Heroes of Etheria and Earth

Posted originally on the Archive of Our Own at http://archiveofourown.org/works/31707850.

Rating:
Teen And Up Audiences

Archive Warning:
No Archive Warnings Apply

Categories:
F/F, F/M, M/M

Fandoms:
僕のヒーローアカデミア | Boku no Hero Academia | My Hero Academia, She-Ra and the Princesses of Power (2018)

Relationships:
Bakugou Katsuki/Kirishima Eijirou, Adora/Catra (She-Ra), Minor or Background Relationship(s), Netossa/Spinnerella (She-Ra), Entrapta/Hordak (She-Ra), Perfuma/Scorpia (She-Ra), Mermista/Sea Hawk (She-Ra), Bakugou & Catra, Kirishima & Adora, Bakugou Katsuki & Midoriya Izuku

Characters:
Bakugou Katsuki, Kirishima Eijirou, Adora (She-Ra), Catra (She-Ra), Spinnerella (She-Ra), Netossa (She-Ra), Entrapta (She-Ra), Hordak (She-Ra), Micah (She-Ra), Glimmer (She-Ra), Bow (She-Ra), Scorpia (She-Ra), Perfuma (She-Ra), Mermista (She-Ra), Sea Hawk (She-Ra), Double Trouble (She-Ra), Class 1-A (My Hero Academia), Midoriya Izuku

Additional Tags:
Crossover, mlm, Fluff, Gay, Angst, Fluff and Angst, Soft Bakugou Katsuki, Established Relationship, Bakugou Katsuki Swears A Lot, Catra Swears (She-Ra), wlw, Canon Lesbian Relationship, Sleepy Cuddles, Cuddling & Snuggling, Bakugou Katsuki Gets Character Development, Insecure Kirishima Eijirou, Not Beta Read, Kirishima Eijiro Gets Character Development

Language:
English

Stats:
Published: 2021-06-03 Completed: 2021-06-08 Words: 24,615 Chapters: 17/17

Heroes of Etheria and Earth

Posted originally on the Archive of Our Own at http://archiveofourown.org/works/31707850.

Rating:
Teen And Up Audiences

Archive Warning:
No Archive Warnings Apply

Categories:
F/F, F/M, M/M

Fandoms:
僕のヒーローアカデミア | Boku no Hero Academia | My Hero Academia, She-Ra and the Princesses of Power (2018)

Relationships:
Bakugou Katsuki/Kirishima Eijirou, Adora/Catra (She-Ra), Minor or Background Relationship(s), Netossa/Spinnerella (She-Ra), Entrapta/Hordak (She-Ra), Perfuma/Scorpia (She-Ra), Mermista/Sea Hawk (She-Ra), Bakugou & Catra, Kirishima & Adora, Bakugou Katsuki & Midoriya Izuku

Characters:
Bakugou Katsuki, Kirishima Eijirou, Adora (She-Ra), Catra (She-Ra), Spinnerella (She-Ra), Netossa (She-Ra), Entrapta (She-Ra), Hordak (She-Ra), Micah (She-Ra), Glimmer (She-Ra), Bow (She-Ra), Scorpia (She-Ra), Perfuma (She-Ra), Mermista (She-Ra), Sea Hawk (She-Ra), Double Trouble (She-Ra), Class 1-A (My Hero Academia), Midoriya Izuku

Additional Tags:
Crossover, mlm, Fluff, Gay, Angst, Fluff and Angst, Soft Bakugou Katsuki, Established Relationship, Bakugou Katsuki Swears A Lot, Catra Swears (She-Ra), wlw, Canon Lesbian Relationship, Sleepy Cuddles, Cuddling & Snuggling, Bakugou Katsuki Gets

Character Development, Insecure Kirishima Eijirou, Not Beta Read, Kirishima Eijiro Gets Character Development

Language:
English

Stats:
Published: 2021-06-03 Completed: 2021-06-08 Words: 24,615
Chapters: 17/17

Heroes of Etheria and Earth

by Generic_Enby_Shapeshifter

Summary

A rapidly opening portal ruins a private moment between Kirishima and Bakugou, and they suddenly find themselves in an unfamiliar war.

When the Heart of Etheria was stopped by the failsafe, it drove Horde Prime back, but it didn't kill him. Now, Etheria is locked in battle. But, it suddenly finds two new heroes to help it drive back Horde Prime once and for all.

Notes

I will add more tags as I flesh out the story more and more.

Disclaimer: I do not own any of these characters.

Ruined Moment

Class 1-A was enjoying a movie. Specifically, it was a horror movie. Nobody was entirely certain who the mastermind was, but somehow, a large portion of Class 1-A decided that a horror movie was the way to go.

Almost everybody cowered behind fortresses made of couches, blankets, and pillows. It was almost as if they were ready for the movie to spring forth from the large screen and attack all of them. Some of them had hot cocoa in their hands, while others opted for juice or water.

Some people huddled together, right up against one another. Kirishima and Bakugouu were one such couple. Although, it was very one sided. It was mostly Kirishima pressing himself as close as humanly possible to Bakugou. Bakugou was unperturbed by the movie itself. None of its suspenseful scenes or cheap jumpscares ever worked on him, but the presence of Kirishima pressed up against him had put him into a similar state of both fear and excitement.

Sato came back from the kitchen with a massive platter of cookies that had cooled down just barely enough for safe consumption. Nobody knew if he was being nice or if he actually just wanted to escape away from the horror movie that badly. It didn't matter though, because he was very good at making cookies.

Everyone scrambled over to get some, and between the two of them, Kirishima was the one who got up to got get cookies.

Sato had made sugar cookies. Kirishima got matching heart shaped cookies for him and Bakugou. He only hoped Bakugou would take the hint. Some of the other cookies were simple circular shapes, butterflies, and stars.

"Thank you." Kirishima whispered to Sato before scampering back to Bakugou. He handed the cookie to Bakugou and he accepted it. He looked down at its shape and then back to Kirishima. Kirishima merely scooted as close as he could to Bakugou and leaned his head on his shoulder.

Bakugou glanced around at the rest of the class to make sure no one was looking before softly smiling. He wrapped the blanket around Kirishima before pulling him closer.

Kirishima took a bite out of the cookie. The cookie itself was soft and crumbly, and melted in Kirishima's mouth. The melted cookie mingled nicely with the crispy grains of granulated sugar that topped the cookies.

"Mmmmm." Several people in Class 1-A responded softly upon eating the cookies.

The horror movie had made it to its climax, and Bakugou felt Kirishima grasp him noticeably more tight. He helped Kirishima by pulling him even closer and leaning closer to his ear.

“It’s alright.” He whispered, only loud enough for Kirishima to hear. In response, Kirishima nodded as profusely as he possibly could.

After what felt like an eternity, the horror movie was over. Iida stood once the credits had finished rolling.

“Now’s the time to go to sleep. It’s getting far too late, and everyone should start getting ready for bed. Kirishima pulled out his phone and checked the time.

10:23

For him, that wasn’t all too late, but he knew Bakugou was a much different story. He usually went to bed almost two hours prior. Maybe that’s why he got through the movie so easily, because he was falling asleep.

But the ways he had comforted Kirishima had been so deliberate and sweet. Maybe they were sweet because he was tired to be his usual prickly self. Regardless, Kirishima appreciated his presence, regardless of what kind of mood Bakugou was in.

“Eiji, you okay?” Bakugou asked in a hushed whisper. That was when Kirishima finally realized he was still gripping Bakugou for dear life. He shook his head.

“Still scared of that movie.” He admitted. Bakugou rolled his eyes.

“Get ready for bed, then meet me in front of my room.” He instructed, getting up and going upstairs back to his dorm room. Kirishima nodded long after Bakugou had already left before getting up and walking to the bathrooms.

He took a quick shower, got into his pajamas, brushed his teeth, and washed his face. Then, he hopped into his Crimson Riot themed slippers and trudged to Bakugou’s room. When he made it there, the door was closed, and he decided to wait for a moment before he finally knocked.

After a few moments, Bakugou opened the door and let him in. Once he was in, Kirishima took off his slippers and let himself fall onto the bed.

“Eiji, get off the bed.” Bakugou demanded.

“Whyyyy.” Kirishima groaned.

“I need to tuck you in, dumbass.” Bakugou said. Kirishima relented and got off the bed. Bakugo peeled the covers back and let Kirishima crawl underneath them. After which, he walked over to turn off the lights.

Kirishima had been doing just fine, that was, until it was dark. Then, the residual tension of the horror movie came back. Thankfully, after just a few moments of lying in darkness, he felt Bakugou crawl into the bed next to him. Kirishima scooted as close as he could, while Bakugou crossed his arms and stared up at the ceiling.

"You good right now?" Bakugou asked. Kirishima put his head on Bakugou's shoulder and pressed his back up against Bakugou.

"Yeah, thanks Kat." Kirishima said, snuggling up against Bakugou's shoulder. A few moments of dark silence passed.

"Eiji, can I kiss you?" Bakugou asked. Kirishima smiled. Bakugou would die before he admitted to anyone else that he really, really enjoyed kissing.

"Sure." Kirishima said, turning around to face Bakugou. Bakugou rolled from lying on his back to lying on his side, facing Kirishima. Then, he slung his left arm over Kirishima's shoulder to pull him in for a kiss.

Bakugou's lips pressed up against Kirishima's for a brief moment.

"Have you been using chapstick, Eiji?"

"Uh, no?" Bakugou groaned.

“Eijiiii, I need you to take care of yourself.” Bakugou scolded.

“I’m sorry, okay, I just kinda forget.” Kirishima said. Why did he have to care so much about all the little things so much? Although, Kirishima was relieved that someone worried about him. It was both a good and terrible feeling at the same time. He felt comfortable, and he never felt alone, but taking risks always felt selfish.

The problem is, heroes have to take risks.

Bakugou pressed his lips against Kirishima’s once more. Then, his hands began making their way down his back.

Then, suddenly, the two of them heard it. It was a strange, low hum that vibrated the room around them. The two of them shot up from the bed and Kirishima clung to Bakugou for dear life.

“Th-The horror movie, i-is it real?” Kirishima stammered, not wanting to consider the possibility. The only response Bakugou gave was clutching Kirishima closer.

Then, glowing lime green began to creep up the walls and surround them. The hum was impossibly loud now, and Kirishima could feel objects falling down in the dark. It was also accompanied by loud crackling and sparking.

“We gotta go. Now!” Bakugou shouted. Kirishima let go of Bakugou and leapt from the bed right after Bakugou. But suddenly, everything was consumed by lime green light.

Kirishima screamed. His eyes darted around in panic.

Then, two hands clutched his own.

“Look at me!” Bakugou demanded. Kirishima followed and gazed into the comfort of Bakugou’s eyes, trying to ignore the lime green reflected within them.

“I’m not gonna fucking let you get hurt, okay?” Bakugou asked firmly. Kirishima nodded. But even with Bakugou clutching his hands, he wasn’t sure what was going to happen, or what was happening at all.

The two of them fell into an endless abyss of crackling lime green, completely uncertain of where they were falling to or what would happen once they fell there.

Battle on Etheria

On the planet of Etheria.

The victory won by the failsafe had been a brief one. It had weakened Horde Prime's forces and drove them back. But, Horde Prime himself was a much more difficult matter.

He'd had a thousand years to gather all of his forces, and Etheria had only been given mere moments before his attack. That considered, Etheria was putting up a noble fight.

One of Horde Prime's ships hovered high above the battlefield, and dozens upon dozens of robots blanketed the ground, their powerful built in weapons ready to annihilate any foe.

Catra lunged forward. With a few furious slashes with her claws, she sent a robot crashing to the ground, and it sputtered and sparked as it died.

The only people who'd had enough time to show up were She-ra, Catra, Spinnerella, and Netossa. They were accompanied by a few former Horde soldiers, not to be confused with the endless forces of Horde Prime. They were armed with the improvised and somewhat unstable technology that Entrapta had thrown together alongside Hordak.

Spinerella spent a few moments gathering her power before unleashing a whirlwind into the crowd of robots. Countless foot soldiers of Horde Prime were sent rolling across the soil.

Suddenly, the guns from the space ship above flashed with energy, and a green bolt was fired down towards Catra.

However, She-Ra leapt forward and slashed her sword to form an x in midair. Where she slashed, a glowing mirage was left behind. The magic afterimages of her slashes detonated, sending the energy of the ship's blast in the exact opposite direction of Catra.

"Thanks babe!" Catra shouted, leaping forward to tear out the wiring of another robot.

"You're welcome!" She-ra shouted as she ran forward, her magical blade tearing through the robots armored exterior much easier than Catra's claws did.

The ship above began to charge its gun once more. In response, Spinerella gathered her power before sending a tumultuous orb of swirling wind flying up towards the ship. The blast connected with the tempest, and it exploded in midair, shaking the gunship.

"Keep doing that honey, I'll cover you!" Netossa shouted, using nets woven in the blink of an eye to entangle any encroaching foes.

“Adora! We probably need help for this one!” Catra shouted as she clashed with a robot.

“Yeah, but everyone’s too far away at the moment!” She-ra replied. She drew a horizontal mirage in midair, and the resulting explosion knocked several robotic soldiers to the ground which quickly blinked off. She briefly took a moment to regather her breath before charging forward once more.

It took Spinerella everything she had just to keep the blasts of the gunship at bay. Based on the size of the blasts, they would incinerate almost a third of the battlefield. Netossa tried not to show her exhaustion at constantly taxing her power, but she was beginning to feel it.

Even armed with Entrapta’s tech, the former Horde soldiers were struggling to fight of the impressively powerful foot soldiers.

But suddenly, a crackling lime colored gateway began to open hundreds upon hundreds of feet above the battlefield. It was well above the gunship, and Catra’s eyes widened.

“Are you damned serious! He’s calling in reinforcements!” Catra shouted, ferociously ripping the wires out of a robot’s throat.

“He’s finished the portal.” She-ra muttered beneath her breath, truly horrified for the first time in a while.

The portal took several moments to fully build, but when it finally let what was on the other side through, She-ra immediately had to take another take.

Suddenly, all of the lime green parted away, and the two boys had to rapidly take in what was happening.

They were falling out of a cotton candy pink sky towards a pastel colored world beneath them. Only, both of them could see green blasts of energy beneath them, and a massive vehicle easily hovering in the air.

“Kat! What do we do?!” Kirishima shouted.

“Falling won’t do shit to us, okay! The real problem is the massive ass battle going on! You activate your quirk, I’ll go off and figure out what the fuck is happening!” Bakugou shouted. He let go of Kirishima’s hands and blasted off, effectively flying over the battlefield.

Kirishima took a deep breath. Even with his quirk, it was going to be a hard fall.

Down on the ground, She-ra could see two figures falling out of the sky, holding hands. They didn't look like anything from Horde Prime's forces, and they certainly didn't act like it either.

But, her attention was rapidly drawn back to the battle before her. It didn't look like Horde Prime had been able to call in additional forces, which was a massive relief. However, one of the figures seemed to be flying via explosions.

The other fell straight for the ground, and didn't seem to be doing much to stop their fall.

She-ra immediately charged forward, cutting through a few soldiers on her way. She had no idea who this person was, but she wasn't about to let them fall to their death.

But, She-ra couldn't have hoped to make it in time. But, as they collided with the ground, the soil parted beneath them. Then, the figure leapt out, as if completely unharmed. She breathed a sigh of relief as she turned back towards the battlefield.

Bakugou took a few moments to survey the two sides fighting beneath him. One was much more uniform in appearance while the other was far more diverse. It looked evenly matched, meaning he could easily decide the battle.

The moment he saw green blasts flying towards Kirisihima, he knew who's side he was on.

"Die you mother fucking tin cans!" Bakugou screamed, letting his quirk rip robotic soldiers to pieces.

Kirishima was having a hard time, steeling himself against the blasts. His eyes darted around, but he was being fired upon from all directions. It was getting rapidly harder to maintain his quirk.

Then, Bakugou swooped in utterly annihilated anything around him. His massive frown shifted back to a devilish smile as he clearly indulged in the destruction he caused.

"Go towards the other people who aren't shooting at us. I'll go get rid of this floating hunk of crap!" Bakugou cursed, shooting himself up from the ground. Kirishima nodded before reactivating his quirk and making his way towards the other combatants in the battlefield.

Within moments, Bakugou was upon the battleship and began to unloud explosions into the side of it. However, the metal was tough, and his explosions only left behind faint scorch marks.

"Tough asshole aren't you?!" Bakugou barked, flying around the ship to search for a weakpoint. The massive gun of the ship frantically tried to follow him, but he was far too fast.

Back on the ground below, Catra could see somebody charging directly towards her. He was one of the people who'd fallen out of the sky. He had spiky red hair, and didn't look even remotely prepared for a battle.

She had her claws at the ready.

"Hey spiky, who are you?!" She asked in a shout.

"Uh, I'm Kirishima! What's going on?!" He asked. Catra rolled her eyes. How had this idiot just charged out of the horde's ranks.

"I'm trying to fight these robots. Can you help?!" Catra asked, lunging forward and past him.

"Sure!" He replied, running after Catra.

Strangely, he fought in a similar way to Catra, only, he took all of the robot's blasts head on with rather little issue. His entire body appeared sharper, stiffer, and harder. It took him a few moments for each robot, but he turned his foes into scrap metal.

High above, Bakugou kept trying to search for a weak point. Then, he finally became annoyed by the gun that kept trying to track him and combusted himself towards it. He stood atop the barrel, where it couldn't even hope to reach him.

He put his palm against it, and a sound of popping and sparking mingled with the other sounds of the battlefield as he prepared to unleash an incredibly large blast.

The gun was completely annihilated, and thus rendered useless. Down below, Spinerella breathed a sigh of relief and redoubled her efforts upon helping her wife.

Bakugou smiled at the weakness he'd created in the ship's armor. He held his hand forward, and gathered his power, preparing to unleash an explosion near the upper threshold of what he could unleash at once.

The ship was nearly torn in half, and it immediately began to fall down towards the world below. Bakugou leapt off and flew downwards, immediately zeroing in on Kirishima.

"Eiji get the fuck away from the falling ship!" Bakugou screamed. Kirishima nodded and followed his instructions.

"Edgy? I thought your name was Kirishima!" Catra shouted, leaping to easily keep up with Kirishima.

“Eiji. And only he can call me that.” Kirishima corrected.

“Okay rock brain.” Catra muttered, leaping back towards She-ra.

The ship crashed into the middle of the robots, probably crushing most of them far beyond functioning.

She-ra and Bakugou had no issue cleaning up the rest of the robots. Kirishima immediately ran towards Bakugou when the battle was over.

“Thanks Kat!” He said.

“What do you mean thank you? I’m just returning the favor for Camino!”

“No you’re not.” Kirishima said bluntly. Bakugou sighed.

“Alright fine you’re fucking welcome Eiji.” Bakugou said, making sure that no one was watching him as he hugged Kirisihima. Then, the moment he saw someone come into view, he shoved Kirishima away.

“Hello complete and utter strangers who helped us win the battle. Can you come with us? We promise we’ll be much nicer than they were.” A girl with blonde hair tied in a ponytail said, pointing at the wreckage of the ship.

“Sure!” Kirishima responded, a wide smile on his face. Bakugou merely shrugged his shoulders.

“Whatever.” He muttered.

And so, Bakugou and Kirishima went to join a couple of the princesses as they made their way back to their home.

Neither of the two had quite processed what had just happened to them, but for the moment, they didn't have a single second to spare for it.

Settling In

"Wait, uh, let me check if I have this right." Kirishima said, taking a deep breath.

He was gathered along with Bakugou and all of the other princesses. Glimmer, Bow, Scorpia, Perfuma, Mermista, Seahawk, Frosta, and Micah. However, neither of the two boys could even hope to remember all the names, especially considering some of them weren't even there.

"You're a princess." Kirishima said, looking a Glimmer.

"Yes." Glimmer replied.

"You're also the queen of… Brightmoon?" Kirishima asked.

"Yes." Glimmer responded.

"You're the king of Brightmoon." Kirishima said, looking Bow in the eye. He nodded.

"But you're… also a princess?"

“Yeah.” Kirishima’s eyebrow twitched. He used his hardening quirk and slammed his face into the table, sending cracks through it. He groaned in frustration, and Bakugou gently massaged his back.

“I don’t get what’s so confusing.” Glimmer said.

“Yeah.”

“Literally nobody in the history of ever has been confused.”

“Honestly same Rockhead, same.” Catra said, sighing. Adora turned to her, one of her eyebrows prominently raised.

“Anyways, this… discussion? It’s hardly important. What’s important is what the heck happened, who are you two, how did you get here, and what are you capable of?” Bow asked.

“I can create explosions with my sweat from my hands.” Bakugou said.

“Wait, you can do all of that stuff because you’re sweaty?” Catra asked.

“What?!” Bakugou asked in a shout, and Catra burst into giggles.

“I can harden my body.” Kirishima replied tersely, demonstrating it by using it in his arm.

“So, you can use both of these things to fight, right?” Bow asked.

“Yup!” Kirishima replied enthusiastically. Bakugou merely kept his arms crossed, a grumpy look on his face.

“Excellent, welcome to the rebellion. Can someone lead them to a room?” Glimmer requested.

One of the guards stepped forward and led Bakugou and Kirishima from the chamber and through the halls of Brightmoon’s castle. Everything was pearly and pastel. Bakugou considered it utterly gaudy. Kirishima didn’t really care, for he didn’t realize that his own room was also an aesthetic mess.

The room they were led into had a massive window, a simple yet nicely sized bed, and floral decorations all around the chamber. Bakugou immediately slammed the door in the guard’s face and flopped down onto the bed.

“Hey Kat, don’t be so rude, they’re being really nice to us.” Kirishima said, walking towards the bed and sitting on it, his hand gently massaging Bakugou’s back.

“Kirishima, do you not get it?! I don’t know how it’s so easy for you to ignore what the hell just happened!” Bakugou shouted.

“Okay. Ummm, could you explain what you mean by that?” Kirishima asked.

“Kirishima, we were in my room a couple hours ago and now we’re in another fucking world and in the middle of a god damned war! Now, we have to fight in this war because one of the sides in it tried to kill us! I don’t even like these assholes. They’re so fucking weird and their customs are so fucking weird and their planet is so fucking weird and I hate… so much of it.” Bakugou ranted. His eyes were red and puffy, and they shimmered in the seemingly constant light.

“Well, I definitely wasn’t ready for this. I had no idea something like this could happen. But it did, and we’re here now. Fighting for these people seems like a good idea, I think they’re pretty nice, if a bit weird.” Kirishima said.

“You don’t get it do you?! You can’t get it through your thick fucking skull about how ridiculous this all is! And you’re just going along with it like nothing’s happened at all! Do you even care?” Bakugou asked. He immediately realized it was the wrong question to ask when he saw tears pouring down Kirishima’s cheeks.

“Just because I don’t sound as mad as you do doesn’t mean I don’t care.” Kirishima said, wiping his tears from his eyes with the back of his wrist.

“You’re right, I’m sorry. Just… tell me how you feel okay. Right now, I feel really alone, and I don’t like that feeling… at all.” Bakugou said.

“Well, I’m very confused. I want to know why this happened? I’m tired because I’m supposed to be asleep right now. I'm grateful that I’m here with you, and grateful that you saved me back there. I’m a little mad at you too, because you just assumed that I wasn’t having a hard time just because it didn’t look like it.” Kirishima said, a deep frown on his face.

“I’m sorry, I didn’t mean it, I was just way too mad. I’ll do my best to not do it again.” Bakugou promised. Kirishima smiled. He wrapped his arms around Bakugou and pulled himself into his chest, and his sobs were muffled.

“Thank you.” He said, his voice muffled. Bakugou’s eyelids just began to feel heavy. Kirishima had mentioned it earlier, but they had been supposed to fall asleep. However, instead they were forced to fight a battle and then stay awake for a few more hours.

Suddenly, there was a knock at the door of the room. Bakugou stood up, but Kirishima didn’t let go of him, instead opting to hold onto him with his arms and legs. Bakugou used one of his arms to keep Kirishima from falling to the floor while he used the other to open the door.

“What?” He asked. He used a serious tone, although it was hard to take him seriously when Kirishima was latched onto him.

“Dinner will be in about half an hour. Their majesties wanted you there, but they also wanted you to wear these.” The guard said, handing Bakugou a pile of folded clothes with two pairs of shoes perched atop it.

“Okay, now get lost.” Bakugou said, slamming the door in the guard’s face.

“You’re so rude.” Kirishima observed, his face still pressed up against Bakugou’s chest.

“And?” To that question, there was no response, and Bakugou smiled. It was a small triumph, but a triumph nevertheless.

He threw the folded clothes onto the bed before using both of his arms to help keep Kirishima latched on. He gently rocked Kirishima around before laying him down in bed.

He unfolded the clothes before holding back the desire to vomit.

The two had been given matching dark jackets, only it looked like the bottom half of the body section was completely gone. It was completely ludicrous if one wanted actual insulation. There were two crop tops, one of them being a pastel red while the other was a plain white. One pair of pants looked to be some form of skinny blue jeans, while other pair seemed to be a similar material, albeit in a color close to pitch black. Both of the boots were bulky and dark in color, and their colors matched both the vests and the belts that had been given.

Bakugou took the white crop top and the blue jeans for himself.

“I’m changing, don’t look.” Bakugou demanded.

“Alright.” Kirishima said, his head firmly plastered to the pillow. Bakugou threw all of the clothes on. They weren’t even remotely his usual style. Besides, he knew he’d be going to sleep the moment the dinner was over and he was back in his room.

“You can look now.” Bakugou said. Kirishima picked his head up from the pillow, and his expression shifted to a smirk as he looked Bakugou up and down.

“You look good in skinny jeans.” He commented. Bakugou felt his cheeks become warm at the comment.

“Just get dressed, I won’t look.” Bakugou said, submerging his head in the pillow. After a couple minutes passed, he finally heard Kirishima’s voice again.

“Done.” He said. Bakugou pushed himself off the bed and stood up, giving Kirishima a good look.

“You’ve got hips.” Bakugou muttered. Kirishima laughed, scratching the back of his head nervously.

“Thanks.” He said.

“Come to think of it, I shouldn’t be surprised they dressed us like this. That stupid Bow guy was also wearing a crop top and skinny pants.” Bakugou muttered.

“He shouldn’t have, you’re dressed like him but just look better.” Kirishima said.

Soon, the two heard another knock at their door, Bakugou once again opened the door. The same guard was there once again.

“Is dinner happening now?” Bakugou asked.

“Yes.” The guard responded. Bakugou looked back to Kirishima.

“We’re ready.” Bakugou said. After which, both he and Kirishima left the room, finally dressed for the occasion.

So, the guard led them off to the dinner with the princesses.

Dinner and Cuddles

The guard led the two through the gaudy halls of the castle and finally into the feast hall. A long table had been set up, at which all the princesses sat that Bakugou and Kirishima currently knew of. The table was a massive array of various food. There were salads, fruits, savoury pastries, and even mysterious gray bars that only Adora and Catra seemed to be eating.

Bow breathed a sigh of relief upon seeing them.

"Oh, I'm glad they fit alright." Bow said.

"Thank you for finally putting this guy in something flattering." Kirishima murmured. Bakugou shot him a big glare.

"Speak for yourself, your fashion sense is more bland than diluted rice water!" Bakugou shouted angrily, getting a few giggles from the people at the table.

The two boys were led near the end of the table. Two more seats were empty on the other side of them.

Bakugou tried a bit of what in the buffet, but he desperately looked for anything that looked spicy. Kirishima tried to look for meat, but he couldn't find anything. Then, his attention was focused onto the piles of gray bars that Adora and Catra kept digging into.

"What are those?" Kirishima asked.

"They're the bars they were fed when they were back in the Horde. Apparently they're 'so much better than the brown ones'." Mermista said.

"They are though!" Adora shouted, her mouth full of food.

"Yeah, the brown ones were basically mud. I think the gray ones are concrete flavored though, or something along those lines." Scorpia said.

"Concrete flavored?!" Perfuma said, her eyes wide as she gawked up at her wife.

"Well yeah, I figured. They did have a lot of concrete in the Fright Zone." Scorpia recalled.

"No, they aren't made with concrete. If they were, they would have been more common than the brown ones. There was way more concrete than there was mud in the Fright Zone. Therefore! The gray ones are not made of concrete, nor are they concrete flavored!" Adora explained passionately, sounding far more enraged than she had ever been before.

“Well… sorry, I didn’t realize that.” Scorpia said.

“It’s okay, I would have thought the same thing.” Perfuma said, patting Scorpia on the shoulder.

“If I can ask, what flavor are the gray ones?” Kirishima asked nervously.

“Gray flavor.” Catra said flatly before taking another bite out of the ‘gray flavor’ food. Kirishima went back to trying to decide what to eat, while Bakugou tried to process what the princesses had just talked about.

Then, everyone heard loud clanging approaching from down the hall. Bakugou stood up in a hurry.

“Don’t worry, that’s just Entrapta.” Bow said from down the table. Bakugou looked over at Bow, one of his eyebrows raised.

“Who’s-” Bakugo began, but was cut off when the doors burst open.

“Entrapta, no robots at the table!” A man commanded. He looked far different than any of the other princesses. In fact, he looked like an alien. His hair and skin were perfectly pale, and he had long, pointed ears. His eyes were a lime green color that reminded Bakugou of the blasts that had come from the gunship and the robot food soldiers.

Entrapta was a much shorter girl with long violet hair. Her clothes were dirty and stained, and it was clear she didn't care how she was dressed to the dinner. Alongside her was a large robot that hobbled along on three legs.

"Emily will behave!" Entrapta insisted.

"Are you certain?" The man asked.

"Yes Hordak, I reprogrammed her so she only goes crazy when there's a fight happening." Entrapta said, hopping at the table.

"Who are the new people, and why are they here?" Entrapta said. Her eyes darted between Kirishima and Bakugou, but her hair, which was tied back into two ponytails, began grabbing various different finger foods.

"Hi Entrapta, I'm Kirishima." Kirishima said.

"Bakugou." Bakugou said.

“So, what’s their deal?” Entrapta said, turning to the rest of the table.

“That one has explosive sweat and that one can grow sharp and pointy.” Catra said, pointing to Bakugou and Kirishima respectively. Entrapta immediately launched herself over the table with her hair and behind Bakugou and Kirishima.

“Your sweat is a highly explosive substance, could I get a sample?”

“No!”

“Great! And you, I’m not sure what she means by sharp and pointy, but I suspect you’re able to alter the bonds between your atoms, but how do you do that?” Entrapta asked Kirishima.

“Uhhh.” Kirishima said, glancing around in a panic.

“Entrapta, we’re at dinner. You’ve got food to eat.” Hordak said.

“It’s not that tiny, though.” Entrapta complained, launching herself back over the table.

The dinner progressed awkwardly, with Bakugou eyeing Entrapta, suspicious she might try to get a sample of his sweat. But, Hordak merely selected the smallest fruits he could find and gave them to her.

It was an alright dinner, but the cuisine was alien, and he hadn't yet found anything he liked. He could see Kirishima feeling a similar way.

Eventually, Kirishima scooted closer to Bakugou and leaned his head on Bakugou's shoulder.

"What?" Bakugou asked quietly.

"Tired." Kirishima whispered in response.

"Try to stay awake just a bit longer, okay?" Bakugou requested, sending glares to anyone who dared to glance over at the two boys. Kirishima groaned quietly in response, and Bakugou rolled his eyes.

Some of the other princesses discussed strategy, planning, and tactics for the future. Bakugou wasn't paying attention though. He merely wanted to stay as still as humanly possible to Kirishima would be comfortable.

“Bakugou?” Bakugou was suddenly roused from his daze, and he glanced around frantically.

“Bakugou, it was me.” Adora said, Bakugou finally locked eyes with her.

“What is it, Pompadour?” Bakugou asked. Catra snorted quietly, and Adora shot a glare at her.

“It’s about the portal you two came through. You two don’t look to be in a good state to discuss it now, but could you do it tomorrow?” Adora asked.

“Sure.” Bakugou responded.

“Thank you.” Adora said before going back to whatever conversations she had been involved in before.

Bakugou took the time to read all the princesses around him. Hordak and Entrapta seemed to be in a world of their own. They were less flamboyantly dressed, and didn’t interact with a single person save for one another.

Scorpia, Adora, and Seahawk all appeared to be similar to Kirishima. That was in the sense that their brains were probably filled with rocks or similar material that did not aid in thought.

Catra seemed to be very cynical, and Bakugou found himself almost relating to her. Maybe she'd be worth talking to at some point. Maybe.

Perfuma and Mermista jabbed at one another often, and their personalities were rather clashing. Frosta seemed pretty isolated from all that was around her, and she looked to be several years younger than Bakugou and Kirishima.

Bow and Glimmer were hard to place, likely because they were extremely far away.

Bakugou hated all of their names. Soon, he would have found derogatory names that suited every single one of them.

When dinner was finally over, Bakugou led a half asleep Kirishima to the room they had been gifted.

He could tell Kirishima would be too tired to change back into his pajamas, so he simply yanked his boots off, tucked him in bed, and changed. Then, he got into the bed with Kirishima.

Despite almost being asleep, Kirishima still scooted as close as he could to Bakugou. Then, he rolled over so he was lying on top of Bakugou, a wide goofy grin on his face.

Bakugou wrapped his arms around him and realized his small jacket was still on, so he took it off and threw it off the bed. Then, he embraced Kirishima once more.

"Thanks Kat." Kirishima whispered softly.

"Don't mention it." Bakugou replied. He could feel Kirishima showering his neck and collarbone with small kisses, and he couldn't hold back his default frown any longer. A soft smile spread across his face.

"There you are." Kirishima said. Bakugou looked down and saw Kirishima lifting his head up to look at Bakugou's face.

"Are you kidding me, you just wanted to see me smile?" Bakugou asked. Kirishima pressed his face against Bakugou's neck.

"Maybe."

"Eiji, why?"

"Cause it lets me know you like me." Kirishima replied. Bakugou's face shifted back to a frown, but there was no anger behind it.

"Do I not let you know enough?" Bakugou asked.

“No. I just love it when you do.” Kirishima answered before going right back to showering Bakugou with kisses. Bakugou massaged Kirishima’s back gently, and the kisses gradually slowed down before they finally stopped coming.

Leaning his head up, Bakugou could see the side of Kirishima’s face pressed against his neck. His mouth was just barely open, and a drop of spittle was emerging from the corner. Bakugou pulled the covers closer so Kirishima was completely covered by them.

“You’re going to fucking drool all over me.” Bakugou muttered, wiping away the spittle with his thumb. Although, he knew it would ultimately have little use.

He looked out the window into the pink sky, which had faded to a more violet color. The landscape for miles was a menagerie of overly bright, pastel colors. Bakugou rolled his eyes, what a stupid looking world. How could anyone living here take this place seriously?

“Goodnight, Eiji.” Bakugou said, letting his focus be drawn to Kirishima’s back rising and falling beneath his hands. Soon, his eyelids began to feel heavy. And he was finally able to go to sleep.

Second Day

Bakugou was the first to awaken the next day, despite how he had been the last to fall asleep. He looked around, grasping for the faint bit of hope that this entire experience had been a dream, and that he would wake up in his dorm, cuddling with Kirishima.

Fortunately, he was still cuddling with Kirishima. However, he was in the room the two had been given within Brightmoon Castle.

He felt warm, aside from the cold spittle that had been slowly dripping from Kirishima's mouth. Kirishima's neatly spiky hair was now messy, but it still looked absolutely stunning.

Bakugou decided that he wasn't going to move for a while. Kirishima's face looked so goofy, and yet so peaceful at the same time. Right here and now, neither of them had to worry about the fact they'd been thrown into a war in an unfamiliar world just the day prior.

After a few more minutes, Kirishima's facial expression rapidly changed. Bakugou leaned his head back and closed his eyes. He could feel Kirishima shifting, the weight of his head removed.

"Oh, you're still asleep." He whispered. Bakugou merely stayed as motionless as he could, determined to keep up the charade.

However, Kirisihima didn’t do anything. He just stayed there, completely motionless, aside from his breathing. Eventually, Bakugou opened his eyes and looked up to see Kirishima staring at him, a soft smile on his face.

“Good morning, Kat.” Kirishima said.

“Good morning Eiji.” Bakugou replied. Kirishima rolled off of Bakugou to be lying on the bed next to him.

“So this is real.” He muttered.

“Apparently.” Bakugou replied. He heard Kirishima deeply inhale and slowly exhale. Glancing over, he could see Kirishima’s eyes shimmering.

“I don’t wanna get out of this bed.” Kirishima said. Bakugou chuckled.

“Me neither, fuck this war bullshit.” Bakugou said. Kirishima smiled, but then sniffled. He turned over and sobbed into the pillow. Bakugou sat up and rubbed his back gently.

“I wanna go home, Kat.” Kirishima said.

"So do I. But for now, we just have to deal with this. We're strong. We've trained to fight villains. I know for a fact those punks aren't equipped to deal with people like us." Bakugou said. Kirishima smiled again, and this time it was less feeble.

Bakugou got out of bed and began to get ready for the day. Kirishima wasn't sure what to do, so he merely washed himself on before changing back into the clothes he was wearing before.

Then, once the both of them felt they were ready, they exited the room.

"We should explore the grounds a bit, since… we're stuck here now." Kirishima said. Bakugou merely nodded in response, his usual frown resting on his face.

The castle's gaudy colors were consistent throughout. The castle had sprawling gardens, but there was one section whose colors were different. They were dark and strange, a complete contrast to the pastel plants that blanketed the horizon.

Bakugou began walking towards it, intrigued about the strangeness of the place. A few guards patrolled throughout, but they didn't pay the boys' presence much mind. Word of their strange arrival must have spread quickly.

Someone was tending to the gardens. He had long black hair, and wore pastel purple clothes that flowed down his form. He turned to the boys immediately upon seeing them.

“Oh, you must be the new arrivals Glimmer was speaking about.” The man said. Right away, Bakugou could tell something was different about him. Most people referred to Glimmer with a title.

“Who are you?” Bakugou asked, sounding somewhat menacing.

“I’m Micah, former king of Brightmoon. Your names were Bakugou and Kirishima if I’m not mistaken. Welcome to the garden. Be careful not to touch, harm, or interact with too many of the plants.” Micah explained, gesturing to the strange looking garden.

“Oh, there you two are. Adora needs to talk to both of you.”

Kirishima and Bakugou turned around to see Glimmer.

“Oh, hi dad, good to see you. Bye now!” Glimmer said, putting a hand on each of the boy’s shoulders. Then, everything was consumed by light, and the three reappeared in the council chamber.

“Alright, good, they’re back.” Adora said.

“Everyone, the meeting has begun!” Glimmer said loudly, everyone immediately turned to her and fell silent.

“Yesterday, these two arrived through a portal we believe was created by Horde Prime. If Horde Prime has gained the technological capacity to create portals effectively, it means that our fight has become much more dire!” Glimmer announced. Kirishima gulped. Then, he felt Bakugou’s hand rest on his shoulder.

“Will Bakugou and Kirishima please describe their experience, before, during, and after coming through the portal.” Glimmer said. Kirishima looked at Bakugou, and so did everyone else.

“We were in my room. Everything was lime green, and we were falling. When it faded, we were above that battlefield yesterday. I blew up the tin can and we won. Any questions?” Bakugou explained.

“Well, yes. Ummm, could you describe in a bit more detail what happened when the portal was initially forming.” Bow requested.

“Everything started to turn lime green. Then umm, everything was light green, and that was when we started falling. I think it took like ten or twenty seconds for the portal to fully form.” Kirishima explained, trying to wrap his mind around the strange memory. He’d been through portals before in the USJ, but those were far smoother. This was something more extreme, and probably more powerful.

“Were there any other details that you can recall?” Adora asked.

“Well, it was also crackling and shaking. Stuff was falling in the room. Oh yeah! The first thing we heard was this low… hum?” Kirishima asked.

“Oh, so like what’s happening right now, but more?” Entrapta asked. Everybody fell silent, and sure enough, there was a low hum that seemed to vibrate everything around them.

And it got louder.

“That’s the sound!” Kirishima shouted in panic. Bakugou’s eyes widened and darted around. Everyone took a battle stance, ready for a portal to form.

“There’s something outside the castle!” A guard shouted. Everyone ran towards the voice to see a guard standing in front of a window.

Outside of the window, hundreds of feet away, a massive lime green portal was beginning to form.

“Everybody, prepare for battle!” Glimmer shouted. All of the princesses immediately sprung into action, rushing to get out of the castle. Bakugou took Kirishima's hand and followed behind them.

Everyone ended up running out onto a large balcony that provided a broad, open view of the sky above. Several gunships hovered in the sky, all of the variety that Bakugou had blown up the day prior.

However, countless robots also joined them on the ground. All of the other princesses seemed to look to Glimmer.

"Alright. Adora! Catra! Kirishima! You three take the front! Everyone else, stay behind them and use your strength from afar." Glimmer instructed.

Kirishima joined Adora and Catra at the head. He was ready to use his hardening quirk, but he knew he would need it a lot. He took a deep breath, ready to face the coming battle ahead of him.

Behind him, Bakugou already had his eyes on the sky. He decided then and there that he was going to win this battle.

Battle at Brightmoon

Everyone scrambled to get in their respective positions. Some of their powers were better from afar, while others had to get up close and personal.

Kirishima was one of the ones fighting on the front lines. He always was, after all. However, he only had two people by his side, and there was a whole army before him. Would three people be enough to hold back the army? Would they be enough to protect the others?

"Hey, you nervous?" Adora asked. Kirishima was snapped from his thoughts to see Adora's hand on his shoulder. She had a soft smile on her face.

"Yeah, a bit. Are we really going to be enough to protect the others?" Kirishima asked.

"I'm not sure. But, we're the people who can do this, so we will." Adora said. Kirishima nodded and smiled, burying his doubts. He was ready as he'd ever be, after all.

Bakugou didn't wait long before he blasted off into the sky. The guns from the flying ships tried to lock onto his form, but failed.

He latched onto one of the guns before annihilating it. Pain exploded through his arm, but he gritted his teeth against it. Then, his eyes flickered to the other gunships, and their weapons were locked onto him. Just as they fired, he blasted himself away.

Two detonations rocked the gunship, and it began to plummet downwards. Bakugou smiled proudly at his work before hungrily moving on to annihilate the next of the three ships.

Scorpia charged ahead of Perfuma, her claws crackling with surging red power. Several robots raised guns towards her, but with a few red blasts, she had turned the foot soldiers into hunks of scrap.

Perfuma saw one that Scorpia had missed though.

"Look out Scorpia!" She shouted, A vine lashed out and wrapped around the robot's blaster and pulled it off course. The shot from it sailed far off course.

Then, more vines shot up from beneath the foot soldier, grasping it before brutally slamming it into another. Both of them sputtered and sparked before their energy faded and they were no longer a threat.

"Thanks Perfuma!" Scorpia shouted, sending one of her wide, illuminating smiles at Perfuma. She responded with a similar smile before she snapped her focus and her power back to the battle at hand.

Sparkling bolts of power gathered within Glimmer's hands before she used them to strike down her foes. The very runestone she channeled this power from was well within sight.

Any robot that attempted to fight back found that it was difficult to lock down a target that constantly teleported from place to place. Glimmer never missed her shots, and before she did, she had already teleported to a spot where she wouldn't.

Micah fought in a much less head on way. He more opted for distraction and confusion. Several illusory clones of himself generated via sorcery caused the bots to fire at the wrong targets. Any shots that were on mark were blocked by forcefields generated in the exact same way.

Arrows would occasionally land on the ground before bursting with electricity, instantly killing any nearby robots. Bow stood atop a tower hundreds of feet away, firing arrows with incredible accuracy to aid his allies from afar. Thanks to the distracted state of the gunships above, he was perfectly safe to fire away.

Waves crashed over robotic soldiers again and again. Despite how he wasn't cutting down too many foes with his cutlass, Seahawk wanted to believe he was single handedly protecting Mermista.

Mermista had gotten as close as she could to the water. She drew fire away from the other princesses, and was able to utilize her own power to the fullest extent of its capability.

Unlike in the previous battle, Spinerella wasn't busy shielding the fire from the gunships above. Instead, she could focus on shaping the tempest to send enemies into complete disarray. Small tornadoes sent robots flying in all directions while the constant tempest surrounding her kept them at bay.

Netossa did as her name suggested. That is, she tossed nets, magical ones. With each net she tossed, a single robot was entangled and ultimately disarmed. Entrapta would be getting plenty of robots to reprogram or scrap metal to build with.

On the front lines, things weren't going too well. Kirishima had been able to witness She-ra's transformation, but from then on he was busy fighting back robots.

Catra was similarly good at tearing robots to bits with her hands, but she had the dexterity to evade their fire. Kirishima could use his hardening in order to deal with any fire that came his way.

She-ra simply killed the robots too fast for them to fight back. Her blade passed through them with relative ease, as their exoskeletons were nothing against the sheer might of the magical blade.

However, Kirishima could quickly tell his quirk wasn't going to hold up for long. He'd trained against physical attacks and could block bullets. But these shots were far more difficult to deal with.

"Red Riot Unbreakable!" He shouted, his form becoming more and more jagged. In his new form, he was finally able to tear through enemy after enemy with ease, their wires becoming exposed with a single blow.

But his energy seemed to sap away. With what seemed like a single shot, he had fallen to the ground on his knees, not having enough energy to stand up or use his quirk.

The moment the robots registered he wasn't a threat, he felt himself being grabbed. He tried to fight back, but without his quirk, his physical blows didn't have enough to fight the robots.

She-ra leapt in with her blade and tore the enemy aside.

"Stay beside me!" She-ra instructed, holding her blade high. Kirishima merely nodded, embarrassed that he needed protection of all people.

She-ra carved mirages into the air that turned into explosions of magical power. She cleared far more robots with a few explosions than Kirishima had in the entire battle. He felt pathetic.

“Adora! We gotta get out of here. There’s too many of these assholes.” Catra shouted as she mauled a robot to death with her impressively strong claws.

“Don’t worry, we’ll get ou-” She-ra was impacted by a blast, and her sword fell to the ground.

Kirishima tried to place himself in the path of the next shot and use his hardening quirk again, but the shot instantly blasted through it. He was knocked to the ground, and the edges of his vision were dim. He could barely move, and it took everything he had just to focus on breathing. His arms burned as they lay limp at his side. He looked everywhere for someone to help him. But he was helpless.

Bakugou wasn’t there, he was busy with something else. Kirishima continued to lament his lack of power as he passed from consciousness.

She-ra tried to defend him, but she was much better at utterly dominating fights. Soon, she realized she was surrounded.

“Catra! Run! I’ll be okay!” She shouted.

“I’m not leaving!” Catra screamed in response.

“I love you Catra. Please, don’t get captured. Get away.” Adora said, tears pouring from her eyes. Even in the imposing form of She-ra, her vulnerability was obvious.

She-ra was powerful, but not powerful enough to face all of Horde Prime’s forces on her own. She felt another blast hit her.

Catra went against everything her mind was screaming at her to do and leapt away. She was far faster than any human, and had no trouble escaping.

She-ra didn’t go down without a fight, but she was eventually defeated and captured. Although, no one saw her being taken. Catra had no idea what was happening to her, and she didn’t want to know.

Seahawk wasn’t as good a fighter as he thought he was. It was difficult for him to fight a single robot at a time, let alone several. A blast grazed him and he was disarmed and sent rolling across the ground.

“Seahawk no!” Mermista shouted, riding a wave of water to close the distance between her and her lover. But, she quickly had to defend herself, and it took all her power to do so. She had none to spare as a helpless Seahawk was dragged away.

Perfuma also found herself having to use all her power in self defense and smashing any robot that came too close to her. The moment she saw Scorpia struggling she tried to run over to help.

"Perfuma run! I'll be okay, this isn't my first time!" Scorpia said, managing a weak smile.

"That's the point. I failed once and I'm not failing again!" Perfuma screamed, throwing her opponents as far away as she could. Scorpia blasted away robots, but the moment she saw them approaching Perfuma she approached in order to get them out of the way.

However, this left her open to two blasts, and she was instantly rendered too weak to fight.

Perfuma merely had to watch out of the corner of her eye as Scorpia was captured by Horde Prime, again.

Frosta was able to see that she was outnumbered early. She left ice wall after ice wall behind her in order to truly escape.

Despite Spinerella's best efforts, she and Netossa were completely surrounded.

"What do we do honey?!" She asked in a shout, maintaining her tempest in order to keep the robots at bay.

“I don’t know!” Netossa shouted in response. She was drenched in sweat from having tossed many nets.

Unlike her, Spinerella knew what to do. She condensed the power of the tempest and positioned Netossa between her and safety.

“I love you, honey.” She said. The wind surged forward and flung Netossa from the encroaching horde of foot soldiers.

Netossa skidded across the ground and rolled to a stop. She struggled to stand, but she was relatively unharmed. Spinerella was so, so far away. But so was all the danger. Her wife had done a good job of getting her to safety.

But what about her?

Netossa just watched as she didn’t have enough remaining power to keep herself from being taken. Her eyes filled with tears and she collapsed to the ground.

Upon realizing him and his daughter were surrounded, Micah generated an incredible number of illusions. Each of them moved differently and naturally, a dazzling display of confusion and trickery.

“Alright sweetie, I think it’s time for you to retreat.” Micah said.

“But I’m not done fighting, and I’m not running out of power any time soon!” Glimmer shouted back, her photokinesis obliterating yet more robotic soldiers.

“You can’t fight an entire army. We need to go. No, you need to go! I’ll hold them off as long as I can, just go!” Micah shouted, generating more and more illusory clones of both himself and Glimmer.

“But-”

“Go!”

With a flash, Glimmer was gone. One by one, the clones were revealed to be illusions, and slowly, Micah ran out.

The robotic soldiers cut their losses. They had lost so many foot soldiers in the battle. All of the princesses together had been enough to severely trim down their forces to the point besieging the castle itself was impractical .

But the princesses didn’t get away unharmed.

Bakugou finally blasted back down from the sky onto a balcony after sending the last airship crashing to the ground. He wore a cocky smile on his face.

"Ya better run ya damned bastards." He muttered, watching all of the robots file away. Then, he stepped back inside.

Many of the princesses were there, but the hall was strangely empty. People were missing. The moment this hit Bakugou, he desperately looked around. He looked around for red hair, sharp teeth, and the gorgeous smile of his boyfriend.

Catra walked towards him, her posture was slouched and she was looking at the ground.

"Where the fuck is Kirishima!" Bakugou shouted.

"I don't know where the fuck he is! All I know is he's with Adora!" Catra screamed, tears pouring from her eyes.

"What happened?" Bakugou wondered, his voice faint.

"They… they were captured, Bakugou. That's why some of us are missing." Glimmer said. Everyone looked at the ground, not finding it within themselves to stand up tall.

Bakugou stormed from the chamber, not daring to let them see the tears pouring from his eyes.

Heavy Losses

Everything in the world around him was shimmering. It would show itself in full clarity for a small moment before another welling of tears filled his vision. He tore open the door to his room, slammed it shut, and walked straight to the bed.

He fell onto the bed, choking sobs causing him to shake. He submerged his head into the pillow and screamed. He tried to rid himself of the immense pain that had fallen over him, but he never seemed to calm down.

He tried to reach out for Kirishima, to hold him close and to never let go. But, he wasn't there. Even the memory of him felt out of reach. All of the amazing time they'd spent didn't provide him a semblance of comfort, it only made him more angry about the present.

He walked over to the massive, open window. He wanted to rocket himself from his room and follow Horde Prime's forces. He wanted to blow up every single one of the damned robots in that army. He didn't know who Horde Prime was, but he wanted to murder him. He wanted to turn his body into fleshy shrapnel with his quirk.

Instead, his hands gripped the windowsill until his knuckles were white. He wasn't sure if he was strong enough to do that. If he failed, he'd probably either die or be captured.

If he got captured, then he wouldn’t be helping Kirishima. If he died, then would Kirishima feel like this? This constant anger that never faded away no matter how much Bakugou screamed and cried? He wouldn’t want anyone to feel like this, especially Kirishima. Just the thought of the smiling, beautiful boy being emotionally broken sickened Bakugou.

Then, he heard a knock on the door. It was soft, but he could easily hear it.

“What the fuck do you want?!” He screamed.

“I want to talk to you, asshole!” Catra shouted through the door.

“Then fucking come in!” Bakugou shouted. Catra kicked the door open and stomped her way in. She took a deep breath.

“I know how you feel, so I wanted to talk to you.” She said, taking a deep breath and making her voice less harsh.

“Just… talk. I guess. Fuck.” Bakugou muttered. He sniffled and wiped away the clear snot running from his nose. Catra walked over to the window and leaned on the windowsill.

“We should go somewhere more open, more outside.” Catra said.

“It’s ugly as fuck out there.” Bakugou muttered in response. Catra chuckled.

“I know. Everything just has to be pink or purple. It’s like your eyes just can’t catch a fucking break trying to take all the stupid in.” Catra muttered. Bakugou nodded, his eyes closed.

“But, we need the fresh air for this, so we should do it anyway.” Catra said, walking towards the entrance of the room. Reluctantly, Bakugou followed her. He felt embarrassed and in the open the whole time, but eventually they made it to a spot that was open, yet private. It was a stone bench surrounded by plants and flowers that was open to the pink sky above.

“So, what the fuck are we gonna talk about besides how fucking ugly everything is?” Bakugou asked.

“I was going to get to that, holy shit it’s hard to not snap at you.” Catra said, firmly rubbing her temples. Then, she took a deep breath and sat on the bench. Bakugou sat down next to her.

“I took one look at you and Spiky and knew exactly what your relationship was like.” Catra said.

“Tch.” Bakugou muttered in reply.

“He’s that ray of sunshine that would be absolutely crazy annoying in anyone else except for him. When you fell in love with him, you realized stupid was a highly contagious disease. He always does shit for you that you don’t think you deserve.” Catra said, Bakugou’s eyes widened.

“How in the fuck did you know that?!” Bakugou asked.

“Because that’s what Adora is to me.” Catra replied, a tear running down her cheek. Bakugou’s eyes widened.

“That’s why I know how you feel. They’re gone, and it’s just… angering. I used to love all the vibrant colors when Adora was there with me, but now that she’s gone they just annoy the fuck out of me. She made me feel so… special. And, I don’t know why the hell she does it for me, but she does, and I love her.” Catra said.

“He always puts up with my bullshit and then he just puts his hand on my shoulder and I don’t wanna shout at anything.” Bakugou said.

“Yeah. I told her I wouldn’t get angry, but holy shit is it hard without her. And you’re not making it easier either asshole!” Catra snapped, crossing her arms.

“I know.” Bakugou said.

“So, when did it happen?” Catra asked.

“When did what happen?” Bakugou asked in response.

“When did you fall head over heels for that fucking guy and turn into a damned dumbass.” Catra answered.

“When he rescued me. I was fighting off some people who kidnapped me. And there he was, just flying over the battlefield in a dumb ass disguise. I fired myself up and grabbed his hand. I wanted to fucking cry ‘cause I was so damned relieved. He looked so happy to see my grumpy ass. When I let go, I hated it. That’s when I finally fucking figured it out.” Bakugou explained. Then, he looked at Catra.

“What about you?”

“It was when… despite… all the terrible things I did to her and put her through. She still gave me a chance. I was long past my second chance at this point, and she was still reaching out for me. And she was there. Then, when we first drove Horde Prime back, she looked like she was about to give up. Wh-When she just couldn’t take it, I don’t know. It’s just, when you see someone so happy and so fucking stupid just give up, it’s scary.” Catra answered, tears pouring from her eyes.

"I… know! Where I'm from, most people have powers, we call them quirks, but… agh, I've never had to explain it to someone who wasn't from there! But… he always complains about his power. He says it isn't flashy enough, it isn't strong enough. Shit like that. When he does, I just want to scream at him. How in the world can you be so fucking amazing and still say shit about yourself?! What the fuck does that make me, then?!" Bakugou shouted.

"Adora always beat herself up, too. And… when she does, I just cry. She deserves so much better than what she got, and so when she says otherwise, I just… hate it. And… I don't know what to feel except angry when I should be worrying about Adora because she's the person who's having a fucking hard time. I try to be like her, but every time I do I just find out how difficult it is and how amazing she must be to always do it." Catra ranted.

"I want him back. I need him back. He should be the one here, not me." Bakugou said.

"But then he'd be telling me all the same shit. He'd say that he wished he'd gotten captured and he'd be concerned for you and constantly beat himself up for not being powerful enough. That's the thing, neither him nor Adora ever beat anyone else up. They just look in the mirror and instantly figure out who they're going to take it out on. And it's scary when you care about them so much." Catra said.

"I just wish he'd shout at me more. I wish he just showed one drop of anger more. One time, when we first got here, I wasn't treating him as well as I should have, and he said something. I felt terrible, but then I was happy. When they don't just take everything the world throws at them, it just feels better. It just tells me he listens to all the shit I say and that I'm not just screaming into a fucking void." Bakugou said.

"Adora's gotten mad at me for the shit I did too. I know the feeling. She cares about me enough that she has standards. She doesn't just expect me to be a piece of shit all the time. She actually wants better for me and for me to be better. And when I'm with her, being better doesn't sound so hard. If being stupid is fucking contagious, maybe being nice is too." Catra proposed.

"Hmmm, maybe. I don't fucking know though, I'm definitely an asshole." Bakugou muttered.

"Not when he's there you aren't. It's the same for me and Adora." Catra said.

"I need him back. I'm getting him back. I… I hope you get Adora back, too." Bakugou said.

"We will make a plan. Don't worry. Adora's done stupid shit to rescue me so if she thinks I won't do the same for her then I'll have to check if there's anything in that thick skull of hers." Catra said.

"We're getting them back. That's good to hear." Bakugou said, standing up from the bench and walking back to his room.

“Thank you, Catra.” He said. He still felt terrible and angry and sad. But he no longer wanted to uselessly scream into a pillow.

He was actually going to do something now. Something that would help him. Something that would help Adora. Something that would help everyone else.

It was time for him to live up to his dream, and be a hero.

Helpless Waiting

Kirishima woke up in a strange cell. There were no bars, merely a glowing green forcefield keeping him away from everything else. There was a single cot, and that was the only detail the cell contained. He felt a strange pain in the back of his neck.

"Kirishima!"

He was suddenly roused and looked around. Adora's cell was opposite to his.

"Huh?" He asked.

"Is there anything on the back of your neck?" Kirishima felt the back of his neck, and something was there, his eyes widened.

"Break it!" He used his hardening quirk and smashed whatever was there. He saw a strange chip fall to the ground.

"What is that?" He asked.

"They're the chips Horde Prime uses. If you act fast you can just get the thing off without any problems." Adora answered.

“How do you know that?” Kirishima asked.

“Entrapta did a lot of work on dealing with them. If you leave it on for too long Horde Prime can control you and Entrapta will have to surgically remove it.” Adora explained. Kirishima gulped and nodded, instinctively rubbing the back of his neck.

“Have you tried getting out of here?” Kirishima asked. Adora nodded in response. Kirishima poked the lime green barrier. It was like hitting a solid barrier. It didn’t seem to be warm or cool. It looked smooth, but it did have sufficient friction to it.

Kirishima looked both ways. Everything was tinted green, so it was a bit difficult to make out details. But, a hallway seemed to stretch in both directions. He crossed his arms and paced his cell.

What was he supposed to do here? He could easily talk to the other people imprisoned with him, but they didn’t seem to have much more power than he did here.

“I’m sorry for being weak.” He finally managed to say.

“What? No! Don’t be! You did your best, but there were a lot of them, and now we’re here. I’m the one with the extremely nifty magical powers and all purpose sword. But, I don’t know what to do here.” Adora said, looking either way.

“Yeah, man, you’re not the reason we all got captured.” Scorpia said. Her cell was a few blocks down, but Kirishima could still hear her easily. At least the barriers didn’t seem to prevent sound from passing through.

“Well, how are we going to escape?” Kirishima asked.

“These barriers are impenetrable. There’s no way we’re breaking out. A lot of our magic doesn’t work either.” Micah said.

“Wait, who got captured?” Kirishima asked.

“Me, you, Scorpia, Micah, Seahawk, and Spinerella.” Adora said. Looking around now, Kirishima could clearly see that there were six occupied cells.

“Well, we have to break out. I feel like Bakugou will try something stupid if I can’t make it out of here.” Kirishima said.

“You’re right, Catra’s the same way. Well, they’ve got to open these barriers at some point to feed us. I guess we just… run out when they do that.” Adora proposed.

“We should probably learn how long they keep the barrier’s open, what order they do it in, whether or not they change up the order, those kinds of things.” Micah said.

“Oh, right, that’s probably a good thing to know.” Adora said. A moment of silence fell over the prisons.

“What should we do for now?” Kirishima asked.

“Uh, play a game? I don’t wanna just sit here because that accomplishes absolutely nothing and it’s boring. Maybe we should train?” Adora asked.

“Good idea!” Kirishima replied before using his hardening and punching the barrier as hard as he could. It didn’t even remotely give beneath his punch. It was even worse than punching solid concrete, Kirishima could at least dent that.

It would be perfect.

He impacted it again and again, ignoring the rapid soreness that began spreading up his arm. He’d failed. Once again, his quirk hadn’t been enough to do what it had to do. His body couldn’t take the shots, so he failed. Then She-ra had tried to protect him, but he was so useless that even she couldn’t defend him.

Bakugou and She-ra both had the perfect quirks that a hero needed. Although, Kirishima wasn’t sure if he would call Adora’s power a quirk. They were powerful, they were flashy, and they were simple. Kirishima's quirk was simple, but it wasn't that powerful. It was only powerful in Red Riot Unbreakable form.

And he could still only do that for about thirty seconds before his quirk became far more difficult to use afterwards.

Everything he saw began to look watery. At first, he thought it was an effect of the barrier. But then, he saw that his arms looked to be the same way. When he realized what was happening, he immediately sat with his back facing the barriers. He buried his face in his arms to muffle the sound of his sobbing.

Eventually, he had enough. He felt like he had to do more. Bakugou was probably doing a lot of things right now. He wasn't the kind of person who could sit around and do nothing.

Kirishima couldn't just sit here and train. He had to help further plan the escape plan.

"Alright. So uh, if one of us gets out, what should we do?" Kirishima asked.

"Well- Wait, are you okay, you're crying." Adora said.

"That doesn't matter right now! What should we do if one of us gets out?!" Kirishima asked.

“Well, get the rest of us free, I suppose. It’ll be easier to escape if all of us work together.” Micah said.

“Okay, what next?” Kirishima asked.

“Well, I remember there was a transportation pad. It’s essentially a portal that can transport a small number of people. Horde Prime just recently has been able to use much larger portals to get entire ships through. If we can get there, we can get out.” Adora explained.

“Alright, so, break out, free everyone, and get to the transportation pad.” Kirishima reviewed.

“That sounds like an apt plan.” Micah said.

Kirishima wasn’t sure if it was, but it was good enough to put his mind at ease as he continued training.

Eventually, he got tired, too tired to continue. He collapsed down into the cot. It wasn’t as uncomfortable as he thought it would be, but it felt cold.

He felt sick knowing Bakugou would try to rescue him, wherever he was. Would he be able to do it? What if he got captured too?

Kirishima would never forgive himself if that happened.

He tightly gripped the sheets of the cot and dug his nails into his palms. He curled into a ball and sighed.

Nothing he did mattered. He had improved his quirk so much, and yet its failure had landed him here. Now, he was in a cell where he couldn't escape, and he just had to wait until he was fed before he had a chance to do so. He had to wait knowing that Bakugou was going to try and come to rescue him and put himself in a lot of danger.

It wasn't the first time he had sat around unable to do anything. He remembered the training camp, where he just waited in that classroom, and Bakugou had gotten kidnapped.

He wished that had been the last time, but here he was once again.

Preparations and Takeoff

Chapter Notes

See the end of the chapter for notes

Nobody wasted time when it came to the plan. Glimmer had already called a meeting between all of the princesses that still remained. Bakugou walked into the room to see everyone except for Hordak and Entrapta having arrived. Once they finally did, Glimmer took a deep breath and addressed everyone else in the room.

"Many of us are gone. Many that are very close to us. But, rest assured, when we have a good plan, we will be able to get them back. All of them." Glimmer declared.

"Alright everyone. This isn't the first time we've gone to space to rescue someone. We should reuse and perfect what worked before. Entrapta! Do you think Darla is in good condition for takeoff?" Bow asked.

"Yes!" Entrapta said.

"Great, Catra. Do you think Melog would be willing to help us?" Bow asked.

"Of course." She answered.

“Alright, that means we’ve got a functioning space ship, as well as a means of hiding ourselves. What we still have to sort out are who is going up there and what we’re going to do once we’re there. We’ll sort those things out in that order.” Bow explained. Everyone nodded in order to show that they were following along.

“Who wants to go.”

Everyone raised their hand.

“That won’t work. Princesses, I know you’ve got powerful magic, but unless it can work out there as well as it does down here, you won’t be able to do much. Perfuma, Mermista, I know you want to see Scorpia and Seahawk as soon as possible but your magic won’t work out there. Same for you, Glimmer.” Catra said.

“Rude.” Glimmer muttered. Then she sighed.

“As much as I hate to admit it, Catra’s right. So, whoever goes up should be just as useful out there as they are down here.” Glimmer said.

“I’m going.” Bakugou declared.

“Alright, Bakugou, since you’re from a completely different… world? I’m going to say that you’re perfect for this. Who else?” Glimmer asked.

“Entrapta will be necessary for piloting Darla. I’ll go with her to make sure she’s alright.” Hordak said.

“Entrapta and Hordak. Hordak… you have tech, I assume.” Glimmer said. Hordak nodded.

“Bakugou, Entrapta, and Hordak.” Glimmer whispered beneath her breath.

“I’m sorry babe, but, I should go too. Once I make a few more arrows, which shouldn’t be too hard, I’ll be fit for the expedition up there.” Bow said. Glimmer gulped before nodding.

“Alright… Bow’s going too. Who else?” She asked, her voice beginning to shake.

“I am.” Catra said.

“Alright, so that’s Bakugou, Bow, Entrapta, and Hordak. Netossa, do you think your power functions in space?” Glimmer asked.

“Never tried. It probably will, since it’s not tied to a runestone or sorcery.” Netossa answered.

“Alright Netossa, you’re going too.” Glimmer said. Netossa nodded.

“I think that’s everyone who can function just as well there as they can here. Now, once we get there, we need a way to get into the ship and to the prisons as well as a way out.” Glimmer declared.

“Melog can do both of those things. They can teleport us in and out, as well as keep us hidden while we’re in. But, I’m not sure if that’ll be enough for subterfuge. There’ll be a lot of us.” Catra said.

“Do you need someone to provide a distraction?” A new voice asked. Everyone turned around to see a tall figure in the doorway. They had green skin and resembled a gecko in many ways.

“Who the hell are you?” Bakugou asked.

“They’re Double Trouble. Hey Double Trouble, can you do your shapeshifting in space?” Catra asked.

“I’ve never tried it, that’ll be fun.” They replied.

“Alright, you’re coming too. You think you can provide a distraction while we’re on the ship and get out with us safely?” Glimmer asked.

“I love a good challenge. I’ll do it.” They said.

“So Double Trouble’s going too. Looks like we’ve got a solid plan, unless anyone has any objections.” Glimmer said. Everyone glanced around, but no objections were made.

“Alright! Bakugou, Bow, Catra, Double Trouble, Entrapta, Hordak, Netossa, and I guess Melog too. All of you will be going on Darla. You will be sneaking in with Melog’s help and Double Trouble will keep Horde Prime distracted or otherwise trick Horde Prime’s forces. Then, you get out as quickly as possible and back to Etheria. No leaving anybody behind! Got it!” Glimmer said.

“Got it!” Everyone involved in the plan said. Bakugou left the room breathing a sigh of relief.

“Don’t worry Bakugou, we’ve fucking got this.” Catra said.

“I know that!” Bakugou snapped.

“Geez okay I was trying to be nice.” Catra muttered. Bakugou shrugged his shoulders and continued walking.

Bow crafted more arrows. Entrapta made a few final check ups on Darla to make sure she was in good condition for takeoff.

Bakugou merely sat in his room on his bed, staring out the window.

By the end of the day, all the preparations had been made. It was decided that everyone would be leaving the next day.

A silent, awkward dinner passed. For Glimmer, it was melancholic as she said goodbye. For everyone else except for Entrapta and Hordak, it was lonely.

Bakugou lay in bed, wanting Kirishima to be right there. They hadn't shared a bed often in the dorms at UA. Bakugou wished they could do it more, but then their relationship would be revealed and he wasn't sure he was ready for that. He wasn't sure if Kirishima was, either.

Now, the only thing holding them back from one another was an endless distance. Bakugou wasn't sure what Kirishima was thinking about. And he certainly didn't suspect that he was lying in his own cot, bullying himself and missing Bakugou dearly.

Bakugou simply lay there for who knows how long. All he knew is that it took far longer than normal for him to fall asleep, even though it had been a long day.

When everyone woke up the next day, they had breakfast and boarded Darla. Glimmer said goodbye to Bow in particular, giving him a kiss on the cheek and a wish for good look. Perfuma, Mermista, and Frosta also wished everyone good luck on their journey.

Darla was a large ship, and Bakugou was glad it wasn't cramped. There were several rooms with separated cots. He wouldn't be with Kirishima, at least not yet.

"Soon." He reminded himself in a whisper.

Entrapta excitedly began starting the ship up.

"Now, before we exit the atmosphere it's going to be a wobbly ride so hang on!" Entrapta warned.

Everyone found something to hold onto, and then the ship took off. The entire ship shook violently as it accelerated with immense speed. For a few moments, the hull glowed with heat as it exited the atmosphere. But soon, the ship was free of Etheria, and soaring off into space.

"Everyone! Be on the lookout for Horde ships!" Catra said while giving Melog scritches.

Bakuguo was merely looking at the endless space that lie ahead of them. Glittering stars and alien planets surrounded him. It was said that humanity back on earth would have long since made it to space were it not for quirks, which completely changed the trajectory of human history.

But here he was, in the space of a whole other universe.

He wasn’t sure how he was supposed to prepare himself to rescue Kirishima. He had vowed to rescue him, but how did he make sure it happened? Did he stretch? He couldn’t train his quirk inside of a spaceship, could he? Was there any way for the ship to go any faster?

And then it hit him, the only thing that he could possibly do in this moment.

He had to just helplessly wait until he arrived. He just had to stand by and do nothing, for he didn’t have any power over what was happening. It was a terrible feeling that gnawed away at him as hours passed.

But now, he had no choice but to live alongside it.

Chapter End Notes

Since I'm not sure about where Netossa's powers come from, and they aren't stated to come from a Runestone, I'm going to say that her power functions in space. I'm also going to make this assumption for Entrapta.

Our Destructive Deeds

It would be a long, long trip in Darla. While being an advanced spaceship, she could only go so fast.

Bakugou didn't try to hide his anger at the fact he'd have to wait for much longer than he'd previously wanted to. Just the idea of having to wait several days before he could do anything made him want to blow something up.

But of course, he was in space, so if he did, everyone would die.

What was he even supposed to do on the trip. He couldn't train his quirk, he'd tried exercising in his room, but he could only do that for so many hours each day before he either got tired or got bored.

Thankfully, he was able to cook. He didn't know how to read the labels of the ingredients, but he could gauge their flavor based on taste. The only criteria for food was that some of them had to be tiny for Entrapta. He wasn't sure why, but he'd seen her insistence on food being small, so he didn't question it.

Even then, so much time was left blank. The stars were pretty, but he couldn't stare at them for long before he got bored. But, this was far worse than boredom. It was agonizing knowing that Kirishima was being held somewhere, but he just couldn't do anything about it. Kirishima had always joked Bakugou's quirk could do anything. Bakugou could only roll his eyes at it.

This quirk couldn’t make this ship go faster. This quirk couldn’t tell him what was happening to Kirishima. This quirk couldn’t do anything about the agonizing hours of silence.

Eventually, he couldn’t take it anymore. He approached Catra. Her ears perked up and she turned around. Melog was stirred from napping. Bakugou wished he could take naps, or know the time. But, he just couldn’t find it within him to relax.

“I hate fucking waiting all the time.” Bakugou finally said.

“Shit. I don’t know what to do about it, I hate it too.” Catra responded.

“I want to fucking talk to you because I’ve run out of other things to do and it’s better than looking out the damned window.” Bakugou said.

“Wow, how flattering. My conversation is better than idly staring into space.” Catra said sarcastically.

“Why the fuck did I think this was a good idea?” Bakugou asked himself.

"No idea. Maybe because all the other people besides Hordak seem to be living in the clouds despite what's happening. I don't know if this is hard for them, but they aren't showing it." Catra said.

"Maybe I should talk to Hordak, then." Bakugou spat. Catra chuckled.

"Probably not. That guy has seen and done some shiiiit. He's mean to literally everyone except for Entrapta." Catra said.

"Done some shit, huh? Well so have you, so have I, how bad could it be?" Bakugou asked.

"I have done some bad shit, you're right, I guess. What kind of 'bad shit' have you done?" Catra asked. Bakugou thought about it for a moment. He was training to be a hero, but there had been some very, very questionable things he'd done.

"I told a guy to jump off a building after telling him his dreams weren't gonna happen." Bakugou said.

"Did he?" Catra asked.

"No. Now he just takes whatever shit I give him, and he just expects it. Drives me fucking crazy." Bakugou muttered. Catra chuckled.

“Alright, pretty bad, pretty bad.” She said, shrugging her shoulders.

“What the fuck did you do?” Bakugou asked. Catra sighed.

“Oh dear, where do I begin? I abused Scorpia and Adora. Tried to hurt Adora several times, tore reality open to try and make sure Adora didn’t win. Kidnapped Adora’s friends. I think that’s all, but I might be forgetting something.” Catra explained.

“Well that’s a lot more than I thought there would be.” Bakugou said. Catra laughed nervously.

“Yeah, I was a terrible excuse for a person. But, I don’t think I am anymore, at least.” Catra said.

“If you’ve done all of that, and you think Hordak’s bad. What the hell did he do?” Bakugou asked.

“I can answer that myself.” Hordak said. Bakugou spun around to see Hordak standing right there.

“Whatever, go off.” Bakugou said. Catra took a small, almost imperceptible step away from Hordak. She did a good job of being subtle, but Bakugou noticed it.

“The Horde was at war with the princesses before Horde Prime was. Whatever happened in that war, it was my fault. Etheria used to be in a starless place. I was trying to get it out in order for Horde Prime to accept me back, but someone else did that for me.” Hordak said. Bakugou had to blink a few times.

“The war, huh? There was another war before this one?” Bakugou asked.

“Yeah, I used to be with the Horde. Unlike Adora, I didn’t leave.” Catra added. Suddenly, the disparate pieces of the stories began to fit together. All of the things Catra had done to Adora had been motivated by her being an opponent in the war.

“Well. That’s a fucking lot.” Bakugou said.

“Geez, I had no clue, captain fucking obvious.” Catra snapped back.

“It is. But we’re here. I’m going to help defeat Horde Prime. And, I’m going to be a better person to Entrapta.” Hordak said. Bakugou shrugged his shoulders.

“Seems like the right thing to do after all of that.” Bakugou said.

“And I’m helping Adora, and I’m working on my anger. Which, I used to focus onto her and Scorpia, and Entrapta too.” Catra said, glancing back towards Entrapta, who was piloting Darla.

“I… shit… I haven’t done anything for that kid besides continue being mean to him.” Bakugou realized.

“Why do you keep being mean?” Catra asked.

“Because I hate him, and I want to beat him.” Bakugou said.

“At what?” Catra asked. Bakugou sighed. Now it was his turn to explain how his own thing worked.

“There’s an occupation in my world called being a hero. Because almost everyone has quirks, there are people who abuse them, those are villains. Heroes fight villains. Good heroes get recognized, especially the number one hero. Both me and this kid wanna be that and only one of us fucking can so I’m going to beat his ass and take it from him.” Bakugou explained.

“Wait, being a hero’s like… a job you get paid and recognized for. Then how the hell do you know who’s actually a hero and who’s just in it for the rewards?” Catra asked.

“You don’t.”

“Well that just seems… wow ummm. I’m not sure how to tell you this, but that seems really screwed up.” Catra said.

“It’s fucking not!” Bakugou shouted. Melog growled and Entrapta glanced over for a moment before shrugging her shoulders.

“I imagine there are ‘heroes’ that are really messed up people right?” Catra asked. Bakugou nodded.

“And wait, how does someone know if you’re the number one hero?” Catra asked.

“It’s how many incidents with villains you resolve.” Bakugou answered.

“And villains are people who abuse their powers, right?” Catra asked.

“Pretty much any criminal who uses their quirk for crime.” Bakugou answered.

“And you… do what to resolve these things?”

“We beat their fucking asses, that’s what.” Bakugou answered. But, right away, he could tell that it was a wrong answer. Catra took another imperceptible step back. Hordak began to just walk away.

“The fuck did I do this time?” Bakugou asked.

“Nothing.” Catra said, although Bakugou could easily tell it was a lie.

“Fine, don’t fucking tell me then.” Bakugou said, storming off back to his quarters.

He sat down on his cot and tried to think through the conversation once more. What had he said that was wrong? He wasn’t any more of an asshole than usual, but there was a line he’d crossed.

It had been crossed when he started talking about heroes, the thing he was so confident about. They knew nothing about heroes besides what he’d told them, how could they make a judgement about them!

And then he thought further back in the conversation. It was the part that revolved around the terrible things they’d done.

Both of the others had told him the things they were doing. Catra was being nice to Adora and working on the anger that caused her to do so much harm. Hordak was trying to bring down the thing he'd done terrible things to be accepted into.

But Bakugou hadn't really done anything for Deku. He'd just continued being mean. He told him once how to improve as a hero.

What if All Might hadn't given him his quirk?

He would still be a quirkless pebble on the side of the road who would have miserably failed the entrance exam. And then what? Bakugou's eyes widened as he considered the implications of what he'd told Deku to do.

He had done something that could be considered a crime, which was aggravating suicide. And when Deku had maybe tried to confront him, he'd launched sparks from his hands.

He had used his quirk to aid in something that could be considered a crime. But… that would make him a villain. And then there was the whole stupid thing about rewards. Was he actually a hero, or was he just in it for the rewards?

Then he remembered what was happening now. He wasn't being paid for this, yet he was fighting for a cause. He was going so far out of his way to save someone else.

He wanted to save Kirishima more than he wanted to beat Horde Prime. Was that what being a hero was?

Then he realized. This was more than just living up to his dream of being a hero. He wasn't just being the kind of hero who gets paid to stop villains. He was being the kind of hero who does good things because it was what they wanted to do.

For once in his life, he was being a true hero. One that neither Stain nor Catra could question.

And when he'd helped Etheria win this war, he'd go back to his own world, and talk to Deku. Like Catra and Hordak, he'd do something to right the wrongs he had caused.

"I'll say sorry, Midoriya." He promised.

The Escape

Chapter Notes

See the end of the chapter for notes

Since there was nothing to do in the prison's upon Horde Prime's ship, all Kirishima could do was helplessly wait and quietly observe.

The prisoners were allowed meals that were surprisingly good. Only one prisoner would eat at a time, and there would be three guards that would feed all the prisoners. The only exception was Adora, where five guards would be there.

For the first time, Kirishima saw people. Or, at least he assumed they were. They had pale hair, pale skin, pointed ears, and wore pale robes. It didn't take long before Kirishima saw the resemblance to Hordak. Only they all wore the exact same clothes.

He wasn't sure how combatively capable they were, but he knew he'd have to try. It had been a couple days of this pattern before he was confident in how it worked.

In that time, he'd also done some further discussion with the others. Micah didn't have any magic here. Adora needed a moment to transform into She-ra. Spinerella's magic was best when she had a distance between herself and her opponents. Seahawk wasn't nearly as useful as he wished he could be, and Scorpia couldn't take three guards on her own. Her magic also didn’t work this far from Etheria.

Kirishima was the best person to do it. His power was incredible for combat, and he could manifest it in an instant. Until now, he’d been as passive as he could, but he knew he couldn’t bear doing nothing for much longer.

One day, the guards were feeding the others one by one. Kirishima was practically itching with anticipation, but he knew to be patient. Even when he finally had the barrier unlocked, he didn’t move right away. But, just as one of the guards was about to close it, he lunged forward.

His arms became sharp and rigid and he knocked the guards to the floor. Unlike the robots, these guards weren’t armed with blasters. They only had the physical blows they could leave upon Kirishima.

Unfortunately for them, his quirk was best for exactly that. None of their pummeling left a dent, and his hardened fists quickly knocked every single one of them to the ground. Once he had defeated them, he laughed in relief. He’d finally made it out.

“You need their handprints to unlock all the doors.” Adora said. Kirishima nodded and dragged the unconscious guards over.

“If I’d known you were going to do that, I would have told you to hit them on the back of the neck.” Adora said as she was unlocked from her cell.

“Sorry.” Kirishima said, dragging the guard to each of the other four cells. It took a moment, and Adora constantly glanced down each corridor nervously.

“Okay, we’ve gotta get to the launching pad.” Adora said.

“Where is that?” Scorpia asked. Adora shrugged her shoulders.

“I don’t know.” Adora answered.

“No matter! We’ll just look around and go on an adventure!” Seahawk said.

“Okay, but we should be careful.” Spinerella proposed.

“I’m sure we can take them.” Kirishima said. She-ra’s power was amazing, and so was Spinerella’s.

“Alright, which way should we go?” Micah asked. Adora muttered under her breath, looking in both directions.

“I say this one.” Scorpia said suddenly.

“Sure, and if not, it might be a bit difficult to fight our way out, but I think we can manage it.” Adora said. Then, the six former prisoners set out into the maze like halls of Horde Prime’s ship.

Each hall looked identical to the last. After several days of stillness, it took Kirishima a moment to adjust to the constant movement. It was a welcome shift, but a perplexing one.

However, within moments, the group encountered a few guards. A few gales of wind slammed them into the walls.

“For the honour of grayskull!” Adora shouted, transforming into the tall, idealistic warrior that was She-ra.

She didn’t use her sword. Instead, she slammed her palm into the back of the alien’s necks, instantly knocking them out.

“Well, escaping just got a whole lot harder, there’s going to be a lot of clones on our tail. Spinerella, can you keep them away?” She-ra asked.

“I can.” She replied, taking a deep breath afterwards as she prepared to face her task.

As She-ra had predicted, more aliens came charging in. As Spinerella had prepared to do, she unleashed a tempest that spiraled down the corridor, sending clones flying back and rolling across the floor. Some of them were knocked out, while others were hurt too heavily to stand.

The search through the countless hallways continued. Spinerella had to unleash her power several more times, and she was beginning to get tired from calling upon her power repeatedly.

Kirishima lost track of how long it took. All he could think about was his joy at escape, his fear of recapture, and his fear that Bakugou would arrive at the worst possible time for his rescue.

Finally, they came across it. It was a control panel in front of a glowing floor. She-ra nodded.

"I think this is it." She said.

But Kirishima looked at the pad, and then the control panel in front of it. A sudden realization hit him.

Somebody had to operate it, and they wouldn't be transported.

Several of the people with him were vital for the rebellion back on Etheria. Even Seahawk, who wasn't the best at fighting, was still worth saving.

Kirishima knew what he had to do, as both a fighter of the rebellion and as a hero.

"I'll operate the control panel." Kirishima announced.

"But then you won't go back." She-ra said.

"I know that."

"Kirishima, you don't need to do this. You don't need to sacrifice yourself. If I do it, I can fight my way out on my own." She-ra explained.

"They need you back on Etheria. They need you much more than they need me. I'm not from here, and my power frankly doesn't make much of a difference." Kirishima said.

"Every person counts, Kirishima. Please, get in." She-ra said. Everyone else had hesitantly gotten onto the control pad.

"No." He answered.

“What do you mean no? Please, I can get out on my own.”

“You’re powerful but no one can face an entire army on their own.” Kirishima said.

The two could hear clanging down the hall. A pair of heavy footfalls was beelining towards them.

“There’s no time, Kirishima, you need to get in.” She-ra said.

“Last time you put yourself in harm's way to save me you ended up here. Please, don’t do that again, I’m not worth putting yourself in harm's way for. I’ve always wanted to do this. So let me do it, okay!” Kirishima shouted.

She-ra finally stepped onto the pad. Kirishima breathed a sigh of relief. Looking over the control pad, he realized that it could do a lot of things, but it was relatively easy to tell what thing did which. He found how to put a transmission out for any ships. Knowing Bakugou, and possibly the other princesses, they would definitely attempt a rescue mission. If they were using a ship. They would hear this.

“This is Kirishima. I’m sending everyone who got captured to theeese coordinates.” Kirishima said, frantically figuring out which coordinates would be the best to send them to. At least this good thing had come from Bakugou’s brash decision making.

“Get there as-”

Suddenly, the closed door behind them blasted open with an explosion. A chill ran up Kirishima’s spine, as he realized exactly who was standing in the doorway.

Damn it, why did he have to get here now of all times.

Chapter End Notes

> Just as with Netossa, it's never explicitly stated that Spinerella's power comes from a runestone. So, I'm going to assume that her magic just goes along with her and she can use it anywhere.

The Rescue

Finally, in the distance of space, a strange shape was visible. Parts of it glowed with an unmistakable lime green glow.

"That's his ship." Catra realized. She stepped over to Melog.

"Hey buddy, we need to be hidden." She said. The massive feline purred in response, and a wave of energy washed over the ship. As they got closer and closer, Bakugou was ready for the moment they got attacked.

But the attack never came, even as they got up right next to it.

"Alright, everyone who wants to go aboard come over here." Catra announced. Everyone hurriedly walked over.

"Be ready. We need to be as stealthy as possible, so remain slow and quiet. Don't worry about staying out of sight, just make sure you aren't heard." Catra explained.

Double Trouble shapeshifted to look like a similar alien to Hordak, only they wore very simple attire.

In an instant, Bakugou's surroundings transformed. For a moment, he was disoriented, and had to find his footing. His eyes darted around, taking in the hallways. Everyone except for Double Trouble had turned almost completely transparent.

"Are you sure they can't see us?" Bakugou whispered.

"Yes, but we can. Lead the way Double Trouble." Catra instructed in a whisper. Double Trouble nodded before hesitating.

"Where are the prisons?"

"Straight forward, turn at the third left."

Double Trouble began calmly but assertively walking down the hall. Everyone behind them did their best to mask their footsteps. Someone nearby could probably hear them, but at least their sounds didn't echo down the constant corridors.

Occasionally, they would see similar aliens walking in the distance, but they didn't pay Double Trouble any mind in their disguised form.

Bakugou recalled Catra's instructions, so he knew when they had finally made it to the left turn. But, as they rounded the corner, it was clear something had happened.

Three guards lay unconscious on the floor, and the cells were deserted.

"Shit, they've already broken out." Bakugou muttered. He glanced at the transparent figures around him before his eyes landed on Catra.

"Are there ways off this ship."

"Yes."

"Where?!"

"It's a launch pad, it teleports whoever you put into it. It's… from here, it's straight ahead. Then, you turn at the second right and left at the first left from there." Catra instructed.

Bakugou immediately blasted off.

"Bakugou!" Bow shouted. But Bakugou paid no mind to it. He saw his invisibility wear off. Whatever, he would fight through whatever came in his way.

"Damn it." He cursed under his breath as he saw three guards ahead. They all turned upon seeing him and charged forward.

Bakugou landed on the ground before unleashing an explosion that knocked all of them to their feet. Then, he leapt up and blasted up again.

Whatever mental energy wasn't spent on looking for threats was spent on remembering the instructions. He could hear the sounds of figures charging from multiple hallways. It was as though the moment one person saw him, everyone knew he was there.

He rounded the second right to be faced by six figures this time. He kicked the first one off before using an explosion to knock away the other. He beelined towards the one that had been least affected and slammed his knuckles into the side of their head, sending them to the ground.

Then, he ran past all of them.

"First left first left first left." He repeated to himself. He could see it far ahead, but there was another group of adversaries in his way. He dropped to the ground and ran, taking a moment to gather more sweat for when he faced them.

First, he blasted himself upwards. Then, he contorted himself midair so his palm was facing towards the ground. All of them were below him, and they were all gathered together. Good.

An explosion knocked them all away. Some slammed into the walls. Others rolled down the hall, propelled away by the explosion. Bakugou landed back on the ground and rounded the first left corner.

There was nothing in his way save for a short hallway and a closed door. He ran with all the speed he could gather in his legs before raising his palm forward and sending the massive doors clattering to the ground.

The ground shook as they fell, and Bakugou emerged from a small cloud of dust into the room.

He saw Kirishima standing in front of a control panel, and everyone else that had been capture within it.

“What’s happening?” She-ra asked.

“We’ve come to rescue you.” Bakugou said, stepping up to the control panel and searching for how to deactivate it. Thankfully, it wasn’t that difficult. Everyone stepped out.

“Turn right on the first right down the hall, then turn left and go straight until you find them or they find you. Eiji, we better fucking talk.” Bakugou said. Kirishima gulped and everyone else followed Bakugou’s instructions.

Kirishima didn’t dare say anything. He sighed in relief.

“You’re okay. At least you didn’t get yourself killed on this stupid rescue of yours.” He said, a teary smile across his face.

“Oh no, we’re not fucking talking about that. I want you to explain what was about to happen right there.” Bakugou said, crossing his arms.

“Well, we knew you’d be coming, but we didn’t realize you were already here. I was about to tell you the coordinates we were going to teleport to.” Kirishima answered.

“Why weren’t you in there, then?” Bakugou asked. Kirishima didn’t answer, he just looked at Bakugou.

“Why weren’t you in there Eiji?!” Bakugou asked, his tone escalating to a shout.

“Because, I was going to teleport them to you. Adora wanted to do it, but she’s too important for the effort, so was going to do it instead.” Kirishima finally answered.

“So… you were just going to leave yourself here, alone?” Bakugou asked.

“Well, it’s not like tha-”

“Yes it fucking is! What do you mean it wasn’t like that?! You were going to teleport the rest of them to us but just leave yourself here. Do you seriously fucking think these people would have gone back without you. Or, do you think I would have fucking let them go back without you. No!” Bakugou shouted.

“Why are you trying so hard to rescue just me! You have to think about the actual war that’s happening! Last time someone went out of their way just to save me, both of us got captured. It’s not wor-”

“Eiji, shut the fuck up.” Bakugou interupted.

“Wha-”

“Shut! The! Fuck! Up! I know you’re stupid, but this is something else! Don’t talk about yourself like that.” Bakugou said desperately, being choked by sobs.

“Are you okay?” Kirishima asked, running forward.

“No, not when I hear you say that. Eiji, I know for a fact that you would have come to rescue me if I had been captured. Fuck, you’ve done it before! Why is it so hard for you to accept that I want to do the same for you, and that you deserve it.” Bakugou asked.

“You don’t get it, do you?” Kirishima asked.

“No, I fucking don’t, Eiji.” Bakugou said.

“You don’t know how much of a coward I am, or how weak my quirk is, or what I was like in middle school.” Kirishima rambled.

“Then tell me. I want to know why you fucking hate yourself so much.” Bakugou said.

“Kat, I was literally too scared to do anything when someone needed me. Every time, I had a chance to be brave but I didn’t take it. My hair’s not even red. I dyed it because I’m so boring and uninteresting that I had to do something to even slightly stand out.” Kirishima explained.

“Okay. I still fucking love you. Don’t ever talk about yourself like that ever again. Just because you’re scared out of your fucking mind doesn’t mean you’re a coward. You were younger back then. Now, you’re brave. Eiji… I. Fuck.” Bakugou said, embracing Kirishima as tight as he could.

“I love you Eiji, and I will always be there for you, okay. And don’t fucking act like you don’t deserve it, okay?” Bakugou asked.

“Okay.” Kirishima said, tears pouring from his eyes. Bakugou was so stupid to have come here. But Kirishima was so relieved that he was finally here.

“Now let’s fucking get out of here. Even the pastel fuckfest of Etheria is better than this fucking place.” Bakugou muttered. Kirishima chuckled weakly, and Bakugou smiled. Then, he took Kirishima’s hand and led him from the chamber.

Trump Card

Bakugou led Kirishima from the chamber, recalling the instructions he'd given everyone else. Thankfully, none of the people he'd blasted through had fully recovered. Or, if they did, She-ra and the others had taken care of them.

Soon, they came into sight of everyone else in the hallway.

"Bakugou, don't run off like that, okay?" Catra asked.

"Fine." He responded. Catra rolled her eyes, but she smiled when She-ra placed a hand on her shoulder.

"Alright, what should we do now?" Hordak asked.

Almost as if responding to Hordak, everyone heard the voice. Its source was external, but nobody could pinpoint it. Not even Catra's keen hearing helped to pinpoint it.

"I'll have all the intruders know that their ship has been destroyed."

"Darla!" Entrapta cried out.

“Surrender now, for there’s no escape.”

Silence fell over the entire group. Everyone looked around. Somebody had to have a means of resolving the situation, right?

In the silence, they heard the sounds of countless footfalls. Almost everyone immediately took a battle stance.

That was when they arrived. They came from all directions, and there were dozens of them in the cramped halls of the ship.

Bakugou propelled himself forward into the front of one group, and Kirishima followed closely behind him. Adora and Catra charged off into another. Spinerella used her own power to hold the third group at bay.

A few explosions scattered the ranks of the clones. Kirishima and Bakugou both picked off whoever was left. Bakugou quickly picked up the technique for defeating these foes.

Similarly, She-ra carved two glowing streaks into the air which detonated in a shockwave that surged outwards. Countless aliens were knocked to their feet, where they were descended upon by Catra, quickly followed by Adora.

One the third group had been thrown into disarray, Bow drew an arrow from his quiver. Instead of aiming it at the clones, he aimed it at the ground. Upon impact, a liquid substance exploded onto the floor and walls. It shimmered with a rainbow hue not unlike that of dark oil.

However, its nature became immediately clear when everyone standing upon it slipped to the floor. With another spiraling tempest, they were sent back, unable to stand back up to the grease that coated the soles of their feet.

However, more soldiers arrived. They were stopped by the grease coating the floor, however the two other groups had to be fought off.

Kirishima suddenly found himself pinned to the wall by four soldiers. He couldn't be harmed, but he wasn't immune to being disarmed. He fought back with all of his strength, and it took everything the soldiers had to keep him pinned.

However, Scorpia stepped forward and wrestled them off with her massive scorpion-like claws. Kirishima then wrestled himself away from the wall and knocked out the remaining two.

"Thanks Scorpia."

"No problem man." Scorpia said.

She-ra had reformed her sword into a shield which she used to hold back attackers. When the clones attempted to pin Catra, she bit and slashed until her sheer ferocity had freed herself just long enough to knock them out.

"Well, maybe not having an escape route isn't much of a problem." Catra proposed.

"Maybe not." She-ra responded, taking a moment to breathe.

Suddenly, a blast of lime green sailed down the corridor. She leapt forward and blocked it with her shield.

"Shit, they called in robots!" Catra shouted.

Bakugou looked forward to see a green blast flying towards him. Kirishima leapt in front of it and used his hardening to tank the impact. He groaned and fell to his knees, recalling how his quirk's ability to defend against the blasts wasn't plentiful.

In response, Hordak stepped forward and aimed his arm down the hall. The device on his arm glowed, and a fiery blast rocketed outwards down the corridor. The resulting explosion from down the hall shook the entire corridor.

"I don't have many blasts in this thing. It won't be enough." Hordak said.

A blast directed at the floor flung all of the grease away, leaving a clear spot in the floor.

“Take cover!” Bow shouted.

Another blast rocketed down the hall and slammed into the wall. The outward force knocked several people off their feet.

“Eiji, think you can take a couple more of those for me?” Bakugou asked.

“Probably.” Kirishima answered.

“Good enough for me.” Bakugou said, blasting himself down the hall as fast as he could. He constantly changed his position, making it impossible for the robot to target him. Instead, it fired down the hall.

Kirishima was pushed back several feet, his boots skidding across the metallic floor of the hallway. His arms shook as he slowly prepared himself for another blast.

“Come on Kat.” He muttered beneath his breath.

Bakugou flew above the robot and immediately sent it off its feet with a blast. Then, with a few more at point blank, he obliterated it.

But, he saw more coming down the hallway. He rocketed away and accelerated towards him. A blast was sent past him, and he smiled as he evaded it.

His smile faded when he heard a cry of a familiar voice from down the hall.

Kirishima had fallen to a knee, and he breathed through gritted teeth.

From the other direction, She-ra's shield was still holding up. Occasionally, a blast would impact against the wall. Then, Spinerella would step out and send a gale down the hall to hopefully destabilize any robots that were down there.

Bakugou destroyed the robot that had sent the blast, but more were on their way.

He rocketed from one to the other as quickly as he could, but another lime green glast sailed through the long corridor.

Kirishima was knocked to the ground and sent rolling. He breathed heavily before forcing himself back up to his feet.

“Alright, this plan isn’t working, we need an escape plan!” She-ra shouted

“But Darla’s gone! All the exits here are blocked. The launch pad can’t get us anywhere useful.” Bow pointed out. He stepped out and fired another arrow filled with slippery substance down the hall onto the ground. Hopefully, it would draw a bit of fire.

“There is a way out, Horde Prime’s portal!” Entrapta shouted.

“Yeah, but where do we go?” Bow asked.

“I remember that Bakugou and Kirishima come from somewhere where almost everyone is like them. If this portal can transport Horde Prime’s fleet, we could strand him in another universe. Kirishima, how many people live in your universe?

“Millions.” He replied.

“Great, we got millions of superpowered people to deal with Horde Prime if we can get his fleet there. I will have to see the portal room first but it’s gotten a lot through in the past.” Entrapta said.

“Entrapta, you’re a genius!” Bow said, a wide smile on his face.

“How do we know where the portal room is?” Hordak asked.

“We guess.”

“That seems unreliable, but so does our current strategy. We’re only really covered on She-ra’s front, the others are soon to fall.” Hordak said, glancing at Kirishima.

Kirishima saw a green flash down the hall and focused his quirk. The blast sent him tumbling back, and this time, he didn’t have enough strength to get back to his feet.

Entrapta’s hair grabbed him and lifted him to be closer to the wall.

“She-ra, you’re about to get shot in the back by a robot.” Entrapta said.

Bakugou blasted through robot after robot but it always seemed like there was another to take the last one’s place. Glancing behind, he didn’t see Kirishima for a moment. Then, he saw him sitting limply against a wall.

“Shit.” He muttered, blasting himself back towards the others. He continually altered his position so he couldn’t be fired upon. Unlike Kirishima, he could probably only take one shot before he was down, or worse.

"What the fuck are we doing?" Bakugou asked.

"We need to get to the portal room, which we have no idea the location of." She-ra said, blocking a green blast with her shield. Sweat dripped down her forehead and her arms shook. Even she couldn't keep it up forever.

Netossa stepped out and used her power to catch the lime green blast in Kirishima's place. She groaned as she threw the condensed energy back. It exploded down the hall, likely killing the very robot that had fired it. Her arms shook violently.

"Alright Spinny I need your help." She said.

"On it honey." Spinerella replied. Between her hands, the air began to spiral tumultuously.

A blast slammed into the wall, and then it was settled.

"We can't stay here. I'd rather be pinned on two sides than three." Micah said.

“We’ll push forward with Catra and Adora. Everyone else, follow! Spinerella, Netossa, Kirishima, try your best to block them from the back.” Bow said.

“Alright.” Netossa said. Spinerella hurtled the condensed orb of wind at a blast. The two tangled in midair and it detonated in the middle of the hallway.

They advanced as quickly as they could. Kirishima was being aided by Bakugou. Netossa and Spinerella took the back, switching in blocking the explosions. Bow would fire a grease arrow behind them, but soon he ran out. It would only slow them down by a little bit. Catra and She-ra took the front, being offense and defense respectively.

Soon, they were able to turn a corner so they weren’t pinned on both sides and their speed accelerated into a full on sprint. Entrapta took out a device and kept her eyes trained on it. Then, her eyes widened.

“That must be it, there’s no other explanation for so much energy in one place. Keep going and then take a left when I say so.” Entrapta said.

After a bit more running a passage was coming up ahead.

“This is it, turn left!” Entrapta said. Everyone turned left and needed a moment to take in the room around them.

It was a massive space, with an incredibly large control panel and a massive platform. The chamber was lined with crackling, lime green crystals. In the center of the room was the biggest crystal of all. Each pulse of its light seemed to vibrate through the air of the room, making the hair on everyone's necks stand on end.

"It's gorgeous! Hordak, can we keep this?" Entrapta asked.

"First, we've got to close the door behind us, teleport this to wherever Bakugou and Kirishima are from, and then defeat Horde prime." Hordak answered.

"Right!" Entrapta said, running over the the control panel.

"Alright Horde Prime, where did you log all the previous uses of the portaaaal… here!" Entrapta said, pulling up a list of dates, times, and readings.

"You guys were teleported here through an anomaly. Thankfully, Horde Prime was a proper scientist and made sure to keep a reading on all of this stuff. I could recreate the anomaly and transport Horde Prime's entire fleet through, but it's a bit of a stretch." Entrapta said.

"What does that mean?" Catra asked.

“It means, either the portal breaks, or we tear reality apart again.” Entrapta said.

“Holy shit if we have to deal with that again I am going to lose it.” Catra muttered.

“Wait that’s fucking happened before?” Bakugou asked.

“Long story. Anyways, Entrapta, do you think it’s a good idea?” Catra asked.

“Yes. No matter what happens, it’s bad for Horde Prime.” Entrapta said. No one was sure whether they should be comforted by this statement.

“Alright just give me a few moments, voila. Alright. Everything we need to transport and location of transportation are properly entered, let’s go!” Entrapta shouted, pressing one of the more prominent buttons located on the control panel.

Immediately, the familiar ominous hum shook the entire room. Then, the lime green of the crystals began to spread and consume everything. Then, the sensation of weightlessness overcame everyone.

“This happened when we last went through so don’t fucking panic!” Bakugou shouted.

But, it was easier said than done when you were falling through an endless expanse of cacophonous sound and crackling green power.

The Biggest Battle Begins

Suddenly, the lime green faded, and they were back in the same room as before. A massive crack was now visible in the massive crystal.

"Did it work?" She-ra asked. Entrapta glanced at the readings.

"Yup, it reads as basically identical to the location that Kirishima and Bakugou were grabbed from." Entrapta replied.

"We need to get off this fucking ship and then I need to go down and let them know what's going on." Bakugou said.

"Alright, let's go!" She-ra shouted.

Everyone found themselves navigating the ship once again. However, Catra took the lead, as she'd apparently had experience with this place. She knew exactly how to get to the edge of the ship and to the windows.

Given, they did have to fight through a group of alien clones. But, Catra had plenty of experience fighting them, and the stragglers were easy to knock out.

Then, they made it to the edge, and Bakugou knew what he was looking at right away.

"It's UA!" Kirishima called out. They were hundreds of feet in the air, but below, Bakugou could see the familiar dorms and classroom buildings of UA. He could even see the extensive training grounds in the distance.

"I'm gonna go down their and get their fucking help. Got it!" Bakugou shouted.

"Got it." She-ra replied.

He held out his hand and took out a deep breath. The massive explosion that erupted from his hand annihilated the pane of green tinted glass before him, and fresh air surged in.

Then, he leapt from the ship, using his explosions to propel himself down toward the classroom building. Using the bottom of his boot, he kicked through the glass and landed down in the hallway. The door to the classroom opened, and Erasherhead ran out. He froze upon seeing Bakugou.

"Bakugou, where have you been?!" He shouted.

"I've been in another universe. Now can you get my damned classmates off their asses so they can help me kick that things' ass.” Bakugou said, pointing up at the massive spaceship.

“Alright. Come in with me.” Eraserhead said, holding the door open for Bakugou to storm on through. All of his remaining classmates were there, all in their school uniforms.

“Bakugou?!”

“Kacchan?!”

“Yo where have you been?!”

“Shut the actual fuck up and let me explain the wild shit that’s happening right now!” Bakugou screamed. Everyone was intimidated into silence.

“So, I somehow ended up in another fucking universe. There was a war there and now that world’s equivalent of villains are here. The damned princesses need fucking help or something dealing with them. Now get out of your stupid chairs and let’s go kick some ass!” Bakugou shouted. Then, he immediately stormed back out of the classroom.

Everyone began nervously getting up from their seats and taking in the scene around them.

Horde Prime's entire fleet was suspended hundreds of feet in the sky. The largest ship was also the closest.

"I'm going to contact some other pros. Go with Bakugou into that ship, I think he came from there and that's where the rest of the 'princesses' are." Eraserhead instructed.

"Half and Half! Give these weaklings some ice so they can get up there." Bakugou said, blasting himself out the window and up towards the main ship in the fleet.

Back down below, two of the students took charge in getting the others up. Todoroki took a moment to collect himself before constructing a gargantuan ramp made of pale blue ice. It shot almost the whole way up to the main ship, and provided a clear path towards it.

"The ice will get slippery quickly." Todoroki warned, starting to run up the ice ramp he'd created.

Uraraka used her quirk on herself, Midoriya, and Iida. Each of them leapt out the window. Uraraka's quirk ensured that their momentum didn't falter as they drifted up towards the main ship.

Bakugou flew back through the window to meet the princesses and Kirishima.

“Alright, they’re coming. What should we do?” Bakugou asked.

“Well, Horde Prime can manifest in any of his clones. But, I don’t want to kill every single one of them. Wrong Hordak and… actual Hordak are both Horde Prime clones. They can be severed from the Hivemind, we just need to do that to every single one.” She-ra said. Bakugou rolled his eyes.

“Well that fucking explains why you haven’t beaten him yet. I’m gonna tell as many people as I fucking can that. If anyone somehow isn’t clear on that, it’s up to you to explain it to them.” Bakugou said.

“Very well.” She-ra responded.

Bakugou leapt back out the window to see the rest of Class 1-A having almost made it.

“Alright everyone! I’m only going to fucking say this once!” He shouted at the top of his lungs. Looking down, almost everyone’s attention was on him.

“There are two kinds of threats. Robots, and aliens. Destroy the robots, hit the aliens on the back of the neck, hard! We’ve gotta do it to every single fucking one because this villain is really fucking annoying. Got that!” Bakugou shouted.

He got an array of answers. Some students nodded. Others didn't seem to hear it. No matter, they'd catch onto it soon enough.

"You should tell Present Mic to broadcast that. It'll be much easier for anyone who comes to our aid if they hear it from his quirk." Yaoyorozu replied.

"Alright, I'll go do that." Bakugou said, blasting off again. Why did he have to be on messenger duty. He was much better off kicking ass. Whatever, he'd just get this out of the way and get right back to what actually mattered.

Class 1-A made it onto the ship to see the princesses and Kirishima standing there.

"Kirishima?!"

"Hey dude, what's up?"

"What are you wearing, man?"

"Hey guys. Uh, did you hear what Bakugou said?" Kirishima asked. Most people nodded.

“We should probably split up, that way we cover more ground more quickly.” Catra suggested.

“Who should be going where though, I don’t know these people.” She-ra said.

“Okay kids! I don’t know what the fuck you can do but apparently you have Bakugou’s seal of approval or something. Get into groups of three. Maybe a bit more. Avoid the robot’s blasts and hit the aliens in the back of the neck. Just, figure this out quickly, okay?!” Catra shouted. Class 1-A nodded and sprung into action.

They quickly were able to form effective groups. The groups that formed consisted of the following.

She-ra, Catra, and Kirishima.

Spinerella, Todoroki, and Netossa.

Midoriya, Uraraka, and Iida.

Sero, Kaminari, and Ashido.

Tsu, Jiro, and Yaoyorozu.

Hagakure, Double Trouble, and Mineta.

Shoji, Koda, and Tokoyami.

The remaining students and princesses weren't sure who to team up with, so the rest of the teams had ended up leaving without them.

Bakugou blasted high above UA. He wasn't sure where he would find Present Mic, but he opted for blasting towards the classrooms.

"Present Mic!?" Bakugou shouted. At first, he heard no reply and swore he was going to go crazy, but then he heard the reply.

"I'm here!" He shouted back, not using his quirk.

"I need everyone to fucking know how to take this villain down, got it?" Bakugou asked.

"Got it, dude!" He said.

“I need you to tell them that they need to hit any hostile alien they come across on the back of the neck. Until we get every single fucking one, this villain won’t be defeated.” Bakugou said.

“Alright, cover your ears.” Present Mic instructed, taking the deepest breath he could muster.

“There’s a villain that’s just appeared right now. But, we know how to beat them! Hit all the bad aliens on the back of the neck, that’s all we gotta do, so let’s do this!”

Even though his ears were covered, Bakugou winced at the sheer volume of the sound. He found it difficult to breathe even. It would be a miracle if any of UA hadn’t heard it, at least partially.

Outside, more and more pro heroes were showing up. Bakugou smiled.

The battle had begun, and he knew it was definitely in his favor. He blasted off and into the battle above.

Horde Prime Himself

Bakugou first propelled himself into the main ship to see some of Class 1-A still standing there?

"Where the fuck did Kirishima go?" Bakugou asked.

"There." Sato said, pointing down one of the corridors. Without responding, Bakugou used his explosions to fly down the hallway at top speed in search of Kirishima.

Dark Shadow was struggling to fight back against the light generated by the robots' blasts. Each flash of lime green light caused him to cower back slightly. At the very least, it draw the blasts away.

Koda and Shoji charged forward, with Shoji in the front. In an instant, he had sprouted countless arms. Each one grabbed a different part of the robot and slowly ripped it apart. Koda wasn't sure what to do, as there were no animals around that his quirk could act upon.

Finally, Tokoyami had made it to the front lines, and Dark Shadow was just barely strong enough to box the remaining robot. With Shoji's help, it was turned into scrap metal.

“Let’s keep going!” Tokoyami said. The two others with him nodded and continued charging into the unfamiliar spaceship.

It hadn’t taken Double Trouble long to realize Mineta was worth leaving behind. They knew that Hagakure was walking quietly next to them while they were disguised as one of the Horde Prime clones.

They sincerely hoped that no one would mistake them for a threat, they really weren’t in the mood to fight a bunch of people with superpowers far beyond even the magic of the runestones on Etheria.

Mineta was far, far behind them. He’d frantically had to throw his quirk all over the floor, walls, and ceiling of the hallway so he could bounce out of reach of the explosions.

It took him a few moments, but he was able to attach a few globules to the robots. Finally, he collided with them, knocking them to the floor and causing them to stick there, unable to move.

“Now where’s that shapeshifter? Oh man, I want them to turn into something sexy.” He muttered beneath his breath, running to try and catch up with Double Trouble and Hagakure.

Jiro was thankful she could attach her earlobes into the walls, feeling countless clanging vibrations of the robots.

Tsu was climbing on the ceiling while Yaororozu was armed with a shield and a gun. She'd never thought training to be a competent gunslinger would be a part of her hero training. But when she realized she had an infinite supply of firearms thanks to her quirk, she couldn't not take the opportunity.

"Three rounding the corner ahead!" Jiro declared, unplugging her earlobes from the wall and preparing for the fight. Tsu immediately shifted into her camouflage, crawling forward to be closer to the fight. Yaoyorozu raised her shield and readied her gun.

Sure enough, three robots rounded the corner, but Yaoyorozu was ready. A few shots landed into the lime green point on what appeared to be its head, and it crumpled to the ground. She immediately fired down the second one as well, but that was when she ran out of ammo.

She raised her shield against the blast delivered by the third one. But, it was far stronger than she anticipated. She was knocked off her feet and sent rolling along the metal ground. Both her shield and newly created gun fumbled from her grasp.

Tsu's tongue latched around the third robot and flung it off its feet. It came to a stop on the ground near Jiro.

She delivered the most massive sound that she possibly could to it at point blank. The metal limbs shook and eventually the lime green within its head sputtered out and faded.

Yaoyorozu picked up her things, and then the group continued moving forward.

“AAAAAAHHHHHH!” Mina and Kaminari screamed at once when a blast came their way. It sailed past them before exploding against a wall further down .

“Yeah, I don’t think my acid veil’s going to help this time.” Mina said.

Sero was using his quirk to pull himself gradually closer to the robot. But, he had to put a lot of effort into staying out of its blaster’s sight.

Mina ran out from behind cover and began using her quirk to slide over the smooth metal floor. The blaster immediately locked back onto her. Thankfully for her, it was aiming for chest to head level.

As the light grew in intensity, she crouched and placed her hads on the acid smeared floor to stabilize herself. She could feel the heat of the blast as it surged past her. But then, she stood up, pushed forward with her foot, and kept sliding forward.

Sero’s tape wrapped around the the robot, yanking off its feet. Then, Mina caught up to it, and smothered it in acid. Within moments, its hard metal exterior began to dissolve.

"Alright!" Mina cheered.

"How do I get past this?!" Kaminari shouted from behind her, referring to all the acid that now coated the floor.

"Oh, forgot about that, sorry!"

"Use this." Uraraka said, placing a hand on both Iida and Midoriya as she used her quirk.

"Thank you Uraraka." Iida said before using his quirk to surge away. Thanks to his newfound weightlessness, his already incredible speed was further empowered.

"Thanks Uraraka!" Midoriya said, a wide smile on his face. Then, with full cowling activated, he launched himself across the ceiling and walls and away. Uraraka was thankful he couldn't see her faint blush. She ran behind them, occasionally checking behind her to make sure she wasn't being pursued.

No robot had a chance of locking onto Iida, and a reciprio kick was usually enough to send them clattering through the halls.

Midoriya used both his martial prowess and his quirk's ability to fire off blasts at a distance to outmaneuver and overpower any robot that showed itself in his path. Once he couldn't find any robots, he went to check back on Uraraka to make sure she was safe.

No combination of powers alone could rival Netossa, Spinerella, and Todoroki. Forcefields and ice walls could block shots. Tempests and nets could knock the robots off their feet, and fire could destroy them.

The one time the three encountered aliens, Todoroki froze the floor, locking the alien's feet down. That way, it was easy for Spinerella to drift atop a whirling tornado in order to deliver a firm blow to the back of their necks.

Catra moved the fastest, staying far ahead and diverting some fire over towards her. She-ra and Kirishima tried to keep up, using their respective powers to resist any shots that Catra couldn't distract away. They also came across aliens, and that was where Kirishima's quirk could truly shine.

It was easy for him to bunch his fists, use his quirk, and simply run in. His hardened fist instantly knocked aliens out cold, and none of their weapons or combative prowess stood a chance against his quirk.

Thanks to the fast pace that Catra had set, they were moving very quickly through the hallways of the ship. Unfortunately, this gave Bakugou a hard time in regards to finding him.

Suddenly, he came across the biggest room he'd ever seen. It put the portal room to shame. It was filled with robots and aliens. Atop a throne surrounded by holographic panels sat an alien that didn't look like any of the others. He had long hair, and around one of his main eyes Bakugou could see two smaller ones. Beneath Horde Prime's throne and the platform it sat upon was a long, long fall.

"Are you that Horde Prime asshole?!" Bakugou shouted.

"I am Horde Prime, and you are dead." Horde Prime said as dozens upon dozens of blasters locked onto Bakugou. A grim, maniacal grin sat upon his face. This was the person who was responsible for all of this. The struggles of the princesses, him ending up on another world, and Kirishima getting captured.

"I've been waiting for this." Bakugou muttered happily. He rocketed himself away from the countless blasts and unleashed the full power of his quirk. Robotic soldiers were knocked off the platform and aliens were knocked to the ground.

Once enough foes had been eliminated for him to be satisfied, He began rotating in midair. He gathered momentum and smoke began to swirl around him.

Then, he was right up against Horde Prime. He'd probably remanifest himself in one of the countless clones as the princesses said he could. But, that wouldn’t stop Bakugou from reaping the satisfaction of what he was about to do.

“Howitzer impact!” Bakugou screamed at the top of his lungs as all the potential energy he gathered was released in one massive explosion. The entire section of the platform the throne sat upon, as well as the throne itself, was annihilated. All that was left was the blackened edge of a platform.

“I guess I won’t be able to find you until after the battle’s over, Eiji.”

Humble Requests

Chapter Notes

See the end of the chapter for notes

Bakugou's mind eventually went on autopilot. He had broken so many robots and knocked out so many aliens. He couldn't even put a vague estimate upon how many foes he'd defeated in the battle.

Everyone was exhausted, including many of the pro heroes. Between fighting the aliens, knocking them out, and making sure they hadn't been chipped, it had been a difficult battle to win. But thanks to the sheer volume of powerful heroes, Horde Prime had finally been defeated, and the hivemind he'd used to keep himself alive had been shattered.

For obvious reason, classes had been cancelled for the day as well as the next. Kirishima was sitting on a bench, waiting for Bakugou to come find him. He was near the 1-A dorms, so he figured he'd be found eventually.

He wasn't expecting the first person to approach him to be Adora.

"Oh, Adora! Hi!" Kirishima said, smiling and waving.

"Kirishima… we need to talk." Adora said.

“About what?” Kirishima wondered.

“It’s about what happened at the teleportation pad.” Adora said. Kirishima’s eyes widened and his shoulders slouched. All of the memories of that moment flooded back to him.

“Oh. That.” Kirishima mumbled. Adora sighed.

“Kirishima. I… remember a time when I was a lot like you.” Adora began. Kirishima looked at her.

“But you’re really strong, an-”

“No. Quiet.” Adora said. Kirishima sighed and kept his mouth shut. It was the first time he’d ever seen Adora remotely angry, so he figured he should probably just listen.

“I wasn’t always strong. There was a time when I had to lose all the power I had. And… I was just Adora. I knew how to fight… a bit. But I wasn’t as good as Catra was. I thought that I was worse, that I had absolutely no value.” Adora began.

“But… I wasn’t less valuable. I was just less useful for other people. That doesn’t mean I was less valuable. Would you agree?” Adora asked.

“Well… yeah.”

“Then why do you constantly degrade your own value?” Adora asked. Kirishima didn’t have a response.

“Well, I don’t really have any.”

“Could you walk up to Bakugou and say that?” Adora asked.

“No.” He answered.

“Here’s the thing. I used to be confused when Catra would get mad at me for saying similar things. Then, one day, I decided to ask her. She told me that… when I said that I had no value, it made her feel less valuable. She looked up to me so when I said I had no value, it hurt her too.” Adora explained. Kirishima’s eyes widened, and tears started pouring from his eyes.

“Your hatred of yourself doesn’t just hurt you. Imagine how it would feel to see someone you look up to, someone you think of as better than you, saying that they aren’t enough, that they aren’t valuable. What does that mean for you? That’s what our self hatred feels like to those who care about us.” Adora said. Kirishima felt a choked sob escape him.

“There’s… someone I know. Knew? I’m not sure, it’s complicated. But… she sacrificed everything to save countless lives. But… she never wanted to be a hero. She wanted to live and have a better life. She told me that we are more than what we can give to other people. The more I thought about it, the more I thought it made sense. Self sacrifice has no value when you hate yourself and think you have no value. Then it's not much of a sacrifice at all." Adora explained.

Kirishima's face was buried in his knees. Occasionally, his body would twitch as he sobbed.

"Don't worry, it was hard for me to stomach, too." Adora said with a small laugh.

"Yeah, this doesn't really feel good." Kirishima confessed.

"No. Not at all. It's easy to hate yourself. To think you aren't worthy or deserving. Because then every time you fail it doesn't feel like failure. It just feels like business as usual. If you expect things to go badly, you won't hurt as much when they do." Adora said.

"Yeah… I guess." Kirishima said.

"If you want to save people, you need to feel the full weight of failure. Then, you need to train to become better. But… not just for other people, but for yourself as well." Adora said.

"Okay." Kirishima followed.

"I can guarantee you that there are people who see you as much more than just what you give them. You have Bakugou, some of those kids are probably good friends of yours. To them, you're more than just a means to an end. I can't tell you how long I though that was the only reason people liked me. That's what I was taught. But then, I realized that wasn't true." Adora said.

"Alright." Kirishima replied.

"I'll give you some space. It took me a long time without anyone telling me that. But, I imagine even though I did, it'll still take some time." Adora said, standing up.

"Thank you, Adora." Kirishima said. Wiping the tears from his eyes with his hands.

"You're welcome, Kirishima. If you can't remember all of that, then remember this. You're worth more than what you can give to other people." Adora said, then she walked away, leaving Kirishima to continue waiting for Bakugou.

After the battle, Bakugou immediately tried to find Midoriya. Ever since that one conversation with Catra and Hordak, he couldn't keep it out of his mind. Until he got this done, he didn't think he could enjoy a moment with Kirishima.

Midoriya was talking with Uraraka and Iida.

"Midoriya. I need to talk to you in private." Bakugou said. Midoriya went still, and he looked at Bakugou with a look of absolute confusion on his face.

"A-Alright Kacchan." He said, walking away from Iida and Uraraka for a moment. Bakugou led the two of them far out of earshot. He knew he might end up shouting.

"First of all. Do you want me to call you Deku or Midoriya?"

"Deku's fine. It's my hero name, after all." Midoriya said.

"Alright, Deku, I've got a few things I'd like to say." Bakugou said. Midoriya gulped, already scared for whatever Bakugou was going to shout at him for next.

"When I'm being an asshole, could you just… fucking tell me? Hell, shout at me if you need to just don't just… stand there! I remember all Iida did was call you "House Arrest" one time and you told him to stop, right then and there. Can you do that for me, too? I'm tired of people expecting me to be a horrible asshole. It drives me damned crazy when you just stand there and take it. It's as if I'm not even there! Can you tell me when I'm being fucking mean to you?! Can you tell me to stop?! Can you treat me like a person and not some feral animal?!” Bakugou screamed.

“Okay, Kacchan, I never meant to come across that way.”

“I know! But it definitely does! And thanks to some sentient cat now I wanna be a better fucking person for once. So could you help?!” Bakugou screamed.

“I can hear you just fine so stop shouting!” Midoriya shouted back sternly. Bakugou smiled.

“Thank you. And… I’m sorry for all the terrible things I’ve said before. I’ll try not to do it again, but I need you to tell me when I’m being too mean, okay?” Bakugou asked.

“Okay Kacchan.” Midoriya said. Then, Bakugou walked away, breathing a massive sigh of relief. Now, he just had one more person he desperately needed to see.

“Alright Eiji, where the fuck are you?”

Chapter End Notes

I'm sorry for the unsatisfying conclusion to the plot. I'm trying to get as far away from the my hero fandom as I can because it's become exhausting to be a part of it as a queer person. So, I'm just trying to neatly wrap up the story and move on.

I'm sorry if you were looking forward to something better than this.

Complete Moment

Chapter Notes

See the end of the chapter for notes

Soon, Entrapta gathered the princesses and teleported the remains of Horde Prime's fleet back to Etheria. Without the hivemind, whatever was left would be easy to handle.

Bakugou and Kirishima were barraged with questions. They were asked what the other world was like, what had happened there, and what had happened to them in the other world. They were too tired to give very interesting answers, so soon the class gave up in trying to interrogate them.

The two were especially thankful for the day off. Class 1-A took the time to shut all the blinds and watch movies all day and deep into the night. Sato would bake them cakes and Bakugou would cook for the full class effortlessly on his own. He only let Kirishima into the kitchen, although all Kirishima was allowed to do was go around fetching pots and pans and ingredients.

The two were glad that most of the day was spent with a blanket wrapped around the both of them. They were glad to finally be wearing something else, but they would keep the outfits they'd gotten. Bakugou apparently looked very good in his.

When it was actually late, the two went up to Bakugou's room.

“I swear if another fucking portal shows up.” Bakugou muttered. Kirishima chuckled nervously as he joined Bakugou beneath the covers.

“So, did you like Etheria, based on the one day we were actually on it?” Kirishima asked.

“No, fucking hated it, you?”

“It’d be better if it weren’t in a war.” Kirishima said, nestling his head against Bakugou’s neck.

“Mmmm.” Bakugou grumbled approvingly, and Kirishima chuckled. He slung his arm over Bakugou’s chest, and Bakugou clutched it gently.

Kirishima began gently kissing Bakugou’s neck before moving up to his cheeks. Bakugou smiled.

“Love it when you do that, Eiji.” He whispered.

“Alright, I take it you want me to do it more then?” Kirishima asked.

“Yeah.” Bakugou answered. Kirishima gladly continued. All the while, Bakugou had a wide smile on his face.

“You’re gorgeous when you smile, Kat.” Kirishima said.

“You too, your shark teeth are cute looking.” Bakugou commented. Kirishima blushed.

“Wanna make out.” Bakugou asked.

“Yeah.” Kirishim answered. Kirishima reveled in the moment. It was warm, it was exciting, it was passionate.

When the intimacy escalated more and more, it got even more so. As tiring as it was to constantly shower Bakugou with affection and passion, it was fulfilling. In the end, he wasn’t sure he really deserved it.

No. No he was sure.

He wanted this. He deserved this. He didn’t need to earn this. When he let the feeling go, the small bit of guilt within him faded. He shouldn’t feel guilty for something like this. Both of them wanted this, and both were willing to give it to one another.

Kirishima let himself have that moment as it was. That moment was his to enjoy alongside Bakugou. So, he didn’t put himself beneath Bakugou.

He let himself be there, enjoying the complete moment they had together before they tired themselves out and fell asleep.

The End.

Chapter End Notes

> Again, sorry if the ending wasn't all you wanted it to be. I hope you have a great day. Don't forget to love yourself, and always remember that you deserve all the complete, happy moments that come your way.

Please drop by the Archive and comment to let the creator know if you enjoyed their work!