Catradora Idol Project: A Second Dance Chance

by Abendfalki

Summary

Catra and Adora get a chance to re-do the princess ball, with an idol-riffic twist :)

Catra looked at the flyer invite for the off season Princess Ball. She knew her and Adora would be going, regardless of anything. And this time, they wouldn't make a mess of things. That was the only reason this one was happening; it was a make-up for the last one that had gone so sideways because of the ongoing conflict. And yeah, Catra had to admit they really both made a mess of the situation. It was too hard to not mess with Adora, and Catra had taken it too far. But so had Adora.

The biggest question on Catra's mind was despite everything seeming the same at first, there were sparkly and colourful bits all over the paper. As she looked at the paper more closely it was advertising a theme for the event. As if finally adding more confusion, was the theme that Frosta had written. "Idols". Normally to Catra that would mean something of gods and spiritually religious figures. The outfits on the generic individuals on the flyer seemed to suggest frilly skirts and intricate costumes.

Catra ambled back to her and Adora's room, occasionally staring at the flyer and almost running into guards as she went.

"Hey Adora, you know anything about Frosta's princess ball theme here? I have no idea what she means by this "idol" thing." Catra lazily flopped down on the couch in their shared room.

Adora was aggressively brushing out her long golden strands of hair. Catra loved how pretty her partner looked with her hair down, and yet Adora kept putting it up, because it was utilitarian that way. If Catra had her way she would have Adora with her hair down all the time.

Catra looked at her own hair, it had been almost a year since the incident that caused her to lose it all. Horde Prime had taken it from her. But it was thankfully regrowing, even if it was still nowhere near the length that Catra wanted it.

She had been constantly reassured by Adora that she still found Catra cute. Something about her freckles and ears being Adora's favourite parts of Catra. The magicat's ears flicked as a lingering memory of last night's soft ear caresses and Adora's gentle touch softly floated in. Catra's ears perked up as Adora turned.

"Ever since Bow figured out a way to boost the signal capturing from the old Velvet Glove, Frosta's been watching some program from a far away planet." Adora stifled a chuckle as she shook her head. "We've been able to receive entertainment from all sorts of planets. Frosta's been on a kick of something from a planet called Napaj. It's this animated show about girls who get together and form singing and dancing groups, in all varieties of costumes. Some of them are quite pretty, like you are."

Catra's face rose in temperature. Adora had an uncanny knack of slipping in complements in the most unexpected of places. "Prettiness aside. She wants us to dress like they do in these shows and sing and dance at the ball?"

"I mean, I don't know if she wants us to go that far. We could, I guess." Adora shrugged before adding. "We have been good at Karaoke lately, but I think she just means the outfits. Bow is compiling a list for him and Glimmer; no clue what he's going to do given all the outfits in the show are for girls."

"What, you don't think Bow could rock a skirt and dress?" Catra laughed. "I think he'd look pretty hot in one myself."

"I think you would look hotter." Adora stuck her tongue out. "But I don't think it's his style. I am sure he'll figure something out. Anyways, he's gonna give us a copy as well; I figured we could go over it and then get Shtruff to make them for us?"

"Sounds good dummy!" Catra's tongue shot out and playfully teased Adora back.

Adora's tongue once again pointed towards Catra.

The two stared at each other, both their tongues sticking out towards each other like petulant children before they retracted and warm laughter filled their long shared bedroom.

Adora jaunted over to Catra, her hands behind her back as she leaned down. Catra knew what was coming and her mouth expectantly tilted upwards from her sitting position. Fur lined lips met with non-fur as the two shared a kiss.

"I love you Catra, all of you."

"I love you too 'Dora, but you better pick out a good outfit. I don't want us looking like dorks at our first princess ball as a couple."

Neither of them had expected Bow to drop off a veritable tome of a book. There must have been about 300 pages. And the book wasn't small by any structure either. Bow had told them it was so they could see all of the intricacies and buttons and belts and every little accoutrement in all the outfits.

Catra was somewhat concerned with the excitement Bow had displayed as he rattled all this information off.

"This is gonna take a lot longer than we expected." Catra's eyes widened as she looked at the large book now sitting on the couch side-table.

"Yeaaah. I know just the thing for it however!" Adora pivoted and started to skip out of the room. "Just make yourself comfortable Catra! And don't peek at the book till I am back."

Catra's eyes furrowed as she realized Adora had that twinkle in her eye when she was about to do something mischievous. "Hey Melog, did you sense anything on her?"

Melog slowly ambled out from underneath its spot on the bed. It stretched its forelegs out before its hind legs shook each other out in succession. Finally a large yawn escaped its ethereal mouth before Catra finally got an answer through telepathy. Something sweet. That was all they had paid attention to.

Melog jumped up onto the couch and nudged its head against Catra. It signalled that she should calm down, Adora always had her best interests to heart and they had been together for more than a year now.

Catra shot a look at Melog. She didn't really need it to therapy cat her anymore, and mentally told it so. Still she appreciated it and gave Melog an appreciative nuzzle underneath its chin.

It gave a satisfactory merp in reply and after a few rotations around the couch it settled down into a curling position, the side of its fur just nestling against Catra's leg.

Melog's warmth was nice on Catra's leg. It reminded her she was safer here now. She had been safe for a year here, at peace. As her head rested against the back of the couch, she felt the plush weight of a tri-colour blanket that Scorpia had knitted for her and Adora a while back. The pastel pinks, blues and yellows were a comforting colour for Catra, even if she didn't believe for a second Scorpia had found natural alpaca wool in that colour. Clearly it was dyed, Regardless of Scorpia's story about meeting an alpaca with tri-coloured fur, and In such an unnatural colour.

Catra grabbed it and gently placed it over her legs. She deserved more warmth. She deserved comfort and she always had.

Melog's thoughts entered her mind and agreed with her thoughts. It also requested to be covered. Catra shuffled the blanket right over Melog and smiled at the amusing sight of his body just being a lump underneath the fabric. Its subtle glow just barely penetrating through the intertwined yarn.

She looked towards the book and thought a little peek wouldn't hurt. Once again Melog was right there chiding her and reminding her to not open it. She just shook her head and settled into the warmth of her blanket and magical cat.

“Sorry! That took way longer than I expected.” Adora’s harried voice floated in from the door.

Catra looked over, Adora had pushed in a food cart, which had a large teapot on the top. Catra realized exactly what Adora had done, andwhere she had gone when she saw the various sweet crackers, chocolate bits, sprinkles and a canister of whipped cream.

“Hot chocolate?” Catra smiled.

Adora nodded. “Mmmhmm!”

Adora put down two cups, the steam still rising from them. Catra automatically knew which one was hers, just some sprinkles on the top. Meanwhile, Adora’s had marshmallows, whipped cream, sprinkles and chocolate chips all over it. Catra normally wouldn’t want sprinkles in her hot chocolate, but it reminded her of the first time Adora and her had it together. So as much as she couldn’t taste it, seeing the multicoloured sprinkles always brought a smile to her face.

“I am so glad you can have chocolate,” Adora spoke as she shuffled underneath the knitted blanket. “I really enjoy moments like this.”

Adora’s head leaned up against Catra’s shoulder, a subtle nuzzling shuffle against Catra. Catra was in heaven, the warmth of her feline companion basking her from one side, and the warmth from her beautiful, caring, blonde girlfriend on the other.

As Adora reached over to grab the thick book, Catra reached out and grabbed her cup of cocoa. The warmth of the cup enrobed her hands. Catra held it up to her mouth allowing the steamy smells to tickle her nose before taking a sip. The chocolatey syrupy sweetness danced on her tongue and the subtle tastes of the sprinkles brought her back to the first time Adora had shared the drink together.

Opening her eyes again Catra, looked down at the book as Adora flipped through the pages slowly. There were so many complex outfits of skirts, pants with golden ropes weaved through them, full-on dresses that looked like they belonged in a wedding.

"This is all 'Idol-style' outfits?" Catra tried to imagine herself in any of the outfits.

Adora nodded with an exhale. "Yeah. A Lot of this is crazy."

The two continued to look through the dresses and outfits. Adora seemingly was interested in a lot of the more whites, pinks and pastel colours with a lot of frills and lace. Catra had seen a few of the outfits she had liked, some more black and grey outfits that reminded her of some sorceress outfits she had seen. There were some in crimson reds that looked nice as well, but reminded her of Shadow Weaver too much so those would be a pass.

Eventually they had settled on a set of outfits, Adora's was going to be a cropped off top with subtle frills on the shoulders and a pinkish purple and gold skirt. Catra could guess why Adora chose that one. Catra's was going to be a non-cropped short full dress in a similar pink colour, only the base was a creamy white instead of the gold from Adora's. It was a far better option than the ones which would have had the both of them in frilly dresses that were halfway to wedding dress.

Catra didn't exactly like the fact that her outfit was still somewhat of an explosion of bright frilly pink lace and tulle fabric. Still, just like the sprinkles in her cocoa she supposed she could get used to it. "Yeah. Sounds good."

Adora went to close the book but her eyes pierced into Catra's own. The soft blues seemed to have read her very thoughts. Catra too suddenly had Melog in her mind telling her to just be open and honest with Adora.

"I…"

"Hey…"

“You go first Catra.” Adora softly said.

“I’m not sure about the outfit. I just don’t think it’s me. You’d look so cute in it but… I would just feel awkward in it.” Catra sighed. “Like, if you really want me to I can because I love you but, I much would prefer one of the black and more gothic outfits.”

“Catra,” Adora’s blue eyes once again softly glared at Catra as she seemingly spoke with the utmost care. “I don’t ever want you to do something just because it will make me happy. Yeah, relationships are about compromise but… don’t just do something for me.”

Adora leaned forward and kissed Catra’s cheek. “And part of compromise means I should compromise too.”

She proceeded to flip through the pages between the pinkish purple skirt that she wanted and the more black gothic one that Catra wanted. Adora had that deep look of thought that often worried Catra.

“But I also don’t want you to compromise into something you don’t want.” Catra swallowed out. She hated moments like these where she felt like she was doing something wrong. Even though she knew Adora loved her dearly. Years of horde life and everything Shadow Weaver put through her mind still Caused Catra to have moments like this.

“We don’t have to!” Adora smiled. “See the lighter bits on the dress you want and the darker bits on my dress?”

Catra’s head tilted as her ears gently folded forwards. Her tail uncurled and fell gently onto Adora’s lap. “Yeah what about them?”

With a gentle movement Adora ran her hands on Catra’s tail. “We can take the pink from my dress and have it on the black dress. Then we ask for a black stripe with the same colour of black in your dress on mine. And I think the way we will both contrast each other but have a subtle hint of each others dress between…

will be a nice metaphor for our relationship and friendship. We were fire and water for a bit but now we've come together like a steamy sauna."

Catra felt a slight smile creep over her mouth as her tail started to sway excitedly. The profoundness of the statement wasn't lost on her. What else could she do but lean forward and kiss Adora on the mouth, slightly nipping at her blonde partners lip. She carried the nip into Adora's neck, smiling internally at the slight moan escaping Adora's mouth.

"So that's a yes?" Adora chuckled.

"It's a yes. That sounds lovely." Catra gently grabbed the book of fashion out of Adora's hands and placed it on the floor. Catra's arms rested around Adora's shoulders. "I love you Adora."

"I would say we should head down to Shtruff to get these started on tailoring but.." Adora cut her own sentence off as she pushed forwards, her lips once again joining with Catras. Her tongue eagerly pushed into Catra's own mouth and the warmth of tongues danced for a few moments. "But I think we have other plans for a bit."

"Shtruff can wait." Catra smiled. She felt Melog jump off the couch. It knew what was coming next.

The two girls stretched out onto the couch, the blanket now cocooning them as Catra held a position above Adora.

Adora's arms caressed themselves around Catra's shoulder and nape. "I love you too Catra."

Shtruff was the first Royal Tailor who had been a Shroomfolk. It was on Catra's, rather aggressive insistence that she had been appointed to the Royal Tailor position. Catra had realized how few of the castle staff were from races or species beyond humans. So she pushed for Shroomfolk, Fawns and any one who was qualified to fill a role in the castle staff

The Shroomfolk seamstress looked up at the sight of Catra and Adora. Both of them in pyjama pants and oversized hoodies as they walked into the Royal clothiers sewing room. Calling it a room felt a bit of an understatement, as it was practically a small factory inside the castle.

"Catra and Adora! What brings you in during this hour," Shtruff motioned airily to the two of them. She hastily put a needle into the outer layer of her head and hoped down from her chair. Something that more than a few castle dwellers had to get used to. Shtruff's eccentric personality and upbringing had meant she used her own head as a pincushion more times that others were comfortable with. "And in such cozy clothes. Surely you're not about to tell me that you just accidentally burned all your clothes but PJs and you need new ones."

Catra smiled and she shook her head. "Nope, nothing like that. Adora will have all the info for you. We need dresses made for the princess ball."

The most wonderful thing about Shtruff outside of her wonderful skills as a seamstress, was how she seemingly bounced excitedly when people came up to her. Her positive demeanor had quickly won her friends among pretty much the entirety of Brightmoon castle.

Catra watched as she bounced happily, her mushroom head seemingly moving on its own different bounce as she did so. The glint of the needle she had stowed occasionally caught the light and almost seemed as if a piece of jewelry.

With a loud thump, Adora placed the book of all the costumes down on the table. In quick order she had flipped to the pages and was explaining the modifications that they needed to get done, and the colours they wanted for the outfits.

Shtruff eagerly looked at the pages as Adora explained. A notepad was whipped out of seemingly thin air and she nodded while taking notes.

"I'll also need to get some measurements from Catra then. Because her tail in that outfit will be quite the challenge!" Shtruff smiled. "But I think I can get this done in a few days. Still, I wish you had come to me sooner!"

Adora quickly shook her head and waved her hands. "Oh no! We don't need it that fast. Please take all the time you need. The princess ball isn't for a month and a half!"

"Oh thank HEAVENS!" Shtruff exhaled as she pressed her hand against her chest. "I thought you needed these right away!"

Catra and Adora bowed in thanks as they exited out of the room and started back towards their room.

"I am so glad Glimmer allowed her to join the castle staff. She's just so good. And she's so cute!" Adora chuckled. "Not as cute as you though."

"Would you love me if I was a shroomfolk?" Catra chuckled.

Adora softly caressed Catra's ear. "I would love you if you were a worm. As long as you still had these ears."

"Wow 'dora. I don't even think I would love myself if I were a worm. Maybe if I was a snake or something fine." Catra smiled as the soft feeling of Adora's hands continued their circular caressing motions.

"Are you saying you wouldn't love me if I was a worm?" Adora sassed.

“Oh I still would love you, I would just go on an epic grand quest to undo whatever magic turned you into a worm.” Catra paused, pulling her head away from Adora’s massages. She put her foot up on the side of a random pillar in the hallway. “To adventure!”

“Your Sea Hawk impression could use a bit of work,” Adora shook her head. “I do wonder what he and Mermista will wear. Given there’s literally no guys' fashion in there. Maybe he will rock one of the skirts.”

Catra gasped. “I sure hope not. I do not think he could rock a skirt. Also I think Mermista would shoot him. With his own gun if he tried.”

The girl's laughter as they continued back towards their bedroom reverberated off the castle walls.

The two weeks went by in a blur as the two girls talked and chatted and tried to figure out what everyone was going to do. Glimmer had decided on a very frilly and large dress. One of the ones that Catra and Adora both felt looked like a wedding dress. Bow had a modified crop top and skirt combo, similar to the one Adora was going to choose. He only requested that Shtruff modify it to look more like something called a kilt. Apparently this was a more “Manly” skirt from a tribe from a distant land in Etheria. Although Bow was very insistent that he didn’t care about it himself, he just felt it would fit beside Glimmer's “Explosion of frilly fluffy girliness” as he said.

Nobody had figured out what Mermista and Sea Hawk would be wearing and the couple was remaining very tight lipped about it. Almost as if wanting to surprise everyone.

“What’s taking Shtruff so long!” Adora was pacing back and forth in their shared room.

Catra followed Adora’s movements as she went back and forth through the room. “You’re more worried than usual, what’s up?”

“Ughhh. I…” Adora exhaled. “Okay. Catra. You know how we kinda… Kinda sorta ruined the princess ball last year? Not saying we should beat ourselves up just… we kinda did right?”

“Yeah. We were in the middle of a war. I think everyone understands.” Catra shrugged.

“Okay so. What if Frosta had a way where we could repay ourselves for doing that…”

“What are you saying Adora… spit it out dummy. Just… say it?”

“Okay so. In those shows that Frosta watches, one of the things is the groups sing and dance together and I kinda sorta signed us up to do a dancing and singing performance!?” The words tumbled out of Adora’s mouth fast. “That’s okay right. You’re okay with that right?”

“Oh yeah sure no big deal.” Catra rolled her eyes.

“Oh thank god I was so worried that —“

“Yeah no. It’s no big deal at all. Not like we now have a month to rehearse some dance and sing. I get that you and I both kill it at Karaoke but. Dummy. Maybe you should have asked me before. —“ It was clear that Catra’s initial acceptance had been sarcastic.

A soft knock on their door heralded the arrival of their outfits and stopped any further discussion. Shtruff dropped off two wrapped packages of their outfits and looked towards the two girls. “And if you need any alterations or they don’t fit right just let me know!” Shtruff bowed and hastily left the ladies to the privacy of the room.

In a few moments both of their dresses were on, along with all of the various bits and bobs and accessories. Catra looked at herself in the mirror and the large black bow perched atop her head both stunned and confused her. Why did she look so good in this?

The biggest issue for Catra however was the skirt. Although it was mostly black and the pink trim didn’t bother her, the length and frilliness of it was not what she was expecting. The mesh stockings however did cut some of the frilliness from it and added a more rebellious vibe to the outfit.

“I’m not sure it’s me.” Catra sighed as she continued looking at the frilly skirt. “I just don't—“ Catra found her words stopped as she looked at Adora who’s eyes seemingly were in the shape of hearts. Surely that was her imagination.

“You… look. GORGEOUS! Catra.” Adora panted. “Oh my god, you have the cutest and nicest legs ever? How did I not notice that? And the skirt goes with your natural fur colour so well.”

“Does it? Really…”

“Yes!” Adora looked around and got down on her knees and caressed Catra’s legs. “These legs are so beautiful and so powerful and you look so so good in stockings.”

“Uhhh. Adora.” Catra tried pushing down the blush that was creeping over her face and ears. “Please stop fondling my legs.”

Adora jumped up, her face now very visibly beet red. “S-s-sorry! I got carried away. We should just… get ready for this dance ahahaha.”

“Yeah. Please?” Catra coughed out. “I’m already nervous enough with having to do a dance. On stage. In front of everyone, for this too. Even if it doesn't really matter and it's not like it's a competition where we are being judged."

"If you can win my heart I have all the faith in the world that you will win all the attendee's hearts too."

"Only hopefully I won't date them all."

"CATRA!"

"What! You're the one who was just fondling my legs." Catra's head playfully shook as her eyes raised in silent judgement of Adora.

"Okay fair. I deserved that."

Adora stood up and Catra got to see Adora's outfit in full. The crop-top had Adora's stomach and all of her abdomen on display. Her pale skin was like a pearl, sculpted by both the power of She-ra inside her and Adora's own training.

Before Catra realized what she was doing she knelt down and gave a few kisses onto Adora's abs. Catra's hands gently rested on the small of Adora's back as she did so. "Mine. My Adora." Catra hushed out.

"Oh so it's not alright for me to admire your legs but…"

Catra didn't even register the rest of Adora's sentence as she jumped up almost as embarrassed as Adora was a few moments earlier. "Okay! I get it. Sorry. You just looked so cute in the outfit and… I just wanted to kiss your sculpted abdominals aaaah. I'm a freak!"

"Well this is an unexpected turn of events. Apparently dancing together is going to be even harder because we won't be able to keep our eyes and hands off each other." Adora smiled and winked playfully.

“I guess that means for our dance we should do something that has our hands on each other as much as possible.” Catra stuck her tongue out, returning the jest. “I can think of a few dance styles that fit this bill. And it would pay homage to our last encounter at the Princess ball.”

Dressing up was one thing, figuring out the clothes together was cute but… having to dance WHILE singing?! Catra was almost cursing Adora for having agreed to that, without consulting her. As Catra’s mind thought back to the last princess ball, where she danced with Adora as a frenemy, she realized this was doable. This was a duet, with two of them in these frilly, fluffy, and puffy costumes. If they could dance together as two people who hated each other, or at least tried to tell each other they hated each other, this was doable.

“Hey Adora?”

“Yeah?”

Catra shuffled over to Adora, her arms enveloping around Adora’s bare midsection before she pulled her close. “I’m okay with the dance. We’re gonna look so hot doing it, and nobody will know what hit them.”

Without any hesitation Catra planted a kiss on Adora’s lips, feeling Adora’s hands as they enrobed her fur and pulled her close. The frills of the respective dresses shuffled as the two girls continued holding each other tight. Adora returned Catra’s kiss with one of her own.

“I am sorry though Catra, I really should have asked.”

Catra placed a finger up to Adora’s mouth. “Hush love, it’s fine. After dating you for a year, you really can be a big dummy sometimes. And I’ve learned to live with that. The Adora I’ve loved since we were both Horde cadets.”

Weeks of practice. Weeks of learning how to sing while also being on their feet. Weeks of learning the dance moves and weeks of wondering what Sea Hawk would be wearing to the Princess Ball. It had all come down to this.

“Nervous?” Adora grasped Catra’s hand as she peeked out from the curtains.

Catra shook her head. “Kinda. More nervous about Mermista actually shooting Sea Hawk. With his own gun. His dress is almost more frilly than hers. But damn does he ever rock that.”

“That’s Sea Hawk for you.” Adora laughed. “But we’re on in five. Last chance to back out.”

“We can’t do any worse than the last princess ball. Let’s do it.”

5 Minutes. It seemed like 2 seconds before Catra and Adora stepped out on the darkened stage. Twin magical beams of light shone on their position from the left and right. The music started.

What followed next was a blur of lace, dancing andpumping rhythms. The crowd cheered and every dance move was executed flawlessly. Catra and Adora were so synchronized in both physical movements and their own vocalizations that if Catra didn’t know any better, she could have sworn they had literally turned into idols in that moment.

Catra panted as she looked out to the cheering crowd. Small pillars of glowing lights flickered from a sea of hands. Catra had seen them in some of the episodes they had watched for research, they were called Lightsticks and the movements made with them were affectionately called wotagei.

As Catra glanced over to Adora, she was clearly just as awestruck at the sea of waving lights. "We did it, Adora. We really did it!"

Adora’s eyes finally broke from their wide-eyed trance. "We... We really did!" Adora gasped.

They both turned to each other and clasped their hands, elbows touching elbows as they stared closely into each other's eyes. No words were shared, but soft smiles toldthem exactly how they felt about each other. It was a sense of pride, of something they had done together. Something that they had shared. Their love was on display to all of Etheria, and celebrated.

The crowd erupted in loud cheers and the two saw even more of a flurry of activity from the wave of lights.

A chant that started as a soft murmur got louder and louder. The two finally started to make it out.

Catradora. Catradora. Catra-Dora!

In unison the crowd brought the lightsticks back on the words “Catra” and forward on the “Dora” part of the phrase.

Adora giggled. "Ohhh we have a cute ship name.”

"Wanna give them what they want?” Catra spoke softly yet almost huskily at the same time.

“May as well.”

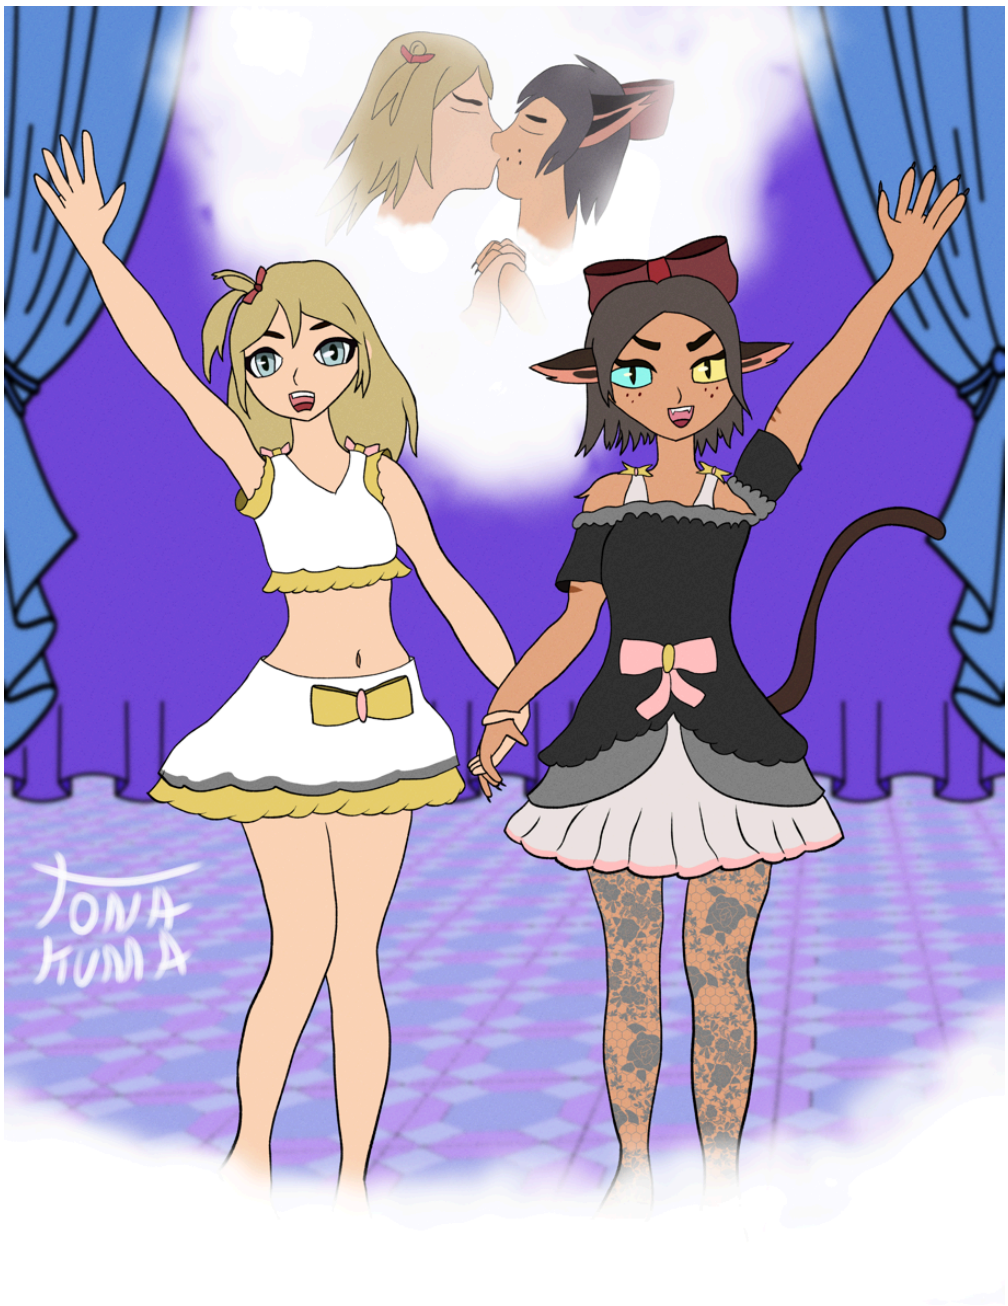

With both their hands still clasped and held up close to their faces, they leaned forwards closer to each other. The sweetness as their soft lips met was gently mixed in with the salty taste of sweat, a sign of their labour of love in dancing and singing. Dancing and singing together. As a unit.

They were both pretty sure they heard a loud declaration of disgust from Frosta somewhere in the sea of cheers as they kissed. But as their mouths continued to be locked in its salty and sweet embrace, it was as if all the stress melted away. They both mentally forgave themselves for their horrible antics at the last princess ball.

This kiss would be just as memorable as their fight at the last princess ball. But for all the right reasons.

A beacon. A sign. That love can conquer all. That it's better to love than it is to fight.

Plus, they had to both admit, they looked damn cute in these dresses.
