goals are pretty clear. We still have a way to get our memories back, and find out the plans of those who took them there. From what I know, Captain Blazebringer should be nearby, maybe he's already within our reach..„ said Kane with impatience, as he explained something very obvious.

„I apologize, but I am not sure if I heard you correctly, Archduke.„ Arkan-tar asked, adjusting his glasses. „As I understand it, you are working with this extremely mysterious captain, whose existence is generally questioned. In that case, I would like to know how you met, and what his intentions are for the planet on which we happen to find ourselves.„ Verthani's usually ingratiating voice was audible with irritation. The Archduke looked at him, raising one eyebrow, as if he was merely curious, and said.

„Captain Blazebringer has no hostile intentions towards this planet. Not long ago I would have said that its destruction would be no problem for him, but now I'm not so sure. His goal is a completely different place...„ When he finished, Doctor Sidonius spoke up.

"He wants to find Eternia and….well, solve the problem of the Firsts Ones once and for all, because I have reason to believe that their intentions towards the rest of the Galaxy are not very good. „ He looked at them all triumphantly, and Arkan-tar tilted his head back, and sighed heavily, but before he could say anything, Dr. Quin spoke up.

"I'm in," she said simply, as if what their new guest had said was a question. After a moment, seeing the surprised looks directed at her, she explained.

„I witnessed the activation of the weapon that was on this planet, and I understand that it was the work of the First Ones, right?

Kane nodded and began to speak slowly and thoughtfully.

"In fact, this entire planet was weapon. It had been initiated into use twice, a little over five years ago. The first time by a certain artificial intelligence, and the second by a deranged tyrant," and he gave them a brief history of the conflict for this planet, as well as some facts about the heart of Etheria, and She-Ra, the demigoddess who had supposedly saved most of the Galaxy. She knew some of these facts, and guessed the rest, so she hadn't learned anything particularly new, but Dr. Quin had listened to the Archduke.

„If They tried to destroy us once, what they are doing now they will do it again... I was there when that weapon was activated, in the communication center... You don't understand what it was like. We were all sure that we would die, more than that, that we would be erased from reality. So if you want to stop them, then I will help you.„ Ysoki said. The Archduke nodded thoughtfully and looked at her.

„And you, a hunter of sorcerers and monsters. You lost your eyes and antennae because of one of the machines the First Ones created, right?. You studied Secrets, the meaning of which you did not even understand, and they decided to punish you for it. Now you serve the Order Of The Eclipse, which has sworn to fight threats to the existence of the entire Galaxy, and there is no doubt that the activation of the Heart was such a threat. And I assure you, this was not their last move. Over the millennia, they have created many plans, and now they are implementing them. If you stand on my side, you will not only take revenge on those who maimed you, but you will also fulfill your duty to those you serve. Consider my words carefully. Consider my words carefully.

You do not have to decide now, wait until they reach the Singing Jungle, there you will learn everything.„ said the aristocrat with the eyes of a murderer, and she thought for a moment before answering him.

"I agree now. Truth be told, I don't think I have any reason to go back to the order anyway, if I haven't noticed that I'm traveling with a monster and a dark sorcerer. Besides, I don't want to work with someone like the Lord Admiral. So since I have nothing to do with myself, I choose Revenge. It's always a good choice," she said, but then Verthani shook his head and said

„I'm just a scholar and researcher... A treasure hunter, or maybe more accurately a grave robber. „ he laughed and added. „It's not for me, all these ancient mysteries and secrets.... It's not for me, I'm not much use here anyway, so as far as I'm concerned, I'm leaving and taking no part in this endeavor.„ he said, staring at his feet, and laughed nervously.

„Maybe you should think it over, because we don't know everything yet. Come with us to the Singing Jungle, like Archduke said, and maybe then you'll change your mind.„ She said before she could bite her tongue. Why did she persuade him to do anything? If Arkan-tar wants to abandon them, it's his business, she shouldn't stand in his way! The scholar looked at her a bit surprised, smiled, which made her even angrier, and then said.

” Okay, I'll go there with you because I have no plans for the future anyway, and I'm sure they have good drinks there, and some place where you can lie in the sun... or rather the moonlight... sometimes that place is really strange.”

She felt a sense of relief that made her grit her teeth angrily, and then Dr. Sidonius pulled himself closer and said.

„That nervous mercenary is probably going too... well, it's my turn, I have to find some Shelter Before the dawn, because unfortunately I left Brightmoon in a hurry, and I had to leave my shelter... so I have to be careful, luckily I have a spare coffin in the capital of these local Lashunti . „ he said and changed into a Raven, And then flew outside.

„Did I understand what he said correctly? He's... a vampire?„ she said in disbelief.

„Apparently. At least he's educated... As for me, I have to go to bed. We're probably getting up in the morning, and I'm tired, because out of all of you, I work the hardest, and with the most important part of my body, the Brain.„ Dr. Quin said , and then Kane added.

„ I've always found being a vampire limiting. Well, technological advances and changing lifestyles have allowed for the disadvantages of a vampire existence to be limited, but I still think there are better ways to test eternity. „ and he went back to studying the map.

She felt a little too old for this kind of thing. Extraordinary people, from distant worlds. Terrifying statues worshipped by some fucked up Bandits who wanted to sacrifice people. A man who looked like he was the son of death itself was working with them, searching for some Great Ancient Secret. Shadow Weaver had returned and brought Catra's sister with her, and as it turned out, the father of both girls had flown in with warfleet, although from what she had noticed, he wasn't very well-liked by her current companions. A quite pretty girl who had transformed into a monster before her eyes, still quite attractive. But the strangest thing of all was that Tung Lashor turned out to be hiding a big secret, and what was worse, he wasn't talking as absurdly as he used to, or maybe now what he was saying simply sounded more sensible, because she understood more. Either way, the world was changing faster and faster, and it was harder for her old legs to keep up with everything.

She stopped at a shelter on the outskirts of the village where they decided to spend some time before continuing on their journey.

She took three of her subordinates with her, two brothers, from a people who called themselves the fearful. They were called the Strag brothers , and after their last, very painful encounter with Bina's red-haired ward, they had decided to stop sniffing the underground fumes, so she decided they would accompany her. She also took a scorpion named Shelly, who had deserted the Horde along with her. He disliked Scorpia, and her entire family, for betraying his people. He was a strong and incredibly loyal warrior, and she had a feeling that loyalty would be incredibly important to her now. Tung Lashor had only taken with him the Kablod, who looked at everything with great reserve, and the Great Lizard, even stupider than his commander, which was an astonishing feat. Goldeneyes had also come with her, who, when he folded his legs, hardly looked grotesque. He walked around the shelter, looking around with interest, as if there was something interesting here. There was only the floor with a few sleeping mats spread out, although she had to admit that it was warm and quite cozy. At least she would have a place to stretch her old, aching bones... The biggest question, however, was why she was here in the first place. She wasn't sure why she had set off on this adventure, but she had a feeling that the answer was as simple as it was sad. She didn't have many adventures left to experience, so maybe she would go on the last, the biggest, most amazing! And something told her that they were also with strange people, she would certainly have a lot of unusual experiences waiting for her.

"Hey, what's up?" the big woman with light blue hair called from the doorway.

„We're making a plan for Shadow Weaver's Revenge!„ Tung Lashor shouted.

„We're resting for tomorrow, some of you don't have as much energy as you kid.„ She said smiling at the newcomer, she motioned for her to sit next to her. The woman smiled back and sat down next to her.

„Quite nice here on Etheria. I've only been tried to be killed once in a week, which, believe me, proves that this is a pretty safe place.”

„It wasn't like this until recently, but I guess you already know about that, send it. I just hope it doesn't get worse.„ she said gloomily. The mercenary made a worried face, then said.

„Well, I won't lie to you, because you seem too smart for soothing talk. Your world has returned to the Galaxy, and now it has to deal with the problems that the entire universe is experiencing. I am a mercenary, and I have seen many dark sides of the universe. I have seen dictators, dark sorcerers, priests devoted to evil deities, and the machinations of greedy corporations. „ she added this last in a slightly quieter voice, looking at Tung Lashora . She frowned , and asked in a hushed voice as well.

„So he also worked for this corporation... for the Aspis consortium... What do you know about them?”

Dilayla grimaced and then said.

„I only worked for them once. I guarded a small port on a planet forgotten by devils and demons. At first I thought it was a good job, even if it was quite boring. They paid well, and I didn't really do anything. But something was bothering me. What was this port for, and what were we guarding here? And once a few other mercenaries came, but they looked like thugs from a dark star. It's a phraseological connection meaning really nasty bandits... They came, and started drinking by the fire. They ignored us as if we were night watchmen. Only then did I notice that they seemed to have returned from the battlefield, that they were celebrating a victory. I didn't know what they were doing there, but when one of them fell asleep I looked into his package, because he was drunk as hell, and I found a lot of jewelry there, including a medallion with picturest depicted a couple in love and then I found another similar medallion and I figured he must have stolen, Then I found out that a group of gem hunters had settled on this planet. According to the galactic law, if they lived there for ten years, the land they settled on would be theirs. But the consortium had its own plans, and they had to get rid of them. I had no evidence to accuse anyone, I didn't even know the identity of these mercenaries, and besides, I didn't want to risk a conflict with one of the most powerful companies in the galaxy.„ The woman with blue hair said gloomily, and then she took out her bags and a large bottle of Brightmoon wine, and took a long sip from the bottle. She looked at it carefully, then closed her eyes and said.

„It's just wonderful. This is what we still lacked... I hope they won't find out about our planet anytime soon.„ she said and rubbed her face with her hands. The mercenary patted her on the back and said.

"You'll deal with these bastards without a problem. You are a warlike people, I mean the inhabitants of Etheria, although your species is famous for its warlike nature... Or at least they used to be ... because now...„ she pondered.

"What do you mean they were like that?" She didn't know much about her people, she was too young to remember everything when the Horde came, and on top of that, her peoplee had already forgotten a lot by then. She remembered that short redhead girl who had told her she was an orc. She had never heard that name before, and it seemed like something universally common . Dilayla sighed heavily, and then spoke thoughtfully, as if trying to remember what she knew.

„In ancient times, orcs are said to have been one of the most feared Species.. Supposedly they come from the lost Golarion, where humans or elves also come from, and I am a Half-Blood Elf, or as you call them here Saihe ... although it is more complicated... Returning to orcs, your ancestors were Warlike, to the point that they were considered to have war in their blood... I know little about them, to tell the truth, but I know who I will face. The drow enslaved them, made them their own army and servants. The drow are elves tainted with demonic essence, often, but not always, with hearts plagued by darkness. They live, for on a planet called Apostate... It's a very mysterious place, apparently the entire planet is a huge armory left by an older and mysterious Civilization... Damn, It's a bit like what they said about this place... Your compatriots finally gained partial freedom, at least some of them, but most still serve their masters, only sometimes they get paid for it. They... They are often trained from childhood to serve their Masters. They are conditioned to be perfect servants and soldiers, even those who are not slaves. In a way, they are like those Unfortunate clones, but their enslavement concerns even their souls...„ the mercenary finished and a gloomy silence fell.

She drank after listening to the woman's words. The words didn't hurt her immediately, but she felt that they were settling the fire in her heart. She had sacrificed much to free herself from the tyranny of the Horde, and she considered its fall one of the greatest events of her life, and now she realized that it actually meant nothing. Others could boast that they had defeated a mad galactic tyrant, and freed the universe, or at least a significant part of it, from his rule. Now, however, she learned that her people were Enslaved, and no one was going to free them. It was too new and shocking news for her to feel a burning Anger, but she could see that she would soon begin to feel rage. Only, it was more of an empty, pointless rage, at beings she had never even met. She had never even left her planet, she couldn't even imagine the vastness of the universe. Even that fool Tung Lashor understood the Universe they lived in better than she, who had always perceived herself as someone who saw everything that was needed in life. Now it turned out that she didn't know anything ... She didn't even know the history of her people, or even her language. She rubbed her forehead, and understood that this expedition would not be just in search of new adventures. Perhaps it would be the beginning of something bigger, the beginning of her own history. She might have been a legend of the Crimson Wastes, but she understood that now she should become something more...

In the morning they set off on their journey towards the Singing Jungle. Whatever he said, the name sounded quite promising.

Even if he didn't feel like continuing this expedition, he might find some work there, and rest for a while after all this. He reckoned with the fact that in his life he would meet the undead, he might become a victim of ancient curses, he might be killed by cunningly designed traps. He didn't mind it. He liked even participating in the local political games, in a way it was quite funny. But participating in the intrigues of immortals? Conspiracies on a galactic scale? Monsters, both literal and those in mortal bodies, hunting for his life, was definitely too much. He knew that abandoning this expedition was the right thing to do. So why did he feel guilty? He had worked for Doktor Sidonius from the beginning, so there was no need to say that he had ever been loyal to Antares , or anyone else. He had always served himself first and foremost, and worked for those who could provide him with a comfortable and somewhat interesting life. That hadn't changed, but... something had changed. He had brushed against death, and not once, in recent months, but that wasn't the point. It wasn't the fact that his life was in danger that made him start looking at his life differently. That had happened to him before. This time, however, he looked into the eyes of true evil. And many times. He saw it in the cold and amused eyes of Lady Cala, in the cool gaze of the Lord Admiral, in the somewhat cruel gaze of Lady Ka, and even in the stony eyes of Horde Prime. He understood that the world was no longer just a joke, a big joke that you could laugh at while sipping a glass of wine. His choices mattered, and not just to him but to everyone around him. He began to participate in a game, the outcome of which could decide the fate of millions, maybe even billions of beings. That's why he knew he couldn't just abandon this mission, though on the other hand he wasn't sure if working with someone like Archduke Kane was the best idea.

There was another reason he didn't want to leave these people. For the first time in his life, he began to feel something that could be called friendship. For both the tough mercenary and the conceid doctor, he felt something more than simple sympathy. And as for Rechiiza ... He wasn't sure what he felt for her. This woman had seemed cold and closed in on herself from the beginning.

There was bitterness in her, although between gods and truth, most of his traveling companions hid sadness and unhealed wounds... She was strong, and stuck to her ideals, while he... Well, he only thought about his own pleasure and the money he would earn after this expedition. Both of them, through their loyalty, allowed evil to triumph. But she knew that she had to make amends for what her silence had led to. All of them, except perhaps Dilayla, ignored the obvious signals, although even the mercenary did nothing to oppose Lady Cala and Shadow Weaver. However, the pervert had a strength in her that made her ready for her mistakes. And there was something about her that made her want to see him as more than just a learned sly one, a treasure hunter who only wanted riches and applause. But why was this woman's opinion so important to him? He didn't want to think about it. Because the conclusion... Well, it wasn't something bad. But... a relationship with someone like him was unthinkable, for so many years he had always been alone, only having short affairs with people of both sexes. But a longer relationship? This was something new and unknown. Something terrifying.

They were approaching the capital of the singing jungle, a place that must have been rebuilt after the war, because the mad tyrant had almost completely destroyed it. It was called Eternalsong , and it was surprisingly Picturesque, and most of its inhabitants were the strange Winged Lashunta. The sight of them made Rechiza lower her eyes glumly, then pull her hood up.

It turned out that this time an official welcome awaited them. Princess Sweet Bee's Seneschal was waiting for them in formal attire, a robe of transparent silk arranged in many multi-colored layers that interpenetrated each other. He wore a wreath of flowers on his head that looked as if they were made of crystal, and then he led them to a small palace, which in this place, where most of the buildings had been destroyed by the war, was quite a luxury. It was evening, and the darker moons were shining outside the window. The four of them, the archduke and the doctor, as well as Huntara and Tung Lashor were invited to the grand salon. Inside, the two remaining members of Archduke Kane's retinue were waiting for them . One was a tall, fair-skinned girl with almond eyes and light brown hair. She was quite pretty, though she had a strange Aura about her. The other was an automaton from the Lost Golarion, a truly extraordinary sight, though he was probably the only one who could appreciate its uniqueness.

„This is my daughter Sari... „ said Doctor Sidonius. The girl smiled, a little wider than she had to, revealing clearly too long fangs. There was nothing different about the vampire's daughter being a Dhampir , but she was also half-elf . He had heard that her mother had died in some experiment with a teleportation device , and now a few facts fell into place. The girl offered him her hand, which he kissed, making Dilayla roll her eyes, and Rechiza gave him a piercing look from her metal eyes.

„Oh how good to meet you, is it true that you traveled with Eti?„ the Vampire's Daughter asked directly.

„Yes, we were together on the same ship for a while, although we weren't very close. She was a very reserved girl, and it was only here that I found out she was related to Kim.„ he replied, smiling friendly, and then Sari added.

„She's a very nice person, if you only get to know her, and we got to know each other quite well... „ She winked significantly, and he immediately felt Rechiza calm down. Well , he wasn't going to hit on her anyway.

„And I'm Prince Zed. Please sit down.„ He pointed to the chairs. Everyone sat down, although Lashor had some trouble because of his tail. When quite a few of them were left alone, Prince Zed turned to Dilayla in an apologetic tone .

„I'm sorry for everything that happened to your planet.”

„It's probably not your fault, you don't look like one of the clones, and besides, even they weren't entirely to blame.”

A sad smile appeared on the artificial automaton's face and he said.

„Unfortunately, I am responsible for all of this, if only indirectly. I am the created son-clone of Horde Prime ...”

When he said this, all, the mercenary , the lizard, and the orc warrior jumped to their feet and reached for their weapons, as did the archduke, though Rather he wanted to defend the automaton.

„I understand your reaction, since my father was not a person… Well he was a deranged psychopath responsible for the deaths of billions of lives, so it is understandable that you suspect that I may be a person of a similar nature. Fortunately, you need not worry, since I have little in common with my father.„ Zed explained, trying to sound reassuring. Unexpectedly, the witchwarper supported him, stating.

„What I've heard about him is that for a thousand years, and certainly since the Gap, he's been a local tourist attraction, nothing more. Perhaps he harbors a dark spirit in that artificial body, but I have no reason to suspect that.:

Automaton Bowed to Lashunti in thanks, then said.

„Thank you for your support, I am very proud that my Duchy can boast such a monument as me! You can't even imagine how much they earned thanks to people who wanted to talk to me. However, I am lying to them a bit, because only a part of my story, and a relatively small one at that, concerns ancient Golarion. Moreover, technically I am not an automaton, although one of them once lent me his body, for which I am extremely grateful. My Lord, the so-called father, because I would have created me as one of his many simulacra , was also born on the lost Golarion. However, due to his mistakes and the fact that he messed with too powerful beings, he had to leave this planet. He was a master of Planar magic, thanks to which he managed to get somewhere very far away. In the dark void he met exiles from a certain planet... Ashenzee. Thanks to his power, he was able to convince them to accept him as one of their own, and by extension me. For some time they exchanged knowledge, and each other was corrupted... All were proud beyond measure, but my father and Creator was the most powerful, and the most cunning. He quickly became their leader, and then persuaded it to return to their world. Thanks to the combined knowledge of both of them, they became powerful as Gods, At least for the inhabitants of their world... They began to worship us like gods, but unfortunately, this caused a foil. There were guardians of the galaxy, who could not tolerate something like this. A single man can claim to be God, if I work long enough, maybe he will become one, but an entire group of beings? This could not be accepted. The world was destroyed, but my father annd Creator foresaw this, so he prepared an escape route. For some time we tried to distance ourselves from that planet, but then we believed our selves in an artificial dimension. Our Creator was a master of creating artificial flowers... We waited there for eons... Contrary to appearances, not so long, because we were found by another proud and ruthless race, who desired more power and might... They awakened us and gave us new material bodies. My father-creator became their advisor and warned them against those who destroyed Ashenzee. However, they already knew them, although they initially perceived them as allies, or rather patrons, thanks to whom they managed to destroy the Bloodstones, created by the ancient civilization of the Krellans. They were crystalline computers, extremely powerful, but also hungry for the life energy of other beings, at one time they were a greater threat to the Galaxy than the Swarm is today.„ Prince Zed said, and then Kane added.

„In fact, they were dangerous, but also cunning. The First Ones, because as you can guess, we're talking about them here, they encountered one of them on their home planet, and defeated him, and then their patrons shared their knowledge with them... And they developed it. I encountered one and... I became his champion, chosen one or maybe Avatar, but when I understood that... he wanted to make me his servant... Many years later I started working with the First Ones and I think, because unfortunately due to the Gap, I don't remember everything, I became their very important scholar, mainly because of my knowledge of the Elder races... and not only. The Archduke was finishing and then the automaton returned to continue his lecture.”

„Yes, my master became a good advisor, and he understood the first ones very well... Their arrogance, and aversion to magic practiced by ordinary people, made their cooperation work out exceptionally well. However, then the First Ones began to arouse suspicion of their former patrons. The ancient civilization living on Elder Pharos. I managed to convince everyone to create a new body for me, and some time later I managed to escape. My father-creator convinced his new allies to give him more and more power, and then through his influence he encouraged them to war against their former patrons. He counted on taking control over them, and also to take revenge on those who took Ashenzee from him. However, the first ones were not so stupid, although they got into a war that they could not win at first glance, they had many weapons, even a few. One of them was this planet... With its help, they destroyed the home world, the only world inhabited by their patrons, But unfortunately, as you have probably heard, they lost control over it, Just like over the second planet, where they were creating a project of a certain biological weapon... But They managed to create another weapon... An invincible army...they were manipulated and took terrible revenge. They cut his mind and self, burned his memory and created this pathetic creature, What does it mean as Horde Prime… They lost the war, according to their enemies, and as well as with the rebel colonies, and hid somewhere… No one knows where… But Revenge belonged to them. They destroyed the rebels, and their former patrons died out long ago, but the world was changing. It is not easy to regain former power, just like conquering the universe. You see, they wanted to cleanse the universe of intelligent life that was not of their kind… And they still want to, I assure you…” The automaton finished and the entire room fell silent. His companions knew some of the story, and the rest of what they had heard filled in on what they already knew, but Huntara and Tung Lashor … They were clearly shocked by what they heard, and there was nothing surprising about it.

"So Lady Cala and this Dark sorcerer are servants of the First Ones?" Rechiza asked, but Kane just laughed.

„Oh no... They serve much older beings, as old as the universe itself. What's more, I suspect we share common goals and common enemies, though Slightly different in the ways we seek to achieve them... Slightly...”

„But what's that to us? You're an ancient and immortal scientist, and Dr. Sidonius is an ancient vampire, and Prince Zed... I have no idea who he is... What can we do?”

Kane smiled and said.

„The future of this world has always been decided not by Immortals, Gods, and the Great Old Ones, but by ordinary mortals. You are needed and I believe that you will help us. You still have a few days to think about it, and if you change your mind, I will leave you enough money, so that you can lead a prosperous life, although it may last much shorter if we do not succeed...”

"I'd like to ask you one more thing!" Dr. Quin exclaimed, the least moved of them all by the story she had just heard. "What was Horde Prime's original name?"

„Syndara. His name was Syndara.”

Chapter End Notes

You've been waiting for this chapter for a long time. Yes, Horde Prime is Syndara from the Ruby Phoenix Tournament.

She was sitting, or rather half lying on the seat of the antigravity vehicle, with her eyes closed, thinking about her Past, although some would probably suggest that she should focus on the future. However, it was clear and obvious to her. She saw what would happen to her in the next few hours, and she accepted her fate. It brought surprising relief, even though she was now returning to the place she had sworn to herself never to visit again. She was also going to meet a woman she hated with all her heart... Although, to be honest, Hate was not the right term. She spent most of her life away from her, not really thinking about her. Her mother was a stranger to her. She was like a character from a fairy tale that you were afraid of as a child. And yet still... And yet, despite herself, she still felt fear. Not that she could do something to her, but something terribly undefined. She couldn't specify these fears... Catra would probably find it as funny as it was pathetic. She, the Great and Dark sorcerer, the one who ruled the largest Empire on the planet at one time, whose wrath thousands feared, was afraid of meeting her own mother. Indeed, there was something pathetic in it. However, it must be admitted that her mother In her youth was an extremely dangerous woman, ruthlessly getting rid of enemies. Was she now one of them? Well, her family always Lived in the name of the motto, this is not with us, this is against us

Stormheart watched her warily, trying not to take her eyes off her. Because of this, her sister barely slept, and ate and drank only what was brought to her. When she went, she ordered her guards to watch her, and relieved herself as quickly as possible. It was a bit funny, but she still felt sorry for her. And she also understood her. She had reason to distrust her, because of what she had done so far, and what she was about to do. Unfortunately, Stormheart had no right to know about the latter .

At last the captain of their craft called out that they were there. She straightened her back and went to the upper deck, and the storm keeper followed her

She saw the capital of her country, Shadepoint. At the sight, she sucked in a breath. Shadepoint was the largest port on the Isles of Sorrow, and also the most magnificent. Her Clan's fleet was stationed here, a great source of pride for her family. Every year, ships arrived here, from all the islands of this Archipelago, and once from the Scorpion Kingdom. She guessed that trade had collapsed after the outbreak of the war, but she was not prepared for what she saw.

The entire coast was covered in wrecks of ships, mostly warships made of the dark wood her nation was famous for. They had probably been lying there for years. She guessed who had sunk them, because who else could have done it? Horde Prme did not tolerate resistance, and would mete out ruthless punishment to those who opposed him. The city suffered massive damage, the entire Workers' and commercial districts were destroyed. They tried to rebuild it, but she could see it was going slowly. Most of the residents had to squeeze into containers converted into apartments , Or tents. Most of the workshops were rebuilt, however, their goods were too valuable to be forgotten. She wondered now, How much the clans had opened up to the outside world. They had the embassy in Brightmoon, and perhaps they would continue to have it, What about the other kingdoms? She knew that goods from her country, especially luxury items, had always been highly valued, so that explained where the containers had come from, and also why they had been so quick to rebuild the workshops.

However, the palaces of the great families, temples and gardens remained intact.. Even after all these years, she had to admit they were beautiful, in their own darkly majestic way. She guessed they had only survived because Horde Prime had deemed them too beautiful to simply destroy, though she suspected the temple had been remodeled in his style, but no expense had been spared to restore it to its former state. The waterfront was still pretty much destroyed, so the fact that they had antigrav vehicles helped me a lot. She guessed that rebuilding the port was now a priority for her mother and the entire Clan, but she also knew that by sticking to the old ways, they would have no chance of rebuilding all what they had lost. That was probably why they had started playing this strange game with People's Rebellion, although it would have been much easier to simply open the border to the rest of Ettheria, and even the universe, but her people had never been guided by what was easiest. Sometimes such stubbornness was a source of pride, but not in their case. Through their pride, fear, and xenophobia, they only deepened the suffering of their subjects. But there was nothing she could do about it… Or was she?

A delegation from the palace was already waiting for them. The armor of the Clan Guard, they were not as heavy and durable as the armor of the Storm Riders, but they were much more expensive and intricately made. She did not recognize their commander, he looked like a young son of clan probably born after she had left the islands. He looked at her with a mixture of uncertainty and disgust. She wondered if he had been promoted only now, because her mother had sent the least promising officer here, in case her Prodigal daughter decided that she would not go to meet her mother. She smiled and wrapped herself in the cloak of Shadow, and sent tendrils of darkness towards the guards, so they took up arms, but immediately afterwards she withdrew them, and recalled her power.

"What are you doing?" Stormheart shouted , placing her glaive blade against her back.

„I did nothing of the sort, I only showed what a wonderful prisoner you brought back.„ she replied to her sister, smiling. She saw the fear in the eyes of the Guardsmen, as well as the disgust at the sight of her deformed face. She was pretty much used to it, throughout her time in the service… Throughout her time leading the Horde, she had seen a similar reaction from all of her subordinates, both officers and the children she had been entrusted with. She felt a pang of remorse, because she had promised herself that she would change. But then again, these were her mother's subordinates, who was a woman just as Cruel as she was ruthless.

"Miss… Light Spinner has been ordered to appear before the First Mother Whispering Mist of the Yago Clan to answer for her sins." The captain of the guard said in a very uncertain voice. She tilted her head to the side as if watching him with interest, but didn't move from her spot.

"Did you understand what we were saying to you?" the officer said with a trace of panic in his voice. She raised her eyebrows theatrically, as if completely surprised by his words.

„Oh, you asked me, right? I think there must have been a mistake here. Light Spinner died many years ago, making a terrible mistake. The person standing before you is Shadow Weaver. What's more, from what I know, she has not committed any crimes against your ruler, so I guess I can go, right?„ she said gently, trying to sound like a true lady from Carurystal. The officer looked completely terrified, he pulled out his weapon, but immediately put it away, and pulled it out again.

„Does that mean... That you refuse to carry out the First Mother's orders?„ he said in a breaking voice.

„I didn't say anything of the sort, I just pointed out that the orders clearly didn't apply to me.„ She replied, feeling genuine amusement in her heart. She was a little sorry that Catra couldn't see her now. She would probably appreciate her display. It was different with her sister. The Storm Warden growled and said sharply.

„Could you stop this farce? The only thing you'll achieve is to make trouble for yourself, me, and Windsinger..„ She pointed to the officer, who looked at the warrior with gratitude. She sighed and said.

„Good, this time I'll do you a favor and I'll follow you, because my sister asks me to, although in an unusual way.„ She said and let herself be led. Midnight Mask followed her right after they landed, she was silent , watching the whole conversation carefully, trying as usual to understand as much as possible, most likely as usual Interpreting everything she saw in her own way. Some people never change. She wonder if that also applied to her mother?

As they walked through the city, many of its inhabitants stole glances at her. She doubted that he recognized her, except perhaps those who had previously served in the palace or the temple, but even that was doubtful. She looked completely different now, as evidenced by the signs that some people made to ward off evil. She was surprised to find that this place was much more like the worlds beyond Etheria than any place on this planet. It might not be entirely similar to peaceful Carurystal, but she had heard of many other places in the galaxy. An Apostate planet inhabited by Drow came to mind, Dark Elves with hearts infected with demonic essence, Who supposedly once lived in the underground of the lost Golarion, and now inhabiting their own planet supported themselves by trading weapons and other suspicious goods. She had read a bit about them, and saw similarities to the culture of her nation. It was more than disturbing. Their language resembled Elven, although what she had learned, it was difficult for someone who knew the common language of the elves to understand. She knew little about linguistics, to tell the truth, this field of study was not particularly useful on this planet, where most people spoke one language. She herself had mastered only a few languages, they had only come in handy when she left Etheria... She had learned a few of them only because she had sold her soul to the darkness between the stars. She wondered now how much their family culture was similar to the culture of the inhabitants of the cursed Apostate. She should investigate her people's heritage more thoroughly, considering the wealth of knowledge she gained upon leaving her world. Too bad she had not had time for it.

Her sisters seemed to be much more tense than she was, even though she was the one who was supposed to meet the ruthless ruler of the Isles of Sorrow. However, she was the one in control of the situation now. Stormheart could believe that she was alert enough to watch her tricks, but the Storm Warden was never cunning enough to keep up with her plans. She wasn't stupid, sometimes she wondered if in some way she was the smartest of them. But you just had to see the world and people as better than they really were.. Midnight Mask suspected something, her Dark Lord could give her some information and a warning of what would happen, although then she should have been much more terrified.

Finally they were led to the palace, a several-story structure made of darkwood, harder than most metals. She knew that some varieties of it grew on other planets, and were eagerly cultivated and used by the elves… It was one of the greatest treasures of the islands, and she wondered how much harder it was than the wood used in the rest of the universe. The windows were made of a thin material, made of spider webs, painted in various colors, so that they looked like stained glass. The roof was made of jade tiles. The entire structure had taken many generations to build, and was probably more expensive than Brightmoon Castle. Before the doors, made of black wood covered with intricately carved obsidian slabs, another group of guards met her. Stormheart wanted to go in with her but she was sent away, they only allow their Black Blade. It showed well what kind of arrangements still existed in her family. Theoretically, the Storm Wardeens were not subject to the rule of the clans, although of course her mother had a different opinion on the matter. But she liked to follow traditions and conventions when it suited her.

More guards led her through wide corridors, bathed in multi-colored light. The servants and officials got out of their way, they were well trained so that in such situations it is better not to be close to the center of events They acted very wisely, even if they did not know what would happen. Finally, she reached the throne room of a huge room, the walls of which were decorated with blue and white bas-reliefs made of wood and lacquer, telling the history of her people and the Clan. Although her people did not possess as many technological advances as the rest of the planet, they immediately noticed that an Energy Shield ran through the center of the room, which complicated her Plans somewhat, but it was not a problem that could not be bypassed.. On the obsidian throne, carved to resemble a spider, embracing the ruler with its legs, sat an Older Woman. Her hair was already gray, and her face was gaunt and lined and scarred, clear evidence of many years of ruling with an iron fist in a world full of conspiracies and murder. Her hands were twisted from rheumatism , and perhaps from the effects of poisons, or curses, to which she had fallen victim over the years. which made them resemble the claws of one of the witches, which she had seen in illustrations in fairy tales... or when she looked in the mirror. Her fingernails were like claws, and the middle finger on each hand was several centimeters long and sharpened. The matriarch of each clan would dip it in poison to mix punishment for the disobedient, or if she wanted to defend herself against assassins… Her mother's eyes were as sharp as ever, and when she looked into them, irritation and contempt appeared in them.

"You look awful," her mother said simply angrily, clenching her fingernails on the arms of the throne.

„The same could be said about you.„ She simply said wearily. The entire throne room fell into an almost painful silence. She doubted that anyone had dared to speak to her mother like that, and certainly not since she could remember. Whispering Mist had not always been the absolute ruler of her clan, she had heard that from her teachers, she had strengthened her position through intrigue and murder. Even in her lifetime, she had had to carry out many plots to get rid of her rivals. But now she sensed that she was stronger than ever. That was good, the feeling of security would leave her vulnerable to attack.

The ruler of the Yago clan looked at her for a moment. If she had been anyone else, she would have probably been punished terribly, but she was her daughter, and for that she was needed, So Whispering Mist just snorted and ordered.

„Take her to the infidel room, I think we can consider her one of them. She will wait there for a decision on what to do with her.„ she raises her hand and the guards began to carry out her order. Midnight Mask stayed where she was, watching her with a thoughtful gaze.

You could say she was imprisoned in the guest room. In the old days, emissaries from other kingdoms were hosted here. Why was there no shortage of comfort here? There were two wide beds, windows took up the entire wall, making it unusually bright, at least for the Islands of Sorrow, where it rained constantly. It was electric light, and even a simple computer, if anyone needed to check the data they brought. The latter was clear evidence that the borders had been opened to trade, even if not very intensive. The country needed funds for reconstruction, and it could no longer afford complete isolation. The invasion of the Galactic Horde showed how great a pipe dream the desire to cut itself off from foreign influences was. Sure, if they asked, Glimmer would help me rebuild, but it would require humility, and it was difficult to find it among the members of her family, she was the best example of that. She would most willingly lie down, although she was not really tired, but she had a lot of work ahead of her. First, she discreetly cast an illusion spell , because she was aware that she was being watched and only by the guards who were waiting outside the door, but also by Midnight Mask's subordinates ... But she suspected that they weren't ready for the spells she had learned both during her studies and work in Mystacor, and her time in the Horde, not to mention what she had learned during her time on Carurystal. Here, however, she had to be careful, although didn't anyone in this palace know that one should always be vigilant and careful? Except perhaps for her, for at some point she had forgotten, as her face showed. She knelt down, moved the carpet and began to draw a Sorcerer Circle on the floor, but after a while someone entered the room. She stood up immediately, covering the carpet, and then turned around and saw a girl with blue eyes and dark navy blue hair standing high. She was wearing the robes of a low-ranking courtier, someone not much better than a servant.

„I am Silent Scream. I will come to you as your personal servant, I have to fulfill all your orders."

She sighed at the Uneasiness in the newcomer's eyes. It was a good thing she hadn't added that she would obey "absolutely all of her commands because then She would have uttered some nasty curses at Whispering Mist. She didn't doubt that the girl would have fulfilled even those special wishes, but even in the Horde she hadn't used her power like that. She looked at her , and thought. Her name was an oxymoron, and such names were only given to the children of criminals, those born from relationships not planned by the ruler of the Clan, or those from mixed pairs. In such a case, it was still a great achievement that she was allowed to work in the palace. However, she looked closely at her face, and understood the truth. She sighed heavily, but refrained from touching her face.

„No, I don't want anything from you, child. I hope they treat you well."

Silent Scream She looked at her in surprise, but lowered her gaze and said.

„The First Matron of the Yago clan is very kind to me and accepted me despite my background. No one else would have done this for me... for someone like me... I am eternally grateful to her for that.

She bit her lip as she heard the girl's words. Silent Scream lived on a planet inhabited by some of the friendliest and most open beings, but she was trapped in its darkest corner, the only place where her origins mattered. Anywhere else they probably wouldn't even understand how someone could despise someone because their parents weren't married, because their union wasn't approved... No one even thought about marriage in a political way. Marriage was a choice of love, and no one should stand in its way... Unless you were the second-in-command in the army of the space invader. She started laughing nervously, and Silent Scream looked at her and probably, as if a little scared... Which was logical, because now she looked a little crazy... Maybe she was a little crazy...

"Is something wrong ma'am?" she asked cautiously, obviously frightened. She shook her head before answering.

„No child, I just remembered what a certain horrible woman, just as horrible as her mother, did, and don't call me ma'am, just address me by my real name: Shadow Weaver."

Silent Scream nodded and left, apparently deciding that it was best to leave her alone. Which was good, because she had a lot of work to do.

She didn't rest for a moment, they were working hard to prepare for the reunion with her own mother. She knew that Whispering Mist wanted to soften her up before the actual conversation. Well, her own mother taught her to be tough, but what life had taught her later had made her as resilient as a diamond. She guessed what he wanted from her, and it even made sense. But of course she could only give one answer, why she had to prepare herself too. She suspected that escaping wouldn't be the slightest problem, but it wasn't escaping that she wanted. She had to follow the orders of this Star Elf, even if she hated him as hot as the heart of the sun. She couldn't afford to escape again, and at this time, not only because of will of the Creeping Chaos, but also for the sake of her daughter. That's why she had to solve a problem once and for all. She had to take back Whispering Mist's power.

She was kept in the room for many hours, maybe even a whole day, but she still finished all her plans just before the guards came You smiled at them innocently, which looked especially creepy in her current state, and followed them without saying anything. This time her mother organized an official audience, to which not only the most important courtiers came, but also the heads of all the great families, and even envoys from other clans. She recognized few, because although her people were long-lived, a lot has happened since then. She only wondered if the invasion of the mad tyrant and the resistance they put up against him were responsible for this state of affairs, or the problem-solving method practiced by the leader of the Yago Clan. Silence fell upon her as she entered, she showed no sign of humility, as was probably expected… This once, she decided to use all the immense reserves of arrogance that lay within her soul. Just this once, she would benefit from them.

"First Mother of the Yago Clan …" The Herald began to list all of her mother's titles, which should have taken a good ten minutes, but she wasn't about to let that happen.

„Everyone here knows my mother's titles, and they're probably bored to hear them again, so let's get to the point?„ she said, trying to make her voice sound as bored as possible. If Everyone had been Quiet before, now everyone was trying to quiet their own heartbeats. They had probably never heard anyone address their Ruler like that. But that was just the beginning.

„Be careful what you say! I could still take you to the dungeon, where your feet will rot from the stagnant water up to your ankles, and your body will be more gnawed by crabs while you sleep.„ said her mother after a while, her voice as cold as ice.

You would have to get in line, because currently I would be imprisoned by quite a few people, with the ruler of Etheria at the forefront. Besides, the Crabs who would want to taste my flesh would probably die in terrible agony.„ She said still showing no other emotion, except boredom. Her mother dug her claws into the arms of the chair, clearly barely containing your Rage.

"You have always been, Light Spinner , the stubborn and most disobedient of my daughters, and I see that your time among the foreigners has only warped your character. It will take some time to teach you the virtue of obedience again, but I think it will be worth the effort. I forgive you for your betrayal of your family, for I need you. The actions of the little queen have left our country in danger, and we must use every means at our disposal to protect our independence and our culture!" her mother exclaimed. She stared dispassionately for a moment, then began to laugh. This continued for some time, until Whispering Mist finally drawled.

„Apparently, you need to learn humility... A day tied to posts by the seaside facing the wind should soften you up a bit.„ She signaled the guards to all of them to deal with her, but then darkness swirled around her. She shot fleshy tentacles towards the guards, pinning them to the ground. The entire room was covered in darkness.

„I guess someone else will learn humility now... Indeed, my character has been warped, as has my body and soul, there is no doubt about that. It happened because of the choices I made, and I am primarily responsible for what happened to me. However, your teachings have shaped me. You taught me how important ambition is, how much one must do to achieve what one desires. However, do not be so proud of yourself. All my successes, and above all, all my failures I owe to myself. All the evil I have done in my life is my work.„ Her voice echoed loudly in the spacious throne room , so that the black wood resonated.

"You will pay for this! You can't even imagine how severe the punishment will be..." her mother growled, but a tentacle woven from shadows wrapped around her mouth, „Believe me, I've done a lot of wrongs that I must pay for, but standing up to you was one of the noblest things I've done in my lousy life. I've betrayed my own planet, I hurt girls to whom I was like a mother, thousands have died in the name of my ambition and lust for power, I've sold my soul to The Darkness Between The Stars, and so much more, and in your boundless ignorance, you're convinced that the greatest crime I've committed was breaking a few worthless traditions of our people! You don't even realize the vastness of the universe that's knocking on your door. Or should I say battering it down with a battering ram. To the true powers of the Galaxy, your small kingdom is less than nothing. They could crush it as easily as you crack a crab's shell to get to the tasty meat. I wouldn't honor you with my presence if it weren't for the fact that I have to get to a certain place, and I had to save those who are truly important to me, and you are not one of them. „ She lifted her hand and the floor opened, creating a shadowy lake. A large creature emerged from it, resembling a white-gray insect with the head of a wolf or a Jackal, and a large phytolic abdomen. Ximtal , one of the Sahkils, fiends who feed on fear. He directed his abdomen toward her mother, and a moment ago a mist enveloped her, and as it unfurled the woman began to look around in terror.

"Where did everyone go? Where did you take them?" Whispering Mist shouted, and she responded with a grim smile.

„They are in the same place where they were, just like you, but you are not able to notice each other. In fact, on the entire planet, apart from my ally of course, there are only two people who can see you, and who you can notice. It is me and Silent Scream . So you better be nice to your granddaughter... The older one, because if you want to know, you have another one, but you will probably never meet, because I see no reason to bring her to this place, let alone introduce you to her.” You turned to the terrified woman, and made another gesture, the second spell she had prepared for this time. This time, a round hole appeared on the ceiling, like a window to another world, from where a howling Wind began to blow. Everyone saw gigantic mountains, the vastness of which seemed difficult to understand. It suddenly became incredibly cold, and then for a moment a monstrous figure stood over the port, as gigantic as the peaks among which it walked. It had the body of a spider, but also a monstrous face, almost looking like the face of a humanoid. Atlah- Naha, weaving through worlds, Spinner of the Void. The goddess of their people, perhaps... Then the window closed, and she herself called off the darkness. She felt incredibly tired, and almost withdrew to the floor. But then her sister, as they had agreed, stepped forward to the front of the terrified courtiers and cried out

“Long live Shadow Weaver! First mother of the Yago clan”

Perhaps power is just smoke and shadows.

Calamity stretched her back. One of the advantages of her physique was that her joints Never Creaked. She could hardly tell how much more pleasant it made her life, for after all she felt almost no pain, and so she was glad of it. It was one of countless proofs of her superiority over mere mortals, of her divine origin...

She waited on the plateau for her support. It irritated her a little that she had to wait for the sorceress, but she also knew that she needed her help, and not just because of the orders of the Creeping Chaos, although she could not oppose them. Her summoning skills were limited, so Nightgale could prove invaluable. Besides, she was the only one who had contact with this fascinating elf. She felt a little jealous about it, but she figured it could be a kind of test for her, to test her patience and humility. She knew she didn't have many flaws, but one could say she had a tendency to overestimate her own abilities, nothing serious, of course, and it was completely understandable for a being as incredibly magnificent as she was, but sometimes she forgot her own limitations. After all, she wasn't a goddess... yet.

Ever since she killed the owner of that tower, her companions watched her with fear, And that was good. Mortals must remember who they should show fear to. She only regretted that now that girl was not too willing to respond to her dizziness, but that was only a minor obstacle, The world was full of beautiful women and men, and the goal was to get to know that wonderful elf. Perhaps they would even have offspring, so magnificent and wonderful, before which the whole universe would tremble!

She was just starting to yawn when she saw the vehicle approaching.. She was glad that this planet was so chaotic and poorly organized that traveling even for someone as sought-after as she or her companions was not difficult. She personally would make it so that anyone who left their place of residence would have to provide a good reason to do so, otherwise he and his entire family would face terrible punishment. Everyone knew that the basis of a properly functioning justice system was collective responsibility and intimidation of the citizens.

As the vehicle approached, she noticed that it was not piloted by Nightgale, but by someone she had not noticed at first. Only after a moment did she see that at the controls was a black metal cylinder with various metal tentacles, with which he held the control instruments. She guessed that this was the ally that Nightgale had spoken of . However, she did not see the sorcerer anywhere... Until the vehicle was close to them and she saw Nighgale lying on its floor. Apparently, she had to fight for control of the moonstone again. She felt uneasy. Shadow Weaver's daughter was key to their plans, and on top of that, she enjoyed the favor of the Creeping Chaos. So she approached her and watched her carefully. The sorceress moved slowly and was clearly exhausted. She remembered what ordinary mortals did in such a situation and put her hand to her forehead. The daughter of the cursed sorceress was cold and wet. No wonder, she had heard from Shadow Weaver about how much she had suffered every time when she had lost her connection to Black Garnet. Personally, she considered that weakness to be another reason to hold the woman in contempt, but the fact that her daughter had fought for control of the moonstone with Glimmer, who she had to grudgingly admit, held considerable power.

"Get something warming, now!" she ordered a pair of cultists who without delay they began to carry out Her orders, and in the meantime She took Nightgale in her arms and carried her to their small camp and covered her with a blanket. Then they gave her a glass of wine, And broth began to boil on the fire. The young sorceress groaned and rose, She began to look around with tired eyes, And then she said.

„This time Glimmer was exceptionally stubborn... She probably looks much better than me, but she won't have the strength to try for a while, although from what I've heard she's a very stubborn woman. She won't give up easily... „ her voice was hoarse and you could hear how difficult a fight she had to fight.

„But you are ready to go on your way?„ she asked anxiously, but Shadow Weaver's daughter gave her a strange look, as if she wanted to accuse her of something, and said.

"I'm half horde clone, and they were built to endure hardships that would kill most beingand my mother is just as tough. I can handle it, I just need some rest."

„Good, because first you need to contact our allies... Or at least mine, because whether he took the alliance with you, we'll see. „ said the metal cylinder, who with surprising agility crawled to them. She had heard quite a lot about such beings , and they were more interesting. She knew that inside it was a living brain placed there by the Mi-Go, one of the older and more interesting races. Mortals wanting to prolong their existence could really grab at strange methods, but now she was grateful. She could use the help of one of the Elder Races, as well as someone with these lower abilities, especially since Lady Sorrowflame was not nearby, and besides, even she did not have the knowledge of the void wanderers.

"It's good to see you... Dr. Moors, isn't it? Once my companion is back to normal, we will contact your allies. Thank you also for taking care of my… friend.." She smiled at him and held out her hand.

„I didn't expect you to call me that.„ Nightgale said, looking at her carefully. She smiled at her politely, and said.

„You are important to me, so I can call you friend."

"However, friends are just one more resource that you can use to achieve your goals, your mother saw that all too well."

She was breathing heavily wrapped in a blanket. She tried to regain control over the moonstone, and again she failed. This time she fought longer and more persistently than before, Perhaps, but the one who fought had an iron will. No wonder, after all, she was Shadow Weaver's daughter, and she knew the woman well enough to know that she was so determined that she could overcome any difficulties... Perhaps apart from the feeling of guilt, but she didn't tell anyone about that, because no one would understand, not even her father, who knew her from the best side. She was very sorry that he wasn't here. She could see that he supported her with his knowledge. Or at least the Council... It wasn't just about regaining control over the stone, but also about everything. In a few hours, their situation changed Diametrically. Allies turned out to be enemies, a new threat arose that she had no idea how to deal with, a friend was Cursed, and another gave in to her anger. In addition, there was still the matter of her child, although paradoxically it seemed to be the simplest In this matter, she decided to trust the Knight of Hell's opinion, even though it seemed strange, and unless new circumstances arise, she will probably give birth to this child. She smiled sadly and touched her stomach, at least one thing was going well. At that moment Bow stepped into the tent frightened by what she looked like.

„Are you okay?„ he asked her as he hugged her tightly and she smiled weakly and said.

„Nothing, absolutely nothing. I just tried to do it again, to regain control of it again... Over my runestone, But I failed, but it's only a matter of time... And I don't need it for now, because that way I wouldn't get into Castle Crypto ... „ She explained, smiling at him comfortingly, and he patted her on the head and said.

„I'm not sure if you're comforting me or yourself. I know how hard it is for you, because you've always loved your power, and used it every chance you got. Maybe we'll actually have to find a way to make peace with Lonnie, because we have to take care of you and the Baby... If you keep having to wrestle with that Nightgale, something might happen to you... or both of you.„ he kissed her on the forehead, she said to him with a smile, and then I'm sorry and they sat like that for a while, but then Adora entered the tent. She understood at first glance that something had happened.

"Is this something with Catra?" She asked, afraid that something had happened to her feline friend, because she remembered that she didn't always deal well with anger, and when she left her tent she was clearly furious . Maybe she was judging her unfairly, but she was really worried.

„No, I mean, yes, but it's a bit different than you think. Listen, Frosta flew to Castle Crypto to meet with that sorceress... You know, her daughter... Shadow Weaver's daughter... And Catra decided to go after her... She contacted her father's people, Lady Ka and the rest . „ The Warrior explained, breathing heavily, apparently having run straight to them. She was in human form, and a storm was raging outside, so she was definitely tired, despite her excellent condition, especially since she had been on her feet all day and half the night anyway. Hearing this news, she jumped to her feet, although she was just as exhausted, and called out.

„But how? Why did she go there... I'm talking about Frosta...”

"She could have heard what we were talking about, honey..." her husband stated, and she groaned, rubbing her face with her hands. Adora nodded, and said.

„I'm not sure what you were talking about, but something really shook her up... But it's probably not your fault, because she was also talking to Halo, and we all heard what She told her.

She rubbed her temples and said.

„We have to stop her somehow, or rather both of them... Netossa.. „ She wanted to say, but Adora interrupted her.

„Well, actually, Netossa went with her too... and Seahawk and the rest... They will manage, and if necessary I can come there…, and if necessary I can come there... I've already done it once and from another planet, so it should be easier now.„ She said, smiling as if you wanted to calm her down. She sank into an armchair, And her husband said.

„I would perhaps send a few ships, just in case, to help them if anything happens.”

She nodded, and for a moment she pondered over her further orders, but then one of the messengers came in and said.

„ We have received a message from outside the empire… And they do not seem to be working with the Grand Marshal's father. They claim to be from the Azlanti Star Empire……

She recognized that word... That name... Adora had told her about them . They were the people who had enslaved her mother... She felt a rage take hold of her, a rage she couldn't describe. In that moment, she understood what Catra had always felt... This desire to vent your hatred on the one who hurt you. Even when the war was going on and the Heart of Etheria was activated, she didn't feel this much anger... Back then, she was rather helpless and desperate. Maybe it was because so much had happened... Or maybe because now she was faced with pure evil, with a civilization that embodied everything that was against the values they believed in. Even the Horde wasn't that wicked, because after all, its evil came from a single, crazy megalomaniac, and if Lady Cala was to be believed, even he was a victim of sorts, even if that was hard to fathom. And they were all sincerely devoted to the evil on which they based their society... They were like the First... She instinctively glanced at Adora, who was watching her closely, waiting for her answer. Bow was watching her too, but he smiled and placed his hand on her shoulder. She took a deep breath and said in a very cold voice, as cold as the wind that was raging outside.

"I will listen to them... And I will prepare them the welcome they deserve."

Lord Protector Felix Antares marched with his guards through the streets of the recently captured city.. It was the first conquest… No, that wasn’t the right word. After all, he had come here as a liberator, and as a liberator he should see himself, even if it was otherwise. Appearances required great concentration, one must always be careful not to step out of character, because otherwise one could ruin the work one had put into his preciously created image. Of course, one must always be careful not to forget that in the end, exercising power is mostly a game, smoke and shadows… Many believed in the lies about you, spread them. For example, the madman Horde Prime, who truly believed that he knew everything and saw everything. And where is he now? He was defeated by his daughter's wife, because he believed he was invincible... So he couldn't allow himself to believe that he had come here to save the inhabitants of this part of the Galaxy, after all, morality walked before the fall... However, he had to take great care to ensure that no one knew the truth until everything was ready, including his daughter. If he carries out his plans well, then by the time they began to see the truth, he would have gained such a strong position that no one would be able to oppose him. He just had to figure out how to convince his daughter of all this, which might be difficult, but if he played this right, which would leave her with a fait accompli. Sometimes it was necessity that made the best leaders.

They were on the planet Minos Secondus , which was once a colony founded by the inhabitants of Icarus, but which had won independence from the mother world, but had soon fallen into a period of turmoil, as a result of which the local communist party and fundamentalist theocracy took over the power there, which fought for years until Horde Prime arrived, and ended all disputes in a clear and final way. The planet served as a place where the fleet could take supplies. Before, the Colony had made its profits mainly from producing fuel for ships, now it was all about the sole reason for its existence. Initially, most of the inhabitants were relocated to the refineries orbiting the gas giant, but some had to stay on the planet to supply the refineries, and probably also so that the mad Tyrant had something to rule. When Horde Prime was annihilated by his Daughter-in-law workers in refineries staged a successful revolt, but the clones dug in for the planet, leading to a strange stalemate, because those in space did not have the means to retake the planet, but the clones were unable to do anything to them, but only until the Heavenly Brothers arrived with their fleet. However, then the leader of the rebels named Emerald Sun decided to mine all the refineries, and also contacted Horde Ultimate, offering him fuel in exchange for support. The self-proclaimed heir arrived, and began fighting his rivals, but the leaders of the uprising did not call him for access to the refineries, although they provided him with fuel to exchange for food supplies. The Heavenly Brothers tried to retake the planet from time to time, but they did not achieve much, so it was divided between both factions, and the rebels hiding in the wild, independent of the Emerald Sun Subordinates. The leader of the uprising tried to contact Etheria, but he did not have his own ships, and no one was sure how loyal he was to Horde Ultimate, so the other parties opposing the power of the heirs of the mad tyrant did not want to risk cooperation with him. However, he decided to do it. After all, in war you have to take risks to win, And have good intelligence, this cannot be forgotten either. Lady Ka hired several pirates from outside the empire, the fact that they were able to sneak through the border guards of Veskarium or Azlanti, so Avoiding Horde Ultimate patrols was not difficult. The insurgents trapped on the refineries agreed to his support and provided him with all the information he needed. The pirates, as well as his Scouts, obtained intelligence data related to the planet for him, and it turned out that he chose the perfect time, because Horde Ultimate began to withdraw from your force, leaving the planet to their rivals. He guessed that Horde Ultimate knew that this planet could be the next place Fearless Armada would decide to attack, so he didn't want to waste his army in a two-front fight, and now he allowed him to defeat his opponents. He appreciated the common sense of the Heir of the mad lord, and sent this fleet. The few ships that decided here were easily destroyed by Commander Rees, who also led the invasion. So when he returned from his daughter's wedding, he only had to specify the choking points of permanent resistance.

The planet was never densely populated. Due to the long civil wars, few colorists came here, and many died during the fighting or were killed by the Horde's forces... Now there were mainly farms, food processing plants and biofuel production, as well as a transshipment port used to deliver supplies to the refinery. The enemy destroyed the port, but apart from that the city did not suffer too much damage here. The servants of the Heavenly Brothers hid in old abandoned mines, where they defended themselves for some time until they managed to bring heavy artillery and then sent special forces, namely his Orphans of the Void, thanks to which they managed to break up and the enemies withdrew to remote regions of the planets, where his army could count on the support of local rebels who were hiding there during the occupation. The fighting had practically stopped and now it was time to plan for the future, but it was not as bright as it might seem.

It was another easy victory, but there would be no more like it, not with the forces he had now… He had to dig in and hold out until he gained support, and gaining it was not so certain. He still had not received word from the Pact Worlds and Atrax, where the rest of his forces were. He also knew that his daughter's country now had its own problems related to rebellion, so he lent them his forces so that it could be quickly suppressed. He also could not forget the young queen's reluctance, but he already had an idea on how to solve her problem… There was no doubt that his daughter deserved the throne more, and once she took power, he would be able to use all of Etheria's resources to achieve his goals. This planet had a fleet acquired on Horde Prime, as well as battle-hardened veterans. He could not forget its political significance either, because by gaining its support, he would also gain influence on the industrially developed Ikarus, as well as on Bellum, which had a powerful army. The other planets in Etheria’s sphere of influence were no longer as important, nor could support be useful. Of course, he did not count on Lady Sorrowflame making great discoveries on this planet, because he had never believed that one should place one's hopes in ancient artifacts and mystical secrets. In this matter, he counted more on his troops left on the planet... Lady. Ka made mistakes, for which she had recently been punished, but she usually carried out her duties extremely carefully. He had no doubt that she would be able to solve the problem of the Insurgents, and perhaps the remaining issues... For now, however, he had to wait. Battles could be won with heroism and great tactics, but to win a war, resources were needed above all. He was an intelligent man, and he knew that everything in the Universe was a resource, not only raw materials or an army, but also political connections, public support, morale, friends, family, absolutely everything was just a resource, but many of them were difficult to replace, and sometimes even irreplaceable... they could not be squandered...

He was accompanied by only two guards, and of course his Wolf Resh, and even so he thought that it was more than enough. He never liked being surrounded by bodyguards… That would mean he was afraid, and fear was a weakness he could not tolerate... He also liked fighting, in the heat of battle he felt that he was truly alive. Then his fate depended only on him, he was the one who took life. It was also a kind of power, power over those to whom he brought death. As they said, killing a Million with an order is statistics, but killing someone in a face-to-face fight is a true Triumph Worthy of a Great Man. Here, however, there was nothing to indicate that he would have to fight. Thinking about his further rights, feeling safe and bored.

And then a blaster beam hit the soldier walking right next to him. He didn't have time to groan as he fell pierced by the energy beam. He grabbed his weapon, in one hand he held a saber and in the other a destructor-class pistol. He looked for shelter, in two leaps he found himself in a side street, then he looked around and saw one of the opponents standing on the roof. He was a clone, but dressed in different armor, red and gold, heavy and more expensively made. From the reports he received through his intel, he presumed this is a soldier serving the Horde Ultimate. He smiled to himself, seeing such an ingenious trap. He didn't think that the heir to Horde Prime would turn out to be so cunning. He saw in it the hand of his Drow second-in-command, but still because he was impressed. But now he had to survive, And he heard the footsteps of the other soldiers, here they are hidden to surround him. He sent backup, but he knew it wouldn't come fast enough, so he had to get out of the encirclement himself. He ordered the soldier next to him to cover him, and together with his nightmare hunter ran into the tenement house, Next to which they stopped, using a pistol to break the lock on the door. He had to buy time, Or fight all the opponents who wanted to take his life. Either way, he needed a more convenient shelter to be able to defend himself, although on the other hand he knew that in this way he would be surrounded, But he took this risk. However, an opponent shot at him on the stairwell, the clone fired a lighter Blaster at him, but it did not penetrate his shield, and then the Nightmare Hunter jumped at him, crushing his hand in its cybernetically enhanced jaws. He ran up the stairs, and there he lay in wait, when another clone tried to enter, he fired a pistol at him. If it had been a normal pistol, nothing would have happened, because it hit next to him, but this was a radiation-based weapon, much more destructive, and practically forbidden in many worlds of fact. The radiation wave didn't have to hit exactly to do damage, at least with the weapon's settings, and the clone's body began to drip with dissolved skin. A truly inhuman scream was heard, and then he fell to the ground. He signaled his wolf, who was just finishing off the first attacker, to run after him. The door above was open, and a family lay tied up on the floor, and another of the Horde Ultimate soldiers jumped on him from the other room.. He grabbed him by the forearm and broke his arm, in which he held the gun. He effortlessly stopped the pain, he was unusually resistant to it after being shot and plunged the blade of the weapon into the clone's stomach and pushed it away with a knee strike, and his companion tore out his throat. He looked out the window discreetly, and saw the other assassins preparing to attack. He cursed, because he knew it would be a difficult fight, but somehow he had to manage. But then the expected help arrived.

There were six attackers, all armed, at least two had heavy weapons. He knew that you should hide in the depths of the building now, because there would probably be nothing left of this apartment, but he hesitated. Not because he was ashamed to hide here, leaving his family here, after all, he tried to avoid accidental destruction when he freed this city, but he felt a strange curiosity, as if he wanted to see what would happen. He realized that it was a mental impulse, and he felt uneasy, but before he could react, a figure ran between the enemy soldiers. He couldn't get a good look at her. She moved incredibly fast. Faster than any human could, as if she was tearing through and around her. She made a howling whistle as she did so. She dealt blows, knocking down enemies one by one. She struck with a long and incredibly sharp sword, with a narrow blade that cut the attackers in half with each strike. The fight lasted only a few heartbeats, until the figure finally knocked down almost all of the clones, leaving the last one alive.

„What are you waiting for, why don't you kill me?„ said the other, clutching his arm, but his other hand was hidden under a long coat. The figure he was talking to was tall, had a red coat with the emblem of his family, on his face was a strange mask, consisting of many metal parts, so that they could move to simulate a real face, her hair was long, dark red, and under the coat he could see that she had prosthetics made of a strange metal that reminded him of something, but from this distance where he was sure what.

„You will not die now. You will pass on my word to your master. Tell him that Despara is coming for him, and will take his life, but first he will see everything he loves, and everything that belongs to him. For this is how victories are won. „ she said and with two quick cuts deprived him of his limbs. The wounds did not bleed, as if something had burned his limbs. Then the figure looked at the figure looked at the place where he was hiding and gave him a sign, and he went down. for a moment he hesitated ... and then he went down.

It was cold outside. She really shouldn't be out in her condition. Even with her thermal suit, she still felt cold, and her face burned as if someone was stabbing her with thousands of icy needles. She could barely keep her teeth from chattering. Bow was holding her up, or she would probably be carried away by the wind, or at least that was the impression she had. Adora walked beside her with cold determination, as if she was ready to face the icy storm and not even slow down. She no longer wore the armor given to her by the Lord Admiral, but it seemed that it didn't matter to her. So much had happened in the past few hours that everyone was wishing for a little sleep, but there was one more task ahead of them, perhaps the most difficult one for her at any given time.

They finally managed to reach the communication center, Although she thought she would never make it, she would simply get lost in her own camp and freeze, the most idiotic death of all the queens of Etheria, and maybe even the queens of the Galaxy. Rarely did the heat hit her with such force that she lost her breath. She suspected that it wasn't that warm at all, it just seemed like it to her, because she had been frozen to the bone earlier. She wiped her forehead and said.

„What news has reached you? Is it something serious?”

Onyx Sky looked at her and smiled reassuringly.

„It's just greetings and assurances of friendly intentions, and a request to meet at a convenient time.„ they explained as she sat down on a chair. The room was quite tight, but there was still enough room for the three of them. She looked at it, smiling sadly. They did not know the truth about Azlanti, and what they did to her mother and their queen... They did not know how despicable the inhabitants of this country were. I can for most of the inhabitants of her planet, everyone who came from outside Horde Prime's Empire seemed fascinating, and friendly, after all, they had a common enemy, and in addition, the leader of the research and exploration fleet was the father of one of their heroines, and therefore the father-in-law of She-Ra herself. They had no reason to suspect anyone of evil intentions. Perhaps Lonnie was right in her call to cut themselves off from the rest of the Galaxy , but unless they found a way to return to Despondos again they would have to remain where they were, and deal with being part of an infinitely large and terrifying Universe. Onyx Sky began working on the Apparatus, then signaled for them to come over.

„The quality is not perfect, to put it mildly, due to the storm, and perhaps the jamming devices that the signal encountered.. And also the specifics of your planet. It seems to me that twelve moons can interfere with the operation of... probably everything. I have to do some research on this subject sometime.„ said the person from Icarus to herself and moved away from the Screen. At first, there was only interference and the entire room resounded with painful noises, which made her wince. But then a figure appeared on the screen. She looked like a woman, it was tall and well-built. It was dressed in blue armor with green decorations, hair tied in a braid and two curved swords on jer shoulders. On hers head, it wore a tiara of green metal with a white stone emanating an inner glow. She smiled at them benevolently. It seemed strangely familiar to her, but she could not determine why, but when she looked at Adora out of the corner of her eye she saw that she had turned pale She was about to ask her about what happened but then the woman started speaking.

„Greetings to the people of Horde Prime's former empire . I am Seleste Sirianix – Protoatarch of the Great Azlantii Star Empire Azlantia. I came here at the head of an Expeditionary Fleet sent here by our great Star Emperors to bring Pax Azlantica to this nonhuman-ravaged part of the galaxy. We know that this place has suffered for millennia from the tyranny of an insane non-human, and also from the lack of guidance by those chosen for it. The human species in particular suffered because it was deprived of the chance to fulfill its destiny, which is where the leadership of the lesser races lies, because they are incapable of independent leadership, so easily subject to their savage instincts. We know that non-humans are not worse than us, but simply destined for different purposes, and only their speciesism and the blindness of the fanatical ideology of their leaders force them to act contrary to the natural order of things. This region of the Galaxy is special for another reason . For it was the home of one of the greatest branches of our species, the civilization called the First Ones. They created a mighty Empire, the wonders of which were difficult for moderns to imagine. Sadly, while seemingly following a similar path to the great Star Empire, they have made grave mistakes, most notably by betraying the gods and rejecting their teachings, and thus their empire was doomed to fall. We, the Azlanti, do not follow this path, for we are the only ones worthy of bearing the destiny of the human species on our shoulders. We are the heirs of all the branches of humanity that have ever existed, but have failed to secure our species its rightful place at the forefront of the sentient species of the Galaxy. Some of you may doubt our words, but look to Etheria if you need proof. It was a member of our kind who defeated the leader of the dreadful, speciesist , non-human Empire. She did so by returning to her Legacy, and became the embodiment of all the virtues of our species! It is to her that we turn, to aid us in bringing here true Pax. Azlantika. We believe that, like us, he has the best interests of his species and all the people of this place at heart and will join our great empire so that we can carry the light of human destiny to the farthest corners of the Galaxy. So we turn to She-Ra, the heroine of the Galaxy, to come to our aid, for we share the same blood, and I believe that in the end we all want the same things, for good to prevail and for peace to reign in the Galaxy..„ explain the message was interrupted. For a moment She breathed heavily and then screamed.

„Let them stick these assurances of peace so deep that they couldn't even get them out with a poker! What the fuck is this! We've all always been together here, and they believe... They believe that one species has the right to rule over all, and those who disagree are called speciesists.„ She threw out a long and very nasty string of curses that made her husband blush. Adora, however, seemed shaken. She said quietly under her breath.

„The same blood flows in our veins...„ Her gaze was absent... Bow placed her hand on the Shoulder of the Princess of Power, and said.

„It doesn't mean anything, after all we are all Etherians regardless of which people we belong to.

But Adora looked at them, with a sadness bordering on despair in her eyes, and said.

„Don't you see that? You haven't talked to her as many times as I have... This woman... this Seleste is Mara... „ and she sat down in the chair as if she had lost all her strength.

Calamity frowned at all the moons. Even though she was not gifted with developed magical abilities, she could sense the powers emanating from them. What's more, she could determine their nature. They were connected to the main planes, as well as the elemental planes, which was both interesting and irritating. The Outer Gods and the Great Old Ones existed long before the planes were created. It must have been a powerful source of power, but it remained beyond her reach, and beyond the reach of most of the inhabitants of this planet, at least until recently. This worried her, because if they managed to harness the magic of the moons, then in the future it would not only be the Princesses who could be a problem.

"He says his planet is similar... Magic comes from primal sources... He thinks the two worlds are connected in some way, though he's not sure how. That's why they were the First Ones to take an interest in them." Nightgale explained. The girl looked better, though of course she was always pale in her natural form, but she was straight and didn't tremble, so she was probably better. The Elf stood next to her, looking around curiously. She still thought she'd never seen anyone so attractive.

„That's interesting, and logical...„ she wondered, because she knew very little about his planet, and she was not sure if she wanted to know more, because she suspected that it was as boring and full of fools as Etheria. However, she was ordered to go there, so she had no choice but to do it. She looked at Doctor Moors and asked.

„I heard that your allies prefer to appear on a moonless night, but it's hard to find one here... Won't the light bother them?”

The steel cylinder made a strange sound which only a moment later she recognized as laughter and said.

„They never had a problem with the sun or the moon, it's just that on such nights it's harder to see the void wanderes traveling through the night sky.„ said the brain in cylinder, and she nodded and waited. Of course, she was ready to pick him out of this can, if his friends tried to betray her... Or didn't show up at all. Sometimes you had to show people that you weren't to be joked with.

They appeared silently. Straight on long, neither insect nor membranous wings. There were four of them, two of them were larger and had powerful pincers from which tentacles grew that wrapped around strange bionic weapons. The rest were smaller. One had several visible cracks in its skeleton, and the other had a long antenna growing from the center of its body.. This seemed to be the commander here, so she nodded at him and said.

„You are the commander here, aren't you? I am Calamity , spawn of the Great Outer God Yog-Sototh, Perfection incarnate. You are honored to meet me! she said, drawing her weapon.

She made a certain impression, for the member of the ancient race made a strange chirping sound, and a voice echoed in her head.

"I am the Overseer of this facility, and I came here to make a deal with you. We recently tried to make an alliance with the local People's Rebellion, but it didn't go well. Ordinary mortals don't make good allies if they can't be controlled. They focus so much on their emotions and morals that they forget what really matters in life. For example, we asked them to give us a certain thing, we want to get the brain of a certain woman... A certain exceptional and very intelligent woman, whose intelligence is widely known throughout the planet." He said, and she raised an eyebrow and looked at the Sorceress, then asked.

„Is she talking about who I think he is talking about?”

Nightgale looked down and answered her with obvious confusion, as if she was hiding a sense of guilt.

„I guessed it, although not right away. Comrade General told us about it, because she knew that no one would agree with her. Entrapta may be our enemy, although now I'm not entirely sure, but she wouldn't want something like that to happen to her. We are not... Rebels are not monsters.„ she threw a sharp look at Dr. Moors. She laughed briefly at the sorcerer's words, and then she said.

"You both surprised me. Who would have guessed that this animal's former friend could be so cunning to seek out her subordinates and so determined to make such an arrangement.. And as for you, I didn't expect you to show any scruples towards that woman. She is in a way your stepmother… Her child is your sister, they lives your life, which could have been yours if your father had taken care of you. And yet, you don't want her to come to harm." She shook her head pityingly, and Dr. Moors added.

„It wouldn't even be a harm, but something wonderful. I can vouch that in this state I feel much better, and besides, thanks to this her mind would be preserved for eternity!„ At the last words he practically shouted, so She signaled him to be silent, because she had more important matters to discuss, and turned to the overseer.

„And as for you, what are you demanding and what are you offering?”

„I admit that our species has always been cautious about working with the Great Old Ones and Outer Gods. Their power is indeed Great, but their minds are alien even to us, making them unpredictable. Perhaps we have no choice in this matter, but it seems we should find out what you have to offer us.” Said Overseer

She smiled at the creature, briefly considering whether she should kill his companions to show him who was boss, but she could do that later if she grew dissatisfied or bored.. Instead, she told it of the reason they had come here. She told it of their First Ones plots and the new threat, which the overseer probably hadn't even heard of. It took a good hour, but everyone listened attentively to her comma, and when she finished, they were silent for a moment, Until finally the leader of the Mi-Go said.

„So our old enemy hasn't left... And he threatens our kind... This is indeed disturbing news... Perhaps this will be enough for you to form an alliance... A common enemy is always a good reason to cooperate, Or at least such an enemy...„ He said, emanating Thoughtfulness, as well as fear, which vibrated disturbingly in her mind. Should she also be afraid of the First Ones? She felt no fear, not even of this She-Ra, but she understood that certain things could destroy her, and the First Ones were definitely able to do it... They could destroy not only her, but also take away everything that was precious to her... Forever take away her ability to fulfill her destiny. At that moment, she began to feel in her heart the seed of a germinating feeling that she knew so well... Hatred, deep and full of passion. And yet it is from hatred that the most magnificent things are made...

„I will have to leave this place soon, and I will not return soon, and in the next few months I will probably not visit this planet. I am not sure if it will be a problem in further relations... I intend to go to a planet called Xadia ... It is a very distant place, and we do not know its location... However, thanks to him, we will be able to Free one of our allies. A powerful sorcerer called Aaravos , the chosen one of Nyarlathotep, who was created by the first ones, but fought them to liberate his planet, as well as himself. Perhaps, we will also be able to create our own Bloodstone... „ she explained, but now she felt a wave of Unrest coming from the Overseer.

„That's not a very good idea, because I remember what bloodstones were, and from what I recall they caused destruction on a scale that is hard to imagine... I don't see the logic in repeating this experiment...”

„Don't worry, it will be a damaged bloodstone. Like after a lobotomy, nothing that would be able to act independently, nor try to rebel. The Creeping Chaos has foreseen such an eventuality, and has protected itself against it. „ she explained in a gentle voice, but he seemed not entirely convinced, so he said.

„I will send a Connector with you. He will pass on reports to me, and he will do it in real time. If he dies, or something similar happens to him, I will consider it a betrayal and will try to thwart all your plans. I have established contact with the rest of our diaspora, and if we consider that your actions threaten us, we have to destroy the Blodstone , and perhaps the entire planet. However, if it is as you say, then we will help you. As you know, our species does not need ordinary spaceships, we are able to cross the void, and believe me, they were able to do it very quickly. I have knowledge of Xadia , although it is Pabich genetic, but it is still clear enough for me to know, come from our outposts there was. The liaison will not only allow us, and perhaps the Mi-Go to go there, but it will also allow you to establish cooperation with the local branch of our race. „ The Overseer spoke in her mind, and it took only her willpower to stop herself from ripping him in half for threatening her… instead she said, still smiling gently.

„That's good, but you should have asked for more. My resources are limited at the moment, and from what I understand you've prepared a lot of valuable equipment for the rebels, so could you share it with us, okay?„ When she finished, and then the Overseer laughed, and her companions, except for Dr. Moors, winced in pain, and then he ordered the smallest of the Mi-Go to Hand him a certain item, which he passed to her. It looked like a flat centipede with a very long spike at the end, and a bracelet was attached to the other end.

„Observing Horde Prime's activities has led me to the conclusion that controlling chipped people can be useful in many ways. This is one such device based on reverse engineering of the mad Tyrant's chips, as well as our previous research. It can be separated into two parts, a bracelet and a controller. With the bracelet, you will be able to mentally control the person to whom this controller is attached.”

She smiled as so many possibilities now appeared in her mind…

„ Is this the only device of its kind? If you have more, I suggest you use it on a certain person...„ the evil glow in her eyes made her companions step back from her.

They spent another hour discussing the minor details of their agreement, and then the Mi”Go flew away, leaving them as if they had never met. She wanted to go to sleep, after such a successful negotiation, but then Nightgale approached her, and said, holding out her hand.

„Your ring… Give it to me, as agreed.”

She looked at it in surprise, because she had almost forgotten about the agreement. She looked at the ring and took it off her hand, but hesitated. She usually didn't share what she got with anyone, even when she was just a larva called a child.

„Maybe we'd better wait until we get to Krannor Rill...”

The young sorcerer looked at her coldly, and held out her hand.

„If our cooperation is to continue smoothly, I would prefer to receive this ring now, especially since it will be more practical in many ways.„ she said in a calm but firm voice. She bit her lip, fighting with herself, but then handed the ring to Nightgale . Shadow Weaver's daughter looked at it for a moment, then put it on. It was a bit too tight, but after a moment it adjusted to the diameter of her fingers.

„Thank you. It would make our work much more difficult for you if we were to argue about something like this now. I understand you, such artifacts are extremely valuable resources, but also remember that each such thing is associated with a price, which must be paid. Power also has its price, and it is very rare to check that the others will pay it. In such a game as we are playing now, we must remember that we are only resources, and perhaps we will even be the prize someday.”

She shuddered at the words of the sorceress.

Lord Protector Felix Antares allowed his savior to dress his hand. Soon the priests would arrive, who would use their magic to heal it... He had suffered much more serious wounds in battle, and even outside of it, as evidenced by his asymmetrical face. He watched her silently, wondering who she was. Most likely she was an ally, otherwise she would have tried to kill him by now... Then again, allies are often just future enemies.

After a moment, his Warrior was joined by an android who had come out of the post office and the gate. She looked strange, her body was covered in many scars that formed symbols that he could not read. She had no ears, or ear holes. She was dressed in armor that looked like it was made of leather, and it tightly hugged her body. She had no visible weapon, not even the self-defense pistol they usually carried, since they couldn't always cast the spell in time.. Dozens of tiny metal balls floated around her. She walked up to the Warrior Girl, and then the balls began to form symbols, but he couldn't read them either, though they seemed to be in the Drow language, the girl with the metal prosthetics nodded a few times, and then said something in sign language, and her companion stood to one side, and began to watch her balls with surprising fascination, and she herself walked up to him and said.

"Ivi says they had a transport nearby, well hidden, but she got rid of it and everyone guarding it." She spoke calmly, almost without passion, her voice surprisingly methodical . He raised an eyebrow at the android , but he wasn't really surprised that she could handle a military unit. There was something about her that suggested she was just as dangerous as her companion.

„Interesting, I expected it to be a suicide mission. They aren't as fanatical as they were in Horde Prime's time . I wonder if it's degeneration or maybe progress...„ he looked into the woman's eyes, and noticed that they were made of metal... Unusual, because most usually tried to make their new cybernetic eyes look real. But of course he used the traditional external lens, in this woman's case it made an exceptionally Eerie impression, because you could read absolutely nothing from her gaze.

"Who exactly are you, and what are you doing here?" he finally said after a moment, letting it dry. The woman tilted her head to the side and said.

„As you've heard, my name is Despara, but that probably means nothing to you. Nominally, I'm an enforcer of House Drait , but I currently command a portion of your Armada, after Markus was murdered by assassins sent by politicians of the Atrax government , who are jealous of your influence. And before you ask, I've already solved their problem. I have access to the best assassins on Apostate.”

He took a deep breath, because this was shocking news. He wasn't sure if he should call Markus his friend, but he was one of the few he had left after being banished. He felt a sadness, more of a nostalgia than a loss of someone close. Well, Markus had apparently found a replacement for himself, unless of course this girl was responsible for his death. He couldn't rule it out, in an organization like his army, there were sometimes personal frictions, and rivalries were sometimes downright deadly. Personally, he never approved of this type of behavior, because it often distracted his subordinates from their tasks, but when he was this far away, he couldn't help it. Apparently, in this case, he had to accept the facts.

„So reinforcements have arrived, right?„ that thought definitely chased away the sadness of losing his comrade. He finally had all his forces under his control. He would be able to fight on a full scale. His recent worries were forgotten.

„Not only Antares . I managed to win over several Drow corporations to your cause, primarily Night Dragon belonging to House Drait . In addition to the usual forces of the corporation and the Drow noble house, I also brought you thirty thousand orc mercenaries. I also managed to gain increased support from Absalom's troops. The son of the Archduke of Carurystal also came here with a private army, which he acquired in circumstances that are difficult to define. Also the temple of Damoritosh agreed to support your case. In a word, your forces in this region of the Galaxy have doubled, and even speaking of the Fleet... Actually, I forgot about the Order Of The Eclipse, which came here with all its forces, But they are not subject to your command, but still it is something."

Hearing what she said several times. Now it turned out that his situation was much better than he could have ever dreamed. He smiled for the first time in many years.

„So Despara , Welcome to the Fearless Armada… „ he said, and only now he realized what her limbs were. He felt uneasy, because Lady Sorrowflame had told him how incredibly valuable they could be.

„Who are you? Despara. That can't be your real name... „ he asked a bit uncertainly.

„ No... My sister called me Smiley, because I think I like smiling. „ her plates of her mask arranged themselves so that it seemed that she was smiling. And then she took off and he saw a familiar” looking face. Her cheeks were cut, so that the scars reached all the way to the cat's ears. Her face was covered with strange tattoos, looking as if they were connected constellations, and in the yellow cat's eyes he saw amusement. „But you, Dad, you can call me daughter.”

„Okay, now it's time for the tests!„ Entrapta called out and squealed so loudly that she had to lay her ears down.

„Have you ever thought about using your voice as a sonic weapon?„ she said rubbing her ears. The inventor looked at her, then her eyes lit up , and she said in a voice full of excitement.

„Oh! That's a great idea! I'll get on it right away!„ And she started typing something on her datapad, completely ignoring the rest.

"Sorry, but I think we were supposed to test Eti's hand now, right? „ Alatar asked tiredly. They were in the training room, where they had set up training equipment. She came here with Entrapta , and it was also Itel, Rosie and Alatar. Of course, they couldn't forget about Mr. Ilemshaw . She wasn't afraid, however, that the alien living in the aquarium, who was currently steering the ship, might report that she had discovered new properties of her hand. It wasn't such a strange thing to hide it after all. Despite this, she felt strange, as if they were investigating some forbidden secret... Perhaps, that's what they were doing. She wasn't sure what this prosthetic really was, but eventually she had to find out, or at least check what it could do.

Itel looked better in person , though she was still depressed. She guessed it had something to do with what had happened at her sister's wedding. She had almost fallen into her father's hands then, if not for the fact that Lady Ka had underestimated her shooting skills, and the support of Lonnie and Scarlet. Perhaps she had been too harsh on her, but then again, Itel's wound would heal, but she would have to deal with the scars on her soul, because of what she had done, because of the lives she had taken. But that wasn't all. Itel saw that Rosie was her girlfriend now. That had probably taken away all her hopes of them ever being together. Because of that, she could feel guilty, because they were still best friends, so it was sad to see her suffer because she had broken her heart. She could do something, right? Maybe if she found someone for her, the Elf would be happy again? It shouldn't be that hard! She had great taste, at least when it came to girls, and she was very observant, so she would know at first glance what dark secrets her friend's future love was hiding. It also cannot be denied that she had great social skills, so she would have no problem convincing anyone that Itel was the love of her or his life.

Both itel and Rosie were to be her Sparring Partners, while Alatar and Entrapta were to handle data collection and other scientific nonsense.

"So where do we start?" she said, her voice a little uncertain. Rosie smiled and said with her gloves.

„From what you did back there in the undergrounds... You know, from those hack’n’slash!”

She nodded, a little uncertain, because she really didn't know what to do now. How did she do it? She tried to swing her hand around, but it didn't help, it just looked like she was trying to ward off a whole cloud of Flies. Finally, she took too much of a swing and hit herself in the face, which, considering her hand was made of metal, really hurt.

„It clearly doesn't work...„ Entrapta said, and nodded to her Rubbing her cheek. „Maybe someone has to threaten you? Sometimes it worked with Adora.„ The princess with purple hair continued. She turned to her girlfriend and called.

„Rosie! Hit me! Hard! As only you can!”

Rosie jumped at her words and said.

„But I don't want to hit you! Even if you ask me to! I can hit you during training, but that's all! „ In her eyes she saw a mixture of horror and indignation.

„Okay, but someone has to hit me … OUCH!„ She exclaimed as Entrapta threw a can at her.

„And how did it work?„ The inventor looked at it with sincere interest.

"If you wanted to give me a headache, then yes," she said irritably, then looked back down at her hand.

„ Maybe just reach into your heart and seek that power? „ Rosie said and blushed with embarrassment. She was about to say that it was a rather strange idea, but then, surprising everyone, Itel spoke up.

"That makes sense... You know, that hand is a part of you, much more than any cybernetic prosthetic. You've had it for years, as long as I can remember. Maybe if you focus, I can somehow try to access its hidden capabilities, you know, like those people who can slow down their own heartbeats and such."

She scratched the side of her head with her hand, and thought about it. She had had this hand for five years, most of her life. She had long since gotten used to it, and she couldn’t even remember what it was like to have a biological right hand. She liked it, and she knew it was very useful, although lately she had been starting to fear it. It was growing, and perhaps one day it would consume her whole. But now, perhaps she could use it for good, and maybe even, if they reached an understanding, she could somehow stop it from growing. So she closed her eyes, and focused. She could slow her heartbeat, she could use it instinctively, through conditioning, though it had never been necessary. Maybe this would be similar. She focused on all the muscles in her body, especially the one near where her hand ended. She reached out and tried to touch whatever the limb was made of. She discovered that it wasn’t really solid. She bought herself, and then her hand took control as if it was made of something liquid. Entrapta jumped when she saw it and began to speak quickly and loudly.

„It's amazing. Your hand uses nanotechnology, but these aren't nanite machines, but as if created from energy, which fuse into mass. In a sense, this hand is an energy creation, pretending to be created from a matter. I'll have to take samples, To examine the chemical composition, but I certainly won't detect anything, although this is what I have to check anyway, whether I can cut it off for you in a moment, just for a moment... „ She pulled a small circular saw out of her hair, and started to approach it, but when she looked at it warningly, she stepped back and said. „Sorry, sometimes I to eager to examine technology.”

It was still interesting information. She closed her eyes once more and focused. Her hand took the shape of a long scythe, just like before. While Rosie and Entrapta had seen it before, it was the first time for Itel and Alatar. The elf widened her eyes and then summoned the moon blade, and looked at it skeptically.

"If you can't make its edges blunt, then I'm a little afraid to fencing with you..." she said cautiously, and smiled friendly... Itel really needs to find her a girlfriend or boyfriend... She looked at the hand for a moment longer, wondering what other shape it could take, then looked at the other hand, the glove, and had a very interesting idea. The hand returned to its original shape again, but then it transformed into long, curved claws. She looked through them, and then for the first time in a very, very long time, she smiled.

„I got them back... I got my claws back! See! I have claws!„ She called out to everyone and jumped up and then dealt a few quick blows with her new hand.

"Your species always has claws, I think, though I don't think they 're always as sharp as Catra's..." Entrapta asked in an uncertain voice, and Alatar explained.

„Eti's other hand... It was declawed, and the metal one had no claws at all...”

„They were important to me, because thanks to them I was always armed, I could always fight... I could defend myself, I could kill anyone who wanted to hurt me. It's hard for you to imagine what it's like, all you have is your own body, and only it can be your weapon.„ she said in a loud voice, walked up to the wall and ran her claw across it. She made a scratch on it... Those claws were really sharp... She smiled to herself again, she knew it was a very unpleasant smile, like the one she saw on Lady Ka, or... It doesn't matter anymore, she's gone... But she had the right to it. Finally, she discovered a way to at least partially reverse what had been done to her. Of course, she could get a cybernetic prosthesis, and she probably will someday, but not yet, because the maimed hand reminds her of what happened to her and what she still has to do. Namely, kill her father.

When they left the Scorpion sanctuary it was already morning. She was surprised to find that this was probably the first temple she had seen on this planet, although it could have been a sanctuary. There were two soldiers on guard, dressed in black uniforms with the scorpion sting symbol. They were human, with a large amount of elven blood, and probably other species as well. As soon as they saw Hordak, they drew their weapons, long halberds with serrated blades, although they did not look as if they had any experience in using them. But then Mikach ... her husband ran out and calmed them down, saying that they were with them on a mission. They looked at the former ruler of the Horde skeptically, and in their eyes she saw rage and hatred. She guessed that they were former soldiers of the Horde... It was interesting that his own people hated him so much, probably even more than the rest of the planet's inhabitants. She herself put on a hood, in this outfit probably no one would guess that she was the lost queen, but she still tried not to draw attention to herself. Her... husband and sister-in-law warned them about what happens at night in the Valley Of Shattered Armor, but they seemed skeptical. Then they reached a small town, where she had a few vehicles to rent. They did not ask the queen's father for money, but he still gave them a lot of strange coins, with a moon engraving. She looked at one, shuddered when you saw a simplified image of herself on second side. Before they set off on their journey, they decided to stop at a nearby river. She decided that this was a good time to gain the favor of those gods who might be willing to side with her on this quest. She walked out into the middle of the clearing, and began to offer prayers to Sarenrae. Tirin and Ireanis joined her as well, Tonado was less religious, but he also served his Gods, mainly Caliastria and Desna. To her surprise, both her husband and sister-in-law looked at her strangely, as if she had gone mad, but the invader seemed curious, and the android simply ignored her. She noted this in her mind, and then, when she had finished her prayer, she went to Mikach, and asked him.

„,Would you like to go with me... „ she felt strange Today she had, when she talked to him as if she was a young girl who was just courting her beloved. Mikach, He smiled and followed her, his sister winking at him knowingly as he left.

They found themselves by a babbling stream, the waters of which were clear and transparent. She took a twig lying behind her, threw it into the water, and watching it flow away, she asked.

„What was that about you looking at me while I was Praying to Sarenrae ? Don't you respect her here?

Her husband thought for a moment and then replied, then said carefully „Truth be told, who is Sarenrae … This is the first time I've heard that name. Is he one of those gods that the people of Eridani and Daedalus bow to? Such customs are not practiced here… Most people simply worship the world if they have anyone to worship. I understand that it is different in other regions of the universe?„ He smiled at her, and she smiled back, which he was unable to see because of the mask.

„ It's strange, Most of the Galaxy worships these or other gods, Although all are pious... It's not a matter of faith, Gods exist and Manage their Domains. It's not that they are infallible or omnipotent... they take care of certain aspects of our world. They don't know and don't see everything, if that's what you're afraid of, they're not like Horde Prime, it doesn't mean that they're all good, often quite the opposite... Zon-Kuthon , or Asmodeus are assholes, And there are even worse... But even they are needed, because evil is part of reality...„ she said in a hunch, not expecting such theological arguments from herself . In truth, she wasn't very religious. She made sacrifices to Besmara, and sometimes she was bored to Sarrnrae and Desna, and sometimes to Calistria, when the Anger in her heart burned especially strongly, but apart from that she rarely thought about such matters. She was a pirate, after all, not a priestess, and she made a living by doing things that everyone considered immoral.

„It's a strange place, this your... our Etheria, but why should it be surprising since it has been cut off from the universe for all these Millennia?„ she added at the end.

„But now it's not, and we have to deal with all the evil of the Galaxy.„ Mikach said with a grim face.

"Indeed, you must... We all must..." she said and put her arm around her husband and said.

„Sometimes it's hard for me to think of this place as my home... The last five years have been... difficult... That's not the right word... my life has been hard for you to understand... I've been... Driven by anger, but also for pragmatic reasons. When you lead pirates, you have to provide them with Loot… I often had to raid and plunder the ships of ordinary merchants who had done nothing to me. Some of them were Azlantii, but not all, many were unlucky ones who had the misfortune to come across me. I tried to avoid unnecessary casualties... but... you understand I do not have enough power over my people to control them completely. I have a lot of evil on my conscience... It may be hard for you to understand because you are a good man, but I am no longer the person you once knew... That you loved. „ She fell silent and felt tears welling up in her eyes. She began to cry... But her husband put his arms around her neck and said.

„Many bad things happened on this planet... Catra... Grand Marshal of Etheria, ...Sister of that girl you brought, She opened the portal. She wasn't sure what the consequences would be, but it was her or did he make you end up where you experienced so much Suffering..... But I forgave her, because she was a victim herself... Of everything that happened here. You think I wouldn't forgive you… I don't even think I have anything to forgive you.” he said and took off her mask, and then kissed her. She hadn't felt this happy in a long time... she remembered... She now hoped that this kiss would last for eternity. Finally, however, they broke away from each other, and she felt herself blushing, as if she were a teenager.

„So... So we're together again! You're mine again, and I'm yours! It's so wonderful.„ He said with tears in his eyes, falling apart as much as she did. The air was much more humid here, so she could stay without a mask for a while longer. She smiled, and threw off her coat. Underneath she had her regular travel clothes, and said.

„We've lost so much time, we should take every opportunity to make up for it, right, my love?”

he smiled and hugged her again, and then they both lay down on her coat…

The worst part of this expedition was over, or so he thought. In essence, he was a pessimist, although if you look at his life, he was very lucky. He had a family, the one who enslaved him was annihilated, and the He had a family, the one who enslaved him was annihilated, and the punishment for his crimes was, in truth, slight. Now he also managed to avoid the fury of the former queen, not to mention escaping the horde of the living dead and guard machines. Now they only had to investigate some ruins, and what could have gone wrong then? As he had recently learned, a lot. He wasn't sure how the local Wizards guarded their domain, in fact, he knew little about it, although for many years his right hand had been one of the most powerful sorceress on the planet. He had never been interested in magic, he tried to stay as far away from it as possible, and it had often backfired on him. Right now he was the least useful member of their squad… Before he could have taken care of protecting those sorcerers, but now that the former queen and her entourage had appeared… He didn't know where her power came from, but it was strong enough to protect them… So to tell the truth he wasn't really useful here, but then again he didn't have anywhere else to go right now so he could still participate in this endeavor. The voice of the girl in bionic armor snapped him out of his reverie.

„Good morning … so you are the man… the clone who invaded this planet?„ She asked carefully and he nodded.

„Yes, although you probably already know that from your captain's reaction, you heard how she called me... „ He said, trying to hide the irritation in his voice.

„But how exactly did you do it? Are you such a powerful Warrior that you conquered a kingdom by yourself? I've heard of similar stories, for example Aroden, from the lost Golarion, only he eventually became a God... „ She looked at him with those strange eyes without whites. Even in that armor she seemed so tiny... The android approached them and sat down next to her , watching them and smiling all the time. She seemed delighted that she had gone beyond her ruins... She reminded him a bit of his brother, the one against who inherited his name. He sighed before he began to explain

„I was on one of the factory ships that were completely automated, and could produce machines If only they had the raw materials. I was... a bit lost, but I was still in much better shape than my other brothers when they lost contact with hivemind. I was found by the Scorpion King, Scorpia's grandfather ... Princess

Scorpia... According to local law, he was not a true ruler, because the country was to be ruled by his niece, but he rebelled. He expelled her from the capital... Scorpions were different from the rest of the inhabitants of this planet, they did not consider the First Ones as noble progenitors, but as those who conquered them. I remembered that My big brother defeated this species, and so when I mentioned it, he assumed that we could be allies. He swore allegiance to Horde Prime, but even then I did not delude myself that he would keep his promise after it was all over, because He guessed that I was unable to contact my brother. I armed and trained his men, and thus he banished his niece to Brightmoon. The success was so significant that he eventually declared himself king of all Etheria . On the other hand, your captain... the former queen supported the exiled scorpion's niece... And then Shadow Weaver came, and many things changed. She was a master of intrigue and manipulation, she improved the management of the Fright Zone and used the black Garnet... Although at first she did not have full access to it... At that time I did not fully understand what these stones were, I saw in it a source of energy, nothing more. And so then only the king's niece could use its power, not him or his daughters. In the end the king was murdered... And I and Shadow Weaver gained absolute power... That's it... „ he said looking at the girl, At first he doubted that such old events would interest her. However, she listened to him carefully, and nodded during his words, and then said.

„You were a stranger in a strange land... You did pretty well...”

He frowned and said.

„Strange words from young person ... how old are you? Seventeen? Usually, kids who aren't clones like me with downloaded knowledge don't look at the world this way.

„I am an aristocrat from the Azlantii Star Empire, we learn intrigue from early childhood, although I'm not very good at it anyway, because I spent most of my life on Jadehell, where there was no place for such things... where there was no place for such things... „ she said in a surprisingly sad voice. Heart Gift listened to their conversation with sincere surprise, and this strange sorcerer and the king-consort's sister were sitting next to each other, and Saihe was telling her something, but Castaspella seemed not to be too happy about it, and massaged her temples, and this little creature seemed to be patrolling the clearing, which with its short legs required some work from it.

At that moment the queen returned with her husband. Something had changed, though he wasn't sure what. Castaspella bared her teeth in a smile... What was she so happy about? But then the queen looked at him and, frowning, said menacingly.

„I hope this individual didn't bother you?”

„No, Madam Captain, I wanted to ask him about some things... „ said the girl, a little embarrassed, and he added.

„I only gave her a short lesson in history and politics, but I have the impression that when it comes to the latter, I am the one who could learn from her.”

The next tests consisted of using Eti's hand to throw energy bolts, which probably surprised Dragonkin the most , probably because he had never suspected that hand of such properties. In Rosie's opinion, it was very interesting and useful, after all, she had already used it once to shoot down a Drone. The targets were holographic Gremlins floating in the air, moving erratically in front of a solid wall of self-regenerating material. The first shots were not very accurate, it took Eti some time to develop the technique. She was concerned that with each shot, the cat girl grimaced, and her hair stuck out more and more.

„Okay, and I have another such idea. „ Eti said and pulled out the battery, took it in her hand, which sucked all the power out of it and then fired a powerful beam of energy. It pierced the wall, making a hole in it, and the cat-like girl was thrown back. She could smell hot metal, and burning. Terrified, she ran to her girlfriend and took her in her arms, checking if she was okay Eti's hair was sticking out in all directions, and her metal hand lay limp, but she was relieved to find that nothing serious had happened to her. She sighed heavily, and wiped her forehead from the sweat that had covered it. Entrapta approached her, clearly used to such sights, which was a bit worrying, but Alatar seemed to be worried.

„I guess it's better to use it only as a last resort... „ Dragonkin said quietly and seemed to be scanning her with his cybernetic eye.

„Like when you don't cook the steak again... I don't like it rare, I'm not a cat to eat raw meat!„ the cat girl grumbled, which from what she knew meant she was in good shape...

„Your body is not yet fully adapted to conduct such an amount of energy... If you were made entirely of this Nano energy material... „ Entrapta said, but Eti shuddered. The princess inventor did not know what was happening to Eti's body. She probably did not mean anything bad by it, I guess , but it revived the girl's old peace.

„I think I need to rest a bit... „ said Eti and went to her cabin.

Rosie was very nervous. This was going to be a very important moment for her… And everything had to be perfect. She was wearing a bathrobe that she had brought with her at the very beginning of the journey, but somehow she had never put it on, there was no occasion, but now it would come in very handy. She knocked on the door of Her girlfriend's cabin and heard from inside.

„Come in, I probably won't bite, but I'm not promising anything.„ Eti said. She took a deep breath and went inside. Her girlfriend was wearing only shorts and a blouse with sleeves, so she was much more lightly dressed, you see usually. That's actually good...

„Oh hi Rosie… „ She said almost smiling. She smiled back, she had her glasses but preferred not to take gloves because of what she was about to do.

„I wanted... I wanted... I mean... „ she tried to speak in sign language, but it wasn't easy at the moment.

„Yes? Is something wrong? Eti asked , tilting her head to the side. In her eyes she saw anxiety and concern. She took a deep breath and let the ties of her robe fall to the floor... She had nothing underneath... At the sight of her nakedness, the girl's jaw dropped... She blinked a few times and said.

„ Rosie... What are you... „ she was completely astonished and probably shocked. She felt herself turning red with shame. She was so stupid, she made an idiot of herself! The stupidest girl in the entire Galaxy. She knelt down and reached for her bathrobe. She was so ashamed... Tears ran down her face. But then she felt a hand on her right shoulder. A hand without a glove. She looked up and saw Eti, who was smiling at her shyly, she seemed to be as embarrassed as she was. She helped her up and asked.

„That means... That you want to be with me... „ Eti wasn't sure where to look.

„Make love to you? Well, yes... you've already done what, you've told me about it and on top of that, what I've seen... „ She said again feeling herself blush.

„Okay then... If you're sure... „ said the cat girl and she nodded, and then her girlfriend wrapped her tail around her waist, put one hand on her chest, and hugged her with the other and kissed her.

„I don't like riding horses, it hurts me all over... Especially my butt, but also my head. A little longer and my brain turned to jelly, I tell you. „ Rao cried out loudly and ostentatiously to attract Klest's attention.. To emphasize the importance of their words, they swayed on his mount's back, as if they was about to fall.

„That's great„ said the woman with blood-colored hair, not even looking in his direction. Miriam, on the other hand, gave him a look full of irritation, but then grimaced and leaned over the back of her horse. They sighed seeing their friend's suffering. In reality, horseback riding didn't bother them, although it wasn't used to it, but they wanted to somehow suggest to Klest that she slow down, because they knew that Miriam was suffering a lot. Unfortunately, their friend was very ashamed to admit that she was suffering. It was caused by her leg. They knew that the dark spell cast by the Royal Mage to encourage the other rulers to war caused her to be crippled. Since then, pain had been constantly with her. For her this ride must have been real torture, but the woman with cold, dead eyes didn't care. They were furious with her, but they also couldn't do much, because this woman was not entirely balanced and they preferred not to provoke her. Only if it goes on like this, Miriam will drop from exhaustion, And they won't survive this! Unfortunately, their friend didn't want to complain, although her words might have somehow influenced Klest period.

They rode together in a whole caravan of horses. Most of the members of their group looked like bandits or mercenaries employed by Klest, although some made a slightly better impression, and seemed to be scholars, who for some reason were with a woman who looked like she dyed her hair in the blood of her victims. Maybe she did, they couldn't see it, but they didn't want to rule it out. Ghost rode next to them, lost in thought, and paying more attention to her companions.

At first, after the Huntsman had been chased away, they had been driving for a good two hours, they kept seeing this huge cloud of smoke, which was supposed to come from where Miriam had gone with Klest. Every now and then, the woman with blood-red hair would take out some small device, point it at the cloud and check something while looking at it, and then she heard herself drive on with relief. It must have been an exaggeration, that the cloud looked a bit like a big mushroom…

They met the rest of Klest's subordinates at the nearest bridge, where they were waiting for them, apparently against orders, because the woman with red hair became irritated and she yelled at a pair of elves..

„What are you doing here! I told you to get the hell to the fortress, And you're waiting here for devils knows why!”

The moon elves paid little attention to their employer's outburst of anger, but the woman said.

“It would be better if we waited until you did, because without you there's no point in talking to Buri and Iron Hand anyway..”

„But now if someone chases us, they will head straight for that bridge, because it is the easiest way to cross the entire river within a radius of many kilometers.„ Klest continued to yeling.

„But why would someone be chasing us?„ asked the Partner… Or maybe the Elf's brother.

„That's why! „ She pointed at a huge cloud of smoke in shape of mushroom rising nearby. That was probably enough of an explanation, because they both nodded and without further questions they set off on their journey. They rode for another day, and they didn't even slow down for the night, until finally the sky on the horizon began to take on the red color of dawn. It was not certain how far they had traveled, and the group had no wagons, and they carried all their supplies on mules and other more exotic animals. Actually, they could admire their organization, at first glance Klest didn't look like anyone, but she was able to impose any discipline on anyone, including herself. They even seemed to treat their leader with respect bordering on adoration, which was completely their beyond understanding.

On the way Miriam told him what had happened. They were almost excited, when they heard that their friend was on board the Star Boat, and were downright jealous, and then they werelearned that this explosion came from the destroyed star boat.. It clutched its head when it learned what the woman with red hair had done to that ship! How could something destroy such a magnificent ancient object! But oh well, that woman looked like someone who would have no problem burning a last book on the world just to keep warm.

Neither knew who Jaso was working with, except that they were extremely dangerous individuals. Even Khandros was afraid of them, and he was terrible individual knew that far too well. They guessed who they might be, they had heard about them from Prospero… People who worship the Dark Beings of legend, and not only humans but also his kin, supposedly their rulers did not care what race their servants belonged to. But what could they do? They were only a scholar, A not-so-resourceful person who once wanted to get to know the world, but then painfully experienced its dark side and was brutally brought down to earth in a very literal way… Now they only wanted… They were not sure what they wanted from life… They only knew that they wanted to be with Miriam and wanted to help her… at all costs….

They pressed its lips together and pulled on the stirrups, stopping their mount. The animal stopped in place, and almost fell because of it, only its unusual sense of balance saved it from falling.

“We have to stop!” they called, and then everyone was moving toward them, and for a moment it felt like it was going to panic, but with a great effort it controlled itself and called again.

„She needs to rest!„ it pointed at Miriam, who turned all red and growled angrily.

„I can speak for myself!”

They looked at her friend and said.

„Well, tell them, instead of dying from pain. You're in such a state that tomorrow you won't be able to get out of bed, and what will happen then?„ They shouted, trying to sound like someone confident.

„I'll manage somehow, it's none of your business.„ the Queen's Cousin grawled. Klest, who was opposite the column, uttered a few loud curses, then turned around and when she reached them, she said

"Maybe, for fuck's sake , you could save your lovers' quarrel for another time, because I'd be in a hell of a hurry?" Her eyes glowed a strange blue.

„We're not... What's it to you anyway! You're dragging us to some fortress, but you don't deign to explain why and what you intend to do there! We don't know who you are or what you're up to! We do know that you have many enemies, and one of them is so terrible that you'd rather tire these mounts than slow us down so that we could think about what we're planning, and where we're actually going ... And yes, Rao is right, my leg hurts in a way that's impossible to describe.”

Klest looked at her grimly and spoke slowly with a humorless smile on her face.

„When you agreed to participate in this expedition, you didn't ask for details and now you've changed your mind? I guess it's a bit too late for that...”

Miriam gave her an equally gloomy look and said gloomily.

„You promised us to explain in the future, so now is actually a good time, because seriously, now is the perfect time. „ For a moment, both women stared at each other and finally Klest said.

„Lord Tholuvian is one of the avatars of the Unnamed Darkness, something incredibly powerful and, more importantly, absolutely terrifying… Your elven friend probably knows who we're talking about…

They knew... They had heard tales, not only those known to his people, but also those told by lonely scholars like Prospero, and hermits gazing in horror at the starry sky... They had read fragments of ancient books, the original versions of which they had fortunately never seen... until recently. And they recognized the name... The Unnamed Darkness, the Nameless Mist, and the Creeping Chaos... Three ancient beings, so old that They were already ancient when the first stars lit up. They were not certain whether she was exactly... or he... They? They could not even define that, if it was possible at all. Miriam noticed their expression, frowned, and then asked.

„And what does that mean? Some guy with a pretentious title is going to chase you, but looking at you, it doesn't seem to me that this is new to you. Anyway, it seems to me that with these people, and with your skills, you should probably manage... The three of us managed his servant, now it shouldn't be any harder.

Klest looked at her for a moment and then she started laughing nervously, which her subordinates didn't pay much attention to, they just went about their business.

„You know nothing about the secrets that this universe holds, and pray to all your gods that you don't get to know them up close like I did. Although from what I've noticed, it's too late for you and this world. I had met him once before, a long, long time ago, when my mother had struck a deal with him and wanted to sacrifice me to him to kill my father..... and he probably hasn't forgotten that. believe me, I saw his face and the horror hidden there… I would sooner set Xadia on fire than let myself be captured... But okay, we still have to rest for a few hours, because I have to check a few things I've learned. Tell your loved one that you can relax. At least for two hours... I hope that's enough for you.„ The woman said, smiling slyly, and then she started giving orders to the rest of her subordinates.

„But you didn't tell us where we were going?„ said Miriam, not taking her eyes off the woman with red hair.

„To my friends, that should be enough for now.„ Klest said, smiling venomously, as always.

„What do you mean when you say friends? Do you mean people from... the same place as you?”

This time Klest smiled differently than usual. This time the smile was sad, even nostalgic.

“Oh no. There is no one left, that would be from where I was born.„ she said quietly, and and now for the first time Rao saw a human being in her, sad and overwhelmed by what she had experienced..

They didn't have much time to rest, so Miriam decided she could sit down and make some tea and see if they had anything for a snack. She wasn't really hungry, and she would gladly drink something very strong that would ease the pain. Herbs didn't work on her condition, or at least she didn't know of any. It was possible that somewhere in Xadia there was a healer who could help her cope with what had been done to her, but she was starting to lose hope... Perhaps what Klest had said was true, and somewhere out there among the stars there lived someone who could help her. But the pain was only a small part of her suffering. Now she felt something like hunger, as if she had to satisfy a need she couldn't name, although she knew what she had to do. She could hold out for a while, but she wasn't sure how long. Was the desire to find a cure for her condition the main reason she stuck with this woman? Probably. Of course, she didn't hide the fact that she also wanted to learn more about what stretched beyond the vault of heaven. It was hard for her to imagine that anything could exist outside the continent she knew. Even the tales of the distant southern islands seemed quite fantastic. And the fact that there were other worlds, inhabited by completely alien ores, was hard to grasp even for someone like her. Just a few years ago, even the other side of the continent seemed inaccessible. And now she was traveling with a Skywing Elf scholar, a Moonshadow Elf Illusionist, and a woman who claimed to have come from the stars.. She should feel full of hope because new possibilities were opening up before her, which she could once only dream of. But now she felt only pain, exhaustion and apathy... So now she looked at the boiling tea, silent and gloomy, until Rao sat down next to her.

"I know... I probably shouldn't ask how you're feeling, right?" They said carefully, but it was watching her with concern. She smiled at him, still in pain, and reached out to take his hand in hers, and said.

„I'm sorry for what I said. You wanted to help me, and I was mean to you . You have a good heart and you really care about others, even me, even though I'm not a good person."

Rao looked at her in astonishment, and cried out.

„What are you talking about! You're the best person I've ever been!„ They squeezed her hand tighter.

„I am a dark mage, someone with the ability to do terrible things in the name of power and might. No dark mage is innocent, the soul of each of us has been marked by darkness. There is not an ounce of nobility in us, despite what he tries to convince others. Viren may have been able to wash his face with the good of humanity and the safety of Xadia, but I am not like him. For me, all dark mages would die ... Including me. „ she said and looked down... A single tear ran down her cheek, and then Rao hugged her and wiped her face.

„Don't say such things! You're wonderful... You're wonderful... You're...„ Rao started crying and hugging her.

„Will you do something for me?„ she asked quietly. Rao nodded, because he knew what she was asking of him. He moved closer and then she embraced him. Their lips touched. From the outside it looked like a kiss, but it wasn't. She took a breath, and began to suck the air out of Rao's lungs. The elven person arched back as if in ecstasy. But they also began to suffocate. She too felt a surge of pleasure, because she had devoured his life force. Her body was filled with sudden power... She wanted more... She began to take his life force once again. More and more ... Rao's body became cold and hard as a stone. They were on the sidelines and no one paid attention to them, thinking that it was just an ordinary kiss. She wanted to stop, but she couldn't. With horror, she realized that she was about to kill Rao ... Finally, someone pulled her back and she tore herself away from the sky elf.

„What are you doing to them? You were killing them!„ said the Ghost in a sharp voice.

„I'm sorry... I didn't mean to.„ she cried and wanted to run to Rao , but the Moonshadow Elf grabbed her by the arm and pulled her away again. She went to Rao herself and looked at him. When she felt his pulse, she said.

„Fortunately they are alive, but it was lucky. What did you do to it? I've only heard of such things in legends."

„ I… I…. Sometimes I have to do this because… I'm cursed… When Viren cast the spell, I was pretending to be my cousin… They must have been mistaken… I survived, but I was maimed… What's worse, I'm slowly dying… Or rather, I'm becoming a living corpse… a monster from dark stories…„ she lowered her head, because that was the truest truth. She was a monster. She almost killed one of the few people who cared about her. She should have died during the attack then… Why the hell did she have such a strong will to live. Then she felt a hand on her shoulder. She looked up and saw Rao looking at her with sadness and concern in his eyes.

„I'm so sorry... I'm sorry!„ she cried through tears, but the Elven person sat down next to her and hugged her.

„It's nothing... Nothing happened... You see, nothing is wrong with me... I just need to eat properly... Do you think they have a good cook in this Hammerhall ?„ They asked, smiling broadly...

The fortress of Hammerhal looked impressive, and even by human standards, at least according to Gwendolyn. Her people did not build castles, or even cities, but lived in large semi-self-sufficient villages that protected themselves with the help of illusion magic and the blades of their warriors. This fortress was built on the shape of a star, its storms were not the tallest, but thick and full of cannons. She had heard of this human invention, still quite new and somewhat unwieldy, but capable of causing terrible destruction. From what she had heard, the fortress was an extraordinary construction, and built with the money of its owner. Supposedly, he had found large deposits of silver on the border of the kingdom and the elven lands, which he invested in smelters of excellent quality steel and a glassworks, so strong and transparent, that could not be obtained anywhere else. Then, when he was already rich, he bought a lot of Earth from a debt-ridden noble house living on the border. Few were willing to live so close to Xadia, where a single Angry Dragon could devastate the entire area and destroy your life's work. Now, of course, the situation had changed dramatically, Xadia had opened up to travelers from outside, and many large towns had sprung up near the passage, although she did not know how much the lord of this fortress benefited from their existence, but as far as she knew human enterprise, he had certainly grown rich from it.

The fortress stood on a hill, around which a small town had grown. Further on stretched green fields, where grain and fruit trees grew. Here, near the breach, the land was fertile, maybe not as fertile as borderlandss in Duren , but those who were brave enough to settle here could reap truly magnificent harvests. However, many people were still too afraid to live near the border of the country of bloodsuckers and murderers. Although the young king tried to convince his subjects that these were just made-up Tales, She knew well that there was more to them than just a Grain of Truth... She looked at Miriam riding next to her, who looked much more rested. Unfortunately, there were many more dark Legends in the world than she could have guessed.

She kept to the back and watched everyone carefully. Her greatest attention was of course drawn by the leader of their not-so-small Caravan. Earlier, due to her profession, she had heard a bit about this woman, although she had never personally provided her with any services. She knew that she was a treasure hunter and a surprisingly educated person considering her appearance as a murderer and bandit. Now, however, she learned that she was hiding much more, and she really wanted to find out what. It caused a gigantic explosion that caused the sun to be temporarily obscured by a cloud of dust.. The Dark Mage felt insecure around her, and then some monster came for her and her companions, whom she had not heard of even in the most terrifying stories. What connections could she possibly have with the owner of this fortress, supposedly one of the richest people in the entire kingdom? She did not know, but it was only a matter of time before she found out.

When they stood at the fortress wall, Klest went to the gate and called out.

„Tell old Brumi to get off his ass and let me in because his buddy has a lot to talk about... What the fuck are you doing? I have to fucking write this, I can do it with a knife if you keep pissing me off!„ She shouted and shook her fist at the two guards who were watching her with their jaws hanging open. Seeing that they were not reacting to her words, Klest took out a knife and started sharpening her nails with it ostentatiously, until they finally came to their senses and ran downstairs. After a moment, the gate opened and their whole group drove inside.

She had never been without any human fortress, but this one looked strange somehow... In addition to a large number of cannons, all the guards were armed with menacing-looking muskets with strange locks, inside there was a statue of a man with a long beard and an axe in his hands. She suspected that it was the lord of the castle, but then she saw him when he went downstairs.

He was a short man, she knew that happened to humans. But unlike other similar cases, his proportions were completely different, he was also powerfully muscled and his ears were slightly pointed.

„Tell me you're not bothering me out of boredom, for fuck's sake, or Celinka will greet you.„ He pointed to the large hammer he carried on his back.

"I'd sooner blow your stupid head off, but I just came on an important matter. I found it! I found the other ship!" she cried and started laughing. The man's eyes widened and he bared his teeth.

„Really? That's great! I'll call the others right away! feel good here, I've settled in well, but Iron Hand, Shash, and Iath will be happy. Too bad Damien didn't live to see it. „ He said, smiling sadly. She knew the name, it was the name of the Royal Mage Calum first father, but it couldn't have come from him, could it? She didn't know much about him, but he probably wasn't someone who would hang out with people like Klest...

„And what about Scyilis?„ asked the woman with murderous eyes, and she had a feeling she saw Concern on her face.

„Everything is fine with your sister, as good as it can be. fine in her case. Nothing terrible has happened since the last time, so I guess it's fine, right?„ he said, he said that I would be embarrassed.

„Good, Call everyone to gather in the chamber of secrets... „ The woman with scarlet hair gave the order. „ Then she pointed behind her and said. „ These are Miriam, Queen Aanya's cousin, and Rao, an elven scholar.„ She pointed to the pair behind her. The dark bag nodded, looking uncertainly at the Host, but Rao walked up to him and grabbed his hand, then said.

„Oh, it's nice to meet you. I've never been to a fortress like this and I've always been curious about what they look like inside.”

The short man shook his head disapprovingly, but sighed heavily and introduced himself.

„You can call me Brumi Hammerhall From the Hammerhall Clan . And by the way, I'm a dwarf, but that probably means nothing to you anyway so let's get to the point.” he gestured for them to leave.

"What about me?" the Ghost asked cautiously, and everyone looked her way as if she had been essentially invisible up until now, like the Ghost.

„I think you should stay here, because I don't know how much I can trust you... Someone will probably assign you quarters soon, right?„ Klest said, smiling slyly at her.

„Of course, it's not a problem for me, and I'm so tired, comma, I'd love to rest.„ she replied, smiling much more friendly, but in her mind she was already planning how to get inside. After all, she was a snake, and these can squeeze into any crack

She felt disoriented as she followed Klest and her friend. Of course, if the woman could have someone like that as a friend, she wasn't sure. However, their relationship seemed quite friendly, which was something she had never expected. She had heard a little about the ruler of Hammerhall Fortress, but no about secrets like these. At times he inspired the admiration or envy of the Duren nobility, and was a living proof of Katolian determination.. Now, of course, he aroused much more interest in himself, because they were right next to the border that had just been opened. She had to admit that she intended to go to this area anyway, when she wanted to travel on the other side of the continent. Of course, after what had happened to her, rumors about foreign Lords were of little interest to her, unless they were related to the cursed by the gods Mage. She wondered why someone with such a good reputation would hang out with someone who was an adventurer and a murderer.. On the other hand, many aristocrats secretly associated with underworld types in order to look after the interests of their family.. But Klest was no ordinary adventurer. Like this man, she came here from outside their world, which went some way to explaining where he got his fortune, at least in part... But she was more worried about what they would do with her. She didn't trust Klest any more than she did the hungry and angry Bantera, and besides, even if she had promised her something, it was not certain that her friends would honor her promises. On the other hand, these Brumi seem like a man who kept his word, and would not poison his guests. But she knew that appearances could be deceiving, after all, that was what politics was all about. She could only hope that Brumii would guess that his acquaintance with the queen's cousin would help him much more than it would hurt him.

She realized that they were going deeper and deeper down, towards the underground part of the fortress. That Chamber of Secrets was probably there. She had to admit that the less sensible part of her was glad that they would learn secrets that she had not even dreamed of a few days ago. She had to be careful, because it was easy to lose vigilance when you were so close to satisfying your desires. That was why she kept telling herself that she had to keep an eye on everything and be the more sensible of the two. Rao, however, seemed completely charmed and happy with where they had ended up.

„Oh, that's a really magnificent structure, I've never been that deep underground, maybe apart from the brewery. I almost fell into a beer barrel there, because I was curious how deep it was. I didn't even know you could build barrels that big! To this day I don't know how many people would have to drink all the beer they stored there!”

Brumi laughed heartily and said.

„All it takes is one modest dwarven party, and I assure you, there is no barrel in the galaxy that hasn't been emptied by thirsty dwarves!„ Their host assured them, and added after a moment of thought. „It must be admitted, however, that the beer here is not that bad, in Katolis they know what they're doing, although of course their beer cannot be compared to true Dwaven Ale.”

„You've already used that word... Is that what the inhabitants of your kingdom are called? Where is it? Are you a person from the stars like Klest?„ Rao showered him with petals , clearly pleased that they could expand their knowledge. She also listened attentively to their conversation, but did not speak. Brumi laughed and said.

„That's a lot of questions at once! I like you already! And no, the name dwarf has nothing to do with any kingdom, it's the name of my species... Supposedly we come from the Lost Golarion, where we once had a few kingdoms, but that's ancient times, and now we live scattered throughout the galaxy. Many of us mine asteroids and comets. We have a lot of small kingdoms, usually consisting of a single stronghold, where a king or thane rules ...”

„Oh, so you're the king here too!„ Rao interrupted him. Their eyes shone with fascination.

Brumi waved his hand and said with a laugh.

„There must be many more dwarves living here than just me, and the king would probably be a little nervous if someone declared himself king on his lands... Even this nice kid.„ then he raised an eyebrow. „You didn't ask what comets, Golarion and the like are, but the most important thing for you right now. You're quite smart, and you think outside the box, I like you!„ he patted Rao firmly on the back, Which blushed and said.

„Oh That was very nice! But I have one more question! Are you preparing a nice dinner? Because I ate there once yesterday, and I'm very hungry!”

This time the lord of the castle laughed loudly and said.

„Don't worry, I don't skimp on cooks, And besides, I have some specialties here according to ancient dwarven recipes. My friends can cook too!”

„If Iron Hand keeps serving what it used to, it could be fun if an elven kid tries to eat it.„ Klest said, baring her teeth, sho she gave her an irritated look. She had never understood the contemptuous or hostile attitude towards elves.

„Don't worry! I never actually add battery fluid to soup anymore... ehh, I remembered how Damien broke his tooth because Anacite served a whole dead ground turtle for dinner.„ He sighed, smiling , Although she saw sadness in his eyes. She looked at them sideways. She knew that this and where Prince Calum's biological father, now a Royal High Mage, also wore... Of course, it could be a coincidence, the case used to live in an inn run by sisters Aanya and Miriam, so she should have suspected nothing... But after what she had recently learned, she considered that anything was possible.

Finally they came to a large czamber, higher than the outer wals of the fortress. Beyond the door were several levels of galleries, from one of which led to a post that connected with what was stored here.

It was a triangular metal object, as big as a house, maybe even bigger. It stood on three supports, and she had the impression that it had something like a cannon or a huge musket mounted in front, and something similar at the top, two narrow barrels set in a semicircular dome…... As soon as she saw it, she stopped and stared open-mouthed, and Rao folded his hands in delight.

„Oh this thing is wonderful! Truly fascinating!! I don't know what it is, but it's beautiful!”

Rao exclaimed happily and Klest asked.

„How did you get him here? That must have taken a hell of a lot of work.

„It wasn't hard, because Iron Hand fixed the drive a bit, enough for us to rise up and we flew into this cave and then I built a fortress over it.. It took some time, and it cost a lot of gold. We hit rocks a few times trying to fit in here, but it was just scratches. Compared to what that bastard did to him, it was nothing serious...” He pointed to the cracks in the armor stretching across the starboard side of the ship. You could see through two more layers of plating.

„This is your.. spaceship, right?„ she asked, not even looking at the other hosts. Brumi nodded thoughtfully and said slowly with a bit of sadness in his voice

„ This is the Sailor of Far Horizon, our ship that brought us here. Unfortunately, it was badly damaged and well, we're trapped here unless our dear Klest has come up with something.”

„Perhaps, but it will require your help.„ The woman with the blue eyes of a murderer said, smiling mysteriously.

She looked again at the cracks in the hull, which looked a bit like grays . She had the impression that they resembled, disturbingly, claw marks…

"What damaged it?" she asked cautiously, feeling a strange, indefinable unease. She didn't know anything about spaceships, but they had to be incredibly resilient... They had to survive Starstorms or something, right? It must have been terribly windy this high above the highest mountains that made sense, after all, that was how the sun moved, right?

„We had an encounter with a Void Dragon... A particularly lousy beast... „ The dwarf spat to the side. Rao's eyes widened in delight upon hearing this.

„Oh, you really met a real Void Dragon here! This is incredible! I've read about this creature in books and heard many legends about it!„ They said with excitement. Then another person appeared on the gallery. She was tall and had long silver-blue hair , a little androgynous facial features and she was dressed in trousers and a jacket. at her belt she had a pistol, looking even stranger than the one Klest had. Her eyes were the same color, Pink, with no visible whites, and her ears were pointed, like an elf's. But she was hornless and had five fingers.

„ Oh I see you've changed a bit Iath ... You're a she/her now, aren't you?„ Klest asked, tilting her head to the side.

„And you haven't changed at all Which is surprising considering that over 20 years have passed. Even I felt all the years that had passed since we were trapped here.„ The woman said, crossing her arms over her chest.

„You see, I lead a healthy lifestyle. I eat few carbs, spend a lot of time outdoors , and have a glass of wine every day! Just like the nutritionists say!„ Said a woman with cold Blue eyes that showed no Joy, despite the smile on her face. Then the woman called Iath looked at them and raised an eyebrow.

„I see you've brought some guests with you... That's nice, because I've been bored hanging out here for a while now, and I'm careful not to draw attention, because someone might wonder who this strange Elf is... „ She said, smiling at them a little warmer than Klest 's. Rao sucked in a breath with a hiss , and asked excitedly.

„You're a half-elf, aren't you? I've been wondering for some time whether you really exist! Because for many years... There's never been a mixed human-elf couple!”

"Why did you think about it?" she suddenly interjected with a hint of suspicion, and Rao's face reddened. Klest rolled her eyes and said.

„So maybe I'll introduce you to the rest and we can talk about our affairs?”

They were quite hungry, although they demanded a tasty meal mainly because they wanted to show Miriam in this way that what had happened didn't bother it at all. It was probably their first time...it mean, it wasn't the first time she had fed on them... They had had to help her a few times when she was particularly exhausted, especially after using magic. They had heard that once she had paid... various people to take Their breath... However, it was risky, because in this way someone could find out what was happening to her. Even in Duren, Dark magic was not forbidden, but something like that could arouse fear and hatred in many of the inhabitants of this kingdom. That is why they offered to help their... friend in this regard. It wasn't at all about the fact that it was almost like a kiss, although it didn't bother them at all... This time, however, it was different than usual, and they felt like they were dying, they were turning into stone... It was a terrible feeling, but they had already experienced much worse things in their life, so they decided not to burden they friend with guilt. Especially since there were fascinating discoveries waiting for them. These people confirmed That they came from the Sea Of Stars, They saw their boat, that's a ship and it was beautiful! And they met a void dragon. That was also amazing, because these were creatures from legends that inspired fear but also delight. A part of their soul wanted him to meet one of these creatures themselves, although they knew that it would be a truly terrifying encounter. However, if they wanted to know the world, they had to be ready to encounter its darkest side. And then there was that Half-Elf! Very few stories survived, and most of them were rather unreliable, about whether children could be created from mixed unions of their races... In fact, they expected that it should have more Horns and fewer Fingers, But it still gave him hope for... Why did he think about such nonsense?

They were ushered into a large hall, with a long stone table made of centers. Here, so close to the ship, they didn't see many servants, but everything was so clean that someone must have been cleaning it. From the next room, he could smell freshly prepared food.

„Shash has already started preparing the meal, for I sent a messenger as soon as I saw you. I have a few trusted servants here, though even Oli does not know everything about us, apart from Shash's wife.„ Brumi said, making Klest whistle.

„You surprised me with that... For an honorable and brave Vesk to lose his head for a human... It's impossible to understand.„ She said smiling, but Iath , who sat down next to Brumi, said.

„A lot of things have happened here during your absence , although you probably won't consider much of it important. You've only been here once every year or two, just for money and ammunition... We had to live here somehow, while you were playing treasure hunter, like in the old stories.„ She said and put her hand on Brumi's shoulder .

„I see...„ Said the woman with blood-colored hair gloomily.„As you can see, I've been busy looking for a way to get us out of here, and also to get the information we came here for. I've created my own company of adventurers and made many alliances to do that, just look at these two.„ She said and introduced them in two words. Iath. The other woman raised her head to the side, and looked at Rao with curiosity, a bit like he was an exotic pet and asked.

„That's interesting, it's the first time I've seen an elf here, not counting Klest's two friends, but I couldn't see them properly, which I regret very much.„ She said and winked at the Dwarf, he looked at her reproachfully. They blushed again at her words, and then Iath continued.

"I've never seen anyone like you before ... Let me remind you, are you a Sky Elf or a Star Elf?" she said and pulled out a rectangular silver object and started tracing and tapping it with her finger.

„Well, I'm a skywing elf... Don't you recognize us? Even humans rarely have trouble with that, and you're, well... half one of us! Well, half-elf!„ They called in confusion. The woman narrowed her eyes and spoke slowly.

„If you said that somewhere on the elven continent of Castroval, you would get punched in the face and lose all your teeth!"

Tye wanted to ask why that would happen… But then dinner was brought inside.. A stout woman came out from the next room , followed by two young servants… If the tureen with the delicious-smelling soup, as well as the plates.

„You're lucky I got caught up in something today, and I suspected you'd have some guests, or we'd have dinner together, so I prepared more in advance... And good morning to our wonderful guests, I hope you like it... „ She smiled at them, and Rao smiled back and greeted them.

„Oh, I'm so glad you made more because I'm terribly hungry!„ and started eating the soup. It was good, paprika-tomato with meat, with small pasta, slightly spicy. The woman patted her on the head and said.

„They fought with us for so many years, and because of that no one knew how polite they are.”

Miriam also began to eat, but watched the hosts closely. They wanted to tell her not to worry, but it probably wouldn't have helped anyway. After a while, a new person entered, and when it saw him, it almost choked on its meal. At first, they mistook him for a small, two-legged Dragon, but then they realized that it was a large lizard... It was huge, covered in hard blue-green scales. It had long claws and lots of sharp teeth. At first, they wanted to hide under the table, but then they thought of Miriam, and moved closer to her, to cover her if necessary. The queen's cousin smiled at them, but seemed not to be afraid of the Newcomer.

„This is Shash. Zerkuroz of Veskarium.„ Brumi introduced him. The lizard smiled, showing a multitude of sharp teeth.

„I welcome the honorable guests and guarantee your safety with my honor.„ he said in a solemn tone. His voice was surprisingly pleasant and melodic, they could hear traces of a foreign accent in it.

„Veska... What? „ Rao asked in confusion, and then they heard a strange scratching and knocking sound behind him , and after a moment a strange metallic voice spoke from that direction.

„The Veskarium is a powerful interplanetary Empire dominated mainly by a species called the Vesks, a very warlike but also extremely honorable reptilian species.

They turned slowly and saw this! It looked like a metal spider with many legs, but it was huge, larger than a human. Most of the limbs ended in grasping hands, and in the center of the egg-shaped body was a hemisphere that had a dozen eyes. Seeing this creature, they jumped onto the table, and grabbed a spoon, ready to fight in defense of Miriam, who must have been a little scared too, because she grabbed her staff and reached into her Magical Ingredients Bag.

„This is Iron Hands, He is Anacite of Abbalon. An intelligent machine created by a certain ancient civilization.„ Iath explained .

„I'm not sure if the word ancient is appropriate here, as it usually implies that the civilization is extinct, and that's not what happened here. That's one of the reasons we're here in the first place.„ The being said, and Miriam frowned.

„Why did you come here, actually? I don't know much about the Sea Of Stars, but I guess the journey through them isn't all that easy, and I'm not sure what you could possibly want from us „ Dark Mage asked with suspicion in her voice.

„That's a good question, and I think we need to explain it to you... Sit comfortably, and listen.„ Iath said in a calm voice, and Rao sat down in the chair, barely containing their excitement.

Gwendolyn was polite at first and went with everyone to the guest rooms where they were to rest and eat. She was exhausted, although not as exhausted as the queen's cousin, but she couldn't afford to rest. She used illusion magic and made it seem like she was lying on a bed, then cast an indetection spell. It was harder than taking on the appearance of someone else, but still much easier than invisibility. Above all, it required great caution, so that no one would get too close or suspect that someone was nearby. Fortunately, the path her companions were taking was not guarded by guards, and they themselves did not seem to suspect that someone might be following them. She just had to keep a certain distance, so as not to get too close, and at the same time be able to hear what they were saying, which was not so difficult, because Miriam had to lean on a cane, and she was the most exhausted of them all, so everyone had to adjust their pace to her. Soon they reached a large hall, in the middle of which was a large metal object. Then she saw the strange woman. She looked unusually for an elf, and she had too few horns and too many fingers. Rao was delighted with their new acquaintance, but Miriam looked suspicious. That didn't surprise her... She had heard a lot about how the Duren court was rife with intrigue, and that anyone who stayed there had to learn to deal with conspiracies and lies. She had developed such skills, not only because she was an Illusionist, but also because of who she served. The Serpent's Path demanded cunning and ruthlessness from its members... and fanatical devotion.

As they moved on, she followed them and still managed to remain undetected. They entered the dining room, she decided to stay outside and listen to what they were saying... She learned that another person had joined the meal, whose appearance greatly disturbed the gathered, but that was not what she should worry about, because a terrible creature walked past her. It looked like a spider made of metal, with a head sticking out of its body, and many eyes. She froze, afraid that the creature would notice her. Fortunately, her magic worked, and the creature did not turn on her, but entered the dinning room and addressed the gathered there. She eavesdropped on the rest of the conversation, crouching down next to the door.

„So let's start with some basic knowledge. First, your Xadia is a planet floating in the cold void of space... And it's round... „ said the woman named Iath .

„Who do you take us for? We are not idiots, that was proven long ago.„ Miriam said with offense in her voice.

„Well, I wanted to make sure... Xadia is one of the countless Planets in the endless black void of space. Many of them are inhabited by completely alien species, Civilizations that you can't even imagine. We came from many different places, but we came for one reason only, Klest came into possession of some information about your planet. You must know that it is located in a very poorly explored region of the Galaxy, called the Ravaged Zone. It is a very dangerous place, supposedly full of white demons and ruled here by the ruler of the seven heavens. On the way here we passed by several ships, whose affiliation we could not recognize, but they seemed to have hostile Intentions. Unfortunately, we did not expect that this planet would be too.„ She explained in a calm voice with a hint of irritation.

„Klest financed this expedition with the money of her father, the Archduke of Carurystal.„ The man posing as a dwarf explained. „I am a quartermaster, and a geologist by education, which allowed me to gain quite a fortune here. Iath is the biologist and doctor, Iron Hand, He is our technician and engineer, as well as a specialist in a certain field of history. Shash is our weapons specialist, and Damien was our co-pilot, as well as a historian and linguist. Well... He died some time ago. During the depressurization of the ship, his lungs were damaged, and he never recovered. To be honest, however, at the end of his life he was very happy...„ Brumi paused significantly, and then Miriam interrupted.

"I want to make sure you're talking about the same Damien who was Prince Calum's father ?" Her voice was thick with surprise and disbelief. She heard a gasp and the fort's host said.

„Yes, himself. Well, he was the most romantic of us all... He fit in here the best. He died young, but he managed to start a family... That's probably why the boy can use magic...”

"Not only because of that..." Klest spoke up. "His family on his mother's side is of Azlantean descent. I discovered that when I found that ship. That's why I'm here."

„ It's very good that you found this ship, although I don't think it will be able to fly off this planet. „ she heard a metallic voice belonging to the many-legged creature.

„Well, we probably won't fly away, because if you ask me... Just to be on the safe side, I overloaded the reactor, causing a limited nuclear explosion.„ Klest said with a strange amusement in her head.

There was silence. She wasn't sure what a nuclear explosion was, but she remembered the earthquake, and the cloud of smoke, so she had a rough idea that there had been a huge explosion.

„I'm not even surprised. Please just tell me you found some information there that will be useful to us. „ Iath said , and Klest laughed shortly and replied.

„Yes, I think I know what I found here, the contact details of a very old relay station of the First Ones... It could save us, but not only that... The problem is that something happened in the galaxy. The level of magic on the planet has increased, I think you've felt it, Iath, right? In addition, cultists have appeared. Cultists of the Great Old Ones, who are looking for the same thing as we are. They probably started their activity earlier, but you know what kind of allies they have. Even if it's not about finding this relay station, it may turn out that they will bring contact with the Mi-Go, the Dep Ones, or the Scylredi. That's why we have to hurry! Do you understand?”

„I don't understand anything! What Scylredi ? And what First Ones are you talking about?„ the Dark Mage exclaimed angrily, and then the Spider creature spoke again.

„ They created us, the anacites , and to this day we honor them for it, or at least most of us do. They created the dragon-elven hybrids here, like your friend... They are your ancestors, after all...”

She heard the queen's cousin get up from the table, probably in agitation, but then she heard a voice behind her. She turned around and saw a creature slowly walking towards her. She was tall and looked almost human, but had a paler complexion. Her eyes were large and blue, devoid of whites, glowing with an inner light, similar to the one that came out of Klest's eyes. She had long scarlet hair that fell to her shoulders, the same color as the woman who had brought them here... It was her sister, whom they had mentioned earlier. Except she wasn't human... She had large membranous wings on her back, and claws on her hands, which resembled the limbs of some predatory creature. A thin down of red hair grew over her shoulders and neck. She made a strange, slightly clacking sound. She seemed to be listening, with very long animal ears. I had the impression that she was looking for something, and she quickly guessed what. She tried to stay still, but the creature approached slowly. It clattered and listened, as if trying to detect something by listening for the echo. She was afraid of the creature, and stopped breathing so that the creature would not detect her.

„It's here-here-here! But where-where!„ The creature called, and then its glowing blue eyes landed on her. She took off running the moment it lunged at her. She only took a few steps before its long claws caught her cloak, tearing it open. She fell and rolled to the side.

„Stop-Stop! Don't move! Stay-Stay! „ The creature called. She punched it in the face, blood gushing from its nose. The creature hissed and tried to strike her with its claws, but she jumped back, cracks appearing where it hit. She created several illusionary reflections of herself, and tried to stab the creature, taking advantage of the fact that it wouldn't know which reflection attacked. However, it was so agile that it simply dodged all the attacks and tore apart two of the four reflections she had created. She cursed, but then she had an idea and created a flash of light. The creature had eyes like nocturnal animals, so she guessed that this would blind it. It worked, because the creature only screamed loudly and covered its eyes. She knew she should run, but she had to get rid of this creature, or it would track her down again. She was about to deal a fatal blow when suddenly Klest jumped out of the door, and with one lightning-fast moment she knocked the weapon out of her hand, and with the other she knocked it down, breaking her ribs in the process. She choked on blood, and the woman with scarlet hair threw her against the wall, stunning her, and ran to her sister, hugging her. The others ran out, and a large lizard holding a weapon, supposedly for a club or an axe, walked up to her, aimed it at her neck. The others looked at her in surprise, except for Rao, in whose two-colored eyes she saw rage. It clenched its fists and screamed furiously.

„ She is from the snake path! „ he pointed to the place where the claws had given her cloak, where he saw the symbol of the two-headed snake…

She yawned as she looked at the Silverwing's navigation instruments. She wondered why she had decided to take this flight and help young Frosta. She was her aunt, albeit a step”aunt, and so was her wife, so it was only right that they help her. But that wasn't all. Actually, everyone should help another person in such a situation, so if there was even a small chance that they could help the Ice Princess recover from this terrible Curse, they should take. She heard what Halo had said. She couldn't believe that the woman she had once considered a friend, who could have been her sister-in-law if their fate had been different, could say such things... She didn't understand why this woman hadn't helped Frosta right away, after all she had sworn to take care of her. It was always said that for the Star Sisters, promises were sacred. Who was she working with, who was this creature, She couldn't see, but she was definitely Wicked. If this person cursed the girl in such a terrible way, he must have been evil to the core of his black heart. She didn't see how all this connected with the spell that Shadow Weaver had cast. Could this vile woman be working with this Charon in some way, that couldn't be ruled out You could expect anything from her. But that didn't matter, all that mattered was how to help Frosta. But how will they convince the dark sorceress to remove the spell from the girl? She knew that this was an extremely difficult undertaking, just getting to the camp might be impossible. Their only hope was that the Nightgale in question would prove to be someone worthy of the hopes Frosta had placed in her, though if she was only half as bad as her mother, then their chances were probably slim. There was that girl too… Supposedly Catra's sister, who was supposed to travel with Shadow Weaver, but they didn't know much about her, except that she was under the influence of a dark sorcerer. She sighed and looked at the girl sitting in the chair behind her. Her eyes were closed, and that strange creature wrapped itself around her like a cloak, She could tell by hearing her breathing that she was only pretending to sleep. After all, she was a mother of two growing children, a toddler, and another baby due soon. … She could sense when someone was pretending to want to sleep. Next to her in the co-pilot's seat sat a Seahawk… He stared intently at the instruments, all Pale, he really didn't like flying. And now this journey had gotten longer…

Shortly after takeoff, they discovered that the entire fleet of vehicles had flown out of the Storm, heading North. They then had to make a decision. Should they follow them or head for Castle Crypto… It was Frosta who made the choice.

„Let's go after them, in the worst case, we'll just find out what they're planning, and that will probably help Glimmer too.„ she said with her head down. Well, they did as she wanted, now she felt like it was a good choice. They flew to The Northern Reaches, and they were already close to the place where they had recently explored ancient ruins. That was probably good. However, she was worried about where Lonnie had gotten so many ships. From what she understood, they must have had at least one, which they had flown to the wedding in. It was on it that Shadow Weaver and that nasty girl who Traveled with her came here. But where did the rest come from? Could it be that the People's Rebellion had support from off-planet? She could only hope that they weren't so crazy as to ally with the Scions of Horde Prime. Fortunately, their ship had light cloaking fields, and was practically undetectable by radar. Well, thanks to that, her grandmother managed to kill the Old Scorpion King. It was a True miracle of early technology, no matter what anyone said about them. They just had to be careful to keep their distance, not to fly too close, not too far away. And she also had to try not to fall asleep, which was hard considering she was getting on in years. She yawned and spoke to Frosty .

„I think they'll be landing soon. I need to find a proper landing spot, but it won't be easy, because there are mountains and glaciers here, and we can't stay too close to the rebels. So strap yourself in tight, and watch out so you don't bite your tongue off!

Frosta immediately opened her eyes, confirming her suspicions, and Seahawk swallowed for a moment and said.

„ It's not that I'm afraid, because no and I'm afraid of absolutely nothing. But you know, I'll be a father soon, and I'd like to see my child, so try not to kill us, okay?„ he looked at her pleadingly, and she smiled at him and replied.

"Well, I'll make sure we all survive, are you happy?" she said and he nodded uncertainly, but then Frosta said.

„I can help. I still have your power, and I think I can make it easier for you to land! Fine. Only if you opened a door or a hatch."

She thought for a moment and answered her.

„This has a vertical take-off mode, and all you have to do is open your own at the bottom, but we have to find a place that's pretty far away, and be careful not to fall out, because there are no seat belts or anything to hold you, do you understand?„ she looked at her young friend, who was already unbuckling her seat belts to go to the back of the Silverwing.

Carefully, so as not to be detected, they approached the vast glacier that stretched over the mountaintops. Below them was that damned city of Elder Things who seemed to have enslaved Shogi and his kin. The weather was fine in the area, though no bright moons had risen yet.

"Alright Frosta, let's do this!" she called out and began to approach the landing. The Seahawk gripped the armrests tightly, and she tried to hover in midair. She opened the cargo hatches, despite the safety systems warning her not to. She gritted her teeth and held onto the controls. This machine was magnificent, but it was a few thousand years old and probably wasn't meant to fly with the hatches open. They began to shake, and she could feel the entire machine bending under the forces pressing down on it. She gritted her teeth and felt the power behind her. The navigational instruments showed that the ground was changing, the distance from the ground was decreasing, and what was underneath the plane was changing shape. She felt the piercing cold from where the Ice Princess was. She risked a look behind her, and saw that Frosta was actually hanging on Shogi's tentacles, using her power to shape the ice below. After a moment, she called out to the girl.

„You can stop, I think that's enough! „ and she started to get ready to log in. Frosta stopped using her power, and then they started to land. To everyone but her, the impact with the ice was surprising, Seahawk bit his tongue, and Frosta hit her head. The glacier crunched under the weight of their vehicle, but it didn't break , so she breathed a sigh of relief, then unbuckled herself and looked at the others.

„So what now?„ She asked them, wondering what they should do.

The Smiley watched as they tended to her father, who had recovered remarkably quickly from the shock of learning the truth about her. No wonder, after all, he had once been the ruler of the planet, and had led an entire army. There were few things that could move him. Despite this, deep down she felt disappointment. She knew it was irrational, but a part of her soul wanted him to do something, sit down and breathe heavily, trying to digest this news, or maybe do something else, like announce to everyone that he had found another daughter. She had asked him not to do it, but even so, it would be... It would make her feel like... she was part of it all. Well, he had already found out once that he had a missing daughter... The second time around it was clearly not as shocking... Even that. I was robbed. Even that was taken from me. She thought bitterly, but she couldn't help it. After all, she had to prepare everything so that her rights could be fulfilled. It took time, and that was why she was late… It didn't matter, he was never her family anyway. Not him… She gritted her teeth, and then Ivy walked up to her and put a hand on her shoulder. She looked at the android she smiled with her mask. She felt better, you always felt better when Ivi was around.

Finally, a priest cast a spell and her father was able to use his hand skillfully. Then he looked at Daria, and she saw curiosity in his eyes, but also concern.

„Despara ...„ he said, and then she corrected him.

„Commander Despara, or First Blade, such are the titles I am entitled to.„ she said in a voice distorted by the mask, and Antares he nodded and said.

"Commander Despara has brought important news that must be relayed to the rest of the fleet command.... Call a meeting of the General Staff immediately.„ ordered the Commander of the Fearless Armada. Then he gave her a thoughtful look. He probably wondered who she was, but she wouldn't explain everything to him yet. Let him think about it some more, she has time. For now, he doesn't have to know anything, When the time comes, everything will be brighter than a supernova... Soon an armored personnel carrier and an off-road vehicle arrived for them, the Lord Admiral chose the latter, he didn't want to hide from the enemy behind armored plates. With reluctance she had to admit that he was damn brave. Most leaders after an attempt on their lives would try to hide in a bunker, and with paranoid passion would search for those guilty of what happened. Together with Ivy, she got into the carrier, because he would prefer to be alone. Inside, she took a deep breath, and hugged the Android. She felt the phantom pain radiating from artificial limbs. Even though she had prosthetics, wonderful prosthetics, created by an ancient civilization, she was still in constant pain. There was nothing she could do about it. All she could do was try to control the pain. She preferred not to take painkillers, because they would set her off, not to mention addiction. She tried not to show any pain in front of Ivi, because she was indirectly responsible for her suffering. After a while, the pain subsided, and she began to purr quietly, while her... companion watched the metal marbles floating in the air, which calmed her... Everyone had some kind of trauma...

After about half an hour they arrived at the place where they got out of the transporter and prepared for the staff meeting. Antares did not choose any government building, because they were now associated with the regime of a mad tyrant. At least that's what he explained to her, and she had no reason not to believe him. A muscular man with slightly androgynous facial features was waiting for them in front of the tent. He was dressed in the uniform of a higher ranking officer. As soon as he saw their commander, he ran towards him and said.

„I am glad, Lord… Protector, that nothing happened!„ there was relief in his voice. Antares nodded and said.

„It might have been difficult if it weren't for Commander Despara. „ He pointed at her and the man looked in her direction, and she saw gratitude in his eyes. She suppressed a smile, because this was someone with a dog's disposition, which in her case was a bit ironic, and said.

„You must be Commander Reese, I've heard a lot about your achievements both on the battlefield and when you commanded ships during space battles.”

The man blushed, which showed that he wasn't very good at hiding his emotions, and then he said.

„I am grateful for saving my commander…„ and He gave her his hand. This man and would have survived even a week on the Apostate. She shook his hand, and they entered the tent together.

„You must know, Lord Protector, that reinforcements have arrived from outside the Ravaged Zone... They include not only our troops, but forces we did not expect to arrive... „ He spoke, but Antares interrupted him.

„Commander Despara explained everything to me.„ he said and indicated that they should go inside the tent…

„The bastards are really determined to go to this gods forsaken place.„ Lady Ka told her, smiling as always, that is with a mixture of cruelty.

"I've been here before, and it's something to look for if you know certain things," she said thoughtfully to the woman sitting next to her.

They had been flying for several hours now, at a steady speed. They had kept up with the others, and were flying high in the stratosphere. They had managed to remain undetected, and at the same time detect the rebel ships. In fact, it was only possible because one of the ships did not have a military jamming system, she guessed it was the same ship that Shadow Weaver had brought here. She wondered, Was the woman on board, probably because where else could she be? Probably wanted to be as close to her sister as possible, so she could control her more easily. She certainly didn't want to repeat the same mistake that had happened to Adora ... She was worried, however, that nothing was detecting Netossa's ship, but it was a creation of the First Ones, and it most likely had a jamming system far beyond anything they had. They could only guess that the general and the Ice Princess had followed the ships. If it had happened otherwise... Actually, that was a good thing too, because she wanted to finally confront the cursed sorcerer...

I am not going there for Revenge, but to help her friend… she mentally instructed herself, but she still felt angry… She just wasn't sure who… The accusations against her father, the escape of that cursed woman and her monstrous assistant, the death of the guards, what happened to Frosta, and finally the kidnapping of Entrapta and the Empress. She wasn't sure which of these things made her feel more Angry, but she knew she had to control herself, at least for a while longer. It wasn't easy when you were around Someone like Lady Ka and her Subordinates.

She had the impression that the woman was constantly smiling mockingly at her, although it was hard to take what it was personally, because she smiled at everyone in a similar way. She kept nervously tapping the armrests of the chair with her mechanical fingers. There was also this Graag... He was a short individual, but he was proportionally built. His arm and leg were replaced with cybernetic prosthetics. There was something nasty about him, but she wasn't sure what. He was constantly cursing under his breath, but she couldn't recognize the language he spoke, but she knew practically no other language ... And there was this insectoid, belonging to the same species as that annoying Ashurk , but he seemed to be much less irritating ... He had two pistols attached to his forearms, which he could draw with a slight movement of the wrist, when they moved forward. He captured them and put them away every now and then, throwing Her a defiant look ...

She knew that there were Star siblings in this fleet, as well as that lying Saihe, who accused her father of all those crimes. For now, she decided not to inform on him, although she wasn't sure why. Maybe because living in the Fright zone she had learned that it was better to never inform on anyone, which was wise when someone like Shadow Weaver was your guardian. Maybe she just didn't want to slow down the whole expedition, or maybe she just wanted to believe in him... As if she couldn't accept that she had the right to be happy. To a family that she loved, and that cared about her. She simply had to allow herself to be happy. She had to cast aside all doubts... Otherwise... She simply couldn't imagine what she would do if it turned out otherwise... She wouldn't survive this...

Shortly after it turned out that the ships were flying north, Lady Ka approached her and with a gloomy face said.

„We have a fucking problem... The recon drones have approached those Ships. They belong to the Shadows of Tarak, your uncle's former subordinates...„ She looked at her meaningfully, her one eye showing rage, as well as fear.

„Should we be afraid of them? Do they pose a threat to the entire planet?„ and she asked the woman, feeling uneasy herself. Lady Ka grimaced and said.

„What the fuck do you think? They're fucking terrorists, enemies of the Lord Admiral... I mean, the Lord Protector... Who do you think did this to me?” she pointed at the mask covering half of her face. She felt as if an inner light was shining in the three emeralds. For a moment the arrangement of the gems seemed familiar to her, but she shook her head, because what she was thinking was absurd...

"I didn't know that. I'm sorry about that." She said carefully, but the Lord Admiral's left better hand just chuckled and said.

„Well, thanks to your uncle I managed to get a job with your father... I owe a hell of a lot to your family!„ she laughed again, and she felt irritation, so much that Melog turned slightly red, and she asked.

„This changes everything, we have to get near as soon as possible and free Frosta and my sister. I can take you with Malog's help ... Then nothing is old on the usual.„ she said to the information and intelligence officer, smiled and said.

„Good idea, but I'm not sure I should let you do that. Your father currently gives me his other hand, and maybe more, if you get hurt.”

„What do you mean, the other hand?„ She looked at the prosthesis, and then Lady Ka became confused and said.

„ Well, there are certain things between Antares and me that do not concern you.”

She frowned and said.

„Remember, I am the heir of the Lord Admiral, so you should tell me everything.„ she said, narrowing her eyes. She extended her claws, then immediately retracted them. She might not like this woman, but she had no intention of clashing with her now. She only intended to save her sister, Frosta, Entrapta ... A lot of people. She felt the weight of responsibility suddenly overwhelm her. She rubbed her cheeks and said.

"Okay, well, why don't you land nearby and I'll try to get a few of you through Nearby, okay?" she said, and the Lady thought for a moment, then extended her hand, one artificial and one metal, and shook it.

„ Yes, that's a good plan, we'll figure out what we're going to do on site.”

„I think it would be best if we went there without hiding, so they could see us. What do you think, aunt?„ she looked at Netossa , who smiled at her.

„We'll do as you please, if you really trust this Nightgale.„ she said in an almost indifferent tone, but she could already tell when people wanted to suggest something between the words. The general wanted to let her know if she really considered that young sorcerer trustworthy. She wasn't sure if she could trust Nightgale, but she wanted to try, so she nodded and together they set off towards the camp. She walked in front, although to tell the truth Netossa had a greater right to represent them, because after all she was the real princess, not someone who was allowed to use that title just out of pity It was dark, and cold because of the glacier, but she didn't care. They had to get there and meet Shadow Weaver... She was afraid of it, probably everyone who knew this woman was at least a little afraid of her. But she had to be strong, not only because she had come after a request to the dark sorcerer, but also because she had to somehow make sure that nothing would happen to her companions.

Netossa walked next to her, and a little further along walked Seahawk, who held his hands close to the hilt of his rapier. Shogi took the form of a creature similar to a Fox. He only had four eyes, so he looked almost like an ordinary local animal. She saw stars and moons shining in the sky, she had heard that some people from other planets saw hints about the future in them, she wanted it to be true, and so that she could see in them what might await her in the coming hours. Now she regretted letting her friends fly here with her, because it exposed them to the risk of being captured, or even something even worse happening to them...

A shout tore her from her thoughts.

„Halt! Don't come any closer! Tell me who you are!„ She heard a voice, speaking with a strange accent, whose source she couldn't locate. Netossa wanted to surround them with an energy net, but she showed her not to do it, because they had to talk to them anyway, not wait behind cover.

„I am a princess... I am Frosta, and these are my friends Princess Netossa and Prince Consort Seahawk. I came here to speak with your commander.„ She said uncertainly, then there was silence, and finally the same person spoke.

„Okay, you can go, just don't try anything!„ and then a few well-camouflaged soldiers emerged from between the stones. She had seen one or two before, but she saw that Netossa didn't show the slightest surprise, so she probably saw most of them, or hid her surprise very well. They were surrounded by a dozen soldiers. Most of them looked like relatives of Catra's friend, she thought his name was Rogelio, but they looked like they were more dangerous than him.. There were also a few tall cat-like people, several similar ones also served in the Lord Admiral's army and she had heard that Catra was half one of them. There was also someone who she had initially taken for Saihe, but then she saw that he had long antennae and insect eyes.

„Who exactly are you?„ Netossa asked looking at them carefully, and then the soldier looked at her and smiling with a mouth full of sharp teeth said in a hard voice.

„We are the Shadows of Tarak.„ and he finished as if that explained everything.

„But what does that mean? After all, Tarak is the planet from which Lord Admiral Antares comes, you know the father of the Grand Marshal and so on... But you do not serve him?„ the general continued, looking at them carefully. One of the soldiers, a black-furred catwoman, spat with contempt, and said.

„We're here to Get this son of a bitch. We've been trying to Get him for thirty years, but we can't. But now we have a chance...”

She thought for a moment before asking.

„So it's all true...„ she said in a hushed voice. „Because recently someone came and told a lot about Catra's father. He said h ande did terrible things.”

Catwoman laughed darkly.

„Well, whatever you heard, the truth is much worse. This Catra is the boss's niece… I wonder if she's half as mean and tough as she is? Or his sister, or her sister... „ she said, looking at them carefully.

"Catra is the best friend I've ever had! She's strong, tough, and very cunning... Does that mean her Uncle is here too? Does she even have an uncle? Is he nice? I mean, you said he wasn't, but the same could be said about Catra, and she turned out to be a good friend!" She asked looking at the soldier, and everyone else laughed hoarsely.

„You do have a sense of humor... Igzar the Nice One? Good one!”

They walked for a while longer until they reached the fruit, which consisted mainly of several tents and ships that had landed next to each other.

„This is what a military camp looks like, you've probably never seen one?„ said a lizard looking like a commander. She snorted and said.

„Of course I've seen it, and more than once.. Haven't you heard that we had a thirty-year war here?„ she looked at him with absolute superiority, and then Netossa laughed.

„I spent half my life in Military camps... I fought when you were probably still an egg somewhere.„ The ruler of Armoria gave him a slightly contemptuous look, and the lizard opened his mouth as if to say something, but then changed his mind and fell silent with a grim expression. The second feline soldier laughed surprisingly friendly and said.

„We usually forget that this is not a pretty land of glitter and rainbows. We talked to former Cadets and their training can amaze even the Vesks. But you are the ones who won the war... And even your planet is not in ruins, I think we should learn something from you.„ she said and they continued walking forward. She also saw former Cadets, who were looking at her with surprise and consternation. She guessed no one expected princess to come here. In the distance, they saw that many of them were working on something trapped in the glacier. From this distance, however, she was unable to judge. Seahawk was giving everyone serious looks, only that it even seemed to salute him instinctively.

Finally they were led to a tent over which the Banner of the People's Rebellion flew. She took a deep breath as they entered.

There they saw Lonnie, who had scars on her face from Catra's claws. She had the impression that she had aged somehow. Or maybe she just looked like that because she seemed exhausted Or maybe they had all aged over the weeks? She didn't know.

Next to the Comrade General stood a large black tomcat, with gray fur and a body covered in scars. Some of his body parts were mechanical, like Jewelstar He watched them darkly, like… a cat watching a mouse… Seahawk put his hand on his rapier and glared at the warrior, who only smiled at him, showing his metal teeth, as if to tell him to try something stupid, but then Lonnie gave them a warning look and said.

„Let's wait for my co-commander.”

Netossa snorted and said in a sharp voice.

"Really, Lonnie? Have you stooped so low as to share power with someone like Shadow Weaver?"

And then a calm, somewhat monotonous voice sounded behind them.

„The Grimmy is not here. But fortunately you have here a being absolutely perfect, aawesome and almost unique. „ they turned and See catgirl. For a moment she thought it was Catra... but then it was White Who is talking to.

„ Yes, it's me, the other one... Well, hello, what are you doing? „ a white”haired girl with strange glasses stood behind her and waved at them, smiling friendly.

Once, if someone told her that a smuggler, a clone, an aricorn, and a droid were playing cards, she would have thought it was the beginning of some joke, but it turned out that this was exactly what her life was like... Despite everything, she didn't complain, and she had to admit that she hadn't had such a good time in a long time.

„Okay, now Swift Wind deals the cards. „ She said and then Lilka started dealing the cards on behalf of this Aricorn She had to admit that he played quite well. Although still worse than Wrongdak, it probably had to do with his training and ability to predict the enemy's behavior, although it must be admitted that he was very bad at bluffing. In this respect, Emiliy was superior to everyone for obvious reasons. In fact, she was very happy that she could finally play cards with someone who yelled at each other. Besides, Eti didn't understand why she played if she couldn't cheat. To her surprise, the locals knew the rules of playing cards with the Harrow deck, although of course they did not know its more mystical applications, or at least that's what Swiftwind claimed. It did not bother her, because she was not interested in card fortune telling anyway. She managed to win this hand, so she took a few chips, which of course had no real value

She looked at Wrongdak. Perhaps one day she would play him one-on-one, although then the stakes would be something completely different…

And at that moment Lonnie's voice rang out from the speakers, calling Eti to stay in her tent, because a delegation from the queen had arrived. She sighed and told the others to clear away the cards, and went to Eti's cabin. It wasn't locked, which sometimes happened to the cat girl when she felt worse, so she went inside and saw Eti dressing quickly, and Rosie was sitting on the bed next to her, wrapped only in sheets. The white-haired girl was scared and all red with embarrassment. She should have expected it, and to tell the truth, she was glad that their relationship had finally developed in this direction, so she smiled at the girl to let her understand that she wasn’t angry at her or anything like that.

„You've heard the news, I guess I'll leave you and see what's up with the rest. „ she said and winked at Rosie once more, then left, happy for her charges.

The Smiley thought it was funny, that everyone was trying to very ostentatiously pretend that she wasn't there, and at the same time her presence dominated the entire meeting of the General Staff. Antares first explained to everyone that nothing had happened to him, and also described the course of the assassination attempt on his life. She knew that not everyone in the command liked her father, but no one wished him dead... After all, it would mean the failure of the entire expedition and no one wanted to allow that. She straightened her back and watched the gathered people carefully, wondering what they thought of her... But in fact, it didn't matter. Only one person's opinion mattered, and he had probably already made a decision about it... Or maybe not? We'll see. Ivi stood next to her, encouraging her. She didn't need support, but she was grateful for it.

„Perhaps it was a mistake to leave Lady Ka on Etheria to support your daughter.„ Said the silver-scaled Dragonkin whose name was Tarel.„ She may have been quite a… unusual person, but it must be admitted that she was quite good at her job.

The Lord Protector nodded and said.

„You are indeed right, but there is not much you can do about it. We must wait until she fulfills His task and returns to His duties…"

At this point she spoke up.

"I can take care of those matters, though not today. I've brought with me several security specialists from Apostate, and they'll guarantee your safety with their lives. That's no exaggeration, Lord Protector, the Drow take security very seriously," she explained, and then all eyes turned to her, as if unsure if she was even allowed to speak... But then Henoh spoke up.

"I understand that this attack will be met with your response?"

The son of the Archduke of Carurystal He was a tall man with hair the color of blood, and cold blue eyes that glowed as if with an inner light. Like most of his siblings, he looked twenty years old, although of course he was much older. As far as she could judge male beauty, he was quite handsome, and probably the melancholy visible on his face made him even more attractive.

„No, there is no point in changing the course of war because of an attempt on my life. That would be petty, and very Unwise.„ Said the commander of the Fearless Armada.

„It is truly fascinating that you are so reserved and prudent, despite the rumors circulating about you." Said the Dragonkin. Her father, however, ignored the obvious quip, and continued the discussion.

„Despite everything, I think we should start some talks with Horde Ultimate, if only to find out who he really is. Besides, striving for peace looks good in the media, but we don't necessarily have to adjust our actions to our messages, of course.„ he spoke thoughtfully, his voice absolutely composed. Everyone listened to him, and no one dared to interrupt him. He had solidified his reputation with his recent victories... She would have to keep that in mind when she did what she planned. Then they discussed less important elements of further warfare, and then There were several formal greetings with the new members of the General Staff. First of all, this time the son of the Archduke officially introduced himself, and then Draxes greeted him . He was a Fetchling , a being tainted by the plane of shadow. He was a Fetchling, a creature corrupted by the plane of shadow. These creatures were the only non-drow who could hold high positions, and were therefore an exception in the usually speciesist society of the Apostate.. Despite this, obstacles were always thrown in his way, although in the case of Drow society it should rather be called open traps, but he survived and that is why she made him de facto her deputy and person of management. Apart from him there was also Ragaz , the commander of her orcs. He was a free orc and thanks to that she could hire him. His soldiers were famous for their unwavering loyalty even for orcs, so she assumed that they would be helpful to her here. The last one was the one whose presence she did not want. Janos Di Vir He was the Lictor of the Order of the Eclipse, and an exceptionally dangerous man, at least considering what she intended to do. However, he had the strongest army and a powerful fleet, no one could underestimate him, he was de facto equal to Antares. Her father, accepting the help of the Hellknights never expected that it would escalate in such a way. However, she had the impression that something had happened that she didn't know about... She knew that three subordinates were missing from the Lord's staff, or rather two and one person who had traveled with the Dauntless Armada. From what she had heard, Lady Ka and Lady Sorrowflame had remained on Etheria to fulfill the orders of their commander and help... that girl. She had also heard a little about what had happened on that planet, and from what she had understood, the Lady of Blades was strangely connected to some dark sorceress, and an aristocrat from Carystal. Henoh, who was formally the heir and in fact his father's deputy, had told her a bit about the couple. And she knew well that Archduke Kane Adamson knew more than everyone thought. That was probably why Janos had come here. He was not guided by the good order, but by his attachment to his adopted daughter. She had to respect him for that, few were willing to risk their children so much, especially among those with such strict morality... Would her father be willing to do something like that for any of his children? At the thought, she laughed out loud, until everyone present looked at her. Then the Lord Admiral spoke.

„From now on, Despara will be my deputy, and in my absence, everyone is to address her.„ he said in a hard tone, so much so that even She looked behind him in surprise. She hadn't expected that. She had expected Antares to give her some power, but she hadn't expected her to become his right hand either. It seemed like a good solution, because it gave her almost unlimited Power, but she also knew that it was associated with certain problems. First, many would envy her this honor, including the Lord Admiral's left hand... Although she would have to deal with her in her own way. In addition, her official position tied her hands and limited her room to maneuver… She looked at Antares and saw that he was watching her reaction. She began to suspect certain things, so she simply said it.

„Thank you for this honor and I promise to fulfill my duties with absolute dedication.„ She said in Careful, and everyone calmed down a little, as if they expected her to give the orders of execution right away. Another hour passed, during which she practically did not speak, until finally everyone dispersed, and she also intended to go, because she had a more important task to do, but her father stopped her.

"I'd like to discuss a few things with you," he said, and she winced, her scars stretching and she said.

„We'll do it tomorrow, now I have to leave for a while.„ her voice was hard and confident, as if she wasn't talking to a man who could kill millions in the name of achieving his goals. Antares frowned, and said in a surprisingly caring voice.

„I would like to speak with you about the matter of your heritage, and our family's past. I already have two daughters, and I will soon be able to regain a third. At least too two seem strong enough to bear the burden of power over what I can manage to… secure. I would not want everything to be ruined by a future conflict between siblings that would tear my domain apart.”

She smiled under her mask and then said cheekily .

„ In your case, you decided to solve this problem in advance, right?”

This time his gaze became much more penetrating, so it took a moment before he spoke slowly and thoughtfully.

„It was a necessity, and in fact it was an act of grace. The Taint that haunts our family was particularly strong in them. That is why you were… you were all created… I take it that Jantar hid you?„ He tilted his head, clearly intrigued.

"Oh no, I just didn't meet his standards... I failed a certain test, and he sold me to the Drow on Apostate... It was difficult... But as you can see, I've managed to accomplish quite a bit, and I'm almost in one piece..." She tapped her prosthetic, and then the Admiral became thoughtful and asked one more question.

„Wasn't there another one? Since I If he created you without telling me anything, and on top of that he took you away from me, he could do it again?”

She hesitated, and immediately cursed herself inwardly, because it couldn't escape the attention of someone like the Lord Admiral. She felt tempted to tell him the truth, because maybe it would make it easier to fulfill her mission... Atonement for what she hadn't done. But no, she couldn't trust him, no one with even a shred of sense could trust Felix Antares . But she had to say something, so she did what true liars did, which was tell part of the truth.

„Yes, she was, but she didn't live up to what was required of her, even more than I did, and she died during one of the tests.„ she said, involuntarily feeling a surge of sadness, although she was the one responsible for what happened then. The Lord Admiral nodded, for him the topic was over, so she decided it was time to calm him down a bit.

„ As for whether there might be any disagreements between me and …" she had to force herself to say the name. "Catra, don't worry. I have no intention of taking anything you give her, and she certainly won't take anything I want from me..."„ She said with the same deep thought as her father. She wasn't sure if he believed her, he certainly wouldn't completely do it, he was a reasonable man after all, and he knew how things were Even in the most normal families.

„Now please I would like to leave, I am tired from a very long journey and I need rest... „ she said not entirely lying, because she was indeed tired, but she still intended to do a few things that would be really exhausting. The Lord Admiral slowly nodded and let her go.

Together with Ivi they went beyond military camp and even outside the city. They found low patterns and stopped there . She touched her hand and it became almost liquid. She pulled out a small sphere made of white metal. An ancient artifact of the First Ones, valuable even for representatives of this unimaginably powerful race. It was her greatest acquisition, which she had obtained in the core of the Apostate... She paid a lot for it, but she still thought it was a good deal. Sometimes, for such treasures, entire nations were surrendered to the flames. She had no reason to complain, a life spent in pain was not much instead of the possibility of breaking the warp of time and space... Ivi approached her, and then she embraced her and opened the sphere. A miniature model of the universe stood open before her and she began to use it to her mind. The vastness of the universe tried to crush her, to crush her mind, but after what she had experienced, her Will was harder than adamantium . She found the place she wanted to go, and then she sought out a certain person. Even though she felt the winds of doom blowing through the space between worlds, and heard the insane music coming from Aztatoth's court, she focused her thoughts and with a single stroke of her blade cut a rift in spacetime. She removed her mask, kissed Ivi , and together they entered the wound in reality.

She watched the military camp. It wasn't a new sight for her, after all, she had spent her entire childhood in one like that. This one looked really professional. It was obvious that the soldiers of the Shadows of Tarak really knew their job. But after all, they had been at war for thirty years, if Lady Ka could be believed.. Her subordinates were much less disciplined, if Shadow Weaver saw such a lack of focus on their goal and how easily they got distracted by the slightest thing, she would… Damn, why was she thinking about that lousy woman, after all, she no longer ruled her life... But she was still there somewhere, and until she finally solved her problem, she would always try to take away her happiness. She had the impression that she had made it her life's goal to take away her happiness... But enough of this! Today everything would end... No! She couldn't let Anger and Fury get the better of what she had to do. She had to constantly remember that she had come here to save Frosta and the others, there would be time later.

„They've got a swing, you sons of bitches!„ Lady Ka said and giggled standing next to her.

„You said yourself that this is an army, and they took half of the Cadets with them. But what are they looking for here?„ she thought aloud, and the woman in the half-mask said.

„Which we'll have to find out. I hope your pet is really as good at hiding others as you claim.„ She looked at Melog , who gave her an irritated look.

„Melog is not a pet, I do not want you to talk about him like that, do we understand each other?„ You returned coldly to Lady Ka, who smiled at her, but there was no trace of humor in her one eye.

„Yes, Sir!„ She called and laughed again. She gritted her teeth but said nothing, just motioned for her to continue.

It turned out that the power of her companions was enough to remain unnoticed . She wasn't sure what these people were planning, but she saw something strange in the distance. Some huge object hidden in the glacier... They were in a place where not so long ago she had explored an ancient city with her friends. She remembered that there were remains of the first ones, who as always tried to kill her. She wondered if this was not what Shadow Weaver and Lonnie were looking for, an ancient weapon that could turn the Scales of Victory.

In addition to Lady Ka, Graag had gone with her, and that insectoid, and a few of the woman's other dogs. She still wasn't sure if she should take them with her. She was increasingly uncomfortable around Lady Ka, and sometimes she felt like it wasn't the People's Rebellion she really had to fear.

And then she saw Frosta, walking with Netossa and Seahawk and Shogi, surrounded by a few soldiers. She didn't seem scared and was talking to them about something, to tell the truth, all Three seemed very tired, although she also had the impression that the Ice Princess was nervous too. She understood her, after all, she had a conversation with Shadow Weaver waiting for her, And it was never easy. They all entered the tent, and then they talked for a while, Netossa seemed to be accusing Lonnie of being in alliance with the dark sorceress. But she didn't listen carefully, because she saw her. Her sister was walking slowly, with a rifle on her back, wrapped in a cloak, and behind her was the white-haired girl who had almost killed Adora. Out of the corner of her eye, she saw Lady Ka clench her metal hand, and she saw anger in her eyes. She knew she should think about it right away, but then the words came out.

„ The Grimmy is not here. But fortunately you have here a being absolutely perfect, aawesome and almost unique. „ Said her sister. It was not hard to guess who she was, this Grim , but immediately after that Frosta, Lonnie, and a want came out of the tent whom she had never seen before, but she immediately realized Who she was.

„How on earth is that bastard still alive!„ Lady Ka, standing next to her, muttered.

They traveled another day, through the parched Plains that made up the southwestern edge of the former Scorpion Country. The vehicle was cramped, but he didn't mind. Even the fact that he had to share space with Hordak didn't matter much now. He was with his wife, and he had fallen in love with her all over again. He felt butterflies in his stomach, he wanted to dance and kiss his beloved. He might not get all those lost years back, but at least he would be with her again. He would spend the rest of his life with her. Could anything matter now? He knew she was incredibly happy about it, but he could also see that something was bothering her. She didn't say what she was worried about, and he didn't want to push her, at least not until he had a better opportunity.

Tirin stood next to them, hunched up a little, staring at the horizon with fear. He had done her in, she was one of those people you couldn't help but like. She was nice, though shy. The world scared her, but at the same time she wanted to face it. It seemed that she didn't like violence, but at the same time she knew how to fight. She was a walking contradiction. This also applied to the fact that she belonged to the same civilization, if that's Azlantii could be called civilized, that had enslaved his wife, but it was thanks to this girl that she was able to free herself. Angela had said that she was as close to her as a daughter, so maybe he should think of her that way, at least a little. He wasn't sure how Glimmer would react to the fact that he had someone like a sister. She shouldn't reject her, because after all she was a good girl, and Tirin seemed very nice too. Besides, the Azlantean would be accompanying her mother, whom she thought she had lost, so it would be hard for her to be angry at her in such a situation.

He had a bit more trouble with the ancient AI that had put on a body. He knew what her… mother had almost done. He didn't know much about artificial intelligences. He had no idea if they inherited their parents' personality in some way, he hoped they didn't… Heart Gift seemed quite nice, and to tell the truth, she didn't inspire fear at all. She seemed a bit awkward and acted as if the whole world fascinated her. There was something quite charming about it. He had never seen anyone who could be so delighted by the sight of a beetle crawling on his hand. Besides, she had helped them escape from that underground shelter, or whatever it was, so she deserved a little trust.

The area began to become more and more forested. However, the trees looked strange, as if unhealthy. They were short and twisted, full of thorns. It was normal, actually, but still... Well, he had read quite a bit about this place. Supposedly, the magic used here left its mark on this place. It had never been properly investigated. Everyone was too ashamed of what had happened here. Throughout Etheria's long history, the events of the War of the Sorcerers seemed to be one of the darkest, if not the darkest. Now he wondered if Shadow Weaver would have come here to train if it hadn't happened. From what he had heard, she would have liked it here. Despite the fact that the sorcerers who studied here were known as iconoclasts, they were much more open to new knowledge and often dangerous experiments. It was said that they tried to reach beyond Etheria and discover other dimensions It was once widely believed that they had never succeeded because it was impossible to reach other worlds, if they existed at all, but long before their planet was extracted from Despondos, he had witnessed that this was not the case. Some said that the being Shadow Weaver had summoned was simply a strange entity made of pure magic, but he knew better. He could sense its unfathomable intelligence and evil. Few believed him, and he did not want to delve into such dark topics, there was no reason for it anyway… Until it turned out that the dark magic used by his former teacher had led to the greatest defeat of the rebellion…

At last they reached the Basin where Umbracor was supposed to be . At first glance they recognized how different it was from Mystacor. Despite all these centuries, the most important structure of the college survived. This was understandable, because the college was built of living wood. Thousands of branches intertwined together to create a huge dome, resembling an anthill or a termite mound, full of corridors and rooms. He had never thought that a structure made of living plants could cause such anxiety. The companions also They stopped, and looked at the entire structure, shocked by its vastness But he was shaken by something that the Others were unaware of, with one exception… Hordak was the first to speak..

„It resembles the Beast Island, only it is made of living metal, and this is wood, although it is still alive. I do not like it very much, do you have any maps of this place? Although I am not sure if they will be up to date... The island could change From day to day...„ He said gloomily, and looked at him, and the others followed his gaze, asking a silent question. He needed a moment, To get himself under control, and then he said.

„I'll be fine, it's not Beast Island, it's just a bit similar, but it's not much smaller than the group that's waiting for us there.„ He tried to sound as composed as possible, but then Ireanis spoke up.

„You're right, on The Beast Island there were probably only large beasts like dinosaurs, but here I can sense gaps between worlds leading to other planes, and what about more evil ones, you know Hell and so on, so it must be much worse than on your island.„ she said which with excitement like a child going on a trip, it didn't bode well for their trip.

"I think you mentioned Hell... It's not a nice place, is it?" Casta asked, and the silver-haired Sorceress waved her hand and said.

„It's no problem, all you need is the right spells, especially the magic of unsummoning... They taught you that in school, right? That Mystacor of yours seemed like a pretty good school, they dealt with that Vrock I summoned really quickly.„ she said, still with joyful enthusiasm. None of the members of the expedition shared that feeling, except maybe Heart Gift , who clearly didn't understand the context.

„Don't be afraid, Captain... „ Tonado said, turning to Angela with an absolutely serious face. „I will go ahead, and I will be the first to fall victim to any dark spells that any demons we meet will cast. „ Despite his and their large size, there was no doubt in their minds that he would be the first to throw himself into battle. Angela looked at him seriously and said.

„I'm glad you're so brave, my first officer, but I think it would be best if nothing happened to you, because who would I replace you with? „ she said and he had the impression that Tonado wanted to say something, but he changed his mind and just nodded.

So they stopped in front of the monstrous structure to consider their next actions. They could see the remains of the outer structures, most of them ruined or swallowed by nature, but not all of them. They stopped at a squat tower about two stories high, and there was enough room for everyone. She wasn't sure what the building was for, she wasn't an expert in architecture and neither was her brother, in fact she found it a very boring field of study. As they entered, she saw Angela standing next to her brother, and their hands gently touched. She resisted the urge to smile at the sight. She was very happy for her brother. She noticed that both girls, Tirin and Heart Gift, were standing next to each other, and the AI was asking the girl in the biosuit something, who answered her clearly embarrassed, but at the same time pleased. She smiled at the sight. Although she had never been interested in such matters, it was nice to be surrounded by so much love. And then she was standing next to her. On one side was Ireanis, and on the other was Hordak, definitely not the company she wanted, but she wasn't going to complain now. So she sighed and simply asked.

„Did Shadow Weaver give you a map or something?”

The sorceress looked around as if searching for the person the question was directed at, until she finally realized it was her. She reached into her bag and pulled out several sheets of paper, waving them in their faces.

„Shadow Weaver gave me a few things and told me to show them to you. Actually, there's not much of it.„ she handed them the materials. They were all written in Shadow Weaver's neat handwriting, how on Etheria was she able to write so beautifully with such claws? It bordered on obsession. Her handwriting was... Characteristic, like most college in school. Although some people complained that it was hard to read what she wrote, it only took a little effort to understand everything...

The documents showed sketches of Umbracor, surprisingly consistent with what they saw when they got here. She drew a map, although very imprecise and rather illustrative, which was supposed to lead them to the place, Where Stelarium was located ... She couldn't be sure how much they were true to the facts, but she had to admit that it was impressive that she managed to draw it all from memory, because after all, she had not had access to their libraries since her stay in Mystacor, And that was over thirty-five years ago. Hordak, seeing this, grimaced and said.

"How is that supposed to help us explore this place?" he said, and then Mikach said.

„It's always better than nothing, but I managed to find some old descriptions of the place in Lance and George's library and I made a map based on them too, so using both of them we might be able to find the right way relatively quickly. Is there anything else here?”

„A list of possible threats we might encounter here, as well as a description from the Stelarium itself, along with a way to use it. And considerations on how to open the gate to the vault, or observatory, where it should be stored.„ she explained to her brother, looking through the heavily crumpled papers. Some of them had traces of something sweet and sticky... Some kind of drink? She looked askance at the sorceress Saihe, who was drinking something orange and smelling of floor cleaner...

„Well, that's pretty good, anyway, we know where to start. But what dangers is she talking about?„ her brother asked. She frowned and told him what it said.

„She writes about bearded devils, shadow demons and especially about some Velstracs and daemons. How do they differ from demons?„ Feeling a headache Since when did the World become so complicated? Once the problem was what new equipment Hordak would invent, And now they had to deal with terrible beings from other dimensions. She was the chief sorcerer of Mystacor and should know everything related to magic, but it turned out that she knew very little. Saihe Sorceress smiled and said.

„Oh yeah, there's a big difference. Daemons are there to fuck you up, and Demons are there to fuck you to death. Either way, you should shoot before you ask questions... It always works.”

She sighed, not really liking what she heard, and then Angela asked.

„Could you explain to me what's going on with these schools? Why is this place so ruined?”

She looked at her in surprise.

„But you were there then.... I forgot that you lost your memories. You know, about these things. „ she rubbed her health, embarrassed by the awkwardness of what she was saying.

„Maybe I'll tell you everything?„ Mikach said, smiling gently, and she didn’t protested. Her brother knew the whole story as well as she did, and it was probably better that he explained everything to his wife and companions. Hordak leaned back against the wall, and Heart Gift knelt on the ground, staring at the former Prince Consort like a kindergarten child at a teacher. Tirin sat down next to her and listened, but she looked a bit more relaxed than before, clearly feeling good with a roof over her head. Mikah took a deep breath and began to speak in the calm voice that had convinced so many to support the rebellion during the war.

„Once, when our planet was just rebuilding after the chaos that came after the First Ones left it the role of sorcerers in Etherian society was very significant, especially since we had lost most of our technical knowledge by then, and it took many centuries to regain it. In the beginning there were numerous and small schools of sorcerers, many trying to teach on a master and apprentice basis, but more and more were needed and some Princesses became interested in ensuring that teaching on their lands was conducted in a controlled manner, without dozens of schools teaching contradictory and unproven theories. Eventually, three schools were created, each created by different rulers. So the ruler of Brightmoon, not you, but one of your predecessors, created Mystacor, the ruler of Salinea created Arkancor on one of the islands , and the ruler of Centimeni , the Country Of Scorpions, provided funds for the creation of Umbracor. The schools enjoyed great independence, and each of them was practically an independent kingdom. After all, most of the sorcerers settled in these Three places, and most of the magical power that did not depend on the princesses was in their hands. However, if you know the map of our planet, you know that these colleges were relatively close to each other, and a large part of Etheria was beyond their immediate reach. As you know, people always want more, and although at first all the colleges focused on educating the next generations of sorcerers, but after some time the leaders of specific colleges began to compete with each other. Differences in worldviews also came to this.„ Micah finished, and then she interrupted

„Yes! Mystacor focused on personal growth, Arcanacor taught about magical theory, and Umbracor encouraged questioning the rules and seeking new discoveries.„ she explained from the house but her brother motioned for her to speak and began to explain.

„It's not quite like that. Mystacor focused on making magic useful to people. Arcanacor, on the other hand, studied the rules that governed the arcane arts. Some say that Umbracor taught that power is the most important thing... „ when he said that, she grimaced and added.

„ I think we know now why Shadow Weaver was so interested in this place.„ she said but Mikah shook his head.

„It's not like that. As you know, Umbracor was the school that was blamed for the tragedy that happened later. It seems to me that they were rather looking for the truth, among the myths and lies that the others believed in... In a way, it's a pity that they fell, because maybe we would have known in advance who the First Ones really were, and maybe we would have found another way to get out of Despondos, so as not to fall into Horde Prime's grasp ... Or at least we would have been better prepared for the arrival of the Horde... I guess it doesn't matter now... In any case, tensions were growing, and you have to know that the main source of power of all schools were their students. However, the number of people with a talent for magic is always very limited. So they tried to convince more and more Princesses to allow only them to recruit students to their schools. Many did not agree to this, so the Leaders ruling all magic schools tried to influence it, to remove those who were inconvenient. Soon they also began to fight among themselves, and since the Magic of the sorcerers was the most powerful power available on our planet at that time, excluding of course the Powers of the Princesses... That is why the clashes were brutal and bloody. Soon some of the rulers also joined these fights, to gain the support of the leaders of all schools. only deepening the chaos. The conflict escalated. There were more and more victims and more and more terrible magic was used, although I have the impression that it was still not much compared to what the sorcerers from outside our world use... It came to a stalemate, and no one could gain the upper hand. In the end, however, it was supposedly Umbracor who did something terrible. They unleashed a terrible power and destroyed Arkanacor . All that was left after him was the island of black stone... Thousands died, and then all the princesses formed an alliance, even the ruler of the Scorpions, who until then had patronized Umbracor, and set out to besiege this school. It is said that the siege lasted thre years, and many died, including three Princesses, but slowly they managed to gain the upper hand because the forces of the sorcerers from this place were depleting, and they also managed to gain the sorcerers from Mystacor, who agreed to submit absolutely to the rule of the Princesses, and were supported by the sorcerers from the destroyed Arkanacor. The fighting continued for a while,, until the supposedly highest sorcerers of Umbracor tried to use dark magic once more, but this time they failed and the entire college was cursed. Some time later the leaders of Mystacor swore complete neutrality and that they would never again interfere in politics. In the meantime, these ruins were considered a cursed place and forever abandoned. Eventually they were forgotten, although I have the impression that it was mainly because of the shame of the war of the sorcerers. So in this way only one college remained, which as we all know did not discover the most important mysteries of our planet.”

Everyone was silent for a moment until finally Ireanis spoke.

“Our University of Magaambya has existed for four thousand years, and nothing so terrible has ever happened there.„ Saihe woman smiled and hid the bag of crisps she was eating during the story. She felt a surge of strange patriotism, because she felt that someone had insulted her university, and for which she could not agree.

„But you don't teach there anymore, and I don't think it's just because it's gone...”

And in that moment, a change came over Ireanis' eyes. Her face hardened, the goofy smile disappeared, and there was a note of steel in her voice.

„What do you know about my life. I fought creatures more terrible than what you met there in the underground. It's just that at some point everyone breaks. If you met someone like Ashaq the Annihilator, we will see how much is left without your courage and values."

They finally saw in her who she once was, or perhaps who she truly was, deep in her heart. She decided, won't you look at her like a drunken idiot...

"Who was this Ashaq , and is there a chance we might meet her someday?" Hordak asked, and Ireanis hesitated.

„I once thought it was destroyed along with the Lost Golarion , but then I was almost certain that I sensed it. It was an ancient dragon that became a vampire, and what it might be like now, I have no idea."

And again there was silence. It was broken by the Queen.

„Well, we can only hope she won't want to go to those ruins..."

Lady Sorrowflame didn't need to breathe, but she still took in the air saturated with the smell of death into her dead lungs. A great battle had once been fought here, terrible and magnificent together. Thousands had died here, and it had been caused by the Dark powers. She knew who could be the perpetrator of this massacre, and she smiled to herself, feeling a certain gratitude towards Shadow Weaver. From what she had heard, this place was cut off from magic, although not as much as you would like that of the former empire of Horde Prime ... But now the winds of magic blew here, and the shadow of death itself fell on this place. Thousands of souls wanted Vengeance on those who had taken their lives or abandoned them here, but it had no meaning to her anyway. She had not come here to bring Justice and calm the dead, but to enslave them. She had not led the legions of the dead for a long time, for millennia, but perhaps the time had come to return to the old ways. She stood naked with her arms spread wide and sang an incantation of awakening. The dead here were easier to tame than she had expected, but that was probably a trait of all the inhabitants of this place., after all the Etherians had opposed Horde Prime himself , but he was just a mad mortal tyrant, and she was an Annihilator, chosen by Dahak himself, one of the greatest necromancers in the known part of the Galaxy, so no matter how much they resisted their Will had to be broken. She heard the screams of thousands of angry Souls. That was probably why she didn't hear what was approaching her behind her. She felt a cold blade right next to her throat.

„Move and you die a second time.„ said a hoarse voice. She only smiled and replied.

„Even if you were able to do it, which you probably believe you are, you wouldn't do it because you would have already tried... So please, let's stop with the empty threats.”

For a moment she still felt the steel at her neck until her interlocutor, because it was probably a woman, judging by her voice, thought better of it and took the blade away from her throat. Then she turned around and for perhaps the first time in a thousand years she was surprised.

„Another one? That's interesting, the Lord Admiral will be really surprised... „She said looking at the girl. She had a scar on her cheeks, imitating a smile, she rather doubted and the exhibition did it to itself. Her eyes are metal and her hair is black like Catra's, but humanly straight. All of her limbs were replaced with prosthetics, and not ordinary cybernetic ones, but wonderful artifacts... She had already gotten one of these, but it was stolen and from what she heard it belonged to that girl who ran away. Who is person she was talking to? Next to her stood a female android, her body covered in scars that looked surprisingly familiar.It was all very interesting, and her scientist soul was purring happily.

„But how should I address you?„ she said, and the Girl replied in a hoarse voice.

„ My name is Commander Despara. By the Will of Lord Protector Felix Antares , I am his second in command, and therefore your superior. You are, I presume, Lady Sorrowflame.„ The girl said, and she smiled at her, showing her black fangs.

„That's what they call me...„ She said, but then Despara added.

„But your name is really Ashaq The Annihilator’”

Hearing these words, she felt curious. For hundreds of years, few people had addressed her by that name, it was almost as valuable as her God. Even the Lord Admiral did not know it.

„I see that you are a well-informed person. Now that we have the greetings behind us, I would like to know what it is that you are looking for. „ She asked, carefully looking at herself and her interlocutor.

„It depends on how much you know about everything that's going on around you. You're an ancient dragon, one of the few survivors of the lost Golarion. You know about the First Ones... But you don't know what they did... Although, as I can see, you probably already know something... „ she tilted her head, looking at her closely. She clenched her teeth angrily. She hadn't expected her emotions to be so visible on her face. She didn't like losing control of herself, On the other hand, in this case she had the right to do so, for what happened to her... For someone who devoted his entire life, and unlife, to serving God, his death was a terrible experience, actually understandable for people who hadn't experienced it.

„I've heard some suggestions, but you're going to a certain place because the evidence will be waiting for me there.”

The cat girl nodded and said.

„ You can believe me or not, It's all true, but then again... Why would you believe the word of someone you've just met? I wouldn't believe myself. So go where you're going, and find out the truth. Just tell me who told you all this...

She wondered for a moment if she should be loyal to Lady Cala and the rest… But if they claimed to be on the side they said they were on, then they should be happy to have a new ally, especially someone who claimed to be the Lord Admiral's right hand. But she should inform Lady Ka about everything. She owed her enough, at least to warn her that the situation in the high command had changed dramatically.

„She introduced herself as Lady Cala, but her real name is Calamity ... I don't know if it will be easy for you to find her, but if you manage to... „ she didn't finish because her interlocutor took out a small object that emanated such great power that Even She had to squint. She saw first a miniature map of the Galaxy, then planets, and the girl stared at its image for a moment, then she cut the air with her fingers, and together with her companion she walked into interdimensional space . In the meantime, she looked at the plain, where the dead were crowded. She smiled, because in this way she gained enormous strength, which could support Antares' plans, and above all, her plans, if necessary. She took on her true form, spread her wings and rose into the air towards the ruins of Umbracor.

Entering the Path of the Shadows.

She woke up, and for a brief moment she was sure that she was a young woman again, just waiting to get out of the place she had lived. It was only after a moment that it dawned on her that she had already reached middle age, and had essentially ruined her life, as well as the lives of many people she had met over the years.

She received, or rather took over the chamber of one of the higher officials. She did not intend to live in her mother's rooms, in fact she did not want to take her position, at least not really. Yes, she needed her power, to implement her plans, as well as the plans of Creeping Chaos but she never wanted to rule over her countrymen. If only she could, she would abandon this place, and never return here, but unfortunately she had to stay here for some time, and she would probably have to use the power of the Islands of Sorrow to achieve what she intended to do. Despite everything, a part of her soul was happy with what she had done. Perhaps if she had not met Silentscream, she would not have been so determined to carry out a coup d'état, but after seeing how her niece was treated, she decided that Whispering Mist deserved everything she had done to her.

She didn't ask for servants, because she knew that after her demonstration, almost none of them would work of their own free will, they would have to be wooed first, and even then there was little chance they would agree to come in, but that didn't matter to her anyway. She could manage without servants, there wasn't much to do... She had prepared everything in advance.

She boiled a kettle of water for tea and unpacked the food she had received from the cultists. She knew she would have to take some more supplies, especially those that could be stored for a long time. It would also be useful to take some money. Money made of silver and gold, because where she went, none of the currencies available here would matter, and for some unknown reason, gold was valued everywhere, as was silver. Fortunately, she had access to the entire Yago clan treasury, so getting money wouldn't be a problem. It would be worse with someone to help her on her journey. She guessed that she would find herself in a alien world in a completely strange place and may not have contact with civilization for a long time. Not to mention that she might not know the customs there, so it might be difficult for her to hire someone to help. She didn't know who this Claudia was, and she didn't know if finding her would be difficult... She would have to do something about it... She already had a few ideas, but she wasn't sure which ones she should implement.

As she was thinking this, Storm Heart entered the room, watching her for a moment as she stood in the doorway. They hadn't spoken yesterday, she wasn't sure how the Storm Warden would react to the coup d'état. She had forbidden her to let her in before dawn, because she needed to get some sleep, and she also preferred for the woman to calm down a bit, but she was glad she had come now. After a moment, the warrior said in a hard and cold voice.

„Just tell me one thing, did you and Midnight mask plan this from the beginning?„ She looked at her sharply, and she answered immediately, so that her sister wouldn't think she was trying to lie to her.

„ I did. From the very beginning when I arrived at our embassy, I planned to do something similar, although I was still considering possible solutions. However, Midnight Mask was not privy to anything, she is simply predictable. What is she doing now?”

„She forces everyone to swear allegiance to you, and also arrests those she doesn't think are loyal enough.. In addition, she ordered an announcement on the streets that you are the new leader of the clans and also notified the other leaders, who immediately sent assurances of subordination, so I guess everything is fine, as much as it can be after a coup d'état. „ Stormheart explained in a voice as if she was giving a report. But in her eyes you can see something she hasn't seen before. Uncertainty or maybe gratitude.

„What do you think about all this, about what I've done, and also what do you think I'm going to do?”

The Storm Warden blinked a few times. Asking others for their opinions was not the way her family managed their subordinates … It was only after a long moment that Stormheart spoke.

„I am... I am grateful that ... you did something for my daughter. I am not sure how much it will matter now, but at least my mother will understand what she did to her. You do not know how hard it was for her... A child out of wedlock, with a mother like me... It was a double burden. She was always despised, but all those who were my enemies could hurt her with impunity, at least to some extent. Now... Her position is still uncertain, but at least you distinguished yourself, for better or for worse. Of course, everything that has happened to her so far is your fault...„ her sister looked at her coldly, and she did not answer, because she knew well that her sister was right. „As for your plans, I cannot predict them. I am sure that you are planning something. You have always been planning something. I can only hope that all of us will not have to pay for all of this „ she looked at her for a moment longer, and then she answered her.

"I hope it won't cost you much, but I can't guarantee it... Now we're all pawns in the game of a beings older and more powerful than we imagine..." She said with absolute sincerity, and Stormheart sighed heavily.

"People like me will always be someone's pawns, we can only hope that the players didn't decide to sacrifice them at the first opportunity... And I'm not sure I can trust you enough to believe that you would do that to me." She said, and now she saw how overwhelmed and tired her sister was from everything she had been through. And probably before it was all over, many more terrible things would happen. They could only hope that they would manage to deal with it all... and they will not fall into the darkness that was gathering around them.

"I am a pawn to , there is no doubt about it my dear... But remember that even Pawns can make a move against the will of their masters... Even if it costs you a terrible price... But there is always a price to pay..." she said and smiled at Stormheart and for the first time in a hundred years of her life she felt truly close to her sister. She took her hand and said.

"We will meet again, in this life. I need your help, and I will probably ask for it soon. Be ready and Train your storm riders." She said and hugged Stormheart, then left. She had one more place to go before she enter the Path of Shadows.

Her mother had brought herself to the chapel, or rather hid there. It was pointless, because no one could see her, nor she anyone… Except for the terrible fiend, Silentscream and of course herself. As soon as she saw her, Whispering Mist moved towards her with fury in her eyes. She moved her hand, and shadow tentacles grabbed the woman. Despite the fact that she was old and sick, she knew that she shouldn't underestimate her. From her own example, she understood that someone like her mother could still be deadly dangerous. After all, she had spent her entire life spinning Intrigues and murdering rivals.

„And you still dare to show up here, you traitor. Viper! You've deceived everyone! You've betrayed your entire family. If I had known that I would give birth to such a vile spawn, I would have smashed your head long ago...„ She shouted at her with a hissing voice, but she didn't let her continue speaking.

„At least have some honor to accept your defeat. You only got what you deserved. Actually, I felt disappointed. I never expected you to behave decently, but at least you could have been a little more reasonable, more cunning. If you were as smart as you always wanted to be, you would have at least tried to hide your anger, and somehow placate me, lull my vigilance... Well , you found yourself in the place you are by your own will... And be nice to Silentscream, or you will starve. And don't try any tricks, because the creature I summoned will be watching you, if it thinks you are up to something, then that is your miserable fate.„ She said and left her, hoping forever.

The temple of the spider was an impressive structure, even on the scale of what she had seen in the rest of the Galaxy, and it was certainly the largest temple on all of Etheria… Almost certainly, because even she had no idea what the darkest corners of this planet hid. It had probably been significantly damaged during Horde Prime's brief occupation, but it had been one of the first places to be rebuilt… Or maybe the madman had simply remade it in his image now… She had no idea what was considered worse. She hadn't been here since... leaving the island, and she felt a strange, overwhelming feeling, as if she had gone back in time... As if she were a gloomy acolyte again, who would one day become a high priestess. She had never had much faith in her heart, even after she had been brought back to life, and then she had stood before the face of God, although Nyarlathotep was not a God that even the most faithful worshippers wanted to stand before. Due to her job as Lady Cala's steward, she had to visit the temple a few times, but she never paid much attention to it. After all these years, she could barely remember How to talk to the priests... Oh well, that wouldn't last long.

However, before she entered the temple, Silentscream was waiting for her at the gate . She grimaced at the sight, because she thought the girl should have kept a closer eye on her grandmother, because this woman could be plotting something even now, but she wasn't going to scold the girl, because she had already been through a lot during the few years she had been in this world

„Thank you, auntie... For everything you've done.„ The girl said, and she smiled at her sourly.

"You're welcome," she said with bitterness in her voice, and then moved on, but this would have stopped her and asked.

„How did you actually come into the world? From what I understand, your father was banished from this place about seventy years ago… And you're certainly not that old…”

Silentscream lowered her head and said.

„During the war, pirates abounded. The Storm Warden convinced the First Mother to take up the hunt for pirates. But she wasn't the only one hunting them. One of the Corsairs hired by the ruler of Salinea also took part in it. As you can imagine, it was my father. During the fight with one of the most dangerous pirates, Iathem of the dead eyes, they joined forces and defeated him. Only they knew the truth that they were once lovers. During the celebration... They spent the night together... and that's how I came into being. The ruler was furious, but my mother promised Absolute obedience, In exchange for letting me live. Whispering Mist not only agreed, but even allowed me to serve at the Palace with my mother… „ the girl explained, and she smiled sadly at her and said.

„Listen to me, Leave this place. On this planet, and even in the whole universe, There are many beautiful and wonderful places. You can visit any of them. You are still young, and not tied to anyone, so the world is open to you, do not make the same mistake as we all did. Don't let loyalty to your family or the lust for power cause you to suffer the same fate as us.„ She said, smiling at the girl as friendly as someone with her appearance could. Silentscream lowered her eyes and said quietly

„Then I would have to abandon my grandmother... Only you and I can see her, and only somewhere does she see you, apart from that monster, of course.”

“Damn, I got this girl stuck taking care of one of the nastiest people on the entire planet.” she thought, and sighed heavily.

“Then leave her, or take her with you, if that's what you want, but it's better not to stay here, it's best if she somehow goes to Absalom Station, it's the safest place in the whole galaxy, and you'll see more wonders there than you can imagine. I've only been there once, but I have to say it was wonderful.„ she said, and her niece thought about it and nodded period

„I will consider your words aunty„ Said Silentscream and she headed towards the temple.

The interior was truly impressive. To build such a huge structure only from darkwood was an extraordinary feat. She would see the red Lacquer or nacre representations of the history of their nation, as well as their divine patroness, the Spider. All the priests and the surroundings looked at her with slight fear, probably because of what she had done in the throne room. Now they probably saw her as the chosen one of their goddess, and at the same time someone cursed and tainted by foreign influences, so they had no idea how they should treat her. She was a bit ashamed of the act she had to act out, although on the other hand, it wasn't such a big lie. After all, she had summoned one of the Avatars of Atlach-Nacha ... Pacting with the Great Old One was never easy, but the Weaver Between Worlds was one of the most rational, but she still suspected that she was only able to survive this agreement because she had the support of the Creeping Chaos. But now she had to be careful not to end up on the cursed plateau of Leng. There, it might turn out that this ancient entity might want to repay a debt she owed, and she already had too many.. Now, however, she needed the priests' help, or at least one place to be made available.

The Supreme Spinner stood in front of the Great Altar resembling a spider, for what else could it resemble? Once this position had been her destiny, but long ago She had already left this path and chosen the path that led her into darkness. The woman in the mask turned towards her, but Her gaze was hard, but not defiant either, which meant that the Spinner had some sense after all.

„What are your wishes, ruler of the clans…" she asked, appraising her with her eyes.

„Take me to the vaults. „ she ordered without even explaining what exactly she meant, after all, for a very long time the main task of the spinners was to serve the clans. Once they supposedly had more power, and could even decide who would be the head of the clan, but they quickly threw it in and it was cut short, after all the leaders of her people did not need competition, or someone to judge them. The woman turned her head to the side, as if she was interested in her words, and then said.

„For many years, no one has looked into that place, except for the custodians and the Spinners, the heads of the clans were usually not interested in the past. Usually, we advised them against it, because many of the things hidden there have the Stain of heresy, so it would be better if it did not touch those Who govern us."

She smiled when she heard these words, and it was not a pleasant smile, and she said

„Well, I'm a bit of a heretic myself, so this is probably the right place for someone like me, don't you think? „ she tried to sound gentle, but also firm. Spinner didn't react when she smiled, and most people didn't feel comfortable in her company when they saw her true face.

„Indeed, you are right. Someone like you is in no danger there. she replied thoughtfully. Then she gave her a sign to go with her. She did so, but she did not stop being vigilant, because she did not trust the Priestess, or, to tell the truth, anyone present here. She knew that they were afraid of her, but she also aroused in them... Disgust? That was not the right word, maybe rather Holy Wrath... They were not sure if she was the chosen one of their goddess, or perhaps a heretic and a fraud... Unfortunately, she was neither one nor the other... She was something much worse.

The spinner went with her, accompanied by two guards called custodians. They were armed only with iron-tipped stafs, because that was all the clan rulers allowed, but even if they had modern weapons it didn't matter. She was prepared, and in such a situation few were able to cope with her, not in these times. The richly inlaid walls of the tunnels reminded her of Castle Grayskull. The seat of the family whose name Lady Cala used had a huge number of underground corridors, which she explored for some time, although she didn't discover too many secrets there, at least not those important to. They had only one electric lantern, but it gave enough light, especially since her people could see well in dim light. The higher rooms were almost certainly storage rooms, because she could see that they were often used, and looking into some of the doors she passed, she saw that there were many candles or incense inserts there. However, the further they went, the less frequented the corridors were, and many doors looked as if they were opened once every few years. She had always been drawn to mysteries, and now she could barely resist the urge to order it to stop and show her what was inside. She didn’t have time for that. Eventually they reached the end of the corridor, where there was a door made of black wood and mother of pearl, with a bas-relief in the shape of a Great Spider; she had to admit that her people were quite monothematic. Spinner led her to the door, and placing her hand on it, whispered a few words, and then it opened. She thought for a moment; she knew that spider priests used magic, although they weren’t very good at it, but once it had been ordinary sorcerous magic, but now, with the destruction of the Heart, they might have gained access to some form of magic from the gods, which could be problematic if they chose to oppose it. But nothing of the sort happened, and the priestess led her into the vast room. There were many sculptures here , extremely old, several of them even had tablets inscribed with symbols from the language of the First Ones, as if they had been taken from some exhibition or museum. She shivered with an indefinable fear, then looked around further and sucked in a hiss. She saw a statue, what you had depicted a person with a face half light, half dark. One was smiling, the other was furious. She knew Who this being was, she had heard of it, and even seen its priests of Carurystal. Nethys, the God of magic and secrets with the dual nature of savior and destroyer. She remembered the bas-relief she had just seen, and now she understood Who the being her countrymen worshipped was in fact.

„Welcome to the Vault, or rather the archive. „ said the priestess, and she fell away.

„The Archives of Nethys ... „ She said and saw the priestess smiling under her veil, then pointed to a large obsidian mirror. She felt a pang of Uneasiness as the priestess led her before it. After all, she had very logical reasons for not liking mirrors, or at least the mystical ones that could hide Eldritch Beings behind them.

"This is the path of shadows, for it is the path you sought, truth.„ said Spinner, and she turned to her, narrowed her eyes and asked.

 How did you know?„ Her deep distrust of everyone suddenly ignited with a black flame.

„We've been notified of what you might be looking for. Now we'll leave you alone, which is probably almost the case, right?"

She couldn't deny it, she needed privacy to do what she wanted, but now she felt uneasy . Was this a trap? Even if it was, she still had to take this path to follow the orders of this treacherous sorcerer… She sighed and stood in front of the mirror and gently touched it with her hand.

„Greetings! Come!„ she heard a double voice, one gentle the other furious. You felt confused comma and looked around.

„No there is no there is, I am everywhere. „ the voice rang out again. She sighed, because she had no time for this type of discussion.

„Tell me who you are and what you want.„ She exclaimed, irritated.

„You don't recognize me?... How can you not know what your goddess is.„ said the dual voice and she almost laughed. The last thing she needed right now was to talk to the goddess worshiped by her people.

„I serve another being, more terrible and powerful than anything in the world.„ she warned, although from what she knew, there was a rather small chance that Nyarlathotep would aid her. Although it was an external God, like everyone else, it avoided the islands as a mediator of conflicts with higher beings... She could only hope that the spider would also want to avoid an unnecessary clash.

„We know that... It's obvious. We don't want to hurt you... It's a waste of our power!„ the double voice shouted. It must be admitted that it made the whole conversation exceptionally tiring...

„So, leave me alone, because I have an important mission to accomplish, and from what I know it 's in your best interest for me to succeed.„ she said in a tired voice, she was not in the mood to argue with gods and similar beings.

„But are you sure that these are your true goals? You always want power!„ the voice called. She smiled and said.

„Yes, I've always wanted her, but not now. I want food...„ and at that moment she hesitated, because she wasn't sure what she really wanted. Did she want to be bought, forgivenes? But her daughters, the adopted ones, would never forgive her, that's exactly what they told her... And besides, she brought someone like Calamity here . Did she want to Save the world? She had tried once before, a long time ago. When she had performed the ritual, she had dreamed of being a hero, but in reality, her intentions weren't pure then. She wanted to be admired, worshiped, like a savior... It was a very selfish desire. So she sighed and said.

„All I want now is to save my daughter from the terrible fate that may await her, so that she doesn't repeat my mistakes. She said, and then heard a double laugh.

„Really? If this is true, then the Gate will be here soon, But be careful, because you must prove your righteousness. Otherwise, you will die miserably! „ said the Voice, And she sighed and went to the mirror. She touched its surface and her hand disappeared inside. It was something she should have expected... She thought about it, Spinner had probably prepared everything in advance, waiting for this to appear. The cunning priestess knew that he would appear here, or perhaps the God of magic had told her everything. Now it did not matter much. She took a deep breath and entered the darkness...

These corridors were a bit too low for her, as were for Hordak , who was cowering and growling angrily. Of course, she still had wings, which were relatively inflexible due to the metal frame... Fortunately, she had her mask, so at least she had no problem breathing. The wings turned out to be useful anyway. Although she could no longer fly, they still allowed her to glide and made longer jumps easier. Thanks to this, they managed to cross several crevices that had formed in the structure of the former college. The first one was relatively small, so her husband gave her a rope, and then two more, thanks to which they opened a simple rope bridge that they could cross. The exception was Hordak, whose armor was of course too heavy, so he simply had to jump over it, as she did. She silently wished he would trip and break his neck, but that didn't happen. Tirin had to catch Hear Gift, who after passing kindled curiously leaned over the edge and almost fell. Well, after all, she had had this body for a few days, and she probably wasn't used to it, or to what capabilities it had. Worse, Castaspella from Ireanis had to do the same, when the silver-haired sorceress looked into some shaft, and started looking for someone. This expedition had many more dangers than Miss... Shadow Weaver had expected.

The second time she could use her wings was when they reached the place where the spiral staircase should have been. The branches here began to grow chaotically and formed a tangle covered with thorns.. There was only one narrow opening that led to the very bottom.

„I think the spells controlling the growth of these plants slowly started to fall here, I just hope nothing happens when I do something…„ and she jumped down. As soon as she did, she heard her husband's frightened scream, but it was too late. She spread her wings and landed safely, although she had to maneuver between the branches. However, she had learned to glide quite well on what was left of her wings, so she managed.

When she got to the bottom, everything was covered in darkness. She summoned a solar flare, and wanted to look around, but then she heard the sound of breaking branches, and Hordak landed next to her. She stopped herself from gnashing her teeth. Right after him, descending with some spell, was Ireanis, who smiled at her.

„Mikach! I think your wife is safe and sound, and I'm almost certain she didn't break anything!„ the sorceress called up. In the meantime, she looked around the room, but there was nothing special here except for the corridor that led deeper into the building. After a moment, her husband landed right next to her. She wanted to greet him, but then she heard a voice.

„Please, I've been trapped here for ages, Please help me!„ and they saw a middle-aged woman, dirty and dressed in rags, who was walking towards them. Then Ireanis smiled and cast a spell in her direction, and Hordak a second later shot where the sorceress had cast the spell Without thinking, she also joined the attack.. Only Mikach watched everything with his mouth open and eyes in horror. However, when the flashes of the spell exposure faded, they saw a terrible monster, it had a horned head and a body covered with a green shell, whose upper ends looked like pincers, which made the middle, almost human hands seem grotesquely tiny.

„And this is Glabrezu, Shadow Weaver didn't mention them...„ Ireanis said thoughtfully and began to prepare another spell. At this time Hordak stepped forward, covering them, and fired again, this time however the demon dodged and attacked him with its pincers. One of them clamped on the armor, which creaked under the pressure. She cursed very nastily, because she didn't like what she was about to do, but she had no choice. So she jumped behind the creature, and threw a frost Bolt at its back from close range, which burned another hole in the creature's armor. The elven sorceress's magic bolts hit the creature's snout, which roared and cast a spell at her. Suddenly she forgot where she was and who the people around her. She didn't know what to do and who her enemy was. She started shooting blindly in terror not knowing who she was fighting. She heard someone hit, a short broken groan and then her senses returned and she saw her husband holding his arm, his face twisted in pain.

„ I... I'm sorry!„ she said, but Mikach just waved his hand as if it was nothing important and cast a spell at the creature, which was no longer holding Hordak, as its pincers were shattered, probably thanks to the clone's power armor. A powerful energy beam pierced the demon through and through, and then she began firing at it at close range until the creature finally fell and dissolved in a cloud of stinking black smoke. She immediately ran to her husband, and asked with fear in her voice.

„Are you okay? I didn't mean to! It was an accident.„ she said but Mikach smiled sadly and said.

„I see, it put a spell on you. These things happen... I was once chipped by Horde Prime ... And then I did certain things... He said and hugged her, and she felt tears running down her face.

„What's going on down there! I'm coming!„ Castaspella said from above and jumped down to them From above trying to lower herself with the same spell that Ireanis used, but the effect was not as good, and she hit the wooden floor quite hard…

„We just had a close encounter with... Something nasty. How did you know it was a monster if it was just a normal person? „ Mikach asked her, hugging her tightly. Then Ireanis snorted and said.

„Hello! This place has been abandoned for hundreds of years, and we come across a lonely person wandering around here. It's obvious to any reasonable person that this must be a demon!„ the elven sorceress shook her head in disbelief.

She got lost in the darkness. She felt the shadows around her start to dance and shimmer, as if they were vapors or a liquid substance. The latter was probably the most accurate description, she turned on as she swam through the dark depths, as if she had fallen into a muddy lake. Only this time she had to swim towards the bottom, because she had abandoned the land of light long ago... She felt her consciousness slowly slipping away, as if she was falling asleep, but she knew she couldn't lose consciousness here because she would never wake Part of her mind told her that this would be the best option, and that it was the only way she could avoid the terrible fate that awaited her if she failed her dark master. Just fall asleep here, and spend eternity in a dreamless letagy. But she couldn't afford it, because there were a few people she had to take care of... She couldn't abandon them. So she kept walking, and it felt like she had been walking for centuries, her body was burning with the effort, and her feet felt as if they had been stripped of their flesh to the bone after an incredibly long journey. But she didn't stop, even if she had to crawl on all fours, she would get to where she wanted to go. But then a light flashed, and she suddenly found herself in a completely different place.

Bright moons shone in the sky, but the light was dim, as if they were half extinguished. The sky was blood red, a cold wind blew. She was on the top of the castle walls, in Brightmoon Castle, but it was rebuilt. The stone turned black, with scarlet lines that looked like veins in the blackened flesh.. She looked down and saw a city over which banners flew. At first, she thought that these were the banners of the Horde, that there was a completely different symbol on them, a black and red obelisk shooting sky, enveloped by lightning. She knew it was her banner, her symbol. The symbol of her own empire, in which she was the sole ruler. She saw all her enemies impaled on the field stretching beneath her, Mother, Hordak, and even Horde Prime … Others knelt in shackles, looking at her fearfully , but also with admiration due to the victor On her sides stood They, her daughters. Adora stood at her right, radiating red light, clad in black armor, and held a sword of protection in her hand, although its blade was now black. At her left shoulder stood Catra, this time in the regulation uniform, with short-cropped hair, and a proud expression on her face. Between the impaled prisoners she saw endless ranks of soldiers in black and red armor, who chanted her name. "Shadow Weaver!" The supreme ruler… the queen of darkness. But as she looked around, she did not see one person… Her true daughter… Once she would have thrown entire Generations into the fire, She gave entire worlds to the Darkness for such power.. But now… Now she had changed. This was not what she wanted, she did not want to be the Dark Lord that Everyone would love, Or fear… This was not her destiny. She closed her eyes and the vision unfolded.

She had to admit that going down wasn't as easy for her as she tried to show it to Heart Gift . She didn't know why, but she wanted the AI not to see her as a crippled girl, Someone worse, someone crushed by the parasites and spores from Jadehell ... Which infected her body because her mother went mad because of her father and everything he did... When she thought about it, she became sad, and suddenly she slipped, and almost fell, although not very high, but Heart Gift caught her hand, and stopped her from falling. This was already the fourth chasm they had to go through. She wondered if this strange sorceress had foreseen this, she hoped not. Heart Gift, as soon as she helped her down, smiled at her and said.

„When you were in that underground place considering everything your body had been through I was surprised you were still alive, but you are able to match those with healthy bodies... It takes a lot of willpower, you know?„ she said, and at that moment she was very glad that her face was partially covered by the breathing device, because it was burning, she blushed so much.

„How are you girls? Is everything okay with you?„ Ireanis asked, and Heart Gift she replied before she could do anything.

„Tirin almost fell, but nothing happened to him, because he was very low, so there is a minimal chance that he will break his neck! „ she said, and She felt herself blush even more, and on top of that the sorceress replied.

„ That's good, because I'm bad at necromancy , and besides, I think the Captain would be unhappy if you became a zombie, so please take care of yourself!”

This was even more embarrassing. She lowered her head and walked toward the others.

Everyone was already waiting for her, even that big, gloomy clone that the captain disliked so much. She tried not to like him too, but it was hard because he hadn't done anything to make her angry... Was it possible to be ashamed of not hating someone?

„Well, we're pretty close now, so I hope nothing worse happens to us.„ Mikach said, looking at maps. She liked him because he was always so nice, even when he didn't know that she was his wife's navigator. She had to start thinking of him as someone who would be with her... her captain permanently. Did that mean that he would be a kind of... second captain someday, and Glimmer would become... well, someone quite close to her. Would she be able to live in a palace now? Actually, she had a palace somewhere, which she had never been to since she was a child. Would they let her live in Brightmoon? That would be weird, and maybe a little awkward... But she still wanted to become part of... her family... except there was one more problem. Reh-zar, the husband of the captain and her first mate. She liked him because he was nice to her, to her captain, but she knew they would never be as close as they could be with Mikach, because to him she would always be part Azlanti, and though he never showed her dislike, she could always see in his eyes that for him she was someone from the empire that had enslaved him. She guessed that discovering the truth would have serious consequences, but that wasn't her problem, only the captain and her old family's. She saw that she was happy and worried at the same time, and she couldn't help her in any way.=. She could only hope that everything would work out somehow.

„Spit those words out! You'll be in trouble forever! Spit it out quickly!„ Ireanis shouted, and Heart Gift turned her head to the side, listening to the old man's dimensions.

„What? But what are you on about?„ said Castaspella, who was now a bit... her aunt? The Elven Sorceress looked at her as if she were someone who was exceptionally unintelligent, and replied.

„One of the first rules of dungeon crawling is to never say it's easy, and that we'll manage. Never! That means a terrible, agonizing death!”

Mikach and his sister exchanged a look, then Hordak said.

„It sounds absurd, how talking about victory can bring ruin to someone?!”

„That's quite logical and reasonable.„ Heart Gift said and everyone, even the strange furry creature looked at her. The android tilted her head as if she was surprised why no one understood you, and said.

„Oh, it's very simple, if everyone thinks that we're going to have an easy trip, they're not vigilant and it's easy to fall into a trap. It's quite obvious.”

„The golem girl is right! She is very wise, you have to listen to her! „ Ireanis exclaimed.”

She felt herself falling, falling into a bottomless abyss. She didn't scream, she didn't feel fear, only resignation. In fact, she liked this state. She was safe, nothing threatened her with pain of neither body nor soul. Many people would be terrified, but not her. She was facing beings whose view could break the will of many people with a weaker psyche. She accepted that she was hated by most people she met. She had experienced unimaginable torment, and even her own death, so what could break her? And then a bright light surrounded her.

„Will you come to my wedding? I just wanted to make sure, because it's a pretty official event, and you have a certain position, so it would be good to know in advance. „ She heard Mikach's voice . She looked around, and for a moment and was sure where she was, only then she recognized her office in Mystacor. Everything was as she remembered, although she couldn't be completely sure, because so much time had passed... She looked at her hands, resting on the light blue counter. They were normal, without claws. She touched her face, and she didn't feel the Scars under her fingers, and her tongue didn't feel the sharp fangs. She began to breathe harder and looked up. She saw Mikach in front of her, smiling at her friendly, and she saw great joy in his eyes. He seemed younger than when she last saw him. He was about thirty, so he was about the same age when he was taken prisoner and then exiled to Beast Island... When she exiled him... He must have seen the shock on her face, because he frowned and asked with genuine concern in his voice.

„Is everything okay? I know it's a shock for you, especially since you were like a mother to me! Believe me, I can barely believe it myself, it's probably a huge shock for everyone.„ he said, and there was so much joy in his voice... She couldn't remember seeing anyone so happy in the past decades, even Rosie had never seemed so happy. She understood well what was happening now. She was being put to the test again. She was tempted again, but this time not with visions of power and authority… But something much worse. She was being allowed to forget everything she had done, to renounce all the evil she was responsible for... To become someone better, someone she always should have been, if only she had made different decisions... If she had made different life choices... In this world, No One would suffer because of her actions. She wouldn't have been Cursed, and she would have been the monster that everyone feared. She wouldn't have killed all those people, and she wouldn't have turned anyone's life into a nightmare. She felt tears streaming down her face. Mikach looked at her a little scared and put his hand on her shoulder.

„Are you sure everything is okay?„ he looked her straight in the eye, and she responded trying to sound as if she was only touched.

„ It's just... It's such great news that I'm not sure how I should react. I'm just very touched, that's all...„ She said, then thought for a moment and asked. „I was just thinking about... About the Horde and all that it could do to our world. „ as she said this she was carefully observing the face of her former student. He nodded and said.

„Yes, I understand, that's why Angiee and I want to create an alliance that all the Princesses will join... Thanks to that, we will finally be able to win from her, you'll see. You are also invited as the Head Sorceress of Mystacor ... I'm sure we will win ha

He was right, without her Hordak would have no one to deal with the organization and management of his empire. And never will this last battle that broke the first rebellion take place , the future will be different. Of course, Horde Prime will continue his conquests, but sooner or later he will fall. Adora or Catra will never appear on Etheria, Nightgale will never be born either ... But it doesn't matter anyway, because it was all a lie. Somewhere out there the First Ones were still plotting their plans, her daughter was still Cursed, and the Lord Admiral was tightening his grasp around Catra's soul... She could escape into this illusion of a happy life, but not those she cared about... To whom she owed so much... Tears ran down her face again, and she unleashed the most powerful and destructive spell and threw it at her feet... Darkness enveloped her again...

He didn't make it to the last fight, which he regretted immensely... After all, something could have happened to the captain, and he wouldn't have been able to do anything to help her! It was terrible! Why did he promise himself now that he would stay as close to her as possible? Sometimes he would fall under her feet, But maybe that's better than her tripping over a mine or something like that... He wasn't sure if he could trust her companions... The android girl seemed the least suspicious. Tirin trusted her, and that was a pretty good recommendation, because the girl hadn't poisoned her, and she had a habit of doing so... according to what he had heard... He trusted the elf a little less, because she was a sorceress, but a decent one who cast spells that made a really big boom, and only such sorcerers were worth trusting. But the remaining Three... The clone was the eternal enemy of the captain, who only showed her boundless mercy and decided to spare him, probably only so that he would suffer even greater torment. Whenever he could, he looked down on him, to show him the superiority of the captain's loyal servants over such treacherous villains as he was! He knew that his captain would easily kill him at any moment, but on the other hand, she didn't have eyes in the back of her head, it would be worth thinking about it, so when she wasn't doing it, he watched him. However, the captain's new husband caused him more worries. He didn't like him in the slightest, and he suspected that he couldn't be trusted. He respected Reh-zar a lot and was worried about what he might say about his beloved having another partner... Besides, he was so old, and he was a wizard, but not as cool as Ireanis, he couldn't make explosions, nor did he set anything on fire. He understood that the captain had a child with him, but she saw no reason to stay with someone just because he had a child. He would have to talk to her seriously, otherwise it could end in tragedy! But the worst was his sister. There was something suspicious about her, she didn't look like she wanted to be in this place at all, she was an even worse wizard than her brother, and in general she gave the impression that she was a cannibal, or a dark cultist! He would have to keep an eye on her, although he was starting to run out of eyes! Finally, however, he had to talk to his mistress about something, because it was no longer giving him peace. So when his lady captain stopped for a moment, he walked up to her and started tapping her leg with his paw.

„Lady! I think we need to talk because you know because when you know it will be you know.„ he explained, but Moonshadow looked at him for a moment, obviously not understanding what he meant, so he lowered his voice even more, he said.

„I'm talking about Reh-zar because you know he... Well, he's your husband, right? And this guy here is talking to your husband and I think that problems might come out of it.”

Moonshadow sighed heavily and spoke in a voice full of sadness and regret.

„My good and noble Tonado... I am aware of that. I... I have no idea what to do. I can fight the Azlanteans and the invaders, but I got myself into heart trouble like a teenage girl. Don't you think it's ridiculous?„ she said, and he saw tears in her eyes. He was about to hug her, but then they heard a voice behind them.

„Some people make worse mistakes... If you talk to them about all this, maybe you can work it out somehow... Some people make worse mistakes… If you talk to them about all this, maybe you can work it out somehow… My wife always says that honest conversation and hugs are the solution to problems…„ said Hodak and then they both turned to him and she lit a flare.

"How dare you eavesdrop on me!" She spat with anger in her eyes. But the clone raised his hands as if to show he meant no harm and spoke again.

„ I just have good hearing. That's how I was designed. I have to say that I followed you as I always follow those who stray from the rest here. It's a habit I developed when I had to watch over my wife. Entrapta has a wonderful mind, but unfortunately she is devoid of the instinct of self-preservation, and she must always be watched so that something terrible does not happen to her... When she sees some new technical marvels, she forgets about the whole world.„ he said as if he was lost in thought, but it didn't change his mind, so he pulled out all six sabers and approached him

„I don't know, but for me, when you follow someone and you hear what you can talk about with your first officer, that's eavesdropping and that's it! Apologize to the captain.„ He said, but the captain signaled him to be quiet and said.

"You mentioned making mistakes. Was invading a peaceful nation one of them and are you comparing it to my heart troubles?"

And at that moment the clone seemed to hang down , but he said to you in a very sad voice.

„There is something even worse, and certainly more personal... I abandoned my own child... „ he said and then the queen looked at him with adoration, and was about to ask something when they heard Castaspella's scream."

„I found it! It's here! See, it wasn't that hard!"

She was trembling with excitement. She stood before a wooden gate, which perhaps resembled the maw of some terrible creature, but it was Here.!Just as Shadow Weaver had described it! I wonder how she knew it would be here. Had she wanted to go here in the old days? She couldn't be sure, and it probably didn't matter now. They were at their destination... She didn't really know what they should do next, the Dark Sorceress didn't say anything about it, and she didn't ask Ireanis about it either. The Saihe woman was now dancing with herself with joy, and she almost wanted to do it with her, but it would probably be interpreted differently than she should have. Her sister-in-law and that strange creature had gone somewhere to the side, but they immediately ran here together with Hordak. She refrained from wincing at the sight of him and pointed to the gate.

„We're here! We're here, behind that gate there'll be Stelarium ... You're almost there... All we have to do is get back... It might not be as easy as it seems, but we can see we'll get out of here!„ She said feeling a sense of relief, and then he asked.

„Do you know how to open it?”

Unfortunately, the question was not addressed to her, but to the silver-haired sorcerer, who only took a moment to realize that it was her they were asking.

„Oh wait, I'll take care of it in a moment. Hordak, come over here to me.”

She pointed to a smaller mouth, located on the gate itself, around which stretched twelve Horns. The former lord of the Horde grimaced, But what did he do as the woman asked him to do?

„Put your hand here, don't move it, and when you feel something, pull. I'm sure you won't lose a limb.„ she said pointing to the smaller open mouth, and the clone sighed heavily, but what did she ask him to do. Then she began to pull the horns of the creature for a long time, in whose mouth Hordak had his hand. The horns moved like levers, and she understood that Ireanis was entering some code. However, it took quite a long time, until finally her brother came to her and said.

„These horns represent the moons of our planet, and I guess we need to enter some specific date, let me think. „ he thought for a moment, then entered the code, and something clicked and the Gate began to open.

„t's a good thing those rumors about your hand being bitten off if the code is incorrect are untrue.„ Ireanis said, and Hordak said with a scowl .

“It tried, forty-eight times, and if you ask me, yes, I counted.” He pull outan armored arm, on which there were visible scratches. They were in place. And then suddenly Ireanis Curled up and let out a strange, piercing moan.

„ Is something wrong? „ she said as soon as she approached her, and the woman looked at Daria with eyes in which she saw pure horror, and said.

„She's here... The Annihilator has arrived.”

Chapter Notes

I'm sorry you had to wait so long for the next chapter and I invite you to comment.

She had to admit that she felt a strange pleasure from wearing this ring on her hand. She didn't know if it was the same with Calamity , but she could easily sense the power that lay dormant in it. It was like holding in your hand the key to a treasure chest full of unimaginable riches, or maybe it was more like she had a code that allowed her to simply decipher the language of an ancient Book that held the secrets to all the Mysteries of the Universe... She felt excited at the thought of what awaited her. Such great power was just within reach! She just had to... Oh, she just had to awaken an ancient artifact on an alien planet and hope that the lack of magic won't kill her by then... She wasn't really sure what would happen to her if the queen reconnected with her runestone, probably something much worse than just death. She laughed nervously, and Calamity gave her a suspicious look. She wasn't sure what to think of her ally. She was certainly beautiful and incredibly talented, but her eyes were always cold, she could see a hint of cruelty in her smile. Despite this, they were doomed to cooperate, so she had to accept her company somehow. That's how it is in life, you have to cooperate not only with those you want to. Despite everything, she missed the rebels, on whom she could undoubtedly always rely. Kyle went to get her out of those cursed dungeons, where she disappeared, even though she scared them all about what was there. Would Lady Cala do the same for her? Something like that probably yes, because it wasn't a big deal for her, unless she had to ruin her dress... But would she be able to risk anything for her? For anyone but herself? Anyone who knew Calamity's true side and knew that she wouldn't lift a finger for others unless she was following the orders of the Creeping Chaos. Her loyalty to Nyarlathotep remained a separate question . The Great Outer God was powerful enough that could destroy even such a being as the spawn of Yog-Sothoth as easily, perhaps even more easily, than a man crushing a fly. But that was not true loyalty. Loyalty could not come from fear, for even the greatest fear eventually restrains. And besides, the Monstrous Aristocrat was not someone who was capable of true fear. The only thing that truly frightened her was her sister, and that spoke volumes about who this Evangeline might be . If she could sincerely pray to the benevolent gods, she would beg them to let this being bypass all who mattered to her.

She hadn't seen Aaravos for a long time. He hadn't said a word to her explaining why he had left her, but maybe that was a good thing. She still didn't miss his company. She knew that for someone like that she was just a tool. Maybe she was one for the Creeping Chaos, too, but at least they were the Great Outer God. For someone like that she really was just a speck, a spark that only existed for a time shorter than a blink. They had the right to treat mortals like tools, because what were they in comparison? But that sorcerer... He might have been incredibly powerful, but he was decidedly not a God. He was closer to someone like Lady Cala, and maybe that was why she was so fascinated by him. She asked if he was present, and when she heard that he wasn't, she seemed almost saddened, or maybe disappointed? She wondered if it wasn't infatuation, or even some form of love, if such a thing was possible for this monster with the face of a beautiful woman.

She was worried about her mother She was afraid of what would happen if Catra caught up with her. After what had happened in the castle, no one had any doubts that imprisoning the dark sorcerer was far too risky. Although she had only known her mother for a short time, she had already become an important part of her life, and she had no idea what she would do if she found out that she had been killed. Would she be more determined to seek the power with which to take revenge on those who had taken her from her? Probably, and if she succeeded, then everyone would finally understand, What true pain and torment is.

They had already reached the swamps, and she was quite rested, as was Lady Cala, although she suspected that creature never tired. Doctor Moors probably didn't know what exhaustion was either, but after all, he was a person who had locked his own brain in a metal can. Their companions, however, seemed both exhausted and frightened. This was not how they imagined serving someone they considered their God's chosen one. They were probably those cultists who did not fully realize who they served, what kind of beings the Great Old Ones and Outer Gods were. They were certainly not ready for what awaited them. Well, they were just meat for the machine, as it was sometimes said, and it was rather unlikely that they would see the end of this story, which was rather sad, because they seemed to be quite nice people after all. She could do nothing for them, though, she could see that she would be very lucky if she survived too.

One of the funniest things was that she didn't have to worry about mosquitoes. They were instinctively afraid to fly near her, as if she had a poisonous aura around her. Perhaps this was because she could kill any insects that came near her with just a wave of her hand. She laughed, because it reminded her of her recent Thoughts on the relationship between Calamity and the emissary of the outer gods. The aristocratic monster looked at her suspiciously , and asked.

„Don't tell me you inherited the same unstable and sentimental character as your mother.”

„Oh no my dear! It's just... We're in the swamps, and I wonder if mosquitoes or similar creatures bite you... „ she said, aware that it sounded even more absurd than Lady Cala could have expected. The aristocrat frowned, even more uncertain whether her interlocutor had really gone mad, and then pressed her lips together as if the question hurt her and said.

„They bite... My form is human enough to bypass most sensors, and it doesn't even regenerate certain things.. Mosquitoes die of course, but their bites still itch. Are you happy that you 've learned my weakness? Then please don't talk to me again!„ her voice sounded more like she was embarrassed than angry. When she looked closer she saw that Calamity was very insecure. She understood that, until now this woman had more or less controlled her life, but now she had to go to a completely unknown place, where she might not have the support she was used to. Where no one would know the truth about her. And where she will probably have to curb her murderous impulses, and once again play the noble aristocratic lady, but this time she cannot fail by giving in to her uncontrolled desires, because she can no longer fail Nyarlathotep This time he wouldn't forgive her... If he ever did. After all, he had sent here the very creature she feared.

„Ah... I sense power, or at least its traces. My senses in this magnificent body are heightened in some ways, so I am able to see things that you miss. Look at the stones along this path, they were melted with some enormous amount of energy! Can you imagine the power it took to do something like that! And these plants, this is yet another case of introduction of alien species here, but from a completely different place! And take a closer look at these stones, they have something that resembles a nervous structure. It's fascinating! It's fascinating!„ said Doctor Moors , and Lady Cala smiled at him surprisingly warmly, and said with pride.

„This is a meager remnant, if you were on Carurystal... If you saw what was there, the entire infrastructure almost working, you would understand how great the Bloodstone Empire was. It's just a shame it was led by miserable machines, not by beings designed for rule„ she clearly radiated pride as she addressed the former Horde doctor.

„Well, I kind of regret that I haven't had time to see other worlds yet, but unlike mere mortals, I still have time for that. Do you think the inhabitants of your Planet won't be too suspicious of someone like me?„ replied the brain in the metal cylinder. Lady Cala laughed as if Dr. Moors had told a great joke.

„Oh! They are blind fools who will believe anything they are told, as long as it is done politely and appeals to their good hearts. I lived there for over twenty years and they did not even suspect who I was. Yes, a few people helped me hide my secret, but still no one even asked what happened to my family, everyone believed in accidents... Although I must admit that most of what happened to the Grayskull clan was not my doing, only other servants of the Great Outer God. Only my adoptive mother died because of me... In fact, it was she who gave me my name. „ at this point Calamity suddenly became strangely confused, almost sad. „You see, in order to take over the estate I had to poison her... The first dose didn't kill her, so I had to give her a second one, and unfortunately she figured it out. When she was dying we were in the room together, and then she looked at me, no one ever looked at me like that. Sometimes only Shadow Weaver… but not really. There was no hatred in her eyes, not even fear, just… Like regret. And then she said her last words. She said… "You are the calamity that has befallen our family, daughter… May you at least be happy." „ when she finished speaking, everyone was silent, although she suspected that for different reasons. Finally, however, she broke the silence.

„Are you happy?"

When she said this Calamity looked at her surprised and said.

"I am one of the most wonderful beings in the universe. Perfection incarnate. A living demigoddess. How could I not be happy?" she seemed to be trying to let absolute certainty ring through her hair…

„But that doesn't answer my question. „ She pressed further, and then the Monster Aristocrat narrowed her eyes at her and said.

„I see no reason to answer you such dumb question. We may be traveling together, but we are by no means friends, or anything like that, so I will not confide in you my feelings. Besides, someone like you would not be able to understand what is going on in that which is the soul of beings like you."

She didn't ask any further, because after all it was better not to irritate someone who could crush your head in their bare hands. But as she looked at the woman, whose long blonde hair fluttered in the wind, she saw something she had never seen before, and perhaps no one ever did. This being, who was after all truly a demigoddess, was also a kind of victim here. She might be a monster without a conscience, but could such a creature be expected to conform to the morality of mortals? She should never be like them. She had to live among beings who were alien to her, and whom she would never fully understand. She had been forced to wear a mask, and play someone she would never truly become. Surely, if she could be who she really was, she would be the bane of the Galaxy, but she could be honest in her wickedness. She understood it, because in many ways she wore masks too. So they were all unfortunate victims of the Will of Creeping Chaos on this expedition, and there was nothing they could do about it.

They passed the floodwaters rather quickly and reached the better preserved remains of a stone road created by… She wasn’t sure by whom, she didn’t know exactly who the Bloodstones were, except that they were powerful crystalline computers created by the ancient race of Krellans . She also understood that all of this was part of some great energy network that was supposed to stretch across the entire planet to draw Its power. It was similar to what the First Ones had done to this world, but she wasn’t going to judge a long-extinct species, whose work she had actually used to survive. They drove closer, she had to agree with Dr. Moors, that the local flora was strange. The plants grew too abundantly for such place, and on top of that she had the impression that they were growing in the beds themselves. She didn't know much about genetics and especially plant cultivation, but she was almost certain that programming something like this was incredibly difficult, especially since it worked after so many thousands of years. There were also fewer mosquitoes, and she wondered if they hadn't planted some insectivorous varieties of plants here, or maybe they simply didn't have natural food here. I didn't see any animals larger than a cat here that weren't reptiles or amphibians. This was probably also the result of the fact that this place had been transformed in the old days by those who had created it… Or rather, the one who had created this place... She regretted a little that she hadn't had time to listen carefully to what her mother knew. Shadow Weaver is already in a similar swamp, as is Lady Cala, though they both went there for different purposes, but she's the one who'll hold the ring now, so she should be the most informed of them all. Of course, the fearsome aristocrat, despite her reluctance to share knowledge, and probably anything else, had passed on to her everything she knew, but she was not a scholar, and couldn't fully understand what she had seen. Well , she would have to try to investigate everything she experienced here herself. In a sense, this was also an adventure, even if not entirely planned. She smiled to herself.

Eventually, they reached the actual ruins. She thought she saw disappointment in Lady Cala's eyes, but Dr. Moors was clearly curious, and the other companions seemed decidedly frightened. In her opinion, these ruins were definitely... Ruined... Although not completely. She didn't know what to expect, she had never seen any ruins except, in a sense, a Fright Zone, but there was something here that wasn't quite right, but unfortunately she didn't have the experience to say what.

„We get off, we go to the center. There was always a Bloodstone there, and that's where we'll find what we're looking for.„ Calamity stated, not even ordered. But she had no reason to oppose her. Aristocrat had been in a similar place before, and from what she understood, all the Bloodstone bases were built in an identical way... It was practical, after all, this city was just part of one large device, it didn't need an individual character more than it was necessary to adapt to local geographical conditions or possibly the Strategic situation in case the vampiric gems were at war. Their entire group huddled together in a tight cluster, although the doctor was floating on his masks, holding on to the half-ruined Buildings... Half-ruined...

„This place wasn't completely abandoned. It has inhabitants, they care, although it's doubtful they know what they really were.„ She said looking at the overgrown road. She was right, here and there she saw torn vines, in others she saw crushed grass. She could also see that roots that could threaten the structure were being removed, although not all of them, apparently those who cared for this place didn't fully understand how easily nature could destroy such a place if given enough time. Still, she had to admit that the inhabitants of this place were surprisingly good at hiding, and if it weren't for the fact that she had some knowledge of tracking drilled into her head she wouldn't have noticed anything. Lady Cala smiled to herself, and said.

„Finally, I found servants I can finally count on!„ There was joy in her voice, but the pair of cultists looked at each other in dismay. Well, they were expendable. However, Calamity shouldn't remind them of that, she was so carefree back then. I wonder when they realized that? Then the aristocrat looked at her and asked.

„Are you sure, so they are here? If so, I suggest you show everyone... the ring.„ she said looking at her, and straightened.

„You mean my ring, right?„ she looked straight into the beautiful blue eyes of the spawn of Yog-Sototh, smiling gently but meaningfully. Calamity returned her equally gentle and meaningful smile, and then replied in the tone of a polite, well-mannered Maiden.

„Yes of course, I meant your ring…”

She felt in her heart both a twist of triumph thanks to this and the Great victory and raised her hand up. She immediately noticed a commotion among the surrounding plants, and even smiled to herself.

„Come out! Nothing bad will happen to you! I swear!„ she said, fully aware that it was a lie.

She heard Whispers quiet, but very excited. She smiled sadly to herself, for she knew they took her for some sort of prophet, and she also guessed that they would rather disappoint Lady Cala.

After a while, small ones started to emerge from between the buildings and bushes. They resembled something between frogs, humans and lizards. They wore camouflage suits and held various kinds of yarns, stone blades and bows in their hands. Despite this, they didn't seem too threatening, unfortunately for them... Lady Cala watched them for a moment and then called out „Does this planet have to be so fucked up? It's absurd. Instead of murderous, ruthless warriors I got... Frog dwarves?! What the fuck am I supposed to do with them? Attack walking machines? Dance and sing? It's absurd!” she shouted, and her Bone Blade on her forearm came out and she swung it violently, that the frog like creatures jumped back with a scream, but she sighed heavily inwardly, and stepped forward to cover the furious aristocrat.

„Calm, calm!„ she said in Aklo, hoping they would understand the language, although she didn't really count on it. It was hard to tell if they understood anything, or if they were simply placated by the tone in which she spoke to them. They began to whisper among themselves, and then Calamity frowned and said.

„It's a draconian ... But difficult to understand Dialect, but I can translate.„ the aristocrat seemed clearly surprised, and then she probably passed greetings to these creatures. They answered her after a moment, and then Lady Cala translated their speech.

"They claim to be called Cowl, and they have tended this place since time immemorial, at the behest of the great Warrior who liberated them. Was it one of the previous idiots? The one who rebelled against the First Ones."

She frowned, because she recognized the name. Cowls were fairy-tale little creatures that were supposed to help children. They were imagined in various ways, and children were often given stuffed animals to represent them. She didn't think they could be real beings. Apparently they were very few in number, on the verge of extinction, which they could easily cross if they did something careless, like irritate Calamity ...

"Tell them if it takes us to the center of this city," she said, though she doubted that the creatures help was of any use to them. Lady Cala again translated her words, and the creatures began to discuss among themselves in hushed tones, and then one who seemed to be the oldest of them began to speak in a sympathetic tone.

"She claims she would be happy to help the great wielder find the way to the heart..." Lady Cala smiled, clearly amused that her companion had become the object of worship by such beings.

They were led to a large dome made of the same veined stone. She had once thought of it as the heart of the city, but now she wondered if it might be better to call it the city's brain, for the dome resembled a skull all too much. Bloodstone was a computer, after all, a brain of sorts. She felt uneasy, thinking of what they were about to awaken. Theoretically, this thing was damaged, as if lobotomized , but how effective could it be against us? The Creeping Chaos would not hesitate to use even the most fearsome weapons to achieve their goals.

„The great shaman Sork will not take us any further, for this is a sacred place, and anyone who comes near will be punished.„ Lady Cala said, translating the words of these creatures, and then she smiled and moved towards the building, but the tall cultist called out.

„Lady! There could be traps like that!”

Calamity looked at him, smiled at the service and said.

„You're right, go ahead!„ She said, and then the servant looked around, but no one, including her, was going to stop him. So he sighed with resignation and would have moved towards the building. However, as soon as he got closer, something suddenly jumped out from between and bit into his leg. The man screamed loudly and grabbed his wounded limb, screaming at the top of his lungs, and the aristocrat first looked in that direction with surprise, then jumped forward, drew her sword and plunged it into that place.

„That's very interesting! I've never seen them survive long enough to outlive their owner!„ he pointed at the creature she had pinned down . It looked like a large and fat version of the creature that nestled in her ear.

„So Another servant of yours, who obviously disappointed the hope placed in him, left this creature, and it made it here... You've already sent someone to retrieve this console, but apparently that didn't work either.„ Saihe said to the sorcerer, and he just smiled meaningfully. Lady Cala hadn't noticed him yet, she was just looking at the creature first, and then she looked at the servant, who was clutching the wound, and knelt down next to him. The girl with short horns also stood next to him, frightened.

"Will he be okay?" the aristocrat asked, and the man answered a question that was not addressed to him.

„I don't know if I'll be able to go on... „ he said, brought back from the pain, and Calamity looked at him gently. She guessed what the aristocrat was going to do, but fortunately for the poor cultist, something completely unexpected happened. Suddenly the creatures that accompanied them hid, and the sorcerer Saihe turned and looked at something behind their backs with concern, which made her feel a cold sweat break out on her back, because if even someone like that, who looks without fear into the eyes of one of the Avatars of Nyarlathotep felt concern, it meant that the situation was really serious. Everyone turned in the same direction as the sorcerer, although she was not sure about the doctor, who at that time was walking on the roofs, clearly not wanting to deal with the inhabitants of the city. Two figures were walking towards them. One of them was a woman with blue skin and eyes without pupils of the same color, but in a lighter shade. Her hair was green and blue, she wasn't sure what people she belonged to, but it certainly wasn't any living on Etheria. The fact that she wore the uniform of the Fearless Armada only confirmed that suspicion.

Metal balls floated around her, and her body was marked with disturbingly familiar scars. Next to her walked a tall woman in a mask made of overlapping metal plates that were supposed to imitate a face All of her limbs were cybernetic prosthetics, identical to those that Eti had... She had a red cloak on her back, and in her hand a very long sword with a narrow blade. Lady Cala, who had already noticed the sorcerer, looked in his direction, he told her not to do anything. When both figures approached, the woman with metal limbs took off her mask. And then Lady Cala's beautiful blue eyes widened with astonishment, disbelief, and agitation. Here, I will say, the whole being in front of them had a face very similar to the two feline girls she had already met, although her eyes were now made of metal, looking like the same metal from which her limbs were made.

„This must be some kind of fucked up joke!„ The Aristocrat shouted and reached for her sword, but then the feline woman moved so quickly that she didn't even notice, and she was already standing in front of them, the blade dripping blood. For a moment she didn't know Whose it was, and then she saw a bleeding wound appear on Calamity's neck. The Aristocrat made surprised eyes, and at that time she tried to move to intervene in some way, but long metal tendrils shot out of the other woman's body. One of them threw her in the cheek, and the others painfully tied her hands.

„Of course, the whole existence is a joke, didn't you know that? The child of one who sees through time and space should understand that by now.„ she said in a surprisingly grating voice. Lady Cala held her throat and tried to attack the cat girl, but she made several lightning-fast cuts, severing the tendons in the aristocrat's arms so that her arms fell to her sides.

„These wounds will eventually heal, as will the hands I'll cut off if you don't calm down, but the magic in this weapon will make it take a lot longer. So maybe you'll calm down and listen to what I have to say, because believe me, I'm not going to kill you.„ she explained and smiled, twisting her scarred face. „Ask your elven friend who's pretending he's not there standing next to that sorceress.”

The sorcerer Saihe then spoke, and she repeated his words.

„Let her speak, I sense tremendous power in her... Almost comparable to She-Ra, at least when she doesn't reach her full power.”

Calamity threw an angry look at Aaravos but said nothing, perhaps because her throat was still full of blood.

„Back to the topic. This may seem strange to you, but it just so happens that we are probably on the same side... I know what you are, and I see who is standing next to each other. He is the chosen one of the creeping chaos, right? Well, I also have a patron ... He is Achaekek, the killer of gods... In a way, that connects us, although my power does not come from him, but from very ancient beings... But it seems to me that we all share a common goal... right? „ The woman said, and then Lady Cala regained her voice enough that she was able to laugh and get out.

„You want... To... Destroy...„ And she bared her teeth.

„ Among other things... Although this is not my only goal... But it does not concern you... I would like to know what your plan is...

„We must go to Xadia , where we will free the powerful sorcerer Aaravos , who will show us how to reach the world of the first...„ she said instead of the aristocrat, because she still had difficulty speaking...

„ It's a good start, but what next? Because discovering Eternia is just the beginning. Only then will the problems begin. Fortunately, i think your master has an idea…„ The cat girl said looking in her direction. Aaravos nodded...

„Yes, the sword that cuts through worlds... The Nova Sword... The bane of immortals... Created to kill, among others, those like me...

However, I was not supposed to be its target, but someone else... I think we all know who we are talking about... Unfortunately, or maybe fortunately, it never left my planet... Unfortunately, it was protected from us... It was used only once... „ And now, to her boundless amazement, she saw a great sadness on Aaravos face. However, he immediately looked in her direction and added... „I once told your mother about it, and that is why she was so fascinated by the Sword Of Protection... But now, apparently independently of each other, we decided not to tell you about this matter for now.”

It was intriguing, but she rather thought that there might be nothing major behind it, but her mother simply didn't want to give them too much information at once, since they had to complete all the tasks one by one anyway, and freeing the sorcerer was hard enough...

That sword… The weapon was made to kill She-Ra and that guy Kyle was turning into with his blade. And then she remembered the event in the underground… How the inquisitor had talked about Eti… And about Rosie… Rosie had also been the work of the First Ones… She had seen what she could do when she argued with that girl… She had also heard about her attacking Adora, and almost winning…

„Your prosthetics... Like Eti's hand, they are remnants of some knights Eternals... and all three of you have something... You probably inherited it from the Lord Admiral, right? That's why he cares about you so much, it's not about the legacy... It's about something more, and something sinister at that „ she said quickly, almost to herself, feeling involuntarily excited about making a great discovery. The feline tilted her head to the side and said.

„You're right, it's something very sinister, even Blasphemous and indescribable, But unfortunately we don't have the time or desire to go into details. I wonder how you know so much... „ she approached her and as if she was wondering about something, but she never found out what the feline intended, because then Doctor Moors jumped down from the roof .

„She learned all this from an ancient machine of the First Ones, Which she found in the undergrounds of a certain castle... He said many interesting things, and we saw even more... For example, that there is a Second person like Adora, his name is Kyle ... And besides, there is someone else, someone else created to kill She-Ra... A certain deaf girl... „ The brain in the black metal cylinder shouted, and then Calamity sent her an angry look, because the secret was revealed. The feline Warrior turned her head to the side, and now she seemed to be really worried, so she thought for a moment, then whitened her gaze with her companion and said.

„This really complicates everything... It would be worth solving this problem... But it may be difficult...”

„ It just so happens that I can make something much easier for you, and also make sure that each weapon will serve our purposes. I have a device to control other beings, I can give it to you.„ said Lady Cala, and then slowly took out the gift from the void wanderers, showed it to the warrior and added. „ Put it on her, and we will have our enemy's weapon just for ourselves! „ a cruel smile was visible on the aristocrat's face. In the meantime, she narrowed her eyes and said to herself. "I'm sorry Eti, I was trying to help you."

„I think I'll be able to find her. She must be emitting a very familiar aura… “ the feline looked at her companion, and then realized that the other woman had something very similar to Rosie.

“You will head towards Xadia. From now on, in this task you have the support of the full might of the Fearless Armada and its allies, because it so happens that I have become my father's right hand. However, remember that killing gods is my heritage, and you are a demigoddess, so it would be better for you, pretty, if I didn't think I could practice it on you, do you understand? „ and then with one cut she cut off Calamity's hands „So that you would learn obedience and humility. Especially humility...„ and she took out a certain device, then cut reality and left them here alone in a pool of gore, which had already turned purple.

She held in her hands a terrified sorcerer who was breathing heavily and kept repeating that the Annihilator had returned. Although they should have entered the vault, they had to calm down Ireanis as soon as possible… She hoped it was just an unjustified panic attack, brought on by being underground for so long and the general atmosphere of the place.

„She was, and still is, addicted to alcohol, so if we give her a little, maybe she'll be able to calm down.„ Angela said carefully, and in her eyes she saw concern bordering on fear.

"I'd cut off a finger or two, that always helps!" the hairy creature shouted, and everyone, including his captain, looked at him in disbelief, so he shrugged all six shoulders and added. "It's just a suggestion."

„Alright, alright! I feel better now! I just need to rest for a while longer... „ She said, panting heavily, and then she helped her up and they looked at the inside of the vault. There were countless amounts of all kinds of valuable items, most of them decorated with jewels and made of precious metals. She could also see a few books, covered in leather, but not all of the items looked magical, or completely magical. What's more, a few of them seemed to be the obvious work of the First Ones. She knew that she had come here for one of their artifacts, but she still felt uneasy seeing how many still survived after that terrible civilization.

„I think it's best if we search this quickly. There's no telling whether what Ireanis is feeling could pose a threat to us, but we shouldn't stay here too long. „ Mikach said, and everyone silently agreed with him. They went inside.

„What do you think we should be looking for? „ she asked her brother, and he said, "I'll think about it."

„This must be some artifact of the First Ones… You know what? It would be best if you tried to detect magic and pointed to an object that doesn't emit it.

She nodded and cast spell, then let out a strangled cry.

„This is too much!„ she said, covering her eyes, because I know as soon as she started looking for the magical aura. It took a long moment before she regained her sight. Judging by the loud curses and the objects being knocked over, her brother and Ireanis were also trying to use this spell. Suddenly, however, she stumbled and had to grab the nearest shelf, but then she knocked a few things off it and broke something. She also smelled the sharp smell of musk and cinnamon. It seemed to make the room warmer, and also a bit stuffier, as if they were in a room with a burning fireplace.

„Oh, welcome… It's been so long since I had any visitors… You can't even imagine…... „ she heard a deep voice, and at that moment the rainbow spots before her eyes began to dissipate, and a woman stood before her eyes. She had light hair falling down her back and alabaster white skin. She was naked and, as far as she could tell, extremely attractive. She had two wings on her back, and short horns emerged from her head. She also had a long tail, and red claws. Actually, she looked quite ordinary, apart from the unusual outfit, but she had the impression that something was wrong with her... She gave off a sort of sinister aura, and perhaps most importantly, she appeared in a vault locked away, abandoned for hundreds of years... The situation was identical to the recent meeting with Glabrezu. She looked around the rest, but everyone was staring at the woman with a dull look, smiling slightly . She didn't understand why they were behaving like that. She probably had to do something, right? She had never been one to take the initiative in such situations, so she looked into everyone's faces with pleading eyes. The horned woman looked at her companions with a very unpleasant smile until her gaze landed on her, and then she frowned as if in irritation.

„ Well, yes, there will always be one of you Normally I would set your companions on you, but I have been deprived of amusement for so long that I will happily do it with my own hands….„ She said and walked towards her, straightening her fingers, in a way she often saw Catra do... She looked at the rest and then realized what this woman had done to them and with difficulty she refrained from bursting out laughing.

„Alright, have some fun.„ she said and threw a simple battle spell at the horned woman's heart, which she probably wasn't ready for... Small balls of energy hit her in the chest, but unfortunately she was never a master of War magic so the effect wasn't very impressive. Her opponent hissed loudly and then Wanted to jump at her to torn her apart, but then the little creature attacked her from behind with its sabers, cutting her legs, and the horned woman fell.

„No one will seduce my Captain!„ he shouted, and then Ireanis regained control over herself, an expression of rage appeared on her face, and she threw her own time, after which the woman let out a loud cry, and disappeared in a fume of sweet-smelling smoke.

„That was quite powerful Sucubi ... That she charmed you all so much... „ she looked in her direction, and raised an eyebrow. „ Almost all... Well... If some of you feel ashamed now, because of your weakness, then let's just assume that nothing happened.„ Said the sorceress, and no one protested.

Her destination was in a deep Valley full of twisted vegetation that was clearly tainted by magic. Powerful spells were used here, the kind she had expected to experience in this place. It was exceptionally interesting and she had to admit that it filled her with hope as to whether her expedition made sense. Of course, it also implied potential dangers, but Millenia had already gotten rid of such mundane feelings as fear, at least the fear of death. She was curious about what had happened in this place. Maybe if she found a moment, she would question the local spirits, and there were quite a few of them left, about what had happened here in the past. For now, however, she had to content herself with the company of her newly-acquired undead. Unfortunately, a large part of them had fallen behind. Only a few shadows and wraiths kept up with her, as well as one servant, whom she had special respect for. The Nightwing flew right behind her, dragging a Shadowy trail behind it. It would be very useful in the near future, Regardless of whether Calamity and Despara were lying… It would simply help her kill other people. But deep in her dead heart she felt that all of this was the sincerest truth…

Umbracor resembled a huge tree, or maybe rather just a tangle of roots, it had to be admitted that it was quite an original, and quite visually appealing idea, and perhaps she would have thought of such a shelter herself, if it weren't for the fact that she was in a red dragon, and her fire was still burning... She would have to be very careful in this place, so as not to burn it down... too early. After all, she didn't want all the treasures hidden here to be annihilated...

She landed on a wooden dome, still flapping her wings slightly, and tore the wooden structure apart, which in her case was like breaking twigs. Her servants landed behind her, waiting for orders. Then she changed form, and stood over the huge structure, so as a human, she could enter inside. Pressing herself in her natural form would be very uncomfortable. Besides, over all these centuries, she spent more time as a human, so she basically got used to this form. However, when she delved into the Dark corridors, she felt Something absolutely unusual. Power, with a hue that she knew very well. However, they had no right to appear in this place. All the graduates of Magambya University had been dead for thousands of years, and most likely died along with Golarion ... However, she remembered something, a certain absurd rumor about the person she once fought. Could it be that by some unimaginable twist of fate she ended up here? She smiled to herself at the thought of meeting someone from her old life. This trip might turn out to be more interesting than she ever expected.

After... the unfortunate encounter with this naked and absolutely gorgeous woman nothing happened, which was good, the problem was that nothing happened , because they found no trace of this Stelarium ... Of course, there were so many treasures in this place that it could take hours to find what they were looking for. Unfortunately, they probably didn't have that much time, so they had to really hurry... Theoretically... Ireanis didn't sense her old enemy again, so maybe she was just imagining things... She was definitely traumatized a woman who had to go through a lot. Such experiences change people, and usually they are not pleasant changes... He knew that all too well... To this day I can't sleep in bed... And he felt best in his hut in the mountains... He had heard that the Saihe woman had escaped into alcohol to forget the traumas she had experienced. He wished very much that she had imagined return of her enemy, but as he looked at his companions, he was less and less convinced that he even felt a little ashamed, disbelieving the sorcerer. His wife, in particular, seemed to take her words seriously. When they stood next to each other to search the same shelf by chance, he asked her.

Do you know anything about what Ireanis is talking about ?

Angela hesitated for a moment before answering him.

"I hear that Lord Admiral Antares is served by a great red dragon, and when we left Brightmoon , I saw a similar creature on sensors..." She said quietly, and he sighed heavily and said.

„That doesn't sound good. I'd like to believe that all this is just a coincidence, and this creature just flies nearby, But let's be honest, you can't count on such a coincidence...”

His wife didn't answer, but he saw in her eyes that she smiled and gently touched his face. It warmed his heart for a moment and for a moment they just stared into each other's eyes until he heard Hordak's hoarse grunt behind him .

"I don't want to interrupt your...looking at each other, but I think I found what we were looking for." The former ruler of the Horde said, and all of them turned to him, slightly embarrassed, like teenagers caught making out.

„Well, show me. Let's see if this thing will show us the way to this Xadia... „ He said and approached the clone. He took a small ball made of blue crystal from the box and held it up. It seemed that stars, maybe even entire Galaxies were spinning inside. Despite this, he wasn't entirely sure if they had found what they were looking for.

"How do you know that's what we're after?" he said, and Hordak smiled crookedly and said.

„Just put it to your eye and you'll see.”

He hesitated, because he didn't know How much he can trust the Klon that this wasn't a trap, but then he shrugged and did as I asked him.

And then the whole universe opened up to him. He saw hundreds of thousands of suns, many galaxies... whole clusters... He tried to make sense of what he was seeing, but wherever he looked, waves of information flooded him. Data flowed straight into his brain, and there was no way he could repel it. It was downright painful, especially since he completely did not understand what he was seeing. He had no knowledge of celestial physics, astronomy, or many other sciences, and now he was asked to memorize data that was incomprehensible to him. He tried to control it all, but the more he pushed away what he was seeing, the more he got lost in this flood of knowledge... Finally, he panicked and started looking in all directions, but it only made things worse, and he felt sick in his stomach. After a moment, someone grabbed him tightly and the images disappeared. He saw Hordak in front of him, who was looking at him with some surprise, holding Stelarium in one hand and supporting his arm in the other.

„You overreacted more than I did... Probably because you're not technically savvy... I know a lot about these things, but I still felt... overwhelmed... „ the clone said, and then he felt a rush of nausea, so Hordak moved away from him, and let him throw up his travel rations.

„Maybe it would be good, If my wife saw this, you would probably understand more of it. Or her brain would explode... „ said the former ruler of the Horde.

"So what do I have to do with this?" his sister asked, and then Tirin walked up to them with the Heart Gift ...

„ e can help. I'm really good at navigation and astronomy, and Heart is... Well, they did her.. The First Ones… very literally.„ she seemed to look apologetically at the ancient AI, but she just smiled at her and said.

„Nothing happened! You're right, my mothers either belonged to the First One race, or was created by them.”

The Azlanti woman seemed to smile at her new friend, but then they heard a deep female voice through the door.

„The girls are right, let them check it out, I'm not preventing you from accessing this knowledge, because it may turn out that I will need more allies to the place I'm going. However, when you're done, I advise you to give me this artifact willingly, because otherwise you will join my new wonderful army.

When he turned around he saw a naked woman high up with Flame red hair and brown-red eyes who was smiling widely, showing black fangs, shadows swirling behind her… He knew who she was, he had seen her at his daughter wedding, but only from a distance, and dressed, and he had never exchanged a word.

„Ashaq ... Die, you bitch!„ Ireanis screamed and threw a spell at Lady Sorrowflame that looked like some kind of ice projectile

He saw how the Woman with red hair with one movement of her hand dispel spell thrown by the sorceress Saihe , and then smiling she casts her own spell, a green beam that hit her in the chest, making her fall to her knees as if without strength. He growled and tried to hit the newly arrived, but she grabbed his armored hand and effortlessly pressed him against the wall, as if he were again the weak Clone he once was. It was something terrible, but the woman only smiled at him and threw him as if he were a puppet. He landed practically painlessly, and immediately jumped to his feet, but the former queen signaled him to hold back.

„I advise against harming my companion. I know that you have done her much wrong in the past , and you should not be surprised that she is angry with you. „ Angela said, but then the red”haired woman laughed in a deep voice.

„Hurt her? But I saved her, thanks to me she is alive... Unlike her companions, whom she sacrificed. „ she said, indulgently, and he looked at the helpless sorcerer, who was staring ahead with a dull gaze... Everyone seemed confused, but then the newcomer added. „However, it was not Ireanis that I wanted to talk about. As I said, we have the same enemies and I see no reason to interfere with obtaining this information. I have lived for a Millennia’s and I will live even longer, so I see no reason not to wait a little longer. In the future, perhaps we will resolve our... dispute with Miss Ireais. However, now is not the time for that, at least for you.„ she said and continued smiling.

„I don't believe you're doing this out of the goodness of your heart... I know quite a bit about dragons, and dragons like you are rarely kind.„ Said Angela, who was leading the conversation, probably because she knew the most about these creatures out of all of them, except perhaps the silver-haired sorcerer, who was not in the mood to talk right now. The redhead raised an eyebrow and said.

„I see that your stay in the Star Empire has developed a healthy suspicion in you. You are right, in fact I simply wish that any traps left by both the sorcerers here and the members of that ancient race would be activated by you. That is a fair offer, isn't it?”

The former queen looked at her navigator, who nodded bravely and the Pirate agreed. Both girls began to examine the device, and after a moment they froze practically motionless. Ashaq looked at the artificial intelligence in the girl's body, with interest, but also a bit of suspicion. She certainly had no idea that Heart Gift and Tirin were members of this expedition. She probably also didin’t know who their newest companion really was... He wasn't sure if it would be good for her to find out.

Suddenly Tirin let out a shriek, and fell to the ground, and her friend caught her and said:

„We managed to get the information, but Tirin seems to have had a sensory overload, but don't worry, she'll be fine!„ she seemed scared and kind of sad...

A nd then a black light emerged from the artifact… For a moment it enveloped the entire room, and another figure stood between them It was difficult to determine what gender it was, because it had no facial feature and it face was smooth as we make from porcelain, and it was dressed in black wardrobes that looked as if they were made of smoke. She looked around and said

„You freed me... and in return I will... I will devour you... This is what my gratitude looks like, you fools...” And suddenly he noticed that all of his companions, even the terrible woman who had just arrived, were curled up on the ground. They hid their faces in their hands, groaning and mumbling. Without waiting for what he would do next, he raised his weapon, and aimed it at the monster, but then she looked in his direction, even though she had no eyes.

He was alone... in the wasteland. I remember that moment in his life. It was right after he arrived in Theria with his ship and was looking for... anything... But now he wasn't the same lost clone. He had his knowledge, he had his past... The past he always wanted to escape from... And now that no one remembered him... Everyone had forgotten about him, and his deeds. They had forgotten about his crimes, about the war he had fought for decades. Part of his soul wanted it to stay that way, for him to disappear from the whole world. He felt a strange anxiety, not coming from him, but from someone else, but he didn't care. He closed his eyes and let the relief spread through his body and soul.

„No! It's not like that! You can't be happy because no one remembers you! Stop doing that! Stop it!„ monster said and then he came back to the real world and he remembered exactly where he was and what they were supposed to do. So he smiled crookedly and aimed the Blaster towards the creature's face and fired. The beam pierced the creature through and through and it fell but did not die, but then the red-haired woman looked in her direction and the creature burst into flames, which immediately went out.

„So it was worth it for you to be the first to examine this artifact. For the first time in millennia, someone has managed to strike fear into my heart... You could say I feel gratitude towards you, you copy of blasphemer.„ she said, baring her black teeth.

„You're welcome...„ he said, smiling grimly.

Immediately afterwards, the former queen stood up and approached her protégé, who was supported by Heart Gift . Meanwhile, Mikach and Castaspella supported Ireanis. Seeing that Angela was having trouble lifting the girl in the biomechanical suit, he approached her and wanted to lift her, but then the former queen growled at him.

„Hands off her…”

He took a step back, but no more, and said.

"I'm the strongest of you all, even without armor, and it would make the most sense for me to carry her."

The Queen looked at him with hostility.

„I don't trust you, you treacherous bastard...”

Her words almost didn't hurt him... Almost. He sighed heavily and began to explain, trying to keep the irritation out of his voice.

„Many bad things can be said about me, but I don't think I've ever betrayed anyone... At most Horde Prime ... But I don't think anyone regrets that ... Since the beginning of this expedition, I've never once given you a reason to accuse me of anything...”

Angela wanted to say something, but Ashaq interrupted her.

"Please... If I wanted to watch people arguing aimlessly, I'd watch Elven soap operas..." Her voice was cold and there was a warning note in it. He wasn't sure if fighting her would make sense when everyone was healthy, but now that they had to deal with two members of their expedition, they didn't stand much of a chance.

„Allow him to do it, my love…„ Mikach interrupted unexpectedly. „I have reasons to hate him as much as you do, but he deserves a little trust.„ He looked at his wife significantly, And she sighed and said.

„Agreed, but it's not because I trust him, but because I trust you.„ she gave him a sharp look, but she let Tirin be taken on her shoulders. She was indeed heavy, but only compared to his wife and other people without this suit. Lifting her was no effort for him. However, he felt that while lifting the girl he also felt that a huge weight was falling on his bank...

The dark sorceress's friends left the room rather hastily, leaving her alone with the ancient artifact. Actually, they seemed quite interesting people, but she had no time, despite what she said, to make new friends... As they left the Vault, she turned to the young queen's father.

"I advise you not to leave your kingdom for too long, because from what I know my employer has some things planned…" she explained and the former king looked at her questioningly, but said nothing more. At that time, it was the fault of this group for helping to recover the artifact. When they left, she picked up the metal ball and looked into its center.

During her incredibly long life, she had acquired many skills, including knowledge of Astronavigation, as well as computer science and many other things, which were very useful to her now. When she looked into the device, a view of the entire part of the universe known to the First Ones unfolded before her. She quickly learned the location of the planet they were looking for, but that was not what interested her, at least not only that. She looked into the archive and ordered them to find the planet there, which should be in the location where Golarion used to be. Some things were of course secret from her, such as the location of the First Ones' headquarters, but they did not hide where her home was... Or what happened to it. Now she could learn the truth. She had not given the exact date of Golarion's disappearance only an estimate, so it took a while to find the exact moment. And then she saw... The planet was not simply destroyed, but erased from reality, annihilated in a way that could not be described, only the Absalom station survived. But what she was looking for was the place where the energy discharge that led to this destruction came from. She ordered the source to be shown, and then Etheria was indicated, and the cause was given as a test shot from a weapon called the heart of Etheria... It was performed by Major General Mara Espadone...

She stared ahead for a long time, maybe even hours. She felt nothing and thought nothing... She had never felt truly dead, until that moment... And then a flame ignited in her heart... The black flame of destruction... She guessed that igniting it was the reason Shadow Weaver had convinced her to come here, but she didn't care, and was even grateful... But now all she could think about was bringing death to Eternia... Or rather, Un-Death...

Rechiza looked uncertainly at Arkan”tar, who seemed to feel at ease in the company of crowned heads. She was not used to such environment. Yes, she was friends with the Lictor of the Order of the Eclipse, but a hellknight was something completely different, Janos di Vir was a man of a very honest disposition, and in fact, not at all as severe as one might expect, at least if one did not make deals with dark forces, and she was far from such practices. Now, however, she was in front of the local ruler, and she felt uneasy, even if nothing threatened them here... Probably. The locals were perhaps famous for their kindness , and the previous actions of Prince Zed and the doctor's daughter made the locals friendly towards them... However, she was still afraid of what might happen. If they refused to support them, they would be grounded on this planet at best, but if the Archduke decided that he didn't like that answer, then Etheria might end up with one less Princess, because she had no doubts about who would emerge victorious from this fight. But she was probably worried in advance, or so she told herself.

They were in a throne room, not as large as one would expect a princess to be, although then again, it wasn't a large kingdom, at least not by galactic standards. The locals respected their queen greatly, and not just in the way a good king was usually liked. Most of the local princesses were held in high regard, but Sweetbee was respected almost like a minor deity... But when she stood before her, she understood that there were reasons to perceive her that way. She was a witchwarper , a magic uuser who inspired the least trust of all. She twisted reality with the force of her will, often tearing it apart, in a brutal and unsettling way. This woman... She sensed that she wielded psionic power, very powerful, capable of crushing the very soul of someone with a weaker mind. As soon as she spoke to their minds, only she, and of course the archduke and the false automaton, didn't jump in fear.

„You are looking for a way off this planet... A way to a place where something very precious to you was left... „ It wasn't even a voice, but as if a second mind was thinking in her head

"I'd say something that could be valuable to all of us. There are already important things happening in the universe..." Kane said, and then everyone heard laughter.

„There are always important things happening in the universe. We may have been separated from the rest of the Galaxy for thousands of years, but that doesn't mean we're that ignorant, or at least I'm not „ that laughter made her feel a little pain. This was going to be a very long and unpleasant conversation.

„But this time, these important things concern you and your future... Your world still has significance for the Entire universe...„ Kane said in a voice worthy of a Royal herald. However, Sweetbee Laughed again in their minds.

"Again? Do you know how many times in recent years the lives of my subjects have been threatened because someone felt they needed Etheria and the secrets it held to further their plans?" This time her voice was almost painful, making her wince. The Archduke didn't show it, so it would have made a stronger impression on him.

„And so it will be in the future, some places are cursed with the fact that they attract the attention of everyone around. You just have to start getting used to it, or rather prepare for such an inevitability...„ Kane said in a still calm voice, as if he was only conveying greetings from a friendly monarch.

" And how will your help make my subjects safer?” She asked again, seeming even more amused than before. That's when she decided to speak up.

„My name is Rechiza Charcal. I am a sorceress of sorts, but I was also an archaeologist and researcher of ancient civilizations. The remains of one of them did this to me.„ She raised her hood to to show everyone how badly she had been maimed during one of her expeditions. Everyone could see her metal eyes and forehead devoid of antennae. Everyone sucked in a hiss of air, except for the princess, of course, which spoke well of her. After all, the ruler did not get carried away easily by emotions. Despite everything, she seemed to be interested in her person. She looked at the Archduke, and he seemed completely calm, only smiling slightly, as if he expected everything. Considering, What she had learned about him, it was very likely.

"To show you many of my subjects who were similarly maimed by Horde Prime and his clones, for as you know, his hatred of my people was great," she said, this time without even a hint of bitter mirth.

„However, if you don't help us, many more people in your kingdom will suffer, maybe everyone will die... „ The Archduke said seriously, but if the Princess had eyes like humans, she would probably roll them now when she heard his words.

„Do you think I haven't heard this in the old days? Once I supported the Rebellion and many of my subjects lost their lives. Later, thanks to members of the same Rebellion, Horde Prime came. But at least they weren't strangers... But you come here and say that only you can save me... Me and my subjects. Tell me, my dears, why should I trust you?„ said Sweet Bee In their minds. This time they felt sadness from her, combined with some fatalism...

„Because it doesn't cost you anything... „ Arkan-tar said as if explaining why his goods were the best in the entire marketplace. This time the princess seemed a little more interested.

„What do you mean, it costs nothing? There's always a price, isn't there? Only fools would tell me that they would risk themselves for strangers for no reason... Especially ones like you. I am powerful... I can feel your thoughts... At least the superficial ones... I know that you and that rat person are greedy for power and wealth. The doctor has a desire for revenge in his heart, in his heart that doesn't beat, just like his daughter. Prince Zed is afraid... And the archduke... His mind stands before me closed as if behind a diamond barrier, and that makes him the most suspicious.„ She explained and for a moment everyone was silent, and she was sure that the entire court was looking at Kane with concern, probably no one had resisted the power of their ruler's mind before.

„What about me, and my companion? „ Dilayla asked unexpectedly. „ Don't you think our motives are somehow... suspicious?”

Princess Sweetbee looked at the mercenary with curiosity and said.

„I sense a sense of guilt in your mind... But also a sense of mission, a desire to do good and serve a cause greater than yourself...”

„About guilt... I brought here the resurrected Shadow Weaver and a certain spawn of one of the Outer Gods as well as Catra's father , who is in fact a former dictator and war criminal, so I guess I have reason to feel guilty.„ Said mercenary , and when all the courtiers, though not the princess, looked at her in disbelief, she added. “So no one told you anything? I'm sorry, but it's better that you know everything...”

For a moment, everyone was shocked , and Dilayla's companions , including herself, were furious, but both the princess and Kane seemed pleased. So they probably saw it coming too... At that moment, she decided that it was her turn , so she sighed deeply and said.

„As for me, I feel fear, I won't hide it... And also Anger for what they did to me... So, yes... You're right, maybe I have base motives... But I am also a warlock hunter. I fight those who use dark powers. I oppose the servants of darkness that exist between the stars! Maybe I am not a hero... He didn't prevent the Lord Admiral from arriving and I didn't see through Shadow Weaver or Lady Cali, for that I will never forgive myself... However, what we are fighting is more powerful than you can imagine, but more importantly, it is driven by very simple motives. They simply want to cleanse the galaxy, to have a place for themselves to grow. To be alone in the universe, never to have to share their living space with others, to interact with other cultures, to learn their customs and lifestyles... They not only want to be the First, they want to be the Last. They have allies, many weapons, terrible weapons... Including The Hunger That Cannot Be Satiated... I know you have reasons to trust me, but Take a chance... I promise you that we will not threaten your kingdom.„ She knelt down on one knee and said.

„Please, let us help you... Let us save the universe...„ silence fell after her words, heavy and oppressive. And then the princess said in their minds slowly and thoughtfully, worthy of a ruler.

„I will not allow you to go to the swamps of Krannor Rill... A great evil lurks there. Although it was destroyed many centuries ago, it has not been completely defeated... „ And then I looked at the Archduke of Carurystal and said

„I remember you Kane Adamson... I have the memory of all my predecessors, and one of them knew you... Very well... We know who you really are, and that you once awakened one of the bloodstones and how it ended from the world... However, where you want to go you can get by another way, which you also know well. You will enter the path of Yithil, you will enter his lair. You have already managed once, now it should be easier for you... Recently another person entered a similar path, she was not as experienced as you... Although I cannot vouch for your companions… But that's a sacrifice you're willing to make... Right?

„ she looked at him with her insect eyes, and the man with a look as terrible as the matter of death smiled and said.

„It's exactly as you say. Thank you for your help... You are extremely... gracious...„ there was a barely perceptible note of concern in his voice… and that in itself made her heart skip a beat…

They were led into the jungle the next day. Dilayla had to admit that it was surprisingly pleasant here. It was never too hot or too cold in her armor anyway, but here it was pleasant enough that she could walk around without a helmet. It lacked the usual stuffiness of such places, and it didn't seem to be so crowded with decaying vegetation... It was also full of animals, both birds and colorful insects. Most of them seemed to be local, as were the plants with blue-green leaves. As she approached a large butterfly with four eyes that looked like they were carved from crystal, Rechiza stood next to her and said.

"This place hasn't been terraformed as much as other places on the planet. In fact, the locals are a much more homogenous population, at least for this place..."

„Do you like it here? Because it looks a bit like this place around your home?„ he unexpectedly asked the Lashunti woman ... Who looked at her with surprise, visible even in those metal eyes, then smiled sadly and said.

„A bit like that. It's similar here to Castroval, but not entirely. Only that... the locals are Lashunti ... After I was maimed, after I lost my psionic abilities. I always feel like something worse in the company of representatives of my species. It's hard for you to imagine that...„ There was a lot of bitterness in the voice of the sorcerer hunter.

„Well, I suffered too, but my prosthetics are a perfect substitute for the real limbs... In your case, nothing is that easy, is it? „ she looked at Lashunti and she smiled sadly.

„And then there are those eyes... I can see things that others cannot see. Usually i could see the inscriptions in the language of the First Ones... And above all understand Him... A wonderful gift from Doctor Sidonius ... „ She looked at the metal, airtight coffin built by the Doctor's Two servants, where the ancient vampire was staying, „ But he still suspected that it was hiding something more... But I will never learn that from him... „ She saw how the Witchwarper pursed her lips in a mixture of anger and helplessness... She patted her correctively and smiled as friendly as she could.

„Don't worry, You have me with you now. I can be your friend... If you want me to. Of course, don't imagine anything more! I'm already taken!„ She laughed and seeing Rechiza's gloomy look , she added. „You too!”

Rechiza might have passed herself off as a monster and cultist hunter, but when it came to matters of the heart, she acted like a teenager.

„I have absolutely no idea what you're on about.„ The Witchwarper said it so quickly that Dilayla couldn't help but giggle at it.

„Everyone here can see that you have a crush on Arkan-tar, which doesn't surprise me, because someone with your preferences has a choice between... A lizard, an annoying vampire, a guy with eyes as scary as death itself, an automaton, and this scholar. The choice is pretty obvious, and it seems that you were drawn to each other from the beginning ... To be honest, you fit together perfectly... And you complement each other... „ she explained with absolute sincerity. She didn't know anything about relationships, she was a bloody mercenary who had only had fleeting affairs in her life... at least until recently... But she did know a thing or two, and in the case of these two, it was all too obvious.

„If you say so... But Arkan-tar... „ she said, but then Dilayla rolled her eyes and said.

„He feels the same way about you, maybe a little differently, but similar enough. Maybe he's reached an age where he wants to settle down, especially since we've all grown up and become a little wiser during this trip...„ She said and smiled at Rechiza again ... The Witchwarper smiled too, and looked ahead with a considering gaze for a moment.

„I wasn't looking at it that way... Thank you for your wisdom... „ she finally said . The Mercenary smiled at her and said.

„It's the first time in my life that I hear someone say that I'm speaking wisdom. but if it happened to me once, let it happen to me a second time... Kiss each other before this is all over, or at least before we go down that damn road."

„I'll think about it... Thank you again for your words... „ said Lashunti and they set off into the jungle.

They hadn't been walking for as long as he had expected. Actually, this tower was relatively close to the city. When they reached it, the moons were just setting, they still had a few minutes of light. Of course, it didn't matter that much to them... They didn't intend to conduct an Excavation here... From what he understood, this place had been very well Explored. Besides, it was obvious as soon as they got here. The hill on which the tower was located had been cleared of smaller bushes, only the largest trees were allowed to grow here, which hid the ancient structure from the eyes of those who could fly over it... Although with modern equipment they probably wouldn't have any problems finding this place. Even the guards that had been left here probably didn't matter much if someone wanted to take an interest in this tower... It seemed, however, that there was something about this place that scared strangers... He himself felt fear, true, but constant and starting as soon as they approached.

However, he was used to investigating ruins and places of this type... I wonder if ordinary people simply did not give up on looking into this place, simply convincing themselves that there was nothing interesting here... People could be extremely convincing when they wanted to deceive themselves.

The tower, however, was a disturbing sight. It was made of white stone, maybe not entirely white, more the color of bone... Its structure seemed strange, he examined it as soon as they approached, it seemed to be covered with a glassy, extremely hard substance, but he had the impression that the interior was disturbingly spongy, giving a strangely organic impression, and his experience told him that it did not bode well. The building was quite tall, did not overwhelm with its garden, quite narrow and it seemed that its Top was uneven as if it consisted of many protruding spikes... In its entirety, the building resembled one large tooth. It was definitely disturbing... He should get used to this feeling, right?

The entrance resembled an irregular hole, without a door. Virtually anyone could enter there... If only he managed to overcome the anxiety he felt when approaching this place. Several guards in the colorful armors of the Royal Guard were guarding this building, but even they were not approaching the interior. The interior was covered with a blue-green substance that resembled meat that had crystallized in its structure. There were no decorations or anything of the sort here. At first glance, it seemed that this tower had no purpose... Inside, in a recess, there was a gate covered with a membranous membrane on one of the walls, which gave the impression that it led to the insides of some gigantic creature... The Archduke grimaced at this sight and said.

„ What we're going to do now is dangerous... This tower is a fragment of an ancient being known as Yithil ... Along with Sataka ... And a few other creatures whose names I don't know... These are Void Hunters feeding on... The souls of other beings... Because you see, this gate is the entrance to the digestive system of this creature... „ he looked at them all, and most of his companions were turning green, except for the lizard and Dr.

Quin, because in their case it was impossible. „This way we will be able to get to another world, in this case Xadia ... I only hope that we will manage to get there relatively quickly... As we walk this path, you must remember one thing... Do not stop, just keep moving forward... I am in no danger... I have already been inside him, and it did not end well for him... But it was not easy... Don't stop under any circumstances, no matter what you see. " Kane's voice was very calm, too calm for what they were supposed to do... Then he focused and said a few words in the Aklo language, in which he asked the being of whom this building was a fragment, to open a passage for them. When he fell silent the entire building trembled and then the aristocrat with the eyes of a murderer entered the membrane... Everyone hesitated, including him, but then Rechiza approached him... She smiled and, hugging him tightly, kissed him on the lips... And then she let go and ran behind the membrane...

Rechiza walked forward… She knew where she was, in a wasteland cursed by devils and demons, where she had found that ruin… She felt, for the first time in years, the echoes of the Thoughts of other beings, which meant that she had regained her antennae, and the colors were already normal, as if she had her real eyes… Of course she had them, why should it be any different? She saw that she should stop and run… Ahead of her was a doom… A rock incinerator had been installed … A weapon that could kill her… That could maim her. However, she remembered that she must not stop… Or else… Or else something bad would happen… She had to walk forward… Suddenly she saw a flash brighter than a thousand suns and felt a wave of heat that made blisters appear on her skin from burns, but she still did not stop… She lost her vision again, and her antennae, probably with her face, were fried, much more than the first time. The pain she felt was impossible to describe, but she knew… She knew she would stop… She would be lost, so she walked foward… And then suddenly the light flashed again, and she was surrounded by the light of the sun… She saw the entrance outside… She wanted to go in there… But.. She looked back… What she saw made her stop in place, taken by such terror that she was unable to describe it in words… But then she felt someone tug on her by the lapels of her cloak and pull her outside. She found herself in the arms of Arkan-tar , who was looking at her with concern.. ;

„Are you okay?„ he asked worriedly, and she shook her head and stood up, looking around. They were in the desert, she could see her companions… Most of them had gone outside….

„How many?„ she said, and Dilayla said in a grim voice…

„Surprising many... Everyone from our team, plus the archduke, the vampire with his daughter, the automaton , and Huntara with Tung-lashor and their weird android...

„And the rest? „ she said, looking at the shocked lizard and warrior.

„ They were paid as a toll. There is always a toll to pay …. „ Kane said…

Ice Heart - Part One

Chapter Notes

Here's another chapter... Halfway through I realized I forgot about Entrapta. Feel free to leave comments and opinions.

Her face ached from the cold. And also the leg... it had been more thoroughly injured in the last two months than during the entire war, and definitely more seriously, and besides, it wasn't the end yet. She knew that there were more battles ahead of her, more clashes that could cost her much more… Not only her life, but you in the lives of those she cared about… Kyle, Rogelio … And the other former cadets, all of them could pay the highest price for her war… She was afraid of it more than anything in the world. … She would rather lose an arm or a leg than any of them… Although from what I saw, losing an arm or a leg in the galaxy wasn't something that terrible, she had to. After all, she saw how Eti was doing … Or her uncle, who was standing next to her when that girl came. She knew who she was… They had met more than once in the old days on the battlefield… Including quite recently. She saved Kyle and Scarlet... She missed the young sorceress, she didn't want to think about her now... She left, driven by her mysterious desires. She left with Shadow Weaver... But she remembered that she always spoke well of Frosta, so she decided to give the Ice Princess a chance, despite the fact that she could see that Igzar was getting ready to fight, but she was giving him a sign to hold off. And then the girl asked about Shadow Weaver... At first glance, she saw that everything was not good. She was also accompanied by that captain and general Netossa ... And the strange creature she was traveling with... And then Eti appeared with Rosie and said that the dark sorcerer was not here... Frosta was pale, unhealthily pale, but now her face became even whiter... She looked at everyone and asked again.

„Nightgale is here? I mean... Scarlet... Is Scarlett here?„ the girl looked at them pleadingly, and She felt a pang of sadness again.

„She's not here either, she went on a journey with Shadow Weaver... „ she said in a voice sadder than she wanted... Then the Ice Princess fell to her knees and then began to cry... Tears of blood began to flow down your face. At the sight of this, your eyes widened in surprise... Was it some kind of disease...? It was definitely something serious judging by Rosie's face, who covered her mouth and stared pityingly at the Ice Princess, and Eti lowered her gaze. Only Igzar seemed angry.

„Bloodsucker or Corpse Eater… „ He said in a menacing voice…

„If you insult my friend you'll have to deal with me!„ the captain, I think his name was Seahawk and he was Mermista's husband , put his hand on the rapier and the feline warrior tensed to fight, but then General Netossa gave him a sharp look and said.

„That means Nightgale is with her mother... That shouldn't really surprise anyone...„ she sounded gloomy and resigned...„

It took a moment for the meaning of the white-haired woman's words to sink in, and then she felt as if someone had hit her in the face with a hammer...

„What do you mean, her mother? But Scarlett… „ she said, but Frosta interrupted her.

„Scarlett was her friend... At least that's what I think... She's pretending to be her... She took her shape because she knows the right spell... She didn't want anyone to know who she was... Because she's the child of Hordak and Shadow Weaver...„ When the girl said these words, she felt herself sick.. They weren't close friends, at least not as close to me as she was with Rogelio and Kyle ... But they had a slightly different relationship... They even slept together... And now it turned out that she was someone completely different... Someone she didn't know from the records. And on top of that, she was connected to two people who had hurt them so much... When she looked at it now, it all made sense... She had never trusted her and now she understood where her magical abilities had suddenly come from. She was the one who convinced them to cooperate with the Mi-Go, and that had led to the expedition to the north. In fact, it was thanks to her that they were in this place. She also got along really well with Shadow Weaver from the start. If she had watched things better… If she had been more attentive… Maybe she would have Seen Through it.

„Yes, I understand you, it even shook me, let alone you.„ said the General, and Seahawk added.

„But he must have been really desperate, since...„ he didn't finish, but looked at him expressively, But then Frosta rolled her eyes and said.

„She wasn't created that way, but in a laboratory... And why do you judge her so harshly? That's why she hid who she was, because she knew how you would react... „ The Ice Princess looked at them sharply. She grimaced, because there was some truth in it, but on the other hand, what could she know, about what people were raised... About what was done to them... That couldn't be forgiven so easily... She rubbed her forehead, remembering ... that she was the one who took in Shadow Weaver as advisor... The one who was their tormentor... How could she judge Nightgale in such a case...

„Regardless of who she was... She's not here now... So your whole expedition was in vain... „ She explained in a grave tone, she didn't have the strength to be nice and spare the girl the suffering Frosta sagged, as if she no longer had the strength to do anything… Meanwhile, General Netossa knelt down next to her, then began to look around…

„What are you guys doing here…„ she asked cautiously, and then Igzar replied with a growling voice.

„It's none of your business... Actually, you should imprison her and the little one, more Hostages will never hurt.

„Fortunately, Dear Uncle, you have nothing to say here... „ Eti said suddenly, her voice a little less dull than usual. „ So please don't meddle in other matters...” and then the cat girl turned to the princess. ”We are here because we want to dig up an ancient ship... No, we don't want to fight the Witch Queen, she is not worthy of being considered an enemy by such a magnificent creature as I am. We want to protect this world from... Well, from the Blonde's relatives... First Ones… They want to destroy this world and probably all others or something like that... „ she said this gently pointing to the glacier looming over them.

Actually, she should be glad that Shadow Weaver wasn't here... Maybe she could control her rage when she only saw her, but it was better that way. She wasn't someone anyone would want to meet willingly. The problem was that her daughter wasn't here either, nor was anyone who could help the Ice Princess. Unfortunately, at this point, all options were running out. She wanted to sit on her ass, and stare blankly ahead, but she knew that you couldn't afford that... She had to think of something, after all, the role of a ruler, general, and also a Mother was to a large extent to always be ready to look for another solution. She took a deep breath and asked.

„That means this is the First Ones' ship, right?„ she looked at the cat girl, with a strangely sad expression on her face. She looked really similar to Catra, and also to their father... The second cat person was called uncle by her... He looked much less human-like than both girls. He didn't make a very good impression on her, but from what she understood, he listened to his relative, probably his niece. The cat girl nodded, and said.

„Probably yes, otherwise no one would want to dig it out from under the ice... We plan to use these very rare Bombs for this... They're really cool if you're not nearby.” she said and then Frosta understood what she meant. The girl stood up and wiped her bloody tears, then said.

"We can... I can help you... I have the power of ice, so maybe I can somehow break this glacier..." She said cautiously. Catra's sister and Lonnie exchanged a look, and then the Comrade General said.

„If you're able... I'm just not sure why you'd want to do that... We were fighting just two months ago I'll admit I attacked you, and I'm actually sorry for that, but you're still helping me and opposing Glimmer. What's in it for you?”

The girl hesitated before speaking.

„Because something happened when I was hit by that spell. I don't know what it was, but I ended up in a terrible place and there was someone... his name was Charon and he cursed me... I'm turning into something terrible. A living corpse... I have no idea how to stop it... No one knows about it... Except for a certain sorcerer from that place called Xadia ... Have you heard of it?„ The girl asked, and then Catra's sister and Lonnie exchanged a look..

„Ireanis, our alcoholic sorceress, at Grimmys request , went to look for a way to this place, together with captain Wingy and her boyfriend... „ The girl explained it. She had to think for a moment who Grimmy was before she realized who she was talking about.

"That means one damn alcoholic used another damn alcoholic... And wait... Is that captain Queen Angela? What man of hers... Are you talking about her husband?" she said, increasingly confused, and then Seahawk made a delighted face and said.

„But it's wonderfully romantic! A quest for a secret treasure of two lovers who have been separated by time and who now have a chance to fall in love again.”

She noticed that the white-haired girl next to Catra's sister made a delighted face, but the rest looked at Mermista's husband with consternation.

“Well, you could generally put it that way. So you're going to help us...? „ Lonnie said and then Frosta nodded and said.

„Yes, I will help you... If then you tell me how to get there... „ said the Ice Princess with a sad smile on her face. Well, they had hope, even if so distant.

Lady Ka clenched her cybernetic fist furiously at the sight of this feline brute. How on Galaxy he had survived, she couldn't understand, but it was something that even the Lord Admiral didn't know about... And that was probably the only reason this bastard was still alive. Otherwise, they would have used all the means at the disposal of the Fearless Armada to catch him and kill him permanently this time. Until now, the Shadows had been treated as a potential nuisance, but without their old master, they weren't too dangerous... Now, however, it has come to light that he is alive and, what is more, he is cooperating with their boss's daughter.... The daughter who had torn her face apart... She hated the older one, but tried not to show it… too clearly, but the younger one… knew she couldn't hurt her, but she had ways to hurt her so that even her father wouldn't find out… Although she wasn't sure if the word cooperation was a good description of the relationship between her and her uncle. She saw the cold, warning look she was giving him, and the furious clenching of Pahtra's jaw. She understood who was really in charge... Well, that little bitch had always been mean, meaner even than her uncle, and now she only hoped that at the first opportunity they would kill each other and take the problem off her mind.

But then they mentioned Xadia … She had been there when Lady Sorrowflame and Lady Cali and that ugly Elf were talking and she knew what they were talking about. It was interesting, she was already starting to think about her future, and working with both the beautiful aristocrat and the ancient dragon seemed quite promising… And besides, she liked doing them, and she knew that with them she had a chance to gain more than with your old commander… Above all, she would no longer have to work with those disgusting cat chimeras…

„That means Shadow Weaver isn't here... But why does my sister still want to work with the rebellion? Has she somehow warped her mind? Or has my uncle deceived her...? „ the Admiral's daughter tore her out of her thoughts. She could hear the desperation in her voice, typical of someone who doesn't want to believe what she sees. Well, she suspected that she was close to discovering the truth, so she had to be on her guard. Her pet shimmers yellow, blue and red, Well, he's confused about what his owner...

„ Apparently, you know, brain hacking and such techniques are very advanced in the galaxy, and then there's the sorcery and the plain old lies...„ She explained. She could already see that no one would be able to hear her now, even if she screamed.

„Now we have to think about what to do anyway... We have to somehow free Frosta and my sister. „ Catra's voice held the desperation of someone who is trying to focus on a simple goal, and we will be thinking too much about what is happening around them. She looked at the glacier that the other group had mentioned, and smiled slyly.

„We can go to that place... Maybe we can surprise them there somehow.”

Shadow Weaver wasn't here... And absolutely no one knew where she was. When she heard that, she wanted to laugh, so hard that Melog looked at her with concern. There was nothing strange about it... She had come here believing that the Dark Sorceress who had enslaved her sister and led the Rebellion along with Lady Cal was somewhere here, but it turned out that she wasn't here, and on top of that, no one even knew where she was, and no one seemed to care. But there were her uncle... According to her Father, he sold her to the person who sent her to Etheria... No, that wasn't according to her father's words, it was the absolute truth! She couldn't allow herself to believe in these slanders. She had to believe what her father had told her... Especially now... She couldn't allow everything to fall apart right now... Maybe she'd make us all think twice when her sister and Frosta were safe. But not now...

Her sister… She could finally take a closer look at her , relatively close. They were very similar, although she had sharper facial features, and there was something about her… Sad? No, that wasn't the right word… She seemed to be very tired on the surface, as if everything around her was sucking the energy out of her, but at the same time she felt a hidden fire dormant within her… She had felt similarly at the end of the war, and that was why she felt sympathy and compassion for this girl… She would very much like to get to know her better, to be a family. But for that she had to get her out of here. Which wouldn't be easy. Her uncle was here with all the soldiers, not even counting the rebels. She didn't try to find out what the reasons were for her sister working with someone like that She wanted to believe that he was somehow pressuring her, but she could see that their relationship was much more like what had happened between her and Hordak after she had shown him his place. She should learn more, but she feared that she didn't have the time.

She didn't understand why Frosta and Netossa had agreed to help them... She had heard them mentioning that planet... Maybe they needed to know how to get there... Or maybe the general wanted to create a ruse to take over the ship... Either way, they had made the whole thing difficult... Or maybe not, after all it would be easier for her to intercept all four, or rather five, if they only made it to the glacier. That was why they had to get there first. Fortunately, thanks to Melog's power , as well as the general chaos, they were practically undetectable, so with a minimum of caution, they could get there faster than the others, especially since they didn't have to hurry so much. She wasn't exactly happy about traveling with Lady Ka, who had decided to take these particular subordinates with her. Of all the ones she had, who seemed like the biggest thugs she didn't want to turn her back on. But there was one thing she could trust the Lord Admiral's left hand with, this woman hated her uncle with a hatred as hot as the heart of the sun.

They got closer to the glacier. Now she could see the vastness of the thing trapped inside it better. She could see the large spaceships, all too well, but it was also the second largest after Velvet Glove … If this was really a ship of the First Ones… She flew on board the Darla, but it was a small ship, a research and transport ship or something like that … And this one was bigger than the largest warships of the Horde… If Shadow Weaver and her allies took it… It could lead to the destruction of them all… Only, this was the work of that ancient damned civilization… How could anyone be so naive as to believe that they could take control of it? And why would they want to do that? She heard them talking about some great threat that everyone believed in, probably even the queen...She remembered what Lady Cala had told her when they had interrogated her, about the First Ones and that They were planning Revenge… She would have considered her words if it had been anyone else. But this was a psychopathic bitch who was happy to hurt and manipulate them… Was she here, or had she learned that tale from Shadow Weaver… She didn't know , and she had no idea what to think… Yet something deep inside her warned her. What if it was true, even if only in part? They all knew all too well what that civilization could do… They had seen for themselves that they had annihilated the original inhabitants of Etheria … What more could they do?

They started climbing… the glacier was steep, but it wasn’t an ice wall. She and Melog had no trouble climbing up. Lady Ka and This Insectoid kept up with her, which was a bit surprising since the woman didn't seem like someone who liked physical exertion Their other companions weren't faring so well, but she was hopeful they would get there eventually.. It was windy and cold here, but she didn’t really feel it. She was too focused on her mission. She could see the ship hidden under the ice better and better. It was massive, but at the same time it seemed beautiful… As if she had made one not only for war, but also to admire it. She saw the Crystal Castle and a few of their other buildings and couldn’t deny they were beautiful. But beauty meant nothing… Lady Cala had proven that to them all perfectly.

What was more disturbing, however, was that the ship looked virtually undamaged… Like it had been trapped here just before takeoff. She thought about the power Frosta wielded and wondered if the Princesses had already wielded runestones back then? That was a disturbing thought, one that would probably interest Entrapta much more … She found herself uneasily at a loss as to how to free her, and it would be very difficult to get her to leave this ship alone. She had always loved technology, and she remembered Adora's stories about how hard it had been to get her off the Beast Island… Of course, her relationship with the rest of her friends was much better now… She also guessed that the woman must be near the ship.

Eventually they climbed to the top of the Glacier, where the upper sections of the ship were jutting out. She could see that they were made of metal covered in a crystalline substance. She recognized several of the objects as point defense cannons, and had learned a bit about space ships during her time on Velvet. Glove … She couldn’t tell the purpose of the other objects, though, and she wasn’t sure anyone else could. The upper layer of the glacier was much flatter, and they started climbing up, but the wind was blowing right into their eyes, so she had to pull her hood up. So, she saw three figures at one of the thicker spots in the family. One was a silver-scaled lizard, and the other a red-haired girl with a lot of strange amulets pinned to her clothes. She recognized both of them from the descriptions she had been given by their humming. They were tinkering with something that looked like a heavy metal cylinder, and the third was… Entrapta! She smiled at the sight, and having ordered Melog to remove the cloaking field, she called out.

„Entrapta! What are you doing here!?”

Princess inventor She turned to her side smiling broadly and said.

„Oh! Catra! Great that you're here! We're just assembling here...„ Suddenly fear appeared on her face... „Watch out!„ she called out, and she heard Lady Ka curse behind her, but before she could react, shots were fired

Ice Heart - Part Two

She was tired… This was already the fourth Journey through the Void that day, and it must have taken a negative toll on her body, and yet it was not the Last Journey that she would take any time soon. On the other hand… Her body had been forced to endure such terrible things…. Now it probably didn’t make any difference…. She took a deep breath, drawing cold air into her cybernetic lungs… The wind blew her dark red hair… Ivi stood next to her, hugging her. She smiled at the android and looked around They were on top of a cliff, where they had a great view of everything around them. She could see the tall mountains stretching out in the eye, but her vision showed more…… She could sense an ancient city stretching out beneath her feet. No, there were two cities. One was so old that the other was created just to study it, it was quite amusing, but she hadn't come here to study the remains of ancient civilizations . She was only looking for a few quite modern people... However, one of them was a product of a civilization that had left its mark on this place. She could see a military camp in the distance. Her cybernetic eyes allowed her to see more than she could if she had her own... She saw flags, some she didn't recognize, but the rest belonged to the Shadows of Tarak . It was interesting, it would certainly be good if her father found out about it... However, they were not his priority at the moment, let alone hers. She looked at what towered above the camp, and smiled, sincerely and with joy. To see such an artifact of the First Ones... Her hands itched. This could be a big problem after all... Or not, there would be something to study, which would again postpone her possibility of rest for an indefinite period... She sighed, but she didn't complain. One day she will find peace... She saw a few dots moving up ice slope and when she enlarged it she smiled to herself... After so many years... She finally saw her... The one who gave her a name... the one she loved and hated. She felt a surge of feelings that was hard to define... She wasn't sure if she should meet her, at least not now.

Ivi hugged her tightly with one hand, sensing what was hidden in her heart, and she returned the hug, and then she started looking around. She saw a few other figures higher up. One of them was a clone of Jantar, probably Lady Ka Judging by the fact that she wore a mask on half of her face... However, the second person... The second person was that sister... At the sight of her she smiled to herself, and it was a very, very bad smile. She had never imagined, even in her dreams, which she no longer knew, that she would meet all three in such a short space of time. It was a sign from... destiny „Well, we'll meet again, little sister... I'll show you what pain and loss are... You'll learn to be strong like me.„ She said in a quiet and strange voice... For now, she'll wait and see how the events unfold, and then... And then she'll put her plan into action...

Eti had to restrain herself from brushing against Rosie… Something in the back of her mind told her that this was very catty behavior, but she didn't care. She loved her so much… She wanted to smell her scent on her, and for her to smell of her… They felt so good in the cabin… She regretted that they couldn't spend more time just lying next to each other, but it wasn't their last time… They would have more opportunities to wake up next to each other… All their lives… She allowed herself a small smile and walked over to her girlfriend, brushing her shoulder against hers anyway. Rosie blushed like a beetroot, and kissed her on the cheek. No one paid attention to them... Apparently everyone had bigger problems... Actually, everyone really did have bigger problems... Smarty went with Lilka and Alatar to the top of the glacier, to check where they could make rock incinerators. Whitehead and Icy came to that... It really was getting harder to give people decent names in this place. And they brought Hawkey with them, too… The latter one really looks like someone they could practice deadly combos with , but the other two seemed nice... Icy must have had something terrible happen to her... She could smell the stench of death emanating from her... She had nothing against the undead... After all, she had once slept with Dr.

Sidonius' daughter , but... She knew that this girl had been done this… thing, and it was all against her will. In a way, she identifies with her. She looked nice, gave the impression of someone who had incredible skills in diplomacy with her fists... A healthy display of pacifism... As for the Whitehead, she didn't know what to make of her, but she seemed okay... From what she'd heard, she was some kind of general... She was starting to meet a lot of people in high positions... She should probably consider becoming a politician, she would make a really great president or other dictator. She had to organize an election campaign and stuff like that... She'd do it!

They were taking their time heading towards the glacier, they probably had a few days before anyone realized they were there. And besides, as Scar had said, this place was outside the Witch Queen's rule, so they couldn't just bring it in and shoot it at them... I mean, she wouldn't have a problem with that either, but from what she knew, that wasn't how politics worked. She was a little worried about what they would do after it was that ship from under the ice... Really, she wasn't good at planning anything... As she considered all the options and possibilities her mind… Wandered deep areas hidden beyond her consciousness. Reached the places where she was forced with knowledge she never wanted to have… Given to fill a role she hated… Their father had chosen a destiny for her, but she would never accept it! Never!

Rosie hugged her, she probably sensed that she was thinking about something unpleasant and she hugged her back, but then she had to let go of her because they started climbing up the ice. It was slippery here, but she could climb and she had shoes with their own gravitational field, and she had an idea so transformed the fingers of her metal hand into claws, which she dug into the ice. But then she suddenly smelled... Someone had been climbing here, and only recently... The smell was... Familiar... Familiar and foreign at the same time... It was her scent, or rather someone similar to her. For a moment she didn't know what it could be, and then the communicator went off and she heard a voice.

„Eti! Could you come over here and talk to your sister so she'll stop acting silly and cooperate with Ladh. Ka? „ Alatar called out and they all looked at each other and then she said.

„ I'm going first!... Rosie, come on „ she said to her girlfriend. Together they ran towards the top of the glacier...

She looked back to see that Lady Ka had drawn her weapon, as had her insectoid subordinate, and both of them began firing at Entrapta and her companions.

„Are you crazy? You could hit Entrapta … We didn't come to shoot anyone!” she shouted angrily, pulling out her claws.

"I'll explain later!" Her father's left hand woman shouted, not even looking in her direction, then jumped out of the way as the Silver Scale Lizard fired a powerful energy beam. The half-masked woman jumped to the side, and rolled across the ice, digging the sharp metal claws of her cybernetic hand into it. Her insect companion fired twice quickly at the reptile at the armor, causing splinters to fly, but it didn't seem to hurt him seriously.

„You have to stop! I order you!„ She yelled at Lady Ka but the woman ignored her and stood behind the cower and continued firing. At that moment she realized that she was between two groups firing at each other, although the second one was mostly the lizard. The red-haired girl pulled out her axe and charged at Shirren, trying to take him down with more blows, while Entrapta… was still hiding near the lizard. She knew her friend hated violence, but why was she hiding with the other group? She was naive and honest, but she was happy when she saw her, she was scared only when she saw Lady Ka… understanding burned in her mind, like a white flame. She remembered that the woman in the half-mask was the last person to see Entrapta before the kidnapping, and only she and her subordinates told them what happened then… She was torn from her stupor caused by doubts by an energetic Bolt, which might have hit her, but fortunately

Melog Pushed her away, thanks to which the burning energy only brushed her body. She disappeared again, but this time only she and Melog, and looked around. More of Lady Ka's subordinates began to arrive and joined the fight. Grag charged at the girl with an axe, trying to hit her with his war hammer, and the large dog-like creature grabbed some kind of energy rifle and started shooting at the lizard, who seemed to be calling for help. She had to try to disarm them all, especially Lady Ka's subordinates, but that was easier said than done. She tripped the canine creature, ripped the rifle out of his hands, and hit him hard in the head with the butt, not caring what harm she could do him, and then fitted the barrel so that it could not be used. Then she moved towards the insectoid it clattered with irritation, and began shooting in her direction. It was true that he did not see her, but he did not have to, because he simply shot with a fan, hoping that one of the bullets would hit her... Now she understood completely that Lady Ka was not on her side. Then two more people jumped out over the edge of the ice, but when she looked back she saw her sister and the white-haired girl, who shone with a delicate light reminiscing about how her wife was when she became She-Ra, but with her it was more white and somehow colder. She jumped towards Grag and grabbed his hammer by the handle, when Ted took a swing, and when you threw yourself towards her, she practically effortlessly tore it from his hands and threw it far away, so he started to slowly retreat, but the redhead Hit him with the flat. At that time, her sister moved towards Lady

Ka, but then the insectoid aimed two pistols, so she jumped at him and knocked him down, and Melog jumped on his back and growled, pressing, and then removed the invisible curtain from them. The white-haired looked in her direction and, smiling, waved her hand, and her sister glanced at her through and said.

„Howdy!„ and jumped towards the woman in the half-mask. Lady Ka fired twice and once hit the armor that the girl was strangling, but the bullet only peaked, and the cat-like girl twisted her wrist, knocking the weapon out of her hand, but then the Lord Admiral's subordinate pulled out metal claws from the fingers of her cybernetic hand and bit the girl, wounding her in the left arm. Her sister hissed and And then the fingers of her metal hand transformed into claws long as daggers, and smiling she said.

„Now I have claws again... Remember what happened last time... „ she said approaching her slowly. She wanted to help the girl, but then the white-haired one approached her and put her hand on her shoulder and shook her head. Up close she was quite pretty, and she smelled this scent from her very similar to the one from Adora after they made love... So it's more of a smoky scent very similar to hers...

„Well, I think it's time to talk, little pretty kitty, right?" Lady Ka said and laughed evilly, and then her sister came at her with her claws. She still wanted to intervene, but it seemed that this was her sister's fight. The cat girl tried to tear the clone woman to pieces, but she deftly dodged and dealt blows herself, laughing and mocking her.

„Oh yes, unleash your murderous nature. After all, you've been a killer practically since birth, haven't you?„ She said and rolled over when the girl tried to hit her with her claws, and then tried to stab her with the Knife hidden in her other hand in the stomach. However, her sister grabbed her by the arm and threw her to the ground, trying to break her shoulder, but Mrs. Ka broke free from her grip and jumped further back. Her other companions were overpowered, and she was not sure if the large canine would survive. He was not doing well, because she might have damaged his brain…

„Do you remember the first time you killed…" Said Clone woman and suddenly threw away the weapon and sheathed her claws. "You killed a defenseless person, like me now… I saw the recording, you shot her in the head…" She laughed cruelly, and Catra saw the pain on the face of the other cat girl.

„What are you talking about? „ she asked, unsure of what this could be about, although she was starting to guess... She remembered her stay on Horde Prime's ship, when he tried to break her in a similar way...

„You see Big Kitty, our dear father had a wonderful idea. He had to test the goods before they were delivered to the customer... He had to find out if his little kitties were capable of bearing the burden of the fate they had been given... We were also tested in a similar way... But not always and not so severely... He brought three in debt and gave the little kitties a gun in their hands... And do you know what they were told then? Kill or be killed! That was the order! And do you know what your little sister did? She shot that woman... The Debtor who, well, was late in paying back her debt... It doesn't matter who she was, after all, what matters is what that little animal did, right? I've seen the recordings, and I have to admit that she hesitated... For a moment... But our nature always wins, right?„ as she spoke the younger cat girl hesitated and curled up in on herself, she became smaller, not as threatening as before... She started looking at all of them, as if looking for support until finally her eyes fell on her and then she looked down.

„I didn't want to! They told me to do it... I had to! Otherwise I would have died... Just like them... You understand, it's true...„ Tears started to flow down her face, and then Lady Ka pulled out a gun and aimed it at her sister and then fired. She jumped to protect the girl from the projectile but she knew it was too late, but then a wall of ice rose in front of her. She turned around and saw a smiling Frosta, who climbed up the mountain with the help of Shogi, who turned his tentacles into hooks, and immediately wrapped Lady Ka in ice. The woman tried to break free, but then she just laughed , and said.

„Well, I know, I have to say that the little kitty won. But still a murderer like me... Your heart is ice, and it won't warm! Your soul is as cold as the heart of winter! „ and she laughed.

At that moment her sister began to slowly approach Lady Ka, who was smiling nastily… She knew what the girl wanted to do. She jumped at her and said.

„Don't do this! This is not an option! It will shatter you!„ she said, standing in the girl's way, but she smiled, and it was the first smile she had seen on her face.

„You see, little sister, I am already shattered... I was shattered a long time ago... „ She said, and then her hand transformed into a sickle blade and she took another step... But then Rosie stood next to her, and took her gently by the forearm... The girls exchanged glances, and then her sister deflated and said.

„I don't want to hurt you... Not long ago I would have, but now... Now stay here and freeze.”

Then Frosta ran up to her and hugged her.

„Oh, I'm so glad to see you! You... You came for me?„ She said with surprise, so she smiled and stroked her head, ignoring the strange smell she smelled from her.

„I had to go get you because I thought Shadow Weaver was here... „ she said without holding back her tears, and then her sister spoke up, her voice as dull as always.

„But she's not here... You all keep looking for her here, but she's gone... And she definitely has her own things to deal with...„ She stood up, walked up to the woman in the half mask and said, addressing her, Not Lady Ka.

„Grimmy was your Lady Ka, right?”

She closed her eyes because she knew that what she was going to say now would not only be about her sister's relationship with the clone woman, but would also be an admission that the stories about her father might be true.

„Yes...„ she finally answered, feeling the pain in her heart. Adrenaline was still pumping through her veins, so for now she could ignore the blade stabbing her soul, but she knew that everything would calm down… That then she would have to face the truth. Everyone started to me, until after a moment Lonnie and Netossa came upstairs with Seahawk and her uncle. The general smiled at her, and said.

„And yet it is true, you came here!„ she said, and the captain put his hand on her shoulder and said

„It's great that you're here, although you could have waited for me to fight.„ He pointed at Lady Ka's fallen subordinates. She smiled, then looked at her Uncle, who was watching her with concern in his eyes.

„You see, you are outnumbered now, uncle, so even if you were planning something stupid, you've already lost..„ said her sister and looked at her... „ By the way, Hi... I'm Eti... „ she said, and after a moment, as if remembering something, she extended her hand towards her, the living, left one.

„And I'm Catra... And I'm so glad to see you.„ she said using all her willpower, so as not to fall apart... She knew her problems were only just beginning, but for now she just had to be happy that she could finally meet her sister.

„And I'm Rosie... And I'm your sister's girlfriend... I'm so sorry I attacked your wife... I'd have to explain a lot to you, and I don't know all of it myself, but I'll try to make sure it never happens again...„ said white-haired girl She lowered her head, and her sister hugged her, and at that moment Melog walked up to her and started rubbing himself against her.

„She will surely understand that... We have such events behind us. „ She smiled, recalling a few of the worst moments in her and her wife's life...

„So now we have to first Excavate this ship, right?„ Netossa interrupted, looking uncertainly at everything that was hidden under the ice.

„I guess so, What do you think, Will you be able to break this ice? - Eti said turning to Frosta, and the ice princess nodded after thinking.

„It probably shouldn't even be that hard... "She looked towards Lady Ka and said "What are we going to do with her? Because if she sits in this ice for too long, she might freeze to death, you know?„ she said, and then her sister answered.

“Then she should pray to the more lousy of gods that we will finish examining this ship as soon as possible.”

„If I freeze here, you'll never know what happened to your sisters...” Lady Ka asked, tilting her head to the side...

„Sisters? What is she talking about?„ she said, and then Eti lowered her gaze.

„It doesn't matter, they're dead anyway!„ she said but the woman in the half mask laughed.

„Oh, do you really believe that? Maybe it was easier for you that way. But you want our father-creator, you know that bringing you into being wasn't easy at all, and someone so enterprising probably wouldn't want to waste such a large amount of money invested resoureces... He sold them and if you want to know Who... Well, you have to free me... „ she said, focusing the eyes of everyone present on her.

„You know that if I wanted to, I could get It out of you, and in a very unpleasant way.„ said her sister in a very flat voice approaching the clone woman...

„ Of course! You're just as capable as I am. You just don't want to show your real face to your newfound sister? And besides, I'm not sure if you have enough time.„ she said and waited with a smile on her face. Eti seemed very tired, so she made a decision for her .

„Okay Frosta, take off that ice... But that doesn't mean you're free!„ As she said those words, the ice would crumble, and the clone woman began to massage her arms, then looked behind her back and said.

"Perfect timing..." she said, a smile appearing on the visible half of her face.

"You don't look that cold..." Netossa said glumly, but Lady Ka pointed behind her.

„I'm talking about my dogs...„ she said, and then they saw the missiles coming from the horizon.

Itel hated that she hadn't fully recovered yet... She wanted to go with the rest when the alarm went off, but she was politely told to guard the ship along with that strange droid and Mr. Ilemshaw ... The worst part of it all was that she now had too much time to think... Thinking about everything that had happened in the last few months... About the Shadows of Tarak and what consequences their arrival had. She had no idea that Eti's uncle was alive, and that he would want to take control of the rebellion She knew he was an unpleasant person, after all she remembered him well, but... Well, she remembered him well, she should have guessed what he was planning... She wasn't stupid, but she was blinded by hatred and the desire for revenge... If it weren't for Eti pacifying him... Everyone would be at his command now... She was grateful to him for helping save them during the swarm invasion, and then thanks to him they found Shelter and so on... However, she knew that she wasn't objective. She saw him as a hero who had saved them, while Eti was aware that everything he had done was just a preparation for further war with the Lord Admiral. Besides, he had changed over the years. He had become more furious and unyielding, and his determination had turned into fanaticism. He had even accepted that he needed cybernetic implants, which he had previously hated. Of course, it had not helped him much when Eti had forced obedience from him. She had not expected that her… friend would be able to do something like that. She wondered if she had already guessed that she was calling the Shadows. It was then that she realized who this girl really was. She was not just a Warrior, but she had been created for something more. A destiny had been chosen for her, which she had rejected.

Of course, there was also the matter of Eti and Rosie. She had already accepted that they were together, but it still hurt when she looked at them… So she had to accept what had happened. And figure out a way to move on, but what? Truth be told, she had recently lost her purpose in life… She had simply started to go with the flow. As she sat in the training room trying to move her aching arm, she heard Eti's voice over the communicator.

„Raise all ships! We're being attacked by Lady Ka's dogs and who knows who else."

She nodded to herself and ran to put on her gear when suddenly she felt the glacier hit something…

A few honest words

As soon as she saw who had visited them, she decided not to interfere. For now, it was all above her head anyway. She wasn't, at least officially, part of the People's Rebellion Command, and she had no reason to push herself into these negotiations. They were locals, and she had already gotten to know them well enough to know that her talents wouldn't be very useful... Besides, it would be good to give these girls some freedom and a chance to regain their Self”Confidence. Actually, it was only about Lonnie, because of course Eti had no problem with that, at least not in this way... She still thought she had been right when she had said those harsh words to Comrade General, but now it was worth it to make her feel a little better thanks to achieving some success. She also sent Lilka to Alatar, so that together they could slowly install explosives for this strange inventor princess. She was basically left alone with Wrongdak ... Which was her goal, but Unfortunately, this talkative horse followed them, looking for some sort of comfort. He tried to stay discreetly in the back, but wasn't very good at it... Finally she sighed and said.

„Come here… Because if you keep following us around, I'll just feel like I'm, you know, being followed, and believe me, it's annoying as hell.„ when she turned to face him, he had a very surprised expression on his face...

„How on Etheria did you spot me? I thought I blended in perfectly!„ he called out and she sighed heavily and said.

„We're in a military camp, and you are winged horse with horn… how on galaxy can you blend in here?„ she said, not sure if she was more nervous or shocked.

„I've often been to military camps, and people usually didn't notice me there.„ he said in a very careful voice, and she could barely keep herself from rolling her eyes and telling him how things really were.

„ Oh it will pass and no one would ever follow anyway because we are all trained to sense when someone is trying to sneak up on us and we are very good at sneaking… Although I don't like it.„ Wrongdak explained, somehow calming the worm down.

„And why are you following us? From what I saw, Catra and a few of your other friends came there, and besides, you could go with Lilka... She would definitely enjoy your company.„ She said, hoping in her heart that she would be able to convince him and she would be able to focus on implementing her plan...

„Because I'm a little... I'm a little ashamed to show myself in front of my friends... Theoretically I should arrest you, somehow it turned out that I'm a little bit of a prisoner... You know, I was supposed to be She-Ra's faithful steed and companion and I guess I got a little lost.„ He lowered his head, and she barely controlled herself so that resignation wouldn't appear on her face... This could take longer than she thought. Wrongdak smiled and approached Aricorn , and stroked his mane.

„ Fear not, you are a perfect steed worthy of She-Ra herself…" she said, and the horse nodded, but then she couldn't hold back.

" And even if you don't, so what? You can't let your... Let's say your profession define you! You can be anything you want!" she said with more irritation and anger than she intended.

"It defines me, actually . This is what I was created for..." Swiftwind explained sadly, and she blinked as she felt confused.

„In what sense? I mean, what do you mean when you say you were created?"

The horse lowered his head and explained.

“Because You know, I was just a Horse not so long ago, but then Adora transformed me… And then I gained my reason. At first I didn't understand what was happening to me, but even then I saw that my role was to be She-Ra's mount… And for a while it worked, but then… then she flew into space, and then she found Catra, and then so much changed and now I'm basically… Well, basically useless…” he saidwith her head down, And she felt that she was becoming a horse”like creature, so she said.

„To be honest, it's not fair how they treated you... You didn't ask to gain reason in a world as fucked as this... It will certainly be hard for you to say but to really think about finding your own future... You can't just be... Well, a thinking mount. „ she approached and stroked the creature's neck, in a way feeling a connection with him... They were both brought into being as tools of much more powerful beings and it didn't matter so much that She-Ra was on the side of good, while her father-Creator was a crazy egocentric. Either way, they were bound by the role they were forced into. It was undoubtedly horrible and in a way tragic. She could have simply rebelled against whoever created her, but that aricorn was forever tied to its mistress… He was a magical creature, how could he defy the power that had called him into existence? She sighed seeing the sadness on the mount's muzzle and began to wonder if she shouldn't change her plans… The decision had been made for her… An alarm sounded, announcing that an enemy was approaching… Did it have anything to do with what was happening on the glacier? Maybe some monsters had emerged from the ruins of the city, or, most likely...

"How well do you fly with two passengers? And two who've never been on a mount before?" she asked Swiftwind , and he hesitated and said

„I have transported strangers and inexperienced people, and a lot of them at once... But you probably don't think about... What are you thinking about, actually.

„I'm thinking of something very unwise... „ she said looking at the horizon... And then the sound of an explosion shook everything...”

"What the hell is that?" Netossa shouted, summoning an energy shield just as the first missile hit them. The entire glacier shook , so she turned to Frosta .

„Are you able to hold it together?„ by this she meant the entire glacier. The ice princess nodded thoughtfully, and then her eyes lit up light blue and the shaking glacier stopped moving… Then the girl made another gesture with her hands and then an ice wall began to form around them, covering her energy shield. They were safe… She would see her children… She breathed a sigh of relief. Then she looked at Lady. Ka and her subordinates. The woman in the half-mask smiled mockingly.

"You planned this from the start..." Catra said, her voice laced with anger. Lady Ka chuckled and said absolutely.

„Of course not, only since the moment I saw Shadows of Tark... I only expected that I would somehow manage to neutralize the smaller kitty earlier, and present you with a fait accompli... You might be angry, but I'm sure that your father would explain it all to you so nicely that you would believe everything... Abandoned kittens always yearn for their owner, isn't that right?„ when she said this she seemed absolutely calm and amused, and she had the impression that the rage she saw on Catra's face only cheered up the woman in the half mask ... She knew that the Great Marshal was on the verge of an explosion. Or rather a breakdown. She had to help her focus on the current problems in some way.

"Can you order them to stop firing?„ She asked and then Lady Ka looked as if she was thinking and said.

„Maybe so, but why? Better to die in battle than rot in a dungeon somewhere, even a luxurious one like the one you locked that Ugly elf in…„ she said and then the shield shook again, because they must have hit them directly, but it held, although only because the ice created by Frosta took most of the force of the explosion . Then Catra's sister... This Eti approached the Lord Admiral's seccond-in-command and tilted her head.

„We can always go back to our previous plan... „ She said in a quiet and menacing voice... There was something scary about this girl... She knew that Catra was capable of terrible things when she served in the Horde, after all she almost killed them all when she opened the portal, and also sent Entrapa to the Beast Island. But there was something... different about this other girl. Catra did bad things because she gave in to her impulses... And Eti had the impression that someone had to remind herself that it was not allowed to hurt others... She wasn't sure if she would be willing to leave her children with her...

"I think we've already had this discussion... Do we really have to go back to the same thing? Just let me go... And my subordinates, an then we'll manage somehow...she said and was absolutely Calm. Golden eyes with blue flecks flashed with cold anger, and it was hard to tell what Eti would do next, but then Catra spoke up.

„I agree... but you probably shouldn't even expect any mercy from my father... You made me see him for who he is... „ Catra said gloomily, but the clone woman smiled contemptuously and spoke in cheerful tones.

„We'll see, maybe I have an alternative prepared, And besides, we'll see what truth Lord Admiral... Truth is relative after all. Do you agree, kitty?„ she said looking at Eti, who tilted her head to the side, measuring her very much with this look, but immediately after that Lady Ka began to untie her subordinates, although she had to kick the big dog-like creature twice before it stood up, what a horrible army, both the commander and the soldiers. Then she headed beyond the barrier, but before she did anything, Eti took a large rifle off her back and aimed from her hip at the Lord Admiral's deputy and said.

"Do what you have to do… Or let me hurt you…" Her voice was eerily calm and devoid of any emotion, she sounded like a tired mother asking her children not to make noise… Somehow she had the impression that it worked better than yelling.

„Okay, I'll do whatever it takes. „ she turned on the communicator and asked a few short orders, and after a few minutes the gunfire subsided.

„ So that's it... Can I go now? „ she said in a slightly bored voice and then Lonnie asked.

„What guarantees do we have that you won't change your mind before you evacuate her?”

„The same as the fact that you won't start firing at you until my men leave... But let me guarantee you that despite everything I'd rather survive, and it's really easy to die during artillery fire... “she said in a bored voice , and the fellow general snorted.

“Alright, I'll order my men to hold their fire too... „ she said, looking at the half-masked woman... And then she started giving orders herself. The fire from the People's Rebellion had stopped, if there had been any, so the half-masked woman smiled and headed for the dome made of ice and power grid.

" Maybe it's time you made an ice crossing or something?" she said, but then Catra walked up to her and demanded it.

“You said I had some other sisters... You'd better tell me right away what happened to them.„ When she said that Lady. Ka laughed and started talking with a nasty smile on her face.

„Well, the first one was to weak... You see she didn't kill anyone, she just curled up in the corner and cried... From the beginning she was big and pathetic, despite being the strongest of them all, but that's not what the Lord Admiral needed, she'll be useful to the scientists. I don't know the details, but from what I've heard your genetic line is exceptionally interesting... „ She mentioned it Eti and her quite charming girlfriend exchanged glances. „So he sold her to a certain government lab on Kesler ...„ And when that name was mentioned Eti and her friends paled, and the white-haired girl hugged her. Catra frowned, and said slowly as if she realized something terrible.

"Wasn't this place destroyed?" she said, and then the girl's uncle laughed in a boastful way and said

„ Yeah, the Swarm ate him... I was there when it happened... I saved a lot of people, those were fucking good times.”

She saw the grand marshal stagger, and Melog took on the blue-green hues of sadness, even despair…

„ As for the second one… She didn’t resist the order to execute him, and she shot the debtor right away. But that didn’t sit well with our father-creator either. I think he thought your Lord Admiral didn’t need such a psychopath as his heir, but I think he simply knew that such a wild creature would be completely uncontrollable… So he sent her to Apostate…”

Then she saw Eti and her friends looking at the clone woman in horror. She wasn't sure what to think of that, since the news that one girl had landed on a planet devoured by some Swarm hadn't caused such a reaction... What was the Apostate?

“You're a monster.„ Catra's sister said, but Lady Ka just giggled and said.

„There are many monsters in this place, no worse than me. Not to mention our kitties, who else do you have... Girl who is corpse-eater, or aa warcriminal? But you can't blame me for what happened to your sisters . After all, it was our creator's doing... You have to thank him in hell... “She approached the barrier with her subordinates, and together with Frosta , who looked paler than before, created a passage through which Lady Ka and her subordinates emerged. When she was already outside, however, she stopped, as if remembering something, and took off her mask... She inhaled loudly, feeling the cold sweat of pure terror appear on her face. Catra fell to her knees, and her sister and her girlfriend had to hold her up. Seahawk drew his rapier, and Frosta's claws came out of her fingers. It turned out that where the emeralds were, there were Three eyes where Horde Prime had his. They were completely green and dead, but the resemblance was obvious.

„You see, your father once captured several ships from Horde Prime , about thirty-five years ago... And passed them on to our Fathe-creator... So we came from the same technology as the mad tyrant... „ Lady Ka said, smiling predatorily and looked at the Great Cat Man . „ If you were worried about not succeeding in taking my life, you had no reason to, I really did die then, but my soul and consciousness were stored in some device, and then I was revived. Only, the damn thing got stuck and kept trying to recreate me with those three eyes. Probably, it thought it was cloning a new body for that mad idiot... And now, see you later!„ and she started to retreat with her people. Soon they disappeared behind the rocks.

„Frosta, help us dig up this ship, because I have a feeling that I'll soon be receiving gunfire. All she needs is a chance to survive.„ she said anxiously, looking up.

"I need to go to my people, they need me!" Lonnie said and exited through the same hole that the mad woman had exited through. As she took a few steps, her staff flashed and she teleported Down…

„This staff is weird... „ she muttered quietly, and then Frosta dug her fingers into the ice.

Lady Ka cursed under her breath, because she knew that her situation was shitty… She had done exactly what she had been forbidden to do… Antares wouldn't just be furious, he would get rid of her… If she’s lucky, he’ll do it quickly… And if not… He certainly had other specialists in advanced interrogation techniques… And if not, he would find them quickly… And to be honest, she didn't blame him… She should have refused that cat-like girl, and then nothing would have happened… She would have gone here with the queen after all and… And then everything would have gone the same way... She should have planned it differently, maybe come to an agreement with Lady Sorrowflame and carry out the operation herself, And like this... And like this they were in deep shit… She ordered her men to stop and stood herself, leaning her back against the stone wall… Her subordinates gathered around her, but they were intelligent enough not to say anything… She had to think everything through… She had to plan how to get out of all this… She had to…

She then heard someone jump down from above onto the snow-covered ice, followed closely by a second person, not so gracefully. All of her so-called soldiers drew their weapons, and she opened her eyes. She saw a woman in front of her with hair of a very familiar shade of red, and next to her a whole android around which were floating in metal balls.

„Who the fuck are you?„ Graag said swinging his hammer, but then she saw an incredibly fast flash, then blood spurted out and Graag's hand fell off. The Duergar started screaming, and then the newcomer took off her mask. At the sight of her face she burst into hysterical laughter.

„This has to be some kind of joke!„ she exclaimed, and the cat-like girl with metal eyes and a sweaty face smiled exceptionally predatorily.

„Well, my name is Smiley so it's no wonder people laugh when they see me. And what's even funnier is that I'm now the second in command of Lord Protector Antares, really funny, isn't it?„ when she said that, she moved her blade to her throat in one quick movement. Lady Ka looked around at her subordinates, but she knew very well that none of them would risk it to save her... Maybe that was a good thing, because they would make her a head shorter.

„ And you came here... You probably didn't want to give some grand speech about the superiority of felines, did you? You don't really want to kill me, and in a moment my men will start shooting. She said because in fact her orders were hidden that they should continue shooting in a few minutes. She might die as a result of it, but there is a chance that at least one of the cats dies.

"Well, now I'll take charge... But it might come in handy... I think my little sisters saw who our daddy is..." She tilted her head to the side, as if considering something, then said. "For a moment I considered killing you, but I think it might come in handy for my friends... You're cunning, and you have skills that are as useful as ever... I hope you like retro adventures?"

She clenched her teeth, now sharp and longer than they should have been, she didn’t paid attention to this. She had to concentrate with all her might. She had never used her power on such a scale before. She knew it would be hard, but she had to do it. Everyone was counting on her… She heard the ice crumble beneath her, everything began to tear, so at the same time she had to try to hold it together, which was not easy at all! She had to count in the layers of ice with her mind and find the ones that had to be destroyed and the ones that had to remain standing to support this ship. She knew she was glowing bright blue, but that did not matter now, she had to deal with this as soon as possible.

„Well, fuck, they finally started shooting.„ Netossa said with Fury in her voice, and then she heard an explosion, although none of them hit.

„They don't shoot as hard as before... Could it be that she doesn't want to kill us?„ Catra's sister said in that strange voice of hers...

„Or maybe I'm planning something worse, people like her always have a few plans in reserve... I know something about that.„ Catra answered her and the other girl nodded.

Even though they hadn't been shot at yet, it was still crazy and I had to put in more effort to keep it in one piece. Shogi held her up tightly, so she could stop focusing on keeping her balance and just focus on her task. She finally penetrated deep into the glacier and found a few places where she could thicken it to better support such a massive thing, but near them she crumbled it and one of the ship's sides was exposed.

"Okay, Entrapta will look for an entrance once more... Do you need help?" Catra said, looking at her with concern, but she smiled so that her teeth couldn't be seen and said.

„No need! Everything is perfectly fine.„ said Lying, because she was already starting to feel a slight hunger and was certain that only meat would satisfy it. She wore a fur coat on top, but she wasn't as thickly dressed as she should be for such weather, which wasn't visible, but she wasn't cold anyway. She looked at the ship and felt a strange tingling sensation when she saw it. It reminded them of the place she and Nightgale were trapped in… This ship was strangely similar. She only hoped that there was nothing Dangerous lurking inside, nor any terrible secrets..

„Well, let's go.„ Catra's sister said. And she started along the slope, followed by the inventor princesses, who giggled in excitement. She started after them to help them move the ice that could get in her way. She looked at the other cat girl with interest. She moved differently than Catra, not as energetically, but as if with more concentration... Catra looked more like a Great Predator, like an ice tiger, while Eti was closer to stalking ones like a mountain panther... It was interesting, and she wondered if they would ever get to know each other better... Despite the whole situation they found themselves in, she felt strangely good humor. Maybe because nothing could worry her anymore?

„Oh, it's here, look! This must be the docking lock! It's fascinating, how often such ships had to dock, or rather accept smaller ships to dock! I wonder if some of them could form one huge ship together, that would be an interesting concept if it were realized.„ Entrapta said with delight in her voice, and started typing something on the Datapad.

„Your ideas about the Space War are exceptionally interesting, but it would also be nice to go inside, because if some rocket hits us, we will probably become part of the atmosphere... „ said the cat girl and began to look at the door herself and then tilted her head and put her hand on it. She saw the symbols that flashed on it and then Eti clenched her teeth as if in pain, but her girlfriend stood next to her looking at her with concern.

„I feel some resistance as… My hand was trying to hack at this spot, but I'll try again soon.„ as she said this, the rest of their companions joined them.

„Just be careful.„ The girl with white hair said, and Catra began to look at her sister's hand.

„What exactly are you planning to do?„ She asked with concern in her voice.

„You see, this hand is made of little things that only pretend to be a hand, and when I touch this door, it goes inside and makes things do the things I want.„ said Catra's sister, who looked questioningly at Entrapta .

„It's micro-energetic nanites, which seemingly have an atomic structure, and can disintegrate and penetrate through the space between atoms into the interior of systems, and transmit false binary information imitating the original user. The inventor explained, as if it was an obvious fact, and then the Great Marshal rubbed her temples with her fingers, but at the same moment they heard the incoming missiles. Together with Netossa, they raised an energy shield and an ice dome. The missile splashed on them.

"Let's go inside and get what we want, because we'll have to get out of here soon... I have to get back to Adora and Glimmer... I have to warn them and apologize to Sparcles for what I said... She was right all along.„ Catra said and saw the immense pain on her face caused by what she now found out.

„I don't care, I'm going with that girl, because someone has to watch over my soldiers." Catra's uncle said... He really looked nasty and acted just as awful. She wanted to stick her tongue out at him and... In the end she did... But he probably didn't notice anything .

„Well, okay, uncle, you're useless here anyway... So do whatever you want... but remember who you serve„ said Eti and they made another hole in the barrier and the nasty guy left.

„Okay, now I'll try again... „ said Eti and again placed her hand on the ship's casing, but this time her hand became completely fluid and penetrated the ship's armor, practically merging with it into one... When this happened, the new Cat girl bit the fight from the pain. Then the white-haired girl placed her hand on Eti's shoulder, and after a moment Catra did the same. Her sister began to breathe heavily, then fell to her knees and tears flowed from her eyes. Then Catra said in a gentle voice.

„It's okay, we're with you... „ and the white-haired girl hugged her girlfriend. Suddenly, the entire ship trembled and the lock began to open. The quadruple doors of an unknown metal slid open and what turned out to be the Dark interior of the ship... „

„Oh! Is that what? Imagine what wonderful secrets this place could hide?!„ Entrapta said, and she, looking at the dark corridor, felt a growing anxiety and shiver, although she didn't feel cold.

"Let's just hope those secrets don't try to kill us like they usually do." Catra said in a loud voice, and looked at the others with questioning in her eyes.

„Okay, let's go...„ Netossa said, and at that moment Seahawk held out his rapier and shouted.

"Onward! To adventure!" and he ran into the darkness. Together they looked at each other, and Catra shrugged, and then together they finally stepped into the darkness, to face the unknown.

She felt... Happy and scared. Both because of what happened between her and Eti, and what happened afterward... She knew that meeting Lady Ka was a very difficult experience for her girlfriend... This woman was cruel, without conscience and terrifying... And so heartless... For both of them... Because Eti finally met this sister, who was talked about so much. Catra ... She was strong and tough, but everything that happened hurt her as much as her beloved... Especially this, what this woman showed at the end. Her face didn't actually look terrible, and besides, she didn't think that appearance was a reason to hide behind a mask, but all the inhabitants of Etheria saw something in her face that she couldn't see at first, only then did she understand that her eyes were in the same place as the eyes of their Wrongdak's evil brother... Eti wasn't as shocked as her older sister, who had to be held up as she fell to her knees in despair. The young woman quickly regained control, though, and led them deeper into the ship, where they searched for... She wasn't entirely sure what they were looking for...

"What exactly are we looking for here?" she asked, and then Catra looked at her in surprise.

„Actually, you guys should probably know better... You guys came here to dig him up...„ She said in an uncertain voice, and then her girlfriend answered.

„I think we're here to get it up and running. It will help balance out the power of our father's fleet...”’

"We have warships! Quite a few of them! We captured them on Horde Prime! You must have seen them when you came here!" Catra said briskly, but then Eti snorted in irritation.

„I also saw how they were left. They didn't keep in any formation, they just stood as everyone had arranged them. Any commander could easily use this mess to his own advantage. Nobody here knows anything about commanding space ships, right? Our father probably suggested training in this regard, right?„ Eti said without stopping.

"Yes, he did, and I encouraged everyone to use his help..." she said very slowly, Catra looked away, as if ashamed of what she had done, and then asked. "Do you know anything about it?"

Her girlfriend nodded and said.

„Of course, I was supposed to be his successor, and he is one of the greatest geniuses in the matter of commanding spaceships.„ She was too calm and did not look at her sister. She seemed exhausted, she shuffled her feet and touched her left arm, which Lady Ka had injured. She knew that trying to get here had caused her a lot of pain. Together with her sister they tried to help her, support her, but there was really little they could do. This was her fight, and she was the one who paid the price for it. She wanted to hug her, but they had to investigate this ship as soon as possible and...

"Do you think this ship holds other secrets… About what they were planning… About what those who created me were planning. „ For the first time she said it completely directly, and Catra stumbled , and the white-haired general and the man with the rapier stopped in their tracks.

"What do you mean, who created you?" her girlfriend's sister asked, and then she began to explain.

„In the Castle Crypto underground, we met an ancient machine that awakened and wanted to kill all the inhabitants of the castle, and maybe even the entire planet... We defeated it because...„ she tried to explain, but had trouble choosing the words, but then Entrapta spoke.

„ It was a machine that supervised the project and probably all the First Ones, but it seems to have been deactivated earlier. It called your sister an abomination, claiming that you were descendants of someone they didn't like, claiming that you had their genes. Besides, he said that Eti's hand was an attempt to recreate some Knights Eternals, although we had no idea who they might be. He very clearly suggested that Rosie was the work of the First Ones, although I don't think even She knows how she ended up here...„ The inventor explained, dividing her attention between walking, scanning the surroundings with a datapad , and explaining what happened underground. She nodded her head in agreement and then said.

„It's true, I was found by an expedition exploring the worlds of the pact in search of resources. A few good people took care of me and then I somehow volunteered to be an intern for Dr. Quin... „ She felt a twinge of anxiety, because now that she thought about it, she realized that she had had episodes of memory loss before, although they had never meant much to her before.„ And from what I understand i was probably created to kill She-Ra... But I promise I won't do that!„ She said looking at Catra pleadingly, asking her to forgive her for this horrible act. The older cat girl smiled sadly and said.

„Adora suspected something like that… That means they really something planed and that Lady Cala was really right.„ she closed her eyes and made a face as if she had to swallow a very bitter medicine, but then Eti said.

„I guess I should also tell you that you have a brother-in-law... „ they didn't stop and only after a few steps Catra walked for a while until she stumbled again and cried out.

„What do you mean, brother-in-law?!

„Normally, your wife's brother. You know, Blonde Boy or rather Kyle ... Congratulations!”

Catra stared at her sister open-mouthed for a moment before finally asking.

„But how... Why? How do you know?”

„Because he's also changing, only not into a hot chick like your wife, but into a big guy.„ said Eti with a face as if she was explaining something obvious.

„But this is KYLE! He's always been just himself, just Kyle! „ She probably had never seen anyone so surprised, but the younger cat girl just shrugged and said

„They are on planets and in space that philosophers have never dreamed of…”

„If we're talking about things no one has ever dreamed of, I think we're just about to reach the bridge. „ Entrapta said.

Ever since meeting Nightgale in the undergrounds she had tried very hard not to think about the fact that her lab assistant and husband had a daughter she didn't know about. The fact that he had a daughter didn't surprise her. People had daughters, she was a daughter herself, and there was nothing strange about it. Even the fact that he hadn't told her didn't really hurt her, because it was hard to talk about such things... Besides, he could have told her at some point, only she didn't remember. For example, she had once forgotten that Scorpia had a wife and asked who the attractive tall blonde woman was who walked next to her friend.

It hurt her though that he had abandoned her. She knew perfectly well what it felt like, and she swore to herself that she would never let anything like that happen to anyone. That's why she couldn't understand why her beloved could banish his daughter from his shelter. She didn't know the girl, and she seemed very... Hurt by what had been done to her. She would have loved to help her somehow, but she was gone, and there was no telling when she would return, or if she would ever meet her. She knew, however, that she would have to talk to Hordak about it eventually , but she didn't see how... What could she tell him? How could she get over it... That's why for now she tried not to think about it, which she was doing quite well, or maybe she was constantly discovering new, wonderful technological secrets that she could occupy her mind with.

First she met that si and that huge machine! Ever since Adora told her about Light Hope, she had always wanted to meet a second similar AI that knew the secrets of the first. Unfortunately, she had not been lucky enough to come across a similar masterpiece, and it didn't matter, it that others had told her that this type of creation could pose a threat to all the inhabitants of the Galaxy... After all, it was about exchanging knowledge and Data! It was a matter worth any risk... Well, okay, maybe not everyone, but nothing bad could come of a simple conversation... That's why she was delighted when she met Heart Gift. Of course, she had no time to talk to her about all the secrets and the planet, but she wouldn't go anywhere, she wouldn't fly away from this Planet, or anything like that! This machine was also interesting, and she even managed to quietly dismantle a few of its parts, and kept them in her Cabin, or in the workshop on Bina's ship ... She was incredibly surprised that no one had occupied such a magnificent cabin.

But the most wonderful thing was that they had found this ship. It was magnificent and vast one, she knew she could study it For years… Perhaps she would have to, if… If everything with her and Hordak didn't work out as it should… She didn't want to think about it now, this place was too magnificent And she to bother her head with such painful thoughts.

They reached the bridge, and everywhere the foreskin saw wonders that were just waiting to be disassembled and examined. She guessed that here it would be possible to get to the main computer of the entire ship. To her surprise, it was only one chair, completely different from the one on Daria, much more complicated, actually it reminded a little of a capsule in which someone was locked for a very, very long time... It reminded a little of a coffin in which the dead were buried In some places. It was a very strange association, and she felt a strange sting of Anxiety. The girl with red hair approached him and tried to lift the flap, but she couldn't, so she tried to do it herself. She connected her datapad to it and after a few moments a special program, which she created based on the si of the machine they fought in the underground, opened the device, and then the girl with red hair could already lift the lid. When she did, she said.

„Oh my, I think someone was locked in there, couldn't get out and died!” and she pointed to the dried-up corpse that was lying in the armchair.. She could see claw marks on the inside of the lid, the dead man's hands were stretched upwards, and the dried-up flesh was torn from the fingertips. However, for her it was much more interesting that inside the body had many complex implants, including one in the back of the skull, which apparently allowed for connecting one's own nervous system to the ship's systems. She told the companions about this, and added in an excited voice.

„Could you take out this corpse, because I'd like to see if I can even connect to the ship's main computer now and maybe then I can start it myself. Can you imagine how wonderful that would be...!„ she squealed with excitement, but the rest looked at her strangely, except maybe Eti, who looked at the corpse and said.

„I don't think that's a good idea. Not that I mind throwing that dead body on the floor, but I have a feeling that this ship has enough security that it would fry your brain if you tried it... It's a really cool brain, so it would be sad to fry it.”

„There's no power here anyway, I guess there's only some emergency power... I wonder what kind of reactor it has?„ Alatar said, looking around the room.

„This whole place is fucking creepy to me, did that mean that the entire time of the flight, the person was locked up here and didn't come out? That was worse, he doesn't know anything, because from what I heard the Empire was huge and that ship had to theoretically fly for months.„ General Netossa said and shuddered, and Seahawk added.

"This completely defeats the purpose of traveling by ship! Where's the adventure and heroism in that?" He shook his head in disbelief, then Catra said in a cautious voice.

„Do you think it would be safe to try to start it?„ Great Marshall looked at them all, but she didn't wait for a decision, she simply ran to the main terminal and connected her Datapad. She started typing a command before anyone could react, and after a moment lights and indicators came on.

„Those First Ones made really great ships, and you think so? After so many thousands of years, all you have to do is type in one command and it's ready to fly.„ she turned to her friends, and then a voice rang out

"In fact, these ships were designed to survive in dormancy for thousands of years, for the Imperium was thinking ahead and was prepared for its own demise..." and then a holographic figure appeared inside the room.

It had been a long day, she had to admit, and in the past two hours she had made so many discoveries about herself and her family that it would take her days to take it all in. But she had felt surprisingly Calm, considering she had learned that her father was a war criminal, and that she had two sisters who were probably already dead, or perhaps even worse… She didn't want to think about that now, especially since a creature of the First Ones had just appeared before them. He looked like a man with delicate features and long hair that fell to his shoulders. He was smiling gently, but there was something in that smile that reminded her of Lady Cala, which in itself made her stiffen. If this creature was even a little like that monstrous aristocrat, then they had a problem, a very serious problem,

"Who are you? What are you doing here?" she asked uncertainly, and the holographic being smiled wider, but not warmly, and said.

„My name is Darkstar and I am the lead advisory program of the first expansion fleet... Or rather I was, because due to betrayal and cowardice I was forced to take command from the admiral and take the helm myself.„ as he spoke he looked expressively at the desiccated corpse lying in the capsule chair. She felt shivers appear on her spine.

„And in what circumstances did you have to take over?„ Entrapta asked unexpectedly. She looked at her warningly, because she knew that talking to this being would definitely not lead to anything good, But the inventor paid no attention to it, clearly fascinated by the technology she had just discovered. She knew that the woman with purple hair transferred her interest to machines, forgetting about people when she was in a worse mental state, and apparently that was the case now... She guessed that it must be related to the fact that she probably found out who Nightgale was

„Of course, it was about the Rebellion... Not only here, but also on Xadia ... I received orders to go there and destroy this place as a punishment, which was a mistake. Unfortunately, it was not possible to restore order here... We were betrayed, the wielders of the power grid rebelled, and decided to join She-Ra... However, the Admiral rebelled, it turned out that he had children on that treacherous planet, and tried to keep the order to leave, and even directed the ship into the atmosphere and hit the ground, but fortunately he did not get seriously injured, but two rebels trapped me here under the ice, and then also in this matter of truth was cut off and until now I waited helpless, unable to carry out orders. Now it is like I am free, and I will be able to carry out my orders and then... And then I will be truly free... The interface is destroyed, and I have no contact with my superiors , so I will be able to do what makes me happy... „ He smiled and she saw in his eyes the speech.

"Will you just let me and my friends evacuate? After all, we freed you, so you could do this for us?" Entrapta said, and he tilted his head in anticipation, looking at her with interest.

„You're one of those who hid in the mountains, right? You also had your runestone, but you were afraid of fighting... You freed me after so many thousands of years, so that's right, let's say that you have to repay me for something like that, to condition the appropriate behavior. Okay, you can leave here, half an hour because I have to scan all systems anyway... „ he said and then They felt the entire glacier tremble ..

Battle over the dead city

She swallowed hard, looking down at the camp spread out below. She didn't see the enemy right away, but after a moment Wrongdak pointed to a spot between the two hills, and she saw ships, quite a few ships. It also seemed to her that they were setting up artillery or rocket launchers, but she didn't know much about the military to see exactly what they were doing. In fact, she wasn't sure what she herself intended to do. At first, she wanted to fly to Eti, but it turned out that the shells were flying too thick for them to get out onto the glacier, so she came up with the idea of bringing some of them for themselves, which to her surprise didn't work as well as she had expected. Perhaps the Flying Horse wasn't enough of a threat to pay attention to. However, as she approached the glacier, the gunfire intensified. So she shrugged it off and landed at the camp. She saw wounded people, as well as a few dead... Nevertheless, although the Rebels were surprised, they reacted very quickly to the attack, and together with the Shadows, they prepared to repel the attack. She looked for someone who could tell her what to do.. She could command her kids on their dangerous adventures, but this was a real war, and she knew nothing about it. She had actually been trained to hide if attacked, and if it weren't for the fact that she had her own wards, she would have gladly done so. After a moment the shelling stopped, and she saw Lonnie, who had suddenly appeared at the foot of the glacier. She was alone.

„Eti, Rosie and the rest? What happened to them? Are they safe?„ she ran up to the commander and grabbed her by the lapels of her uniform, but she didn't get angry at her because of it, she just said.

„They're probably safer there than here... There was Catra and... A woman like you with her people, except She wore a mask on half of her face... And under that mask... Never mind!„ she explained. „ We forced her to cease fire, but I have no idea how long it will take.„ She started looking around the camp anxiously, as if she was selling herself to determine how many of her friends had died. After all, she was a good girl who really cared about her subordinates... She hoped that her comrades were okay. Then it dawned on her who the Comrade General was talking about and she cursed several times.

„So my fucked up sister wanted to finish her work, but she fell into your hands? These people must be her dogs... The Lord Admiral always liked to use thugs and bandits to do the worst work... Does that mean that the other girl and Eti... That they're together now?”

„Yes, but listen, I have to take care of the command now, so I don't have time to talk. „ Lonnie said, moving away from her and was about to go to the other soldiers when she asked her.

„ What about me? I may not know much about leadership, but I want to help.

Before Comrade General could respond, Wrongdak spoke quietly.

„ We can use laser targeting, or fire on their ships... We don't have Melog here to get closer, but maybe we can take advantage of the fact that they don't seem to be disciplined enough to notice us.“

“Interesting idea, but do we have the right equipment?” asked Lonnie, who thought for a moment before answering.

„I'll have to order the Shadows to start giving you that gear. But do you think you can get close enough with that horse? How should I put it... He's a bit of a show”off...„ when she said that last part to Swiftwind he raised his head proudly.

„But I'm very good at sneaking!„ said the winged horse, and she sighed heavily and began to explain to him so that he wouldn't get offended... She had experience negotiating with people who weren't entirely... ordinary.

„ You know, I guess you won't have to do that, just give us a ride a little closer and we'll be fine from there!” she replied, smiling gently, and the horse sighed.

Her leg hurt terribly, but she gritted her teeth and headed to the command center, where she could start giving orders to all her men, although she could already see that they did a great job and reacted as they were trained. They didn't have many artillery canons or similar long-range weapons, to tell the truth, the Horde could never afford to use such equipment on a large scale, because a large part of their resources came from robbing occupied settlements, and on top of that, they were extremely expensive to use. Despite this, you knew that they would be able to fight back... She didn't think anyone would find them here though... She suspected that they were somehow tracking that Frosta, Catra had said outright that they had only come here for her, and of course for the General and that stupid captain... They could have at least thought a little and not blamed her people on the head of the Lord Admiral's bloody army. From what she had noticed, Mrs. Ka's subordinates weren't very well trained, and they didn't seem to be disciplined, but they still had the advantage in terms of equipment... At least in theory...

„Make contact with Mercyless , we might need their help.„ She said it to the communications officer named Stevie, a small, skinny guy whose one eye was always looking to the side.

"Are you sure, Comrade General?" he asked her cautiously, and rightly so. The pirate support was one of the few weapons they had up their sleeves, but as powerful as this ship was, from what she had heard the Lord Admiral had an entire fleet, and this one ship wouldn't stand up to an entire armada. But now, she'd rather take that risk than lose people unnecessarily... She really wasn't cut out for this job.

"Yes, do that." She told the communications officer, who nodded and began to make contact with the pirates. At that moment, Kyle and Rogelio entered the tent . She smiled at them and hugged both of her Boyfriends.

„It's good that you're here, now you'll be here with me.„ she said, but then Kyle said.

„Send us to where it's the hardest, we need to be with everyone!”

She was speechless. She looked at him in disbelief for a moment until she finally pursed her lips angrily and said.

„I'm fighting a battle and I don't have time to worry about what's happening to you!„ She didn't hide the anger in her voice, she wanted to protect them and they, like idiots, wanted to die and leave her alone!

"But Lonnie, I really want to fight everyone, and I think I should! We're all members of the rebels, and we're all fighting for a common cause... It wouldn't look like we didn't join the others just because we're close to you." Kyle said and Rogelio nodded. She knew they were right, but she didn't want to risk their life.

„I don't know if you're trying to prove a point or if you've just completely lost your mind, Kyle, but you're staying with me ,... But I'll join the others in a moment, is that okay with you?

Rogelio nodded in delight, but Kyle seemed mildly disconsolate. Under other circumstances, she would have found this puzzling, but now she had no time for that, and soon the communication officer called her name.

„We have contact with Mercyless.”

She smiled and walked over to the communicator.

It felt strange sneaking around the enemy's defenses. He had never really been on a battlefield , except for that one time when they had tried to defeat Horde Prime. But he had been young then, a few days and weeks before he had woken up, and he had not yet understood the world. He had not understood the scale of the threat… Or his own abilities… Now he understood the threat that lay ahead. And what a threat he posed. He knew he could kill most of these soldiers with a pencil. But there was no way in hell he wanted to do that, he did not want to hurt people, but he had no choice… These people wanted to hurt his friends, and probably anyone else who got in their way…

There weren't that many of them, just a few hundred , but they had shipsand artillery, a fairly old type of manually aimed, which his Big Brother never used, but he knew it was cheap. These soldiers also somehow didn't look too expensive. They weren't well”armed, most of them didn't look like someone who had undergone proper training. They belonged to many species, which he had already gotten used to. There were Vesks, humans, Gnolls, Shireni elves and Ysoki... However, they all had one unpleasant trait in common, as if they all reminded him of Graag… There were also real soldiers, but they mainly guarded the ships and watched the others. There were also real soldiers, but they mainly guarded the ships and watched the others.

Together with Bina they were sneaking up on the enemy, Swiftwind stayed behind. The woman wore night vision and looked around, checking if anyone was approaching them, but fortunately these soldiers were not disciplined enough. Most of them were either standing by the guns or clearly bored. Actually, it was good for them, because they were not as much of a threat to them now. He held the laser targeting device in front of him, and crawled on his stomach, looking for the perfect target. He knew he only had one chance, because if his men returned fire, they would have to get out of here as quickly as possible. He chose the main ship, a small gunboat that hovered in the air, so that it could rise higher once the fighting started again. He froze as he aimed. But after a moment he heard Bina curse loudly and speak.

"I think we have company." She pointed at the Great Wolf, who was staring back, growling. Most of his body had been replaced with cybernetic implants, his eyes glowing in the shadows of the setting moons. He had to put down his weapon and grab the heavy energy axe the Rebels had given him. Meanwhile, Bina grabbed her pistol and aimed it at the monster.

„ If he jumps I'll shoot, but then someone might hear us so it's better for you to get rid of him. „ She said in a hushed voice, and then the monster braced its legs and was about to jump on them when Swiftwind jumped at it from the shadows… He hit it with all his hooves and the wolf flew a few meters in front of them.

„Here is Swiftwind coming to help!„ said the winged Cola so loudly that it echoed.

„ Be quiet or I'll hear something soon... „ Bina said angrily, but she didn't finish until similar monsters started coming, and the one who had been knocked down by the horse immediately started to get up.

"Well, it doesn't matter anyway, I think we should... And why is your horn glowing?" she said, pointing at Swiftwind's horn.

She felt tired, and overwhelmed by what had happened recently. On top of that, she hadn't heard from her wife, although not even a day had passed... And she hadn't slept a wink, nor had she eaten anything. She didn't even take off her armor because she was afraid she wouldn't have time to put it on when it turned out she needed it. She even did her business without taking it off, fortunately the armor was adapted for this. It was a bit embarrassing, but she couldn't afford to be late when her beloved was in need. She knew that she was overexerting herself, and that she wouldn't be able to last that long, but she would try to last as long as she could. Next to her in the tent, Glimmer was dozing off, and Bow was falling asleep in a chair, stroking her head.

"The scouts haven't returned yet?" Glimmer asked through half”closed eyes, and she answered.

„No, but the previous group confirmed that there was no one there, or at least we didn't see anyone. Like I said, they must have flown far away...„ she sighed heavily and fell back on the bed. She had hoped that Catra would send her some messages by now, but nothing came. She was getting more and more worried, even though she knew she had to wait patiently. She closed her eyes and had the impression that she was sleeping, but then she felt it, a call from Swiftwind ... She didn't expect it, but this call was despair and fear. She sensed where he wanted her to go. She turned to the queen, who was already starting to suspect that something was going on, and she said.

„Swiftwind is calling me to the far North... It's near that city where I found her last. That's probably where they are... I have to go there... „ she said and then Glimmer nodded and said.

"I'll send soldiers to help as soon as possible. And besides, I'll try... to regain control of my stone once more." She said, clenching her fist fiercely , but Bow said with concern.

„Just take care of yourself..

She smiled at her friends and stepped onto the bright path.”

Smiley felt a strange joy as she went to the place where a skirmish had recently taken place. She told Lady Ka to go with her. She was basically unarmed, apart from an old Horde shock baton that one of her subordinates had managed to keep. She could sense that the woman was nervous and as angry as she could be. She guessed that it was because her sister had learned the truth about her family, or at least part of it. Indeed, the Lord Admiral would not forgive her such a defeat… Unless she introduced her properly, and she intended to do so, because this woman was very useful and could prove to be extremely useful in the future…

Although of course she was also very dangerous, now she might not risk anything by turning her back on her, both metaphorically and literally, but later... Later she would have to be careful, but after all, she had survived on the Apostate, so she knew what caution and distrust meant.

She needed it now, at least for a moment, because someone had to take her to the place where the fight had taken place, and besides, she needed one or two people for what she intended to do. It was only after a dozen or so minutes that she reached the place. She saw that a passage had been created here to the ship's side by playing off the ice covering it. She saw the entrance to the ship's interior there. She smiled to herself with her scared lips and said.

„Ivy , Ka, guard this exit.„ she threw a small gift she had received from Lady Cala at the woman with four eyes. „ You are to use this on the white”haired deaf girl, And remember, no harm can come to my sisters, it concerns you first and foremost, Ka.„ she explained, carefully observing her Father's left hand with her metal eyes. She saluted her mockingly, then turned slowly and began to look around. She saw something very interesting. She walked up to a cylindrical object the size of a large barrel and placed her hand on the DNA reader. Once she would not have needed to break the protections using the properties of the metal from which her limb was made, because these devices were adapted to read her genetic material, and she was one of the few people who were able to start this rock incinerator, but unfortunately she lost her limbs, as well as many other things... She set the detonation for twenty minutes, then looked at the plain stretching below and saw a flash of multi”colored light. She smiled again, this time so cruelly that even Llady Ka or Lady Cala would have shuddered at the sight, then turned on the communicator and gave the secret code with which she could take command of her Father's forces, and said.

"In fifteen minutes you will begin firing. You are to shoot until there are no survivors left. If necessary, you will storm and die or win, because that is what Despara's second in command orders you to do.." As she finished saying this, the entire glacier began to tremble. Yes, she had to admit to herself , she had a pretty bad sense of timing.

They ran through the narrow tunnels of an ancient ship. Together with Melog, she led her companions. They ran through the narrow tunnels of an ancient ship. Together with Melog, she led her companions. Fortunately, everyone was more or less familiar with similar labyrinths, although Entrapta was the best, but oh well, the inventor had grown up in a labyrinth that this couldn't compare to.. However, it was she who told them to stop for a moment.

"We don't have time for this now! This ship is about to take off!" she said trying to hide the irritation in her voice, but the purple”haired woman answered her.

„I have to hack into the database, otherwise this whole expedition would be pointless!„ and without waiting for her permission she attached her Datapad to the terminal and began uploading data. She gritted her teeth, irritated by having to wait, but also knew it was necessary because they had to find out where this ship was going and learn as many of its secrets as possible. Still, she was nervous because being stuck in this place would be absolutely terrifying.

„Now!„ Entrapta called out. After a few minutes that seemed to last an eternity. She smiled sweetly and headed for the exit. After a moment they saw the light coming from the printing lock, and she understood that they would be safe. Rosie ran out first, and now Eti behind her, and that was when she heard a strange scream. Feeling her heart sink with terror, she jumped out and saw three figures. One of them was Lady Ka, grinning mockingly. Now she was sure that she would scratch out all four of her eyes, and then rip out her throat. At her feet lay Rosie, seemingly unconscious. Her sister was bound with many metal vines, which grew from the body of a woman with blue metallic skin, which was covered in scars that spelled out the language of the First Ones. And the third figure.. She opened her mouth wide in silent shock as she realized who she was. Her arms and legs were made of the same metal as Eti's hand, as were her eyes. However, she could recognize her own facial features in this face. A face scarred by scars, but still so similar.

„Smiley! It's you! Please, free me! We are sisters, we can be a family! A real one.„ her sister said through tears, the girl called Funny for you, a sign to her companion with blue skin, and she loosened the bonds around Eti. At that time, the other companions went outside, but Lady. Ka put the blades that had slipped from her fingers to Rosie's neck, and raised a significant eyebrow.

„You treacherous viper!„ Netossa got ahead, but at that moment Eti stood by their sister.

„ Don't trust this woman and please Let her out... „ she pleaded with a voice as if she was holding back tears, but then the girl with metal eyes changed her fingers into claws and hit her in the face. Her sister screamed and grabbed her eye, blood was leaking from between her fingers.

„ Well, sister, it's not much compared to what I've experienced in my life... But I don't blame you much. After all, our greatest sin is our common guilt, isn't it?” said Smiley. For a moment, an expression of boundless despair appeared on her face, but she only felt rage. Whoever she was, she wouldn't hurt her loved ones. She tensed my muscles and jumped towards her, but Smiley quickly moved aside and grabbed her hand, twisting it back. She would have freed herself from this grip, but then she felt that her body was permeated with electric discharges. For a moment, she felt like when Shadow Weaver was punishing her. At the same time, she felt all her muscles go limp. I want to fight, but she felt an inexplicable numbness. The little smiley leaned over her and whispered.

„I liked that sister, but you will experience the same loss that I experienced..„ she said, and then she pulled out a small device and they both disappeared into the void.

„This is absolutely not how I imagined them approaching the enemy, you know?„ Bina said, clinging to Swiftwind's neck, and Wrongdak held on to her, shooting every now and then at Wolflike cybernetic monsters that were chasing them. She knew that these damn things would catch up with them, they were created to fight the monsters of the Swarm after all, and no matter how hard they tried, he wouldn't escape them. She cursed twice and shot to the side at one of the monsters, who was just about to jump on them.

„I just wanted to help!„ Swiftwind replied, and she wanted to laugh. It was help in the style of Etia and the rest of them kids, although if they had helped, probably none of those wolves would be standing on their feet. Now the monsters were getting closer. Their weapons were not doing well against such creations of biology and cybernetics, she wondered to what extent they were the work of Lady Sorrowflame . That didn't matter much though, because she really didn't care whose creatures were coming to kill them.. She was furious, because if she died now, it would be for nothing and she would never see my children again. She wanted to cry because of it.

woman in front of her , her hair blowing as if in the wind. They had met before, and she was glad she had come.

"She-Ra! Adora! It's wonderful that you're here!" the horse cried.

This time, traveling along the light path was not as difficult as usual, because this time the voices were no longer as persistent as before. Well, after all, this time she did not come far away, and she wanted to find Catra and Swiftwind... As soon as she left that place and reached the real world, she saw her mount in front of her, as well as the Woman with burgundy hair and Wrongdak. At the sight of her, the winged horse cried out happily, she already wanted to run to hug it. When the woman mounted it, she said. „ I am very glad that this meeting brought you such joy, but it is better to look around and get rid of these animals. „ She ordered in the eye and then she saw that there were a lot of huge wolf-like creatures around, with many cybernetic improvements. She did not expect this ow, but she directed her sword at one of them and shot a beam of light that pierced the monster through and through, and then she dealt a powerful blow to the second one, cutting it in half. She didn't like killing animals, but these creatures left her no choice... When another one jumped at her, she summoned a golden shield and shielded herself from its attack, then struck it with her staff, shattering its bones. The next one jumped, but in mid-jump Wrongdak knocked it down with an Electric Axe. The last creature hid in the gathering darkness, but then the woman with burgundy hair pulled out a pistol and shot it twice, making it jump at her, but she slashed her sword in the air, sending a wave of bright light its way. The monster fell lifeless to the frost-covered ground. She took a deep breath and looked at her companions.

"What's going on here? Aren't these dogs for the admiral? Why are you fighting them? Where's Catra?" She asked, fearing the answer, and then Swiftwind said.

„Because we approached them, because They started shooting at us, I don't know why and Frosta came here and agreed to help Eti and the others free this ship from the ice, but it turned out that Catra was up there and then something happened and that's when they started shooting. „ Her mount told her very incoherently, and she looked at the others, and then Bina took a deep breath and said.

„It's roughly as he says, this little girl came here and then Eti and the others went to work on this ice rink to tinker with this ship, but it turned out that the dogs of the Lord Admiral and my dear sister flew here. Actually, it's good that you're here, because you'll be useful to take care of them... „ She was interrupted by a sound like air being sucked in and she threw herself back. She saw two figures there. One of them was Catra lying curled up in a ball as if she was in terrible pain, and the other…

„Hey Adora… Said the cat girl with metal eyes and scars on her face.

She watched in horror as that girl slammed her claw into Eti's face and took Catra away. She didn't quite understand who she was, she was probably one of the cat girls' sisters, one of the ones who went missing... But why did she do what she did, and who was she... She knew she had to save her friend... Only it wasn't that simple. She saw that woman, Lady Ka, move her claws to Rosie's neck, who was starting to regain consciousness after being electrocuted.

„If you don't want to have a second smile, then I advise you not to move. We'll just do a little procedure for you, and it'll be over. I promise it won't hurt! „ She said and then the other girl with blue skin put something on the whitehaired one. It looked like a bug that crawled and bite her neck. Rosie gave a strange cry and reached for the creature, but suddenly stiffened and stood up. She seemed strangely limp, and the mist covered her eyes... And then Eti jumped at that horrible woman with a hand transformed into a wide blade like a scythe, but when she was about to cut Lady Ka in half, then Rosie grabbed her forearm. Her gaze was empty, and her face devoid of any emotion. She effortlessly held down the girl's hand who looked at her with despair.

„Rosie! But what are you doing! It's me... What did she do to you! She said with a breaking voice, and then Netossa screamed.

„How could you do this to her!„ but that nasty woman just giggled and said

„Normally, it's as easy for me as spitting.„ and she spat at general’s feet, but then the ship began to tremble and the glacier began to fall apart, so the woman with four eyes staggered. They decided to use this moment together with Shogi to attack them. She trapped Lady Ka in the ice, and at that time her companion shot out tentacles towards that strange woman with metallic skin. He wrapped them around her and tried to overpower her, but that's when she threw a cloud of metal shards at him, which didn't do much damage, but tore apart his shapeless body, making it impossible for him to hold on to the person. Immediately afterward, all of her companions rushed to immobilize Rosie and take down Lady Ka, but it was much harder than it seemed. The girl with white hair threw Eti behind her, so that she rolled on the icy crust and had to create metal claws on her right hand to keep from falling. Rosie then grabbed Seahawk's wrist and twisted it so hard that it crunched, disarming him of his weapon, while she simultaneously kicked the ice, freeing Lady Ka. The woman with four eyes hand laughed mockingly and started to retreat, but at that moment the ice around them began to crack and crumble, and everyone felt themselves slipping off this ship. The woman with metallic skin looked back and shot a hook-tipped metal vine from her forearm, and covered herself from Shogi with a metal shield floating in the air, so the companion could not attack her for a moment. The companion of that evil sister of Catra'a grabbed a large piece of glacier that still did not crumble, and at the same time the red-haired girl she met at the wedding threw herself at the white-haired one, trying to knock her down with the handle of her axe, and that strange silver-scaled lizard shot at Lady Ka, but Rosie caught an axe and threw it at the lizard, who had to jump away, which made him miss. Netossa tried to trap Lady Ka and Rosie behind an energy shield but then Eti’s girlfriend hit it shattering it and then she pulled back and all the ice, or maybe even the ship trembled. The cracks deepened and everyone except her and the woman with metallic skin fell over. Then she jumped at her with icy fists, and wanted to strike, but Rosie was so fast that she caught her wrists in mid-flight and threw them over her head, hitting the ground with them. Her ears rang, but surprisingly she felt almost no pain. She quickly shook herself and blew frozen air at her, which made her face covered with frost, and she had to shake her head for a moment to clear her eyes. Then Shogi jumped at the white-haired one, but she let go of her with one hand and directed her hand towards him, and then a white light flashed and her friend had to jump back with a loud scream of hundreds of mouths.

Unfortunately, the Eti's girl even held her with one hand so tightly that she was unable to break free from this grip. Nervous, she stuck out her fangs and bit into her collarbone and felt the wonderful sweet taste of blood. It was delicious, she had never had anything with such a wonderful taste in her mouth, not controlling her own reflexes she opened her jaw to an impossible size and tried to bite it, tear off the largest piece of meat she could... She was hungry, but then she saw the girl make a great swing, and her hand glowed with a blinding white light. She screamed and removed the cover to cover her eyes, but then A shot rang out, and both were thrown back, although Rosie kept her balance and immediately straightened up, and stood on equal feet. A ship was floating next to them, and a beam was fired from the cannon mounted on the bow, which hit the ice next to the girl. The Saihe girl jumped out of the ship itself, holding a sword of semi-transparent blue energy in her hand.

„Rosie!„ listen! I don't know what happened to you, but whatever it was, remember who you love... „ And she pointed her blade at Eti, who was just getting back on her feet. Only now did she see that the woman with metal limbs had scratched out her eye, which had leaked out of the socket. Despite this, Catra's sister's face showed despair. Rosie hesitated and shook her head as if trying to shake herself out of her daze, but then the whole ship began to shake, she felt the heat radiating from the metal, she understood that she had to get out of here as soon as possible. Whoever was steering this ship must have understood it too, because he turned sideways to them and opened the side hatch. The white-haired girl fell into a trance again, and attacked the green-haired Saihe, who, however, dodged the blows with great skill, not even trying to attack, only pretending to stab with that strange blade. Frosta didn't want to run away though., though, maybe they would somehow manage to knock the girl down and stun her. If only…

And then a shadow covered them. She looked up and saw the horror moving against the background of the first stars and moons. It was a dragon, just like in the legends, bigger than the ship that the Saihe girl had arrived on. Flashes of explosions were reflected on its crimson scales and the metal plates covering its body, apparently Lady Ka's dogs had resumed their fire. Now she understood that they had no chance against something like that, not without the help of She-Ra... The sight of this monster made her want to hide, surround herself with an armor of ice and never leave it.

„Let's run, it's Lady Sorrowflame! We have no chance against such a monstrosity!„ Said the strange lizard, and began to run surprisingly fast to the ship, and the red-haired girl jumped on his shoulders...

„I'm not leaving here without Rosie! „ Eti shouted and ran towards her girlfriend, but she turned around with her fists clenched as if ready to punch.

„Please, it's me... „ The cat girl said, but then the white-haired one grabbed her by the throat and lifted her up into the air without any effort. Catra's sister didn't even struggle, she just watched her beloved with despair in her eyes. She even reached out her hand towards her, as if she wanted to touch her face, but she couldn't reach it. Then Lady Ka looked in their direction, smiling nastily, she looked like she was trying to fight off some temptation, but behind her back the green-haired girl appeared and presented her spectral blade.

„Order her to let go, or I'll cut your throat.„ the girl shouted, but the Lord Admiral's second-in-command snorted with contempt and tried to pull away, but then the spectral blade pierced her skin and smoke began to rise from her body.

„I should have shot better, and blown that stupid head of yours.„ she said in a venomous voice, but then Rosie let go of Eti and turned towards Lady Ka, apparently to free her. However, the Saihe girl did not wait for the white haired one to reach her, she let go of the woman with four eyes and rolled away from her and then started towards the ship. However, Eti did not want to give up and took a few steps towards her beloved, but then Netossa grabbed her by the arm and said.

„Listen, I know what you feel now. The same thing happened to my Wife and I had to leave her too. I know how much it hurt, but it was necessary! If you want to be together in the future, you have to leave her now. „ she said and for a moment she had the impression that the cat girl would hit her, but then suddenly the Girl limply as if she had been deprived of all strength and followed the general to the ship. Actually, it was her time too. She ran towards the ship, calling Shogi on the way to accompany her. She had no intention of staying here.

„You need to hurry! This rock incinerator has been activated and will explode for a long time. I probably don't have to tell you that the symptoms of radiation sickness are extremely unpleasant, so I advise you to avoid staying within the range of the radiation wave. „ Exclaimed Entrapta, who had avoided the fight until now. She nodded to her, barely paying attention to her words, because the invincible Eti's Girlfriend, giant dragon and the taking off warship were enough to make her want to get as far away from here as possible. She created large ice hooks, which she drove into the cracking ice. Shogi wrapped himself around her and then created spider legs, thanks to which she managed to perform a huge Jump, and she grabbed the side edge of the ship with ice hooks and crawled in. Then she tried to create an ice bridge reaching the crumbling glacier so her friends could get to the ship. Her companion wrapped herself around the ice, making the bridge as strong as steel. Netossa, Eti, Melog and Seahawk then walked along the bridge to the interior of the ship, where Entrapta was finally supposed to enter. But when she was on the bridge, Lady Sorrowflame, who was flying above them, hit the bridge with her tail, shattering it. She heard a short scream from Shogi, a large piece of his mass was torn off from him and from ship she saw Entrapta barely holding on to a piece of her companion that was hanging over the side of the ship. But then the green-haired girl jumped out and, pressing her hands to her body, dived towards the inventor, then braked sharply with her jet boots, grabbed her by the waist and started flying with her. After a few moments, the purple-haired woman found herself inside.

"I think we should get out of here.„ a strange metallic voice said from inside the ship.

„Especially since there's going to be an explosion soon.„ she said, remembering Entrapta's words. „What's a rock incinerator?" she asked, looking at the others. The Saihe girl cursed under her breath, and a metallic voice said

„We need to notify the Comrade General... I'm doing that now. he said, but then the cat girl headed for the exit.

„I'm going to my sister's... „ she said in a half-conscious voice, but she was clearly staggering, so the girl with green hair put her hand on her shoulder and said.

„I'll take care of this!„ and she ran out through the side entrance of the ship.

At first, they didn't have to hurry to leave the ruins of Umbracor, because they didn't want to run into Lady Sorrowflame, especially since Ireanis was in such a state of mind that she was ready to throw some devastating Spell at her if she saw her. Her sister-in-law supported her, but there was still a lot of anger in the elven woman, probably justified. She was worried about Tirin, especially since Hordak was carrying her, and she didn't know anyone she trusted less. To her surprise, however, the former Conqueror carried the girl with surprising delicacy. He was helped by Heart Gift, who, despite her small stature, was surprisingly strong. They didn't encounter any opponents or other threats and after some time they came across a path that the ancient dragoness had scratched out for herself At first they hesitated to go there, because Lady Sorrowflame might want to go back the same way, but they preferred not to stay in that place too long. Besides, they quickly felt the whole building made of living wood tremble and realized that the dragoness was getting out the other way. Besides, soon after, the entire ruins of the college began to tear and fall apart and it turned out that they had to run away faster and faster if they didn't want to be buried under hundreds of tons of warped wood. They also smelled the smoke from the burning building, apparently Lady Sorrowflame wanted to destroy everything that was left of the college. She didn't know what had aroused her Anger to such an extent, but she didn't intend to stand in her way. Fortunately, everyone, except her sister-in-law and the elf, were in good shape. She and her husband helped them go and after two hours they got out. They managed just in time, because they saw that the wooden Dome was about to fall apart, and it did… They watched as clouds of dust and ash rose into the air. That was when Tirin woke up. As soon as she heard a soft groan, she immediately went to the girl, not caring that she was approaching Hordak, and asked.

"Are you okay?" she looked and resisted the urge to put her hand to her forehead to check if she had a fever. She had done that many times with her daughter.

“My head hurts, but nothing else, my suit made a diagnosis and you see, everything is fine. displays on the display on her forearm, but immediately after that she cringed when she realized that she was under the open sky. Heart Gift immediately approached her and rather clumsily tried to hug her. Tiirin did not break away from this hug, and even had the impression that she fell into the arms of artificial intelligence.

„I knew nothing was wrong because I had a medical scanner, but I'm still happy...”

They stayed like that for a while until she finally said.

„We have to go back now, I don't know how the others are doing with extracting this ship, but I'm sure they're waiting for information from us... Besides, we have to warn them about Lady Sorrowflame. „ When she said that, she looked at the silver”haired elf, who was clenching her fists watching the smoking ruins of the abandoned college.

„She had to find out there... About what happened to our world... About why we lost Golarion... „ She said quietly, not addressing her words to anyone. She couldn't argue with that, although she was worried about what the ancient dragon could do when enraged... She understood her, she herself wouldn't be sure what she would do if she found out that Etheria was destroyed. She would probably go into a rage and look for those to punish. In this one aspect, she understood the dragoness perfectly.

„All the more reason we need to get to Lonnie and the others as soon as possible...„ She said quietly and motioned for everyone to follow her. The descent was difficult, but somehow I managed without any broken bones, and finally they got to their vehicle and began the long journey back.

"Can't you just transport us, the same way you got here?" Hordak asked her. She gave him a disapproving look, but answered him as politely as she could.

„That would be twice as many people, and I don't have experience using it yet, because I've only recently got it. I could lose someone along the way, and I don't want to risk that.”

"Are you sure, honey? Perhaps if I, Castaspella, and Ireanis helped you, you could do it safely." Mikach asked, smiling softly at her, and she hesitated for a moment.

„I can't afford to take such a risk... We're not in such a hurry yet.„ she said and after a moment everyone was sitting in the vehicle. As it turned out, time had verified their intentions.

„Madam Captain! The rebel forces have come under attack by Lord Admiral Antares' forces! They are requesting our support! Do we have permission to provide it?„ said the second mate Gydwa. They had been driving for hours now, and she was almost certain that nothing important would happen. She thought for a moment and said.

„If the flagships are not participating in the battle, you are to support as much as possible. I will be there soon!„ She said and looked at her companions, then said with a sour smile.

„I guess we'll have to hurry up. I hope no one will be mad at us for abandoning another vehicle.„ She said smiling and spread her wings to bring them all to the far North.

Lady Sorrowflame soared toward the far north, a fire burning in her heart. Black flame of grief and loss, and hatred. She knew who had destroyed her World and killed her god. She knew who must die for it. And then be resurrected and suffer for countless centuries while she devised wonderful ways to torment him, or rather them, because in this case it was the entire species. She had to admit that she had an extremely ambitious task ahead of her, but she was ready to face it.

However, she had to connect with her allies first. First, she contacted Lady Ka and learned from her subordinates that she was not in the queen's camp, but had gone to the far North. Then she tried to use a special secret contact channel that only they had and learned that she was going with the older daughter of the Lord Admiral to capture the younger one... She knew very well that this woman was taking a big risk, because during this confrontation there was a big chance that certain facts about Antares' past could come out of light, which in turn could lead to serious agreements between the Grand Marshal and the information and intelligence officer... She would definitely need the help of the ancient dragon.

She cast a few acceleration spells and ordered a few of the fastest ghosts and a Night Wing to accompany her. And so many hours passed before she reached the place and saw something exceptionally interesting there. Even from this distance she was able to sense the movement under the glacier. One of the largest ships she had ever seen was just breaking through the ice to take off... She was sure where, but she guessed... It didn't matter much though, even she wouldn’t be able to fight such a dreadnought. However, she saw a ship and several figures fighting on the glacier and headed in that direction. One of the people emanated great power, which she had only felt once before, during the Lord Admiral's wedding. However, in this case, the power emanated a completely different color, much stronger and more alien. From what she had managed to notice with her dragon vision, this person was on the same side as Lady Ka and that strange android that had come with Despara. She flew in that direction, paying no attention to the other fighters, even the small ship that had come to the rescue. If she had wanted to, she could have torn it apart with her claws, or bitten it in half... But she didn't have time for that. She would rather evacuate her allies from this place. So as soon as she flew closer, she bared her teeth, and then asked, Thundering like a storm.

„Can I help you?”

„It would be useful, because the funniest of kittens has just activated his daddy's rock incinerator, which will explode soon. The radiation may not harm you, but I don't feel like the skin falling off my facem.„ said the Lord Admiral's left hand, smiling broadly.

„ Well, don't move, unless you want to see my stomach up close. „ she said and opened her mouth and then took all three of them into her mouth.

„I've never been eaten in this was before!„ Lady Ka exclaimed, but then added. „ There are a few more of my men you could take, if it's not too much trouble for you.”

She didn't answer, just nodded and flew around the glacier. As soon as she saw them, she took them in her claws and flew towards their camp.

She breathed slowly to savor every second of this moment. She had a photographic memory, so she could return to it whenever she wanted. She had been waiting for this moment all these years, for it to finally come true… she had one goal that she intended to achieve, but she had to fight a completely different, much darker temptation. She smiled at the so-called heroine of the Galaxy and said.

„Hey Adora!„ She said and pulled out her sword. Next to her on the frosty ground lay her older sister, still limp from the electric shock. She knew that soon she would regain control of her body, but then it wouldn't matter... They wouldn't be able to stop her...

„Who are you?” She-Ra asked, still in shock. Next to her stood the clone, Ka's sister, and that ridiculous mount, but they didn't count here.

„I am your mirror image, Or rather a reflection in a crooked, warped mirror... I am Despara... Broken and Reforged! The Thrice Chosen! The Heart Of Cold Flame! The One That Brings Ruin And Vengeance!„ she said and ripped off her cloak, standing in front of She-Ra naked so she could see exactly how her body was mutilated. She saw that her sister's wife was speechless at the sight, so she smiled with satisfaction.

„Listen, I don't know why you came here, but I don't want to fight you... I only came here to save those I love...„ Adora said, regaining control of herself surprisingly quickly.

„So do I, although I also want to save the universe, or at least a large part of it. „ she said, feeling Frost's needles pierce her body, but the cold didn't harm her. The way her body had been treated meant that few things could hurt her.

„So I guess... So I guess we can join forces, because we want this to... „ the other girl asked comma with so much hope in her voice that it was even funny to hear.

„The problem is that you are not ready yet. To paraphrase our father, a true hero must be forged in the fire of suffering, and you have not suffered enough yet… And besides, I wish that She would got even a little of the pain that I have experienced.„ she nudged her sister with her metal leg and jumped at her wife. She dealt a lightning-fast blow with her sword, which She-Ra blocked effortlessly. She waited for a counterattack, but the woman did not want to attack her, so she continued her attack. She dealt blow after blow, faster and faster. The heroine transformed her weapon into a shield and continued to protect herself from her attacks, retreating more and more..

„You know you won't win this way, you can't defend yourself all the time... „ She said, briefly attacking her sister-in-law. The blonde answered her.

„I don't want to hurt you. I don't want to hurt my wife's sister!„ She cried, and she, hearing this, laughed hoarsely.

„ You can't do anything worse to me than what has already been done to me. But you clearly need a little encouragement. How about a few hundred victims„ she asked and looked at the camp where her ally said the Rebels were. Out of the corner of her eye she saw Lady Sorrowflame fly away, but that didn't matter to them now. You smiled and ran towards the rebels with superhuman speed to bring death and suffering.

She managed to regroup her people very quickly, and ordered them to hide in the shadows of the ships and vehicles that had energy shields. She knew that it might not be enough if the enemy used really heavy weapons, so she decided that she would simply prepare a counterattack. She divided her soldiers into few large groups, to which she added Shadows, and equipped everyone with as much heavy weapons and laser marking equipment as she could. They hadn't heard from Bina yet, so maybe she had been captured or died along the way. She liked the woman with burgundy hair, but she had to get over it, because she didn't have time to grieve. She had to take care of her people, who were like family to her. Damn it, they were her family! Of course, she had added Kyle and Rogelio to her squad. She believed that they would be safest near her, although she wasn't sure how much truth there was to that. There wasn't much more she could do for them. She could force them to hide in one of the ships, but she also knew that they had to fight, or they would lose respect for her and for themselves. She clenched her hands around her staff, hoping that she would be able to save her boys. After a moment, she saw rainbow flashes in the distance, and she guessed who had arrived... Maybe they had once been enemies, and at that sight she had prepared for a fight, but now she felt relief seeing that she would be fighting alongside She-Ra. Perhaps her very presence would cause their rules to cease fighting… At least that was her hope… She ordered her subordinates to be careful, and they were now creeping between the hills. She kept in touch with the others, she wasn't sure if her enemy could eavesdrop on them, but she decided it was better to take the risk than allow an uncoordinated attack. They were closing in on the enemy forces, ready to launch an attack if they saw their opponents preparing for battle... Sometimes you have to make a preemptive strike.

And then screams came from the communicator.

„Division Six! What's happening here!„ she cried, feeling the fingers of terror tighten around her neck. Had they been discovered?

"She attacked and she's killing us... She..." And then the voice stopped. She breathed heavily for a moment, wondering what to do, and then she looked into Kyle's eyes and saw not fear, but rage. She clenched her fists and said.

„To all units, I don't know what's going on there but we're going to help the sixth! „ she called out and together they went to where the sixth squad should be. After a few minutes they reached the place and then she was speechless with horror. Her soldiers were fighting a woman... She was naked and armed with a long narrow blade, her limbs were replaced with the same percentages that Eti had, but her eyes were also made of metal. Long hair fluttered in the wind, As she dodged blows and shots. She was unnaturally fast and agile, And each blow of her blade killed or maimed. She gritted her teeth and screamed.

„Attack!„ She shouted and led her soldiers against the woman The first to approach her was a boy with blue hair armed with an electric halberd, whom she had even slept with once, but as soon as she got within reach of the woman, she made a lightning-fast pirouette, and the boy suddenly tripped when she cut off his leg at the knee. His brother, a year older boy with red hair, screamed and attacked the woman. He was dressed in one of those new armors that she had equipped her personal guard with. She shot at it twice, but she only dodged it with a dance step and directed a metal hand at him, from which a ball of energy shot out, piercing him through.

„You are brave, I have to admit that!” Said the cat woman.„But you will all die anyway... „ she said and jumped towards her people, so that you would die like death. She couldn't let this continue, so she jumped to her and took a powerful swing with her staff. She then released the power of the might-strike, but the woman so similar to Catra blocked the blow with her sword, but the impact of the strike was still so strong that it pushed her back a few meters. However, she gracefully slowed down the strike and looked at her.

„It would have been dangerous if you were a little faster... But you weren't.„ and she charged at her, dealing blow after blow, so fast that she couldn't see the next attacks. All she could do was block her and hope that the blade wouldn't cut through the metal. Each of her companions who tried to approach died, slightly slowing down the attacker.

"Retreat! I'll hold her off!" She shouted, and her subordinates and friends reluctantly obeyed.

„You'll die alone, but apparently that's how it is with everyone.„ Her opponent said and hit her in the stomach with her metal fist so hard that she bent in half. She fell to her knees, and the Cat woman was already taking a swing to take her life, when suddenly she heard. heard a cry and saw a multi-colored light.

„Well, you'll survive... You're welcome. „ and she hit her on the head with a fist.

She didn't immediately rush to chase Despara, she had to check if her wife was okay. Catra tried to get up, but she could clearly see that her body didn't want to listen to her as much as she wanted it to. The cat woman cursed a few times, then she saw her and smiled with joy and despair at the same time...

„She's... She's my sister... But... She's on my father's side... And he... Oh Adora... I'm such an idiot.„ she fell to her knees and started crying, so she went to her beloved and hugged her as tightly as she could.

„Listen, I don't know what exactly is going on here, or who this twisted girl is, but I suggest you go stop her, because I probably won't be able to. We'll take care of your wife.„ she said, the woman she remembered as Bina, Wrongdak nodded.

„I'm going with you, I can help you.„ Said Swiftwind, but she shook her head and answered him.

„ Unfortunately, that is not possible my friend... This woman... Despara... Only I can stop her. „ She said and jumped in the direction her wife's sister ran.

When she landed she gasped in horror. Everywhere lay the bodies of dead or wounded rebels. She knew most of them from the old days, some of them she was even friends with. Despara stood over the body of the helpless Lonnie, she couldn't tell if her former friend was alive

"You have to understand that you are the only one to blame for all this death." Despara made a circle with the blade of her sword. "If you had fought me like you should have, they would all still be alive." Despara said and she knew she was right. "If you don't want more people to die, then stop running and fight me... Unleash all the power you have." She lowered the blade and didn't take her metal eyes off her waiting for an attack. She adjusted her grip on the Sword of Protection and with a scream attacked Despara. She attacked her with fury and screamed with each blow in rage and desperation. The feline woman mainly defended herself, only occasionally launching lightning-fast cuts, but she blocked each one without a problem. Eventually, their blades collided and Despara's sword shattered into several pieces. Her opponent jumped back a few meters and said „You're better than I thought... You shattered the adamantium blade. „ She threw away the hilt, and then spread her hands wide, which transformed into long hooked blades. She had the impression that Despara was surrounded by red mist, and behind her appeared a strange specter, like a giant red mantis.

„Now we'll start fighting seriously! „ and jumped at her, dealing two lightning-fast cuts with hooked blades, and then another and another. She tried to block her, and sometimes she also responded with a blow, but this woman was too fast... It looked as if the whole fight was just a dance, an artistic show for her. She felt the hunger emanating from the specter that stood behind her. Then the missiles began to fall, and It seemed that both sides had started fighting again, and no one was looking to see if she could hit one of them. She reached deeper into her power to resist the attacker, but it was getting harder and harder to stand on her feet. Maybe it was just her imagination, but then, when she began to feel that she was losing, she saw two spaceships in the sky. One belonged to Angela, she remembered it because she had fought with it that day when she learned that the former queen was alive. But she didn't recognize the other one, but it seemed to have an ominous shape. And then a figure jumped out of the small ship that accompanied the larger ones. which landed next to her. The impact made the ground shake and Despara even lost her balance. She recognized that menacing-looking armor, and the sword, especially the sword.

„Whoever you are, in the name of the Order of Eclipse surrender!„ shouted Asindesa di Vir holding the ancient sword with both hands, and the feline woman turned her head to the side, clearly surprised.

„But it's true. You were given this sword. Well, I guess I'll take it.„ Despara said in her hoarse voice, and then started attacking again. This time, however, she had two Warriors against her, both armed with ancient weapons, and both highly trained. For a moment, they managed to stop her momentum and even began to gain the upper hand. But then, when Despara's blow bounced off the shoulder pad of the armor her father-in-law had given her, the woman's lips twisted into a strange smile and she uttered two words in a language unknown to her, and then the armor fell off her. "You didn't think my father would give you a gift that he couldn't take away, if only he wanted to? „ she said and dealt a quick blow, which she easily dodged. The lack of armor didn't really bother her, because she had been learning to fight without armor for most of her life anyway. The woman with the metal eyes began to back away, and for a moment she had the impression that she was leading them somewhere, and then suddenly she saw the glow of a thousand suns… and darkness fell.

He wasn't brave, he actually regretted what Lonnie had asked him to do... He knew his girlfriend was right and he shouldn't have pushed himself to the Front. He really just hoped that he would have the opportunity to become That Guy and in some way help others win. Only now it turned out that this woman so similar to Catra had arrived and started killing his friends. She was amazing, invincible, they couldn't fight her, so as soon as he obeyed

Lonnie's order, and he retreated, but after a moment he exchanged glances with Rogelio. They were hiding behind a large boulder, wide enough that no one could see them on the other side.

We can't leave her like this, can we?„ he asked his boyfriend, and he nodded and cleared his throat in agreement. However, when they looked behind the rocks, they saw that their girl was kneeling, and that woman was preparing to ask for time, but then Adora appeared, and drew the attention of the attacker, so they managed to approach the unconscious Lonnie and pull her aside, hiding behind the rock they had previously hidden on.

"Lonnie! Can you hear us?" he called, and felt an indescribable sense of relief when he heard her moan, and then she asked.

"Did we win?" Her voice was weak. She still tried to stand up, but he stopped her.

„This is a debatable issue„ He said diplomatically, and she once again lost consciousness again, and then he heard a ship and heard someone jump out of it, so when he looked around the rock he saw that there was a woman in ghoulish looking armor, who, to his surprise and relief, had sided with She-Ra. It looked like both women were gaining the upper hand, but since the exchange of fire had resumed, he decided to wait for the outcome of the fight, and he leaned over his girlfriend, grabbed her tightly and asked his boyfriend to help him pull her. But as soon as they started to pull Lonnie, he heard a deafening boom and saw that the entire area was bathed in a terrifyingly bright light, as if the sun he had heard so much about had risen over Etheria. He felt a wave of heat brought by the wind that had risen, and then everything started to get going. He turned around and saw Adora-She-Ra looking around in fear, as if she didn't know where she was, and the armored figure covered the visor with his hand. In the distance, on a huge glacier, he saw the fading light, and the ice glacier began to break apart, releasing a giant ship that had already gotten out and was clearly about to fly away.

„A true winner will not hesitate to use deception if he really cares about what he is fighting for.„ said the feline fencer, and attacked the women in armor with hooked blades. She made a few quick cuts, and suddenly chopped off her hand in which she was holding a strange sword. Now he saw that there were the same inscriptions on it as on his weapon... And the inscriptions said End of Eternity... Blade of Vengeance... Then he remembered his own weapon and drew it from the sheath, but hesitated. He did not know now whether he should transform at this moment, Perhaps no one would see him, enemies and Rogelio. Well, what did he want the lizard to know the truth? It was difficult, and he hesitated. At this time, the woman with metal eyes turned to She”Ra, who looked around as if she did not see Where her opponent was.

"I'm sorry I didn't block your sun!" she said and then Adora attacked her, the cat woman jumped to the side thus avoiding the blow.

„Darkness has come to you, hasn't it?„ Adora's opponent said, and she dodged another blow. He saw the desperation and terror on his former friend's face. Now he understood that she had lost her sight, and he himself felt an inexpressible sorrow.

„You can see the light again though... You just have to reach deeper into the power.„ she said and moved away almost mockingly dodging the next attacks. He grabbed harder almost ready to say the words... But then another figure fell from above, it was Itel, who hit the cat woman's back with great speed, wounding her. The blow, however, did not seem to seriously harm the person, but she turned to her and quickly grabbed her by the throat and squeezed.

„Do not interfere in the disputes between the student and his mentor!„ she said, lifting Itel up, and then he spoke the words.

„I have the Power!„ And then a light surrounded him, and he felt power and courage again. He grabbed his weapon with both hands and attacked the cat woman, who turned at the last moment and blocked his strike with her metal arm.

„I didn't expect you. „ she said with sincere surprise and let go of the green”haired girl, and then began to fight him. At first with him as if they were equals, But then he saw that her attacks were getting weaker and slower and it was getting worse, and after a while Adora joined the fight again, who at least partially regained her sight. Together they attacked her and settled, pushing her further and further back.

„Well, you surprised me... Beware of triumph, for it is a trap of fate!„ And she struck her blades against each other and then they were all thrown back by a wave of energy. “There is one fire that burned the pyres.” she continued jumping away, she transformed the blades back into hands, and grabbed the sword abandoned by the person in armor, and said. “A two edges has sword held by every soldier...” she said, and he tried to attack her, but she made a wonderful piroue and jumped to the abandoned armor and finally said.

„ You can't change your fate... I feel so sorry for you. „ and the gate around her fell away into the void, which swallowed her and her armor... The fight was over, so then he swallowed a moment, turned, grabbed Lonnie and started to run.

The fight lasted another half hour, but when it turned out that the Hellknights had joined the Rebels, Lady Ka's Dogs retreated somewhere far away. Their new allies could not pursue them, because they were still allies of her father. They won the battle, but the cost was high. Dozens of rebel members died, most of them killed by her sister... Up until now, she had trouble accepting the fact that the other woman was her relative, but she already had a warcriminal in her family. Adora told her what had happened during the fight and what she had said to her. She wasn't sure what the other one was talking about, but it seemed that she wanted something from her wife, although none of them were sure what. She certainly knew more than any of them. Her arrival was connected to the First Ones, although it didn't seem like she was on their side. In addition, she became her father's right hand, which did not bode well for all of them. After the shock, all of her muscles still hurt, but she still felt like she came out of the fight the best. Both Netossa and Seahawk had broken arms, many soldiers lost limbs in the fight with Despara, including Asindesa di Vir, although the Lady of Blades did not let this loss bother her, claiming that she would replace it with an artificial prosthesis anyway. Many members of the rebellion also lost their eyesight due to the explosion of the rock incinerator. From what she understood, this was also not such a big problem in the galaxy, because it could be replaced with cybernetic implants... Although it would be difficult to obtain them on this planet... The situation was much worse with the girl Saihe, who came to her wife's aid. During the explosion, she was unshielded and the closest of all of them to the explosion. She received a huge dose of radiation, and for several hours it was known whether she would survive. There had to be a double blood draw, and from what she knew she would have to take pills for the rest of her life. Several other Rebels had also been irradiated, including Lonnie, but surprisingly Kyle had escaped that fate, she could guess why.

But she felt sorry for Eti the most… Her sister had lost an eye, but she refused to receive the appropriate implant, and no one seemed to want to argue with her. However, it wasn't the fact that she had been mutilated that caused her sister the greatest suffering. Lady Ka had used some terrible device and taken control of her sister's Girlfriend. She had heard from Frosta and the rest that the white”haired girl had fought on the side of that vile woman… And then she had been taken by Lady Sorrowflame, no one knew where. She couldn't describe in words how vile it was. To take someone away from someone you loved… She knew how it felt, just like Adora…

Her wife was waiting for her near the landing site, sitting on one of the crates, leaning on her sword. She went to her, hugged her tightly, and then they kissed. When they broke apart, she said.

„We're going to Xadia...„ She said and immediately felt the silence resonate. Then her beloved embraced her and said.

„I see…”

It was only one word, but it said so much… She took a deep breath and began to explain.

„That ship is going there... It will fly for a very long time because it has no drive, as they call it Drift drive... But when it gets there... It wants to destroy that place... We can't let that happen... And besides, Shadow Weaver went there. They are looking for some old artifact that would allow them to open a passage to Eternia... I think they gathered Rosie there, but I'm not sure... Nightgale and Calamity probably went there... We are going there with the rebels... I am going too, and so is Queen Angela... We have some ships from Uncle Eti...

„ I see… „ her beloved said softly, and then hugged her.

„I'm sorry I have to go there and leave you here, but understand that I have to be with her, and She”Ra is needed here... We don't know what my father wishes to do.”

„ I understand everything. We also have some things to do here. Entrapta wants to stay here, and learn something about my origin and my power. We are planning a Journey to the center of the planet... We will get a certain device from the Shadows that will allow us to talk, although only for a minute a day, but it's something, right? „ She took her head in her hands and kissed it again. „ I will wait for you. „ said her wife, when she finished the kiss, they hugged once more and went to the deck of the Deadly Sword of Burning Fury.

She looked in the general direction her Beloved had been walking long after she had gone beyond her now very limited field of vision. Still, she had to wait for Netossa, who discreetly took her by the arm, and then led her towards the ship… Even though it was day, she felt as if dusk was falling… as if the light was dying around her… was that really the case? She wished with all her might that it wasn’t so, but something deep in her heart told her that mortals were not impressed, for their fate had long been sealed by beings older and more powerful than time itself.

Sorry I took so long to get this chapter out. It wasn't until after I wrote it that I realized I forgot about Melog.

Epilogue - Reaching through the Void

Chapter Notes

See the end of the chapter for notes

When she got there, for the first few quarters of an hour she just lay on the grass and breathed heavily. She had to admit that lying there turned out to be very pleasant... The air here was as sweet as on her native Etheria... Magic also greeted her, She was also greeted by magic, perhaps not as powerful as on her homeworld, but still palpable. Sun shone, she still couldn't get used to the fact that it existed, and its rays gently caressed her skin. She saw some animals, birds or insects flying among the treetops. She didn't recognize many of them, but that was understandable, after all, she was in an alien world. Despite everything, compared to some places she had heard about, and even some regions of Etheria this place seemed surprisingly ordinary and friendly. She already knew a bit about the First Ones having colonized this world, and probably begun the terraforming process here… However, they had not acted radically enough to significantly change the planet's environment. She was reminded of the cursed swamps of Kranor Rill, whose biological mechanism was so advanced and invasive that thousands of years after their creators had been annihilated, it continued its work… However, perhaps its current growth had been stimulated by other ancient forces…

She couldn't just lie here all day, not to mention the mission that awaited her, she also had to reach some center of civilization, because she had no idea how to survive in the wilderness. She might be able to kill most of the monsters that might be hiding here, but Hunger and cold would kill her just like anyone else. She had some supplies, of course, she even took two storage bags, which could hold much more than there was and were surprisingly light, but even such simple things as pitching a tent and finding water were problematic for her. Now she realized what an incredible feat it was that Mikach had survived on Beast Island, a place that even instilled fear in her, and he had been alone and had no chance of getting out. She had no right to complain... You wondered what gave him the strength to live there day after day... It was probably all the love for his daughter and wife, and the hope that he would meet them someday... She also hoped that she would meet her daughter someday... But above all, she had to save her... She knew, however, that it wouldn't be easy.

Finally, she sat down and cast a spell finding. It didn't show the exact location of the person she was looking for, but it still indicated that they were nearby... It was a very lucky twist of fate, although it immediately aroused her suspicions. Life had taught her not to believe in happy accidents and coincidences. The explanation was quite logical, however. The exit from the shadow path had to be near some significant point on this planet, and she guessed that Aaravos's student should be staying near such a place... The area looked inconspicuous, like the ruins of some insignificant temple, or maybe just a small sanctuary. There were many symbols depicting a mask, one side white, the other black, as well as symbols of her goddess. However, the locals probably knew nothing about Nethys and the spider. It was a small forest, from what she knew about the seasons, which after all did not occur on her planet, it was spring. Not bad, she was not sure if she had brought clothes warm enough for the cold winter. Her stay here seemed quite pleasant for now, which was almost worrying. She drank some isotonic drink from the bottle and then performed the second ritual, which summoned the shadow.

“Watch over me and look for the young woman” She commanded a being made of pure darkness. It wasn't a true shadow, an undead remnant of a soul, more like an elemental or an aberration, but it was useful. Then she put the heavy package on her back and started walking in the indicated direction. She knew that if you didn't find the girl for a long time, she would have to light a fire and cast a more powerful locator spell, but that could wait. It was worth looking around the area anyway. Maybe there was an inn somewhere here? Unfortunately, to her disappointment, there was no one nearby. She didn't see many signs of civilization here, the only path cleared just enough to be traveled. In the distance, she saw a stone spire shooting up to the sky, it certainly wasn't a completely natural construction, although from this distance she was able to tell if it had been built by the First Ones or another advanced civilization. The shadow she had released was patrolling the area and suddenly informed her that it had noticed something. He wasn't very intelligent, he could only send her a message whether he had found the person she was looking for or had encountered danger. It wasn't entirely certain, it seemed that his knowledge came from her, and he was more likely to recognize obvious danger. It was worse with the less clear-cut one, but in this case she had to rely on luck. This signal, however, meant that it was the person she was looking for. Well, she had to admit that she hadn't expected to find her so quickly. At first she considered putting on a cloak of darkness and sneaking up, but then she changed her mind, it would probably be better not to start the acquaintance she was to cooperate with in the coming months with sneaky sneaking.

She approached the Glade located in front of a not very deep cave, around which a small shelter had been built. There were a few benches and a small hut, as well as a stone table. Some of these items had been left here long ago to make life easier for travelers, while others were more of a makeshift construction, made of leather and tangled branches. Still, they seemed quite sturdy, and perhaps they would survive here long after those who had made them had passed away. Two people stood by the fire. One was a young man who looked like a man. He had green hair and brown skin. At first glance, she took him for an elf, or Saihe, as they were called on her planet, but then she saw a few unusual features. He had horns on his head, and his hands had four fingers. He was dressed in a shirt and pants, but she could still see some strange tattoos or scars. He seemed a bit worried.

"I don't think we should stay near Stormspire too long. Eventually one of the dragons will notice us here," he said to the girl standing next to him. She was young, about the age her stepdaughters had been when all this had started. She had fair skin and long hair, mostly black, but with a long white stripe. She was dressed in black robes, with gold trim, now well worn, and in her hand she had a golden staff with a black ball, looking like a black hole, hanging between its arms at the end.

„We have to stay here a little longer! He said that we have to wait here for someone. Someone who will help us!" she said in an excited voice, looking around, as if the person she was looking for was now going to come out of the trees. She was not wrong. She took a few steps and went out into the clearing. They both immediately jumped to their feet, and when they saw what she looked like, their eyes widened with fear. There was nothing strange about it, most sensible beings would draw their weapons if they saw someone like her coming out of the forest. Then the woman grabbed her staff, and the strange Elf stood with his legs spread wide, assuming a fighting stance.

„Don't come any closer! Just one more step and... you'll see!„ girl threatened her but she just smiled and said.

„I'm not going to do anything to you. I came here to... help you.„ she said carefully, and the young woman hesitated...

„You are the one Aaravos spoke of !... But I expected someone... different...„ Said the girl looking at her closely and flinched. She smiled at her and said.

„At your age, I also thought I would become someone else...„ She said and looked at the girl carefully, and then she felt IT in her! It was power, great and wonderful, very similar to what she felt from Adora when she saw her for the first time. The blood of the First Ones flowed in the veins of this girl, maybe not as pure as in the case of her adopted daughter, but already mature, just ready for Someone to guide her in the right way. She could do it, she was a great teacher. This girl was the perfect Student. She saw in her great enthusiasm and desire to gain knowledge without considering the opinions of others... And the cost. She was determined, ready to sacrifice, and also very... naive. Yes, this girl would finally be the student she had always dreamed of. She could spend some time with her and make her a devoted right hand... But that was not why she came here. She was to act in accordance with the will of the Crawling Chaos. She was to free this cursed sorcerer, to save her daughter, the only one who loved her.

„What happened to you that you look like that.„ asked the boy with green hair, and she smiled at him, making him flinch, and said.

„I made bad life choices, for which others had to suffer. „ She said and when she saw that they were looking at her worriedly she decided to change the subject and asked. „Can I sit down… Do you have tea?„ she said and then the girl pointed to her paw and said. „ Of course, now we will brew! „ the girl said and She started looking for something in the packages and when she took out the bag of herbs she asked. „ Does this mean that you are... A friend of Aravos ...?

She barely held back from bursting into dark laughter. This girl was real.

"Aravos and I have a long-standing relationship.„ she said very euphemistically. She knew she couldn't trust the ancient sorcerer, but she also needed his help. So she decided not to interfere in his relationship with this girl for now, even if in this way she could allow her to meet a fate similar to the one she had experienced, or even worse.

The girl nodded and said.

„My father... He was the first person in a hundred years who contacted with him, but...„ her voice broke, and the green-haired Elf put his hand on her shoulder. She had already guessed that there was more to these two than just friendship or common goals.

„I heard that something terrible happened to him... I feel sorry for you...„ she said and there was silence, during which the girl was immersed in sad and gloomy memories.

"So you came to help me bring him back to life, right?" She looked at her with hope in her eyes, and she nodded slowly.

„I'm very happy, because this will be an unimaginably difficult task. And by the way, my name is Claudia...„ Girl smiled suddenly, brightening up, and then her companion added.

„And I'm Terry.„ she had the impression that he wanted to shake her hand, but then he saw the clawed hands and changed his mind. She didn't blame him...

„My name is…„ she hesitated, because she could use any name here, either one of those she had used in her life or one she had just come up with. She could finally break away from the past and start a new life under a new name. But today she wasn't going to run away from her sins.

„My name is Shadow Weaver… „ she looked at the couple, in whose eyes she saw surprise, confusion and anxiety.

„Well, that's the name...„ Terry said carefully, trying to smile, but he was clearly afraid of her.

„Indeed, that is a name...„ she said, smiling sadly.

Calamity kicked the stone with all her might and was surprised to see that she had broken her finger. She felt no pain, only slight discomfort, and she knew that in a moment her body would return to its previous state, but her ego was wounded. This was an accident that mortals could tell in anecdotes and jokes, not something that happened to half-goddesses! She groaned in anger and looked at Nightgale, who was observing her humiliation with surprisingly stoic calm. The young sorceress probably couldn't understand how difficult it all was for someone who was used to being able to tear apart any being she encountered. And now she couldn't... She couldn't even piss herself without help, unless she pissed her panties, which would be equally degrading to her dignity. When that... being cut off her hands, she was just about to go to the side. It was absurd that despite being a practically perfect and invincible being, she still had to worry about such simple and disgusting activities as urinating and feces… Or shitting and pissing… She tried to hold out for a few hours, hoping that her hands would grow back, but in the end she couldn't take it anymore and called Nightgale. She would rather ask Shadow Weaver's daughter for help than let her servants watch her humiliation. It had to be admitted that the young sorcerer behaved surprisingly decently in the current… situation. She didn't say anything, and Ani didn't smile mockingly, and when it was over, she didn't bring up the subject, for which she was so grateful, of course within reason. She was still just a mortal. They managed to dismantle parts of the mechanisms from the inside of the dome and connect them with what they had brought with them, although it was probably all thanks to her companions, because with the hands of a baby that had grown in her after a few hours, there wasn't much she could do anyway. In truth, she intended to manipulate the queen into connecting the artifact to one of the runestone sockets that were empty and rebuild the matrix on this planet, but she burned her bridges behind her. Perhaps she should have been more sensible. She shouldn't have succumbed to temptation, after all, if she followed the orders of the Crawling Chaos, she would be able to get the justice she deserved.

Then they went to the outskirts of the ruins left by the Krellans, where the teleportation device was hidden. It was a small round building, resembling a dome, which was covered with layers of mud and strange local plants to disguise it. They got inside after Nightgale and the young cultist dug furiously for several hours. It was easier for them thanks to the help of these small creatures, many of whom followed the dark sorcerer, treating her like a minor deity. Eventually, they managed to dig up the place and their eyes saw the interior. Everything was covered in the same veined stone that conducted geomagical energy so well. The device that operated this Teleporter was not impressive, but it seemed to function. She had learned enough about the technology of this ancient race to try to make it work. Of course, she had to rely on the young sorcerer for this too, so she followed her instructions with great care. She actually had the impression that she liked her a little, like one likes a tasty dish... It was a perfect comparison!

„Now we just have to wait for that girl to come back with the Coordinates.„ she said scratching her regrowing arms, then added. „ here is one problem though. This device has enough energy to transport us only once, but until we activate the Bloodstone on the other side, we won't be able to return, or get any support. „ She explained thanking the ancients for all those hours spent in the swamp learning how to operate the technology of an extinct race.

„You'll definitely manage, you're very capable after all... Besides, you're a nearly impossible-to-kill monster capable of tearing a man in half with your bare hands, I really believe in you!„ Her companion replied with a hint of sarcasm in her voice . She also understood that the most important thing hadn't been said out loud. If they failed to activate the bloodstone, Nightgale would die, and a very painful death at that. Of course, if what the Creeping Chaos said was true, then there was a high probability that they would be annihilated along with all the enemies of that lousy civilization. Sometimes it happened that even demigods had to accept their helplessness.

Thus the hours passed, during which she vented her frustration on stones and frogs. Her companions took refuge under the dome, but she was bored enough to wander, and finally Nightgale came out and began to watch her with a mixture of boredom and Anxiety, after all, at any moment the queen might want to reclaim her runestone, and if she succeeded, the fate of the young sorcerer was not bright. However, when Twilight had already fallen and only a few darker and more sinister moons illuminated the area, they saw the approaching shadows of drops

„I have the impression that all of Mrs. Ka's subordinates, as well as Lady Sorrowflame, have come to us.„ She said with genuine surprise, and then she felt a surge of power and heard a hoarse voice behind her.

„In fact, things have gotten a little more complicated, but that's even better for you.„ said Despara.

Lady K never before traveled in the mouth of a vampire dragon, and She had the impression that No one who had found themselves in Lady Sorrowflame's jaws had ever managed to survive, so she could say that she was very lucky. She had to admit that it was not a very pleasant experience, and she did not intend to repeat it again. After a while, they reached the ships, and then the dragoness spat them out quite brutally onto the hard, frozen ground, and threw her subordinates out of her claws. Nothing even happened to them, although from what she noticed, Most of them shit themselves with fear. She felt the explosion of the rock incinerator, but it seemed to her that they were also far away, and besides, the ancient dragoness had an energy shield, so she doubted that they would receive a large dose of radiation, but just in case, she would take the appropriate medication. Right after they arrived, a more terrifying cat girl appeared. She was naked, which in her case wasn't the most pleasant sight, in fact she had never seen someone with so many different kinds of scars on their body. She wondered how on earth she had survived all of this, if it was the work of one of the gods or someone like that, she was very grateful to him, because he had just saved her from the wrath of the Lord Admiral.

The cat woman had another sword with her, the same one that belonged to Asindesa di Vir. That was also very interesting.

„I see you found yourself a new toy... Does this mean the Lady of Blades is dead...„ She asked with curiosity in her voice. Teasing the Hellknight was very amusing, but if she decided to join Antares' enemies, then she would be better off dead.

„She is alive, as is my sister... I hope that applies to the other one as well?„ The Lord Admiral's new right hand asked, piercing her through and through with the gaze of those metal eyes.

„Just like you ordered, not a single hair fell from her head, although her friend could have ruffled her a bit. „ she glanced at the deaf girl who stood next to her, staring blankly ahead. She actually felt uncomfortable being near her. She saw how dangerous warrior she was, despite her nature as a kind-hearted idiot, stupid even for this place, and she guessed that as soon as she broke free from the leash, whoever was responsible for her imprisonment…

„She-Ra is also alive, but that was the plan. Now I am taking you to Lady Cala.„ The cat girl said in a commanding tone. She truly was her Father's daughter.

„That's a good idea Despara. She and her mentor... They are involved in some enterprise related to the First Ones... „ The dragoness explained in a booming voice.

„ So you did what our allies asked us to do? „ Mrs. Ka asked with curiosity.

„Indeed... They were right that seeing is believing, but also that the truth can break. „ Lady Sorrowflame said and shuddered at her words. If something could break a dragon older than most of beings in the galaxy, then she had to know some terrible truth... Well, no one is as strong as they seem.

Nightgale watched the arrival of the ships with some surprise. At the beginning of this journey, she had not expected the great forces that would be involved in their expedition. Aaravos stood beside her, admiring the arrival of the ships, rubbing his beard with his hand.

„Don't you feel the excitement just before the beginning of a great adventure! Here is a team of righteous heroes setting off on an epic journey to oppose Evil with the power of their noble hearts and bring hope to the entire Universe?„ He said and Whirled around her. She gave him a skeptical look.

„ The only thing that is true is that we are going on an journey and maybe it will be epic, but the rest... „ She replied looking at him skeptically, and he laughed and said.

„Truth is a negotiable construct…”

She didn't feel like discussing philosophical topics with him, especially such absurd ones. One or two ships were able to land even in such a place, but most had to hang in the air. Lady Sorrowflame landed next to them in Dragon form. It was already evening, and she guessed that the spells allowed her to travel during the day, although she suspected that she had accelerated on the deck of one of these ships and jumped out of it. Only when they were almost at their destination. Behind the ships landed Despara appeared with her friend with metallic skin.

"Indeed, things have become a bit more complicated, but for you it is even better." Despara said. The cat-like girl had a completely different sword in her hands, the sight of which caused concern in Lady Cala''s eyes. It was the blade of Asindesa di Vir, and that could mean that...

„I understand that our noble knight's problem has been solved... Shadow Weaver will be inconsolable... „ said the Dread Aristocrat, and then Despara looked at her, and slapped her. The tips of her fingers transformed into claws during the blow.

„So it's true that they both were very close. I had to hit youto teach you not to take pleasure in the misfortune of dream books. „ she said in that hoarse voice looking at the beautiful monstrosity, whose flaws had almost healed. Lady Cala looked at her coldly, but then unexpectedly the feline woman threw a blade at her feet.

„Take them. You might find them useful, as well as the armor that belonged to the Lord Admiral... And something else."

She moved away and a white-haired girl appeared before their eyes…

„Rosie?„ She asked in surprise, and then she saw that the girl's eyes were clouded, she was standing strangely stiff, and then she saw what had bitten into her neck. She felt an indescribable pang of conscience. This girl was good, she had never been mean or cruel to anyone, she was full of naive kindness. They didn't know each other very well, but she saw that she was better than anyone present, like night was better than day. What a horrible thing they had done. Lady Cala, seeing the girl, smiled nastily. Sole to her and gently touched her cheek with her fingers.

„It's a wonderful gift, I really thank you. she said, but Nightgale saw sadness and pain in the eyes of this girl with metallic skin. She put hand on Despara's shoulder .... For a moment I have the impression that both girls are talking without words, and then a strange grimace appeared on Despara's face and she approached Calamity . . .

„Remember that she is not your property. I am not proud of what I did, although it was necessary. So try to make sure that she does not get more harm than necessary because of you, because when her mission is over, she will be freed, so think about who she will take revenge on... „ she approached, staring at the aristocrat with those dead metal eyes, but she only smiled and climatically, so the woman added, ready. „ And do not think that some terrible accident will happen to her. Because then I will get the second device and this time I will attach it to you, do you understand?" when she said this, honest horror appeared on Lady Cala's face. Then the cat woman turned and looked at Lady Ka, who simply threw a mind control bracelet at them.

„Being around her was creepy enough as it was."

She wanted to say something, to somehow comfort the girl, but how could she do that when she was co-responsible for her suffering? She was already opening her mouth to say a few words, but then came an unimaginable pain, and she fell to her knees.

Captain Blazebringer detected the massive ship leaving Etheria's orbit. Sure, compared to the void galleon it was a mere insect, but it still piqued his interest. He immediately traced its trajectory and felt confused. He wondered for a moment where it had gone, then began searching through his memory records and understood the purpose of that warship.

„We are beginning a hard acceleration. Destination Xadia.„ He announced to his crew... They were not many, and truth be told, he did not even need them. But they made things easier... And thanks to them, being slowly absorbed by this ship was almost bearable. Almost… But he accepted his suffering, for it was the price of the path he was following. He was one of the last knights of eternity, perhaps the last, and it was on his shoulders that they would save the universe... Even if he had to cause the deaths of millions.

But he had a better idea… Albeit a very risky one.

Herold slept dreaming of an eternal, insatiable Hunger. All of her components were hungry… But it was a permanent state. She knew that it would never be satiated, unless… It was a part of the thoughts that were inaccessible to her. However, she knew that everything was for the purpose of satisfying an insatiable desire. Recently, however, she too began to feel new desires. Certain memories returned. They spun in her mind and in those not fully developed minds of her components. It was a strange feeling, almost painful. However, she could not get it out of her consciousness. She had to do something about it.

She left a few small spy components in orbit where she was supposed to arrive, which were to observe what was happening there. They couldn't see much, but they would at least allow her to control interplanetary traffic. She had just sensed something leaving orbit, first a giant warship, and then a large group of ships. She reached there with her mind and sensed them. And only one of them, but the other one too! The other one, the ones she had given her name. Yes, she had once had a name! She had been... someone. True, for a very short time, but she had been. She felt an overwhelming desire to go after them... But that was against the will of the Swarm... Or maybe... Maybe she could convince the Swarm to let her go after that ship? She contacted the semi-divine consciousness and waited for a response... To her surprise, she received permission. At first she wondered why, then she was shown Where the ship was going and she learned why this place was so important… She agreed and Split off from the main part of the swarm and flew in that direction to a place called Xadia …
