Falling For You

by NotMyDestiny

Summary

Just a bit of cozy Catradora Fall fluff.

Colorful leaves drifted softly down from the trees and scattered across the dirt paths in slowly building piles of rust, scarlet, and gold. Clusters of plump, round pumpkins in tangles of curly vines had sprung up between the trees. A light crisp breeze rustled the newly fallen leaves, sending them twirling through the air as soft golden light streamed down through the leaf-sparse branches. The Whispering Woods had never looked quite like this before.

Adora and Catra walked together down the winding forest paths. The crisp leaves crunched beneath their feet, and a pleasant earthy smell filled the air all around them.

"I can't believe Entrapta turned the forest into her own experiment in the name of science," Catra said, half-amused and half-exasperated.

Adora marveled at the intriguing and beautiful changes all around them. The usually darkened and mystical Woods were suddenly bursting with warm, bright tones like she had never seen before. She took it all in with a look of total awe and just the slightest touch of worry in her wide blue eyes. "Well, whatever she did, it really does look pretty amazing! Hopefully, there aren't any real impacts. We'll take a look around to find out and then report back to Glimmer."

Her joy quickly won out over her concerns in all of this startling natural beauty. Adora found she couldn't quite keep herself from instinctively lifting her hand outward to try and catch a few of the bright, flitting bits of foliage. A small crimson star-shaped one fluttered onto her palm, and she stared at it with wonder and awe.

"You're supposed to be on a mission, not frolicking in the leaves," Catra said teasingly, though her mismatched eyes clearly showed her affection.

"This is investigative frolicking," Adora insisted even as a soft pink blush rose in her cheeks. "You just like getting me flustered."

“Maybe, but you know you like it,” Catra said softly as she bumped her shoulder gently. “You just can’t resist being distracted by shiny new things.”

“I know you can’t admit it, but you love it when I’m happy.” Adora countered playfully.

Catra really, really did love that. Adora’s smile filled her with feelings she couldn’t even really describe. It made her want to do anything to keep it there as often as possible. They both never really got to experience things quite like this as children in the Horde, and Catra loved seeing Adora’s childlike delight.

Catra reached down quickly and gathered a whole handful of colorful crumpled leaves. She tossed them playfully at Adora, who squealed as she tried to dodge them unsuccessfully. Their laughter rang out warm and true. Hearing Catra’s laugh so real and full made Adora’s chest squeeze in the best way possible.

Catra leaned in to brush a stuck leaf lightly from Adora’s golden hair and let her hand slide gently down the curve of her cheek.

In the Horde, they had learned to roughhouse instead of showing affection and only now had they begun to be a bit more comfortable with these softer types of touches.

Adora leaned into the caress, a soft warmth filling her from head to toe. She let her hand brush softly against Catra’s hand. Their fingers naturally threaded together, and Adora gave her a small, affectionate squeeze. Catra’s tail wrapped gently around Adora’s waist for a moment. It felt amazing to have come through so many years of struggle into this type of tenderness.

“You’re beautiful in this light,” Adora said softly, almost a bit surprised she had actually said it aloud. But the soft golden glow and the warm, colorful tones all around them really did bring out the amberish highlights in Catra’s fur and hair.

“You’re such a sap,” Catra quickly replied, even as a rosy blush pinkened her cheeks as well, and she leaned in even more toward Adora.

The warmth of Catra pressed close made Adora sigh happily. The unusual beauty of the woods made all their responsibilities fade away as they just enjoyed these moments together.

A playful spark flickered suddenly in Catra's eye, and Adora could tell she had gotten some sort of mischievous idea.

"What are you thinking?" Adora questioned with a mix of anticipation and a little bit of concern.

But without answering, Catra suddenly swung their entwined hands forward and leapt toward a particularly large drift of leaves, pulling Adora along with her. They fell into the pile with a soft plop, the displaced leaves rising around them in a riot of color and then showering quickly back down upon them in a rich cascade. They heard the flutter of birds twittering at the small commotion.

They collapsed against one another, their limbs entangled together. Their eyes met, and the world seemed to slow. Adora had seen those mismatched eyes so fierce in battle, but rarely so soft and sweet and tender. Their breathing synced in a rhythm together. The leaves beneath them were cool and crisp against their skin, which contrasted with the warmth of being pressed together.

Adora felt the gentle touch of Catra's hand on her shoulder and her tail curling around her wrist. Catra purred contentedly, and Adora smiled fondly at Catra, knowing that purr was special, just for her. It was something Catra had always done to provide Adora with comfort and care. Their foreheads pressed together. A gesture so calm and content, it was like everything around them faded away as they just focused in on one another.

Catra was surprised at how comfortable she felt in this moment. How Adora could make her feel so safe, even in her vulnerability. How moments with Adora just felt so right. She never would have thought that she could let herself be seen like this so openly with anyone. This could truly only ever happen with Adora.

Catra caught a leaf in her own hand, a big three-pointed rusty orange one. Holding it out by the stem, she stroked it gently across Adora's cheek and jaw. Adora shivered slightly at the tickling sensation and leaned into Catra even more. The softness of Catra's fur against her face made a pleasant warmth radiate through her. Catra brushed her lips ever so softly against her temple, and Adora felt herself melt. Right now, there was nothing more to do than just lie together wrapped in each other's arms in a blanket of colorful leaves.

After a few more quiet moments, they reluctantly got up, brushing leaves from each other and laughing. They walked hand-in-hand toward the pumpkins. The breeze rustled around them like it was almost alive, nudging leaves to swirl about like a playful spirit joining in their frolic.

It seemed that this particular experiment of Entrapta's hadn't caused anything more than some spontaneous joy. As the breeze swayed the branches of the trees, the light danced among the leaves like a shimmer of gold on crimson. The Woods were transformed all around them, and for now, they were theirs to just enjoy together.
