Within a sea of Sand and Stone

Posted originally on the Archive of Our Own at http://archiveofourown.org/works/56500603.

Rating:
Teen And Up Audiences

Archive Warning:
No Archive Warnings Apply

Categories:
F/F, Gen

Fandom:
She-Ra and the Princesses of Power (2018)

Relationships:
Adora/Glimmer (She-Ra), implied Glimmdora, Adora & Bow & Glimmer (She-Ra), Adora & Glimmer (She-Ra), Adora & Bow (She-Ra)

Characters:
Bow (She-Ra), Glimmer (She-Ra), Adora (She-Ra), mentioned Huntara (She-Ra)

Additional Tags:
Spiders, Giant Spiders, Desert, Crimson Waste (She-Ra), im bad at romance, i tried., Adora is a Dork (She-Ra), Bow Is a Good Friend (She-Ra), Glimmer Needs a Hug (She-Ra), Glimmer is not having a good time, Adora doesn't know how to relax, Swearing, Glimmer deserves to swear, Three POVS, each chapter is a different pov and what they discovered in their tunnel adventure

Language:
English

Stats:
Published: 2024-06-08 Completed: 2024-06-28 Words: 6,325 Chapters: 3/3

Within a sea of Sand and Stone

Posted originally on the Archive of Our Own at http://archiveofourown.org/works/56500603.

Rating:
Teen And Up Audiences

Archive Warning:
No Archive Warnings Apply

Categories:
F/F, Gen

Fandom:
She-Ra and the Princesses of Power (2018)

Relationships:
Adora/Glimmer (She-Ra), implied Glimmdora, Adora & Bow & Glimmer (She-Ra), Adora & Glimmer (She-Ra), Adora & Bow (She-Ra)

Characters:
Bow (She-Ra), Glimmer (She-Ra), Adora (She-Ra), mentioned Huntara (She-Ra)

Additional Tags:
Spiders, Giant Spiders, Desert, Crimson Waste (She-Ra), im bad at romance, i tried., Adora is a Dork (She-Ra), Bow Is a Good Friend (She-Ra), Glimmer Needs a Hug (She-Ra), Glimmer is not having a good time, Adora doesn't know how to relax, Swearing, Glimmer deserves to swear, Three POVS, each chapter is a different pov and what they discovered in their tunnel adventure

Language:
English

Stats:

Published: 2024-06-08 Completed: 2024-06-28 Words: 6,325
Chapters: 3/3

Within a sea of Sand and Stone

by Universe_Traveler

Summary

The trio falls into a set of caverns and must navigate their way out.

Adora discovers relaxation can be a temptation,
Bow finds out boredom leads to chaos,
and Glimmer... Glimmer just does not have a good time.

Notes

So, I attempted at writing a romance/plot but as an aro-ace, so.. uh. I tried.
(All ships are implied, so sorry!)

Adora

“Hah, you can’t even keep up!” Glimmer taunted as she darted ahead, her dress cut to fit the desert heat of the Crimson Wastes as she paraded before Adora proudly. “You’re even slower in the sand!”

“Says the princess who shrieks at every grain of sand on her dress!” Adora shot back as she held her hands above her face to shield the sun from her eyes. She winced at the glare that shone down and the clouds that swirled before her.

Glimmer scoffed. “I do not! I grew up to face difficult situations!”

“And these are tough times?”

“Yeah! Hey wait a minute-!” Glimmer scowled, crossing her arms.

Adora wiped her brow at the sweat that gathered there as she laughed.

“Hey guys! I think I found something ahead of us!” Bow called from the front, holding up his pad.

Adora strode behind Glimmer as she heard Glimmer mumble something to herself. Adora shot a quizzical look towards the pink-haired princess but said nothing.

“An oasis?” Glimmer’ exclaimed.

Adora laughed quietly at the sight of Glimmer’s eyes shining with a light. But Adora couldn’t help but feel strange at the sight of the clouds swirling around the sky. They had been like that for a while, a sign of a storm probably.

“Are we sure its real..?” Adora offhandedly commented as she stared at the sky worriedly, as she licking her lips.

“Who cares? We need water-” Glimmer pointed out.

“I think it should be, at least my tracker pad is pointing it out that it should be there.. but considering the monsters in the Crimson wastes, I say we stay cautious.” Bow pointed out, pocketing his tracker pad away.

Glimmer ran forwards, Adora smiled at the sight of Glimmer skidding ahead. But she shared a worried glance with Bow as a harsh wind blew past them, her hair swept in the wind as she squinted against it to watch as Glimmer became smaller until she (assumingly) kneeled next to the lake and started to fill her water.

Adora strode forwards, Bow a bit in front of her Adora’s gaze moved back to the sky worriedly.

“Is it real?” Adora asked when she was just behind Glimmer as Glimmer took a swing of water. Bow strode past and filled his own water bottle.

Glimmer nodded, wiping her mouth as Bow filled his bottle. Adora followed then, filling her bottle next.

She took her own sip and smiled in relief of the water that slid down her throat and soothed the dryness that plagued her.

“Its strange the lack of people here. I would expect a much larger group here. Maybe these are one of the more out of the way oases?” Bow stroked his chin as he studied the area and the very lack of human civilization.

“Yeah- I find it strange also. I can’t really see anything except a few camels, but nothing else.” Glimmer agreed, moving next to Bow protectively as Adora slipped onto Glimmer’s other side. In the distance, the wind howled hungrily.

Adora glanced back at the sky worriedly, her eyebrow furrowing in concern.

“As much as I would suggest we continue, it looks like its going to be a sandstorm soon.” Bow gestured to the wind that blew past, dragging sand along the path that ravenged the air.

Adora watched as Glimmer used her arms to protect her from the sand that swung towards her.

“Yeah- but we need to get to Huntara! It's vital-” Glimmer complained as the wind slighty died down before it ramped up back to a howl. “OH FOR FUCKS SAKE-”

Adora raised her own arms to cover her face from the small pellets of sand that stung her skin.

“We should get cover-” Glimmer’s hand sneaked out to grasp Adora as Adora started to slide back.

Adora was dragged behind Glimmer as she dragged the former and Bow towards a tree and clung to it. It however didn’t help.

“Where did this even come from?!” Glimmer shouted over the howling winds as Adora clung to the tree for dear life.

“I saw the clouds had been forming all day-!” Adora shouted, but she was unsure if she was heard or not.

“WHAT?!” Glimmer shouted, using her hands to make herself louder which Adora could just barely hear over the wind.

It was her mistake.

Without the support, a strong gust of wind sent Glimmer flying, tumbling into the sand as she flailed to stand again.

“Glimmer!” Adora yelped, letting go of the tree to run over and help her friend. She to went sprawling into the sand as she heard Bow shriek behind her. Probably also being thrown from his perch at the tree.

Adora sighed in relief as seeing Glimmer suddenly jerk to a stop, before startling at watching her rapidly dissappear into the sand.

“Glimmer!” Adora shrieked as she lunged forwards where her friend once had been. Now only sand remained. She gasped, choking on the sand that swept into her mouth before the next thing she knew, she was falling head first.

Her reflexes acted up, and she pulled her sword and stabbed it into a wall, sliding down more slowly as she gasped and panted, once she reached the bottom, she started to spit out the annoying pellets of sand from her mouth onto the floor. She sat there coughing hard for a solid minute, hitting her chest in some attempt to help herself.

After she deducted she had gotten all of the sand out of her system, she leaned back, squeezing her eyes as she gasped and breathed in air she never knew she took for granted.

Peeling her eyes open, Adora gasped at what greeted her. Strange glowing mushrooms bloomed along the sandstone walls and midwaist high warm water bubbled under Adora as a gentle wift of steam caressed Adora's hair. A tree leaned heavily over the pool, and Adora could see the scarring in the rock where she had used to slow her descent.

She blinked, her she-ra sword cast a soft glow as she held it up in front of her. Frowning, Adora studied the cavern more.

A single path led before her, and strange metal charms hung from the ceiling as she stood up. Thankfully, she was reasonably unharmed, just extremely wet. As she clambered out of the pool, she noticed the hole above her that she could hear the sand howling from. It was dark and tan, probably where she came from. She noted the strange magic that held it in place.

As she took a tentative step forward, sand clung to her boots like paint. The sword cast a soft blue glow as she proceeded down the hallway. Her boots echoed along the passage as Adora strolled. Her breath was light as she kept stepping forward.

Soon enough, she came across another large cavern. More small, teal colored pools, lay scattered around the cave. A light mist dampened the air as Adora breathed deeply, relishing in mist that clung to her skin and cooled her off. (Slightly, she was still hot.)

"Glimmer? Bow?" Adora shouted carefully, stepping forwards carefully and holding her sword aloft in case.

A noise startled her, and she twisted around, blinking as she meet the eyes of a… weasel? A meerkat? A small furry mammal that digs and has strips along their body.

It tilted its head curiously, before I jumped and clambered into a small hole in the wall, letting out a small and cute squeak as it retreated.

Adora slowly lowered her sword, her shoulders loosened slightly a she sighed softly.

"Huh. I guess I'm not the only one in this cave huh?" Adora laughed softly, as she continued to walk forwards. Determined steps carried her forwards, her sword being held in front of her not for the light since the tunnels were light enough, but for reassurance.

As she kept walking forwards, she kept encountering new and unique lifeforms. Small mammals, strange and unique plants adapted to living underground and in the desert. The slightly warm air, humid with mist.

As Adora kept walking, she swivled her head at every noise, her eyes sharp as she kept her shoulders tensed and ready for any fight.

Nothing came barreling towards her ready for a fight. Only vines shifted as Adora passed, ferrets, ferrets! That's what they are called! scurried past like mice hunting for food.

"Huh." Adora mumbled, frowning in surprise. It was strangely tranquil. Something Adora wasn't sure how to handle.

She took several, delicate steps forwards, gently brushing her hand against the smooth sandstone in silence as the one way path seemed to be expertly cut through. Almost… man made .

Adora paused, her hand stilling as she frowned at the thought.

Was this man made?

As Adora trailed down the path, her hand outstretched, and her sword by her side, she came across a set of open pools that wafted with more mist that hit Adora full on. Causing her to startle back slowly as she did a double take at the overwhelming heat that flooded her face.

Taking a wincing step back, she waved her hand in front of her to dispell the heat that threatened to overwhelm her.

"Man, this place is hot.." Adora grumbled as she stepped around more of those crystal clear teal pools carefully.

What she didn't account for was that they were slippery, and her foot slid, causing her to go tumbling into a surprise warm bath.

Sputtering Adora shook herself to try and rid of the warm water that clung to her skin and fell from her already damp clothing.

Groaning, she pushed herself up, glaring at the stone like it had personally betrayed her. (It really had.)

She hissed, dragging her sopping wet self out of the unpredicted bath, her sword dragging behind her and making small indents in the stone behind her.

(Was Glimmer safe? Was Bow? How long has she been down here anyways?)

Was she going to be forever trapped down here without ever confessing?

She sighed, and kept going forwards. Drawing up her hands, she experimentally swung her sword. (Listen, she was bored!)

The tunnel was getting smaller and smaller as Adora neared the (assumed) end. They scraped along her shoulders as she climbed through the narrowing arcs towards a light at the end.

As she stepped through, she blinked in surprise at the size of the cavern she was at now. Three other doorways led to darkness (not including Adora's). A large skeleton-like creature was encased in stone by the far wall, and a door which expelled heat from the desert, a way out of the endless tunnels.

Adora let out a sigh of relief at the sight, starting to take several steps before she registered the person at the far wall. So tucked by the skeleton and watching it with silent fascination.

"... Bow?" Adora blinked in surprise, taking several steps towards the familiar person.

Turning, Bow blinked in surprise. "Adora!"

He didn't seem injured. He had a few bruises, and his shoulder pads seemed a little worn down, but other than that, he looked extremely bored.

Then, a commotion happpened in one of the hallways, and they all turned towards it in surprise.

Turning, Adora gasped at the unusual sight.

Glimmer, covered half in spider webs and bleeding inuries like she had been bitten emerged. Wiping a strange liquidy substance off of her ruffled hair like had been thrown through a blender. She panted, leaning on the wall, her eyes widening at seeing Adora and Bow.

"Bow! Adora!" Glimmer exclaimed, lunging towards the two like her life depended on it.

"Glimmer?!" Adora caught the girl who leaned on Adora tiredly. "What happened!?"

"Spiders." Glimmer grumbled, hugging Adora with a vice-like grip.

"Spiders?!" Bow exclaimed, nervously glancing at the doorway Glimmer had come from with concern.

"Can we just.. get out of this place?" Glimmer grumbled, stepping back from Adora. (She missed her warmth already.)

Then, Glimmer held a tablet for Bow silently. "Here. You left this. ALSO."

She twisted to stare at Adora with an unamused look. "I can TELEPORT. DON'T THROW YOURSELF INTO QUICKSAND TO SAVE SOMEONE WHO CAN TELEPORT-"

Adora rubbed her neck awkwardly.

"AND YOU- actually, how did you even get into the quicksand?" Glimmer furrowed her brows as she regarded Bow.

Bow sighed. "The wind pushed me in…"

Glimmer crossed her arms, the webs clinging to her like a dress as she stared at Bow and Adora tiredly.

"I am surrounded by idiots." Glimmer facepalmed as Adora and Bow laughed softly.

"Come on, according to the tablet, we actually took a shortcut." Bow said staring at his tablet. "Come on!"

Adora trailed behind, making sure Glimmer was keeping up. (She was injured.)

But she cast one last glance at the caverns.

Then turned around to follow her friends without a second looking back.

Bow

Chapter Summary

Bow's long and not so intresting maze experience.

Chapter Notes

I'm currently abroad rn, so I didn't get to write so well. I might go back to add more maze-like elements to the chapter. But rn I feel a bit bad that I haven't posted in a while.

So here, yall, take this.
I will be back with Glimmer. >:3

The sounds of Glimmer and Adora shouting behind Bow drew his attention from his tablet back to the swirling storm above the group. He caught sight of a glittering blue as he called back to the others.

“Hey guys! I think I found something ahead of us!” Bow called, pulling up his map on his tablet to check. He heard Glimmer mumbled something but it was lost to the wind.

“An oasis?” Glimmer exclaimed as she sidded to a stop next to Bow.

Adora laughed quietly behind Bow and Bow smiled warmly at why. Glimmer’s eyes glowed at the sight.

“Are we sure its real..?” Adora offhandedly commented from behind Bow.

“Who cares? We need water-” Glimmer pointed out.

“I think it should be, at least my tracker pad is pointing it out that it should be there.. but considering the monsters in the Crimson wastes, I say we stay cautious.” Bow pointed out, pocketing his trackpad away. His hands brushed against the straps that held his bow and quiver.

Glimmer ran forwards, Bow smiled as he watched Glimmer run forwards and kneel next to the water to fill her water bottle. Out of the corner of his eyes, Bow noticed Adora having a strange look on her face. He turned and Adora's eyes flickered to the sky in concern.

Bow frowned as he glanced at the sky and the howling wind. Then, he lowered his gaze and started to walk after Glimmer, Adora behind him. (probably, he assumed at least. He couldn't hear her footsteps because wind and- y'know, sand.)

"Is it real?" Adora asked when Glimmer had taken a big drink of the water. Bow took several steps forward after noting that Glimmer didn't show any signs of poisoning or whatever else it was called. He took several steps forwards and filled his own bottle, Adora following suit.

He took a small sip, smiling at the coolness that healed the dryness of the desert in his throat.

"Its strange the lack of people here. I would expect a much larger group here. Maybe these are one of the more out of the way oases?" Bow stated, wiping his chin of the water that dribbled off. And those clouds looks ominous.

"Yeah- I find it strange also. I can't really see anything except a few camels, but nothing else." Glimmer agreed, moving next to Bow protectively as Adora slipped onto Glimmer's other side.

Bow frowned as he felt the wind howl in his ears like it was hungry.

Bow sighed, turning to notice Adora glancing at the sky warily and Glimmer scanning the ground.

"As much as I would suggest we continue, it looks like its going to be a sandstorm soon." Bow gestured to the wind that blew past, dragging sand along the path that ravenged the air.

Bow watched as Glimmer used her arms to protect her from the sand that swung towards her.

“Yeah- but we need to get to Huntara! It's vital-” Glimmer complained as the wind slighty died down before it ramped up back to a howl. “OH FOR FUCKS SAKE-”

Bow squinted, using his left arm to block off the sand that swirled towards him and the group.

“We should get cover-” Glimmer’s hand sneaked out to grasp Bows as she started to drag Bow and Adora to a tree for cover.

“Where did this even come from?!” Glimmer shouted over the howling winds as Adora clung to the tree for dear life.

Adora shouted something that was partically lost to wind.

“WHAT?!” Glimmer shouted, using her hands to make herself louder which Bow could just barely very quietly hear over the wind.

It was her mistake.

Without the support, a strong gust of wind sent Glimmer flying, tumbling into the sand as she flailed to stand again.

Bow breathed a sigh of relief at seeing Glimmer halt just a few feet away, but she also started to sink.

“Glimmer!” Adora shouted, her voice mixing into the screaming wind as she jumped off of the tree to lunge towards the rapidly vanishing Glimmer.

Bow stumbled, the wind pulling him away from the safety of his tree. “Adora! Glimmer can tele-” and he was too late. He could only watch as Adora vanished into the quicksand that swallowed Glimmer up only moments ago.

The wind swung past him, yanking him forwards as Bow had pulled out his tablet to send an alert to Huntara. It was torn from his hands and he flailed, trying to grab it before the sand swallowed him.

(The last thing he heard was Glimmer screeching in frustration.)

Bow crashed into the floor, thankful a pile of sand cushioned his fall. He sighed gratefully as she slid down the sand that piled below him. Darkness swarmed his vision, making it hard to discern if Bow was awake or asleep.

Squinting, he yanked out his bag, digging around it before producing a flashlight on a hat from his bag that he and Entrapta had made before the whole… gala.

Fitting onto his head, he clicked it on to study his surroundings. Dull, bare sandstone sat in front of him and two corridors led away, each leading to darkness. Another corridor lay to Bow's left, but it had long since been caved in. The sand under him shifted as Bow stood up and brushed the loose grains off of him.

Standing up, he stood in position, making sure to take caution. His hand ready to grab his bow at a moments notice. As he stared down the halls, he turned upwards and squinted at the sandy entrance that seemed to be… magically held up?

Turning, Bow observed the two hallways, tapping his chin as he pondered which direction to take. After a moment, he choose left since it just seemed more warm, which was a good sign it was closer to the surface or possible lead to an entrance.

Keeping his hand in front of him, Bow was grateful he didn't encounter any monsters. He was unsure if he would be able to handle them or not. Not with the small hallways and him being a ranged user. Bow would be at a disadvantage here.

He hissed, feeling the cave get thinner, more narrow. (He was scratching his shoulder pads absoutely. Man, it was his favorites also!)

Bow took a silent breath, moving himself sideways to be able to slide between the cavernous halls that lead to his (hopefully) freedom.

Eventually, it opned up again and Bow stumbled, groaning at the sight of three more cave entrances.

Bow paused, glancing at the entrances, nervously. One seemed to become too small to fit into, so Bow mentally crossed that path off in his mind.

The other two seemed no different from each other, thin narrow passes, grainy stone that threatened to cling to Bow's armor.

He frowned. He might need to take one of the smaller paths, despite the possibility he may not fit. Taking a sighing breath, Bow counted up and did mental calculations to randomly choose one.

(He landed on the first one.)

Pushing himself through, he kept following the narrow hallway. At least, until he ran into a wall.

Bow sucked in a breath as his nose was a breath away from the rough stone.

"Aw man." Bow grumbled, having to move backwards as the tunnel was to narrow to let him through.

That, was when luck struck. Bow caught caught.

He let out a surprised yelp, twisting his head to try and see what was catching him and blindly throwing his hands to rid him of the burden keeping him trapped down.

He heard the sound of something ripping, and suddenly Bow was free again. Backing out, Bow let out a soft sigh of relief.

Mentally, he crossed off the first one, and turned to the other two entrances. He stuck his head through the third one, using his bow, he fired an arrow. He heard it hit a wall nearby. So, he choose number two. (Assuming that this was the way out and he didn't just get twisted around.)

Bow ducked under the hanging arch, wincing as the stone scraped along his shoulders and sides, definitely leaving scrapes along his clothing. Rubbing his skin on his arms leaving scrapes along his tanned skin.

Gritting his teeth, Bow pulled himself through, stumbling as the excess force forced him forward, nearly falling face first into the ground.

Pushing himself up, Bow lifted his head to study the area he was in.

A large cavern, three doorways. A large, skeleton of some kind of creature sat above another doorway that a gentle breeze pushed through.

So he did take the right ways. Bow felt a surge of pride at his success, walking over to stare at the skeleton in the wall.

Since this was the exit, it could be safe to assume it was the only one, if not, then Bow was royally screwed. (His luck has already probably been pushed enough.)

So, he sat there, studying the strange monster creature in the wall. It looked mildly like an oversized scorpion, with… two stingers. It was an intresting find, and a good sight from Bow's sore eyes of just stone.

His ears perked at the sound of soft, footsteps. Clearly someone experienced in being quiet, but not at all being good at it.

Bow could assume it was Adora. Glimmer walked more on her toes than the heels like the mystery person. Or it could be someone else and Bow might need to employ 'lost and need help' tactics, if said person doesn't instantly just attack him.

But Bow ultimately decided that he would employ 'to engrossed with skeleton that said person can make first move and ultimately doom Bow if they so wished'. A soundless, perfect plan. Nothing could possibly go wrong.

And.. nothing did!

"... Bow?" A familiar voice. Thank gosh.

Turning, Bow squinted at them. "Adora!"

She didn't look injured. Just, strangely wet. Her hair clung to odd places, already curling from the heat of the desert from the door nearby. Her sword was out, casting a soft glow around her, bathing her in a gentle blue light. Her clothing dripped some liquid, probably the same stuff in her hair, onto the dry stone below her.

Heavy breathing. Panting. They walked briskly and sounded like they were running. Probably walked on their toes. Turning, Bow stared at… well, certainly a sight.

Glimmer dragged herself through the third door, spiderwebs trailing behind her like one of her exceptionally long dresses. Her arms were red and in some cases, bleeding. She looked worse for ware, and she wiping some kind of liquid out of her face that clung to her air. She gasped softly at seeing Bow and Adora.

"Bow! Adora!" Glimmer exclaimed, lunging towards the two like her life depended on it.

"Glimmer?!" Adora caught the girl who leaned on Adora tiredly. "What happened!?"

Bow had a guess what happened, but he waited to see what her response was.

"Spiders." Glimmer grumbled, hugging Adora with a vice-like grip.

"Spiders?!" Bow exclaimed, nervously glancing at the doorway Glimmer had come from with concern. He could handle spiders, just, not well in an enclosed, dark space. He was an archer dangit!

"Can we just.. get out of this place?" Glimmer grumbled, stepping back from Adora.

Bow noted a rectangle in Glimmer's hand and the sad look in Adora's eyes.

Glimmer handed over Bow's tablet which he gratefully accepted, instantly tapping into it. "Here. You left this. ALSO."

Bow heard Glimmer lecturing Adora, probably about how she can teleport and Adora throwing herself into the quicksand… wait, how did she even know that Adora would- Oh wait. The hero complex. Bow didn't pay attention, at least until Glimmer said his name he glanced up to look at her.

"AND YOU- actually, how did you even get into the quicksand?" Glimmer furrowed her brows as she regarded Bow.

Bow sighed, his fingers tapping the screen of his tablet deftly. "The wind pushed me in…"

Glimmer crossed her arms, staring at the two of them with a tired, done expression on her face.

"I am surrounded by idiots." Glimmer facepalmed as Adora and Bow laughed softly.

"Come on, according to the tablet, we actually took a shortcut." Bow said bringing up the map and noting the distance. "Come on!"

He set off, leading the small team of ragbag survivors onwards.

This might not be an adventure Glimmer and Adora might forget, but Bow might. At least in the end things worked out.

Glimmer

Chapter Summary

Glimmer's no good, very bad, horrible day.

Chapter Notes

Trigger warnings: Spiders, webs, and fear.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

“Hah, you can’t even keep up!” Glimmer taunted as she darted ahead, her dress cut to fit the desert heat of the Crimson Wastes as she paraded before Adora proudly. “You’re even slower in the sand!”

“Says the princess who shrieks at every grain of sand on her dress!” Adora shot back as she held her hands above her face to shield the sun from her eyes.

Glimmer scoffed. “I do not! I grew up to face difficult situations!”

“And these are tough times?”

“Yeah! Hey wait a minute-!” Glimmer scowled, crossing her arms.

Adora wiped her brow at the sweat that gathered there as she laughed.

“Hey guys! I think I found something ahead of us!” Bow called from the front, holding up his pad.

“I wonder why Huntara wanted us to come out here-” Glimmer muttered as she climbed up the dune that Bow stood on. Adora right at her heels.

“An oasis?” Glimmer’ exclaimed, her eyes sparkling at the sight of the water glimmering in the sun.

“Are we sure its real..?” Adora mumbled, licking her lips absentmindedly.

“Who cares? We need water-” Glimmer pointed out.

“I think it should be, at least my tracker pad is pointing it out that it should be there.. but considering the monsters in the Crimson wastes, I say we stay cautious.” Bow pointed out, pocketing his tracker pad away.

Glimmer ran forwards, joy sparking in her heart as the oasis got clearer and clearer. She skidded to a stop at the shore of the water. Taking out her bottle, she got to her knees and filled it up with the water carefully. Internally, she noted how few people actually was at the oasis. It slightly unnerved her, but she didn’t think much of it as she filled her bottle.

Taking a step back after taking a delicate sip. She sighed in relief as the cool sensation of water ran down her throat and hydrated her.

“Is it real?” Adora’s voice came from behind Glimmer as Bow strode past and filled his own water bottle.

Glimmer nodded, wiping her mouth as Bow filled his bottle. Adora followed behind, filling her bottle next.

“Its strange the lack of people here. I would expect a much larger group here. Maybe these are one of the more out of the way oasises?” Bow stroked his chin as he studied the area and the very lack of human civilization.

“Yeah- I find it strange also. I can’t really see anything except a few camels, but nothing else.” Glimmer agreed, shying next to Bow protectively as Adora slipped onto Glimmer’s other side. In the distance, the wind howled hungarily.

“As much as I would suggest we continue, it looks like its going to be a sandstorm soon.” Bow gestured to the wind that blew past, dragging sand along the path that ravenged the air.

Glimmer held her hand in front of her face to block the sand that swirled in front of her and warned of danger.

"Yeah- but we need to get to Huntara! It's vital-" Glimmer complained as the wind slighty died down before it ramped up back to a howl. "OH FOR FUCKS SAKE-" Glimmer yelped as sand pelted her arms as she held them up.

"We should get cover-" Glimmer's hand sneaked out to grasp Adora as Adora started to slide back. Her other hand grabbed Bow's as she ducked towards a tree for cover.

Spoiler, it didn't help much.

"Where did this even come from?!" Glimmer shouted over the howling winds as Adora clung to the tree for dear life.

Bow shrugged, then frowned.

Glimmer noted Adora was moving her mouth but she couldn't hear her.

"WHAT?!" Glimmer shouted after Adora, moving her hands to cup her mouth. It was her first mistake.

Glimmer yelped as a particularly strong gust of wind blew her over, sending her tumbling away as she flailed to stand upright.

"Glimmer!" Adora yelped, abandoning her post by the tree to run over. Unfortuntely, that just sent her sprawling along with Bow close behind.

Glimmer yelped as she was suddeny jerked, choking back the sand that flew into her mouth and left rash red sores across her face as her foot caught something and jerked her to the ground.

She moved her arm to cover her face to avoid more sand going into her mouth, but then she noticed that she was sinking. She was lodged into quicksand!

She yelped as she was quickly sinking into the sand, holding her breath, she teleported out next to the tree again. steadying herself, she studied the desert and blinked in surprise at the lack of Adora and Bow.

“Bow?! Adora!?” Glimmer shouted, jumping as she spotted Bow’s tracker pad just a few feet away from the quicksand that almost took Glimmer’s life.

Stumbling over and fighting the wind, Glimmer kneeled as she grabbed the tablet.

The wind howled in her ears as she clutched the tablet in her hands. Slumping her shoulders to block out some of sand that was flung into her back and stung the skin under her dress. It was probably ruined, but Glimmer couldn’t care much about it.

“I CAN TELEPORT YOU- YOU-” Glimmer made a shriek akin to a scream of frustration as she held the tablet close.

Jumping into the sand, she let it swarm her senses until darkness enveloped her and she fell.

***

Waking up was the worst thing Glimmer did all morning. (Or evening? What time was it? Why was it so dark past her eyelids?)

Her eyelids fluttered open, and she winced, groaning as he resigstered the soft stringy surface below her and the beeping of a familiar device next to her. Her head throbbed and strange noises echoed around her. Sitting up, Glimmer was met with sandstone walls and darkness around her. The hole she supposedly came from was seemingly held in place, the sand swirling above her and not letting any sunlight in. Her head throbbed at every movement as Glimmer glanced at her hand, she noticed brightly lit tablet. Bow's tablet.

"Bow! Adora!" Glimmer shouted as she stumbled into a stand, holding her hand out to steady herself against the wall as she held the tablet by her side.

No response. The only thing that came back was silence.

Holding up her hand, she summoned a small ball of sparkles that lite up the cavern. She picked up the tablet to notice that Bow had been sending a message to Huntara. Glimmer was unsure how it worked, but she clicked it open and started typing.

(She could only type with one hand? Why was that?)

'Hi, this is Glimmer. I'm ok, not sute where everyine elae is. Some jinf of set of tunnels are located ynder the quicksand.' Glimmer wrote, clicking on the green button and tucked the tablet away.

She jumped as she met glowing eyes that stared at her from a set of hairy mandibles. A large set of equally hairy legs stretched from the beat Glimmer took in the sight of the cave. What she had thought where small sunbeams was actually webs stretching along the walls and covering the floor. The ground under her was actually webbing and she jumped back, yelping as the web tried to hold her in place.

She raised her right hand, the only one free of the web and summoned sparkles that lit up the room and revealed more spider-like monsters watching her silently.

Glimmer stiffened. "Sorry to… barge in..?" Glimmer smiled apologetically before the spiders lunged.

She yelped, using her sparkles as a blade, she sliced them in half and splitting the web below her which caused her to fall the rest of the way onto the hard ground. She hissed in pain as her foot hit the floor, but she gritted her teeth as she sprinted off, limping and weaving as more spiders threw themselves at her.

She threw sparkles here and there to kill spiders when she could, but she had to narrowly avoid a large cobweb in front of her, vaulting over a small chasm with relative ease.

Skidding to a halt, Glimmer shrieked as she collided with a solid mass.

She felt some kind of… liquid drip down and cling to her hair. Slowly moving her gaze upwards, she came face-to-face with a large… hairy… yeah Glimmer isn't going to spell it out.

(Spoiler alert, it was a spider. A REALLY BIG spider. Glimmer was SCREWED.)

But, it seemed to be (ew) drooling liquid.

"Okay, that's disgusting. Glimmer blanched, raising her hand to deliver a solid blow with her sparkles to the monster's stomach.

The spider reared back, letting out a high-pitched screech of annoyance.

Glimmer used the moment it backed away to slide between its spindly long legs, slipping past it's defences.

She sprinted away, tucking herself into a tunnel and sliding her hands along the walls. Biting back snarky comments, (And probably letting out swears that would make her mother disown her.), as spiders climbed all over her arms and bit the exposed skin.

Shaking her arms, Glimmer shed her new, biting, jacket, bringing her arms in front of her, she jumped through a web that sat before her. The strings clung to her like.. well, webs. (duh.)

Her feet clicked on the floor as the schreeching of enraged spiders slowly faded behind her.

She then realized she was kind of holding the tablet in a vice like grip.

Loosening her muscles, Glimmer let out a tired sigh. She kept walking, but not sprinting like before. More like a brisk pace. Not so long, and her feet ached.

Letting out a soft hiss of pain, Glimmer ducked under another spiderweb that had threatened to capture her.

Panting, Glimmer's hands clawed at the webs that clung to her, but after an unsuccessful attempt, she dropped her hands. Opting to save her energy to run or to fight, whatever came first.

And fight came for her.

A spider jumped from the ceiling, and landed on her hair.

Glimmer let out a very indignant squawk, something unfit for a queen, and her hands moved up to hit the air above her head to try and rid herself of her new painful hat.

The spider didn't like that, and proceeded to bite the hand trying to whack it away from its hidey place.

"Get- Off!" Glimmer finally got a grip on the annoying aracnid and threw it, breaking into a sprint as she ran again. Her feet clicking against the floor.

She wasn't actually sure how long she ran, but her throat burned and her chest heaved with her every breath.

But thankfully, soon enough, a light up ahead glimmered like a beacon. Distantly, Glimmer heard familiar voices.

She burst into a large cavern, a skeleton sat in the far wall along with two familiar people who had turned to watch Glimmer emerge from her tunnel.

She wiped some of the spider drool that had gotten on her from earlier, her eyes focused on her friends.

"Bow! Adora!" Glimmer exclaimed, she stumbled a bit, but basically threw herself to her friends. Her hands in front of her as Adora caught her.

"Glimmer?!" Adora asked, undoubtedly seeing Glimmer tired as she panted in Adora's embrace. "What happened!?"

"Spiders." Glimmer grumbled, hugging Adora with a vice-like grip.

"Spiders?!" Bow exclaimed. Glimmer's lips twisted up as she imagined Bow glancing at the tunnel Glimmer had emerged from with a nervous expression on his face.

"Can we just.. get out of this place?" Glimmer grumbled, stepping back from Adora.

Glimmer turned to Bow and handed the tablet to him. It was slightly sticky from the spiderwebs, but otherwise it was unscathed. "Here. You left this. ALSO."

Glimmer turned to Adora wit ha level glare.

"I can TELEPORT. DON'T THROW YOURSELF INTO QUICKSAND TO SAVE SOMEONE WHO CAN TELEPORT-"

Adora rubbed her neck awkwardly. Glimmer raised an unamused eyebrow at her.

"AND YOU- actually, how did you even get into the quicksand?" Glimmer twisted on Bow who glanced up from his tablet.

Bow sighed. "The wind pushed me in…"

Glimmer crossed her arms, facepalming tiredly. "I am surrounded by idiots." Adora and Bow laughed softly next to her.

"Come on, according to the tablet, we actually took a shortcut." Bow said staring at his tablet. "Come on!"

Glimmer limped behind them, and she made a mental note to never mess with spiders ever again.

(Never, ever, again.)

Chapter End Notes

We made it to the end!! :D

It might not have been what you were expecting, but (I am terrible at writing romance) and I love my plots!!!

TY FOR READING EVERYONE!!!!

Please drop by the Archive and comment to let the creator know if you enjoyed their work!