Taming a wild Magicat

by Shr00mPikmin

Summary

The Horde has been an problem since they first started to be active as they desire power.
The kingdom alliance; where most of the six kingdoms were together to combat against the greater threat - Hordak and his forces. This includes Halfmoon kingdom.

Halfmoon kingdom has recently celebrated the birth of C'yra, Princess of Halfmoon, of Queen Leona and Queen Calliopra. However, things has taken a turn that impact everything including a lone Big jungle Lynx who's lives in the deeper parts of the jungle (further out than The Whispering Woods)

Destined at Birth

In the heart of Halfmoon, under the watchful glow of the twin moons that illuminated the night, Queen Leona and Queen Calliopra engaged in an earnest conversation about the future of their kingdom. The air was filled with an undercurrent of anticipation, as the impending birth of their daughter, weighed their discussion with both hope and concern.

"Leona, do you think our daughter will inherit the same affinity for magic that runs in our blood?" Calliopra's voice held a note of curiosity, her gaze alight with the excitement of impending parenthood.

Leona's hand rested gently on her wife's near rounded stomach, a tender gesture that conveyed both reassurance and shared enthusiasm. "I believe she will, my love. The magic of Halfmoon flows through her veins, and our guidance will shape her into a formidable force for good."

As she spoke, the queen's hazel eyes shone with an unwavering determination, her unspoken promise to protect and nurture their child evident in every impassioned word. The room they occupied, adorned with vibrant tapestries depicting tales of ancient Magicats and intricate symbols of arcane knowledge, served as a tangible reflection of their rich heritage.

"I long for our daughter to grow up knowing the legacy of our people, to embrace her abilities with pride," Leona continued, her voice laced with a blend of reverence and anticipation. "The unity of our kingdom rests not only on the strength of our magic, but also on the wisdom we impart to Catra."

Calliopra's smile illuminated the dimly lit chamber, casting a warmth that rivalled the gentle radiance of the moons outside. "I have no doubt that she will carry the legacy of Halfmoon with grace and power. Our daughter is destined for greatness, guided by the love of her mothers."

Their exchange was underscored by the weight of the kingdom's expectations and their unwavering determination to shape a future filled with hope and prosperity for their daughter. As night wore on and the moons merited their ascent, the royal pair embraced the silent promise hidden within their shared gaze – a vow to stand as stalwart guardians of the kingdom and as devoted parents to the future heir of Halfmoon.

A few months later:

Queen Calliopra lay on the ornate bed, her hand tightly clasped in Queen Leona's. The room was filled with an air of tension and anticipation, as the royal couple awaited the arrival of their long-awaited child. Sweat glistened on Calliopra's brow, and beads of moisture clung to her hair, which was a wild mass of untamed curls framing her determined face.

Her breaths were deep and rhythmic, a testament to her fortitude as she laboured through the pains of childbirth. Queen Leona's eyes never strayed from her wife, her gaze a mix of concern and unwavering support. Queen Calliopra eyes pulled back, each wave of pain comes and goes each time there's contraction.

Amidst the quiet fervour, the air seemed to shimmer with an ethereal glow, as if laden with unseen enchantment that permeated the chamber. The moment of destiny was nigh, heralded by a soft, otherworldly hum that filled the space, enveloping the two queens in a cocoon of magic.

Moments bled into eternity and vice versa until finally, a sonorous cry pierced the air, breaking the mystical stillness. A cry that bore the weight of ancient prophecies and whispered promises of the future. Queen Calliopra's exhaustion was forgotten as tears of joy streamed down her cheeks, mirroring the unbridled elation in Leona’s eyes.

As the attendants cleaned and swaddled the baby, a small, delicate birthmark caught Leona's eye. A constellation of stars seemed to span the child's collarbone, an ethereal and mesmerising sight.

‘Your majesties, are you ready to see her?’

‘Yes’ Leona said with some uncertainty as her hands were shaking. Calliopra hands went over Leona’s as she said ‘it’s okay my love, she won’t bite’

They both laugh before the midwives gently placed the swaddled infant in Calliopra's arms, and as she cradled her daughter, a wave of profound warmth and purpose washed over her. Straight away she noticed how adorable her feline features were. Soft peach-fuzz fur covering and tan-skinned colour all over the body. Including light brown horizontal markings on her tiny arms. C’yra was looking for something to hold on to until Calliopra pinkie was grabbed.

"You're wrapped around her little finger already, I see," Leona teased affectionately.

"She has your strength, my dear. And your courage," Leona murmured, her fingers lingering on the mark. "Just like her mothers." Calliopra found her wife's tenderness amusing. She felt something unearth the baby, so when she unwrapped the new-born to check this out, they were both surprised to see a small dark brown tail. The cutest thing in the world.

A tender smile graced Calliopra's lips. "What shall we name her?"

Leona's gaze drifted to the sparkling moonstone pendant hanging from her neck. "C'yra. Princess C'yra of Halfmoon. It suits her, don't you think?"

Calliopra's heart swelled with love as she nodded. "It's perfect. Our little C'yra."

In the tender moments that followed, nestled in the protective cocoon of her mothers' love, It was Leona turned to hold her child, while she lifted up C’yra to see her daughter, in front of Calliopra bed. As she carefully eyes the kitten, their eyes are slowly fluttering open for the first time. It shocked Leona and Calliopra noticed this.

‘What’s wrong?’ asked Calliopra.

‘Nothing isn’t wrong, C’yra just opened her eyes and I’m surprised that’s all, I will show you.’

‘She has taken a part from each of us literally’

‘Yeah you’re right dear, and it's kind of unique’

‘ Heterochromia can be common among our people, however it isn’t in royalty, it can pop up through generations especially first born.’

‘I always forget that you’re the clever one, Calliopra.’

A squeaky Meow interrupted them, followed by small crying. This signalled Calliopra to pull open her hospital gown.

She quickly said to Leona, ‘I needed to be bared so I can nurse her, pass her here’, Leona couldn’t help but smirk at the comment before she carefully passed her daughter to her wife. Leona continued to stand by the bed until she moved and sat onto the chair right near the bed and watched the special moment of her family unfold.

Calliopra held her kitten close and laughed softly as C’yra in her arms flexed her tiny claws into her chest in a motion like she was kneading dough. Content purrs could be heard from both the tiny kitten and the mother.

Leona’s hand traced the birthmark, her touch gentle yet filled with reverence. “She carries the legacy of our kingdom within her,” she murmured, her voice a hushed caress, echoing the solemnity of the moment.

Calliopra’s eyes shone with pride and a tender, fierce love. “She is the embodiment of our hopes, our dreams, and the future of Halfmoon,” she whispered, her words infused with unwavering faith in their daughter’s destined path.

Their bond with C'yra was sealed in that heartbeat of shared awe and reflection. The princess was a living testament to the union of their love, a union that had blossomed amidst hope and forged an unbreakable bond.

The ethereal stillness of the chamber was interrupted by delicate, muffled coos emanating from the tiny princess. Her eyes, wide and inquisitive, seemed to hold within them the wisdom of ancient lore and the untamed vigour of a creature at one with nature.

Unbeknownst to them, a future of unforeseen turmoil and tempests awaited young Princess C'yra. Her fate intertwined with another child, an unexpected arrival from a distant realm, bound to become an integral part of her life and destiny.

Later that evening:

In the Fright Zone, Hordak was hard at work on his latest project. As the leader of the Evil Horde, he was always looking for ways to increase his power and conquer new territories. He had been so focused on his work that he didn't even notice when a strange portal suddenly opened up in front of him.

But then, something caught his attention. A small bundle had been left behind by the portal. As he approached it, he realised that it was a baby. A baby girl, with bright blue eyes and a tuft of blonde hair on her head. She must have been around 2 years old at least - from what he knows about humans' growth span. Hordak was taken aback. He had never seen a baby before, let alone one that had appeared out of nowhere.

He picked up the baby and examined her. She seemed unharmed and was sleeping peacefully. Hordak couldn't understand how a baby could have ended up in the Fright Zone. He looked around, but there was no one else in sight. He was about to dismiss the whole thing as some strange occurrence when he heard a voice behind him.

'Hordak, I've sensed something just now and - oh is that a child?' the voice asked. Hordak turned around to see Shadow Weaver, his second-in-command, standing there as she came forward toward the two with a curious expression behind the mask.

'This child, an inconvenience to my work,' Hordak replied, still holding the baby in his arms. 'She appeared out of nowhere and I don't have time for it.'

Shadow Weaver stepped closer and examined the baby. 'She seems to have some sort of magical aura around her,' she said. 'She has promised Hordak and I don't say this lightly, we shall keep her and build her up.'

Hordak didn’t object, and he waved his hand to signalled her to leave. As Shadow weaver left, she whispered to the child, ‘Adora, that’s what I shall call you.’ As she walked down the hallway, Shadow Weaver thought to herself, ‘Perhaps she is a gift from the universe.'

In the following days at the kingdom of Halfmoon, the palace thrummed with anticipation as the kingdom prepared for the princess's official ritual, a grand celebration to welcome C'yra into the world.

Courtiers fluttered about, draping the halls in vibrant banners and adorning every corner with flowers and glowing crystals. Musicians rehearsed lilting melodies, and chefs prepared sumptuous feasts fit for royalty.

As the sun dipped below the horizon, the atmosphere crackled with expectancy, and the palace courtyard became an enclave of revelry. Guests from far and wide arrived, bedecked in their finest attire, as the air filled with laughter and music.

Amidst the celebration, Queen Leona and Queen Calliopra proudly presented baby C'yra to their people, each step forward met with resounding cheers and well wishes.

"Long live Princess C'yra!" the crowd chanted, their voices harmonizing with the melody of joy.

Leona raised her arms, her gaze sweeping over the gathering. "Thank you, all of you, for joining us in this momentous occasion," she announced, her voice carrying to every corner of the courtyard. "Today, we not only celebrate the birth of our daughter but also the bright future that she represents for Halfmoon."

Calliopra stepped forward, her eyes sparkling with pride. "We vow to nurture her, to guide her, and to ensure that she upholds the values of our kingdom with wisdom and compassion."

The crowd erupted in applause, the air pulsing with excitement and hope for the future.

The Dreaded Decision

Chapter Summary

> Halfmoon Kingdom hosted the kingdom alliance meeting, as there is a recent development that needed to be address. Unbeknownst to the gathering, a sinister parallel meeting convened amidst the shadowy fringes - The Horde.

3 years later.

Queen Leona and Queen Calliopra welcomed Queen Angella and King Micah to the grand council chamber of Halfmoon. They were there early and it would give them time to have a cheerful catch up. The atmosphere buzzed with a mix of formal pleasantries and an underlying tension that mirrored the gravity of their discussions.

Angella's voice rang out, warm yet tinged with concern, "Leona, Calliopra, it's been too long since we last convened. Your presence brings light to our shadows. Also - Where's the young kitten?." Leona stood by her wife as she led her arm around her mate back and right onto her waist whilst they stood chatting to the Brightmoon royals. Calliopra met Angella with a smile, 'Oh our kitten keeps us busy, she just started this phrase of hers when she would pounce on everything, including our staff unexpectedly. Otherwise she is well, trying her best to figure out if she has magic within herself with some help from her Auntie Luna lately. We couldn't bring her with us as she needed to rest while she was unwell.'

After a few chats here and there. Micah gave Leona a gift. 'Here's a gift from us and on behalf of Brightmoon, for C'yra. This gift is for C'yra becoming a princess - upcoming coronation event .' Leona gaze met Micah and Angella's with a regal nod as she said with humour, "Thank you, I wondered if it's a weapon or maybe a potion for C'yra to get knocked out for bedtime as we need more sleep.’ Calliopra playfully elbowed her mate as she continued ‘Thank you, we can’t wait to see what it is.’

Calliopra and Leona sat, enthralled, as Micah regaled them with tales of his and Angella's two-year-old daughter, Glimmer. 'She's been showing her magical abilities recently,' Micah explained, a proud twinkle in his eye.

'Just the other day, Angella and I were playing with her in the living room when suddenly, she just disappeared!'

Calliopra's eyes widened. 'She what?'

'Yes, one moment she was there, and the next, she was gone. Angella and I were terrified at first, but then we heard her giggling from the other room. When we went to check, there she was, playing with her toys as if nothing had happened.'

Leona's mouth hung open. 'That's incredible! I've never heard of a magical ability like that before.'

Micah nodded. 'Neither had we, until now. Glimmer seems to have a knack for teleportation. She can appear and disappear at will, and we never know where she'll turn up next.'

They all laughed until they heard a knock on the door disturbed them as a guard told them that the rest of the officials from the other kingdom had arrived and were outside the door. As soon as the door opened, the room was quickly packed. The room was full of royal rulers and their advisors, generals of armies and there was a council of village leaders who are representatives of each kingdom that works between higher up and relay information to the public. Queen Leona's eyes scanned the room, her expression a mix of determination and worry, "Indeed, we must address the looming threat at hand."

King Micah, ever the voice of reason, interjected, "The Horde's proposed negotiation raises a dire question for us all. Do we seek peace through compromise, or do we stand firm in our principles, whatever the cost?"

The king of Salimeas spoke first, his voice cold and regal. 'This enemy must be taken seriously. They have already proven to be a formidable force. Look what they did recently to my boarders, they tried to take control of our seas, where our water is and where we fish. I don't want my young child, Mermistra to have to go through this war when she take over my ruling for whatever reason" An advisor from the Kingdom of Snow, suggested an idea ' Clearly those from The Horde, don't know how it works negotiate a trade deal. Maybe making a proposal to The Horde in exchange for what they have would ease things off?.' Adviser Adderfang of Halfmoon: "Excuse my first interjection, but waiting for others to decide our fate has only brought us suffering. Halfmoon cannot afford to be complacent any longer."

The King of Salimeas responded with "How can I make a deal with those who have hurt my people and have no understanding of honour or peace? No, we will not negotiate with them. He slammed his hand to illustrate how much he was astounded by what he just heard. Castaspella chimes in, 'We cannot simply ignore the possibility of peace,' she argued. 'We must at least hear what the Horde has to offer. If there is a chance to end this conflict without further bloodshed, we must take it.'

Queen Calliopra: "We adamantly oppose such negotiations. The Horde's intentions are clear, and we refuse to entertain false promises of peace. Our Kingdom stands firm in demanding complete autonomy." A Dryl council member commented, her expression unyielding, 'We - our kingdom are still mourning the loss of our king and queen, with this our resources are limited. Including how we are prioritising the safety of our princess who is still a child herself and our people. We don't have much fire power to lend in this current time.' Queen Calliopra shook her head, her eyes blazing with determination. 'We have already shed too much blood in this war,' she declared. 'We cannot let the Horde manipulate us with false promises. We must stand firm in our principles and fight for our autonomy. For the sake of our kingdom and our children's future'

Angella said with sadness, I’m sorry to hear the current struggles the Kingdom of Dryl are still having since that awful day. Brightmoon does have resources to send over to your kingdom if you ever require it. The Dryl council member smiled at this. The Kingdom of Snow advisor coughs at this. He stared at everyone before he said, ‘ There is no way to say this, but the kingdom of Snow has decided recently through votes among the council as well as royalty that they will become a neutral kingdom during this war. It became immediate effect once it was disclosed in this meeting with the other kingdom.’

Silence fell in the room.

Queen Leona held well with her poker face, however her body betrayed her; her tail slowly swished from left to right while her claws unsheathed unconsciously right into the wooden table. She then realised this and tried to play it cool by softly tapping but Calliopra could see the pain she felt at the Kingdom of Snow discussion. Queen Calliopra had a thought. Her soft slightly fluffy tails twirls around the slim dark brown tails of her wife. Leona breathing hitched at the surprised touch, it felt calming. She continued to look at her notes that she had brought with her to calm down. Soon, she tugged Calliopra’s tail to let her know she was okay now.

King Micah noticed that the silence had been deafening after a minute, he needed to reassure all the parties and focused back on what’s at hand. King Micah nodded understandingly. 'I respect your decision, as every kingdom has the right to make their own choices. Just know that Brightmoon will always be willing to help and offer support in any way we can.' He turned to the other advisors, waiting for their response to the news. Some nodded in agreement, while others remained silent.

The conversation had shifted to The Horde army capabilities and ways to combat against the Horde forces. A princess nodded in agreement. 'Their strength lies in their ability to manipulate the machinery - similar to the Kingdom of Dryl but something about the Horde is way different, different to what we had ever seen before. In addition, they always seem to have many, many soldiers - especially one that appeared young. In conclusion, we must be cautious.'

Lieutenant of Salimas stood up with a serious expression, ‘In all the time I have trained and served for my kingdom, I have never seen such machinery that is so advanced that the Horde has got. Their weapons and their so-called ‘bots’, my men did well, thank god. However I felt that if we didn't have our magic and enough men, things could have been different when they tried to invade us, as the king had mentioned earlier.’

The lieutenant continued, ‘before I finish and sit back, here’s some research into the weapons and their bots and their soldiers, including the illustrations on their bots designs and so on. We had help from the engineers from Dryl and this is what we got. Useful to keep. The sounds of paper scattered on the table, so each person can take one.
While people read the report, a council member started a new point. ‘Going back to what the princess had said. There have been rumours of children going missing during village attacks as well as kingdom invasions, but we have yet to conclude this fully since it takes time and investment to investigate the trueness of this. There has been conflict among the people asking for actions while there is uncertainty with the council groups who have dismissed this as hearsay or propaganda. Just so they don't want to cause panic and give parents hopes that their children are actually alive.’ Micah grips Angella’s hand while hearing this awful information.

A Mystacor head mage spoke up, his tone confident. 'But we have the advantage of surprise. That surprise is magic - mostly the powerful mages from Mystacor mages and Halfmoon. Mystacor troops are well-trained in the art of magic. I feel that with our power combined with the other kingdoms, we would be unique in horsepower and that makes our defences strong. I feel like we can defeat them. Once we have defeated them, we can look into the missing children.'
The other general, chimed in, his voice stern. "We must also consider the worst case scenario, including the possibility of a traitor among us. It can happen. We cannot afford to let our guard down.'

The kingdom of snows advisor scoffed at that. 'A traitor? That's preposterous. We may be neutral but our loyalty to peace is unquestionable.'
A council member commented, ‘Yes I’ve heard stories of mercenaries that would shapeshift into anyone, even using voice mimicry. However I personally haven't yet seen an individual of this, nor the species of this ability in my life.’
Queen Leona gave the advisor a cold look. 'We cannot rule out any possibilities, we must be prepared for anything.' The kingdom of snow advisor grudgingly nodded, his arrogance momentarily subdued.

The meeting continued, with no clear resolution in sight yet, a subtle glint caught Queen Leona's eye. She could see something moving above the ceiling, right in the corner by a decorative pillar. It was translucent, to a naked eye it’s invisible, but to feline eyes, it's somewhat detectable.
She discreetly signalled to Queen Calliopra and Adviser Adderfang, She unsheathed claws 3 times in a row and moved her left ear. A silent warning that their words may not be as private as they believed. The discussion deepened, voices rising and falling like waves crashing against the shore. Halfmoon's dissent echoed through the chamber, a lone voice of defiance in a sea of cautious diplomacy. Just then, a small mechanical whirr revealed the spy bot hidden among the magicat’s hearing. Adviser Adderfang looked at both Queens. Queen Leona's muscles tensed, her hand instinctively moving closer to the hilt of her blade. Queen Calliopra's eyes narrowed, a silent command passing between them.

In a swift motion, Queen Leona intercepted the bot, it tried to fly away but she used blunt force with the edge of her sword that caused the bot to crash right in the middle of the table. Adderfang slashes his claw through the lens of the spy bot. They hoped that it stopped it from relaying its gathered information.
The room fell silent, faces were shocked by what just happened in a spiky second. The tension is thick in the air. Angella's gaze flickered between the Magicats of Halfmoon, a subtle acknowledgment of their deft handling of the situation. "Leona, Calliopra and Adderfang, your vigilance is commendable." Queen Calliopra responded "It seems the Horde's eyes are upon us even now. We must remain vigilant."

In the end, each leader grappling with the weight of their decisions, and the looming spectre of conflict. The fate of other kingdoms, including Half Moon hung in the balance, its future intertwined with the decisions made in this chamber.

Two things were made clear;

1) Half Moon would pull out of the alliance and focus on their people but this doesn't mean they wouldn't assist when needed.

2) Hordak now knows that the kingdoms rejected his proposal by how he demonstrated clearly that wasn't what he seeks.

In the Fright Zone, Hordak slams his fist on the arm side of his metal throne. All while he laughs after seeing the whole video recording of the so-called 'Kingdom Alliance'. 'Is this is all they got?.' Shadow Weaver, her voice like a dark melody, added, "We must break down the alliance. Mystacor falsely claims about their so-called powerful mages. However it's the magicats that we should be more concerned about. Magicat's strong army that has fighting ability mixed with their ancient magic is a threat we cannot ignore. We must act swiftly, starting off with Half Moon, the strongest kingdom to fall first." Hordark's red eyes narrowed when Shadow Weaver mentioned how powerful these so-called magicats were.

Hordak walked up to her and told her, 'Shadow Weaver, you have shown promise from what you had done so far in the Horde. You know more than anyone about magic, with this in mind, I will let you plan out our invasion, and you will lead the fall of Halfmoon.’

‘That is good to hear, Hordak.’ Shadow Weaver bowed at him and awaited for anything else he may say. He quietly laughed to himself about the pathetic beings, as he walked to his radio system, and turned his intercom on." All Generals and lieutenants prepare to meet in 10 mins in the war room.’ Hordak then turned to Shadow Weaver and said chillingly, "We shall crush their resistance once and for all to show the rest of the kingdoms of this wasted planet that we are serious, you are dismissed."

Shadow Weaver bowed in obedience as plans were set in motion. She decided to check on her dear Adora before she attended the upcoming meeting.

-10 mins later-

As the generals and lieutenants gathered in the war room; General Scorion - a traitor of the Scorpion kingdom, lieutenant Apex - a ruthless brawn when it comes to villages, Senior Boarus - cruel and cunning when planning out military strategies. And finally there was Ghetuku, a shapeshifter mercenary who only cared about the pay out.
Then there was Shadow Weaver, She was a dark sorceress who left Brightmoon to search for greater power and Hordak's second-in-command.
Hordak started the meeting by showing the recorded spy video of their enemy meeting to his subordinates from earlier.

'First,' Hordak began, 'Halfmoon is a Mid-sized but highly dense kingdom, we also know that they had withdrawn their support for being part of the Kingdom Alliance. This gives us an opening to act now.' General Scorion added, "Yes Hordak, especially when one of our spy bot has confirmed the layouts of lands as well as the castle where the heart of Queens of Halfmoon’s kingdom is.

We must act swiftly and annihilate their forces before they have a chance to retaliate.

‘What other information do we have on the Queens of Halfmoon? Hordak has asked all his subordinates. Senior Boarus got up as he looked at his notes, ‘From our record, we believe that both sides of the queen’s family ain’t really big due to either death from war, were banished or they had passed away due to natural causes. The only relative is a sister called Luna from Queen Leona's side. However we had finally confirmed that they do indeed have a child, a daughter less than 4 years old.’

'Lieutenant Apex spoke up, 'She is a promising mage, someone who would be troublesome. From our intel, she would be travelling back soon from completing her studies, for the royal celebration of her niece. We should take her out of the equation.'

Shadow Weaver was about to comment, she saw Ghetuku smirk as his body language suggested he had a question, ‘You have something to say, Ghetuku?’
‘For once I do, and it’s something that is important. ‘So what about the small magi-brat? The daughter of the Queens?’ Shadow Weaver thought before she responded, ‘ It most likely that their daughter would inherit some abilities, including the connection with their runestone. She would certainly be an asset to us. I’ve suggested that we don’t kill the child, and instead kidnap and convert her into our ranks. Similar to another child we have under our wing, Princess Scorpia.’

Ghetuku hissed at this, ‘you’re no fun.' I can’t complain as at least there would be some bloodshed.’

General Scorion, commented ‘speaking of runestones, the only person who seems to have access to this and who actually benefits is you, Shadow Weaver. Not the horde. It’s bullshit if you think I would add anymore targets on my back if you want me or my team to look out for a shiny rock.’
Shadow Weaver responded, 'Because, General Scorion, the power of the runestones is not just for my benefit. That ‘shiny rock’ is more than that. It is for the benefit of all of us in the Horde.-'

Hordak put his hand up to stop Shadow Weaver speaking. Cold red eyes stared coldly at General Scorion before he monotone voice was the only one being heard in the room.

‘With Shadow Weaver’s ability to access the true power of these runestones, she had well demonstrated that these powers do well in our favour and in our arsenal. With more runestones, we can conquer more lands, defeat our enemies, and become even stronger. And as for risking your life or your team, that is the price we must pay for greatness. Are you not a soldier of the Horde? Are you not willing to sacrifice for our cause?' Hordak's words were persuasive, and General Scorion couldn't help but feel a sense of annoyance and loyalty to the Horde. But still, he couldn't shake off the feeling that Shadow Weaver was manipulating them all.

General Scorion quickly clarified that he was not questioning Hordak's decision or the way of the Horde, but he was simply curious about the runestones and their purpose. He also pointed out that Shadow Weaver's motives seemed to be solely focused on gaining power for herself. Shadow Weaver ignored part of General Scorion comment and looked at Hordak to signalled him to progress forward to the next subject.

Hordak highlighted a different subject, ‘'we must assess our resources and strengths. What new weapons have we acquired?'

Shadow Weaver went forward, a sly smile on her face. 'We have developed a new batch of Horde robots, stronger and more efficient than our previous ones. And we have also enlisted the help of skilled sorcerers who were banished from Mystacor for practising dark magic, they are very keen to get onto the field.’ Hordak nodded in approval. 'Excellent. And what about our army? Are they prepared for battle?'

'Of course, my lord,' Senior Boarus, one of the lieutenants, replied. 'Our soldiers have been training tirelessly and are ready to fight for the honour of the Horde.'
Senior Boarus nodded.

'Firstly, there is an upcoming event in Halfmoon, where roughly half of their people will be within the castle radius. I feel that we must use a Five-pronged attack. Two for the villages and two for the cities within the castle lands and finally the one for the Castle. For the armies that ain't infiltrating the castle, they would arrive onto the land in invisibility. And will await the single before they attack in full show. This will be one of our element of surprised.'

'Second part is before we start the invasion, we would need to send a special team made out of soldiers and mages, to infiltrate the castle. To knock out the royal guards and mages, then some we impersonate as soldiers and citizens as the others plant bombs. Once all is set, the bomb's explosion will not only overwhelm and confuse the magicats, but it will act as a signal to the rest of the other teams to start attacking the other areas. The attacks on the villages and the cities will act like a diversion, hopefully pulling away from the castle.'

'Meanwhile, once the other army had success with destroying the villages/ cities as well as killing the magicat soldiers that had come. They would come as reinforcement to the castle as that is the main symbol of their people as well as the kingdom; once we destroy the castle, the magicats would fall.'

'Finally, after the forces have slaughtered a high density of their army, kidnap the princess and obtain the runestone, we should use the bots to carry on fighting, to give our soldiers time to pull back before we completely destroy the kingdom from either missals to finish off the castle and the inner radius of the kingdom or use some sort of magic.'
Hordak was impressed by Senior Boarus ideas. He turned to another peer, 'And you, lieutenant Apex, will be in charge of creating diversion plans for the army that are spread out to the villages and cities to draw their attention away from our infiltration team.'

Lieutenant Apex nodded eagerly, 'I’m confident in myself to improvise, I don’t need no plan, Hordak.' Hordak looked at General Scorion, ‘General Scorion, you will go to our weapon makers and commissioned them a series of bombs that would destroy building structures and a one that required a big explosion.’ General scorion hissed with excitement.Hordak then turned to Shadow Weaver, 'Summarise your role in this again, Shadow Weaver?' 'I will deal with the mages at the castle and look for the location of their runestone. In addition to protecting our troops from any magical attacks,' Shadow Weaver replied confidently.

The rest of them agreed through claps as all has been discussed. Hordak nodded in approval, 'Excellent. It will take time to gather our arsenal together including the making of the bombs. We will finalise our plan. We will not rest until Half Moon is in rubles..'

As the day drew to a close, with the setting sun casting its golden hues. Leona was on her own, overlooking the lands of Halfmoon, on her balcony that was part of their bedroom. She needed fresh air after spending most of the day dealing with the meeting with the other kingdom that ended with a sword through a spy bot. A sigh came out of her mouth as her palm turned white from gripping hard on the handrail.

Calliopra came to the bedroom as she knew this is where her wife would be. Leona was still facing away from her without realising she was there. Soft quiet footsteps went up toward Leona before Calliopra was behind her right side. She decided to get her attention by tapping her shoulder with her tail.

'Calliopra, I didn't hear you come in,' Leona said, trying to keep her voice calm. Still facing the view of the skyline. 'That's because you were too busy brooding on the balcony,' Calliopra retorted, her tail flicking against her mate's back to show some bit of playfulness. Leona sighed and turned to face her wife fully. Her fur was ruffled and her eyes were narrowed in anger. 'I'm sorry, love. I just can't shake this feeling of unease. I can't help thinking that the Horde will come to us. The horde is like no other force we have come up against. All this is weighing heavily on my mind.'

Calliopra's expression softened, but her tone remained firm. 'I know, Leona. But we still have allies and we have made some progress with planning to get rid of the Horde, and punish Hordak for his war crimes.' Calliopra's comment went over Leona as she had doubts. Leona walked over to the side of their bed, sat on the edge. She ran a hand through her hair before her hand motioned her mate to join her by her side on the bed. Leona's serious glaze stared back at Calliopra's. Her breath hitched as she quietly expressed, 'Do you remember before we had C'yra, that we were sending out scouts over the land to find a suitable place that acts like a new home for our people in case we may need to evacuate?'. Calliopra nodded at this. She continued to listen 'I feel like we must consider now is the time for the contingency plan to happen.'

Calliopra shook her head. "What? Leave our home that C'yra has barely known or where generations of my family have been, Leona. I won't let the Horde or that evil shit Hordak take away our pride, our culture and our livelihood that we, magicats has built.' Leona continued to be silent. Calliopra could see her chest fallen expression all over her face because what she was saying is true and something needs to happen. Leona's shoulders slumped in defeat. 'I just hate the thought of sending our soldiers to their deaths, my soldiers that I've trained and look over. What if they take our Tiger eyes runestone? And what about the innocent magicats caught in the crossfire? Or if something happened to us and Luna, leaving C'yra all alone and -' At this point, Leona ear picks up an unexpected sound.

'Shhhhhhhhhhhh'

Leona realised she was on her back on their king size bed. Her wife was saddling her, Calliopra index finger was on her own lips to show to stop talking before she softly laid that same finger on Leona lips. Then Calliopra's hand slowly moved from the lips to cupped her mate’s cheek. Leona hand’s went over hers as she got closer and wrapped her other arm around Calliopra’s back, pulling her into a tight embrace. Leona whispers to the soft black pointed ears.

'I hate the idea of leaving, my love. But if we have to do what's best for our kingdom, preserving as much of our people as we can, to rebuild our kingdom from scratch, then that's what we will do. I will do my utmost best to protect our family, okay my love.' Calliopra nodded whilst her head was on her mate's shoulders, feeling a mix of emotions swirling inside her. She knew Leona was right, but she still couldn't shake the feeling of guilt and fear.

Suddenly, Leona's lips were on hers, kissing her deeply and passionately. She roughly flipped them over so it was Leona who’s on top. Calliopra responded eagerly, her arms wrapping around Leona's neck as they moved together in a dance of desire on the sheets. Their hands roamed over each other's bodies, pulling at the delicate fabric of their gowns and clawing at each other's skin. Leona dominated the other, her strength and power evident in the way she held her wife down on the bed.

Calliopra moaned as Leona's fingers found their way to her core, sending waves of pleasure coursing through her. She reached down and grasped Leona's hard member, stroking it slowly as they continued to kiss and explore each other's bodies. The queen with the penis couldn't resist the urge any longer and she pushed inside her wife, eliciting a gasp from her. They moved together in a frantic rhythm, their bodies slick with sweat and their eyes locked in a heated gaze.

Their lovemaking was a mix of anger and passion, their bodies moving in sync as they released all their pent-up frustrations and desires. They were lost in each other, the only thing that mattered in that moment. Their moans filled the room as they reached the peak of their passion, their release washing over them like a tidal wave. And in that moment, all their worries about the war and their kingdom vanished, as they clung to each other, knowing that they were making the best decision for Halfmoon, together.

'I never knew you had such a strong and passionate side, my love,' purred the taller magicat queen, running her fingers through her lover's hair.
The other queen chuckled, nuzzling into the soft fur of her lover's chest. 'And I never knew you had such a cunning and strategic mind, my dear.'

They both laughed and kissed, their bodies still intertwined. As they lay there, basking in the afterglow of their lovemaking, the magicat queens of Halfmoon knew that their bond had grown even stronger and that they were ready to face whatever challenges lay ahead, together.

Princess C’yra!

Chapter Summary

> Amidst the jubilation of C'yra's coronation in the Halfmoon kingdom, unseen eyes silently observing from afar, unnoticed by the revellers.

Somewhere between the battlement and the flanking tower, behind the back of the Half moon castle.

A portal opened and around 20 shadows managed to pass through, right into the connecting hallway. The shadows were in fact Horde soldiers selected for infiltrating the castle, there was still one person left to come through the portal. At that moment, a duo of a soldier and a mage discovered the intruders.

When the mage was about to set the alarm, her mouth was covered by a black tentacle, and her body was wrapped in a snake like gripped by other black tentacles. The horde's shoulders looked back to see a hand was through the portal. The soldier tried to intervene to free his peer, but he was subdued by a sharp object going through his chest, he was breathing for dear life until the blade turned and pulled out, pulling his life as well. The sound of his body dropping was overshadowed by the noises of the festivities deeper in the castle.

Lieutenant Apex casually cleans the bloody blade by wiping it on the inner elbow of his sleeve, as he chilling laughs. ‘That’s one less cockroach to deal with, we are now all inside Shadow Weaver.’

The body finally came through and it was indeed Shadow Weaver. The rest of the shadows were still as they watched her pull the wrapped up mage toward the red masked mage. Before anyone said anything, She killed the mage before their eyes as another body dropped to the ground. Shadow Weaver then conjures up a spell that involves taking the life source from the dead mage and soldiers as now she was holding a dark sphere above her hand.

‘Alpha squad, come toward me as I will create a disguise covering to make you all looked like those beastly creatures...then you set out to be among them until the time comes for you to attack.’

‘Beta squad, you start to take out all mages and soldiers who’s on patrolling.’

Shadow Weaver turned as she faced the last team, where they each held duffle bags, ‘Finally, Omega squad, you shall plant as many timer bombs to hidden places that can’t be discovered within the castle.’

Before the shadow weaver finished off she said, ‘That is all, after you complete your tasks, stay within the areas you have been assigned to and wait until I give the signal.’

As the individuals scattered to many different directions. Lieutenant Apex and Shadow weaver were the only ones left. Or it seems, as there was a silhouette of a certain lizard who remained on the side. She noticed the silhouette before she stared back at the dead bodies.

Lieutenant Apex noticed this and realised the issue, ‘I will dispose of them, we can’t afford to get discovered too soon.’

He went back toward his leader as he pulled up a digital horde standard tablet; showing a hologram of the building layout.

Lieutenant Apex: ‘Can’t wait to kill as many of those animals as I can.’

Shadow weaver: ‘You are dismissed Lieutenant, make sure your radio is on low so you can reach.’

As the big menacing figure disappeared into the hallway, Shadow Weaver put her hands up. ‘I haven’t forgotten about you. You will act if our soldiers failed to catch the princess. With that, your task is to to remain hidden while watching the princess, and when the time is right - kidnap and bring her to base. In addition, If that lump (Lieutenant Apex) compromises our mission at any time due to his tendencies goes unchecked, you have my permission to kill Lieutenant Apex if necessary.'

A hiss could be heard as a response before the silhouette's eyes turned green and their whole body transformed while walking toward Shadow Weaver. They turned into a magicat soldier. They grabbed a sword that was on the ground from the dead soldier and brought it to the air as they said, 'So I'm acting like a backup soldier now. As long as I get paid extra for that plus for my end of the deal then I will happily kill anyone if it is required.' he chillingly said before he put the sword back into its scabbard from the ground and walked away.

C'yra's parents stood proudly at the centre of the grand hall in Halfmoon, surrounded by a sea of excited faces. The queens had invited a few officials, council members, community leaders, mage elders, and the rest being the public - space limited. Calliopra was stunning in her robes, she was going around to chat to her people, including children who were giving her flowers to congratulate the birth of the young princess.

Leona, in her special official robes that signal part of her commander role and royal status. She was overseeing the celebration. Luna sent a message earlier saying there is a sand storm at the Crimson Waste, this may delay her arrival to Halfmoon.' Naturally, this as well as the pending situation with the war, still made her feel on edge.

C'yra: 'Ma ma, you wanna play with me?'

Leona looked to hear where that sound came from. Until she felt something by her feet, she could see a tiny black tail peeking out of the throne chair edge. Leona pretended to not know where her kitten was until she grabbed the screaming excited bundle and put her on her shoulder, holding her there so she could see her people happy and being part of her life.

C’yra: ‘Yess ma ma, higher!.’

Mystery person: ‘Oh, this is who we’re celebrating for.’

Leona's eyes blew out as she recognised whose voice was that, before she could pinpoint where the person was, that person went in front of them and surprised them with a great huge.

Leona was taken aback. ‘Hello Luna, I see that the sand didn’t eat you up.’ C’yra at this point wasn’t sure who this person was, she was uncharacteristically quiet.

Leona, ‘My dear sister, you certainly looked good despite the sleepless nights since becoming a parent from your letters you sent.’

Luna's eyes then went over to a certain child that managed to conceal their face on their mother's head but failed with their ears and tail that failed to hide before. Luna knelt down before C’yra, who was still behind her mother’s leg.

Luna: ‘My little C’yra, why hide from your dear auntie Luna? I know it has been a while but I won’t bite.’

C’yra quietly said ‘auntie lou?’. Luna giggles at C’yra still trying to figure out how to pronounce her name.

Luna then came up and started a customary welcome with her sister, Queen Leona. C’yra now stood by Calliopra. Calliopra was stroking her daughter's wild mane as a way to comfort her as she knows that the young kitten can feel anxiety when surrounded by many people. Leona proceeds to do a physical gesture by putting her forehead to Luna’s as one hand touches behind the other head.

C’yra tugs at her mother's robes as her tail shows confusion. Calliopra explains ‘what mama just did was a gesture that is well custom in our culture. It has meanings; either to say hello, goodbye, show comfort, or if it has been long since you see them. Forehead touching on its own is fine too. You wanna try with auntie Luna?

C’yra nodded at this point, she faced back to see her mother Leona staring back as Luna went up to her, kneeling down.

C’yra slowly walked toward her auntie, and as they were doing the gesture. As her eyes drifted off as her hands went around, she thought she saw a scary figure from afar, on the far wall, just watching the whole room. Its face was red and its body was black. They looked scary as She then saw it looking at her and that was the moment C’yra went back about 2 steps onto all fours, her tail was puffed up while her ears were down. An unsettled meow came out of the small kitten.

‘Oh C’yra, you okay, my foot didn’t step on you right? Maybe it’s me? I certainly refreshed myself once I arrived before coming here?’ Luna commented to try to make the spotlight on her.

After Leona checked C’yra out and helped her up and gave her to Calliopra. She went to her sister and sniffed her randomly, and made a silly face to try to make C’yra laugh as she said to Luna ‘ Have you? clearly you missed a few spots in your fur as I got sand in my nose’

C’rya ended up giggling and feeling better as it seemed she had forgotten what had scared her. Calliopra smiled at this moment as it’s not everyday she sees Leona smiles let alone laughs.

Calliopra said ‘It is most likely that she is overwhelmed as there are many people here and very soon she needs to take her nap.’

‘That makes sense,’ Leona said. ‘Please do let one of the guards know when you leave the party.’

She then continued as she spoke to C'yra, 'hey tiger, you want see if there is a magic puppet show happening?.'

Luna butt in 'Ooooh exciting, auntie Luna will join the fun.'.

'I will remain around here; checking the space and chatting to our guests, but I will see you guys later before the fest.' Leona said, kissing her wife and child.

C'yra cried with joy before she was lifted up by Luna and sat on her hip, they waved goodbye before the three of them went away to find the show.

Leona stared back, something was missing from that first interaction between C'yra and Luna. Before her ear turned to Sir Adderfang, known to most as Adviser Adderfang, but to her, a good friend of hers since forever. They went to the centre of the party as they chatted over champagne, despite Leona's initial objection but honestly she knew she needed to relax a bit just for today.

-Later on:-

There were magicat warriors and mages still on duty; checking the perimeter of the castle and around the land. They still managed to join in the celebration by munching a few treats and having a drink of ale (allowed only for this special occasion.)

Queen Leona held her sword high, silencing all around her before she started her speech (some in magjca) . `My dear citizens, today is a joyous occasion as we celebrate the newest member of our kingdom, our beloved daughter, Princess C'yra. She has brought so much love and happiness into our lives. '

Queen Calliopra went forward to stand beside her love, tails looped together. Queen Leona stared back at her love as her arm went behind Calliopra's back, letting her know she got her.

It was Queen Calliopra turn to say something. ‘And as we celebrate this milestone, we also look towards the future with hope and excitement. Our little princess will one day grow up to be a strong and wise leader, to help out her kingdom. Part of this includes napping, since she isn’t with us at the moment.’ The room was filled with cheer and laughter.

Nearby a silence bomb began to flash continuously, then a loud explosion shook the entire palace. Magicats were running, children crying and many warriors were on high alert. The queens looked around in shock and confusion, trying to figure out what had happened.

Queen Calliopra: What was that?

Queen Leona: I don't know, but we need to make sure our daughter is safe.

Queen Calliopra nodded at this and they both realised how they needed to act fast.

The queens rushed and arrived in the hallway, near to their bed chamber. Outside the Queen’s room were an assigned magicat guard who seemed to be on guard as there was an enemy dressed in black in front of them. Queen Leona wasn’t sure what was happening from a distance since the magicat’s body language was unreadable. She decided to sneak up on the enemy and sliced through her opponent. Queen Leona was inspecting the deceased to figure out who they were. Something wasn’t right as she could sense a dark smell.

Queen Calliopra was checking on the soldier and thanking them. Queen Leona side eyed the guard as noticed how the guard was acting odd and looked scared? The soldier suggests to the queen that they should get the princess and go to a safe place.

Queen Calliopra went into their bed chamber where Princess C’yra was sleeping peacefully. She was relieved to find her unharmed, but the room rumbled from other explosions that had caused chaos and panic throughout the palace. She decided to grab some important things and stuff them into a box that soon disappeared as it was casted from her spell.

Queen Calliopra carefully picked up her daughter, blue and yellow sluggish eyes stared back.

C'yra: ma ma, is it time for me to go back to the party, I want some cake.

Calliopra: My little tiger, we have a change of plans. Me, Momma and you are gonna leave for an adventure. You gotta rest more first, go back to sleep, ma ma got you. The soft tuft from her chest as she held her daughter tight, as she fell back to sleep again.

Purrs from her daughter relieve her comfort while it contrasts with the current situation they are in. Queen Calliopra (while supporting her daughter with one arm against her torso) went back outside the nursery to see Queen Leona interacting with the soldier. Queen Leona noticed the two and spoke directly to her wife in magjca.

Queen Leona: 'Wait there with C'yra as I have a bad feeling about this soldier. Keep your guard up while I have a 'word' with him'.

The guard seemed to be unswayed by what was said, and this was evidence to what Queen Leona expected. she circled around the guard until she went in front of them with a stern look.

Queen Leona: Guard, can you tell me what I just said to Queen Calliopra just now?

Guard: With all due respect Queen, we don't have time for this, we must take the princess out of here. The guard head went to the side to address the other queen.

Guard: Queen Calliopra, make your wife see sense as we need to go now!

Queen Calliopra: Can you tell us what was said just now, soldier?

The guard's face betrayed his panic, which quickly morphed into a stern and furious countenance. Without wasting a moment, he charged towards Calliopra, intent on snatching the princess away from her.

Until he was greeted by Queen Leona in front of him again, but before he managed to kill her and her wife, the guard suddenly collapsed to the ground. His breastplate was carved in by rows of rigged lines that soon leaked blood. This was done by the fast ability of Queen Leona. Queen Leona halted and silenced Queen Calliopra's reaction as her hand held up while she knelt near the dead guard.

Queen Leona: Wait, look.’

It’s a rarity that Queen Leona does magic since she preferred fighting and relying on her strength. But even Calliopra gets surprised from time to time when she sees her wife's ability that doesn’t show her as a low beginner mage.

Queen Leona used the blood from the guard to write some magic words onto her hand before she conducted a spell of trueness.

In front of them, the dead body of the magicat guard soon dispersed all the dark aura smoke from it’s body but remained surrounded in the purple smoke that smelled like dead flesh. Until the smoke disappeared, leaving behind the body that was of a random human.

Queen Calliopra: What…. Who… what is the meaning of this?! Queen Calliopra was shocked and shaken by how the imposter in front of her wasn’t a magicat after all. Many questions ran through her mind; How did he get inside the castle, When was he the guard to the princess, what if….’ She was distracted by how her wife moved the body to turn it to its front and her voice called her out.

Queen Leona: hmmm, it seems that this is all that second in command doing. I've heard of her use of dark magic being powerful, but I never realised it can be this among things. My eyes didn't notice anything was off until my sense of smell was intratted by a dark aura coming off from the soldier. I didn't want to alarm you my dear while at the same time, let him know I was onto him. Hence why I had to play along until I was sure enough he was indeed a imposter..'

Her claw finger pointed to the Horde symbol on the back of the all black covert mission uniform. This part was the one thing that stood out to the shocked queen faces.

Queen Leona got up, and went toward her wife and child. C'yra was shaken from another noise of a bomb from nearby. It didn't last long as she was comforted by Leona petting on her head. They still remained there until one of them had to break the ice of the current situation.

Queen Leona: It is most likely that the horde also has those mercenaries who can transform into anyone- the same ones that were mentioned back in the alliance meeting ages ago. Combined with their disguised soldiers and mages, it would make it easy to ambush our soldiers or any innocent magicat citizens.' The magicat remains still in thought with closed eyes while in front of her mate.

Queen Calliopra: Shit; it seems that for once the horde has gotten over us.'

Queen Leona: The Horde hasn't gotten over us completely, there is still time to turn this around. First, we must find Luna, Applefang and the remaining soldiers back in the hall so we can make a plan.'

Panic spread like wildfire through the kingdom as chaos erupted. Words have spread out throughout the cities and villages about the attack invasion by the Horde. Within the castle, there were some guards fighting against their ‘own’, dark mages attacking Luna and magicat mages, while on another side of the room, there were citizens who were assisting the guards and helping others to leave to a safe point.

A group hidden behind a huge ceiling rumble in the corner, were relieved to see their royals haven't been killed. There were soldiers, performers, council members, mothers with their children, older folks and healers who assisted with the injured who made up the group so far. After words were exchanged, everyone became aware that this was a planned attack by the horde and that this place isn't the only one being targeted.

They were horrified and saddened by these high scale attacks. Luna and a few mages made a protective sphere surrounding them; the area in a disguise of rumbles. Only magicats can see through the disguise and access it. There were a few warriors who brought back food, weapons and potions for the rest. Queen Leona thanked them before they passed them around. Applefang, geared up and poised for action, came up to Queen Leona to give her her official armour and her long 42 inch blade rapier. Before gearing up for battle, she expressed her gratitude to him.

In the aftermath of the gathering, C'yra stirred from her slumber, her head resting on her mother's thigh. Gentle strokes caressed her pointed black ear, a comforting touch amidst the turmoil.

As her eyes fluttered open, Calliopra, her mother, noticed her daughter's awakening. A faint smile graced her lips before she turned her attention back to the gathering before them. Queen Leona and Applefang, the royal advisor, addressed warriors and some able-bodied citizens, advising them on the tasks at hand. Volunteers stepped forward to assist, while others remained frozen in fear or shock.

C'yra's keen ears detected the distant crack of gunfire. The acrid scent of gunpowder lingered in the air, a reminder of the horrors they had endured. She sat up, her words about to escape her lips when a chorus of cries filled the surroundings. Her ears twitched, and she turned to see children, their faces etched with fear and sadness.
Calliopra's heart sank as she gazed upon her young daughter, Cyra. The three-year-old's eyes were wide with confusion, her tiny brow furrowed.

'It's loud in here,' C'yra whispered to herself. 'Scary... Why are they sad?'

'My sweet C’yra,' Calliopra whispered, her voice heavy with sorrow, 'our home has been attacked.'

C'yra blinked, her lips parting slightly. 'Attacked?' she asked, her voice barely a whisper.

Calliopra nodded, her eyes filled with unshed tears. 'Yes, C’yra. The horde has come.'

A moment of silence passed as C’yra processed the news. Her eyes widened, and a look of fear crept into them.

'The horde?' she asked, her voice trembling. 'But why?'

Calliopra sighed, knowing that explaining the complexities of war to a child was a daunting task. 'They are evil beings, C’yra. They want to destroy our castle and everything we hold dear.'

C’yra's eyes filled with tears. 'But I don't want them to hurt us,' she sobbed.

Calliopra gathered her daughter into her arms, holding her close. 'I know, my precious. I know. But remember, we are safe. We have prepared for this; most of our resources have been transported to our new home.’

Cyra nodded, her tears still flowing. 'I wanna fight,' she whispered. 'I'll be brave like you and mama.'

Calliopra smiled through her own tears. 'I know you wanna help, but you’re only a child. We love you and all you can do is be a good kitten and follow what we tell you. Trust me, we got you. I know you can do this.”

Leona briefed her soldiers; their task being that they would help with defending the survivors by holding off the horde soldiers, while the high council members and high mages helped with securing their path to their new home. This involves a secret passageway somewhere in the border between their kingdom and the Whispering woods that goes toward the underground. Luna informed them that she will send the message of this plan to other representatives of the cities and villages through her message spell to the representatives of those places.

Queen Leona’s voice cuts through the chaos in her native tongue of Magjca. "For Halfmoon!! Protect our people!" Her command rang out with authority, rallying the forces of Halfmoon to face the impending threat.

Queen Leona then turned to see her family; Her daughter C’yra was awake and eating a piece of bread beside her auntie Luna while Calliopra was advising a citizen on how to make a sling for an injured. Leona looked at Luna and she knew what’s gonna happen next. She said goodbye to her niece before going away to give them space. Luna didn’t want to make a fuss as it would make things harder for her sister to explain what was going to happen next to her daughter.

Calliopra noticed her wife walking toward them and she stood to hug her. She looked at her face as she noticed Leona's face was serious. She looked between Leona and Applefang and realised that it was time. Leona went past her wife to check up on their daughter.

Leona knelt before C’yra, her touch gentle yet urgent. "My child, we must part ways for now. You will be with Uncle Adderfang as he will take you to our new home. Trust in him as you trust in me.’

C’yra: Why can’t I stay and fight with you!

Leona: You know why kitten, and you gotta be brave, as you are needed to help our people to settle in our new home underground. They need their light.

C’yra: I’m scared…I don’t think I'm as brave as you or mum.

Leona: Princess C’yra. You had put a fearless face on as you took care of children in the makeshift shelter earlier. I think that makes you one brave kitten.’ She put her hand on a small head of mane and combed through with her claws.

C’yra was lifted up onto the steed, right in front of Adderfang. Ready to leave as soon as it was time. Queen Leona frowned at the next words she was going to say to her daughter. As she knew that it was going to be hard to say goodbye to a child who couldn’t understand that this may be possible. She changed it at the last minute with something completely different.

Leona: ‘You know what kitten, I have this thing that needs protecting and I believe that you can help. It involves our kingdom’s special stones. C’yra nodded at this. Leona came up to C’yra. Suddenly a small orange sphere appeared above the queen’s index finger. Calliopra knew what it was and stared at the interaction while Adderfang was surprised as he quietly commented.

Adderfang: ‘That’s the Tiger eyes.’ Leona nodded, the orange light hovered over her palm to lightly press the stone into the chest of the young princess.

Leona then spoke to Applefang and her wife directly while C’yra was distracted by the horse.

Leona: It would be in much safer hands if she has it while escaping from here. We already have the other half of the runestone secured in our new home, we can still function with that half. Now the other half is protected by our brave princess. Leona poked her daughter's nose with her tail to hear her laugh one last time.

C’yra: Don’t worry mama and mama, I will protect this.

Calliopra went up to C’yra and kissed her goodbye, ‘You be a good Tiger, we love you. We will see each other again soon.’ Calliopra and Leona passionately completed the traditional goodbye gesture with their daughter. Adderfang nodded solemnly to both queens, his gaze unwavering as his mount carried both him and the princess towards safety. Leaving behind the crumbling remains of Halfmoon and the echoes of a kingdom torn apart by war.

Sometime later, Inside the desolate castle of Halfmoon.

Ghetuku, the lone mercenary, stood amidst the carnage, his fingertips still slick with the crimson lifeblood of his latest victim. He had extracted the vital information he sought: Princess C'yra, accompanied by her loyal advisor, had fled towards the Whispering Forest a mere fifteen minutes prior.
Reaching for his radio, Ghetuku contacted Senior Boarus, his superior in the mercenary guild. 'Boarus, this is Ghetuku. Mission update.'

'Report, Ghetuku,' Boarus's voice crackled over the line.

'Princess Cyra has fled towards the Whispering Forest. She is accompanied by her advisor.'

'Excellent work, Ghetuku. Remember, we need the brat alive.,' Boarus replied. 'Proceed to the forest. Do not engage the advisor unless absolutely necessary.'

'Understood,' Ghetuku said. 'I will keep you updated.'

With that, Ghetuku disconnected the radio and turned his attention back to the castle. He had no time to waste. The princess was close, and he intended to capture her before she could escape. His gaze swept the horizon, searching for any sign of a horse or, better yet, a motorbike. As fate would have it, a motorbike lay abandoned in the distance. Its engine still hummed, beckoning Ghetuku to seize it. With lightning speed, he surged towards the vehicle, his heart pounding with anticipation.

Mounting the motorbike, Ghetuku twisted the throttle and roared into the unforgiving wilderness. The wind whipped past his face as he pushed the machine to its limits. The Whispering Forest loomed ahead, its ancient trees casting long shadows across the desolate landscape.

Chapter End Notes

> Just to clarify and make it clear that the magicat runestones was once a whole crystal until once day it split in halves. Hence why there is some mentions in this story about the runestones or halves etc. Plus the name being Tiger eyes.
> In addition, due to magic being in the universe of she-ra in general, the Tiger eyes runestone can changed shape - explains why it was easy to be transported to their new home or when Leona gave it to her daughter.

The new horde characters in this fic, were inspired by animals. You guys can try and guess each one.

The Outskirt of the Whispering Forest

Chapter Summary

> The Whispering Forest is full of mystery as not many people goes through it. But danger from the outside can still lurks in.

As the morning hours descended upon the forest, casting a warm glow upon the surroundings, C'yra and Adderfang found themselves huddled around a crackling fire, seeking solace from the cold morning mist. The three-year-old child, C'yra, gazes into the dancing flames, with her small hands clutching the remnants of breakfast meat, she devours them to satisfy her hunger.

Suddenly, a rustle in the undergrowth shattered the tranquillity of the moment. Adderfang's instincts flared, and he swiftly unsheathed his blade, his keen senses scanning the surroundings for any sign of danger. Through the dense foliage, a figure emerged, cloaked in shadows, its form barely discernible in the dim light. As the figure drew closer, its features became clearer, revealing it to be no other than Luna.

Adderfang was taken by surprise when Luna suddenly appeared, as the last time they had spoken, she was on her way to help other villages fend off the invasion. C'yra's reaction was different from him, as relief flooded over her before she hurried towards her auntie.

In a split second, Luna leaped towards C'yra, her sharp claws at the ready.. Adderfang reacted with lightning speed, intercepting the attack and sending the imposter tumbling backward. C'yra felt shocked and sad, tears streaming down her face as her auntie acted mean towards her.

'Auntie Lu' she cried.

Mockery danced in the imposter's eyes as his body morphed, revealing a sleek, emerald-scalded skin. His narrowed eyes glinted with derision as he chuckled disdainfully and remarked, "Oh, no, no, my dear. I take great pride in being a lizard folk, not some hairy mutt. I'm merely a mercenary in search of my next kill for a handsome reward. However, this time, I've been sent to bring you back alive, courtesy of Hordak."

The imposter's imitation of auntie Luna left C'yra gasping in horror. As Applefang stood silently beside her, his fury towards the imposter intensified. His stern gaze was fixed on the lizardman.

With a mischievous glint in his eye, the imposter playfully teased the young child, saying, "No need to be upset. How about we play a game? I, Ghetuku, will rescue the princess from this fearsome beast!" Ghetuku shot a menacing look at the pair. Applefang sensed the shift in his demeanour and knew things were about to get real.

With a swift display of his unique ability, the lizardman disappeared from sight. Applefang's fur bristled as he shielded the child from harm. Despite being struck a few times, Applefang remained focused on predicting the lizardman's next attack. Adderfang lunged at the lizardman, but he was too quick for him. He dodged his attack and retaliated with a swift kick that sent the princess protector sprawling into the tree.

C'yra screamed before Ghetuku grabbed her by the arm and dragged her towards his vehicle. With a flick of his tongue, Ghetuku summoned a horde of robots from the shadows. They swarmed over Adderfang, punching and electrifying him. C'yra watched in terror as Adderfang fought desperately against the overwhelming odds. She struggled against her hold but it was fruitless.

‘You brat just earn yourself a hit’, Ghetuku’s hand went and hit behind the princess head, this caused her to submit.

Just when all hope seemed lost, Adderfang let out a deafening roar and unleashed a powerful blast of energy that sent the soldiers flying. They all were knocked out.

'I am the protector of princess C’yra , and I will not let the heir of our people go into the hands of the Horde.' Adderfang said, his voice filled with determination.

Queen Leona, the valiant magicat queen, stood at the forefront of her army, her sword gleaming defiantly. She faced off against a formidable foe, the towering General Scorion. As Calliproa’s group drew closer, their gaze fell upon a sight that both exhilarated and grieved them.

Leona's voice echoed across the battlefield, carrying a desperate plea. 'Aid the other warriors! They are trapped within a treacherous barrier.'

Calliopra and her group surged forward, as they engaged the enemies surrounding the trap, they witnessed Leona's valiant struggle against Scorion. She managed to find a weak spot under the joint of his strong shell. With a swift and deadly thrust, she plunged her sword into his neck.

Beyond the fallen general's lifeless form, Queen Leona was utterly astonished to catch sight of a red mask amidst the thick smoke. It was then that the true mastermind behind the attack, Shadow Weaver, materialised from the darkness and introduced herself.

'Well, well, well,' Shadow Weaver drawled, her eyes gleaming with amusement. 'I must say, your kingdom is... underwhelming. Shadow Weaver purred, her voice a silken whisper that held an edge of malice.

Leona's eyes narrowed in fury. 'You dare mock me, witch?' she hissed.

Shadow Weaver chuckled. 'Oh, but my dear Leona, it's not mockery. It's simply a statement of fact. Your kingdom lies in ruins, your people scattered, and your precious runestone stone is mine for the taking.’

Dark, tendril-like shadows erupted from Shadow Weaver's body, wrapping around Queen Leona. She fought desperately to escape their suffocating grip, but her strength waned as the shadows drained her energy.

Shadow Weaver approached Leona, her cold gaze piercing. 'Where is the Tiger eyes?' she demanded.

Leona remained defiant, her voice weak but resolute. 'I will never tell you, you BITCH.'

Shadow Weaver's lips curled into a cruel smile. 'It's funny how that's exactly what your dear younger sister said too...the great mage or should I say mediocre mage"

'What did you do to her!?' Leona roared, the sound echoing through the area.

Shadow Weaver's voice dripped with malice. 'I captured her as she was helping some villagers, and asked her some questions….. Now She lies deep in the ground, because she failed to give me what I desired.'

'I don't fucking believe you!' Leona split out with venom.

As Shadow Weaver flung a fragment of Luna's distinctive tail onto the ground before Queen Leona, a wave of horror washed over the ruler's once assured gaze. The unmistakable tail served as a chilling reminder of Luna's demise, now solidifying the proof of her sister's tragic fate.

Leona's breath hitched in her throat. A surge of rage coursed through her veins, fuelling her desperation. She summoned her remaining strength and fought back against the shadows, but it was a futile effort. The tendrils tightened their grip, squeezing the life from her body.

'But I have other ways of finding out,' Shadow Weaver continued, her eyes gleaming with a sinister light. 'Like you.'

She reached for Leona's mind, probing for answers. To her surprise, she encountered a blankness, a void where the stone's locations should have been.

'Impossible,' Shadow Weaver muttered. 'Where is the other half?'

Leona's tearful eyes flickered open, a hint of defiance still burning in them. 'You think you're the only one who has trained with magic, we magicats came from a line of those before us who were made of magic.' she whispered laced with defiance.

Shadow Weaver tightened her grip. Leona's lips, pale and cracked, moved but no sound escaped.

Suddenly, a dark figure materialised beside her, his shadow swirling around him like a shroud. 'Commander Weaver,' he whispered, his voice a chilling murmur, 'one of our spies saw the stone being given to the princess, before she fled.'

The air in their surroundings crackled with tension. Queen Leona, her regal bearing unwavering despite the iron grip on her wrists, stared defiantly at Shadow Weaver. The dark mage, her face a mask of cold fury, tightened her hold, the pressure threatening to crush the queen's bones.

'I see,' Shadow Weaver hissed, her voice a venomous whisper. "We got intel about how you shared a moment with your beastly daughter. That child possesses the other half of the stone.'

Frozenness filled Queen Leona's face before all hell went loose. Leona warned, "Touch my daughter and you'll regret it!" Her trapped claws protruded.

A commotion erupted nearby. Her eyes narrowed as she sensed the approach of Leona's allies. The sound of clashing swords and cheers echoed by magicat warriors who had escaped from the trap.

'This isn't over,' Shadow Weaver smiles, her voice dripping with venom. With a swift and sinister gesture, she vanished into the darkness, leaving Leona falling onto her knee, gasping for breath.

The world spun as her allies rushed to her side. Calliopra knelt beside her, his face etched with worry. 'Leona, are you alright?' Leona choked back a sob, her hands shaking as she clutched at her throat. 'Luna…….She… she’s gone…..'

Ghetuku growled menacingly at his opponent, showing his sharp teeth. He swiftly let Cyra drop to the ground before launching a rapid assault on Adderfang. But this time, Adderfang was prepared. With a swift dodge, he countered Ghetuku's attack and struck with his gleaming blade, slicing across the lizard's torso.

Ghetuku's knees buckled, and his body collapsed lifelessly to the ground. Adderfang gasped in relief and rushed to C'yra's side.

'Are you alright, C'yra?' he asked, his voice filled with concern. 'Can you hear me?'

C'yra nodded weakly. 'Yes,' she whispered, her body still trembling from the ordeal.

Adderfang smiled and embraced her tightly. 'I’m glad you still have some fight in you,'

C'yra returned his embrace, feeling a sense of peace and security that she had never known before. As they stood up, however, they were unaware that Ghetuku's life still flickered.

With a dying gasp, Ghetuku raised his gun and aimed it at Adderfang. A deafening shot rang out, piercing Adderfang's lower torso right side.

Shock and horror washed over Adderfang and C'yra as they turned to see Ghetuku laughing maniacally before his body finally went limp.

Adderfang stumbled backward, clutching his wound. C'yra screamed and rushed to his side.

'Adderfang!' she cried. 'No!'

Adderfang looked up at her, his eyes filled with pain and a glimmer of determination. 'It's okay, princess,' he said, his voice weak. 'It's just a scratch.'

With a trembling hand, he reached for her and pulled her close. 'We have to leave,' he whispered. 'Before more horde soldiers come.' They realised that their steed had been killed in the battle, so they set off on foot.

Halfmoon is No more

Chapter Summary

> The Castle, once the beating heart of the Halfmoon kingdom, now lies in ruins, courtesy of the Horde. Or so they thought...
> One more life has passed away because of the conflict.
> On the far side of the land, a fearsome beast emerged to face off against the dark mage in the red mask.

As the sun rose on the day following the invasion, the young child found no solace in her dreams.

The young magicat child and her protector were beneath the towering canopy of an ancient broken tree. Adderfang lay dying. His time was running out, and he knew it. He didn't want Princess C'yra, his three-year-old companion, to witness his demise. With a heavy heart, he entrusted her with a task: to gather food for breakfast.

Upon her return, she found Adderfang lying still beneath the tree. The knife slipped from her grasp as she ran to his side. 'Adderfang!' she cried, her voice trembling. 'Wake up!' But Adderfang was gone. C'yra collapsed beside him, her tiny body wracked with grief. She ate the fish and fruit she had gathered, while staring into the sky.

The ground shook beneath her body. The young princess got up and instantly was scared by what she was seeing. Shadow Weaver, a malevolent sorceress, and her horde of soldiers emerged. C'yra's heart pounded in her chest as Shadow Weaver approached, her eyes gleaming with an evil intent. C’yra was on all fours, she hissed at unknown scary people approaching her.

C'yra's heart pounded in her chest. She had heard bedtime stories of the evil monsters of the horde, but Shadow Weaver's was new and she knew that if she revealed the location of the stones, it would be bad. C’yra remains silent, her eyes piercing through Shadow Weaver mask.

Shadow Weaver's eyes narrowed, and her dark magic surged forth, enveloping C'yra in a suffocating embrace. The girl gasped for breath as the shadows tightened their grip, threatening to crush her.

'Answer me, child,' Shadow Weaver demanded, her voice dripping with venom. 'Or face the consequences.'

…gentle swishing sound…..

Through the dense undergrowth, a large cat emerged. Her eyes widened in horror as she witnessed trouble. With a fierce roar, she charged into the clearing, her claws drawn. She managed to separate the child from Shadow Weaver’s magic. Shadow Weaver turned to face her adversary.

A battle ensued, one being a dark sorceress unleashing her formidable powers in contrast to the raw powers of ancient magic flowing through the big cat. The beast always proves too much for the soldiers who dare to challenge it. The woodland shuddered with force as enchantments and firearms clashed, illuminating the skies with an eerie glow.

Amidst the chaos, the beast noticed a flicker of movement in the corner of her eye. She turned to see C’yra, her young body trembling with fear. In a moment of desperation, the beast ran toward her and picked her up by the neck before they escaped in speed. They ran through the forest, their hearts pounding with both fear and relief.

Princess C'yra, her heart heavy with fear and uncertainty, found herself in the clutches of a fearsome beast. Its eyes glowed with an eerie intensity, and its claws scraped against the ground, sending shivers down her spine.

As she stroked the beast's snout, a surge of warmth and familiarity washed over her. This beast was not a mere creature of the forest, but a manifestation of her mother's magic. It was an ability that magicat's possessed, an ability that C’yra had only heard about in the bedtime stories her mothers had told her.

'Mother,' she whispered, her voice trembling with emotion. 'Is it really you?

In that instant, the beast transformed before her very eyes. Its fur receded, its claws retracted, and its eyes softened into a loving gaze. Calliopra stood before her daughter, her heart filled with both joy and anguish.

'My precious C'yra,' she whispered, her voice trembling with emotion. 'I have found you at last.'

C'yra's eyes welled up with tears as she embraced her mother tightly. But even in the midst of their reunion, a shadow hung over their hearts.

'Mother,' C'yra sobbed, 'there has been such darkness. Applefang... he's gone.'

Calliopra's face grew cold. Despite knowing about Luna's death, she chose to keep the child in the dark for the time being. It was important to wait until they were out of harm's way before breaking the news.

Going back to the thought of Applefang, her loyal advisor and closest friend, had been mercilessly slain by the forces of Shadow Weaver. Driven by a strong resolve, she took C'yra to a quiet glade where they honoured his memory together.

The Halfmoon Kingdom's cities and villages, once thriving and magnificent, now lie in ruins, reduced to a desolate wasteland by the unyielding onslaught of the Horde. As the Horde's forces surged forward toward the castle to finish it off. Out of nowhere, there was a sudden explosion, leading to the complete collapse of the foundation into a mound of rubble. Leaving only a cloud of swirling debris.

This was no ordinary collapse. It was a mirage, conjured by the arcane prowess of the surviving mages who were the best of Halfmoon. The true castle remained intact, bearing the scars of battle, hidden within a veil of illusion. The façade will soon fade away.

All across the land, the Horde's soldiers, dark mages, and the unfortunate magicat citizens who had become victims of war, witnessed the explosion from afar. The sight was terrifying.

Hordak's generals, their faces etched with astonishment, exchanged incredulous glances. The kingdom they had fought so fiercely to conquer lay in ruins, a testament to their supposed victory. The illusion was so flawlessly crafted that it fooled even the most seasoned warriors.

zzzzzzzzzz

The radio static crackled, a harsh counterpoint to the gentle hum of the energy core powering his throne room. He shifted, a low growl rumbling in his throat. With a swift motion, he adjusted the radio before seizing it firmly in his hand.

'Report,' he barked, his voice a rasping echo in the cavernous chamber.

A moment of silence, then Senior Boarus' voice, thin and reedy, filled the space. 'My Lord, the operation on Halfmoon has been... successful. The rebels have been vanquished, their base obliterated.'

Hordak's blood eyes narrowed, a flicker of satisfaction crossing his face. He had known this would be the outcome. The rebels, those pathetic, idealistic fools, stood no chance against the might of the Horde.

'Return back to Fright Zone,' he commanded, his voice clipped and sharp. 'That is all.'

zzzzzzzzz

Leona watched from a safe distance, her heart heavy with the weight of her decision. She was glad she had managed to save most of her people. With a final, lingering gaze at the ruins of Halfmoon, she ordered her forces to retreat, disappearing into the cover of the woodland surrounding the border.

The Dark Pursuit

Chapter Summary

> Queen Calliopra and C'yra are caught off guard when they run into an individual who is still on a mission to track them down, creating a sense of déjà vu.

Calliopra kneels hidden within the dense undergrowth, her keen eyes scanning the surroundings. `My little one. We will arrive in our new home soon." she whispered, her voice barely above a breath. C'yra whimpered, her ears pulled back in fear. She didn't understand everything yet, but she understood the fear in her mother's voice. She clung tighter, burying her head in her mother's thick fur, the only comfort she knew.

Calliopra decided to summon her winged Familiar, an owl named Eclipse. 'My dear friend,' she whispered, 'I need you to find my mate and let her know where we are. We need help. Go, my friend, hurry.' Eclipse spread its majestic wings and soared into the sky, carrying Calliopra's desperate plea. However, fate had a cruel twist in store. As the owl flew swiftly, a sudden and ominous black lightning strike pierced its wing, sending it plummeting toward the trees.

zzzzzzzzzz-PANG !!!

A voice, laced with darkness, slithered through the air. "Attempting to seek assistance, Queen Calliopra? How futile." Calliopra's heart quickened as she recognized the ominous tone from before. Struggling to maintain her composure, Calliopra went for Shadow Weaver head on.

The air hung heavy with the scent of ozone and fear. Calliopra, the magnificent Queen of the Magicats, lay helpless on the cold grass ground, her once vibrant fur matted with sweat. The wicked grin of the masked mage, Shadow Weaver, was a cruel mockery of her own powerlessness. 'I no longer possess the virtue of patience,' Shadow Weaver hissed, her voice a venomous whisper. 'I shall help myself to kill you first, Calliopra. Perhaps I'll even send it as a housewarming gift to Queen Leona.'

.....gggggGGGGGGGGGGGGGGRRRRRRRRRRRrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrr.....

The sound of a snarl echoed within earshot, alerting Shadow Weaver to the presence of that pesky child. C’yra, Calliopra's daughter, had been frozen in horrified stillness, her small, sleek body trembling. Her pointed tail had quivered, the spiked fur along her spine bristling with fear. But now, a fierce, primal rage, a daughter's fury, ignited within her.

One second she was standing still, staring at her defeated mother, the next she was a whirlwind of motion. C’yra movements defying gravity as she was moving around the witch. Her once yellow and turquoise eyes turned to blood orange, blazed with defiance. The air crackled with raw, untested power, glowing markings appearing across her lithe body, like ancient runes burning into her skin. Her wild mane stood up like flames, a corona of fire engulfing her head.

Shadow Weaver, her crimson mask reflecting the flickering light of the magic, felt a thrill run through her. She had foreseen this, sensed this power simmering beneath the surface of the young Magicat. 'Finally, the Tiger eyes, in the flesh,' she rasped, a dark smile spreading across her lips. Her hand shot forward, dark energy swirling around her body, a chilling echo of the power she had used to bind Calliopra.

C’yra, the tiny princess, now a raging storm of untamed magic, met her gaze. The air shimmered with power. She remembered what her mother had told her that she was brave.

C’yra yelled in Magjca, “You’re such a meanie! I’ll be strong, not for me, but for Halfmoon!”

As the witch unleashed her dark magic, shadowy tentacles erupted from the ground, lashing out at the young magicat with speed. With feline grace, she dodged each hit, her body swaying and twisting with astonishing agility. When the opportunity arose, she swiftly grabbed fistfuls of rocks from nearby, hurling them with unerring accuracy at the witch. As Shadow Weaver avoided the rocks and turned to hurled bolts of darkness that shattered against the surrounding trees, C'yra's resolve wavered not. Inspired by the whispering leaves and swaying branches, she retreated into the shadows of the forest, her lithe form becoming one with the living tapestry. Shadow Weaver paused, her serpentine pupils scanning the dense foliage. A moment of silence descended upon the forest, broken only by the soft rustling of leaves. Then, with a flick of her wrist, she sent a spell weaving through the trees, aiming to ensnare her elusive opponent.

Suddenly, a blur of motion emerged from the canopy above. C'yra, her golden with red accent robe fluttering like autumn leaves, launched herself towards Shadow Weaver with a powerful roundhouse kick. However, Shadow Weaver's reflexes proved too swift, and she seized C'yra's tail, sending her tumbling through the air. C'yra danced around the venomous fangs of Shadow Weaver's serpents, managing to escape unscathed except for a minor scrape on her leg. With her sharp claws, she swiftly sliced through some of the witch's serpents, while others managed to sink their teeth into her effortlessly. The shadowy snakes dissipated into nothingness. Clearly, the rigorous morning training sessions with her mother, Queen Leona, had elevated the young girl beyond a mere novice.

As C’yra continued to entertain Shadow Weaver's relentless attacks, her mother, Calliopra, lay helpless on the ground. Despair threatened to consume her, but amidst the chaos, a flicker of hope ignited within her. Gathering the remnants of her own magic, she whispered a desperate plea, a spell fuelled by her undying love for her daughter.

As the spell took hold, Shadow Weaver became paralyzed, unable to defend herself against any attack. This unexpected turn of events granted C'yra the perfect opening to strike and seize the advantage. With her mother's silent encouragement, C'yra felt a surge of confidence and took advantage of the moment. She dashed forward on all fours, springing into the air to deliver a swift and decisive blow. Her claws raked across the red mask, slicing it in half. A gasp of shock and fury escaped Shadow Weaver's lips as her true face was unveiled.

But the battle was far from over. Shadow Weaver, seething with rage, unleashed a torrent of dark energy that overwhelmed C'yra. The child collapsed, her body wracked with pain as the sorceress held her aloft by her potent spell. Shadow Weaver's cold, calculating eyes, devoid of emotion, burned into C'yra's soul. With terrifying swiftness, she reached for the broken mask. The ancient mask, radiating with malevolent power, began to mend itself in her hands. But this time, as the mask reformed, a malevolent seal, swirling with dark energy, appeared on its surface.

Dread consumed C'yra as she laid eyes on the restored mask. It served as a haunting reminder of her impending doom, a cruel and final turn of fate. Then, without warning, a surge of excruciating shocks surged through her body, each one tearing at the very core of her being. Her strength, her stamina, her very spirit, ebbed away. The princess was left helpless, a mere shell of the warrior she trying to be like her mothers, is now at the mercy of Shadow Weaver's malevolent power. The connection to the tiger eye, the source of her strength and agility, severed, leaving her drained and vulnerable.

Her vibrant orange eyes, once a testament to her power, were reduced to the heterochromia of her birth, one pale yellow, one turquoise. The orange markings, once imbued with the tiger eye's strength, faded, leaving only her natural markings on her skin. The shocks continued to ripped through C'yra, each one a searing brand on her soul. C'yra is overwhelmed by the succession of electric shocks, each one more excruciating and traumatic than the one before. Her vision swimming in darkness, leaving her weak and vulnerable.

'You nearly got one over me, little beast,' hissed Shadow Weaver, her voice dripping with malice. Her dark tentacles, thick as pythons, constricted around C'yra, squeezing the air from her lungs. 'But I finally got to see the true power of the runestone that you beasts have had in your kingdom.'

Cyra could only whimper, a desperate meow caught in her sore throat. The darkness around her seemed to close in, suffocating her. She thrashed against the constricting tentacles, but they held her fast, a web of shadows binding her to her fate. Another shocked caused her to be stun.

Shadow Weaver loomed over C'yra's motionless body, suspended in mid-air by the forbidden magic. Her cold, skeletal hand hovered over C'yra's chest, the touch sending shivers down the young magicat's spine. With a swift, elegant motion, Shadow Weaver stripped the clothing off C'yra's torso, exposing her peach fizz torso to the chill air. What was once C'yra's regal robe is now a pile of shredded fabric on the ground.

Amidst the tumultuous tremors that shook the ground, Calliopra's cry pierced the air, filled with anguish and despair. Trembling uncontrollably, she slowly rose from the ground, her emotions overwhelming her. As Calliopra's eyes locked with Shadow Weaver's, a surge of maternal fury propelled her forward. Despite her own injuries, her spirit remained unbroken. The Tiger eye, sensing Calliopra's unwavering determination, surged from C'yra's body and into her body. The mystical energy sensed the plea for assistance from the magicat queen.

'You will not touch my daughter!' Calliopra bellowed, unleashing a tempest of fire magic. Incandescent fireballs hurtled towards Shadow Weaver, followed by a relentless torrent of light shards and lightning bolts.

Shadow Weaver, her dark shield raised, shielded herself from the barrage. A cruel smirk spread across her face as she dropped the bound C'yra to the ground. 'Foolish beast,' she hissed. 'You think you can thwart me? The power I covet lies within your daughter's grasp. I will have it, and you will pay the price with her life!'

Unmoved, Calliopra unleashed the full fury of her newfound power. Flames danced upon her fingertips, and ethereal outer form unfurled around her. With each strike, she shattered Shadow Weaver's defences, the darkness receding under the onslaught of her light.

After enduring a relentless series of clashes, Calliopra's strength finally gave out, and she collapsed beside C'yra, her chest heaving as she struggled to recover her breath. Battling the sinister dark mage had taken a toll on her, nearly depleting her energy despite the runestone's assistance. Scanning their eerie jungle surroundings, her senses detected the rhythmic rush of water close by. An idea flickered within her, a notion she hesitated at, uncertain of the consequences it might bring.

Shadow Weaver had unleashed a formidable spell, but Calliopra had swiftly met it with an unanticipated assault. In a moment of desperation, she had gathered her daughter in her arms and charged towards the murmuring stream that cascaded into a grand waterfall. As they approached, Calliopra conjured a spell of protection, enveloping them like a shimmering bubble. With a deep inhalation, she braced herself and took the plunge into the cascading torrent beneath.

Meanwhile, Shadow Weaver stumbled through the dense foliage, the scent of moss and damp earth filled the air, heavy with the weight of a defeat that tasted like ashes on her tongue. Calliopra, the young sorceress she had underestimated, had escaped her clutches, along with her precious daughter.

'Foolish Calliopra,' Shadow Weaver rasped, her voice hoarse with pain. 'You think you can outrun me? You and your...halfling whelp?'

Her laughter echoed through the forest, a bitter mockery of her own predicament. The hunt had taken its toll, leaving her weakened and alone in a wilderness far from civilization. With her injuries, she knew her chances of finding Calliopra and her child were slim, their fate sealed in the harsh embrace of the untamed landscape.
Undeterred, Shadow Weaver summoned her remaining strength. She activated the teleportation spell, her vision blurring as the forest floor disappeared beneath her. With a sickening thud, she landed in the cold, sterile confines of the dark runestone room in the Fright Zone.

Her gaze fell upon the immense black Garnet that dominated the centre of the chamber, her slender hands, stained crimson, palm touching the black garnet, a single, huge jagged shard of shimmering darkness. It was the first runestone she had claimed, the catalyst for her relentless quest for power. Despite the setback with Calliopra, her determination burned brighter than ever.

She contorted in a cruel grin behind the red mask. 'That half of the Tiger Eye runestone may be lost,' she muttered, her voice echoing off the crumbling walls, 'But I can sense the other half still. Nevertheless, I will gather them all, and the time will come when I will come across the magicat power again. Nothing will stand in my way.'

Her laughter, as dark and chilling as the shadows that clung to her, filled the desolate room. The black garnet pulsed with a faint, malevolent light, its energy resonating with the ravenous hunger that consumed Shadow Weaver.

In the labyrinthine depths of the cavern, where darkness enveloped all but the flickering flames of emergency tents. The cave's vast underground expanse had become their new home, a haven from the chaos that had consumed their former kingdom.

Months earlier, they had embarked on the arduous task of constructing their new home as part of evacuation plan, but the buildings stood unfinished, a testament to the challenges they faced. Dominating the midst of the tents, there stood a magnificent structure, housing a multitude of soldiers. Within its walls, resided the esteemed individuals of the magicat society who had managed to persevere, with Queen Leona among them.

Leona walked out of the tent, while a few people were tailing behind. Leona's heart raced as she prepared to depart with her loyal horse, Midnight. Behind her were soldiers willingly to join. The weight of her responsibilities pressed down on her, but she couldn't ignore the call to ensure her family's safety. The council's voices echoed in her ears, their concerns mingling with urgent whispers of danger.

"The people here need reassurance of our survival, Your Majesty" one council member insisted, their tone a blend of respect and apprehension. `

`While we acknowledge the importance of Queen Calliopra and Princess C'yra, the truth is it is too much risk, especially with our limited resources. We have already lost Luna.' An older royal advisor said candidly.

Leona's gaze hardened, a flicker of defiance sparking in her eyes. "I understand the risks. But I cannot stand idly by while my loved ones' fates hang in the balance. And isn't Eclipse enough proof that they are alive.

A gentle weight settled on her shoulder, interrupting her sombre thoughts. She turned her head, a smile easing onto her face as she met the intelligent gaze of a magnificent owl, its feathers changing colours of moonlight. 'You such a good boy,' she cooed, stroking its sleek plumage. 'Found me, haven't you?'

The Owl ruffled its feathers, a soft chirp echoing through the courtyard. 'Lets save them,' she whispered, understanding glimmering in her eyes.

Ready to go, Leona headed towards her steed, distancing herself from the advisors. A sudden movement caught her off guard, a shadow descending upon her from behind. Before she could react, a blow struck her, sending her reeling. As darkness threatened to overtake her, she whispered a request to Eclipse. With a flutter of ebony wings, Eclipse soared through the cave, his mission clear.

Standing over the Queen, the commander couldn't tear his eyes away from her still form. "I beg your forgiveness, Your Majesty. This is all for your own safety," he murmured, his face etched with regret. Gesturing for the advisors to get a healer to attend to her in a nearby tent, his troubled gaze revealed the gravity of his actions.

Nestled somewhere further out on the border of the Whispering forest, a hidden and densely populated jungle awaits. By the tranquil stream, two Magicats lie, their slumber shrouded in secrecy.

Calliopra's head throbbed as she slowly came to, disoriented by the surrounding foliage and the unfamiliar sound of rushing water. The river rushed by, its cool mist brushing against their skin. "We need to reach higher ground," Calliopra murmured, her gaze scanning the dense foliage. She knew that time was slipping away, threatening to engulf them in the jungle's unforgiving embrace.

"C’yra," she murmured, her voice strained. Her gaze fixed on the blur of chocolate light brown fur nestled close to her. The momentary panic ebbed as she assured herself of her daughter's safety.

C’yra stirred, her eyes reflecting the dappled daylight filtering through the dense canopy. "Mamma," she murmured, her small hand reaching out to touch Calliopra's face. Before she pulled her arm back in pain and meowing. Calliopra knelt down, gently searching for the pain that caused discomfort, probably she got from Shadow Weaver. ‘Even brave Magicats need care too, C’yra, remember that.’

She continued until she spotted a cut on her daughter’s arm. Tickles of blood ran down toward her small lower arm. 'Oh, you got a tiny cut on your arm, kitten. It looks like it could get infected. We need to clean it.' As Calliopra rummaged through her thigh pack, she noticed that the vial of antiseptic she carried had been broken from the fall. Panic surged through her as she realised she had no way to disinfect the wound. An idea struck her. She remembered that big cats often licked their wounds to promote cleaning. With a deep breath, Calliopra leaned forward and gently licked the wound on C’yra’s arm.

C'yra winced, but she didn't complain. She was too tired, too focused on the ache in her legs and the gnawing hunger in her stomach. Ideally when they arrive home, their new home, she can cleanse the wound fully to prevent any infection.

'Are we... are we close to home?,' C'yra whispered, her voice cracking with a sudden sob. The question was more a plea, a desperate hope clinging to the edge of her fading strength.

Calliopra, her heart aching at the sight of her daughter's tired face, squeezed C'yra's hand reassuringly. 'We're getting there, my love. Just a little longer.' The icy coldness emanating from C'yra sent shivers down her spine, her garments torn apart by Shadow Weaver's clever manoeuvres to acquire the runestone. It was an utterly intrusive experience. Calliopra knew they couldn't linger. Taking a deep breath, she untied her own robe, the material glistening in the fading light. 'Hold on, dear one,' she murmured, her voice laced with a quiet strength. She then began to chant, her voice weaving a spell through the air, words of warmth and protection. The robe, imbued with her magic, began to shift and resize, becoming soft and plush, large enough to envelop C'yra completely.

As she wrapped the robe around her daughter, Calliopra felt a surge of warmth radiating from it. The robe, now a comforting cocoon against the cold, brought a measure of peace to C'yra's face. Nevertheless, this was merely a temporary resolution.

‘Can you believe that what you're wearing has been a part of our family for ages? It's a symbol of our heritage. Rest assured, it will keep you snug until we get back home. That’s a promise’ Recognizing that C’yra was unable to communicate verbally, Calliopra emitted a soothing purr. In response, C’yra softly purred back, indicating for Calliopra to carry on.

With caution, Calliopra slowly got up, only to be met with a sudden, searing ache that shot through her head, causing her to sway. She clenched her teeth firmly, refusing to let the pain take control. She realised she needed to remain resilient, especially for C’yra. Straining against the throbbing ache in her head, Calliopra trudged forward. Amidst the tangled undergrowth, the roots and vines seemed to conspire against her, impeding her progress. Each footfall was a struggle, as the nature itself sought to test her resolve.

Taking a moment to gather her breath, Calliopra offered a reassuring smile, her eyes alight with determination. "I’m putting on a brave face kitten, like you are.’

As they reached the clearing, Calliopra and the young princess C'yra finally found a brief respite. However, their moment of reprieve was abruptly shattered when Calliopra stumbled and collapsed, causing C'yra to fall with her.

In the final moments before losing consciousness, Calliopra's voice resonated with a potent blend of determination and desperation.

"It's….. okay…. baby… I……. got you…," Calliopra breathed.

C’yra's final sight was a pair of piercing blue eyes before ~~darkness enveloped her.~~

The impact of a harsh blow left them both unconscious. In the serene quiet, the jungle wrapped around them, its wild heartbeat pulsing through the air. Calliopra's still body cradled C'yra, serving as a natural shield against the encroaching chill.

Chapter End Notes

> Writing this chapter, there was a part that was inspired by a scene from the show.
> Queen Calliopra is a good mum. However after that fall, she might forget a few things on what happens next in the chapter.

I feel like in this story, C'yra would be such a mummy girl to Queen Leona, since she busy with helping the kingdom and training the troops. In between that and home, Queen Leona still find time to spend time with C'yra. But it ends up becoming rough housing, causing Calliopra using her healing spell on the both of them.

As night fell, the jungle hushed, its lush greenery concealing a multitude of mysteries beneath its leafy cover. A female jungle Lynx, roamed with silent grace, her hazel eyes piercing from the moonlight. Her feline instincts sharpened her senses, guiding her through the lush foliage as she hunted for sustenance. She halted in her stride, turning her ears towards the gentle meows that echoed through the undergrowth. Following the sound, she approached cautiously, her elegant form blending seamlessly with the shadows.

Among the dense roots and ferns, a surprising sight awaited her - an adult and a child, sparking curiosity in her wild heart. Ra pondered the mystery before her. The Adult looked odd, while the young thing looked like a big cub.

"What has befallen you, noble guardian, and of this child?" Ra's low rumble held a poignant question, as she leaned closer, seeking answers from the enigmatic stillness of the fallen queen.

Ra pondered how rare it was for humans to venture into the untamed wilderness of this land. She recalled that in the past few years, there had been sightings of individuals wandering through the vicinity. Some were travellers, others were merchants, but the most bothersome were the ones with the red markings.

The queen's whispered words broke Ra out of her reverie, prompting her to slowly come back to reality with a bewildered expression. Despite her fatigue, Calliopra murmurs, "Please, watch over her."

As Ra approached to the child, she noticed the uncanny resemblance the child shared with her. C'yra started stirring, emitting distressed mewls and gentle cries. Ra’s motherly instincts kicked in, compelling her to protect the defenceless creature in the wilderness.

With careful determination, she picked up the fabric enveloping C’yra with her strong jaws, mindful of the fragile life she held. Casting a quick glance behind her, Ra's gaze fell upon the queen, her eyes now closed. A mix of emotions swirled within her, and she found herself reluctant to uncover the truth about her fate.

Ra began her silent trek through the labyrinth of the jungle, each step a testament to her newfound responsibility. Her agile form navigated the dense undergrowth, carrying C’yra to safety within her secluded den. The ancient cave, hidden beneath a shroud of fallen trees and foliage, served as her sanctuary, a haven of safety and solitude.

Ra nudged the coverings enveloping the small figure, revealing the now half-awake C’yra, a feline child she had rescued. She playfully pawed the child. The child reacted to the touch, making a soft whimper that once again tugged at Ra's heartstrings. C’yra's eyelids drooped, heavy with confusion. Ra recognized that the child required some comfort. Tenderly, Ra carried C'yra in her mouth, being cautious not to hurt her as she moved the toddler closer to the nest.

Her lonely cub sensed her arrival and woken up with excitement, paws blindly grasping for milk as they were not ready to hunt yet.

"Patience, little one," she purred. Gently, she tucked C’yra into the nest's warmth among the cubs who seemed curious and soon took a liking to their new sibling.

She groomed C’yra gently, her rough tongue licking the child's forehead in a soothing gesture. The feline child seemed to relax in response, her breathing steady and calm. Ra settled down beside the nest, her tail wrapping protectively around her cubs.

Ra, exuding a natural tenderness, welcomed the hungry cubs to her belly. However, it appeared that C’yra was a bit confused. Ra gently guided C'yra towards her belly to help out. C’yra's instincts kicked in as she instinctively latched onto one of Ra's nipples and began to suckle for milk.

C'yra quickly settled into her new home, little did she know, destiny had grander designs in store for her.

In a pop-up medical tent, Leona roused from the clutches of unconsciousness, her eyes adjusting to the dimly lit surroundings. Before she could gather her bearings, a familiar form came into the tent and stood in front of her medical bed.

With a concerned look on his face, Alexandra, the esteemed member of the high council, addressed the queen. "I felt compelled to come and see how you are doing, Your Majesty."

Queen Leona couldn't help but roll her eyes at the sentiment. 'I feel like a daisy,' she said with a heavy dose of sarcasm. The pain of the past still lingered within her, as she couldn't forget how the ruling authority had deemed it necessary to incapacitate her before she could embark on a mission to find her missing wife and daughter.

Alexandra sighed and took a seat next to the queen. 'I know you still feel hurt,' she admitted. 'It wasn't the easiest decision for us to make.'

'I'm sure it wasn't,' Leona said dryly.`

Concealing his crestfallen state, Alexandra maintained a neutral façade as he carried on, "I'm here to share some news with you as well-"

"You found them?" Leona's heart raced in her chest as she interrupted him. Her voice was unwavering even as anxiety consumed her. The man met her gaze, his expression grave. "We've located Queen Calliopra, but she's in bad shape."

`WHERE IS SHE?!' proclaimed by the sore throat of Queen Leona. Just then, a familiar moan caught her attention from beyond the medical curtain, sounding like...

Against her nurse's wishes, who was nearby doing her bloods, Leona rose from her bed, battling the discomfort in her body. She tentatively opened the curtain next to her, feeling a surge of fear in her chest. Calliopra lay motionless on the cot, her face ashen. A healer was murmuring spells over her still form, glowing hands hovering just above her skin.

"How is she?" Leona asked, grasping Calliopra's limp hand.

The healer shook her head gravely. "She lost a lot of blood. I've slowed the bleeding and mended her wounds, but she remains unconscious. Only time will tell if she wakes."

Leona bowed her head, tears slipping down her cheeks. After all they had overcome, she couldn't lose Calliopra now. Not like this.

Leona's attention was abruptly torn away from her injured wife as a cough sounded from the tent entrance. She turned to see a serious-faced woman standing next to the high council member.

'Your Majesty, my name is Hefina and I am appointed as your personal advisor. I would have gotten here sooner to be the one to give you updates,' the woman introduced herself.

Leona was still reeling from the news and barely registered Hefina's words. 'You don't say, Sherlock,' Leona replied absentmindedly, immediately regretting her flippant response as Hefina's eyebrows furrowed.

But Hefina didn't focus on that as she needed to tell Leona more bad news. However, before she had the chance, Leona's eyes popped up with realisation. 'Wait, where is my daughter! - C'yra?!'

Hefina met her eyes, grief and regret shining on her own. "Nowhere to be found. Scouts have searched the surrounding forest with no sign."

Leona staggered, grasping the cot frame to stay upright. C’yra, her precious little girl. "Send out your best trackers. Spare no expense. I want C’yra found, do you understand?"

"We will do our best, Your Majesty." Hefina bowed and withdrew.

Leona sagged against the cot, broken. First Calliopra, now C’yra's disappearance—how much more could the fates demand? Something warm nuzzled her cheek, and Leona found Calliopra’s familiar hovering at her shoulder, large eyes blinking anxiously. Leona stroked his soft fur, drawing what little comfort she could.

She gripped Calliopra's hand once more. "Please, my love, stay with me. We'll face this fate together, as always." Her voice broke on a sob. "You can't leave me too."

As the moon cast its gentle glow over the jungle, each character's path was veiled in uncertainty, their destinies entwined in the timeless dance of fate.

Chapter End Notes

My next step is to strategize the upcoming chapters of the next series. I'll be incorporating some time-skips to show Catra growing, encountering young cadet Adora (who is still with the Horde), and eventually reaching the present time where Adora is She-ra (New She-ra form ofc) and with the Princess Alliance - fighting against Hordak's Horde or Maybe Prime? I'm not 100% sure.

Ideas/ suggestion welcome.
Hopefully I would be done with the rough drafts by July. 'Finger Crossed'

Goodbye for now, Thank you for reading + supporting me, and Happy Pride Month 🏳️🌈🏳️🌈🏳️🌈🏳️🌈

End Notes

First story in this fandom.This has been an idea I have for a while now. Also a feral Catra is a bad ass.
There are 3 parts to this story. I only roughly concepted the first part with around 9 chapters. So with updating wise, would be every 2 weeks at least.

Feedbacks, comments and etc is highly appreciated.

Bye for now (=◉ㅅ◉=)
