Your Turn to Roll

Posted originally on the Archive of Our Own at http://archiveofourown.org/works/33396028.

Rating:
Teen And Up Audiences

Archive Warning:
No Archive Warnings Apply

Category:
F/F

Fandom:
She-Ra and the Princesses of Power (2018)

Relationship:
Adora/Catra (She-Ra)

Character:
Catra (She-Ra), Adora (She-Ra)

Additional Tags:
Characters Play Dungeons & Dragons, non binary catra, super cute, dnd brain rot, Sword lesbians, barbarian are my favorite class, Passion project, I hope you learn something, cute partner moment, They are married, dice gremlin, these bitches gay, Fluff, SO MUCH FLUFF, smoft, nothing but comfort

Language:
English

Series:
Part 1 of Catra Grayskull's Guide to Everything DnD

Stats:
Published: 2021-08-21 Words: 6,582 Chapters: 1/1

Your Turn to Roll

Posted originally on the Archive of Our Own at http://archiveofourown.org/works/33396028.

Rating:
Teen And Up Audiences

Archive Warning:
No Archive Warnings Apply

Category:
F/F

Fandom:
She-Ra and the Princesses of Power (2018)

Relationship:
Adora/Catra (She-Ra)

Character:
Catra (She-Ra), Adora (She-Ra)

Additional Tags:
Characters Play Dungeons & Dragons, non binary catra, super cute, dnd brain rot, Sword lesbians, barbarian are my favorite class, Passion project, I hope you learn something, cute partner moment, They are married, dice gremlin, these bitches gay, Fluff, SO MUCH FLUFF, smoft, nothing but comfort

Language:
English

Series:
Part 1 of Catra Grayskull's Guide to Everything DnD

Stats:
Published: 2021-08-21 Words: 6,582 Chapters: 1/1

Your Turn to Roll

by RomanValkyrie

Summary

Catra comes home from Monday night Dnd and needs to make a new character. Adora wants to help.

aka

DnD teaching in a cute way

Notes

I just wanted some domestic Catradora and been on a giant dungeons and dragons kick. This was the product of that. I hope you can actually learn something from this fic. This fic is for all my dnd friends I've made in the she-ra fandom and all the critters who will get some of these jokes. Also for my monday night players who i am very thankful for.

Love you guys and thank you for reading

See the end of the work for more notes

Adora hears the front door open up and looks up to see that Catra is arriving home, clearly in a bad mood and looking defeated. A complete one-eighty from what they typically look like coming home from their Monday night Dungeon and Dragons session. They drop their bag to the floor and remain quiet. They usually come in raving about a fight or excellent non playable character they ran into. Never are they sulking like this. Adora knows that tonight was a bigger boss fight from what Catra has been saying all week. They have been planning and texting the group chat with ideas to make sure everyone came out alive.

"Hey love, what happened?" Adora asks the second Catra sits down next to her and cuddles into her side. Still silent, they wrap themselves around their partner and hide their face in her neck. Adora just softly rubs their back and hums giving Catra the time they need before they speak. They both sit there as Adora starts to feel tears drop onto her skin. Oh, this is very bad; Catra only cries when it is something significant to them. Adora takes a deep breath, thinking of what could have happened to make them so upset.

"Can you please talk to me? I'm starting to get worried," it comes out in the softest voice and she follows up by kissing the top of their head. Catra stirs a little bit, wiping away the tears from their eyes. They look up at Adora, biting their lip, trying to hold back from crying any harder. Even the thought of saying it out loud was making them upset.

"Elizabeth died," Catra mumbles out, cracked yet quiet. They go back to cuddling into Adora's neck, hoping that answer will suffice for now. Adora just kisses their forehead and starts to rub their back again. Catra knows it's some stupid character, but they had been playing Elizabeth for almost two years . Adora has seen how much work Catra initially put into the character making, hours went into deciding a tabaxi rogue with the soul knife subclass. Taking the time to write a backstory that was twelve pages and could have gone longer. The story of finishing the first campaign with just two hit points left. Lastly, the excitement when Bow announced that the second campaign would be with the same characters if they wanted. Adora has witnessed all those moments and knows precisely how much this character means to their partner.

"Do you want to talk about it?" Adora softly scratches Catra's head. A deep sigh comes from the person curled into her as they move their head from her neck and reset it on her chest. Adora can now clearly see their eyes are red and puffy.

"We were practically gods. It was supposed to be a fight we all walked away from," Catra starts to explain. Their fingers begin to fiddle with the hem of Adora's shirt to help them focus. "I was eaten by a fucking plant monster, and then Sea Hawk fireballed me." Adora stifles a laugh. Catra immediately glares back, "it's not funny!" Catra's eyes start to tear up again as they try to explain the events. Sea Hawk didn't know how low Elizabeth was when he shot, but once they heard the damage, their heart sank. Bow looked up as Sea Hawk cast another fireball and that it would mean a failed save automatically.

"I rolled a fucking nat one on the death save. I was hoping that maybe, just maybe, it wasn't the end." Bow had adopted a rule that whoever cast the spell had to pass a role to complete a successful resurrection. Scorpia rolled a three and failed. "The dice just hated me tonight." Catra tries to joke, but they start crying again.

“I’m so sorry,” Adora kisses Catra’s forehead before they go back to cuddling into her neck. They both sit in silence for a second as the rain starts to hit the windows--/; as if even the gods know. Adora lets Catra cry for the loss of someone who they care so deeply about. Even Adora had grown to love her as well. The stories Catra would light up telling and seeing them get excited about sessions.

“We are level fucking seventeen, and I need a new character.” Catra wraps their arms tighter around the blonde. They have become known for never doing the same thing twice. Picking up a new character was hard, but past level four, you truly will need to put in the work so you can play it well. This is going to take over Catra’s life for the next week.

“I could help you,” Adora offers and gets a small chuckle from Catra. Adora has been known for avidly not wanting to play. Anytime the group asked, she always said no; whenever Catra tried to explain, Adora always lost interest or just got confused and walked away. Maybe Catra hadn’t been the most patient trying to teach Adora. It was early on when they got together, and Adora was too busy with school and work to play with them anyway. Now, she has finished school and has her dream job. Bow has even asked Catra if she would want to join their next campaign. It has crossed their mind to try and help her learn again.

“Catra?” Adora snaps them out of their train of thought and looks at them with a confused look. They can only smile back at the dork they fell for. Catra has always wanted to share their love of D&D with Adora. Show her all the cool things you can do and the odd things that come out of roleplaying.

“Do you want to learn? It’s going to be a lot of studying.” Catra asks and sees the biggest smile cross Adora’s face. It makes losing Elizabeth almost worth it. They suddenly get pulled back into her embrace and she smothers them in kisses. All they can do is laugh and try to wiggle out. Its pointless due to their partner's strength, though. Adora still can’t wipe the stupid but handsome smile off her face.

“I would love to,” she says between kisses. Catra starts to embrace the love and affection. This is precisely what they needed when they came home from such an emotionally draining session. After they both get over the laughter and kisses, Catra sees the soft look on Adora’s face. “I love you,” Adora says, kissing Catra’s forehead and pulling them close once again.

“Gross,” Catra smiles, looking up and kissing Adora soft yet deep. Adora pouts at the comment, and Catra laughs from their stomach, deep and full. “I love you too, you big dummy.” They go back to rest their head on Adora’s shoulder as her stomach lets out a loud rumble. They both laugh as Catra looks up at her.

“What? It's a cheat meal day, and I was waiting for you.” Adora says, pulling out her puppy eyes. Those soft blue eyes always make them melt. She saved her precious cheat meal, knowing Catra would want to come home and talk about tonight’s events. She ordered from their favorite ramen place and is waiting for the delivery text any minute now.

“And by waiting for me, you mean you placed the order the second you heard the keys?” Adora just nods, finding comfort in how well Catra knew her. “Alright, stinky, let me go grab my bag and some extra books. This is going to be an all-night thing.” Adora huffs in protest as Catra gets out of the comfort of her arms.

“Normally, I’m an all-night thing,” Adora mutters, and Catra laughs immediately. They turn to see Adora still pouting at the fact they left.

“Of course you are, babe,” Catra laughs as they walk back to the door and grab their D&D bag. It contains what they deem as essential. Dice, character binder, pencils, and snacks. Catra sets the bag down on the table and sees Adora checking her phone, most likely to check on the food. They go over to their desk and pull out the books they will use tonight for making another character and teaching the basics. They also grab some character sheets and a notebook. With the thick stack of books and supplies, Catra heads back to the living room right as Adora is grabbing the food. The books land on the table with a thud and make Adora turn around.

“Do we really need all of that?” Her eyes grow wide, seeing it all on the table. Catra lets out a small laugh knowing how many more books sit on their desk.

“It’s complicated,” the explanation of what books had what and why they even have them will come after the basics. “I’m going to go change real quick, though, and I’m going to get you a different shirt,” Catra explains, walking towards the bedroom. Adora sets down their food and follows behind them.

“What’s wrong with my shirt?” Adora is already confused about all the books, and now apparently what was wrong with her shirt. Catra goes into the closet and comes out with two large shirts and a pair of sweatpants.

“It’s not nerdy enough,” Catra states plainly as they begin pulling off their own shirt and binder. They toss one of the shirts over to Adora and have the words DON’T FORGET TO LOVE EACH OTHER encased in what seems to be dice with different LGBTQIA+ flags in them. Adora just shrugs and takes off her shirt and immediately knows Catra is looking at her.

“I can just keep the shirt off,” Adora smirks as Catra just rolls their eyes, putting on their shirt that had a Moonbeam with a blue beam under it. Adora just shrugged, “your loss then.” She put on the shirt, and it fit nicely since it was one of Catra's larger shirts. Adora watches as Catra slips into a pair of joggers and notices they are the most amazing person. They turn around to see a fond smile across her face.

“What?” Catra asks, walking over and wrapping their arm around Adora. The height difference became more noticeable, but Catra doesn't mind; at the end of the night, they’re big spoon anyway.

“You just look very handsome,” Adora kisses them and smiles.

“You are such a big sap. Now let’s go eat because I’m starving and want to teach you about how cool a greataxe is.” Catra kisses her cheek and pulls her to the couch. Once they both sit down, Catra moves some of the books for enough space to lay out food. Adora starts to unpack everything as Catra starts to talk about their day at work and how busy it will be soon. Adora nods and smiles to see how excited Catra is. Words stop spilling the second Adora opens up the sweet pork buns. She knows they were Catra's favorite before they stopped making them last year. When Adora told them that they were on the menu once again, it was a quick addition to the cart. Tonight didn't go exactly how Catra planned, but they are thankful for it.

"So about that greataxe?" Adora questions to help pull Catra back into the focus of tonight. Catra takes one of the buns and takes a giant bite before grabbing one of the books from the table. Players Handbook is placed in Adora's lap. "What is this?" Adora questions grabbing more food out and looking at the cover.

"The only book a person will ever actually need to play. This has all the basics of the game and can answer any question a player has. Step by step on how to make a character and what they can all do." Catra takes another bite and grabs the order they know to be theirs. They look over, and Adora is already getting the glossed-over look. Catra had the same look when they first started and they know they didn't have this much laid out in front of them at first. They set their food down and move closer to Adora.

"Hey, I know this seems a lot right now." They lean their head on Adora's shoulder. "But I've seen you put together workout plans, and that is confusing to me. We got this, babe," Catra says with hope in their voice. It is a lot, but hopefully, they can break it down enough to get Adora to enjoy it. She nods in response and takes a deep breath. Adora knows a good chunk of the basics, or at least she thinks she does. You have specific dice for certain things. The twenty-sided one is the main dice you use. Some people have spells, but how you get them is different, and it seems like no one was a human.

"So, where do we start?" Adora asks, grabbing her container of ramen broth and starts shoving the noodles and such aside. Catra opens the book and lays it flat once they find the particular page they were looking for. Adora sees a picture on one side and a lot of text on the other.

"We start with race, it is the base of our character, and we build from here," Catra grabs their food and starts filling it as they point to the other books. "Some of these have races that aren't in the handbook." The thick stack of books makes a little more sense now. Catra takes another bite of the bun before continuing the explanation. "You are going to choose what I play next." Adora just looks over at Catra with a mix of surprise and confusion. They laugh in response, "You should see your face right now." Catra just flips the page before grabbing another book.

"I-I'm going to choose?" Adora asks, getting overwhelmed once again. Catra sees the look immediately. They grab Adora's hand and squeeze it softly.

"I have an idea, and I want to play something that doesn't use spells. So yeah, you will help me choose, and I will explain things as we go." Catra leans in close and kisses her cheek. Adora takes another deep breath knowing everything won't be on her shoulders. Catra goes back to the stack and takes out another book, and flips it open to a particular page. "I have an idea for a certain race I want to play, but it's not in this book. I've already used almost everyone here, so that's why I have those." They gesture over to the stack. “If it gets too much, we can stick with just this little dude right here.” They flick the pages of the Player’s handbook. Catra looks over to the perplexed Adora. Her brain is processing everything, and they can tell by them sticking their tongue out a little, trying to focus.

“Okay, so I think I can handle the other books. I just can’t have a lot of them open at one time.” Adora speaks, still not moving her eyes from the pages in front of her. Catra grabs out a blank character sheet and a pencil. They set it down in between them and scribble their name where it says PLAYER NAME.

“Okay, so when we pick things out, we write them here,” they point to the sheet. “That will make it so we can close books when we are done.” Adora nods again as she starts devouring her food like she hasn’t eaten in days. Catra takes a couple more bites of food to help Adora take time to process. The only thing Catra wants to decide in this character is race.

“So,” Adora says with a mouthful of noodles and pork, “What race did you have in mind?” Catra just smiles, and they swallow their bite before trying to talk. Catra moves the book over closer but still doesn’t cover anything.

“First, let me explain what the race does for your character. They can change certain ability scores, say what size you are, and give your base speed. Some have a subrace that can give you bonus stuff.” Catra points to the page showing where it is said but saying it in a lot fewer words. When they talk about the subrace, they point to the page in another book showing the subrace they wanted.

“So this is like picking what body part you want to workout before adding what exercise,” Adora says, helping herself explain it.

“Yeah, kinda,” they laugh, watching Adora’s eyes light up as she starts to understand what is going on. Adora flips the page in the main books and looks at the other options there are. Most look like humans or close to them, where others look like a dragon and a type of alien.

“Okay, so what is this one?” Adora points to the secondary book. It looks a lot like a human, just dark and ghost-like.

“So this is an Aasimar. They are born to be the champions of gods.” Catra moves the book closer. “This is a lot about origin stuff we don’t really need since they are just needed for the month or two we have left in the campaign.” Adora pulls Catra closer and rests her chin on their shoulder, looking at where they are pointing in the book. “We can pick from three different subraces, and I’m going to have you choose which one.” Catra closes their food container as Adora reads over her choices.

“I like this one,” Adora says, looking up as Catra moves the food over so they can sit in Adora’s lap. They look down and see her pointing at Fallen Aasimar . “That’s a lot of pressure to be something, and it’s cool that some say, ‘Fuck it, I’m going to be the bad guy.’” Adora looks proud of herself for making the decision. Catra cups her face and kisses her hard.

“That was really hot,” Catra mutters before kissing her again; when they pull away, blush has taken over the blonde’s cheeks. “It’s cute seeing you learn and get interested in this.” Adora draws them closer and wraps her arms around them tightly.

“Oh, this character is going to be a combination of us. Almost god-like from me, and then a dark side from you.” Catra rolls their eyes and pulls the character sheet over, and points to the RACE line.

“Then fill it in. You are going to know how to make one of these. We will only do it at level one, and then I will do the rest this week and learn what they can really do.” Catra hands Adora a pencil as she tries to write in the slot neatly.

“Okay, so they have a lot of stuff they can do, and there isn’t much space to write,” Adora comments what almost every player has said or thought. Hence the notebook Catra pulled out.

“So we are going to write down certain stuff in their place and others we can put in the notebook. Like speed goes into the speed box,” Catra points it out. “And things like darkvision and healing hands go into the feature and traits section.” Adora just nods and scribbles down the words in the section. Catra takes a second and sees Adora is really trying to focus and get this perfect. Her tongue is slightly sticking out as she reads down the page. The cogs in her brain are turning, trying to figure out what to write and what to save for the notebook, and in true Adora fashion, not asking for help. Catra smiles and kisses Adora on the cheek to help break her focus.

“Hey dummy, what do you need help with?” Catra asks moving their hands to softly scratch Adora’s undercut. Adora looks at them and melts at the touch. She sits back and takes a look at all the stuff in front of her.

“Does this get easier?” Adora mumbles out. Catra laughs and nods their head. This all did get easier. Hell, even Catra quit a couple of times before fully making her first character. Now they could crank one out in the matter of minutes. This process would be easier without having Adora, that was the reality of it, but they didn't want to do this without her.

“Yeah, you learn what you like to play and the basics. If it helps, I still have questions. The whole group does.” Catra moves closer and kisses Adora’s temple. The blonde hums back in response. Adora takes another look at the book and paper infront of her.

“Does this go into traits?” Adora points to the words Necrotic Shroud. It was also one of the reasons Catra wanted to pick Aasimar, they have some pretty cool stuff they could do.

“Yeah, and you can just put the page number under it. We don’t need to write everything down, it helps save time.” Adora nods at the comment and writes it down. Catra helps point out all the information that is needing to be written down. Adora asks more questions about what they do and how they work in the game. Catra gladly answers and feels their heart just melt seeing Adora gain more understanding and excitement of the game. She kisses Catra softly as they finish up explaining everything the race can do.

“What is that for?” Catra leans back over and grabs Player’s Handbook again.

“Because I am thankful for you willing to teach me. I was scared that this was too much for me or that I would be too much.” Adora says taking the book from Catra. She flips through and looks at all the art work.

“You will never be too much for me first off. Second, I will spend all my time helping you learn. Third, I love you dumbass.” Catra pulls Adora’s chin to make her focus on them. “Got it princess?” Their partner just smiles at them.

“You love me, how embarrassing.” Adora kisses Catra, “I love you too. Now what is next?” Catra takes the book and flips open to the second part, and in their opinion the most important part. Class.

“So you pick a class, that is pretty much what your character does. You can pretty much pick that you can hit things or cast spells.” It may be an oversimplification but that is what they all fall under.

“I want to hit things,” Adora states with no hesitation. Catra is not even shocked.

“Of course you do, now there is a different way to hit things-” They are cut off as Adora’s eyes light up, spotting what she wanted.

"That one looks like they can hit the hardest." Adora points to Barbarian. "They have a d twelve? That is higher than the others." Well, that was simple. Catra flips open into the page and is thankful they know the basic concept of this class.

"So these guys can hit extra hard when they are angry and rage. The d twelve is for how many hit points you get when leveling up," Catra explains, showing off all the information on the page. Barbarians are a lot of math since you add damage from other things. Kind of ironic since these guys are normally not the brightest. Catra starts thinking of subclasses and knows what one they want right away. On trend it comes from an extra book, and Catra's favorite by far, called Tasha's Cauldron of Everything . Catra looks over to Adora writing in the class and looking very proud of herself for it.

"So what's next?" Adora asks, looking at the pages and wanting confirmation that she will need to write stuff down again.

"Write down 'I would like to rage' and unarmoured defense. I know what they mean so I won't need the full explanation. Just a small reminder." Catra pulls out the extra book and shoves a sticky note on the page they will need later. Wild magic is a crazy subclass and the thought of anger being a source of magic is kind of funny to them. Adora looks up and proudly writes down what was asked of her. "Now we get to pick what this character will be good at. They are called proficiencies." Catra points out the list of words with boxes next to them.

“These are the things Bow makes you roll for right?” Adora tries to connect what passive knowledge she does have from years of conversations and what she is now seeing in front of her. She also knows these things can either fuck over plans or make them go way better than they should have.

“Yeah,” Catra beams proudly, seeing Adora putting it all together. “Bow makes us roll these to do stuff and see if the dice agree with our plans.” Catra remembers that there had even been a moment where the group looked at a magic item and all failed the roll to figure out what it meant, but had rolled a natural twenty to convince someone was a lost child.

“So can I just pick any?” Adora looks at the list trying to figure out what will be best.

“No, class and background normally give you a narrowed down list of what you can pick.” Catra points to the ones they’ll be picking from. Adora ponders over the options before getting excited.

“Athletics and intimidation. She is going to be one tough bitch.” Adora checks off the boxes and looks like she is getting the idea of what the character is going to be. “Is there a background that can make her like a hero or soldier?” Adora sees Catra looking at her with those eyes that are brimming with love.

“Yeah, just wait for us to get there. I am just so happy to watch you get excited.” Catra says, grabbing their dice bag. “Now we get to roll these things.” Catra pulls out a couple of the regular six sided dice. They hand Adora four and pull four out for themselves.

“So we roll these and get rid of the lowest dice. We each do it three times and then use this number for our base stats we build off of.” Catra and Adora roll and keep the answers to themselves before sharing. Catra rolled pretty decent with only one that will have negative if they don't add anything to it. Adora looks up and Catra nods for them to share what they got.

“Seventeen, sixteen, and twelve.” Adora states as Catra starts to laugh. “What is so funny?” She asks, not understanding how good she just rolled.

“You rolled amazing. I wish I rolled that good. I got fourteen, fourteen, and nine. You have made it so I can max out two or three stats. That is going to make me so fucking strong.” Catra tells her still kind of laughing at how good their partner did.

“So where do we put what numbers?” Adora looks at the sheet knowing that they go into one of these boxes, but one was smaller than the other.

“Things are about to get a little complicated. So these numbers help create a different number that gets added to rolls, checks, and saves. Proficiency bonus also gets added to the special ones.” Catra starts writing down the numbers and then writing down a smaller number in the bigger box. This stuff is complicated and Adora is thankful they are taking over on this part so she could see what is happening.

“Why does that happen?” Adora asks to see Catra also writing numbers next to the boxes she has checked off earlier.

“White nerds decided it.” Catra states simply. She really can't argue with that. After they finish they look up, “If you are good at something it is supposed to be a bonus to show you are good at it.” It is a better explanation, but this whole game is a set of rules made up by white nerds years ago.

“We’re almost done aren’t we?” Adora knows they have to create a backstory, but she is going to leave that up to Catra. They are better at the more creative side of things and she is good at planning or just hitting things really hard.

“We have background, equipment, and filling out what I can attack with,” Catra flips the book a couple pages back and pulls up the pages they are looking for. “You said you wanted a hero or soldier and they narrowed it down to two options. Folk Hero or Soldier.” Adora looks over the two pages Catra has pulled up and the idea of the character starts to form even more.

“Soldier. The gods made her to be a weapon and her whole life that is what she trained for. At some point she saw what was really happening and said ‘Yeah fuck everything you stand for’. That is how she became an adventurer. Saving people from those who she called family growing up.” Carta looks at her in awe. Maybe she could be a creative person after all. The idea just came to her, almost like she had lived it before.

“Damn, okay. Should I call her Princess?” Catra mocks just a little, but Adora knows it is their way of saying they are proud.

“I was thinking something like She-Ra. Simple and a typical barbarian name before she comes out being smart and super good using her words before violence.” Catra hands Adora a pen.

“Write it down then, dummy,” Catra smiles as she write it down and fills out the background as well. Adora is feeling proud of everything she helped create and how much she has learned tonight. For a long time she didn’t want to intrude on what was Catra’s thing. They had asked before if she would want to learn, but felt like it would be overstepping by wanting to play with them and their group. Bow is one of her best friends and has tried to get her and Glimmer into this before, but when Catra and Bow got together for this things just clicked in a way. Adora wasn’t jealous, she isn’t, but it sucks not understanding something they have so much love and passion for.

“I love you,” Adora tells Catra, pulling her brain back into this moment. She feels lips press into her cheek and her partner’s smile.

“I love you too,” Catra cuddles back into Adora’s side so she can still write but they can remain close. Adora looks back down at the page and notices another list of proficiencies for her to pick from again. She immediately knows one that had to be a part of any character created by her. She checks the box and can hear the eye roll coming from Catra at that moment.

“Did you really just pick animal handling? Are you making her a horse girl?” Catra knows the answer already, Adora doesn’t know why they asked when the response will always be yes . She just nods and laughs as she picks out the second one. History seems like it is something a soldier who deserted might know. Might have gone to college to learn or something. Catra can do whatever they want with that.

"Now on to what I will start with," Catra moves a little and flips over to starting equipment.

"Giant sword, next part," Adora says with zero hesitation. She has created a sword lesbian. This bitch is gay .

"Okay, I can give her a sword. Now, two handaxes or one simple melee?" Catra was about to look up what is even on the melee list; it has been so long since they have used or even seen it.

"Two is better than one. Imagine you piss her off and she tosses her sword and has an axe in each hand. How badass is that?" Adora gets excited seeing the image in her head. She can see it now; a tall, badass, warrior kicking ass and fighting for what she believed in. Adora wants to create a character for herself and play now. Hanging out with friends and spending time being able to live in a fantasy world. It took her a second to understand why Catra loves this so much, but now she gets it. It's a fun escape.

"You want to play now, don't you?" Catra looks at her and has light in their eyes. Of course they can read her like a book.

"Yeah," Adora answers simply and blushes.

“Bow was asking if you would want to join our next campaign. I would love to play next to you.” Catra says, pulling Adora’s attention to them. This is serious to them. It is Catra’s safe place and time for them to reset every week.

“I’m going to need help,” Adora smiles.

“No duh,” Carta kisses Adora hard. She melts into the kiss and pulls Catra closer. They both have been busy and got into a schedule of when they got to see each other. This was nice, doing something together and creating something. It has been some time since they just sat down and did something they wanted. “I've missed this. I've missed you,” Catra mumbles as they pull away. Adora kisses them again.

“Me too,” She responds a little breathless but satisfied. She has her person and is doing something they love. Life at this moment could not get much better. “What is next?” Adora presses her forehead to Catra’s and still takes them in. Catra hums in response and kisses Adora one more time.

“I teach you how to attack with that giant sword,” they flip the book once again to a small table with the list of weapons. “You attack with two d six and strength with this thing, and it does slashing damage.” The small chart also shows some different words next to it. “You also have to use two hands, and thankfully barbarian don’t really use shields or any other weapons.” Catra starts to write down a little formula with a lot of numbers being added.

“What do all those mean?” Adora is trying to figure out what all the numbers might mean and why they aren't added all the time.

“So when you rage you add a bonus to damage. I know Bow will also give me a magical weapon so I will have to make a couple of formula cards for weapons, but that is a problem for future Catra.” They make a little note to help remind themself that they will need to ask Bow later this week and to level up this character. Catra also writes down the handaxe, but knows they might never need it. It was mostly to show and explain to Adora how properties change from weapon to weapon.

“So what other types of damage can you do in the game?” Adora questions, now seeing a few different types from the weapon section.

“Well there are, I think, thirteen types of damage types and people can be resistant or vulnerable to certain types. When I will rage I become resistant to bludgeoning, piercing, and slashing. Radiant damage is mostly what clerics and paladins use when they use their holy spells and attacks. Undead use lots of necrotic damage. Different colored dragons and dragonborn do different types with a breath weapon.” Catra recalls that out of the thirteen there are a lot more types of damage than you usually see then others. Yeah, this game was more complicated for no reason sometimes.

“That is a lot,” Adora laughs a little hearing how Catra talks about it. This is just information they know and it is in such a niche subject.

“We do need to finish equipment at some point, I want cuddles and sleep soon.” Catra starts to write down some items from the typical explorer's pack and common clothes. “Dagger, broken blade, or pieces of banner?” Catra asks, looking up to see Adora having her eyes on them. “I love you, but I know you are undressing me with your eyes right now.”

“How embarrassing, you love me,” Adora blushes at getting caught but tries to change the subject. “I like the idea of She-Ra having a broken blade. Like it was a part of the sword she used when she was fighting for the wrong side, and it broke it when she found out what the truth was.” Catra huffs and writes down the answer.

“Dice or cards?” Catra points to the last thing they have to choose before the base of this character is done. This is mostly flavor for the character and is never needed for game play. It just helped develop the character more and give some form of individuality.

“Oh, dice gremlin just like you.” The no hesitation is what almost makes Catra offended, but they have spent almost a hundred dollars on just one set of dice before. They can also never go to the comic book shop without purchasing another set.

“Shiny math rocks make the brain happy and I will not apologize for it.” Catra mumbles and grabs their dice bag. Is it Laura Bailey’s Bag of Hoarding? Yes. Is it almost full? Yes. Does Adora need to judge them? Fuck no.

“I know babe, you’ve made it so I don’t need some.” In that moment Adora feels the daggers Catra shoots her way before the gasp of utter betrayal. Adora has fucked up within this moment and does not know how or why. Dice all roll the same, or at least she thinks they do. Catra, on the other hand, knows every die will roll different for them and serve a purpose. They have even thrown die which/that nat one at the worst possible moment.

“Fuck you don’t. I will get you your own fucking dice.” Catra pulled their bag closer to them. Adora apparently made a giant mistake. “These dice will gladly fuck me over the second you use them. All the dice training will go down the drain.” This is one thing Adora knows about. Whenever Catra gets new dice they will leave them on their highest number for a day or week before using them again. If Adora touches them Catra can fucking sense the disturbance and come in asking her if she touched or moved them.

“Okay, okay.” Adora holds her hands up in surrender. Catra puts the bag back down but still has a sour look on their face. “Is there anything left?” Adora asks, trying to get back on their good side.

“Actually, no. I will teach you about subclasses later because that is a pro and cons chart of what to choose, but I know what I want to pick for this character. If you like it.” Catra starts to stack back up the books and clean up the small mess they have made tonight.

“What is it?” Adora pulls Catra into her lap/arms/embrace to stop them from doing everything by themself. They hum and kiss her softly.

“How do you feel about magic?” Catra smiles, pulling away and kissing Adora’s forehead to help convince her that they have a great idea.

“Sounds amazing.” Adora smiles and picks Catra up, making them yelp in surprise. She takes them to bed so they can finally cuddle and spend more time together.

End Notes

Comments help feed me and my fur babies

Please drop by the archive and comment to let the author know if you enjoyed their work!