The queen and her ladies

by Bagge

Summary

Netossa and Spinnerella help Angella to relax

Notes

Sometimes you get handed a prompt that you just have to take for a spin. Thanks so much for suggesting this most excellent relationship, GlitraHasConsumedMe.

Um... this ended up not QUITE as smut, but it's not just kissing either... just so you know what you're in for... 👀 Angella groaned and hid her face in her hands, allowing the comm pad she had been reading from to fall down to the table with a little 'plink'.

"It's not that bad," Spinnerella tried.

"It isn't?" Angella whispered. "Glimmer attacks a Horde outpost and it isn't that bad?"

"It's not like she's alone," Netossa said, not quite able to hide the hint of admiration in her voice. Angella looked up at her with a death glare.

"No, she ISN'T alone," she snapped. "Because she also has dragged Bow into this mess. AND her new best friend the HORDE DEFECTOR who just HAPPENS to wield the legendary powers of SHE-RA!"

"And the Plumerian princess," Netossa happily added.

Angella groaned and hid her face in her hands again.

"Flora's daughter leads her people against the Horde," she said with hollow voice. She glared at Netossa again. "You know how it ended for Flora. And Marina. And the rest of them." Her voice dropped to a whisper. "You know what happened to Micah."

"Angel..." Spinnerella said with soothing voice and stepped up to the queen. She gently put a hand on her arm.

"Glimmer wants to start the princess alliance again," Angella whispered. "Despite what happened last time. They are all dead. Marina is dead. Flora is dead. Micah is dead. Even Icelin is dead, for all the good the precious neutrality of Snow did her. The kingdoms are all lead by children." Angella's voice broke. "Children who are orphans because of me."

"Angel..." Spinnerella said again.

"Fuck that," Netossa interrupted. "They are dead because of Hordak. A lot more people are alive because of you."

"She's right, Angella," Spinnerella said with the firm voice of someone who had said exactly the same thing many, many times before. "Despite how it all ended, the princess alliance did make a difference. You made a difference."

Angella took a long, shivering breath. She gave Spinnerella a thankful look through wet eyes.

"Also, if you ask me, Glimmer is doing the right thing," Netossa gruffed. "We took a beating, sure, but we can't just stop fighting. It's not like Hordak ever will."

"Maybe I should try send another diplomatic attaché..." Angella mumbled.

"If he wanted to listen to reason, he would have by now," Spinnerella said firmly. "We have to focus on the princess alliance. We have to keep standing up to the Horde. And for that we need the other kingdoms. Glimmer is right, Angel."

"They are children Angella wailed. "Flora's daughter... Perfuma... she can't be much older than Glimmer. They should spend their time with studies, get into mischief and gossip about princess prom. She shouldn't have to lead her people to war."

"War is at her doorstep, and you know it," Spinnerella said with sad voice.

"The Heart Blossom will protect them..." Angella mumbled, not meeting the eyes of the other women.

"Their Queen will protect them," Spinnerella said firmly.

"Yeah, and thanks to Glimmer, now she has," Netossa said happily. She took the comm pad from the table and opened the message Bow had sent. "See!" she said with a smirk and displayed the image Bow had attached of the ruined Horde outpost, covered by plant tendrils.

"Flora would have been so proud," Spinnerella grinned.

"Flora would have been mortified," Angella insisted, but she couldn't help letting a little chuckle escape. "...and proud," she admitted. She smiled at Netossa. "Do you remember that time when the two of you came back from a 'recognisance mission' where you bumped into a horde patrol? She was all fired up?"

"Do I?" Netossa laughed. "You should have seen her. 'Out of my way, Horde machines. You are no match for my Deadly Cacti!"

"She was always proud of those," Angella laughed. "They completely wrecked the Horde engines."

"They sure did," Netossa said. She and Angella shared a smile for a moment, and then their expressions became somber.

"I miss her so much," Angella confessed. "I miss all of them."

"We all do," Spinnerella said with gentle voice. "But we're still here."

Angella put her hand on Spinnerella's, that still rested on her shoulder. She rested her head on it and closed her eyes with a little sigh.

"What shall I do?" she whispered without opening her eyes.

"You will help the princesses, of course," Spinnerella said with low voice. "Guide them and support them, like you always do. But right now," she went on, placing her other hand on Angella's forehead, "you will do nothing."

"I have to..." Angella protested without much enthusiasm.

"You have to rest," Netossa firmly said. She leaned forward and planted a kiss on Angella's forehead, while doing so grabbing hold of the chair. Without any preamble, she lifted the chair enough for her and Spinnerella to be able to turn it so Angella faced away from the table.

"And we will help you," Spinnerella smirked and leaned down to plant a kiss of her own on Angella's hair.

"Spinny... Netty..." Angella mumbled, still keep her eyes closed. "I can't do that now. There's still the..."

Whatever queenly task was on her mind quickly left, as Netossa sat down in front of the chair and lifted Angella's feet into her lap. She slipped off Angella's shoes and placed them on the floor.

"Sssssh," Spinnerella said and moved her hands to Angella's head, pressing lightly with her fingers at temples. "Later, Angel. You can do it later."

"...later," Angella mumbled, resting her head against Spinnerella's breast.

"Much," later," Netossa said firmly and took hold of one of Angella's feet, massaging it with strong hands.

"...mmmmmmm," Angella agreed, letting her shoulders fall as she started to relax.

"Look at you," Netossa tutted as she carefully bent Angella's feet this way and that way - earning herself a little moan as she did so. "Fretting all days, all this stress settling all throughout your body. You used to be so laid back."

"Lies and slander..." Angella mumbled allowing her neck muscles to go fully limp, trusting Spinnerella to keep her head in place as she massages her temples. "I was never laid back."

"True," Netossa laughed. "But at least it used to be easier to lure you away from your duties."

"You still do that," Angella whispered, groaning in pleasure as Netossa pressed her thumbs against the soles of her feet.

"Now we have to work harder for it," Netossa said and pressed her palm hard against the arch of Angella's foot.

"And it's a good thing that we do," Spinnerella said, her voice not entirely without edge. "You are tense as a harp." She pressed a hand against Angella's forehead, holding her head firmly against her breast as she let the fingers of her other hand slide down Angella's neck.

"Gwwwwwwwnnnnnn," Angella moaned. She took a deep breath that was cut off as Spinnerella hit on a particularly knotty muscle.

"So tense," Spinnerella tutted and moved both hands to Angella's shoulders, methodically pressing her thumbs down along the muscles on both sides of her spine. "Whatever should we do with you?"

"I can think of a few ideas..." Netossa said, mischievous tugging at one of her socks.

"You wouldn't dare... ooooof...." Angella gasped as Spinnerella increased the pressure.

"Sorry Angie, couldn't hear you," Netossa cheerfully said and pulled the violet sock off. She gently started to caress the foot.

"I know what we should do with you," Spinnerella murmured in her ear, rhythmically keeping the massage of her shoulders going. "We should put you in a little box, full of pink cotton, where you can be safe and warm and and happy and never have to worry about anything ever again."

"Can I bring my books?" Angella breathed, eyes still closed.

"Three books," Netossa said primly and pinched Angella's little toe. "On a weekly rotation. Snacks only after dinner and no more than fifteen pillows."

"Tyrant," Angella gasped, dutifully separating her toes so Netossa could wiggle them for her. "I could just as well rot in a Horde prison."

"Don't even joke about that," Spinnerella said sternly. "You know Hordak would jump at any opportunity to grab the Queen of Brightmoon."

"Not to mention Shadow Weaver," Netossa added and pulled Angella's second sock off. "And we're not giving that bitch the satisfaction."

"Good thing, then, that I have the two of you to guard me and my box," Angella smiled. She breathed hard as Netossa got to work on her second foot.

Spinnerella grabbed Angella's shoulders and gently shook the limp queen, causing her to jerk along like a rag doll.

"We will always keep you safe, you know that, Angel," Spinnerella said fondly.

"I know," Angella whispered. She leaned backwards again, finding Spinnerella's breast with her head. "I know," she repeated.

"I'm so glad we have made that clear," Spinnerella smiled and leaned down to place a gently kiss just above Angella's ear. She then moved her mouth downwards, leaving a little trail of kisses along Angella's cheek, down towards the neck. "I love you, Angella," she fondly whispered.

"Spinny..." Angella whispered, breathing more heavy now. A little blush formed along the trail formed by Spinnerella's mouth.

"I love you too, you know," Netossa said with just a hint of competitive edge in her voice. She increased the strength with which she squeezed Angella's feet.

"Ooooooh," Angella whispered. "I love you too, 'tossa, you know that. I love both of you."

"We know," Spinnerella murmured. She kept working downwards, to Angella's neck. She licked her lips and nibbled the soft skin, getting a little gasp for her troubles."

"Look at that," Netossa smirked. "She still remembers how to relax."

"If that's what you're after, you might have chosen a not entirely optimal strategy," Angella said, and then sharply drew her breath as Netossa put her mouth around a few of her toes and sucked teasingly.

"Sorry, didn't catch that," she grinned and gave the toes another little lick.

"I swear," Angella laughed, still keeping her eyes closed. "The two of you can be such brats."

"That's the way you want us," Spinnerella said with confident voice as she worked herself up along Angella's cheek again, finishing off with nibbling her ear slightly.

"That's the way I want you," Angella confirmed. She shuddered slightly and rolled her head backwards as Netossa hit just the right spot . She opened her eyes and looked up at Spinnerella, who smiled down at her.

"Thanks," Angella whispered.

"Always," Spinnerella whispered back. For a long moment she looked into Angella's beautiful, lavender eyes, shining from within by power and life. Then she slowly leaned forward and gave the queen a deep kiss.

The effect was somewhat ruined by Netossa choosing that moment to tickle Angella under the foot.

"MMMMMFFFFFF!" Angella cried and snatched her foot away. "Brat!"

"Still got it," Netossa said happily. She heaved herself to the her feet and put both hands on the armrests of the chair, leaning forward with her face hovering just above Angella's. "And now it's my turn for kisses."

"Everything doesn't have to be a competition, Netossa," Angella said with fond voice.

"It doesn't have to be," Netossa grinned and planted a kiss on Angella's mouth. Angella chuckled as she eagerly responded. Spinnerella took the opportunity to lean down and kiss Netossa on the cheek, and then Angella tried to kiss Spinnerella on the neck, and Netossa and Spinnerella kissed on the mouth and everything was pretty confusing for a little while there until the three ladies could sort themselves out.

Angella looked lovingly at the two princesses who still surrounded her chair.

"What would I do without you?" she sighed.

"Luckily, you're never finding out," Netossa said with a voice that dared anyone to argue.

"I know," Angella quickly said. "I know. I just..." she closed her eyes for a moment, and a shudder moved through her body.

"I know," Netossa gently said slowly moved to caress Angella's cheek. "We miss him too."

Without communication, Netossa and Spinnerella leaned down simultaneously to give Angella a long hug. When they stood up again, they pulled her with them to her feet.

"Thanks," Angella whispered to the women that still hugged her.

"Anytime," Spinnerella said with kind voice and gave Angella another peck on her cheek. Suddenly she started to chuckle.

"What?" Angella said, slightly off balance.

"You have to admit," Spinnerella smirked, "that turning a relief aid mission into a full blown attack on the Horde is exactly what could be expected from Micah's daughter."

Netossa snorted, and after a moment even Angella chuckled.

"She is her father's daughter," she agreed. "I'm so glad I have the two of you to help me keep an eye on her."

"Always," Netossa agreed. "Not that I'm sure she needs it now when she's out there collecting princesses of her own." She gave Angella a sly look. "...kinda reminds me of someone else I knew, who travelled between the kingdoms, pleading the cause for joint support."

"She is her mother's daughter too," Spinnerella said with a smile.

"I... I suppose she is," Angella sighed. "For all good that will do her."

She nodded at her partners with a sad little smile.

"Thank you for the distraction, but now I have to..."

"Nuhuh," Netossa said. "We're not letting you go yet."

"You're not?" Angella said, amusement in her voice. "And why, pray tell, is that?"

"Because you are not done relaxing yet," Spinnerella grinned.

"I'm not?" Angella asked and crossed her arms in the hope that her body language would hide how eager she was to not be let go just yet (it didn't work).

"Oh no you're not," Netossa grinned. "Not until you have had a long, warm, relaxing bath."

"Starting now!" Spinnerella said, and with Netossa holding her right hand, and Spinnerella her left, Angella was marched barefoot to the royal bathroom.

There was quite a bit of splashing.
