Finn's Fear

by TheStarGayzingEtherianCollection (TheStarGayzingEtherian)

Summary

Finn hasn't had the best life, going from one foster family to the next and always getting sent back to that horrible orphanage. Now though, little Finn has the best mothers they could ask for in Adora and Catra... but one night, something sparks those old fears up again. (Catradora, Canon, Angst/Hurt/Comfort)

Notes

See the end of the work for notes

Finn always felt lucky to have two amazing mothers in Adora and Catra. As far as they were concerned, they were the best parents they'd ever had, not that Finn had been in a foster family long enough to feel like they belonged. To be honest, at this point, Finn was glad that someone had wanted to take care of them at all. They hadn't had the best life, growing up as one of the many orphaned children displaced by the war.

Their life had felt like one big circle. They would be adopted by a family, try to fit in with them for a few months… but eventually, something bad would happen. Maybe their new parents would just decide they couldn't handle raising a child, having done so on a whim because so many children in general needed homes. Or maybe there was something about Finn themself that made people give up on them.

They had apparently been found as an infant kitten in the middle of a Magicat village, raised in an orphanage that quite frankly… was terrible to them. The people running it had no idea how to raise a Magicat, often scolding Finn off for things that were honestly harmless, like using the side of their bed as a scratching post. The other kids would also pick on Finn too, being the only Magicat in a whole orphanage of humans.

However, Finn hoped that things could be different now, that the pain would be over and they'd actually now be able to have a life someone of their age deserved. Plus, Catra, their Mama, was a Magicat herself and she too had grown up in a horrible environment. So she knew exactly what Finn had been through and thus, she did her best to make sure Finn was treated right.

One evening though, Finn was truly worried things were going to come crashing down for them all over again. They'd been in their room playing games on their Tracker Pad, when they heard their mothers' voices from downstairs. Being a curious little cat, Finn crept off their bed and walked to their door, pushing it ajar.

They couldn't hear what their mothers were saying, but it sounded… intense. And yet, Finn wanted to know more, because a part of them was worried… it was about them. That somehow, despite having She-Ra and her wife as their mothers, even they didn't want Finn in their lives.

Creeping out of their room with their tail between their legs, they slowly crawled downstairs to the ground floor of their family's suite. As they clung to a wall on the side of the hall, they saw their mothers arguing. Not just arguing, they were on the verge of a full-on brawl with how intense they were.

They'd never seen them this angry at one another before, rage filling their faces. It brought back horrible memories, seeing people's faces contorted by so much rage that they looked like monsters. Monsters that would plague Finn's nightmares every night. So much screaming and yelling. So loud. So very loud.

"... Adora would you stop being such a stubborn fucking fool and just listen to me!" Catra screamed.

"Catra, I had to go out there! Why can't you see that?!"

"Oh, I can see it alright, see that my wife is such a fucking useless idiot who never listens to a word I say and keeps making me scared half to fucking death every time she goes out without telling me!"

"Fine, you wanna be a stubborn brat about this? I don't care! Just be glad that I was out there today and that no one got hurt!"

"Oh, you have some fucking nerve, Adora!"

"What? Are you getting angry? That's always your go-to isn't it!" Adora growled. "Now wonder you fucking lost the war, Force Captain!"

"What in the flying fuck does that have to do with it?!"

“That you’re a fucking fur-covered hypocritical bitch is what you are! You wanna go and complain about my issues, look in the fucking mirror!"

“And you’re still a fucking hero who really should just be staying home and looking after her family for fucks sake!”

Finn’s eyes welled up with tears, the little cub whimpering at the yelling from the other room. They knew it was going to end like this, even the heroes of Etheria were going to be abusive parents, just like their previous foster families, always yelling and screaming. Maybe they deserved to be alone.

It was a cycle that had repeated itself too many times for Finn to count. They’d always end up with a family that was broken and struggling and full of anger… and anger that would always end up being taken out on them. They felt their cheek where a little scar was, a reminder of their abuse. They didn’t want to be hurt again and sent back to that godawful orphanage.

“Oh shut your fucking mouth, Catra!” Adora roared. “You’ve never really understood what being She-Ra is like for me!”

“You’re the one who needs to shut up and take that stupid sparkly sword of yours out of your fucking ass!” Catra growled back.

“Go on, why don’t you make me, you fucking hairball!” Adora growled, to which Finn then heard the sound of something crashing and breaking against the floor.

Hearing their voices and the sound of crash cut through the air, Finn rushed into the room, mewling and crying. “Please stop!!!!”

Adora and Catra just stared in shock as their child burst into the room, tears streaming down their cheeks. In a moment, the anger completely faded from both of them, their maternal instincts overriding any other emotion that might have been blazing through them. “Finn?” Adora wondered.

“Stop shouting please!” Finn screamed, crying. “Please stop shouting, please don’t hurt each other… please don’t hurt me….”

Catra gasped, and she and Adora looked at each other and instantly, both women regretted everything they’d just said to each other. Neither of them had meant to scare Finn… nor had they wanted to hurt each other either. But what was done was done and right now, their kitten needed them.

Adora turned around and looked at Finn. “Finn, it’s okay, we’re not-”

“No, you’re gonna take it out on me, say I’m nothing but a waste of space and kick me and punch me and I’ll get sent back to that awful home!” Finn cried. “Well, I’m not gonna go through that again!”

The little cub ran out of the room and up the stairs, whimpering all the way, the tears still flowing from their eyes.

Adora and Catra rushed after Finn, but their child had already slammed the door shut. Adora walked to the door and gently knocked on it, knowing that no matter what had happened between her and Catra just now, Finn was more important than anything. They would both literally die for Finn if given the chance.

“Finn? What’s wrong?”

“Go away! Don’t hurt me!”

“We’re not gonna hurt you, kiddo,” Catra said softly.

“You were gonna hurt mommy!”

Catra stopped and sighed. “No, I wasn’t. I promise we weren’t gonna hurt each other. Please, let us in.”

“No! I won’t go back there!”

“Back… where?” Adora asked.

“The orphanage!”

Adora and Catra looked at each other with confusion. “Finn, we promise, nothing’s going to happen to you. It’s okay, just let us in and we can talk.”

There was silence, which Adora took as an answer. She unclicked the door and she and Catra walked inside. Finn was there, shivering under the blankets, utterly terrified still.

“Finn?” Adora asked. “Are you there?”

The small six-year-old felid poked their head out from the blankets, tears still streaming down their cheeks. They mewed a little as their mothers sat down on the bed. Catra tried to reach out to Finn, but the little one just scampered back, curling up into a ball. Catra was disheartened at the sight, remembering how she used to do the same thing as a child.

“We're not going to hurt you, Finn.”

“No! This happens with every family I get sent to! Everyone starts fighting and arguing because everything is so bad and then I get hurt and sent back to that bad orphanage!”

Catra then grabbed Finn and pulled them into the tightest hug. “Like hell that’s going to happen! You’re not going back to that awful place!” She was crying now too, the thought of losing her baby scaring her. “Stars, I’m so sorry, Finny…”

Adora cried too, joining Catra in hugging little Finn. “We’re so sorry Finn… we didn’t mean to scare you with our yelling. I didn’t even realise you could hear us… but we’re never going to hurt you and you’re never going to be taken away from us, okay?”

Finn looked up at their mothers. “Okay… I’m sorry…” They whimpered.

“You have nothing to be sorry for, little one,” Catra whispered, pressing a kiss to Finn’s head. “Everything is going to be okay now.”

“You promise?” their little child whimpered.

“We promise,” Adora and Catra said together, both of them now holding Finn tightly. “And anyway, we had your aunt Sparkles shut down that orphanage anyway. Too many kids were getting messed up in that place.”

“Oh,” Finn’s ears drooped when they heard that.

“Yeah, you have nothing to fear, little cub,” Catra said.

“I… I love you, moms,” Finn mewled, still crying.

“And we love you more, Finn, more than anything else,” Adora whispered. “You mean everything to us.”

Finn wiggled in their mother’s embrace. “Um… moms?”

“Yeah?” Catra asked.

“Why… why were you fighting? It really sounded like you wanted to hurt each other.”

Adora and Catra both sighed in regret and in a way, felt a bit embarrassed. Because it wasn’t that big of a deal anyway, but well, they both had anger issues that even now still needed to be worked on. To be honest, neither of them had thought that level of anger was still within them.

“Your mama went out on a She-Ra mission without telling me,” Catra explained. “Apparently that skull-faced freak Skeletor tried to attack Salineas, along with half a dozen of his henchgoons, all with some pretty nasty weapons that could have hurt your mama pretty bad.”

“But she’s always doing that, right?” Finn wondered.

“Yeah, but she’s got a wife and child back home now,” Catra argued. “And it’s not like Skeletor couldn’t easily be handled by your uncle Adam, or Bow Or Glimmer, of half the guards in this whole castle. I should know, I trained a good bunch of them.”

“But I didn’t listen, and… I’m sorry,” Adora admitted. “I should have told you before I left, Catra.”

“I mean… I’d have still been pissed, but yeah you should have… but we can put that behind us now,” Catra said, before kissing her wife. “See, Finn, I gave your mom a kiss. I wouldn’t do that if I was still mad at her, would I?”

“And you really weren’t mad at me?”

“Of course not!” Adora reassured Finn. “You are our little golden angel, we could never be mad at you.”

“Okay…” Finn accepted, purring a little. “Can we get some food? I’m really hungry.”

“Tell you what, I’ll head down to the kitchens and order us up a big ass banquet and you can stuff your face with as much grub as you want,” Catra said. “That sound good to you?”

“Yeah!” FInn chirped, their little tail wiggling with excitement, nuzzling up to both of their moms.

While Finn was probably not going to overcome the pain of their past overnight, Adora and Catra would remain determined to make sure that Finn would never grow up like they did, that they deserved to have the best family they could ask for.

End Notes

Started off this week writing about Finn and now, I again have another fic featuring our favourite adorable cat-child. This one comes to us from a prompt by my dear friend, Astryn! I hope you like it... and it hopefully didn't break your hearts too much.

If you liked the fic, please be sure to comment!
