The Moments Printed In My Memories

by DragonOtakuKip

Summary

Adora and Catra before they get together... Officially, that is.

Notes

See the end of the work for notes

Adora held the bulky DSLR tenderly in her hands, she tried to keep herself as still as possible, as she met Catra's gaze with wide eyes. They'd gotten it when we were fourteen years old and had spent an entire year doing extra chores and helping the neighbors for cash in order to buy it. The moment the two had bought it Catra had made Adora send an email to their school counselor and child protective service representative— Adora hadn't really understood why she was so adamant about it, until a few months in Miss Weaver had tried to confiscate the camera from them on the basis that it was hers, and then Catra had pulled up their proof of purchase and the two emails that also had a digital copy of it attached.

Now they were standing in the Whispering Woods; legal adults, finally free of Miss Weaver's special kind of hell, and together. They had their acceptance letters to the Brightmoon College of Cinematic Arts, and they were crashing at a few friends' houses over the summer until the school year starts.

"Hey—!" Adora sputtered as Catra grabbed the camera a bit roughly out of Adora's hands and flicked Adora's wrist with her tail. Catra smirked when she quickly turned the camera up towards the canopy above them, light coming through in large gaps in this section of the forest, and took a picture. Adora gave an indignant huff at her antics, but the awed smile on Catra's face as she stared up at the cumulonimbus clouds between the leafy trees around them didn't let Adora stay mad for long. Besides, Adora knew they had come to the forest for Catra— she wasn't going to be mad at her for having a good time, even if it was at Adora's expense.

Adora loved Catra, after all. She could destroy the entire world if she wanted and it wouldn't change that. Nothing could ever take away how Adora saw Catra— with mirth and mischievousness sparkling in her eyes as she ran circles around Adora with every little thing she did, the soft fur she let Adora pet when they were alone or when she was scared or nervous or having a panic attack, the warm arms that held her and careful claws that carded through her hair when she was crying or sleeping or laughing or relaxing, the fluff of her ears which no one other than Adora was allowed to touch, the purr that rumbled and reverberated all throughout Adora as they cuddled late at night and slept, the laugh she cackled whenever Adora tripped over her own feet or brought her English homework on the day she had math.

Everyone else might be able to see Catra, but only Adora got to have Catra.

And she'd take that for as long as Catra let her have it.

End Notes

An Extra little tidbit here; a prequel!
