Just between us princesses

by Bagge

Summary

Spinnerella and Netossa approach Angella to put in a good word for Micah. But the conversation does not go quite they way they had planned.

Notes

This version of Angella is inspired to no small amount by this excellent fanart by tumblr user siimka https://www.tumblr.com/siimka-2/623182992758702080/queen-angela-but-as-a-princess-lol-at-least-the

This fic might be seen as a prequel to "The queen and her ladies" which takes place about twenty years later on the other side of a devastating war and a dead friend/husband https://archiveofourown.org/works/44374714

Spinnerella sighed. "We are sorry for Micah's behaviour."

"In his defence, he's an idiot," Netossa grimaced.

"That's to his defence, is it?" the Queen of Brightmoon said with an amused smile. She lounged in a divàn on a small balcony, overlooking one of the numerous Brightmoon gardens. Her dress was made by loosely fitting drapes in different shades of lilac, violet and purple which - despite their lose fit still managed to highlight her figure at any movement. Her fingers idly played with a small waterfall.

"Listen, your majesty..." Spinnerella begun, which caused the queen giggle slightly.

"Why so formal, Oh Princess of Winds. We are all princesses here, aren't we?"

"Well, I... of course," Spinnerella said, suddenly flustered. "I just..." her voice trailed off as the Queen leaned forward and gently touched her arm.

"Please, call me Angella." She let her hand linger. Her touch was soft as a feather, but still made Spinnerella acutely aware of the hand on her shoulder. "And perhaps... in return I might call you Spinnerella, your Majesty?" She trailed slightly with the fingers along the arm.

"I... yes, you can, of course, your Majesty, I mean, Angella."

Angella laughed, a happy little laugh like joyful bells or a splashing spring brook. "I am forever in your debt, princess Spinnerella." She moved her gaze to Netossa, who frowned at the still slightly dazed Spinnerella. "And what about you, Oh Princess of Webs. How might I earn the right to address you by name?"

"Stop flirting with my girlfriend would be an excellent start."

Angella put her hands to her mouth in a pantomime of an embarrassed gesture.

"Oh my, I have been indelicate. You have my deepest apology, your Majesty." She stood up, and suddenly stood very close to Netossa, looming over hear with her hands cradling her cheeks.

"Please," she whispered. "There must be something I can do get back in your good grace."

For just a moment, a pink tongue licked perfect lips.

"Just call me Netossa," Netossa muttered, suddenly finding the waterfall very interesting

"Oh I intend to, Princess Netossa." Angella took a merciful step back. "Now that I got your name, I intend to make full use of it."

Spinnerella caught her eyes. "Listen, princess Angella. I realise Micah made a fool out of himself today, but he means well."

"Your little sorcerer friend is quite infatuated with me," Angella gracefully sank down among the soft pillows, "that much is clear. It's rather flattering, unbecoming of him as it might be."

"He's not that little," Netossa protested.

"Are you telling me he has 'hidden qualities'," Angella said, eyes full of mirth.

"He's the most powerful sorcerer of Mystacor," Spinnerella quickly said over Netossa's coughs.

"An impressive feat, I'm sure," Angella said with unimpressed voice, "perhaps only slightly diminished by the murder of the entire senior faculty that would challenge him to the position less than a decade ago."

"You can't hold that against Micah," Spinnerella protested. "He was just a kid."

Angella's expression hardened. "A child of power, and all the responsibility that comes with it. Something I know for a fact that everyone present can relate to."

"We didn't have evil mentors," Netossa pointed out. "Cut him some slack."

Angella smiled at her, her posture relaxing. "If nothing else, it's clear that this 'not that short' sorcerer of yours has loyal friends, which is to his credit. So by all means, just between us princesses; entice me! Put all of his best qualities on display for me that I might be sufficiently wooed." She leaned slightly forward, laughter lurking in the edge of her mouth.

Netossa and Spinnerella exchanged a quick look.

"He can be quite the looker, when he puts an effort to it," Spinnerella volunteered.

"I assume said effort yet has to reach his facial hair."

"He's funny," Netossa said without preamble. "You want a guy that makes you laugh, he's the one."

"Oh, I can assure you that his performance served to evoke laughter." Angella grinned at the memory.

"Yeah, he's an idiot, as previously mentioned," Netossa sighed. "But he's brave. You can't deny it take guts to approach you like that."

"As does the two of you approaching me after the fact in an admirable attempt to repair the damage he caused to his own reputation." Angella sat up and held out her hand to Netossa, palm up. She gave Netossa an expectant look.

"Um...?" Netossa said, staring at the hand.

"You make his case well. He's powerful, he's strong, he's brave, he's amusing - and he has loyal friends, all excellent qualities. So then tell me, Oh Princess of Webs, why I should deny those qualities when they so readily present themselves to me?" She held out her other hand to Spinnerella. "Or am I wrong, Oh Princess of Winds, to describe Princess Netossa in those words?"

"I... she...." Spinnerella begun.

"Isn't she brave?" Angella interrupted. "Isn't she strong and powerful? Everyone with eyes to see can tell for a fact that she's beautiful."

"And she has a girlfriend," Netossa managed to blurt out.

"And a most impressive girlfriend at that." Angella turned her attention to Spinnerella. "The power of the storms at her command, yet with the demeanour of the gentle breeze. Fierce as a hurricane when angered, yet soft" -Angella placed her hand on Spinnerella's cheek- "like the kiss of a summer wind. And as for her beauty..." she winked at Netossa who looked away with a blush.

"Micah fights the Horde," Spinnerella quickly said, desperately trying to keep the conversation on track.

Angella rolled her eyes and withdrew her hands. She sat up straighter. "Ah, yes, your little excursions into Archnidia. You are most invested in their civil war, I must say."

"The Horde is a threat to all of Etheria," Netossa protested.

"I've heard that sentiment before," Angella said with dry voice. "From the mentor of your dear friend Micah, to be exact. Tell me, did you happen to chance upon Light Spinner on any of your little trips? Exactly how goes her attempt to stop the 'evil horde'?"

"You know that Shadow Weaver joined them," Spinnerella said with serious voice. "That's the threat we're facing - technological might such as this world haven't seen since the day of the First Ones coupled with the magic of the most skilled sorceress of Mystacor."

Angella scoffed. "Oooh, that's a good line. You should try it on Princess Flora. She worries that the conflict between Lord Scorpio and his daughter will spill over the Plumerian borders, so she might be more sympathetic to your little adventures. I can't help notice, however, that this is the second time in a short conversation you bestow someone with the title of the most powerful sorcerer or sorceress of Mystacor."

"As you noted," Netossa said with steel in her voice, "Micah knows first-hand how dangerous Shadow Weaver can be."

"And I do applaud any and all example of Mystacor finally tidying up their own mess, rather than waiting for us princesses to do it for them. But you have to excuse me for not being overly impressed by that self-sufficient guild of pedlars of small tricks." She held up her hand, sparks playing over it. "The true power of Etheria is channelled by the princesses, as you well know. Not by hedge wizards and street magicians."

"Shadow Weaver has access to the Black Garnet," Spinnerella said with serious voice, causing Angella to laugh - a rich, warm laughter.

"If that's what worries your little sorcerer friend, then let me put his mind to ease. No one but a princess has ever wrestled the powers from the runestone. Let her try. Sooner or later, Scorpio or his daughter will grow tired of her games and take the power for themselves, and then the conflict will be resolved."

Netossa raised an eyebrow. "And Hordak?"

Angella made a mock fainting gesture. "Oh, the enigmatic Hordak. Carried here from the other side of the sky, bringing with him machines of death and war. It's a dramatic story. I hear they are setting up an opera based on it over in Salineas."

"Where do you think the robots are coming from, then?"

"Oh, I don't deny that this 'Hordak' is a skilled craftsman. I'm sure that the makers guild will be very interested to learn whatever cache of First One's blueprint he is using to build and maintain his technological tricks, once he finally drops that ridiculous story of originating from beyond Despondos."

She stretched, almost catlike, and gave the other princesses a sultry look. "All this talk about politics bore me. You have made your case for the sorcerer, and I find him lacking. You have told me of your concerns of Archnidia, and I don't share them. Don't you think there's something more interesting we could do with our time?"

"Actually, there was one more thing we wanted to discuss, Princess Angella, if you'll indulge us for a few more moments." Spinnerella tried very hard not to stare at Angella's chest as her movements made her lose dress even looser in certain very interesting key areas.

"I always make time for my fellow princesses," Angella purred.

"That's actually what we wanted to talk about," Spinnerella quickly went on. "Um, as you might have heard, we're floating the idea of a Princess Alliance..."

Angella laughed and shook her head. "Oh, you are still on about that thing. Princess Icelin wouldn't stop talk about it at my last visit to Snow. She was quite scandalised by the concept, and rightly so."

"The princesses need to put on a united front against threats such as the Horde..." Netossa begun.

"I do not mind indulging your romanticised adventures," Angella said with sharp voice. "Neither do I begrudge you your heroics. But to give your adversary such a fanciful name servers to distracts from a truth we would do well not to forget."

"And what truth is that?" Spinnerella's voice was a bit harder than it had been before.

Angella's expression was serious. "That what you call 'The Horde' is the kingdom of Archnidia. The adversary is not a faceless horde of robots - it's the Archnidian people, divided in factions. I know I don't have to remind you of the purpose of princesses."

Spinnerella sighed. "To balance Etheria."

"To balance Etheria. To make sure no single princess alone gets the power to decide the fate of this world. I'm sure I don't have to retell the story of the mad She-Ra Mara. If your little group got traction... for the rest of us to gang up against Archnidia would be worse than any atrocity this 'Hordak' can commit - however much my heart goes out to the Archindian people."

"It would not be like that," Netossa protested. "The kingdoms would keep their independence. But with the alliance in place, if we princesses have a platform for quick communication and decision making, external threats, like Hordak and Shadow Weaver, could be responded to more rapidly."

"I still think you greatly exaggerate the threat. But I do enjoy your plans for more interaction between princesses." Angella licked her lips and let her gaze slowly travel between Netossa and Spinnerella. "Did you have any specific interaction in mind?"

"Um... informal meetings." Spinnerella tried by sheer force of will to stop herself from blushing. "Just casual visits, rather than ceremony laden affairs like royal official meetings or princess prom."

"I like the sound of it already." Angella grinned and sat up. "Tell me, how could such a meeting manifest itself?"

"Um... it wouldn't be a big deal..." Netossa mumbled. "Just hanging out to talk things over and find... common... ground..."

"I trust I'm not distracting you, Princess Netossa." Angella stood up from the sofa, allowing her loose fitting dress to slide off her as she did. "I was most interested in your proposal. In fact..." she took a step closer, dressed only in exquisite lavender coloured underwear. "I am open for exploring the possibilities of 'finding common ground'."

Enticingly slowly she brushed past Netossa, to a small drapery, leading to one of the many bath chambers that seemed to litter this part of the castle, making sure both princesses got a good look at her backside.

"I'm taking a bath," Angella announced in lofty voice. She stopped in the doorway, her fingers playing with the beaded drapery. She half turned to give the princesses a coy look. "Why don't you join me? You can tell me all about your 'princess alliance' in a more... informal setting."

"Well?" Micah eagerly said. "What did she say?"

"Um..." Netossa said.

"Er..." Spinnerella said.

"We... um... think she starts to thaw up," Netossa said, not meeting Micah's eyes.

"We... er... might need to talk to her again, though," Spinnerella said.

"Several times," Netossa agreed.
