heal what has been hurt

by Aphrodite_Ourania

Summary

(Title from Tangled's Healing Incantation)

A familiar fluttering rose up in Adora's chest. It was a such a simple gesture that they shared for every injury, a quick little rush of dopamine or serotonin or whatever to make the pain not as bad. In those brief little moments Adora wondered what it would feel like to kiss and be kissed by Catra. A real kiss, not a silly little "healing" ritual.

Childhood friends Catradora AU where kisses really do make the pain go away.

Notes

Just a quick little fluff piece before I go back to writing the heaviness of my main fic.

I do have some CONTENT/TRIGGER WARNINGS to issues however for this is a literal hurt (as in injuries) fic there are descriptions of said injuries including mentions of blood and cuts. There is also a section about menstruation and menstrual cramps but besides that we should be good to go!

And like last time this isn't connected to dayfol but I will always headcanon Latinas Catradora forever and always.

Enjoy!

See the end of the work for more notes

"Don't let go." Catra was normally brave, but she had a death grip on the handlebars of her brand new "big girl bike." Adora and her twin brother Adam had already made the transition from three to two wheels and Catra thought it would be best to ask her best friend for help. Adora found it surprising that the same girl who climbed the tallest trees in the neighborhood was afraid of a little bike. "I won't until you're ready." Adora assured, her hand still firmly on the seat of her bike. "Promise?" Catra looked back at her with wide and panicked eyes. "I promise." And Adora meant it. Catra started pedaling and moving forward. She was bit wobbly, but Adora followed behind dutifully. She'd follow Catra anywhere.

Even though she was only six she understood her feelings enough to know she loved Catra in a different way she loved her other friends and her family. She couldn't give a name to the type of love it was. She just knew that it was strong and maybe the strongest emotion she'd ever feel in her life. The made it to the end of the block and Catra wasn't ready yet. They weren't allowed to leave the street, so they turned back around and made a few laps before Catra declared she wanted to be let go. She pedaled slow and steady, looking forward and smiling widely at Adora who stood just a few feet away. "I did it!" Catra was so proud and sure of herself that she sped up and Adora was so caught up in sharing the joy that neither of them saw the rock right in front of Catra's wheel.

Adora had never been more glad for the first aid kit her parents made her keep in a little fanny pack whenever she went to play outside than she was in this moment. Catra had fallen to the side and hit her head. There was only a small cut on her forehead that Adora quickly patched up and kissed tenderly the way her father would do for her and her brother. Catra moved her hand up and touched the band-aid with her bottom lip quivering. "My head hurts." She whined, her eyes beginning to well up with tears. Adora moved into action to help Catra walk back to her house. Her parents would come back for the bike later. By the time they had gotten there Catra was fully sobbing and her hand hadn't moved from the spot where her band-aid was.

“Stop moving.” Catra was firm in her instruction, wrapping Adora’s ankle as securely as she could. Her hands were a little shaky from the coffee she snuck from her mother earlier that day but she was doing good all in all. “Sorry.” Adora winced, equally as jittery for the same coffee theft reasons as Catra. They were a mature eleven now, quite able to handle caffeine. Or so they thought. Adora in her hyperactivity thought that running up and down her icy driveway was a good idea until her ankle went one way and the rest of her body went the other.

“You’re going to be the death of me.” Catra said it with a hint of a smile so Adora knew she wasn’t all that serious. “Sorry again.” Adora made an effort to stay still as Catra started her wrapping journey again from the beginning. It was silent as Catra finished up. She leaned back and tilted her head at different angles with her tongue sticking out. “Perfect. Oh! Almost forgot.” She leaned down again and placed a kiss to the wrapping.

A familiar fluttering rose up in Adora’s chest. It was a such a simple gesture that they shared for every injury, a quick little rush of dopamine or serotonin or whatever to make the pain not as bad. In those brief little moments Adora wondered what it would feel like to kiss and be kissed by Catra. A real kiss, not a silly little “healing” ritual.

Adora was always wondering something these days.

Wondering if she’d always have a little hump on her nose, wondering if Adam’s bangs would ever grow out, wondering if she’s be taller than him, wondering if it was wrong to love her best friend the way she did, wondering if said best friend could love her in that way too.

"You’re thinking too hard.” Catra was standing now and she had affectionately poked Adora’s forehead.

She wondered if that would ever make her heart not skip a beat.

In the middle of Catra's bed there was a lump of blankets making very human sounds of agony. "Why does it take so long for the Midol to kick in?" Her voice was strained and faint as she popped out her from her blanket cocoon. Adora didn't have a real answer so she just sat down on the bed, taking special care not to sit anywhere on the lump that was Catra. "Maybe it's just not compatible with your body. Like how I can take Advil but not Tylenol." Catra groaned again, loudly this time and kicked her way out of the covers which she instantly regretted. "Would rather be hit by a semi-truck. We gotta do this shit every month?"

When they had first learned about menstruation and all it entailed they had both been horrified, Catra especially. She thanked her lucky stars that she wasn't "accursed" like other girls their age until her status as a late bloomer gotten her teased more than a few times. Her mother assured her that it was perfectly normal to not have a period yet but Catra insisted that she should at least get a little spotting before her quince. She complained that it wouldn't make sense for her to become a woman before even going through puberty.

Well, the universe heard her and granted her wish.

She was bent over with her arms wrapped around her middle. "Well, it only hurts so much because you're technically having contractions." Adora offered.

"Contractions!" Catra's voice went up an octave. Adora was just parroting what Mara had told her when she had her first period but she realized that wasn't as helpful to Catra as it was to her at the time. "I'm having contractions?! The blood wasn't enough?!" She was in distress now and Adora wished she had never said anything in the first place. "Would it help it I kissed it better?" She was only making the suggestion to help lift Catra's mood but Catra was willing to take her up on her offer. "Okay." She slowly laid back and unwrapped her arms from her waist. Adora lifted up her shirt just a bit and kissed a spot just under her belly button.

How red her face must have been when she came back up.

Who knew that drunken playfighting could lead to busted lips? Not Adora that was for sure. She only went to a few parties a year anyway but now she was in her final year of college and soccer was over she decided the Hell with it.

Thus the impromptu not-brawl that resulted in her hiding out in the kitchen to ice it with a bag of frozen vegetables.

"Have you no regard for your wellbeing?" Catra was standing in the doorway with her arms crossed over her chest. "Not really, no." Adora had to move the bag to speak. Catra gasped a little as she stepped forward.

"It looked bad but not this bad." She was cupping Adora's face in her hands now, her thumb ghosting over the cut in her lip. "I think you need some Neosporin for that or something. There should be uh, some in the bathroom statistically."

Catra had turned to leave but Adora stopped her with a hand on her wrist. "Or you could kiss it better instead?" Adora asked softly. It had been a few years since either one of them had an injury to warrant such a thing. Catra scoffed in that aloof way that she did before turning back around. "Your lip's busted dummy. You want me to kiss you on the mouth?" She didn't sound as skeptical about it as Adora expected.

"Uh, yes? I maybe kind of always wanted you to kiss me on the mouth. With your mouth. When I wasn't injured on my mouth that is. But yeah. Mouth kisses." Catra laughed and shook her head. "You're drunk and I'm sober so no mouth kisses tonight." Instead though Catra kissed the tip of her index finger before pressing it to Adora's lips. Adora couldn't help but to pout. "That doesn't count."

"I'll give you a kiss on the mouth that counts when you sober up if you stop being a cry baby."

Adora had never shut up so fast before in her entire life.
